BIRMINGHAM LAW SOCIETY.

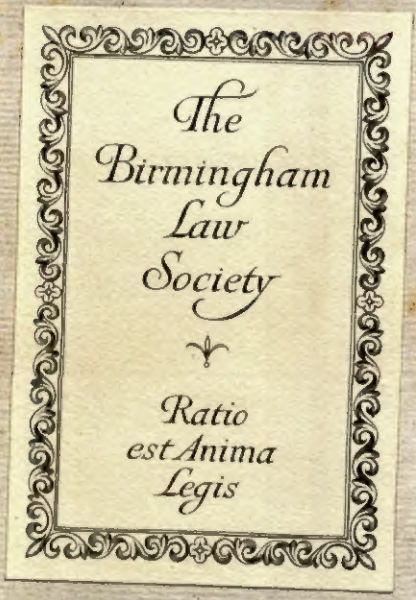
C
14G



THE

DICTIONARY

Hiſtorical and Critical

OF

MR PETER BAYLE.

THE SECOND EDITION,

BIRMINGHAM LAW SOCIETY

Carefully collated with the ſeveral Editions of the Original; in which many Paſſages are reſtored, and the whole greatly augmented, particularly with a Tranſlation of the Quotations from eminent Writers in various Languages.

To which is prefixed,

THE LIFE OF THE AUTHOR,

REVISED, CORRECTED, AND ENLARGED.

BY

MR DES MAIZEAUX,

Fellow of the Royal Society.

VOLUME THE SECOND.

Bi——E.

LONDON:

Printed for J. J. and P. KNAPTON; D. MIDWINTER; J. BROTHERTON; A. BETTESWORTH and C. HITCH; J. HAZARD; J. TONSON; W. INNYS and R. MANBY; T. WARD and E. WICKSTEED; W. MEADOWS; T. WOODWARD; B. MOTTE; W. HINCHLIFFE; J. WALTHOE, jun. E. SYMON; T. COX; A. WARD; D. BROWNE; T. LONGMAN; S. BIRT; W. BICKERTON; T. ASTLEY; S. AUSTEN; L. GILLIVER; H. LINTOT; H. WHITRIDGE; R. WILLOCK.

MDCCXXXV.

THE

DICTIONARY

OF

HISTORICAL and CRITICAL

MR PETER BAYLE

THE SECOND EDITION,

Carefully collated with the several Editions of the Original: in which

S

To which is prefixed,

A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR,

REVISED, CORRECTED, AND ENLARGED

BY

MR DES MAIZEAUX

Fellow of the Royal Society.

IN FIVE VOLUMES.

VOL. I.

LONDON:

Printed for J. and P. KNAPTON; D. MIDWINTER; J. BROTHERTON; A. BETT-SWORTH and C. HITCH; J. HAZARD; P. VAILLANT; W. INNYS and
R. ALSOP; T. WARD and E. WICKSTEED; W. MEADOWS; T. WOODWARD;
J. NOON; W. HINCHLIFFE; J. WATSON, jun. E. SYMON; T. COX; A. WOOD-
GATE; P. FONCKNAN; S. BIRT; W. BICKERTON; J. AUSTEN;
J. BROMWIG; T. JONCKMAN; S. BIRT; W. BICKERTON; J. AUSTEN; CHANDLER; J. CLIFFORD; H. LINTOT; H. WHARTON; R. WILKIN.

Mr BAYLE's

Historical and Critical

DICTIONARY

BIRMINGHAM LAW SOCIETY

B.

BYBLIS, Daughter of Miletus, and the Nymph Cyanea [A], fell in Love with her Twin-Brother Caunus, and endeavoured to inspire him with the same Passion; but, not succeeding in it, she was so distracted with Grief, that she hanged herself (a). Ovid, who tells us this, in one of his Poems (b), says, in another, that she ran after Caunus, 'till she was quite tired. He adds, that, her Strength being wasted, she fell down, and obstinately lay on the Ground, and cried abundantly, notwithstanding all the Care the Nymphs took to comfort her; and that she consumed herself in Tears, and was metamorphosed into a Fountain (c). He admirably describes the Progress and Symptoms of This Incestuous Passion [B], and, had he wrote no other Verses, would have sufficiently

(a) See Remark [D].

(b) Ovid. de Arte Amandi, lib. i.

(c) Id. Metam. lib. ix. fab. xi.

[A] She was Daughter of Miletus, and of the Nymph Cyanea.] This Cyanea was Daughter of the River Mæander (1); but some Authors say, that Miletus married Eidothea, Daughter of Eurytus, King of Caria, and that Caunus and Byblis were born of This Marriage (2). Others affirm, that the Name of the Mother of These two Children was Aria (3); others call her Tragasia (4). Authors differ likewise as to their Paternal Grandmother's Name; for some say, that Miletus was the Son of Delone (5); others say, that Acacallis, the Daughter of Minos, was his Mother (6). They agree better in This, that Miletus left the Isle of Crete, and built a City in Asia, which was called by his Name. Minos was the Cause of This Retreat. He thereby designed to prevent the Violence of his Ambition, or of his Love. Ovid represents Minos as very uneasy at finding himself old, and seeing Miletus in the Flower of his Age: This Disquiet, too common to Those, who reign, made him look upon Miletus as a Man capable of dethroning him.

(1) Ovid. Metam. lib. ix. ver. 450.

(2) Anton. Liberal. cap. 30. pag. 155.

(3) Scholiast. Theocrit. ad Idyll. vii.

(4) Nicænetus apud Parthen. de Amator. Affect. cap. 11.

(5) Ovid. ubi supra, ver. 444.

(6) Anton. Liber. ibid.

Tunc erat invalidus, Deionidenque juventæ
Robore Miletum, Phœboque parente superbum
Pertimuit, credensque suis insurgere regnis, Haud tamen est patriis arcere penatibus ausus.
Sponte fugis, Milete, tua —— (7).

(7) Ovid. lib. ix. pag. 443.

Infirm with Age, Miletus now he fears,
Vain of his Birth, and in the Strength of Years;
And now regarding all his Realm as lost,
He durst not force him from his native Coast.
But you, by Choice, Miletus, fled his Reign, &c.
GAY.

You will find, no doubt, in the Greek Words, I am going to quote, an amorous Prince, who made himself dreaded: Ἐπεὶ δὲ ὁ παῖς ἠυξήθη, καὶ ἐγένετο καλὸς, καὶ δεσπότου, καὶ ὁ Μίνως καλὰ πάσχειν ἐνεχείρει ὑπ' ἐρωτος ὑπὸ τοῦ παιδὸς ὁ Μίλητος ἐμέλλησεν εἰς ἄκαιρον, βιᾶ Σαρπηδόνα, εἰς Καρίαν ἀποδιδράσκει (8). As he grew up, he became beautiful, and strong; and Minos, falling in Love with him, offerred Violence to him. Upon This, Miletus, by the Advice of Sarpedon, taking Ship by Night, fled into Caria.

(8) Anton. Liberal. ibid.

[B] He admirably describes the Progress and Symptoms of This incestuous Passion.] Byblis, at first, was ignorant of her own Passion. To kiss her Brother often, and fall about his Neck, seemed to her a good Action; She confounded This with the lawful Affection which is due to a Brother. She continued in This State of Ignorance, even when she perceived how careful she was to make herself fine, and how desirous to appear handsome, when she was to see Caunus.

Paulatim declinat amor, visuraque fratrem
Culta venit, nimiumque cupit formosa videri.
Et, si qua est illic formosior, invidet illi;
Sed nondum manifesta sibi est; nullumque sub illo
Igne facit votum, veruntamen æstuat intus (9).

(9) Ovid. ibid. ver. 462.

ſufficiently ſhewed his great Skill in the Deſcription of Love. Antonius Liberalis relates

But Love (too ſoon from Piety declin'd)
Inſenſibly depray'd her yielding Mind.
Dreſs'd ſhe appears, with niceſt Art adorn'd,
And ev'ry Youth, but her low'd Brother, ſcorn'd.
For him alone ſhe labour'd to be fair,
And curſt all Charms, that might with her's compare.
'Twas She, and only She, muſt Caunus pleaſe;
Sick at her Heart, yet knew not her Diſeaſe.
STEPHEN HARVEY, Eſq;

Neither This, nor the Grief ſhe conceived againſt the Fair Ones of the Neighbourhood, opened her Eyes. Her Fire burnt without caſting a Light; It did not yet inſpire her with a Wiſh for the Cure. She went ſo far, as to be pleaſed with giving Caunus the Title of Sir, rather than That of Brother; and choſe rather that he ſhould call her by the Name of Byblis, than That of Siſter.

Jam Dominum appellat, jam nomina ſanguinis odit,
(10) Id. ver. 467. Byblida jam mavult, quam ſe vocet ille ſororem (10).

She call'd him Lord; for Brother was a Name
Too cold, and dull, for her aſpiring Flame;
And, when he ſpoke, if Siſter he reply'd,
For Byblis change That frozen Word, ſhe cried.
Ibid.

And yet, whilſt ſhe was awake, ſhe had not the Boldneſs to hope for any thing: It was in her Sleep that ſhe began to be familiar with Thoſe impure Imaginations; She dreamt often of her Brother, and thought once ſhe enjoyed him.

---- placidâ reſoluta quiete
Sæpe videt quod amat, viſa eſt quoque jungere fratri (11) Ib. ver. 470. Corpus, & erubuit, quamvis ſopita jaceret (11).

'Till gentle Sleep an eaſy Conqueſt made,
And in her ſoft Embrace the Conqueror was laid.
But O! too ſoon the pleaſing Viſion fled,
And left her bluſhing on the conſcious Bed.
Ibid.

She was aſhamed of it, though it was but a Dream; but, the next Day, ſhe made many Reflexions upon it, and wiſhed to have many ſuch Dreams.

Dummodo tale nihil vigilans committere tentem;
Sæpe licet ſimili redeat ſub imagine ſomnus.
Teſtis abeſt ſomno, nec abeſt imitata voluptas.
Proh Venus, & tenera volucer cum matre Cupido!
Gaudia quanta tuli! quam me manifeſta libido
Contigit! ut jacui totis reſoluta medullis!
Ut meminiſſe juvat! quamvis brevis illa voluptas,
(12) Ib. ver. 479. Noxque fuit præceps, & cœptis invida noſtris (12).

So that no Guilt my waking Thoughts employ,
Let me in Dreams the Tranſport oft enjoy;
No Witneſs can, in Sleep, the mimic Bliſs deſtroy.
O Sea-born Goddeſs, with thy wanton Boy!
Was ever ſuch a charming Scene of Joy!
Such perfect Bliſs, ſuch raviſhing Delight!
Ne'er bid before in the kind Shades of Night.
How pleas'd my Heart! in what ſweet Raptures toſt?
Ev'n Life itſelf in the ſoft Combat loſt.
How in Remembrance does The Tranſport laſt!
Tho' ſhort the Bliſs, and ſoon the Night was paſt.
Ibid.

Soon after, ſhe was vexed, that the Quality of Siſter forbad her to hope for That of Spouſe: She repreſented to herſelf the Gods, who had married their own Siſters, and could not believe, that Mortals could enjoy ſuch a Prerogative.

Sunt ſuperis ſua jura: quid ad cœleſtia ritus
(13) Ib. ver. 501. Exigere humanos, diverſaque fœdera tento (13)?

But what are their Prerogatives above
To the ſhort Liberties of Human Love?
Ibid.

She muſt either get rid of her Paſſion, or die; ſhe is ſenſible, that, if her Brother had loved her firſt, he would have been heard very favourably; from whence ſhe concludes, that ſhe muſt venture to open her Mind to him by Letter, if Modeſty will not ſuffer her to uſe Words. She takes her Pen, and, after a thouſand Agitations of Mind, ſhe declares her Paſſion. She repreſents ſeveral paſt Things to her Brother, by which he might have gueſſed, that ſhe was in love with him; ſhe puts him in mind of certain Sighs, which ſhe had fetched, and of her Cuſtom of embracing him, and of I know not what, that might have made him ſenſible, that her Kiſſes were not Thoſe of a Siſter.

Eſſe quidem læſi poterat tibi pectoris index
Et color, & macies, & vultus, & humida ſæpe
Lumina, nec cauſa ſuſpiria mota patenti,
Et crebri amplexus, & quæ, ſi forte notaſti,
Oſcula ſentiri non eſſe ſororia poſſent (14).

(14) Ibid. ver. 536. Amarillis in the Paſtor fido, without knowing that the Perſon, diſguiſed in Maid's Cloaths, was her Lover, found, nevertheleſs, a great Difference between her Kiſſes, and thoſe of other Maids. Quando la leggiadriſſima Amarilli Giudicando i miei baci Più di quelli d' ogn' altra ſpontii, &c. See the firſt Scene of the ſecond Act of the Paſtor fido, pag. 82, Venice Edit. 1605, in 4to.

Wan Looks, and weeping Eyes, have ſpoke my Pain
And Sighs diſcharg'd from my heav'd Heart in vain.
Had I not wiſh'd my Paſſion might be ſeen,
What could ſuch Fondneſs, and Embraces mean?
Such Kiſſes too! (O heedleſs lovely Boy!)
Without a Crime no Siſter could enjoy.
Ibid.

She proteſts, that ſhe has done all ſhe could, to extinguiſh This Flame; and that ſhe has only recourſe to him, after having tried all other Remedies in vain. She exhorts him to leave the Examination of what is juſt and unjuſt to old Folks, and to make uſe of the Privileges of Youth, in a Thing, of which the greateſt Gods have ſet an Example; & ſequimur magnorum exempla deorum (15), and wherein he need not fear the Oppoſition of a Father, nor the World's Cenſure, ſince their Amorous Commerce may be concealed under the Familiarity, which Decency authorizes between a Brother and a Siſter. Laſtly, ſhe begs of him to take pity on her, and that he would not be the Cauſe of her Death.

(15) Ovid. ubi ſupra, ver. 556.

Nec nos aut durus pater, aut reverentia famæ,
Aut timor impediet: tantum abſit cauſa timendi.
Dulcia fraterno ſub nomine furta tegemus.
Eſt mihi libertas tecum ſecreta loquendi:
Et damus amplexus, & jungimus oſcula coram.
Quantum eſt quod deſit? miſerere fatentis amorem,
Et non faſſuræ, niſi cogeret ultimus ardor:
Neve mererere meo ſubſcribi cauſa ſepulchro (16). (16) Ib. ver. 557.

We gain one bleſſing from our hated Kin,
Since our Paternal Freedom hides the Sin.
Unenſur'd in each others Arms we lye;
Think then how eaſy to compleat our Joy,
O pardon, and oblige, a bluſhing Maid,
Whoſe Rage the Pride of her vain Sex betray'd.
Nor let my Tomb thus mournfully complain,
Here Byblis lies, by her low'd Caunus ſlain.
Ibid.

It was not long before the Bearer of This Letter brought her an account of Caunus's Indignation. This was a Thunder-Stroke to her, and made her faint away; but, recovering from her Swoon, ſhe uttered ſuch Complaints, as ſhewed, that ſhe would not be diſcouraged. She blamed herſelf for having made uſe of a Letter; and ſhe fancied, that her Words might have been more effectual, and that, perhaps, the Meſſenger, having miſtaken his Time, had hindred the good Succeſs of her Letter.

Forſitan & miſſi fit quædam culpa miniſtri:
Non adiit apte, nec legit idonea, credo, lates the Iſſue of This Matter ſomewhat differently [C]. Some ſay, that Byblis was not in love with Caunus, but, on the contrary, that Caunus loved her [D], and could not perſuade her to conſent to the Gratification of his Deſires. They deprive her, a little after, of the Honour of This noble Reſiſtance; They ſuppoſe, that ſhe repented of her Hard-heartedneſs, which had engaged him to leave his Country; and that ſhe ran up and down the World, in queſt of this dear Brother; and that, not being able to find him, ſhe hanged herſelf (d). Others relate This Adventure in ſuch a manner, as neither diſhonours Byblis, nor Caunus [E].

Tempora;

(d) See what will be quoted of Conon, in Remark [D].

Tempora, nec petiit horamque animumque vacantem.

(17) Ib. ver. 611. Hæc nocuere mihi —— (17).

Perhaps, my carteleſs Page may be in Fault,
And in a luckleſs Hour the fatal Meſſage brought.
Ibid.

She revolved in her Mind every Thing, which might excuſe her in her new Attempts; ſo true it is, that the Paſſions are ingenious to flatter themſelves, and that they may be taken for Animals, and even Thoſe ſort of Animals, which are moſt induſtrious to ſeek their Food. She reſolved to declare herſelf by word of Mouth; ſhe ſpoke again and again, without being diſcouraged at the fruitleſſneſs of her Intreaties. Caunus, tired with refuſing, before ſhe was tired with being refuſed, forſook the Country.

If Ovid had not deſerved, in this Place, as much or more, than in a thouſand others, the Cenſure of the Grammarians, who found, that he dwelt too long on Particulars; he would have made a Perfect Deſcription. 'Laſcivior aliquanto eſt Ovidius, inquit Fabius, Lib. 10. Inſtitutionum Cap. 2. & nimius amator ingenii ſui; & mox, Ovidii Medea videtur mihi oſtendere, quantum vir ille præſtare potuerit, ſi ingenio ſuo temperare quam indulgere, maluiſſet. Et hic ſane fatendum eſt, laſcivire ipſius ingenium, nactum ſtilicet materiam ſequatem & genio ſuo affinem (18). —— Ovid, according Quintilian Lib. 10. Inſtit. Cap. 2, is too luxuriant, and too fond of his Genius; and afterwards; Ovid's Medea ſeems to me to ſhew what the Poet was capable of, had he rather tempered, than indulged, his Genius. And it muſt be confeſſed, that his Genius runs riot upon this Occaſion, having ſo copious and ſuitable a Subject to work upon.' Note, that I mention only Part of the Touches, which he gives us.

(18) Farnab. in Ovid. Met. lib. ix. ver. 591. pag. 225.

[C] Antoninus Liberalis relates the Iſſue of This Matter ſomewhat differently.] He ſays, that Byblis, being offered very conſiderable Matches, deſpiſed them all; and that, not being able to reſiſt the violent Paſſion ſhe had conceived for her Brother, ſhe reſolved to caſt herſelf head-long from the Top of a Mountain. She was ready to execute her Deſign, when the Nymphs, touched with Compaſſion, hindered her. They did more than That; for they caſt her into a deep Sleep, and, whilſt ſhe ſlept, changed her mortal Condition into an immortal One, and called her the Nymph Hamadryad Byblis, and admitted her into their Community. The Water, which ran down the Mountain, from whence ſhe would have caſt herſelf, was called Byblis's Tears (19). Others pretend, that the Fountain, which was called Byblis, was formed where This Maid had wept, and hanged herſelf (20).

(19) Anton. Liberal. Metam. cap. XXX.

(20) Photius, & Parthenius, de Amator. Affect. cap. 11.

[D] Some ſay ------ that Caunus loved Her.] One of Conon's Narratives, whereof Photius has left us ſome Extracts, imports, that Caunus, having tried ſeveral means, in vain, to obtain the Enjoyment of his Siſter Byblis, left his Country; and that it was not known, what became of him. This grieved Byblis ſo much, that ſhe forſook her Country likewiſe, and led a vagabond Life, and at laſt was ſo afflicted, Πρὸς τὰς ἀτελεῖς ἐμέρας ἀναγορεύουσα, Ob fruſtrates amores animo fracta (21), at the Conſideration of the ill Succeſs of Caunus's Love, that ſhe made a Halter of her Girdle, and hanged herſelf. Caunus, wandring up and down the World, came into Lycia, where the Naïd Pronoë told him, that Cupid had revenged him, ſince Byblis had hanged herſelf; Τὰ τε συνηρεχθίσμενα τῇ Βυβλίδι λέγει, καὶ ὡς ἐχρήσατο τῷ ἔρωτι δικαίῳ. That is, according to Andrew Schot's Tranſlation, quæ Byblidi acciderint narrat, atque amore ſit coacta mori. She added, that, if he would marry her, He ſhould reign over That Country. The Propoſal was accepted (22). Parthenius relates, I. That Nicænetus had reported, that Caunus, loving his Siſter againſt his Will, left the Country, and undertook long Travels, and that Byblis was much afflicted at her Brother's Abſence. II. That moſt Authors ſay, that it was She, who loved Caunus, and intreated him not to be cruel to her; and that he abhorred The filthy Propoſal, and retired to the Leleges, where he built a City, which was called Caunus; and that Byblis, finding, that her Paſſion continued, and that ſhe had forced her Brother to leave his Country, was ſo overwhelmed with Grief, that ſhe hanged herſelf on a Tree (23). The Scholiaſt upon Theocritus followed the leſs common Tradition: Ἧς (Βυβλίδος) ſays he, ἠραστὴς ὁ Καῦνος, ἀπέλιπε Μίλητον (24). Stephanus Byzantinus followed the other Tradition; that Byblis, being in love with her Brother, ſtrangled herſelf, becauſe he fled from her (25). Hyginus only ſays, that the Paſſion ſhe had conceived for her Brother made her kill herſelf (26). Euſtathius ſays the ſame thing (27); and here are two Verſes of Ovid agreeable to the ſame Tradition:

(21) Photius, Biblioth. Codice 186. pag. 423. & Cononis Narrat. ii.

(22) Id. ibid.

(23) Parthen. de Amatoriis Affectionibus, cap. XII.

(24) Schol Theocriti ad Idyll. VII.

(25) Steph. Byzantin. in Κάλυνδα ex Edit. Berkelii.

(26) Hygin. cap. 243. pag. 209.

(27) Euſtath. in Dionyſ. Periegetem ver. 583.

Byblida quid referam vetito quæ fratris amore
Arſit, & eſt laqueo fortiter ulta nefas (28)?

Byblis' inceſtuous Paſſion need I name,
Who expiated in Death the guilty Flame?

(28) Ovid. de Arte Amandi, lib. ii. ver. 283.

[E] Others relate This Adventure in ſuch a Manner, as neither diſhonours Byblis nor Caunus.] Conſider the above-mentioned Narrative of Nicænetus: You will only find there, that Caunus, to his great Grief, was in love with his Siſter, and abſented himſelf from her; and that Byblis, being very much afflicted at his Abſence, deſired his Return, and ſhed many Tears on That Occaſion. All theſe things are compatible with the ſevereſt Virtue; for it may be ſuppoſed, that Byblis wiſhed only, that her Brother might conquer his Paſſion, which kept him out of his Country. To feel a criminal Paſſion, and to oppoſe it ſo far, as to retire from the Object, which is loved againſt one's Will, is no crime. It is a Thing as involuntary as Pain; It is not to be anſwered for, unleſs it be conſented to; and take notice, that Nicænetus praiſes Caunus for having always loved Juſtice. Καῦνον ἔτι τε καὶ φιλοῦντα δικαιοσύνην (29). She brought forth Caunus, who ever loved Juſtice.

(29) Parthen. ubi ſupra.

BYBLOS, a maritime Town of Phœnicia, between Tripoli, and Berytus, was ſituated on a Hill, and was the ancienteſt Town in the World (a), if we may believe ſome Authors (b), who ſay, that it was built by Saturn, Son of Heaven and Earth. Malcander, and his Wife Aſtarte, who reigned there, gave Iſis a good Reception, when ſhe went thither, to ſeek the Body of Oſiris, which the Waves of the Sea had caſt on That Shore (c). The Grammarians have grounded on This Journey one of their Etymological Obſervations [A]. Some Inhabitants of Byblos

(a) Stephan Byzant. in Βύβλος.

(b) Sanchoniat. apud Euſebium, Præpar. Evangel. lib. i, cap. 10. pag. 37.

(c) Plutarch. de Iſide & Oſiride pag. 357.

[A] The Grammarians have grounded on this Journey of Iſis to Byblos one of their Etymological Obſervations.] Let us remark, in the firſt place, that the Word Βύβλος ſignifies the Plant, which ſupplied

Byblos reported, that Osiris was buried in Their City, and that it was in honour of Him, that They practiſed the Ceremonies, which were thought to be uſed in honour of Adonis (d). The City of Gebal, or Gobel, mentioned in the ninth Verſe of the Twenty ſeventh Chapter of Ezekiel, was That of Byblos, if we may believe St Jerom (e), which may be confirmed by the Tranſlation of the LXX. It is alſo thought, that the Byblians were employed, by Hiram, King of Tyre, to prepare the Materials for the Temple of Solomon (f). They ſhook off the Yoke of the Tyrians, and ſet up a diſtinct Kingdom. They were afterwards Tributaries to the Kings of Perſia [B]. This City, having been ſubdued by Alexander, remained ſubject to the Ptolomy's, Kings of Egypt, 'till Antiochus the Great had taken Phœnicia from them, which he made a Province of the Kingdom of Syria, in the third Year of the CXLth Olympiad, and the CCCCCXXXVIth of Rome (g). The Civil-Wars having overthrown This Kingdom, Tigranes, King of Armenia, made himſelf Maſter of the Upper Syria; and then there aroſe a Tyrant, who eſtabliſhed his Authority in Byblos. He was beheaded by Pompey's Order (b). Strabo, in ſaying This, obſerves, that Byblos, the Royal Seat of Cinyras, was conſecrated to Adonis [C]. The Goddeſs Venus was particularly honoured there [D]. Iſis had a Temple there alſo (i). Byblos was aſſigned to the Maritime Phœnicia, in the Diviſion, which was made of the Provinces, under the Chriſtian Emperors. It's Biſhops appeared in the firſt Council of Conſtantinople, and in That of Chalcedon. The Genoeſe delivered it from the Dominion of the Saracens, in the Year 1106; but it fell again under the Yoke of the Infidels, after the Victory, which Saladin obtained over the Chriſtians, in the Year 1187 (k). There was a very ſtrong City in Egypt, which was called BYBLOS. This we learn from the Extracts, which Photius made out of Cteſias (l). See alſo the Dictionary of Stephanus Byzantinus.

(d) Lucian. de Dea Syria, pag. 879. Tom. II.

(e) Hieron. de locis Hebraicis.

(f) 1 Kings v. 18.

(g) See the fifth Book of Polybius.

(b) Strabo, lib. 16. pag. 521.

(i) Plut. ubi ſupra.

(k) See Father Noris de Epochis Syromacedonum. Differt. iv. cap. ult. pag. 466, & ſeq.

(l) Phot. cap. 72. p. 120, 121.

ſupplied the Matter, of which Paper was made; and let us relate next, what the Etymologiſts ſay of it. They affirm, that Byblos was ſo called, becauſe it was the Place, where Iſis, lamenting Oſiris, laid down her Diadem, which was made of Paper (1). Others will have it, that This Name proceeds from hence, that Paper, in That City, might be preſerved for any length of time, without being ſpoiled in the leaſt (2). Conſult Stephanus Byzantinus, and the Author of the great Etymologicon.

(1) Stephan. Byzant. in Βύβλος.

(2) Id. ibid.

[B] The Byblians were Tributaries to the Kings of Perſia.] Aminias relates, that Xerxes, King of the Byblians, ſerved, with his Ships, in Darius's Fleet; but, underſtanding, that Byblos had capitulated with Alexander, he forſook the Perſian Party, and went, with his Ships, to the Macedonian Fleet (3).

(3) Arrian. Expedit. Alex. lib. iii.

[C] Strabo —— remarks, that Byblos, the Royal Seat of Cinyras, was conſecrated to Adonis.] I ſhall ſet down The Paſſage of Strabo, to ſhew the Careleſſneſs of the Ancients in their Writings. Ἡ μὲν ἐν Βύβλῳ, τὸ τῶ Κινύρα βασίλειον, ἱερὰ ἐστι τῶ Ἀδώνιδος· ἐν τυραννηθείσην πλευθέρωσε Πομπήιος πελεκίσας ἐκεῖνον (4). That is to ſay; Byblos, the Reſidence of King Cinyras, is conſecrated to Adonis. Pompey delivered it from Tyranny, by ordering his Head to be cut off. This is the moſt natural Senſe of The Words. Cinyras had eſtabliſhed the Seat of his Tyranny at Byblos; but Pompey cauſed his Head to be cut off, and by that means reſtored The City to it's Liberty. Now it is improbable, that Strabo had This Thought, and, if it was his Meaning, he would be guilty of extream Careleſſneſs, ſince he would, of a ſudden, produce a Tyrant, called Cinyras, and leave us, without ſaying any Thing of Him. He was not obliged to be more prolix, if it be ſuppoſed, that he ſpeaks of the ancient Cinyras, the Father of Adonis: for That Name was ſufficiently known. I believe he means Him; and, if ſo, what ſhall we do with his ἐκεῖνον? What can we refer it to? Obſerve, that his Latin Tranſlator has ill rendered the ἱερὰ ἐστι Ἀδώνιδος, by, in qua ſunt Adonidis templa. Pinedo has taken notice of This Fault (5). Let us obſerve a ſmall Overſight of Father Noris: Adonis, ſays he (6), filius fuerat Cyneræ (7) apud Byblum regii, ut ex Plutarcho & Ovidio præmonui. —— Adonis was the Son of Cinyras, King of Byblos, as I have before obſerved from Plutarch and Ovid. Now it is certain, that he had not alledged Plutarch, but Strabo, concerning This; and that Ovid, whom he had cited, does not ſay, that the Father of Adonis was King of Byblos, nor Husband of the Mother of That Adonis. He ſuppoſes, that This Mother was the Daughter of Adonis's Father, which was the general Tradition. Nevertheleſs the Author expreſſes himſelf in this Manner. Cyneras fuit è vetuſtis Bybli regibus, qui ex Zmyrna conjuge Adonim puerum formoſiſſimum ſuſcepit (8). —— Cinyras was one of the ancient Kings of Byblos, who had, by his Wife Zmyrna, the moſt beautiful Youth, Adonis.

(4) Strabo, lib. xvi. pag. 521.

(5) Pinedo in Steph. Byzant. pag. 186.

(6) Noris de Epoch. Syro-Maced. Differt. iv. pag. 469.

(7) It ſhould be Cinyræ.

(8) Id. ibid. pag. 467.

[D] Venus was particularly honoured there.] She had a Temple there, wherein the Ceremonies of the Worſhip of Adonis were performed. Lucian ſpeaks of it as an Eye-witneſs: Εἶδον δὲ καὶ ἐν Βύβλῳ μέγα ἱερὸν Ἀφροδίτης Βυβλίνης. Ἐν τῷ καὶ τὰ ἔργια ἐς Ἀδωνιν ἐπιτελέουσι (9). Vidi etiam Bybli magnum Bybliæ Veneris templum, in quo ritus quoſdam ſacros in Adonidem peragunt. He mentions alſo another Temple of Venus, conſecrated by Cinyras, on Mount Libanus, a Day's journey from Byblos (10). He went to ſee it. Father Noris thinks, that, perhaps, it is the ſame Temple, which Conſtantine cauſed to be demoliſhed (11), and which was conſecrated to Venus Aphacitis, near Mount Libanus, and the River Adonis (12). I think This ought not to be queſtioned, ſince Euſebius obſerves, that The Temple of That Venus ſtood upon Mount Libanus. The Surname of Aphacitis was taken from the Place where That Temple was built, as Zoſimus obſerves (13); and it is probable, that Macrobius ſpeaks of This Venus, in the Twenty firſt Chapter of the firſt Book of the Saturnalia, and not of Venus Architis, as it is in the Editions (14). What he ſays relates to the Worſhip of Venus and Adonis among the Aſſyrians; and he tells us, that the Statue of That Venus was on Mount Libanus. Euſebius obſerves, that many infamous Things between Men and Men, and Men and Women, were committed in the Temple, which Conſtantine cauſed to be deſtroyed (15); but Sozomen ſays only, that the Heathens affirmed, that, on a certain Day of the Year, the Efficacy of the Invocations cauſed a Fire, in the Form of a Star, to deſcend from the Top of Mount Libanus, which fell into the neighbouring River. They pretended, that This Fire was Venus herſelf, whom they called Urania (16).

(9) Lucian, de Dea Syria, pag. 878. Tom. II.

(10) Id. ibid. pag. 880, 881.

(11) Euſeb. de vita Conſtant. lib. iii. cap. 55. Sozomen. lib. ii. cap. 5.

(12) Noris de Epoch. Syro-Maced. Differt. iv. pag. 467.

(13) Zoſim. Hiſt. lib. i.

(14) See Seldenus, de Dis Syris Synt. ii. cap. 3. pag. 204.

(15) Euſeb. ubi ſupra.

(16) Sozom. lib. iii. cap. 5.

BIGOIS, a Nymph, who had written, in Tuſcan, a Book concerning the Art of interpreting Lightenings. This Book was kept at Rome, in the Temple of Apollo, with ſome others of That Nature (a).

(a) Servius in Æneid. lib. vi. ver. 72.

BIGOT (EMERIC), one of the most learned, and most honest Men, of the XVIIth Century, was of Roan (a), and of a most illustrious Family of the Long-Robe [A]. He was born in the Year 1626 (b). The Love of Learning diverted him from public Employments; he applied himself solely to Books, and Sciences: He wonderfully increased the Library, which his Father had left him [B]. Once a Week an Assembly was held at his House, for learned Conferences. He corresponded by Letter with a great many learned Persons: His Advice and his Abilities were useful to many Authors; and he endeavoured to promote The Good of the Commonwealth of Learning. He published but one Book [C]; but it is probable he would have published more, if he had lived long enough to finish them. Mr Menage within the Kingdom, and Nicolas Heinsius in a Foreign Country, were his two most intimate Friends [D]. He had contracted none of the Defects, which Learning draws after it: He was modest, and an Enemy to Contests. It may be said in general, that he was one of the best Men in the World [E]. He died at Roan, the eighteenth of December, 1689, being about Sixty four Years of Age.

(a) Histoire des Ouvrages des Sçavans, Febr. 1690, pag. 266, 267.

(b) Ibid.

[A] He was of a most illustrious Family of the Long-Robe.] According to the fine Elogy, which Mr de Beauval consecrated to him, in his History of the Works of the Learned (1), he was the Son of the Dean of the Court of Aids, and of a Daughter of Mr Groulart, first President in the Parliament of Normandy; and he reckoned, among his Ancestors, two Presidents of Sovereign Courts, one Advocate-General, and six Counsellors in the Parliament.* Let us unfold this a little, according to the Particulars, which Mr le Laboureur supplies us with. LAWRENCE BIGOT, Lord of Tibermenil, was Advocate-General in the Parliament, when the City was taken from the Protestants, in the Year 1562. He was a zealous Catholic, and contributed greatly to the hanging many People at Roan. The Huguenot Historians have complained of his Rigour. He died the thirteenth of July, 1570. He was the Son of ANTONY BIGOT, Lieutenant-General to the Bayliff of Roan, and Father of HEMERY BIGOT, Lord of Tibermenil, who had the Reversion of his Father's Place, with a Dispensation of Age, by a Patent of the first of November 1551, registred in Parliament the Twenty first of August, 1552; and he exercised it, from the Year 1570, to the Year 1578, when he was raised to the Dignity of President in the same Parliament. He had opposed, in the same Year, the Motion made to the States of Blois for excluding the King of Navarre from the Succession to the Crown of France, as Thuanus observes in the Sixty third Book of his History. Several of his Letters have been printed with Those of Stephen Pasquier (2). He left no Children: This Family was continued by JOHN and STEPHEN BIGOT, Brothers of the Advocate-General. I omit the Posterity of John Bigot; as for Stephen, he had twelve Sons, and six Daughters. LAWRENCE BIGOT, Sieur de la Turgerie, one of his Sons, was the Father of STEPHEN BIGOT, Counsellor in the Court of Aids at Roan, who transmitted his Office to his Son WILLIAM BIGOT, Father of WILLIAM BIGOT, Counsellor in the Parliament of Roan. JOHN BIGOT, another Son of Stephen, was Lieutenant to the Bayliff of Roan, and had no other Heir but his Son JOHN BIGOT, Sieur de Sommenil, Counsellor in the Court of Aids at Roan, who collected, in his large Library, the Originals of the History of the Province of Normandy, and who had nineteen Children by his Wife Barbara Groulart, Daughter of Claudius, First President in the Parliament of Roan; among others, JOHN, Sieur de Sommenil, Counsellor in the Parliament of Normandy, NICOLAS Sieur de Cleuville, who succeeded his Father in his Office, and HEMERY BIGOT (3), who makes the Subject of This Article,

(1) Febr. 1690, pag. 266, 267.

* Presidens au Mortier, so called from a kind of Cap which is the Mark of their Dignity.

(2) The 60th Epigram of the 2d Book of Pasquier is addressed, ad Edemericum Bigotium Tibermenium in Senatu Rotomagensi Præsidem.

(3) Taken from Mr le Laboureur's Additions to the Memoirs of Castelnau, Tom. I. p. 884. & seq.

[B] He encreased the Library, which his Father had left him.] I have already (4) said something concerning This Library of Mr Bigot, the Father, in quoting Mr le Laboureur; but here is an Author, who speaks more amply of it. "John Bigot, Esq; Sieur de Sommeuil (5), and Cleuville, Dean of the Counsellors of the Court of Aids of Normandy, understands Books very well, of which he has made a magnificent Library, consisting of above Six thousand Volumes, among which there are above Five hundred very good and rare Manuscripts, which he communicates freely to those, who want them for the Public; for which he will ever deserve Praise (6).'

(4) In the foregoing Remark.

(5) He should have said Sommeni. Proper Names are strangely disfigured in Father Jacob's Books.

[C] He published but one Book.] It is the Life of St Chrysostom, composed by Palladius. Neither Fronto Ducæus, nor Sir Henry Savil, could ever find the Greek Text of this Work; there was only a Latin Translation of it, composed by Ambrosius Camaldulensis. Mr Bigot found the Greek at Florence in the Great Duke's Library, and published it at Paris, in the Year 1680, with the Latin Translation he had made of it, and some other Treatises. The Journal des Sçavans gave a particular Account of it; but without saying any thing concerning a Letter of St Chrysostom to the Monk Cæsarius (7). Consult the Journalists of Holland, who have often mentioned it (8). Here are the Words of one of them, who mentioned it last of all: 'Mr Bigot's Design 'was to add the Epistle to Cæsarius, which he 'had found in a Library at Florence, to the Life 'of St Chrysostom; but it appeared so express against 'Transubstantiation, that the Examiners obliged 'him to suppress it (9).'

(6) Father Jacob in his Treatise of Libraries, pag. 681. printed in 1644.

(7) Journal des Sçavans, March 1680. pag. 103. Edit. of Amst. You will find the following Words there in praise of the Author. Mr Bigot, famous for his noble Library, and who has been a long time an Honour to Learning at Roan.

(8) Nouvelles de la Repub. des Lett. June 1685. Art. III. pag. 605. June 1686. Art. VII. pag. 685. & alibi.

(9) Hist. des Ouvrages des Sçavans, Febr. 1690, pag. 267.

[D] Mr Menage was one of his intimate Friends.] Of all the Passages of the Menagiana, in which Mr Bigot is mentioned, I shall only copy That of the Seventy fifth Page. 'If I was forty Years of 'Age, I should weep bitterly for Mr Bigot's Death; 'but I am so overwhelmed with my own Evils, 'that I can no longer be sensible of Those of 'others. I am as unhappy as Priam, who survived 'his whole Family. Mr Bigot lodged at my 'House, Thirty five Years ago, every time he 'came from Roan to Paris, and we never had any 'Difference. He was singular in one Thing: as 'he spoke but little, he never told me any thing 'he designed to do, notwithstanding the Intimacy, 'which was between us; insomuch, that, when 'he went to Rome, he said nothing of it to me 'till a Day or two before he set out. When he 'took his leave of me, he only asked me, if I 'had any Commands for him. I lose much by 'his Death. He wrote to me, not long before, that, 'for my sake, he was going to read all the old 'French Poets, and that he would impart to me 'all that he should find proper for my Origin of 'the French Tongue. The Library, which he left, 'is worth at least Forty thousand Livres. He was 'a Man of great Learning; and the Learned of 'Holland expected his Letters as so many Deci-'sions of the Difficulties they proposed to him.' It was a beautiful Friendship, which lasted thus long between These two great Men without any Interruption. The Poet, who said, that These kind of Friendships are happy (10), might with as much reason have said, that they are rare. Mr Menage dedicated his Anti-Baillet to Mr Bigot.

(10) Felices ter & amplius, Quos irrupta tenet copula: nec malis Divulsus querimoniis Supremæ citius solvet amor die. Horat. Od. 13. l. 1. The Epistle Rari would make at true a Sense as the Epithet Felices.

[E] He was one of the best Men in the World.] I cannot better comment on this Text, than by the Words of Mr de Beauval. 'There never was a 'more sincere or faithful Friend, says he (11); and 'he owned himself, that it was a Praise, which af-'fected him most. He was a Man of an Integri-'ty not common in this unhappy Age, and such 'an Enemy to Ostentation, that his Modesty went 'as far as his Simplicity of Manners. His peaceful 'and calm Temper made him incapable of the 'Noise and Quarrels, which Jealousy creates among 'learned Men.'

(11) Hist. des Ouvrages des Sçavans, ubi supra.

(c) Paris Gazette, Dec. 24. 1689.

Age (c). He has shewed, by his Will, that he died with the same Affection for the Good of Learning, which he had during his Life [F].

[F] He shewed by his Will, that he died with the same Affection for Learning, which he had during his Life.] 'He has entailed his Library upon 'his Family, to avoid the dividing of it, and 'trusted Mr Bigot of Manville, Counsellor in the 'Parliament of Paris, with the care of it, having 'left a considerable Legacy to increase it every 'Year (12).' (12) Ibid.

(a) La Croix du Maine, pag. 141.

BIGOT (William), born at Laval, in the Country of Maine (a), a Physician, and a Philosopher, was a learned Man in the Reign of Francis I. It was believed, that the learned Peter Castellan conceived some Jealousy against him, and that, for fear his Glory should be eclipsed, he hindered him from having any access to the King. Others say it was a Calumny, which Melanchthon believed too rashly [A]. It is certain, that the means, which, it is said, Castellan made use of, to render William Bigot odious to their Common Master, is very improbable [B]. The Story concerning it in the Menagiana, is not exact [C]. Bigot must have [A] It was a Calumny, which Melanchthon believed too rashly.] We have two things to do: we must shew what Melanchthon published, and what was said against him on That Subject. These are Melanchthon's Words: 'Duo sunt in Gallia viri 'excellenter docti, Castellanus, & Bigotius. Et quia 'Castellani disputationes crebro à Rege audiuntur, 'hortatur quispiam ex proceribus ut Bigotius etiam 'audiatur. Interrogat Rex in quo doctrinæ genere 'versetur. Cumque alii honorifico testimonio eum 'ornarent, tandem Castellanus, qui augeri ejus opinionem nolebat, interpellans, Quid, inquit, tantopere 'prædicatis? Est Aristotelicus. Rex interrogat qualis 'sit ea descriptio. Dicam, inquit Castellanus. Aristoteles ἀεσσοκεφαλίαν adfirmat meliorem statum 'esse quam regnum. Hæc voce apud Regem sciebat se omnem auctoritatem & Aristoteli & ejus 'studiosis detraxisse. Cumque Rex interrogaret an 'hoc scripserit Aristoteles, & cæteri id adfirmarent, 'audivissetque defendere Bigotium Aristotelicas sententias, delirare Aristotelem inquit, & negavit se 'defensorem harum inceptiarum audisturum esse. Excidè vicit Castellanus tali judice (1). —— There are, in France, two very learned Men, Castellan and Bigot. And, as the King is frequently present at the Disputations of Castellan, some one of his Courtiers advises him to hear Bigot. The King asks, in what kind of Learning he is conversant. And, when others give him an honourable Testimony, Castellan, at length, who was unwilling his Fame should increase, interposing, says, why this a-do about Bigot? He is an Aristotelian. The King enquires what That Description means. I will inform your Majesty, says Castellan. Aristotle affirms an Aristocracy to be better than a Monarchy. He knew, that, by this Declaration, Aristotle, and his Followers, would lose all their Credit with the King. And the King, having asked, whether Aristotle wrote so, and others affirming the same thing, and hearing that Bigot maintained the Aristotelian Doctrines, declared that Aristotle was mad, and that he would never hear one, who defended these Follies. Castellan easily gained his Cause before such a Judge' The Author of Castellan's Life refutes this with some Force. What he says deserves to be set down at length. 'A Bigotio Gorgiam quendam in vicis & quadriviis profitente ita privatim & publicè lacessitus convitiisque appetitus fuerat, & scripto apud exteros traductus, ut meritò eum odio prosequi posse videretur. Nam & Philippum Melanchthonem calumniis ita illi infestum reddiderat, ut is nimium credulus & facilis ea de ipso scriberet quæ nos, propter publicam causam, non sine gemitu legere poteramus. Nempe Castellanum ex eo calumniatorum esse genere qui, invidia concitati, mendaciis confictis bonas causas apud Reges oppugnarent & deteriores redderent. Argumento esse Bigotium, quem ille Philosophia Aristotelica præstantem, ne sibi & suæ gratiæ obesset, eum odiosum Regi reddere meditaretur. Aristotelem, quod laudato paucorum & populi principatu unius imperium improbasset, apud Regem graviter criminatus esset. Quod totum cum esset vanissimum, & à Castellano Aristotelem amante & admirante alienissimum, nec minus improbe à Bigotio confictum quam à Melanchthone leviter literis mandatum, Bigotium tamen postea in gratiam receptum Regi commendavit, atque illi quæ à Rege petebat apud Nemausenses impetravit (2). —— He was so attacked, and calumniated, both publickly and privately, and so exposed in writing to Foreigners, by Bigot, who set up for another Gorgias in Towns and Highways, that he seems to have had some Reason for the hatred he bore him. For he had so exasperated Philip Melanchthon against him, by his Calumnies, that the latter, too credulous and easy of Belief, wrote such Things concerning him, as, for the sake of the Public, I could not read without Grief: To wit, that Castellan was one of those Calumniators, who, excited by Envy, prejudice Persons in the Favour of their Prince; that Bigot was an Instance of it: whom he endeavoured to render odious to the King, on account of his being an Aristotelian, that the other's Credit might not ruin his Interest at Court. He brought an heavy Accusation against Aristotle, before the King, for preferring an Aristocracy, or Democracy, to a Monarchy. Which being all false, and far from Castellan, who was a Lover and Admirer of Aristotle, and no less unreasonably invented by Bigot, than rashly committed to writing by Melanchthon, yet, receiving Bigot into favour, he recommended him to the King, and obtained for him of the King, what he wished for at Nimes.' It appears from these Words, I. That Bigot, in Imitation of the ancient Sophisters, and namely of Gorgias, declaimed, and read Lectures, every where. II. That he had spoken ill of Castellan, both in private and public. III. That he made his Peace with Castellan: and that, by the Recommendation of this reconciled Enemy, he obtained, from Francis I, what he wished for at Nimes.

(1) Melanchth. in responsione contra Clerum Coloniensem. Edita, Anno 1543.

(2) Petrus Gallandius in vita Petri Castellani, n. 74. pag. 130, 131.

[B] The means, which it is said Castellan made use of — — is very improbable.] I shall not repeat Peter Galland's Remarks against Melanchthon's Narrative, but make some, which he has not made: I. It is no ways likely, that Francis I enquired what an Aristotelian Philosopher was? He was too knowing a Prince, and took too much care to have an exact Account of the State of the University of Paris; in a word, he had had too many Conversations with learned Men, to be ignorant of Aristotle's Name, and what a Follower of Aristotle was. The Question, which he is said to have asked, would be likely, notwithstanding That Prince's Learning, if to be a Peripatetic had been a rare and a new thing in France; but, as there was almost no body in the Philosophical Chairs, who did not make an open Profession of Aristotle's Philosophy; nothing is more unlikely, than to suppose, that That Prince was so surprised with an Idea of Novelty at the hearing the Name of an Aristotelian Philosopher, as immediately to require an Explication of these Terms. II. The flourishing State of the Peripatetic Sect at that time, and the great Respect, which was paid to Aristotle, do not permit us to believe, that Castellan thought he was able to wound the Reputation of a Rival by calling him a Peripatetic. It would have been taking a wrong way to weaken the Praises, which were bestowed upon Bigot in the Presence of Francis I. III. The Professors of Philosophy in the Universities of France do not explain Politics; and it would have been ridiculous in those times to have said; I will explain to you what an Aristotelian Philosopher have been a great Philosopher, since he was very much praised by Julius Cæsar Scaliger (b). He published some Treatises, both in Verse and in Prose [D]. It is a Mistake to say, that Calvin reproached him with holding the Truth in Unrighteousness [E]. (b) See the End of Remark [D].

Bongars had never heard of our William Bigot; for, in a Letter, which he wrote the sixth of August, 1596, he desired to be informed, who he was [F].

I have several curious Particulars to add to this Article. Our William Bigot was Son of JOHN BIGOT, and was born towards the end of the Month of June, 1502; for he says, in a Letter, dated at Basil, the Twenty seventh of December, 1536, that he left France at the Age of Twenty eight Years, and that it is six Years and a half since he was banished his Country. He was, therefore, Thirty four Years and a half, when he wrote this Letter. Few Authors make such Complaints of their Enemies, as this Philosopher does in his Works. We perpetually meet with some apologetical or antilogical Letters, designed to refute the Calumnies of his Adversaries. This obliges him to let us into many Particulars of his Life [G], some of which even sopher is: He is one, who prefers Common-wealths before Monarchies. IV. It is most certain, that Francis I protected Aristotle against Ramus. The Author of Castellan's Life says, that That Prince had like to have condemned this Rebel against Aristotle to the Gallies (3). So that there is reason to think, that Melanchthon did not relate the Matter as he should have done. He was mis-informed, and suffered himself to be pre-possessed without hearing both Parties. Nevertheless, his Words have gained Credit, and I find no Body, who speaks of our Bigot, without taking for certain what Melanchthon published of him. So much Power the Stars of some Men have to immortalize any Story, whether it be true, or false; agreeable, or contrary, to all Appearances!

(3) Galland, ubi supra. n. 47. pag. 75.

Naudé was in the common Error: See here what he says: 'Erasmus might have appeared among the 'Learned Men, whom Francis I drew after him 'by the Chains of his Liberality —— if he would 'have accepted the Principality of his Royal Col- 'lege, or Canonship of Fifteen thousand Livres 'Revenue, which he offered him several times*; 'and likewise William Bigot, who was the first 'Philosopher of his time, if his High Almoner, 'the Bishop of Maçon, had not diverted, him from 'the Desire he had to have him near his Person †, 'that he might not have a Learned Censurer of 'the Discourses he made every Day at the King's 'Table (4).'

* Erasm. Epist. ad Christoph. Messiam. item ad Goclenium, item ad Joan. Hond.

† Rither. in axiomat. Polit.

(4) Naudé Addit. to the Hist. of Louis XI. pag. 369, 370.

[C] The Story inserted in the Menagiana is not exact.] This is the Story: 'Peter Galland was en- 'vied, and his Enemies would have sent for one, 'whose Name was Bigot, a great Aristotelian Phi- 'losopher, from Normandy, to supplant him. Fran- 'cis I, who had been told of him, asked Peter 'Castellan, what he was? Peter Castellan answered, 'that he was a Philosopher, who followed Ari- 'stotle's Opinions. And what are Aristotle's Opi- 'nions, added Francis I? Sir, replied Peter Castel- 'lan, Aristotle prefers Common-wealths to Monar- 'chical States. This made such an Impression on 'the King's Mind, that he would hear no more 'of This Mr Bigot. Thus Peter Castellan served 'his Friend very dexterously (5).' I could make some Objections against This Account. I. Our William Bigot was not a Norman, but a Manceau. II. His Ability in the Peripatetic Philosophy could not supplant Peter Galland, who only taught Philology. III. Melanchthon, who ought to pass for an Authentic Writer, as to this matter, since he was the first, who related it, does not say, that The Business was to supplant any Professor of Paris: He says, that They would have introduced Bigot to Francis I; that That Monarch, who had heard Peter Castellan discourse so often, might also hear the Discourses of This William Bigot. Observe well, that, when the only Author, who speaks of any Fact, commits a Mistake, his Narrative cannot be altered without a new Error. I except the true Discovery of the Fact. IV. We learn from the Life of Castellan, that, at his Recommendation, Francis I granted This Bigot a thing, which he desired. How can it be said, then, that That Prince would hear no more of This Mr Bigot?

(5) Menagiana, pag. 147.

[D] He published some Treatises both in Verse and Prose.] Some of his French Verses were printed with the Poems of Charles de Sainte Marthe, Uncle of Scævola (6). Gesner mentions a Collection of Poems, Gulielmi Bigotii Lavallensis, printed at Basil, in the Year 1536 (7). He adds, It is seven Years, since I saw the Author at Basil. Among other Pieces in That Collection, there was, Catoptron ad emendationem juventutis factum carmen: epithalamium quoddam, & epigramma in Empiricum (8). Du Verdier Vau-Privas mentions This Title; Gulielmi Bigotii Lavallensis Christianæ philosophiæ præludium, opus cum aliorum tum hominis subtilissimi luculentis exprimens rationibus; Tolosæ 4. apud Guidonem Boudevilleum 1549 (9). Probably Julius Cæsar Scaliger hinted at This Book, when he said: 'Sic videmus ejusdem rei diversas esse no- 'tiones: quas barbare quidem barbaris, sed non in- 'scite apud doctos, formalitates appellabamus. Hæc 'quidem risui sunt atque contemptui novis Lucianis 'atque Diagoris culinariis: sed non neglecta sunt à 'maximo Philosopho Gulielmo Bigotio, qui quidem 'pene solus hoc summum jus hodie tuetur recondita 'philosophia (10). —— Thus we see there are dif- 'ferent Notions of the same thing, to which we gave 'the Appellation of Formalities; a Term, barbarous 'to Barbarians, but with the Learned not improper. 'These appear indeed ridiculous and contemptible to our 'Modern Lucians, and Kitchen Diagoras (11); but they 'are not neglected by the great Philosopher William 'Bigot, the only one, at present, who maintains this 'supream Justice in the Mysteries of Philosophy.'

(6) La Croix du Maine, pag. 141.

(7) Gesner, in Biblioth. p. 287.

(8) Ibid.

(9) In Supplemento Epitomes Gesneranæ.

(10) Jul. Cæsar. Scalig. Exercit. 307. n. 15. pag. 946, ad Cardan.

[E] It is a Mistake to say, that Calvin reproached him with holding the Truth in Unrighteousness.] Here is what we find in the Notes of a very Learned Man on Castellan's Life. 'Ad quem (Bigotium) extat 'epistola Joannis Calvini data IV Kal. Januarii 'MDLVII. in qua eum increpat quod à superstitioni- 'bus, id est, à professione fidei Romanæ non rece- 'deret. - - - - - - - - There is extant a Letter of John 'Calvin to Bigot, in which he blames him for not 'departing from Superstition, that is, from the Pro- 'fession of the Romish Faith.' This Letter of Calvin is the Two hundred forty sixth (11), it is written to one Peter Bigot, who did not give Glory to God by professing the Truth. Calvin had formerly lodged at his House. The Name of Castellan's Adversary was William Bigot: It is not therefore He, to whom Calvin wrote.

(11) In Editione 3. Hanov. 1597.

[F] Bongars desired to be informed, who he was.] He asked this question, after he had read the Letter, which Joachim Camerarius had written to This William Bigot. It is at the end of the third Book of the second Volume of Joachim's Letters. 'Sti- 'barus quis fuerit, nisi molestum est, explica, & 'quis Vilelmus Bigotius Gallus, ad quem extat epi- 'stola sub finem tertii libri (12). - - - - Inform me, 'if it be no trouble to you, who Stibarus is, and who 'extant an Epistle, about the end of the third Book.'

(12) Bongars, Epist. 130. ad Camerar. pag. 488. Edit. Hag. 1695.

[G] The Disputes, which he had —— obliged him to let us into many Particulars of his Life.] 'He 'was not quite a Year old, when his Nurse died of 'the Plague. Observe, by the way, that they 'were obliged to procure him a Nurse out of the 'Country, no Woman of the Town being willing 'to bring him up, because he was born with two 'Teeth. The Death of his Nurse, preceded by 'That of thirteen other Persons of the same Family, 'was the beginning of our Bigot's Misfortunes. Not 'one of the Neighbours would undertake the Care of even favour of the Ingenuity of Cardan (c), so injudiciously are they advanced (d). He informs us, among other things, that his Wife's Gallant was punished just as Abelard was. See, below, Remark [G] (e).

(c) See the Remarks of the Article CARDAN, and particularly Remark [Y].

(d) Citat. (13).

(e) Between Citations (13) and (14).

of him, or even inform his Relations of it: in a word, he was exposed without pity under a Hedge by the Side of a great Road. His own Father, drawn that way by other particular Affairs, found him in this Condition. As he grew up, his Education was intrusted with Persons, who did not take all the necessary care of it; so that he no sooner withdrew himself from their Discipline, than he plunged into Debauchery. Falling into a Scrape at Antwerp, he was obliged to retire into the Country. This Retreat was of no small Service to him; It brought him back to a Relish for Study. He applied himself to Greek, which he acquired without a Master, and in a very short Time. The other Sciences cost him no more Time, or Pains; he affirms, that he was obliged to his First Masters only for a little Latin; and as for Philosophy, Astronomy, Astrology, Medicine, &c. he was αὐτοδίδακτος, Self-taught. After having passed some Time in this Retreat, he resolved to go into Germany, that he might be more at Liberty. He took this Journey in Company with Mr du Bellai de Langey, who was sent by the King to the German Princes, to inform them of his Majesty's Pretensions; which Negotiation was carried on with great Secrecy; and Mr du Langey was to appear in some Courts only in the Habit of a Jewel-Merchant. Our Bigot came to Tubingen, and was there admitted Professor of Philosophy. Happening to quarrel with the other Members of the University, who were displeased at his endeavouring to refute the Philosophical System of Melanchton, he was obliged to retire to Basil, in 1536, where he continued for some time. At last, he returned to France, and found a sure Protection in Mess. du Bellai, his Patrons. Budæus would have kept him at Paris, and procured him the stipendium regium Philosophi; but Castellan prevented it. Read the following Account of this Matter by one William Figulus, who wrote Notes on a Poem of Bigot's to Jesus Christ, which I shall take notice of hereafter. Budæus Bigotium, Germania regressum, rogavit stipendium regium Philosophi præferret Aulæ, quam sequi parabat: quo de Bigotius vicissim egit cum Cardinale Bellaico Mecænate suo, id ut ferret: sed longe aberat ab illo sibi desiderato scopo Bigotius, cum id apud Franciscum Regem tacita invidia & obtrectatione quidam Aulicus interrupisset, non obscuriore certe Academiæ Parisiensis quam Bigotii damno. Qui sit autem is, in responsione Melanchthonis ad Colonienses invenies: id nunc Bigotius insinuat, & id quidem miris fatis, cum eo invito ea invita claudatur (13). —— Budæus desired Bigot, who was come back from Germany, that he would prefer the Royal Stipend of a Philosopher to the Court, which he was preparing to follow; and Bigot, in his Turn, asked permission to do so of his Patron the Cardinal du Bellai: but Bigot was far from gaining this favourite Point, being defeated in it by a certain Courtier, who, through envy, misrepresented him to King Francis, not less to the Loss of the University of Paris, than that of Bigot himself. Who this Courtier was, you will find in Melanchton's Answer to those of Cologn. Bigot now insinuates this, and indeed by a strange Fate, since, against his Will, it is unwillingly sent up. - - - - - -

(13) Gul. Figulus in hac verba Bigotii. Denique mirris iunxto inspita ossa mihi claudat Lachesis fatis.

Does he mean the Post of Regius Professor of Philosophy? However it be, Bigot, being disappointed, turned his Thoughts to other Employs. He was offered a Chair in the University of Padua, with a good Salary: he refused it, and chose to go Nismes, whither he was invited to regulate the University, which one Baduellus had there begun. The Zeal, which he shewed in defending the pretended Privileges of this University, raised him many Enemies, who recalled Baduellus. It was then a Kind of War between the two Masters, and their Scholars. Bigot had some Arrets of the Parliament of Toulouse, confirming the Conventions he had made with the Town. He even came to Paris; and, by the means of his Friends, and particularly Cardinal du Bellai, he obtained Letters from the King, and other Presons of the Court, addressed to the Governor, and Principal Men, of Nismes: but, thinking to enjoy a certain Tranquility in that Town, and having for that purpose sold all he could of his Patrimony at Laval, he went to Toulouse, where he found his Affairs in a Situation very different from what he expected. His Wife, by whom he had already had two Daughters, not keeping her matrimonial Faith, and having yielded to the Caresses of a certain Compeer of hers, a Player on Instruments, who dwelt at Bigot's House, it happened, that the Adulterer, whose name was Petrus Fontanus, met with the Punishment of Abelard: in a word, he lost the true Tokens of his Manhood: but, what added to the Misfortune of our poor Husband, was, it's being discovered, that the principal Actor in This Tragedy was one Antonius Verdanus, an old Servant of Bigot's. This was enough for the Enemies of Bigot; and the Opportunity appeared too favourable, of plunging him into Difficulties, for them to let it slip. His Wife was carried off. He was accused of the Crime of Mutilation, and several others, all which demanded his Head. He delivered himself up to Imprisonment too rashly, and continued a long time in Confinement. He even expected to lose his Head, so great was the Power of his Enemies, and such malicious Turns did they give to all his Actions. At last, an extraordinary Sessions, which was held at Puy in Velay, delivered him from his Prison, but not from the Misery, to which this Affair had reduced him; which yet was not over, with respect to Civil Proceedings, in 1549, when he published his Christianæ Philosophiæ Præludium. Tired with so many Attacks, he says, in several Parts of This Book, that his Stars promise him, that he shall die towards the North, and out of his own Country; that he wishes he could leave This ungrateful Land, and retire to die at Metz. It is his favourite Town: he could not forbear addressing to it several Verses, in his Poem to Jesus Christ, and to beg of it never to reject him. All This is taken, partly from an Apologetical Epistle, and another Antilogical Epistle, &c. The Apologetical Epistle is in a Collection, of the Publication of which you have taken no notice; It is This: Gul. Bigotii, Lavallensis, somnium ad Gul. Bellaium Langæum, Mecænatem suum, in quo cum alia tum Imperatoris Caroli describitur ab Regno Galliæ depulso. Ejusdem explanatrix somnii Epistola, quâ se item & Gul. Budæum a quorundam calumniis defendit. Ejusdem Catoptron, & alia quædam Poemata, cusa prius inemendatius: Parisiis, 1537, 8vo. The Antilogical Epistle is to be found together with the Christianæ Philosophiæ Præludium, Opus cum aliorum, tum hominis substantiam, luculentis expromens & exemplis & rationibus, Gul. Bigotio, Lavallensi, Autore. Ejusdem & ad Jesum Christum Carmen supplex, & Antilogica Dedicatrixque Epistola (14), perapte tam Præludio quam reliquis ipsius Christianis scriptis prælegenda: Tolosæ, Guid. Boudevillæi, 1549, fol. I have already observed, that the Carmen Supplex was commented on by Willam Figulus. His Notes are inserted in This Edition, together with others, which he wrote on other Verses of the same Bigot, which are at the end of the same Volume (15).

(14) Ad Joan. Card. Belsaium.

(15) Taken from a Manuscript Memoir, communicated by Mr Lancelot.

The Memoir, which I have made use of just as it came to my Hand, is very proper to inform us of two Things; the One, that Mr Lancelot knows how to make an excellent Use of the Books, which the Mazarine Library furnishes him with; the second, that nothing is more necessary to the Author of such a Work as This, than to consult All the Prefaces, All the Epistles Dedicatory, All the Apologies, and All the Writings, called Eristique, and All the Remarks of Authors. It is in them we find a great many Particulars of their Lives.

BILLAUT (ADAM), known by the Name of Master Adam, was a Joiner of Nevers, who became a pretty good French Poet. He made himself first known in his own Country, and to the Princesses of Gonzague (a), who resided sometimes in their Dutchy of Nevers; and afterwards he ventured to go to Paris, where he met with some Patrons. He took this Journey in the Year 1637 [A]. The Duke of Orleans honoured him with a Pension (b). This new Poet published a Collection of Poems, entituled Les Chevilles de Maître Adam, and did not fail to add to it the Verses, which many Poets of his Time made in his Praise. The Abbot de Marolles honoured it with a Preface, which favours of a Panegyric, and wherein he does not forget to inform us, that Peter Billaut, and Joan More, our Poet's Father and Mother, were originally of the Village of St Benin des Bois, in the Country of Nivernois. It appears by Master Adam's Verses, that he intruded himself among the Grandees; but I do not believe that he grew rich by the Poet's Trade [B]. He died the nineteenth of May, 1662 (c). Mr Baillet was not lavish of his Praises on him [C]. I have heard it said, that he was obliged to return to his Joiner's Trade for a Livelihood; but I do not believe it.

(a) The Princess Mary, and the Princess Anne, the first of which has been Queen of Poland.

(b) See the Preface to the Chevilles.

(c) Romuald, Histor. and Chron. Journal, October 19, pag. 450.

[A] He came to Paris, in the Year 1637.] All the Proof I have for it, is a Passage of the Abbot de Marolles, wherein he says, that, being at Nevers, in 1636, he was saluted one Morning by Mr Adam Billaut, who repeated some of his Verses to him, and gave him some Copies of them. This Abbot adds, that he promised the Princess Mary to proclaim the Merit of this rare Poet, and that Master Adam came to Paris the Year following. He was known there, continues he, to the Grandees, and to all the Court (1).

(1) Memoires de l'Abbé de Marolles, pag. 107.

[B] He did not grow rich by the Poet's Trade.] We must not always take in the literal Sense what the Poets say about their great Indigence, to Those, from whom they would obtain a few Pistoles; but I believe our Billaut did not exaggerate, when he said (2), that his Pension served only for the Payment of his Creditors: It was not therefore the way to leave a good Estate to his Children (3). He had a Pension from Cardinal Richelieu, as may be inferred from his desiring one of his Friends to follicit the Payment of it (4).

(2) In the Epistle Dedicatory of his Chevilles to the Count d'Arpajon.

(3) He had a Wife, and some Children. Preface of Mr de Marolles.

(4) Chevilles, pag. 110. Edit. of Roan, 1654.

[C] Mr Baillet was not lavish of his Praises on him.] Master Adam, says he (5), surnamed Billaut, commonly called the VIRGIL OF THE JOINERS, left us his Chevilles (Pegs) his Villebrequin (Wimble) and his Rabot (Plane), and his other Tools, which he thought to immortalize by consecrating them to the Deities of Parnassus. —— 'Unless it be 'known that he was an illiterate Joiner, he will 'pass for an indifferent Poet, and perhaps, for a 'Black guard of Parnassus. — For it must be confessed, that Master Adam does more Honour to 'the Joiners, and other Tradesmen, than to the 'Poets, and the Muses.'

(5) Jugemens sur les Poëtes n. 1438.

BILLI (JAMES de), Abbot of St Michel en l'Herme, was one of the learned Men of the XVIth Century. He translated several Works of the Greek Fathers into Latin, and particularly Gregory Nazianzen, to the Satisfaction of good Judges (a). I designed to publish a long Account of him; but I could not meet with his Life, composed by John Chatard (b); so that I refer my Readers to Moreri, and shall only observe some Mistakes of the learned Mr de Launoi [A], who published two Letters, which inform us, that James de Billi complained much of being at Paris. He complained of it, among other Reasons, because Provisions were dear, and because he was obliged to lose part of his Time with the Ladies [B]. His Sister, who lived with Madam de Montmorency, was the occasion of it. It is not (a) See Mr Baillet, Jugem. des Sçavans, n. 873.

(b) See Teissier Biblio h. Bibliothecar. pag. 170.

[A] Some Mistakes of the learned Mr de Launoi.] He has inserted, in his History of the College of Navarre (1), two Letters of James de Billi, written to James Pelletier; and he believed they were written in the Year 1582. This shews, that he did not know, that the Author of these two Letters died in the Year 1581. La Croix du Maine affirms it. Mr Baillet takes it for granted in divers places of his Jugements. Moreri notes the Twenty second of November 1580. But Thevet, in the second Tome of the Elogies, pag. 892, marks the Twenty fifth of December 1581. He is more in the right than Moreri. The Ignorance of such Things is nothing, and can do no prejudice to a learned Man; But I cannot apprehend, that a Man can discover his Ignorance in much more considerable Matters, without some Prejudice to himself. By publishing these two Letters, as written in the Year 1582, Mr de Launoi must have believed, that the Prince of Condé was then in Prison; that the Admiral, having gathered the broken Remains of the Army, passed the Loire, and committed great Ravages; that the Duke of Guise pursued him with long Marches, &c. All these things are plainly contained in the first of James de Billi's two Letters, with this Circumstance; that the Prince of Condé had almost made his Escape out of Prison, which induced the Queen to have him removed to Chartres. It is plain, that This Letter was written in the beginning of the Year 1563. The Date, which Mr de Launoi produces, is, Lutetiæ 10. Calend. Feb. 1582 (2). Without doubt, he found the Date of the Place, and of the Day, in the Original, and added That of the Year to it. I know not what grounds he could have for his Conjectures; but it is certain, either that he did not consider the Contents of That Letter, or that he was but little skilled in our Modern History. Moreover, the Publication of those Letters shews, that he did not understand Greek; for he left several Faults, which the Printers had committed, in some Greek Words, which our Abbot had made use of. For example, This Verse of Homer,

(1) Page 360.

Ἀλλὰ τὰ μὲν πρόσθ' ἔασιν ἀδόμεν ἀχνυμένοισι περ, was printed thus,

Ἀλλὰ τὰ μὲν πρόσθε τέρπε θύμον, ἀχνυμένοισι περ.

(2) That is, January 23.

[B] He complained, that he was obliged to lose part of his Time with the Ladies.] If you desire to know all the Reasons, why he was sorry, that he had left his Province, read his own Words; 'Hic omnia perturbata, morbis infesta; hic extrema annonæ caritas, hic nullo succo victitandum; hic cursitandum, litigandum, & sororis causâ, quæ apud Magistri Equitum uxorem educatur inter puellas, tempus terendum & perdendum. —— Every thing here is in Confusion; The City is unhealthy; Provisions are dear; Here I must live upon biting my Nails, or sucking my Thumbs; I am obliged to hurry up and down; I must engage in Quarrels; and, upon my Sister's Account, who is educated among the young Ladies in the Master of the Horse's Family, must squander away my Time. This latter point favours but little of the Abbot; neither are we speaking of a Court-Abbot, but of an Abbot, who was a great Grecian, and who minded nothing but his Studies.

not universally agreed, that his Translation of Gregory Nazianzen is a good one: I am going to shew, from some Particulars, that it is not [C].

[C] Here are some Particulars, which shew, that his Translation of Gregory Nazianzen is not a Good One.] It was first printed at Paris in 1569, and at Cologne in 1570, and then again at Paris in 1583. This last Edition was made by the Care of Genebrard, and dedicated to Pope Gregory XIII; it is much the most ample, and exact. It is This Version, which is placed over against the Greek Text, in the Edition of Paris, in two Volumes, by Morel, in 1609 (3). Father Lowvart, a Benedictin, who intends to undertake a new Edition of Gregory Nazianzen, reckons, among the difficulties, which will retard the Execution of This Enterprize, the Necessity of revising the fine Translation of the Abbot Billy (4). Though it should answer still less to the Text, says he (5), than has been observed by the Editors themselves of Paris, in 1610 and 1611, in their Prefaces —— 'The profound Veneration paid to the Memory and 'Learning of this great Man, will always be a reason for preserving his Version as much as possible. 'And if what the learned Petavius remarks upon St 'Epiphanius, that it is more difficult to correct a 'Translation, than to make a new one: if This, I 'say, be not true in relation to a learned and polite 'Version, such as That of the Abbot de Billi, This 'will lessen the Pains, at least will spare the disgust 'of too severely censuring the Faults, which have 'escaped This learned Abbot, who, otherwise, was 'so perfect a Master of the two Languages. For 'the rest, Father Sirmond is not the only Person, 'who has corrected This Version. It is scarce to be 'known again in the Dogmata Theologica of Petavius, 'in which St Gregory is cited in almost every Page. 'What is more remarkable is, that, besides the great 'Knowledge this learned Jesuit had of the two Languages, he was likewise a perfect Master of the 'Divinity of the Greek Fathers.'

How complaisantly soever this is expressed, it plainly gives us to understand, that the Translation of our Abbot de Billi is very imperfect.

The same Benedictin refutes what had been advanced in a Memoir, communicated to the Journalists of Trevoux, that the Abbot de Billi gave up his Manuscript to the Booksellers. 'This Illustrious Abbot, says he (6), published his Latin St Gregory 'twice in his Life time. As for the Abbot de Billi's Greek Manuscript, it was never in a Condition 'to be printed. Some will be surprized at the Novelty of This Proposition, after what Chatard has 'said of it in his Elogy of the Abbot de Billi, and 'what Genebrard wrote concerning it to Pope Gregory XIII, in the Year 1582, immediately after 'the Death of This Abbot. This Letter is still to 'be seen in three Editions of Paris. 'I have in my 'Hands this pretended Greek Manuscript of the Abbot de Billi, the very Original, which passed from 'this Abbot to Genebrard, and from his Hands into 'Petavius's Library, whence the Booksellers of 'Paris had it, to print, as they said, the Greek 'Text, revised by the Abbot de Billy. I am ready 'publickly to produce it, and to prove, that the 'Greek Text was never restored by the Abbot de 'Billy, nor by any other. St Gregory —— is —— 'the only one of the four Doctors of the Greek 'Church, whose Text remains in the Corruption of 'the first Edition, if even the Paris Edition has not 'very much added to it (7). It is certain, even by 'the Confession of the Editors of Paris, (first and 'second Preface) that this Abbot left nothing as 'to the Greek Text of St Gregory, but what is in 'an Edition of Basil, printed by Herwagius, in '1550, in which, by dint of guessing, we read, 'in the Margin, and sometimes between the Lines, 'here a Latin, and there a Greek, Word. —— 'It is a Chaos, which I believe the illustrious 'Author himself could not clear up, were he to 'return at present into the World. —— Morel, in 'his Preface, speaks almost in the same manner of 'this Manuscript; and all, who please, may be 'convinced of it by their own Eyes. It was, however, this pretended Correction of the Greek 'Text by the Abbot de Billy, which was given 'into the Hands of a Corrector of the Press, who, 'not being able to make any thing of it (which 'was no wonder) printed neither the Edition of 'Basil, nor this pretended Correction, but One, I 'know not what, formed out of those two, as 'his Fancy directed him. —— I appeal, after 'this, whether it was honest in the Booksellers to 'impose upon the Public by so deceitful a Title, 'as That of the Abbot de Billy; Jacobus Billius '------ cum MSS. Regiis contulit, emendavit, '&c (8).'

This is enough, I. To undeceive Those, who have a good Opinion of the Work of this Abbot. II. To render suspected what Booksellers affirm.

(3) Du Pin, Biblioth Tom. II. pag. 222. Edit. Amst.

(4) See Memoires de Trevoux, July, 1704, pag. 1247. Edit. of France.

(5) Ibid.

(6) Ibid. pag. 1243, &c.

(7) Ibid. pag. 1250.

(8) Note, that the Memoir of Father Louvart is to be found likewise in the Nouv. de la Repub. des Lettres, Oct. 1704, pag. 382, &c.

BILLON (Francis de), Secretary, born at Paris, published a Book, entituled, Le Fort inexpugnable de l' Honneur du Sexe Feminin *, which he dedicated to Catherine de Medicis, and to some other Princesses (a). His Epistle Dedicatory is dated from Rome, in the ancient Field of Mars, in the Year 1550. It is a whimsical Book (b), in which Henry Stephens found many Blasphemies, which consist in Comparisons between the ancient Prophets, and the Secretaries of the King of France (c). It was printed at Paris in the Year 1555, in Quarto. I have quoted it sometimes. The Author was a Nephew of a Bishop of Senlis [A]. I think he had been Secretary of William du Bellai, Lord of Langei.

(a) La Croix du Maine, pag. 93.

(b) See the Biblioth Francoise of du Verdier, pag. 395.

* The Impregnable Fort of Female Honour.

(c) Henri Etienne, Apologie d' Herodote, chap. XIV. pag. 94.

[A] He was Nephew of a Bishop of Senlis.] The fourteenth Chapter of his Book contains The Pen's Petition to the Ladies in favour of the Secretaries. They have only 'seized, says the Pen in That Petition (1), the Fruits of my Letters ----- like 'the Engineer of this Fort, who spent all his Substance in building of the same, for the eternal 'Defence of you all, as his Uncle Mr Arthur 'Fillon (2), not long since Bishop of Senlis, did 'in Normandy, for the Protection of the Country, 'defended by him, and eased of many Charges, 'for which he was called, in his Life-time, the 'Father of the Country, according to the ancient 'Mode.'

(1) Billon's Fort Inexpugnable, pag. 229.

(2) It is perhaps a false Print for Billon.

BION, a Bucolic Poet, born at Smyrna [A], lived in the Time of Ptolomy Philadelphus [B], who reigned from the fourth Year of the CXXIIId Olympiad, to [A] He was born at Smyrna.] The Epithet Σμυρναῖος, that attends him every where, is a good Proof of it; it may be confirmed by the Verses of Moschus, wherein mention is made of the Sorrows of the River Meles for the Death of it's Son Bion. That River runs by Smyrna.

Τῦτο τοι, Σ πολιῆται λιγυρώτατοι, Δύτεσθ' ἄλγος
Τῦτο, Μέλη, νέον ἄλγος. ἀπώλεσε φράτορα τὸν Ὅμηρον.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -
- - - - - - τὸν πάλιν ἄλλον
Τίτα Λαχέσεις (1).

This, O most sonorous of Rivers, is to you a new Occasion of Grief: You first lost Homer; now you deplore another Son.

(1) Moschus, in Epitaphio Bionis.

[B] He lived in the Time of Ptolomy Philadelphus.] See here the Proof of it. Theocritus was afflicted for the Death of Bion; and he lived in the Time to the second Year of the CXXXIIId. There is some probability that he passed the best part of his Life in Sicily [C], or in Greater Greece (a). He was an excellent Poet, if we rely on the Lamentations of his Disciple Moschus. The few Pieces, which remain of him, witness the same, in the Opinion of very good Judges. Bion died of Poison, as Moschus plainly observes (b). There are many Editions of the Idylls of these two Poets; but the best of them is, without doubt, That of Paris, of 1686, with a Translation in French Verse, and some Remarks (c). See what the Journalists said of it [D]. It was soon after reprinted in Holland.

(a) Græcia Major. This was the Name of That Part of Italy, which was call the Kingdom of Naples.

(b) Taken from Bion's Life, prefixed to the Translation of his Idylls, by M. de Longo-Pierre.

(c) M. de Longo-Pierre is the Author of both.

Time of That Ptolomy; it follows, then, that Bion lived also at the same time. This Proof would be much stronger than it is, if the six Verses, which precede these Words of Moschus, ἐν δὲ Συρακοσίοισι Θεόκριτος, interque Syracusanos Theocritus, did not pass for a Supplement of Musurus (2). That Author, finding an Hiatus there, filled it up, supposing that Moschus mentioned the Complaints, which the Death of Bion had excited among the Poets in several Countries. This Supposition connects the beginning and end of That Hiatus very well; but, because it is not the only expedient to find this Connexion, there is reason to doubt, whether Moschus had the Thought, which Musurus ascribes to him, and, consequently, it can be no longer certain, that Theocritus was represented, there, as then alive.

(2) See the Remarks of Mr de Longe-Pierre, pag. 177, 180.

[C] He spent the best Part of his Life in Sicily.] It is Moschus again, who supplies us with Proofs of this Fact. I have not seen how John Vintimiglia makes use of them (3), to prove, that Bion was of Sicily, or, at least, that he resided there (4), but it is very probable, that these two Verses were chiefly considered by him:

(3) Nel libro primo de' Poeti Bucolici Siciliani. Lorenzo Crasso quotes him in his History of the Greek Poets, pag. 89.

(4) Sono molte altre le pruove e l'autoritate portate dal Vintimiglia che almeno crede d'abitazione Siciliano Bione. Lorenzo Crasso, pag. 90.

Ἀμφότεροι ναγαῖς ἐπιλαμένοι. ἐς μὲν Ἅιδαν ἔστης
Παγασίδ' ἐκέλευσας, ὁ δ' ἔχεν κόμα πᾶσι φίλησι.

Ambo fontibus ibant: alter (5) bibebat
De fonte Pegaseo: alter (6) tenebat poculum de fonte Arethusæ.

(5) That is, Homer.

(6) That is, Bion.

Lorenzo Crasso observes, that John Lascaris, in his Illustrious Men of Sicily, as he is quoted by Maurolicus (7), does not mention our Bucolic Poet Bion, but another Bion, who was of Syracuse, and a Rhetorician by Profession. Jerom Ragusa, a Sicilian Jesuit, speaks only of This Rhetorician (8). Bonanni maintains something like a Paradox: He pretends, that Moschus speaks only of Theocritus; 'Sappia chi legge, says he (9), che nel sopradetto 'Idillio non si può intendere Bione poëta Bucolico, perciochè costui non fù Siracusano, ma Smirneo, e fiorì dopo Moscho. Così medesimamente 'per nessuna ragione vi può esser inteso un' altro 'Bione il quale è Siracusano, perche egli non fù 'poëta, ne scrisse cose pastorali, ma fù Rhetorico. '---- Bion, the Bucolic Poet was not of Syracuse, 'but of Smyrna; and Moscus cannot be supposed 'to mean another Bion, who was of Syracuse, because That Bion was not a Poet, but a Rhetorician.'

(7) Nella Storia di Cicilia.

(8) In Elogiis Siculorum qui veteri memoria literis floruerunt.

(9) Nell' Antica Siracusa apud Lorenzo Crasso ubi supra, p. 90.

[D] The best Edition of This Poet is That of Paris. ---- See what the Journalists say of it.] Viz. The Paris Journal of the nineteenth of August, 1686; the News from the Common-wealth of Learning, in the Month of Septemb. 1686, Artic. I; The Acta Eruditorum of Leipsic, at the second Section of the first Volume of the Supplements. I do not believe it has been mentioned in the Bibliotheque Universelle.

BION, firnamed the Borysthenite, because he was born at Borysthenes (a), was a Philosopher of much Wit, but very little Religion. He flourished about the CXXth Olympiad (b). He was much beloved by Antigonus, King of Macedonia; and, as he had a Boldness, which came near to Impudence, he made no scruple to confess to him, that he was the Son of a Freed-man, who became a Bankrupt, and of a Harlot [A]. He despised the Platonic Philosophers, whilst he was an Auditor of Crates; afterwards he took the Habit of a Cynic; then he addicted himself to Theodorus, who was a professed Atheist; and, lastly, he was a Disciple of Theophrastus, who was the Head of Aristotle's Sect. He loved Pomp and Ostentation, and shewed himself in several Cities. He caused himself to be followed, at Rhodes, into the Place of Exercise, by several Sea-men, who had the Complaisance to dress themselves like Scholars at his Sollicitation. He must needs have been very eloquent, to persuade Sailors to such a Thing. He had a good Genius for witty Sayings [B], as we may judge from some of his, which have been preserved

(a) There was a Town, and a River of this Name: The modern Name of the River is Dnieper; it runs thro' the Frontiers of Muscovy and Poland.

(b) See the Remarks [G] and [K].

[A] He made no Scruple to confess to Antigonus, that he was the Son of a Freed-man - - - and of an Harlot.] The manner in which Antigonus asked him; Τίς πόθεν εἶς ἀνδρῶν; πόθι τοι πόλις ἠδὲ τοκῆες; Who are you, what Countryman are you, and of what Family? made Bion believe, that the King had been told, that he was of very mean Extraction; so that he thought his best way was to own the thing; and indeed, he would have lost more by denying it, than he would have got. Wherefore he freely confessed whatever the Public knew about his Father and Mother, and ended with a Verse of Homer, the better to answer Antigonus, who had made use of one of the same Poet's Verses, when he asked him who he was. Ταύτης τοι γενεῆς τε καὶ αἵματός εὔχομαι εἶναι. Such are my Father and Mother, and I glory to be born of them. He added, Let Perseus and Philonides leave this out of their Histories, and do you judge of me by myself (1). We find in Athenæus what Bion's Mother's Name was. Καὶ Βίων δ' ὁ Βορυσθενίτης φιλόσοφος ἐταίρας ἦν υἱὸς Ὀλυμπίας καλαίνης, ὡς φησι Νικίας ὁ Νικαεὺς ἐν ταῖς τῶν φιλοσόφων διαδοχαῖς (2). Bion, the Borysthenite, the Philosopher, was the Son of a Lacedemonian Harlot, named Olympia, according to Nicias of Nicæa, in his Succession of the Philosophers. She had a fine Name, and her Country was at a great Distance from the Place, where she was married. It would be in vain to ask, whether she had prostituted herself in her own Country, and whether she went to live near the Borysthenes, that she might pretend to be a Woman of Honour in case of Necessity, or that she might thrive better among the Barbarians, who are not so nice, as the Inhabitants of Greece: The Books say nothing of This; but it appears by her Son's Answer, that she was taken from a Place of ill Fame, when she met with an Husband. Μήτηρ δέ, οἵαν ὁ τοιοῦτος ἂν γήμαι, ἀπ' οἰκήματος (3). My Mother was taken from a Bawdy house; and such a Man as my Father could not pretend to a better Match.

(1) Diog. Laërt. lib. IV. in Bion. init.

(2) Athen. lib. XIII. chap. VI. pag. 495, 496.

(3) Diog. Laërt. ibid.

[B] He had a good Genius for witty Sayings.] This Passage of Horace must be understood of Him.

Carmine

preſerved [C]. He was no leſs ſucceſsful in the making of Parodies. In all likelihood it was he, who, conſidering how difficult it was to pleaſe different ſorts of People, had a Thought about it, which Dion Chryſoſtom refutes [D]. He retired to Chalcis, as Ariſtotle had done; but it is not ſaid, that it was on a like Occaſion; and, falling ſick there, he did as moſt impious Men do, he ran into another Extream [E]. He became ſuperſtitious; he had recourſe to Ligatures, and to an hundred other things, which, in the Judgment of the Vulgar, were Preſervatives,

Carmine tu gaudes, hic deleſtatur Iambis;
Ille BIONEIS ſermonibus & ſale nigro (4).

You think, perhaps, Heroic Numbers beſt; Iambic Meaſure is Another's Taſte.
A Third, to gratify his Spleen, wou'd chuſe Bion's ſharp Stile, and the Satiric Muſe.

(4) Horat. Epiſt. II. Lib. II. v. 60.

Chabot remarks, on this Paſſage, that moſt Interpreters underſtand Comedies by Sermones Bionei. Their Meaning is, that Ariſtophanes having excelled in Comedy, and Ariſtophanes's Father's Name having been Bion (5), the Epithet in queſtion was given to Comedies. This Pretence is groundleſs: Ariſtophanes's Father was called Philip (6); and, if the Character of Bion Boryſthenites be narrowly conſidered, it cannot be doubted, but that theſe Words of Horace are meant of Him. An ancient Scholiaſt upon That Poet (7) has hit the Mark; for he explains Bioneis, by ſatyricis, lividis, amaris, carmine maledico. 'Bion autem, he goes on, Sophiſtes cognominatus mordaciſſimis verſibus eſt uſus, quibus ita omnes laceravit ut ne Homero quidem parceret. '--------- Bion the Sophiſt wrote very ſatirical 'Verſes, in which he attacked every body, nor ſpared 'even Homer himſelf.' Why ſhould he ſpare Homer? he ſpared neither Socrates, nor Jupiter; he ſlandered Men, and Gods, indifferently. See the following Remark. He had the Art of making People laugh. Ἦν δὲ καὶ θαλειὰς καὶ πολὺς ἐν τῷ γελοίῳ διαχρῆσαι, φορτικοῖς ὀνόμασι καλὰ τῶν πραγμάτων χρώμενος. Erat autem & ſpectatorum ſtudioſus, riſumque movere auditoribus maxime peritus, gravibus nominibus adverſum res utens (8). He had an impetuous Spirit, which made him overſtrain things. Thus I tranſlate φορτικοῖς ὀνόμασι χρώμενος; and the Latin Tranſlator of Plutarch ſeems to me to have miſunderſtood the Place, where it is ſaid, that the young Beards of handſome Boys were, as Bion expreſſed it, ſo many Harmodius's and Ariſtogiton's, becauſe they make the Tyranny of Love to ceaſe, as ſoon as they appear. This is an Inſtance of Thoſe ſtrong, quick, and ſtrained, Expreſſions, which were uſual with our Sophiſt. Plutarch makes uſe of the Word φορτικώτερον, which I think is very ill rendered by That of importunius. Here is the whole Paſſage: Ἔτι δὲ φορτικώτερον ὁ σοφιστὴς Βίων τὰς τῶν καλῶν τρίχας Ἁρμοδίνε ἐκάλει καὶ Ἀριστογείτονας, ὡς ἅμα καλὴν τυραννίδ᾽ ἀπαλλαττομένας ὑπ᾽ αὐτῶν τὰς ἡβώσας. Et quando Bio ſophiſta importunius nonnihil ſermoſorum crines Harmodios vocavit & Ariſtogitones, quod iis enatis pulcra tyrannide amatores ſeſe abdicare cogantur (9).

(5) Porphyrion, an ancient Commentator upon Horace, ſays ſo. See Cruquius on thoſe Words of Horace.

(6) Dacier on This Paſſage of Horace.

(7) Acron.

(8) Diog. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 52.

(9) Plut. In Amatorio, pag. 777.

[C] We may judge of it from ſome of his Sayings, which have been preſerved.] Moreri mentions ſome of them, but has not made choice of the moſt remarkable. The way to the other World, ſaid he (10), is very eaſy; People go thither blindfold. He found ſomething contradictory in Funerals; They burn People, as if they were inſenſible; and lament them, as if they were ſenſible (11). He looked upon it as a Folly to tear one's Hair in Time of Affliction, as if a Man were leſs ſenſible of Grief, by making his Head bald. Lærtius does not mention This; It is Cicero who reports it: Hinc ille Agamemnon Homericus & idem Accianus, Scindens dolore identidem intonſam comam.

In quo facetum illud Bionis, perinde ſtultiſſimum regem in luctu capillum ſibi evellere, quaſi calvitio mœror levaretur (12). This Jeſter expreſſed the Debauchery of Alcibiades very lively: In his Youth he robbed Women of their Husbands; and, when he was grown up, he robbed Men of their Wives (13). What was intolerable in his Jeſts, was, that he jeſted upon Morality and Religion. If Socrates, ſaid he, had occaſion for Alcibiades, and did not make uſe of him, he was a great Fool; if he had no occaſion for him, his Continency is no great Matter (14). To ridicule what was ſaid of the Puniſhment inflicted on the Danaïdes, he ſaid, that they would be more ſeverely puniſhed, if they were condemned to carry Water in Veſſels, which have no Holes in them. Ἔλεγε τὰς μὲν ἀδικωτέρας μᾶλλον ἂν κολάζεσθαι εἰ ὁλοκλήρους καὶ μὴ τετρημένους ἀγγείους ὑδροφόρους (15). Dicebat eos qui eſſent apud inferos magis profecto cruciandos ſi integris quam ſi perforatis vaſis aquam ferrent. And, becauſe it is a common Obſervation, that Divine Juſtice ſometimes puniſhes the Faults of the Fathers in their Children, he ſaid, that it was more ridiculous, than if a Phyſician ſhould give Phyſic to a Son, or a Grandſon, to cure his Father's, or his Grand father's Sickneſs. Ὁ γὰρ Βίων τὸν θεὸν κολάζοντα τοὺς παῖδας τῶν πατέρων γελοιότερον εἶναι φησιν ἰατρῷ δοὺς νόσον πάππου καὶ πατρὸς ἔχοντι ἢ παῖδα φαρμακεύοντος (16). Etenim Bio Deum qui malorum liberis ſupplicia inferret magis ajebat ridiculum eſſe medico qui filio aut nepoti ob morbum patris vel avi medicinam adhiberet. Plutarch ſhews the Falſity of this Compariſon with great Solidity. It is eaſy to ſhew, that there is ſomething falſe in moſt of Bion's witty Conceits. However, they are, for the greateſt part, the Effect of a quick and happy Imagination; and it may be ſaid, in general, that moſt witty Conceits have their falſe Side. His Impudence in turning Religion into Ridicule ought to have been reſtrained; for a ſerious Refutation does not near ſo much harm as the Jeſts of a witty Man. Young Perſons ſuffer themſelves to be led away by theſe kind of Mockers, more than can be imagined; And Bion ſpoiled many of them (17). This was unavoidable, conſidering the Boldneſs, with which he employed his Wit againſt a falſe Religion, which Ignorance and Impoſture had made an hundred times more ridiculous, than Religion, in itſelf, and in it's true State, is excellent.

(10) Diog. Laërt. lib. IV. n. 49.

(11) Ibid. n. 48.

(12) Cicero, Tuſculan. Hiſ. cap. 26.

(13) Diog. Laërt. n. 49.

(14) Ibid.

(15) Ibid. n. 50.

(16) Plut. de ſera Numin. vindicta, pag. 561.

(17) Laërt. n. 53.

[D] He had a Thought on the Difficulty of pleaſing different ſorts of People, which Dion Chryſoſtom refutes.] Bion ſaid, that, unleſs a Man was a Tart, or Thaſian Wine, it was impoſſible he could pleaſe many People. Dion Chryſoſtom calls this Thought a very inſipid one; 'for, ſays he, it has 'often happened, that, at a Table of Ten Perſons, 'a Cold Tart has pleaſed ſome, and an Hot one 'others; but perhaps, adds he, Dion pretends to 'ſpeak of a Tart, which was both hot and cold 'at the ſame time (18).' An Author, whom I ſhall often have occaſion to refute, has falſified This. 'It is reported, ſays he (19), of Bion, the 'Philoſopher, that, to pleaſe every body, he wiſh-'ed himſelf a Tart, becauſe, he ſaid, every body 'loved it; but Dion Chryſoſtom ſhews, in the 'Sixty fourth Oration, that he is groſly miſtaken, 'and that his Wiſh is the true Wiſh of a Mad-'man; becauſe, ſaid he, every body does not 'love Tarts alike; for ſome love them hot, and 'others cold; one will have them round, another 'ſquare; one will have them ſoft, another hard: 'And therefore, ſaid Dion Chryſoſtom, Bion ſhould 'have deſired to be Gold or Silver, to pleaſe 'every body; and yet, if I may find fault with 'Dion Chryſoſtom's Opinion, as he has paſſed his 'Judgment on That of Bion, I would ſay, that 'Dion Chryſoſtom is as much miſtaken as Bion; 'for ſeveral People love neither Gold, nor Silver, 'no more, than if there was none in the World; 'and therefore I ſay, ſuch a Deſire is a fantaſtical 'One.'

(18) Dion Chryſoſt. Orat. 65. pag. 612.

(19) Garaſſe, Doctrine curieuſe, pag. 704.

[E] Being fallen ſick, he did as moſt impious Men do; he ran into another Extream.] I have heard a Gentleman ſay, who belonged to the Count vatives, and Charms. Diogenes Laërtius ridiculed him, as he deserved, upon that Account [F]. Bion suffered much in his Sickness, being assisted by none of those, who took care of the Sick: At last, Antigonus sent him two Persons, who attended him (c). Bias and Bion have sometimes been confounded with each other [G].

(c) Taken from Diogenes Laërtius, in the Life of Bion. It is in the 4th Book, §. 45. & seq. of the Amsterdam Edit. 1692.

Diogenes

(20) He, who was killed in a Battle near Sedan, in 1641.

de Soissons (20), that Sainthibal, a famous Unbeliever, made great Complaints, that no Man of their Sect had the Gift of Perseverance. They do us no Honour, said he, when they lie on their Death-Bed; They disgrace, and belie, themselves: They die like other Men, confessing their Sins, and receiving the Sacrament. He might have added, that They commonly practise the minute Part of Superstition. The Example of Tullus Hostilius, alledged by the Author of the Thoughts on Comets (21), is admirable on this Subject. A long Sickness brought That Prince so low, that, after having slighted Religion, he became at last Superstitious, and a Promoter of Superstitions. 'Ipse quoque longinquo morbo est 'implicitus. Tunc adeo fracti simul cum corpore 'sunt spiritus illi feroces, ut qui nihil ante ratus 'esset minus regium, quam sacris dedere animum, 'repente omnibus magnis parvisque superstitionibus 'obnoxius degeret, religionibusque etiam populum

(21) Pag. 354.

(22) Liv. Dec. I. lib. 1. cap. 3.

'impleret (22). —— He lay sick a long time. Then 'was That undaunted Spirit so broken, as well as 'his bodily Strength, that He, who before thought 'the Consideration of sacred Things unworthy of a 'King, immediately fell into Superstitions of all 'kinds, and even surfeited the People with Rites 'and Ceremonies.' This Conduct is not to be wondered at; most of Those, who live in Prophaneness, live only in Doubts: They do not attain to Certainty; when, therefore, they fall sick, Irreligion being no longer of any use to them, they take the safest way; That, which promises eternal Happiness, if it proves true, and makes them run no hazard, if it should prove false. They confess to a Priest; They do every thing else, ad majorem cautelam. All Readers have admired This Thought of Mr Boileau.

Qui fait l' homme intrepide, & tremblant de foiblesse,
Attend pour croire en Dieu que la fievre le presse,
Et toûjours dans l' orage au Ciel levant les mains,
Dès que l'air est calmé rit des foibles humains (23).

(23) Sat. I, ver. 253.

This makes th' intrepid Wretch, with Heav'n at odds,
Till Sickness presses, to deny the Gods:
In Storms he prays; but, when the Blast subsides,
Weak, superstitious, Mortals he derides.

To this may be referred This Passage of Guy Patin; 'My deceased Father told me, that Mr du Maine, 'the Head of the League, said, that Princes had 'no Religion before they arrive at above forty Years 'of Age; when they grow old;

- - - - cum numina nobis
Mors infans majora facit (24).

(24) Patin, Lett. 64, of Edit. 1.

Concerning these Latin Words, see Silius Italicus (25). And, as for the rest, I refer you to the Remark [F], of the Article DES BARREAUX.

(25) Lib. 8, pag. 333.

[F] Diogenes Laërtius ridiculed him, as he deserved, on that Account.] The Verses wrote against him (26) are very pretty: here is a Latin Translation of them:

(26) In Bione, n. 55. lib. 4.

Bionem Borysthenitem, quem Scythica tellus produxit,
Dixisse audivimus, reverâ nihil esse Deos.
Ac siquidem id dogma tueri perstitisset, meritò dicendus esset
Sensisse ut visum fuisset, etsi malè visum esset.
At nunc, quùm in longum morbum incidisset, ac mori pertimesceret,
Qui Deos non esse dixerat, qui fanum non viderat,
Mortalibus qui illuserat, dùm Diis immolarent;
Non pro foco solum, arisque, ac mensâ,
Nidore, adipe, thureque Deorum naves implevit;
Nec solum, peccavi, dixit, delictis parcite:
Sed & anui collum facile porrexit excantandum,
Bracchiaque loris persuasus devinxit (27);
Rhamnumque & lauri ramum januæ imposuit:
Cuncta administrare magis quàm mori paratus.
Stultus qui mercede voluerit Deos esse:
Quasi tunc essent, quùm illos Bion demùm esse arbitraretur.

(27) Bion laughed at this in one of his Books, as may be inferred from Plutarch, de Superstitione, pag. 268. D.

We have heard Bion, the Borysthenite, born in Scythia, affirm, that, in reality, there are no Gods; And, if he had persevered in defending This Opinion, it might justly have been said, that he thought as Things appeared to him, though he saw them in a wrong Light. But, now, falling into a long Sickness, and being afraid to die, He, who denied the Existence of the Gods, who never entered a Temple, who laughed at Men that sacrificed to the Gods, This very Man, not only before the Hearth, the Altar, and the Table, filled the Nostrils of the Gods with Savour, Fat, and Frankincense; not only said, I have offended, forgive me my Sins; but even stretched out his Neck to be charmed by an old Woman, and was prevailed upon to tie Bandages about his Arms. Nay he even laid a Bramble and a Branch of Laurel over his Door, being ready to go through any Ceremony, but That of dying. Fool that he was, to believe in the Gods only for Interest as if They then only began to Be, when Bion was, at length, brought to acknowledge their Existence.

See the use, which Mr du Rondel has made of This in his excellent Life of Epicurus (28). His saying, that Diogenes Laërtius was an Epicurean, is remarkable; for This Diogenes insinuates plainly, that he does not blame Bion's Confiteor, and his mea culpa, mea maxima culpa, or his peccavi.

(28) Printed at Amsterdam, in 1698.

[G] Bias and Bion have sometimes been confounded with each other.] This Plutarch did, when he said that Antigonus, being importuned by the repeated Solicitations of Bias, ordered a Talent to be given him (29). He denotes This Antigonus by the Epithet γέρων; which is a Sign, that he speaks of the first Antigonus, who was one of Alexander's Captains and Successors. Now Bias having preceded the Death of Alexander, at least Two hundred Years, it is plain, he could not ask any thing of Antigonus; and, since Bion was a Disciple of Crates, and Theophrastus, it is certain that he might be known to Antigonus. We must say, then, either that Plutarch is grossly mistaken, or that the Transcribers of his Book have changed ὑπὸ Βίαντος into ὑπὸ Βίωνος. By the by, I am not well assured, whether Aldobrandinus had reason to understand Antigonus Gonatas by the Antigonus, who asked our Bion of what Country and Family he was (33). I allow it possible, that This Philosopher might live 'till the Reign of Antigonus Gonatas: But, in short, Plutarch makes him live exactly under the old Antigonus; (for I suppose, he said Bion, and not Bias). This deserves some Consideration; and therefore I would not say, with Moreri, that Bion lived in the CXXVIth Olympiad, and in the time of Antigonus, surnamed Gonatas, King of Macedonia. See below, the Remark [K]. As for the rest, if Plutarch mistook Bias for Bion through defect of Memory, he is not the only Person, who has committed the like Mistake; for Eustathius ascribes to Antisthenes what belongs only to Bion. It is on the Verse of the Iliad, applied by Bion, in his Answer to Antigonus, Ταύτης τοι γενεῆς τε καὶ αἵματός εὔχομαι εἶναι (31). Eustathius says, that Antisthenes, the Cynic, made use of those Words, after having answered the Person, who asked him, Whose Son he was? I am the Son of a Man, who wiped his Nose with his Elbow (32), &c. Casaubon observed this Mistake of Eustathius. See Mr Menage on Diogenes Laërtius, in the Forty seventh Paragraph of the fourth Book.

(29) Plut. de tuiosa paupere, pag. 331. E.

(30) Not. ad Diog. Laërt. in Bione, init.

(31) Lib. 6.

(32) That is, of a Salsamentarius; as if we should say, at present, one who sells Herrings and Codfish. Bion, in Laërtius, gives the answer mentioned by Eustathius.

I shall observe, that The Sophism against Marriage, the Sophism, I say, which is alledged, in all the Compendiums of Logic, as an Example of a faulty

An Examination of a false Dilemma against Marriage.

Diogenes Laërtius mentions ten Persons, who bore the latter Name. Moreri speaks of them after him; but gives the first Place to him, who makes the Subject of this Article, whereas he ought to have been reckoned but the Third (d). Diogenes Laërtius has not mentioned all the Bions (e). The Translators of Plutarch have misunderstood a Thought of Bion, which he censured [H]. Bion's Sophism, which Seneca answered solidly, seems to me to be but an Argument, ad hominem, by which he would conclude, that the Doctrine concerning God's Power over all Things implies some Contradictions [I]. I know not where Konig found, that Bion died in the fourth Year of the CXXXIVth Olympiad [K].

(d) His other Faults are corrected in the Dutch Edition.

(e) See Menage's Notes upon Diogenes Laërtius, lib. iv. n. 58.

Without a faulty Dilemma, is attributed to Bion, and to Antisthenes, by Diogenes Laërtius, and to Bias, by Aulus Gellius. It may be an Error of the Transcriber in the latter; Bionis was, perhaps, changed into Biantis, as Casaubon conjectures (33). However it be, This is our Bion's Dilemma: If you take a beautiful Wife, she will be common; and if you take an ugly one, she will be a Torment to you. Ἐὰν μὲν γήμῃς αἰσχρὰν, ἕξεις κοινὴν, ἐὰν δὲ καλὴν, ἕξεις κοινὴν (34). Among other Defects, this Argument may be retorted thus; If I take an ugly one, she will not be common; if I take a beautiful one, she will be no Torment to me. But this Retortion does not hit the Matter; It is but a palliative Remedy; so that Bion's Dilemma is worth nothing, take it any way. The true Answer is to say, I. That most Women are neither beautiful nor ugly; and therefore Bion concludes from a few to all. See Favorinus, in the eleventh Chapter of the fifth Book of Aulus Gellius's Noctes Atticæ. II. That the Beauty of a Woman is not inconsistent with Virtue, and that an ugly Wife may, besides, make herself beloved by her Husband (35). There is a Commentator upon Aulus Gellius (36), who confutes Bias's Argument by a Reason, borrowed from the Hebrews; which is, says he, That They, who have been ill married, shall be absolved before God, without appearing before his Tribunal: This would make it worth marrying an ugly Wife. If St Chrysostom were to be the Judge in the Case, he would condemn the Retortion of the Dilemma; for he preached, that They, who have a beautiful Wife, find nothing worse than to have her, it is a Possession so full of Suspicions, and Snares; and They, who have an ugly one, find nothing worse than to have her, it is so disgustful a thing. Ὁ καλὴν ἔχων γυναῖκα ἐδὲν χεῖρον φησὶ τῆ καλῆ· ἔχειν γυναῖκα (ὑποψίας τὸ πρᾶγμα γέμει καὶ σκώληκας) ὁ δυσειδῆ, ἐδὲν χεῖρον φησὶ τῆ ἀμορφον ἔχειν γυναῖκα. ἀνδρίας γὰρ τὸ πρᾶγμα ἀμάτλησεν. Qui pulchram habet uxorem, nihil pejus esse ait quam pulchram habere uxorem, (rem enim esse insidiarum & suspicionum plenam) qui deformem, nihil pejus esse dicit quàm turpem habere uxorem, rem enim esse acerbitatis refertam (37). Here is a Preacher, who does not talk at random; he goes upon the Authority, or the Confession, of Men, who knew it by Experience; nevertheless, his Conclusion is no better than That of Bion. To condemn the Retortion of the Dilemma, it would be sufficient to say, that it contains two false Consequences. If I take a beautiful Wife, she will be no Torment to me; nego consequentiam; for it may be so, and it may not be so: If I take an ugly one, she will not be common; nego similiter consequentiam; for it may be so, and it may not be so. But, to put a Stop to all these Quibbles, one need only tell the Bias's, and the Bion's, I will run the hazard of it.

(33) In Diog. Laert. lib. iv n. 43.

(34) Ibid lib. iv. n. 38.

(35) Favorinus does not make use of this Reason: he seems to approve, by his Silence, the two particular Consequences of the Dilemma.

(36) His Name is, Philippus Carolus.

(37) Chrysost. Homil. I, in Epist. II, ad Timotheum, apud Menagium, Not. in Diog. Laërt. n. 48.

I have not mentioned all the Variations relating to This Dilemma: I may yet transcribe what I have read in Tiraquellus upon it (38). That pointed Argument is not only ascribed to Bion, and to Antisthenes, by Diogenes Laërtius, and to Bias by Aulus Gellius, but also to Aristippus by the Monk Antony (39), and to Solon by Maximus Tyrius, and by Peter Martyr (40). The Retortion was made by Pittacus, if we may believe the Commentaries of Ariston, quoted by Stobæus (41).

(38) Leg. Connubial. pag. 32.

(39) In Melissa, Tom. II. cap. 34.

(40) In locis Communibus, cap. xxxix.

(41) Serm. 65.

[H] The Translators of Plutarch have misunderstood a Thought of Bion, which he censured.] Let us first set down the Greek of Plutarch: Εὐηθὲς τοίνυν καὶ ἀζηλέτως τὸ τῦ Βίωνος, εἰ τὸν ἀγρὸν ἐμελλεν ἐγκωμιάζων εὐφορον ποιεῖν καὶ εὔκαρπον, οὐκ ἂν ἀμαρτάνειν ἐδόκει τῦτο ποιῶν μᾶλλον ἢ σπάπτων καὶ πραγμα]α ἔχων. ἐ τοίνυν ὑδ' ἀνθρωπῳ ἄτοπῳ ἂν εἴη ἐπαινεῖν, εἰ τοῖς ἐπαινεμένοις ωφελιμός ἐστι καὶ πάμφορος (42). That is to say; Bion's Thought is, therefore, very impertinent: He believed, that, if he could make a Field fruitful by bestowing Praises upon it, he should not be to blame if he chose rather to praise, than take the Pains to manure it. Therefore a Man ought not be called absurd, for praising others, if his Praises are useful to them, and make them produce good Fruit. The impertinence, which Plutarch finds in This Thought, is, that a Field would not become worse by being praised; whereas the Praises, which are bestowed upon a Man, who does not deserve them, fill him with Vanity, and spoil him. Ὁ μὲν Ἀγρὸς ὑ γίνεται χείρων ἐπαινύμενος. ἄνθρωπον δὲ τυφῶσι καὶ ἀπολλύουσιν οἱ ψευδῶς καὶ πας' ἀξίαν ἐπαινῦντες (43). Atque ager quidem laudando non fit deterior: hominem inflant ac perdunt qui immerito laudant. This Censure of Plutarch is lost labour; for Bion does not say, absolutely, that we must praise others; but he makes Praise to depend upon This Condition, viz. that They make those better, who are praised. Let us see how Amyot translates Plutarch's Greek: 'Wherefore Bion's 'Saying is foolish and silly; for he argues thus; If 'I could make a Field fruitful by praising it much, 'I should not commit a Fault in praising it, rather 'than tire my Heart and Body in manuring and cultivating it. Therefore, neither does he commit a 'Fault, who praises a Man, if, by praising him, he 'makes him useful, and fruitful to him, who 'praises him.' In this Translation, the Active Verb is taken for the Passive; for Bion does not speak of the Utility of Praise with respect to Him, who praises, but with respect to him, who is praised. The Latin Interpreter has stumbled more grossly; he imputes this foolish and ridiculous Thought to Bion, that he believed, that a Field became more fruitful by praising, than by cultivating it (44). Stultè itaque ac fatuè Bio qui agrum laudando putabat se redditurum fertilem ac frugiferum; potius quam fodiendo & colendo. Non tamen [45] homo absurde facit laudans, ubi ill its qui laudantur est utile. To excuse Amyot, it might be said, that he thought, that Bion, being an Atheist, acknowledged no other Duties, but what are profitable; and that, therefore, his meaning was, that Praise ought to be bestowed wherever they are well paid for; and that They should not be refused even to a Field, if they could make it fruitful. In a word, that the Trade of Flattery is not to be blamed, provided it be attended with Profit. But this Excuse is altogether idle; A Translator ought faithfully to deliver what he finds in the Original, and refer his Conjectures to particular Remarks. If any one thinks, that Plutarch did not relate a Thing exactly, let him give notice of it to the Readers: but what Plutarch said must be translated.

(42) Plutarch. de Adulat. & Amici Discrim. pag. 59.

(43) Id. ibid.

(44) You will find in the Table of Matters, Bion agrum laudando fertiliorem fieri putabat.

(45) Here is a tamen well placed

[I] He pretended, that the Doctrine of God's Power over all things implies some Contradictions.] Bion pretended to prove two very different Things; the one, that all Thieves were sacrilegious Men; the other, that no Thief was sacrilegious (46). He drew those two Consequences from the same Principles; and That Principle is one of the most solid Truths, which good Philosophy teaches us concerning the Nature of God. The Supream Being, the most Perfect Being, ought to have an absolute Power over all Things; All other Beings depend on him; They belong to Him, as to their Author and Preserver. Doubtless Bion's Design was to refute This Doctrine by two contradictory, and pernicious, Consequences, which he pretended he could draw from it. This is one of them; All Those, who steal what belongs to God, are sacrilegious; now

(46) See Seneca, chap. 7. of the seventh Book de Beneficiis. No Commentator observes whether Seneca had found that Argument of Bion in any of the ancient Authors that are extant.

Without doubt, Theon ſpeaks of him, when he ſays, that, according to the Sophiſt Bion, Avarice is the greateſt of all Vices (f); a Sentence, which has been canonized by the great Apoſtle of the Gentiles. Plutarch aſcribes a Maxim to him, which would do Honour to the moſt orthodox Philoſophers; which was, to tell his Scholars, that, when they had acquired ſo much Conſtancy, as to bear, with the ſame Tranquility of Mind, thoſe who injured them, as thoſe, who treated them civilly, they might believe they had made ſome Progreſs in Virtue [L]. His Anſwer to Theognis has not ſo much Morality in it [M].

(f) Βίων ὁ σοφιστὴς τὴν φιλαργυρίαν μητροπολιν ἔλεγε πασῶν κακιῶν εἶναι. Bion Sophiſta vitiorum metropolin dicebat avaritiam. Theo. Progym. cap. 5. pag. 72.

now all Thieves ſteal what belong to GOD; for all things belong to him; Therefore all Thieves are ſacrilegious. This is the other; To tranſport a thing from one Place, which belongs to GOD, to another Place, which belongs to him likewiſe, is no Sacrilege: Now Thoſe, who rob Temples, only carry Things from one Place, which belongs to GOD, to another, which equally belongs to him; for all things belong to GOD; Therefore Thoſe, who rob Temples, do not commit Sacrilege. Seneca refutes theſe Quirks eaſily and ſolidly; but he conſiders Bion as a Tyrant, who would be cruel at certain times, and at other times plunder Temples. When he would be cruel, he makes uſe of his firſt Syllogiſm; It is a Decree for the Deſtruction of all Robbers: and he makes uſe of the ſecond, when he deſires to enrich himſelf with the Spoils of Holy Places.

[K] I knew not where Konig found, that Bion died in the fourth Year of the CXXXIVth Olympiad.] I have before ſuppoſed (47), that Plutarch makes our Bion flouriſh in the Reign of the firſt Antigonus; and I have not found Aldobrandinus's Opinion very certain, viz. that That Philoſopher was queſtioned as to his Birth by Antigonus Gonatas. To make This more clear, I muſt obſerve here, that Eratoſthenes had known Bion at Athens, and reckoned him among his Heroes. It cannot reaſonably be queſtioned, but that Strabo, who informs us of This (48), meant Bion the Boryſthenite; for what he ſays that Eratoſthenes aſcribed to his Bion (49), is the ſame, which Eratoſthenes aſcribes, in Diogenes Laërtius, to Bion the Boryſthenite. Wherefore, ſince Eratoſthenes was born in the firſt Year of the CXXVIth Olympiad (50), it muſt neceſſarily be granted, that Bion attained, at leaſt, to the beginning of the CXXXIſt; for, under twenty Years of Age, Eratoſthenes's Acquaintance with him had not deſerved to be mentioned. I ſee but one Difficulty in This Suppoſition; which is, that I obſerve, that the Learned Mr du Rondel intimates, that Epicurus ſurvived Bion (51). Now Epicurus died in the ſecond Year of the CXXVIIth Olympiad. I only propoſe This Difficulty, to engage Mr du Rondel learnedly to clear up This Point of Chronology.

(47) In Remark [G].

(48) Strabo, lib. 1. pag. 10.

(49) Viz. That he was the firſt, who dreſſed Philoſophy in a Gown (think it with F. tr.) Φησὶ λέγειν ἐπ' αὐτῷ τὸν Ἐρατοσθένην ὡς πρῶτος Βίων τὴν φιλοσοφίαν ἀνθινὰ ἐνέδυσεν Diog. Laert. lib. IV. n. 35. Strabo, as he is corrected by Caſaubon, ſays the ſame thing, lib. I. pag. 10.

(50) Voſſius de Hiſt. Gr. p. 108.

(51) De vita Epicuri, p. 133.

[L] According to him, to bear, with the ſame Tranquillity, Injuries, and Civilities, is to have made ſome Progreſs in Virtue.] Bion told his Friends, and Diſciples, that They might then be aſſured of their Proficiency, when they could endure a Reproof, as patiently, as they could hear the higheſt Encomiums, even ſuch an one as This of the Poet *.

* Homer, Odyſſ. vii, xxiv.

Some Heavenly Flame inſpires your Breaſts.
Live great, rejoice, and be for ever bleſt.

Plutarch had reaſon to obſerve, that the Rule of Bion is rather a Sign of a confirmed and perfect Habit of the Soul, than meerly of Amendment. It is, in truth, a Character of Perfection (52).

(52) Plut. de Profect. Virtut. pag. 82, D.

[M] His Anſwer to Theognis has not ſo much Morality in it.] Plutarch has preſerved it, and ſpeaks well of it. Theſe are his Words. ‘ And witty alſo ‘ was That Anſwer of Bion, in Oppoſition to theſe ‘ Verſes of Theognis,

One cannot ſpeak, or act, if poor he be:
His Tongue is bound to th' Peace, as well as He.

‘ How comes it to paſs then, ſaid he, Theognis, that ‘ Thyſelf, being ſo poor, prateſt and torture'ſt our ‘ Ears in This Manner (53)?’ The inſolent and inſulting Spirit of This Philoſopher appears in This; A poor Poet, who complains, that Poverty ties up his Tongue, ought not to be treated in this Manner; for, though Experience often ſhews, that want of Bread, and Cloaths, makes a Man very talkative: yet it is certain, that there are many things, which a Man ill dreſſed dares not ſay.

(53) Plut. de Audiend. Poetis, pag. 22.

——— Plurima ſunt, quæ
Non audent homines pertuſa dicere lana (54).

(54) Joven. Sat. v. ver. 130.

I ſay, it is certain, that Indigence chills the Hands of many People, and ſtops their Mouths, as Theognis obſerved. And therefore he was of Opinion, that a Man ſhould uſe his utmoſt endeavours to get rid of Miſery; and that Death itſelf ought to be preferred to Poverty.

Ἀνδρ' ἀγαθὸν πενίη πάντων δάμνησι μάλιστα,
Καὶ γυμνὸς πολίτης, Κύρνε, καὶ ἀπτόλεμος.
Ἧν δὴ χρὴ φεύγοντα καὶ ἐς μεγαλήτεα πόντον
Ῥίπτειν καὶ πέτρων, Κύρνε, κατ' ἠλιβάτων.
Πᾶς γὰρ ἀνὴρ πενίῃ δεδμημένος ἔστε τ' ἐπαύρῃ,
Οὐδ' ἔρξαι δύναται γλῶσσά θ' ὁ δεσμὸς ἔχει.
Χρὴ γάρ δειλὸν ἐόντα καὶ ἐν τῷ καὶ ἀμήχανα πάσχοντα θαλάσσης
Δίζεσθαι χαλεπῆς, Κύρνε, λόγον πενίης.
Τεθνάναι, φίλε Κύρνε, πενιχρῷ βέλτερον ἀνδρί,
Ἢ ζώειν χαλεπῇ ταρβήμονα πενίῃ (55).

(55) Theognis, pag. 174. ver. 173.

Nor Sickneſs ſelf, or trembling Age, we ſee Subdue the Mind like Coward Poverty.
Fly Poverty, as from the worſt of Foes;
Let Seas, and lofty Rocks, her dire approach oppoſe.
Sunk in himſelf, and conquered by his Fears,
Unfit to act, or ſpeak, The Poor appears.
Chuſe then to die, e'er Poverty you ſee;
For Death, at leaſt, my Friend, will ſet you free.

Theognis's Words, mentioned by Plutarch, are to be found in Theſe Verſes. But, becauſe This Theognis lived a long time before our Bion, Plutarch cannot be excuſed; for, if he ſpeaks of This Bion, he is a very bad Chronologer; and, if he ſpeaks of another Bion, he is in the wrong not to acquaint his Readers with it. I cannot tell whether any one ever took notice of This Fault.

BIRON, Marſhal of France. Look for GONTAUT.

BLANC (Lewis de) Profeſſor of Divinity at Sedan. Look for BEAULIEU.

BLANCHE of Caſtile, the Mother of St Lewis, King of France. Look for CASTILE.

BLANDRATA (GEORGE), an Italian Phyſician, born in the Marquiſate of Saluces [A], lived in the XVIth Century. He fled from Pavia (a), where the Inquiſition would have play'd him a ſcurvy Trick, and retired to Geneva [B]. He embraced the Proteſtant Religion there, and, at firſt, edified the Church by his Conduct and Docility; but it was perceived afterwards, that he attacked, privately, the Divinity of JESUS CHRIST. He was not contented to ſpread his Difficulties among the Ignorant, but propoſed them to the Miniſter of the Italian Church. That Miniſter, who was of the Family of the Counts of Martinengue, rebuked him, and would not ſo much as make uſe of him in his, or his Wife's, Sickneſs, though he earneſtly offered his Service. Calvin, to whom the ſame Difficulties had been propoſed an hundred times, ſeeing, that, though his Anſwers had appeared ſatisfactory, the ſame Objections were raiſed the next Day, was, at laſt, angry with Blandrata, and treated him harſhly [C]. Nevertheleſs he continued to ſalute him, and to ſpeak to him; and was alſo ſo complaiſant, as to anſwer his Objections in Writing (b). But, having diſcovered, that a Trap was laid for him, in requiring an Anſwer in writing, he would hear Blandrata no more. It is reported, that This Heretic accuſed Calvin publickly of ſomething he had written, and that his Accuſation was convicted of falſity by producing the Original. Some time after, the Conſiſtory of the Italian Church proceeded, as I have elſewhere related (c). Calvin aſſured Blandrata, that he ſhould not be proceeded againſt for his paſt Faults; but Blandrata durſt not truſt to it; for, ſome days after, ſeeing one of the Syndics of the Republic come to the Auditory of Divinity, where he was hearing a Lecture of Calvin, he pretended to bleed at the Noſe, and fled as faſt as he could, and came no more to Geneva (d) [D]. Having

(a) Biblioth. Anti-trinit. pag. 28.

(b) This Piece is printed among Calvin's Opuſcula.

(c) In the Article ALCIATUS (JOHN PAUL), and in that of GENTILIS (VALENTINUS).

(d) Taken from the 322d Letter of Calvin.

[A] He was born in the Marquiſate of Saluces.] Who would not wonder, that Mr Moreri ſhould think, there is a great Difference between Piedmont, and This Marquiſate? Blandrata, ſays he, was a Piedmontois. Others ſay, he was a Native of the Marquiſate of Saluces. Theſe are no ways different Opinions: Thoſe, who make him a Piedmontois, do not pretend to place this Marquiſate out of Piedmont: They take Piedmont in it's general Signification, as is uſual, when one does not deſign to explain all the Duke of Savoy's Dominions, exactly, and Geographically. Now it is certain, that, in this Senſe, the Marquiſate of Saluces is Part of Piedmont. See Baudrand's Dictionary.

[B] He retired to Geneva.] Moreri makes him go from Pavia to Poland, and ſays nothing of his Journey to Geneva. This is no ways exact. Blandrata was more than once in Poland, which ought to have been obſerved. He practiſed Phyſic there before he went to Geneva. He had alſo practiſed it in Tranſilvania before the ſame Journey to Geneva: And, having been a Phyſician of Reputation in That Country (for he had been Phyſician to Queens) he choſe rather to retire thither (1), than elſewhere, when he thought he could not be ſafe in Geneva, or in Switzerland. This is one of Thoſe Combinations of Moral and Phyſical Things, of which Father Malebranche ſpeaks, in his Treatiſe of Nature and Grace. How comes it, that Poland and Tranſilvania were ſooner infected with the Errors of the Socinians, than any another Country? It is, becauſe the general Laws, which excite our natural Paſſions, and our Reaſon, would have it, that George Blandrata, being forced to ſeek a Retreat, ſhould rather pitch upon a Place, where he was very well acquainted, than upon an unknown Country. This is the reaſon, why he went from Geneva to Poland; and, when he was there, he invited Alciatus and Socinus to come to him; he intruded himſelf among the Great; a Prince of Tranſilvania, whoſe Phyſician he was, became his Proſelyte, &c. However it be, Moreri ſhould have ſaid, that Blandrata had been a Phyſician in Poland, and in Tranſilvania, before the Inquiſition of Pavia laid hands on him; that, being fled from Pavia, he went to Geneva, and that, leaving Geneva, he returned to Poland.

(1) See, in Citat. (c), the Paſſage of Beza's 81ſt Letter.

[C] Calvin —— treated him harſhly.] Calvin makes no ſcruple to confeſs how harſhly he ſpoke to him. I ſee by your Face what a deteſtable Monſter you feed in your Heart. Here is the whole Paſſage. 'Eodem tempore ſuis quæſtionibus fatigabat Calvinum, eoque magis, quod cum ſubinde fingeret ſe placatum eſſe & acquieſcere reſponſis, poſtridie redibat quaſi novus, nec definebat ea ipſa de quibus ſæpe audierat, ſciſcitari. Itaque coactus eſt ei Calvinus in faciem dicere, vultus tuus deteſtabile monſtrum mihi oſtendit quod in corde occultum foves, ac ſæpius eum aſpere objurgavit, ut ſi fieri poſſet, corrigeret perfidiam, & fallacias doloſque tortuoſos, quorum faſtidio erat quodammodo deſeſſus (2). —— At the ſame time, he wearied Calvin with his Queſtions, and the more, becauſe, pretending to be ſatisfied, he the next Day returned afreſh, and repeated the ſame Queſtion. This obliged Calvin to tell him to his Face, that his Countenance betrayed the deteſtable Monſter he nouriſhed in his Heart, and often ſeverely reproved him, to correct, if poſſible, his Inſincerity, and Quibbling, with which he was quite forfeited.'

(2) Calvin, Epiſt. 322.

[D] He fled from Geneva as faſt as he could.] Several Authors are miſtaken as to the time, when Blandrata left Geneva. They ſay, he did not leave it, till Valentinus Gentilis had retired into the Territories of the Canton of Bern: But this is falſe. Gentilis did not go away till after he had made the Amende honorable in all the croſs Streets of the City, the ſecond of September 1558. 'Abnegatione per compita civitatis facta, dimittitur (Gentilis) præſtito jurejurando ſeſe portas urbis non exceſſurum: mox tamen violata fide ad Matthæum Gribaldum in Sabandiam profugit. Sequuti ſunt aliquanto poſt Alciatus & Blandrata (3). —— Having made a public Abjuration, Gentilis was diſmiſſed, upon Oath not to leave the City; yet, afterwards, violating his Faith, he fled to Matthew Gribaldus in Savoy. Soon after followed Alciatus and Blandrata. Primus Valentinus Gentilis in judicium vocatus, ſimulata pœnitentia non ſine inſigni perjurio profugit. Sequutus eſt Paulus Alciatus, aut etiam præceſſit, ſolo malæ conſcientiæ vulnere adactus. Blandrata aliquanto poſt (4) —— Valentinus Gentilis, being firſt proſecuted, and pretending repentance, fled away, not without notorious Perjury. Paulus Alciatus followed him, or rather went before him, moved only by the Conſciouſneſs of his Guilt. A little after, went Blandrata. Erat ille Blandrata Salucienſis, profeſſione Medicus, qui Gentilem Geneva profugum paulo poſt ſequutus fuit (5). ---That Blandrata was of Saluces, by Profeſſion a Phyſician, who followed Valentinus Gentilis, when he was exiled from Geneva. Now it appears by a Letter of Peter Martyr, dated the eleventh of July 1558, that Blandrata and Alciatus had been already at Zurich, and that they did not go from thence, till after Martyr had given them this Advice. The Miſtake of Hornius is ſtill worſe. He ſays, that Blandrata and Alciatus, being terrified with the Execution of Servetus and Gentilis, retired from Switzerland to Poland, and that, having been expelled from Poland in the Year 1565, Alciatus turned Mahometan, and Blandrata fled into Tranſylvania (6). There is nothing of Truth in this. I have confuted the pretended Mahometiſm

(3) Beza, in vita Calvini.

(4) Id. Epiſt. 81.

(5) Hoornbeeck, Apar. Adverſ. Socinian. pag. 244.

(6) Hornius, Hiſt Eccleſ. p. 8. 351. Edit. 1671.

Having formerly practiſed Phyſic in Poland, and Tranſylvania, he pitched upon that Stage, to dogmatize at his eaſe (e). He went into Poland, in the Year 1558, and was honourably received there by The Proteſtants. Calvin made him ſee, that ſo conſiderable a Divine as he was, could reach him there [E]. He wrote ſeveral Letters to the Faithful in Poland, in which he exhorted them to drive this Man from among them, who might infect the Purity of the Faith with his Hereſies. The Impreſſion, which theſe Letters made, very much croſſed the Deſigns of George Blandrata; but nothing proved ſo contrary to him, as the Diſcords, which aroſe among Thoſe, who, like him, oppoſed the Myſtery of the Trinity: But, notwithſtanding Thoſe Diſcords, the Socinian Hereſy was ſettled ſome time after in thoſe Parts. He changed his Scene in the Year 1563, having been invited into Tranſylvania by Prince John Sigiſmund (f). We muſt not forget, that, at his coming into Poland, he was made Elder of the Churches under the Juriſdiction of Cracow (g), and that, in the Year 1560, the Synod of Xianz, to which he had brought the Sum of Six hundred Crowns from Nicolas Radzivil, great Chancellor of Lithuania, made him, and his good Friend Liſmaninus (h), Aſſiſtants to Cruciger, who was Superintendant of the Churches. They were willing to aſſign him Colleagues, leſt the Eccleſiaſtical Government ſhould too much reſemble Papacy (i). Neither muſt we forget, that, in the Year 1561, Blandrata appeared in the Synod of Pinczovia with Letters of Recommendation from (e) Poſt varias deliberationes ita fors tulit, ut Blandrata, qui Medicinam diu in Polonia primum deinde in Tranſylvania apud Reginas fecerat, eò reverteretur. Beza, Epiſt. 81.

(f) Bibl. Antitrin. pag. 28.

(g) Ibid. See alſo Calvin, Epiſt. 320.

(h) Lætus, Compend. Hiſtor. Univerſ. p. 41 b.

(i) Id. ibid.

Mahometiſm of John Paul Alciatus elſewhere (7); and I ſay here, that Blandrata retired into Poland the ſame Year that he left Geneva, that is, in the Year 1558. Now, Gentilis having been beheaded in the Year 1566, one may eaſily judge, whether it could be the reaſon why Blandrata left Switzerland, and fled into Poland. If That Puniſhment had made him reſolve to fly into That Country, could he have been expelled from it in the Year 1565? Some Perſons, more to be credited in theſe Matters, than Hornius, affirm, that John Sigiſmund, Prince of Tranſylvania, ſent for Blandrata about the Year 1563 (8). It was not, therefore, a Decree of Baniſhment, which obliged him to fly from Poland into Tranſylvania in the Year 1565. John Lætus has committed a ſurprizing Miſtake in his Abridgment of Univerſal Hiſtory (9). In three Lines, he makes two Men of the Phyſician Blandrata and George Blandrata. As to the firſt, he ſays, that the Synod of Xianz made him Aſſiſtant to the Superintendant of the Churches in the Year 1560; and he ſuppoſes, that the ſecond went into Poland, when the Diſorders, occaſioned by Stancarus, were hardly over. Which is a new Error. The Diſputes, which Stancarus had raiſed, by maintaining, that JESUS CHRIST is not a Mediator, as to his Divine Nature, were in their Heighth at the Arrival of Blandrata. 'Tum autem forte Franciſci 'Stancari Mantuani petulantiſſimi hominis impor- 'tunitate (ut ſanè fatalis eſſe videtur Polonis Ita- 'lis) ſciſſæ erant Polonicæ Eccleſiæ (10). - - - - - 'At that time, the Poliſh Churches were divided, 'through the Turbulency of Francis Stancarus of 'Mantua, Italy ſeaming to be fatal to the Poles.' But all this is nothing in Compariſon of Father Maimbourg's Anachroniſms. He ſays, our Blandrata went into Tranſylvania in the Year 1553 (11). He ſuppoſes, that, in the ſame Year, Prince John Sigiſmund took Delight to hear his Phyſician, when, ſetting up for a Divine, he ſpoke like a Philoſopher of the Trinity, which he termed a Chimera. He adds, that This Prince durſt not yet declare himſelf, as well becauſe his Mother, Queen Iſabella, a moſt Catholic Princeſs, was ſtill living, as becauſe Soliman did not deſire, that a Diverſity of Sects ſhould be ſufferred. This relates to the Year 1555. He ſays, that, out of Complaiſance to Soliman, all the Heretics were baniſhed; but that, the Queen, and Soliman, dying ſoon after, in the Year 1566, the Innovators returned, and enjoyed great Liberty, and that it was then, that Blandrata corrupted the greateſt Part of the Court. What a ſtrange way of relating things! How many Falſities! We ſhall ſee hereafter (12), Varillas's Anachroniſms and Viſions.

[E] Calvin made him ſee, that ſo conſiderable a Divine, as he was, could reach him (13).] It appears from Calvin's Letters, that the Churches of Poland conceived a great Eſteem and Affection for Blandrata; but it appears alſo from the Socinian Hiſtories, that Calvin's Letters were looked upon as a Perſecution, which forced Blandrata to retire elſewhere. Here are the Proofs of theſe two Particulars. 'Valde miror hominem, quem ſola oſten- 'tatio & faſtuoſus vultus commendat, tanti apud 'vos fieri, ut quaſi novus Atlas Eccleſiam ſuſtineat 'ſuis humeris. Certè tam inconſideratæ credulita- 'tis niſi me puderet gentem veſtram non amarem (14). —— I am very much ſurprized, that one, who has nothing to recommend him, but Vanity, and Oſtentation, ſhould thus gain your Eſteem, as if he were a new Atlas, who bears the Church upon his Shoulders. Were I not aſhamed of ſuch raſh Credulity, I ſhould not love your Nation.' 'Unum non diſſimulo, eos qui tam humaniter Georgium 'Blandratam exceperunt parum fuiſſe cautos & pro- 'vidos, & male conſuluiſſe veſtræ exiſtimationi. 'Magis etiam miror quoſdam primariæ auctoritatis 'viros graviter offendi quod libere hominem de- 'texerim (15). —— One Thing I will not diſſemble, viz. that They, who ſo kindly received George 'Blandrata, were not very cautious, and but ill conſulted your Reputation. I am ſtill more ſurprized, that Men of the higheſt Authority are offended at my expoſing the Man.' 'Ergo non vul- 'gare fecit operæ pretium longo itinere quod tan- 'tum ſibi nomen acquiſierit. Nullus eſt apud alias 'gentes, vos admiramini non ſecus atque Angelum 'è Cœlo delapſum. Veſtras delicias minime vo- 'bis invideo (16) —— This Journey, therefore, which gained him ſo great a Name, was of very great Advantage to him. Other Nations deſpiſe him; you admire him as an Angel from Heaven. I do not in the leaſt envy you your Favourite.' You ſee how zealouſly Calvin expreſſes his Anger, becauſe Blandrata had met with ſo many Bubbles, who admired him, and were offended at a public Writing, in which he was traduced (17). Let us ſee now the Proofs of the Operation of This Remedy. 'Calvinus his non contentus Blandratam 'quum alia ratione non poſſet literis in Poloniam 'miſſis perſequi, apud patronos & fratres acriter 'criminari, ita cuncta ad eum perdendum agere. - - - - - Illæ ejus literæ fidem in multorum ani- 'mis invenerant (18). - - - - Calvin, not ſatisfied with This, when he could do it no otherwiſe, perſecuted Blandrata by Letters, which he ſent to 'Poland, accuſed him ſharply to his Patrons and Brethren, and left no Stone unturned to ruin him. - - - - - - Theſe Letters of his influenced many.' Quam ille (Blandrata) vocationem tanto alacrius 'amplexus eſt, quod eum Calvinus miſſis per Po- 'loniam & Lituaniam literis perſequi non deſtiteret, 'ita ut ei tutam in his oris vitam agere per ejus 'cacozeliam non licuerit, pro ut in ſuperioribus ex- 'poſuimus (19). - - - - - Which Invitation Blandrata the more readily accepted, becauſe Calvin ceaſed 'not to perſecute him by Letters, which he ſent into Poland and Lithuania, inſomuch, that the falſe 'Zeal of the latter would not ſuffer him to lead 'a quiet Life, in thoſe Parts, as we have ſhewn 'above.' 'Cum nec hic quiete degere poſſet, Cal- 'vino ſcriptis ſuis eum perſequente, à Johanne 'Sigiſmundo Principe circa ann. 1563, evocatus, 'conceſſit

(14) Calvinus, Epiſt. ccexix.

(15) Id. Epiſt. ccexx.

(16) Id. Epiſt. ccexxi.

(17) It is the Preface of Calvin's Commentary on the Acts of the Apoſtles.

(18) Hiſtor. Reformat. Polon. pag. 126.

(19) Ibid. pag. 170.

(7) See Remark [D], of the Article ALCIATUS (JOHN PAUL).

(8) Biblioth. Antitrin. pag. 28. Hiſt. Reformat. Poloniæ, p. 170.

(9) Pag. 412.

(10) Beza, Epiſt. 81.

(11) Hiſt. de l'Arian. Tom. III. pag. 345. Edit. Holl.

(12) In Remark [L].

(13) See Remark [E], of the Article ALCIATUS (JOHN PAUL).

from Nicolas Radzivil, and that he delivered a Confeſſion of Faith there, in virtue of which the Aſſembly gave him an honourable Teſtimonial [F]. Having retired into Tranſylvania, where he was ſupported by the Favour of John Sigiſmund, whoſe Phyſician he was, and by that of Petrovitz, chief Miniſter of State, he boldly diſcovered his Hereſy, and chiefly after the public Diſpute, which he maintained with Francis David againſt ſome Reformed Doctors, in the preſence of the whole Court, in the Year 1566 (k). The Prince adhered entirely to the Antitrinitarian Party, and died in that Perſuaſion in Blandrata's Arms, in the Year 1570 (l). This Heretic did not want new Patrons; he was Phyſician to Stephen and Chriſtopher Battori, Princes of Tranſylvania. He was alſo Stephen's Phyſician, when That Prince enjoyed the Kingdom of Poland, and even a Member of his Privy-Council (m). He ſtrenuouſly oppoſed Francis David, who, not being contented to deny the Divinity of JESUS CHRIST, maintained moreover, that he ought not to be worſhipped. Blandrata called Fauſtus Socinus to his aſſiſtance from Switzerland, to oppoſe Francis David (n); I ſay he called him to Tranſylvania in the Year 1578, where he was Prince Chriſtopher Battori's Phyſician. The Favour, which he found himſelf in with the King of Poland, made him take ſo much Delight in hoarding up Riches, that, for fear of cooling that Prince's Liberality, he deſerted the Intereſts of the Unitarians, and began to favour the Jeſuits [G]. He was yet living about the Year 1585 (o), when Bellarmin wrote his Treatiſe de Chriſto; but he was dead in the Year 1592, when Socinus wrote againſt Wuiekus. Father Maimbourg ſays, that Blandrata became mad, and that he was knocked on the Head by one of his Nephews, who carried all his Money away (p). I know not whether what is ſaid of his Madneſs may be credited; but the other Fact is certain, and has been imputed to a Judgment of GOD, both by the Orthodox, and the Heterodox

(k) See Maimbourg, Hiſt. de l'Arianiſme, Tom. III, pag. 346. Edition of Holland.

(l) Maimb. ib. pag. 361, but he ſays 1571, inſtead of 1570.

(m) See Remark [E], towards the end.

(n) Wiſſowatius, Narrat. Compend. in Bibl. Antitrinit. pag. 213.

(o) Biblioth. Antitrin. pag. 28.

(p) Maimb. ubi ſupra, pag. 361. ex Peſcio de Atheiſm. Evangel.

‘ conceſſit in Tranſylvaniam, atque illic egit ipſius,
‘ hinc Stephani & Chriſtophori Bathoreorum Tran-
‘ ſylvaniæ Principum, immo & Stephani ad reg-
‘ num Poloniæ jam evecti, archiatrum & conſiliari-
‘ rium intimum (20) *. - - - - When he could neither here enjoy Quiet, being perſecuted by Calvin's ‘ Letters, he accepted of the Invitation of Prince
‘ John Sigiſmund, about the Year 1563, and went ‘ into Tranſylvania, where he was Chief Phyſician,
‘ and Privy Counſellor, to Stephen, and Chriſtopher, ‘ Bathori, Princes of Tranſylvania, and to Stephen,
‘ even when he was raiſed to the Throne of Poland.’

(20) Bibl. Antitrin. pag. 28.

* Socinus, dedicating to him his ſecond Anſwer to Volanus, calls him Stephani Regis Poloniæ Archiater & Conſiliarius intimus.

[F] He appeared at the Synod of Pinczovia, with Letters of Recommendation from Nicolas Radzivil, and he delivered a Confeſſion of Faith there.] What Calvin had written to That great Politic Lord, to acquaint him, that George Blandatra ſecretly held Servetus's Hereſies, had not yet produced it's neceſſary Effect; Blandrata had warded off the Blow by his Artifices; for Nicolas Radzivil made great Complaints of the Churches Behaviour towards Blandrata, and declared, that Calvin had dealt unjuſtly and raſhly with him. ‘ Homo iſte facile techniis ſuis fallacibus, optimo principi fucum facit, adeo ut ille iratus Joh. Calvino, Blandratam nomine ſuo ad Synodum Pinczovienſem, An. 1561. 25 Jun. habitam, delegaret cum literis, quibus ſerio expoſtulabat in cauſa Blandratæ cum Eccleſia, dicebatque malè & præcipitanter egiſſe J. Calvinum, quod Blandratam traduceret, & Servetiſmi notaret (21).’ Blandrata pleaded his Cauſe in the Synod very boldly, and cunningly: Here is the Confeſſion, which he delivered: It was very Orthodox: ‘ Fateor me credere in unum Deum. ‘ Patrem, in unum Dominum Jeſum Chriſtum Filium ejus, & in unum Spiritum Sanctum, quorum quilibet eſt eſſentialiter Deus. Deorum pluralitatem deteſtor, cum unus nobis ſit tantum Deus eſſentia indiviſibilis. Fateor tres eſſe diſtinctas hypoſtaſes & æternam Chriſti divinitatem ac generationem, & Spiritum Sanctum verum & æternum Deum ab utroque procedentem (22). - - - - ‘ I profeſs to believe in one GOD the Father, in one LORD JESUS CHRIST his Son, and in one HOLY GHOST, each of which is eſſentially GOD. ‘ I abhor a Plurality of Gods, ſince there is to us but one GOD, indiviſible in Eſſence. I believe three diſtinct Hypoſtaſes, and the eternal Divinity and Generation of CHRIST, and the Holy Spirit, true and eternal GOD, proceeding from them both.’ The Effect of This Confeſſion was ſuch, that the Synod ſupplied him with a good Certificate; which appeared alſo by the Letters, which the Aſſembly wrote to Nicolas Radzivil, and to John Calvin (23).

(21) Andreas Wengerſicius, Slavoniæ reformatæ, lib. I, cap. xiii. pag. 85. Edit. 1679.

(22) Id. ibid. pag. 80.

(23) Id. ibid.

[G] He forſook the Intereſt of the Unitarians, and favoured the Jeſuits.] This we learn from Socinus, who complains of it in his Anſwer to P. Wuiekus. He confeſſes, that Blandrata had done their Sect many Services; de noſtris Eccleſiis aliquando præclarè eſt meritus; but, ſays he, he fell off in his latter Days. ‘ Haud paulo ante mortem ſuam, vivente adhuc Stephano Rege Poloniæ, in illius gratiam, & quo illum erga ſe liberaliorem (ut fecit) redderet, plurimum remiſiſſe de ſtudio ſuo in Eccleſiis noſtris Tranſylvanicis noſtriſque hominibus juvandis; imo eò tandem deveniſſe ut vix exiſtimaretur priorem quam tantopere foverat de Deo & Chriſto ſententiam retinere; ſed potius Jeſuitis, qui in ea Provincia tunc temporis Stephani Regis & ejus fratris Chriſtophori, Principis haud multo ante vita functi, ope ac liberalitate non mediocriter florebant, jam adhærere, aut certe cum eis quodammodo colludere. Illud certiſſimum eſt cum ab eo tempore, quo liberalitatem, quam ambiebat, regis Stephani erga ſe eſt expertus, cœpiſſe quoſdam ex noſtris hominibus quos cariſſimos prius habebat & ſuis opibus juvabat, ſpernere ac deſerere, etiam contra promiſſa & obligationem ſuam, & tandem illos penitus deſeruiſſe, atque omni veræ ac ſinceræ pietatis ſtudio valedixiſſe, & ſolis pecuniis congerendis intentum fuiſſe, quæ fortaſſe, juſtiſſimo Dei judicio, quod graviſſimum exercere ſolet contra tales deſertores, ei necem ab eo, quem ſuum hæredem fecerat, conciliarunt (24). —— Some time before his Death, while Stephen, King of Poland, was yet living, to ingratiate himſelf with That Prince, and obtain more of his Favours, he cooled in his Zeal for the Tranſylvanian Churches, and our Party; nay he went ſo far, that he ſcarce ſeemed to retain his former Notion, which he ſo zealouſly had maintained, of GOD and CHRIST; but rather to adhere to the Jeſuits, in Pretence at leaſt, who were, then, in great Credit in That Province, through the Favour and Liberality of King Stephen, and his Brother Chriſtopher, a Prince lately deceaſed. It is very certain, that, from the Time he experienced the Bounty of King Stephen, which he courted, he began to neglect and deſpiſe ſome of our Party, whom before he greatly loved, and aſſiſted with his Fortunes, even contrary to Promiſes, and the Obligation he lay under; that at length he quite deſerted them, and, bidding adieu to the Study of true and ſincere Piety, was wholly bent on amaſſing Wealth; which things, by the juſt Judgment of GOD, which generally falls heavy on ſuch Apoſtates, perhaps occaſioned his Death by the Hands of his Heir.’ It is ſaid, that his Brother's Son ſtrangled him in his Sleep (25).

(24) Socini Reſp. ad Wuiekum, cap. 11. pag. 43. Vide Hoornbeeck, Appar. pag. 250

(25) See, below, Citat. (27).

[H] His

rodox [H]. The Catalogue of Blandata's Works may be seen in the Bibliotheque of the Antitrinitarians [I]. They had such a mean Opinion of his Pen at Geneva, that it was believed, there, that the Works, which came out in his Name, were revised by another [K]. In the Remark [D], I shall take notice of several false Dates concerning his Adventures, and in the Remark [K], of several Mistakes concerning his Errors. Before I conclude, I must observe, that the Unitarian Historians speak of the Confession of Faith, which he presented to the Synods of Poland, with so many Disguises (q).

(q) Vide Histor. Reformat. Polon. pag. 130. & Bibl. Antitrin. pag. 185, 186.

The Anachronisms, and Chimeras of Varillas, are so strange, that one cannot forbear making some Reflexions on them [L]. Since [H] His Death was attributed to the Judgment of God both by the Orthodox and Heterodox.] We have seen (26) how Socinus applies to him the Judgment of God, which he is used to exercise with great Severity against those, who desert his Cause for worldly Interests. If Father Maimbourg had heard of Blandrata's Kindness for the Jesuits, he would not have judged of his End as he did; and would not have added Madness to it. But let us hear a learned Divine of Leyden. 'A fratris sui filio in lecto 'jacens suffocatus fuit: sanè non extra justam Dei 'ultionem in hominem, quem primum in istis Ecclesiis 'execrandæ hæresis, multarum in Deum & ejus veri-'tatem blasphemiarum, librorum horrendissimorum 'turbarumque gravissimarum auctorem non aliter 'quam singulari diroque mortis genere occumbere 'oportuit (27). —— He was strangled in Bed by his Brother's Son: in which appeared the just Vengeance of God upon one, who deserved to die a remarkable and dreadful kind of Death, as having been the first Broacher of an execrable Heresy in those Churches, as having uttered many Blasphemies against God, and his Truth, and been the Author of many vile Books, and the greatest Disturbances.'

(26) In Remark [G].

(27) Hoornbeeck, Apparat. pag. 26. Konig is mistaken, as to the time. Perlit, says he, in lecto strangulatus per fratruelem quem hæredem constituerat. Ann. 1560.

[I] The Catalogue of Blandrata's Works appears in the Bibliotheque of the Antitrinitarians.] There are two sorts of them: Some belong but in part to him; others seem to be wholly his. Among the latter, there are some Theses, Letters, and Observations concerning the Invocation of Jesus Christ, which have only been printed in other Books. Most of them have been inserted in a Piece, which James Paleologus published in 1580; wherein he refutes the Judgment of the Polish Churches in the Case of Francis David. As to the Works, in which Blandrata had only a Share, the chief are, the two Conferences held at Alba Julia, the one in 1566, and the other in 1568; The Book entituled, De falsa & vera unius Dei Patris, Filii, & Spiritus Sancti, cognatione, authoribus Ministris Ecclesiarum confutientium in Sarmatia & Transylvania, printed at Alba Julia, in the Year 1567 (28); and That, which is entituled, Refutatio scripti Georgii Majoris in quo Deum trinum in personis & unum essentia, unicum deinde ejus filium in persona & duplicem in naturis ex lacunis Antichristi præbare conatus est, printed in the Year 1569. Hoornbeeck complains justly, that Those Heretics had inserted some abominable Pictures in These two Pieces, which served to represent the Trinity (29). Temeraria & horrenda Papistarum simulatra quæ æterna oblivione, & execratione sepeliendæ erant potius ----- non detegenda illa pudenda, & prostituenda coram omnibus, &c (30).

(28) Bellarmin had seen this Book, he quotes it several times.

(29) Apparat. pag. 27. See also pag. 55.

(30) Id. ibid. pag. 27.

[K] It was believed, that his Works were revised by another.] Beza declares it plainly enough: 'Extat, says he (31), apud me ipsius Blandratæ 'epistola (non tamen scripta sine Thesco, si Blan-'dratam bene novi) in qua Gregorium suo quo-'dam jure non tantum de illa pædobaptismi con-'troversia non satis opportunè mota increpat, ve-'rum etiam apertè illum à Tritheismo ad Samo-'sateni dogma revocare nititur. —— I have by me an Epistle of Blandrata himself (not written without a good Assistant, if I know Blandrata well) in which, with a Freedom natural to him, he not only reproves Gregory, for unseasonably setting on Foot the Controversy about Infant Baptism, but endeavours to bring him back from Tritheism to the Doctrine of Paulus Samosatenus.' But what he had before said is a stronger Proof of it's for he had named the Person, who put Blandrata's Thoughts in order. 'Petro quodam Statorio juvene, alioqui 'bono ingenio nec contemnenda doctrina prædito, 'operam omnem suam fucandis barbarissimi scriptoris Blandratæ commentis navante. —— Peter 'Statorius, a young Man, otherwise of a good Genius, and no contemptible Learning, employed his whole Time in disposing and ordering the Thoughts of That most barbarous Writer, Blandrata.' I might have been contented to set down only Part of the first Passage; but I had some Reasons for doing what I have done. The Words which I have quoted, which are of no use for the Proof of the Question, serve to confute Moreri for not having well characterized Blandrata's Heresy. He accuses him of having taught Arianism, and the same Tenets as Valentinus Gentilis: Which is to speak in too general and even deceitful Terms. Blandrata was at first an Arian; I believe it; but he only passed through That Opinion; He fell into That of Paulus Samosatenus, in which he was more fixed, than in any other. So that he ought to be distinguished by That, and not by Arianism. Consider the Nature of the Letter, mentioned by Beza in the beginning of This Remark. Besides, it is certain, that Socinus, and the Histories of Socinianism, mention Blandrata as a Socinian; and Prince John Sigismund as a Man, who, after the Conferences, which were held in his Presence, embraced the Doctrine of the Unitarians, in the Sense, which the Socinians put upon That Name (32). Maimbourg ascribes only Arianism to Blandrata, and to Prince John Sigismund; and pretends, that Blandrata gained over the Minister Francis David, who, says he (33), from a Protestant became an Arian. These are two new Falshoods. Francis David was worse than a Socinian: and it was He, who brought Blandrata nearer to That System. Let us hear Beza. 'Incidit Blandrata in Transylva-'niam rediens in quemdam Francifcum Davidis, 'paulo magis quam superiores illi ut ajunt provi-'dum, qui cum nimium crassam esse illam Tritheitarum blasphemiam simpliciter propositam animad-'vertisset, maluit omnia involvere, permixtis om-'nium pene hac in re hæreseon commentis, quàm 'simpliciter suam sententiam profiteri (34). ----- As Blandrata was returning into Transylvania, he happened to meet with one Francis David, a more provident Man, as they say, than those, who went before him: this Man, observing, that the Blasphemy of the Tritheists, simply proposed, was too gross, chose to blend together all the Heretical Opinions in this matter, rather than simply profess his own Sentiments.' The Truth is, that Blandrata, relishing the Samosatenian Hypothesis of Francis David, and finding it more consistent, than the Nonsense, which he had believed till then, forsook Tritheism, and became a good Unitarian. Gentilis did not the same; and therefore Moreri should not have confounded the Doctrine of These Men. Let us once more hear Beza. 'Inde in Moravia 'ad Blandratam & Alciatum aliosque nihilo meliores 'discedit (Gentilis); ubi cum satis inter eos conve-'nire non posset, quod à Tritheismo ad Samosate-'num plerique transivissent ----- in Sabaudiam 'ad suum Gribaldum redit (35). ----- Gentilis, then, departed into Moravia to Blandrata, Alcia-'tus, and others of the same Stamp, where finding, that they could not agree among themselves, many of them having gone over from Tritheism to the Doctrine of Paulus Samosatenus ----- he returned into Savoy to his Friend Gribaldus. De 'Blandrata rogatus (Gentilis), periit etiam, inquit, 'ut qui in Sabellii & Samosateni delirium inciderit (36). ----- Gentilis being asked concerning Blandrata, replied, He is lost, He is fallen into the Errors of Sabellius, and Paulus Samosatenus.'

(31) Beza, Epist. 82.

(32) Wissowat. Narrat. Compend. in Bibl. Antitrin. p. 233.

(33) Maimb. Hist. of Arian. pag. 345.

(34) Epist. 82.

(35) Beza in vita Calvini.

(36) Id. Epist. 82.

[L] The Anachronisms and Chimeras of Varillas are so strange, that I cannot forbear making some Reflexions on Them.] He says, that George Blandrata,

Since the second Edition, I have seen a Book, in which it is asserted, that he had drank plentifully, before he went to Bed, the very Night in which he died; and that it was a Question, whether some one of his Relations, or the Devil, had killed him [M].

drata, being perſuaded, that a fine Wit could not continue long in the Catholic Religion - - - - - took the Pains to ſearch, among the ancient Hereſies, for That which would ſuit him beſt, and at laſt pitched upon Arianiſm (37). - - - - - that he taught it after a quite new way, in the City of Pavia (38), that the Magiſtrates confined him to a Priſon, where he would have remained all his Life, if he had not found the way to bribe a Keeper, who ſet him at liberty; that he fled to Geneva, where, not finding himſelf enough at Liberty, he travelled, till he found, in Tranſylvania, what he had ſought for elſewhere in vain. 'They were extreamly exaſperated, there, againſt 'the Houſe of Auſtria, on account of the Murther 'of Cardinal Martinuſius. - - - - - - Theſe Diſpoſitions ſeemed ſo favourable to Blandrata, that he 'ſtaid in Tranſylvania, with a Deſign to make his 'Advantage of them.' He made himſelf known by his Skill in Phyſic, and was preferred to the Dignity of Phyſician to young John Sigiſmund. 'The greateſt 'Perſons of Tranſylvania took it as an honour, after 'the Choice their Sovereign had made of Blandrata, 'that he would condeſcend to viſit them in their 'Sickneſs, which he did frequently. During the 'Courſe of their Sickneſs, he ſpoke only of diverting Matters to them: but, after he had cured, 'or at leaſt perſuaded them, that he had contributed 'much to their Recovery, he changed his Diſcourſe 'inſenſibly, and fell upon Politics. He made them 'obſerve, that the Italians, who had killed Cardinal Martinuſius, and the Houſe of Auſtria, which 'certainly had ordered, or at leaſt approved, That 'Crime, could not be perſuaded of the Catholic 'Religion; ſince They had not ſcrupled to attempt 'the Life of a Man, who ought to have been inviolable to them by all that was moſt ſacred in the 'Catholic Religion, becauſe he was a Prieſt, an 'Archbiſhop, and a Cardinal all at once. Blandrata perceived, that his Propoſition was not very 'acceptable, he went no farther: But, if he obſerved, that they heard him with Pleaſure, he added, 'with a low Voice, and as if he would have explained a great Myſtery to them, that the Catholic Religion, in the deplorable Condition, to which 'human Corruption had reduced it, was but an 'Artifice, which the Court of Rome, and the Houſe 'of Auſtria, made uſe of, to ſhare the Empire of 'the World between them: That the Court of 'Rome made uſe of the Illuſion, to maintain and 'advance itſelf in the Tyranny it had uſurped over 'Men's Conſciences; and that the Houſe of Auſtria took alſo advantage of it, to eſtabliſh a ſole 'Monarchy in Europe; That the new Sects had 'indeed found out the Evil, but had not remedied 'it; ſince, by admitting the Trinity of the Divine 'Perſons in ſuch a Manner, as the Popes had ſettled 'the Belief of it, they muſt, by a neceſſary Conſequence, give credit to the reſt of the ſame Pope's 'Doctrines, which were only Conſequences drawn 'from That Principle: Whereas, by acknowledging no more Perſons, than Natures, in GOD, all 'the Difficulties, raiſed during fifteen Centuries, 'would be removed: the Holy Scripture would be 'underſtood by itſelf; there would be no more occaſion for Councils; and the Popes, being no longer conſulted, would loſe their Authority. Theſe 'were the ways, by which Arianiſm was revived in 'Tranſylvania (39).'

(37) Varillas, Hiſt. de l' Hereſie, lib. 18. pag. 149, Edit. Holl.

(38) Ibid. pag. 150.

(39) Id ibid. pag. 154, 154.

Few Words will ſuffice to ſhew the Impoſtures of This Hiſtorian, and to convict him of publiſhing the Imaginations of his own Mind for Hiſtorical Facts. Do but conſider, that he ſuppoſes all This happened in the Year 1552; and he was obliged to ſuppoſe it, ſince Martinuſius was murthered towards the latter end of the foregoing Year. Obſerve alſo, that he ſuppoſes, that Blandrata was gone from Geneva, before he went to dogmatize in Tranſylvania. Now what will you think, when you come to know, that This Heretic did not leave Geneva till 1558, and that he was not invited into Tranſylvania to be John Sigiſmund's Phyſician, till towards the Year 1563? What will you ſay of ſo many Arguments, grounded on the Murther of Cardinal Martinuſius? What will you ſay of his Skill in managing the Diſpoſitions of Thoſe, whom That Murther had lately exaſperated? Take notice, that no one accuſes him of having dogmatized in Tranſylvania, during his Reſidence there, before he had been impriſoned at Pavia.

[M] I have read, that he had drank plentifully, the Night, in which he died; and that it was a Queſtion, whether - - - - - - - the Devil had killed him.] The Author, who informs me of This, is a Monk, whoſe Article I ſhall give. 'Blandrata, 'ſays he (40), cui cum ſino ante ædes ejus affuiſſem, 'ſecunda nocte ſubito extinctus eſt, utrum a Satana, 'an ab Affine, toto quo ſui in Tranſylvania tempore 'ſub judice lis fuit. Hoc certum, quod optimo, 'prius quam cubitum concederet, vino incaluerat.'

(40) Leonardus Rubenus, de Idololatriâ, lib. iii. cap. 2. pag. 71.

BLOMBERG (BARBARA), was a young Lady of a good Family, at Ratiſbon, in the Time of the Emperor Charles V. It was believed, a long time, that ſhe had lain with him, and had brought him a Son, who was the famous Don John of Auſtria; but, at preſent, the moſt general Opinion is, that ſhe only ſerved as a Cloak to a great Princeſs, by whom Charles V had That Baſtard. I have ſpoken of this more at large in another Place (a). In Brantome's Time, it began to be doubted, that the Lady, who paſſed for the Mother of John of Auſtria, was really ſo [A]. It was leſs doubted, that the Emperor had enjoyed her

(a) In Remark [A]. of the Article AUSTRIA (DON JOHN of).

[A] In Brantome's Time it began to be doubted, that ſhe was the Mother of Don John of Auſtria.] I ſhall ſet down his Words ſomewhat at length. 'John of Auſtria was a Natural Son of the great 'Emperor Charles V, and of a great Lady and 'Counteſs of Flanders, the Mother of a Great Perſon, of whom we have ſpoken, or poſſibly may 'ſpeak, and not of a Baker's Wife at Bruſſels, or 'of a Laundreſs, as it was commonly reported. 'She was extreamly handſome; her Name was 'Barbara Blomberg: ſhe was afterwards married to 'the Lord Requel, a Gentleman of the Country of 'Namur, or Luxemburg. One may very well believe, that he loved, and enjoyed her: But that 'ſhe was the Mother of Don John, is a Miſtake; 'for his noble Carriage ſhewed, that he took after 'his Father and Mother. As ſoon as he was born, 'the Emperor, his Father, ſent for a rich Shepherd 'from the Mountains of Liege, to whom he gave 'him to be nurſed, and brought up, without the 'Knowledge of many Perſons, ordering him to 'uſe him to labour and hardſhip, as he would do 'his own Child, without feeding him effeminately, 'or delicately, and without telling him, that he 'was an Emperor's Son, till he grew up, and the 'Emperor had a mind to forſake the World, and 'to retire into Spain. Then he commaded the 'King, his Son, to ſend for Him, and the Shepherd, and to make uſe of him; and he allowed 'him a very good Penſion, and recommended him 'ſeveral times to his Son, as his own Brother. I 'have learned this in Spain from ſome great and ingenious Perſons, who knew it well. You ſee 'what it is to be nobly born: He, who had been 'educated in a Country-Houſe, like a Shepherd, 'became afterwards very genteel, gallant, civil, and 'agreeable, and had nothing left of his Rural Education. I ſaw him in Spain: He was a very 'handſome Man, and had a good Grace, as I 'have ſaid; and, though he had been brought up 'in a Ruſtic Life, yet there appeared nothing of it 'in his Behaviour; for he behaved himſelf very her [B]; and, at the bottom, there was no consequence from the one to the other. That Prince might have diverted himself with the fair Barbara Blomberg, who was at first brought to him, to sing before him, and to dissipate his Melancholy; I say, he might have passed, from the Pleasure of the Ear, to all the rest, without having a Child by this Mistress (b). However it be, John of Austria died in the Persuasion, that Barbara Blomberg was his Mother, and, as such, recommended her to the King of Spain. This Recommendation had it's Effect: For Philip II, to whom the true Mother was not unknown (c), did all that was necessary to deceive the World. He sent for Barbara Blomberg into Spain, the same Year that Don John died (d), and gave her a very good Reception. Some time after, he sent her with a handsome Equipage to Mazote, into the Royal Monastery of St Cyprian. After having lived there four Years, she went to Lareda, for the good Air of the Place, where she died. Brantome informs us to whom she had been married. She had a Son, whom Don John, who believed him to be his Uterine Brother, recommended, on his Death-Bed, to the King of Spain, and whose Name was Pyramus Conrad [C]. He served under the Duke of Parma (e).

'nobly

(b) Barbara Blombergæ Ratisbonensis, formæ genere juxta nobilis. Ex qua ad Carolum inducti ut majorem cantu alleveret, &c. Strada, lib. x, Dec. i, pag. 611.

(c) See Remark [A], of the Article AUSTRIA (Don John of).

(d) In 1578.

(e) Ex Strada, Decad. i. lib. x.

'nobly among the Soldiers; he had also a good 'Air among the Ladies, to whom he was very 'acceptable (1).'

(1) Brant. Lives of Foreign Captains, Tom. II. pag. 49.

I shall make Three Observations on This Discourse. I. It seems, Brantome believed, that Barbara Blomberg was a Baker's Wife of Bruffels, or a Laundress; for, since he could not believe, that she was the Mother of a Prince, whose Noble Carriage shewed, that he took after his Father and Mother, he must have distinguished her from the Great Lady and Countess of Flanders, whom he acknowledged to be the Mother of Don John. If he had not made This Distinction, it might be said, that he took Barbara Blomberg, and the Countess of Flanders, for one and the same Person; but, in that case, could he have said, that Don John was too much a Gentleman to be the Son of Barbara Blomberg? He was, therefore, mistaken as to Barbara's Family and Country: She was a Gentlewoman of good Quality in Ratisbon, and not a Baker's Wife, or a Laundress of Bruffels. II. It would be but an ill Proof, that a great Prince could not have had a Bastard by a Woman of a mean Condition, to say, that That Bastard's Noble Carriage shewed, that he took after his Father and Mother: for, if thereby is meant, that he is of a great Family, both on the Father's and Mother's Side, it is supposing what is in question; it is giving no proof, but only saying, he is the Son of a great Lady, because he is the Son of a great Lady; a ridiculous Argument! If it be meant that, on all accounts, one observes in him inclinations too noble and too great, not to believe that his Birth is noble, both on the Mother's and Father's Side, it is still a bad Argument; since Experience shews, that great Lords, who under-match themselves, have Children as high spirited, and as much infatuated with their Grandeur, as Those, who are equally matched; supposing always, that the Education be equal. Are the Sultans mean-spirited, tho' they are sometimes the Sons of a poor Country Wench? III. This Education at a Shepherd's House, in the Country of Leige, is contradicted by good Historians, as Famianus Strada. See the Article AUSTRIA (Don John of) (2).

(2) Towards the beginning of the Text.

[B] It was less doubted, that the Emperor had enjoyed her.] We have just now seen, that Brantome says: one may very well believe, that he loved and enjoyed her. It is very unlikely, that Charles V contrived This Feint with This Lady of Ratisbon, before he had a very intimate Acquaintance with her. Nor is it more likely, that the Lady was less complying as to the Being, than as to the Seeming to be; for commonly the latter is more dreaded than the former, and a Woman would think herself very unhappy to go through the last, without going through the first. The Author of the New Dialogues of the Dead might say many pretty things concerning This particular Idea of the Conduct of Barbara Blomberg. He has said some good ones, according to the Idea, which is different from This (3).

(3) In the Dialogue between Leocretia, and Barbara Blomberg.

[C] She had a Son, whose Name was Pyramus Conrad.] The Walloon Author, who published the Life of John of Austria at Amsterdam, in the Year 1690, believes that Barbara Blomberg was a Widow, when she was willing to pass for Charles Vth's Mistress, and that Pyramus Conrad was her legitimate Son (4). If he had recollected what he says at page 279, he might easily have seen, that Pyramus was younger than John of Austria. Strada, whom he copies, says, That Don John sent his pretended Brother into Burgundy, to perform his Studies there, and that, when he came to hear, that Pyramus had laid aside his Books, and plunged himself into Debauchery, he caused him to be imprisoned. This was his Condition at the Death of That Prince. The King of Spain, having some regard to Don John's Recommendation, wrote to the Duke of Parma, to know Pyramus's Inclination. The Duke informed him, that he had received a Letter from him, wherein the young Man acknowledged himself unfit for, and without any Inclination to, Learning, and that he desired to bear Arms. The King ordered him to learn the Art of War under the Duke of Parma, and assigned him a Pension of thirty Crowns per Month. Thus far Father Strada carries the History (5).

(4) Life of John of Austria, p. 412.

(5) Strada, Dec. i. pag. 627.

BLONDEL (David), a Protestant Minister, in the XVIIth Century, was accounted one of the Men, who had the greatest Knowledge of Ecclesiastical and Civil History. He was of Châlons in Champagne (a), and was made a Minister in the Synod of the Isle of France, in the Year 1614 (b). He exercised his Ministry at Houdan, near Paris. Few Years after, he began to write for the Protestant Religion; for, in the Year 1619, he published a Book at Sedan, intituled, A modest Declaration of the Sincerity and Truth of the Reformed Churches of France. It was an Answer to the Invectives of three or four Writers of the contrary Party, and particularly to those of the Bishop of Lusson, so well known since under the Name of Cardinal Richelieu. From that time Blondel was looked upon as a very hopeful Man, and therefore he had always some honourable Employments in the Synods. He was above twenty times Secretary in those of the Isle of France (c) [A]. He

(a) Catalaunensis, and not Cabilonensis, of Châlons upon the Saone, as it is said in Wicte's Diarium.

(b) See the Preface which he prefixed to one of M. Daillé's Books, entituled, Apologia pro duabus Synodis Nationalibus.

(c) The same Preface.

[A] He was above twenty times Secretary in those of the Isle of France.] Maresius, a Professor at Groningen, will have it, that Blondel was chosen for That Function, because he wrote a fair Hand. 'In 'æstimio fuit apud suos fratres, à quibus sæpe propter calligraphiam factus est Actuarius synodorum: 'nunquam tamen in ulla earum vel nationali vel provinciali Præsidis aut Assessoris gradum obtinuit (1).' He adds, that they never gave him the Office of Moderator, or Assistant to the Moderator,

(1) Maresius in refutatione Præfat. Apolog. Curcellæi, p. 304.

He was deputed four times successively to the National Synods [B], where he never failed to be chosen to draw up and collect the Acts. It is likely, that it was he, whom the National Synod of Castres deputed to the King, in the Year 1626, and who returned his Majesty thanks, in the Name of That Assembly (d). His Speech is to be seen, at length, in the twelfth Volume of the Mercure François. This same Synod ordered him to write in Defence of the Party (e). I have heard say, that They designed chiefly, that he should write against the Annals of Baronius; and that no Protestant was thought more capable of confuting them, than Blondel. And, indeed, he had a prodigious Memory [C], and was a Man of vast reading; neither did he want Penetration to make Discoveries, and draw advantageous Consequences from Matters of Fact. His Style was harsh, and perplexed

(d) If I do not assert it, it is because he says nothing of it, when he speaks of this Synod. Besides that the French Mercury does not say David Blondel, but simply Blondel. Now there were many Ministers of This Name at that Time.

(e) See the above cited Preface.

What sort of hand Blondel wrote.

in the Synods. I have heard say, that Blondel's Hand-Writing was the fairest, and most distinct, that could be seen, but very small; so that, in few Lines, he could make long Remarks, in the Margin of a Book, printed on large Paper.

[B] He was deputed four times successively to the National Synods.] One of these four Synods was not That of Alez, in 1620, as Mr Des-Marets believed (a). This Mistake would be very inconsiderable, if he had not added, that du Moulin, Moderator of That Synod, was very much opposed by Blondel, Secretary to That Assembly; and if he had not reported This Misunderstanding as the Cause of many other Events. 'Quantum autem Molinæus suos alios duos ex ordine Ministerii Condeputatos infensos habuerit in illa functione in qua ipse Synodi præses, Blondellus Secretarius fuit, & eum sæpius querentem audivi, & eventus ipse docuit. Cum enim, &c.' This is a Consideration, which ought to oblige Writers to avoid the very smallest Mistakes. That, which is inconsiderable in itself, is no longer so, when false Consequences, and false Suppositions, are added to it.

(a) Maresius ubi supra, pag. 263. See Curcellæus's Reply, prefixed to the Quarternio Dissertationum.

(3) Maresius, ibid.

[C] He had a prodigious Memory.] Mr Colomiès says one thing of him, which gives us as great an Idea of it, as any thing whatever. I have learned of Dr Vossius, says he (4), that Salmasius, being at Paris, avoided meeting with Mr Blondel in any Visit, as much as he could, because the latter was a great Talker, & omnia in numerato habebat, etiam locos integros authorum, whereas the other, though he had a prodigious Memory, Sæpè silebat. Some Persons, who had heard Blondel in Conversation, have assured me, that his Tongue ran like a Torrent, and that he discoursed of all kind of things with a surprizing Facility, without ever hesitating about Proper Names, or Years; nay, he could tell, sometimes, on what Day of the Month, and of the Week, such and such things happened. The Authors of the Funeral Oration of John Caspar Lentzius say that, when Blondel was blind, he discoursed four Hours concerning the great Book, which he designed to write against Chifflet, and that he did it with such an Effusion of Memory, as astonished the Hearers: 'Quo (malo tœcitatis) non obstante 'Amstelodami eum salutantes non admisit modo, sed per 4. horas operis sui, quod pro re Gallica contra Chiffletium Hispanicæ causæ patrocinantem spissum moliebatur, summam eis exposuit, qui ad prodigiosam tanti viri memoriam obstupuerunt (5).' We shall presently hear two Men, who, though contrary to one another in many things, and particularly on the Account of Friendship for David Blondel, agree as to his prodigious Memory. They agree also as to the Meanness of his Stile; but one of them pretends, that Blondel was so esteemed by the Roman Catholics in France, that, to tempt him, they promised him a Mitre. I shall set down the whole Passage. 'Vir excellens fuit noster Blondellus —— nam ut præteream ingenii acrimoniam, judicii soliditatem, memoriam ad prodigium usque felicem, eloquentiam temporaneam, (quæ tamen, ut nihil est ab omni parte beatum, non ita elacet in scriptis, profundæ quidem ubique eruditionis, sed quorum gratiam obscuritas aliquando imminuit) ad hæc naturæ dona indefatigabilis diligentia, qua non vulgarem linguarum Latinæ, Græcæ, Hebraicæ, at & Italicæ quoque & Hispanicæ, notitiam sibi comparaverat, omne Scriptorum genus pervolverat, & eorum opes in divitem illum cordis sui thesaurum reconderat. Adeo ut nihil esset, sive magnum, sive parvum, in libris Patrum, Actis Conciliorum, disputationibus Theologorum, & in historia vetere ac recenti, tum sacra tum profana, quod ejus cognitionem effugeret, & de quo interrogantibus accurate illico non responderet, nullusque cum eo familiarius versaretur, qui non semper doctior ab ejus colloquiis discederet. Quare omnes, qui noverant, stupendæ ejus eruditioni assurgebant, non solum Protestantes, sed etiam Catholici Romani, qui ipsum vel insulæ Episcopalis, quamdiu cælebs vixit, vel magnæ alicujus in Aula, aut in Curia, dignitatis illicio in partes suas pertrahere parati erant, nisi religiosiorem comperissent, quam ut mundanarum opum aut honorum splendore caperetur. Quid dicam de morum suavitate, de modestia, de candore, & aliis virtutibus quibus omnes honestos viros ad sui amorem rapiebat (6)? ------ Our Blondel was an excellent Man -------- for, to say nothing of the Acuteness of his Wit, the Solidity of his Judgment, the prodigious Happiness of his Memory, and his ready Eloquence (which however, as nothing is compleatly perfect, does not shine so greatly in his Works, the great Learning of which is often diminished by a certain Obscurity); to those Gifts of Nature he added an indefatigable Diligence, by which he acquired an uncommon Knowledge of the Latin, Greek, Hebrew, and even the Italian and Spanish Tongues, had read all kind of Authors, and laid up their Wealth in the rich Treasure of his Heart. Insomuch, that there was nothing, considerable or trifling, in the Works of the Fathers, the Acts of the Councils, Disputes of Divines, and in ancient or modern, sacred or prophane, History, which escaped his Knowledge, and which he could not immediately give an exact Account of to Those, who asked him; nor did any one of his more intimate Acquaintance ever leave him, without going away improved by his Conversations. All therefore, who knew this, paid a great Deference to his surprizing Knowledge, not only Protestants, but Roman Catholics, who were ready to tempt him over to their Party by the Offer of a Bishopric, while he lived single, or some great Dignity at Court, or at the Bar, had they not found him too conscientious a Man to be taken with the Splendor of worldly Riches or Honours. What shall I say of the Sweetness of his Manners, his Modesty, Candor, and other Virtues, which gained him the Love of all honest Men?' Now let us hear his Adversary. 'Laudibus quas hic, Curcellæe, in Blondellum, congeris, calculum meum integrum adjicio: Fuit vir multi-jugæ lectionis, portentosæ memoriæ, jucundæ admodum conversationis (7), iis præsertim, qui in aliorum consortio audire malunt quam loqui: ut tam parum tædii adferret iis apud quos eruditissimos suos Sermones, linguâ præsertim nostra, torrentis instar ad multas horas fundere poterat, de quacunque materia ex improviso eum differe reoporteret, quam frigidus erat & ingratus ubi præmeditatè publicè docere debebat: prout stylus ejus utraque linguâ tam intricatus est & tot hyperbatis scatet, supra diffusissimum quemlibet Articismum (8), ut sine fastidio legi non possit, Lectorque attentus oblitus sit sæpè quomodo periodum incœperit, ubi pervenit ad illius finem (9). —— I entirely assent, Curcellæus, to the Praises, which you heap upon Blondel. He was a Man of great Reading, a surprizing Memory, and entertaining Conversation, to those especially, who choose, in Company, to hear rather than speak; insomuch that he was as little tedious to Those, with whom he conversed learnedly and fluently, particularly in our own Tongue, for many Hours,

(4) Colomiès, Mélanges Historiques, p. 24, 25.

(5) Apud Paulum Freherum, Theatr. p. 1180.

(6) Steph. Curcellæus in Præfat. Apologetica. Mr Vallé expresses this Eloge in fine Terms, and more briefly, dedicating to him the Apology for the Reformed Churches. See in Sir Thomas Pope Blunt, many such Elogies.

(7) He had said in his Exercit. Ill. de Gratia, & Redempt. n. 22. ὁ κάνυ Blondellus, Photius ille nostri sæculi, & omnis antiquitatis quod vixit, Βιβλιοθήκη ἔμψυχος.

(8) Should he not have said, Asiaticismum; for the Asiatic Style was accounted a diffused one.

(9) Maresius in Refut. Præfat. Apologet. Curcellæanæ. p. 33.

perplexed with too many Parentheſes [D]: But what then? would That have hindered him from confuting a Falſity? It appeared, by the Event, that he did not trouble himſelf much about refuting Baronius [E], and that he applied himſelf much more to other things. In the Year 1631, the Province of Anjou demanded him of the National Synod at Charenton, to be Profeſſor in Divinity at Saumur (f); but this Requeſt was not granted, either becauſe it was thought, that, having no Talent for Preaching [F], he was not ſo fit, as another, for the Inſtruction of the Students in Divinity, or becauſe it was believed, that, if he ſhould apply himſelf ſolely to Hiſtory, in which his chief Skill lay, he might ſignalize himſelf the better in the Service of the Party. However it be, he continued in the Iſle of France. In the Year 1645, the National Synod of Charenton made him Honorary Profeſſor [G], and gave him a ſuitable Penſion, which had never been practiſed before (g). The Explications on the Euchariſt (h); a great Book, concerning the Primacy of the Church (i); the Pſeudo-Iſidorus, and Turrianus Vapulantes (k), which is a Work againſt the Decretal Epiſtles; the Treatiſe of the Sybils (l), wherein he undertook to prove the Oracles to be falſe, which are attributed to them, and wherein he refutes the ancient Practice of praying for the Dead; and the Treatiſe de Epiſcopis & Preſbyteris (m); pleaſed the Proteſtants much: but ſome among them diſapproved, that he did not wholly addict himſelf to Controverſy, and that he concerned himſelf in Diſputes of Civil Hiſtory, as when he wrote a Book de Formula Regnante Chriſto (n). Some of them were alſo offended at the Book, which he publiſhed, to ſhew, that what is reported concerning

(f) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of his Authentic Acts.

(g) The above-cited Preface, Citat. (b).

(h) At Roüen, 1641, in 8vo.

(i) At Geneva, 1641, in Fol.

(k) Ibid. 1628, in 4to. See in Remark [N], about This Pſeudo-Iſidorus.

(l) At Charenton, in 1649, in 4to.

(m) At Amſterdam, 1646.

(n) Ibid. 1646, in 4to.

'Hours, and upon any Subject whatever, as he was cold and diſagreeable, when he was to teach premeditately and in Public; for his Stile, in both Languages, is intricate, and full of Tranſpoſitions, beſides a certain diffuſe Aſiaticiſm, which makes it nauſeous; nor can the attentive Reader remember how the Period began, when he comes to the end of it.' He had ſaid, in the Preface of the ſame Book; 'Decennium eſt præter propter, cùm primùm ejus ea de re Diatribe prodiit. Sed cùm Galliçe tantùm ſcripta eſſet, nec eo ſtylo qui ſumm Lectorem alliceret, (nam quam fuit memorioſus & multæ lectionis, tam δυσερμηνεύτως laboravit, paramque felix fuit in ſuis conceptibus, ſive patriâ ſive Latinâ lingua exprimendis); tandem viſus eſt voluiſſe eam ſermone eruditorum extare. —— It is about ten Years, ſince his Firſt Diſſertation on this Subject appeared. But being written in French, and in a Stile not likely to tempt the Reader (for he was ſo unhappy in expreſſing clearly his Sentiments in either Language, as he was happy in Memory and great Reading); he ſeemed at laſt reſolved it ſhould appear in a Learned Language.'

[D] His Stile was harſh, and perplexed with too many Parentheſes.] We have already ſeen what Judgment Mareſius and Curcellæus gave upon this; let us add That of a Jeſuit. 'Cum Blondellus propter 'ſinuoſas inconditæ plerumque orationis ambages & 'inextricabiles παρενθέσεις καὶ περιφράσεις labyrinthos minus gratus politis lectoribus eſſe ſoleat, '& bonæ cauſæ offuſis tenebris ſæpius incommodaverit, operæ pretium viſum fuit eamdem reciprocare ſerram (10). —— Blondel being diſagreeable to polite Readers, on account of his Circumlocutions, and Parentheſes, and often injuring a good Cauſe by the Obſcurity of his Stile, I thought proper to re-handle the ſame Point.' He means, that he had re-examined the Queſtion about Pope Joan. Chifflet ſays, that a Lady of Paris, to whom Blondel had preſented his Volume of the Sibyls, read ſome Pages in it, without underſtanding any thing of it; and told the Author, that it would be very proper to tranſlate that Work into better French; and that ſhe was much diſpleaſed and ſurprized that it was not already done (11).

(10) Philippus Labbe, in Joannæ Papiſſæ Cenotaph. everſo, ad calcem. De Script. Eccleſiaſt. Vol. I. pag. 841.

(11) Chifflet in Imagine Davidis Blondelli, pag. 6.

[E] He did not trouble himſelf much about confuting Baronius.] After his Death, they found only many Notes, which he had written in the Margin of his Baronius. His manner of writing in very ſmall and cloſe Characters, made thoſe Notes more numerous; but they cannot be ſaid to be the Refutation of an Author. The Magiſtrates of Amſterdam bought This Copy of Baronius, and gave it to the Library of their City. It is there that Thoſe, who would know what David Blondel wrote againſt the Annals of Baronius, may ſatisfy their Curioſity. A Miniſter of Bearn (12), and a Refugee at Amſterdam, many Years before the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, ſays, that the Burgomaſters of That City having ordered him throughly to confute the twelve Volumes of Baronius, he did it, by the Help of God, without any trouble, and that he had not only tranſcribed David Blondel's Notes, as he was ordered by thoſe Gentlemen, but alſo that he had collated them with the Annals of Baronius, which he had never ſeen before; And that, having diſcovered ſome Faults, which Blondel had not obſerved, he thought he ſhould commit a Sin of Irreligion, if he ſhould not publiſh them. 'Quum 'mihi demandata foret ab ampliſſimis Reip. Amſtelodamenſis Conſulibus Provincia funditus evertendorum Annalium 12 tomis comprehenſorum ----- Deo cooperante nil arduum eſſe comperi '(13). —— Ut eorum (Conſulum Amſtelodamenſium) juſſu quæ Blondellus ----- animadverterat 'non tantùm excripta ſed etiam cum Baronianis 'collata ----- publico darem (14). ----- Non 'potui ferio poſthumas animadverſiones Blondelli ----- cum Chronologicis Baronii narrationibus 'nunquam antea mihi viſis conferre, quin ſtatim. ----- Hæc autem (ex animo fateor) mihi religio 'fuit impio ſepelire ſilentio (15).' He publiſhed, therefore, a Book in the Year 1675, entituled Anti-baronius Maginelli, which contains an Hundred and forty Pages in Folio. In my Copy, the Title makes no mention of David Blondel; but, in the Journal des Sçavans (16), the Title contains theſe other Words; quibus acceſſerunt quædam ad Baronium animadverſiones Davidis Blondelli. Moreover, the Title notes the Year 1679. Doubtleſs this is a Bookſeller's trick. Probably the Book did not ſell; and, at four Years end, they bethought themſelves of a new Title-Page, and to promiſe wonders in it, under the famous Name of David Blondel. The Truth is, Blondel ſcarce appears in That Book; and, if one was to judge of his Marginal Notes from thence, they would be very much deſpiſed (17).

(12) Whoſe Name was Magendie.

(13) Maginelli Anti-Baronius in Epiſt. Dedicat.

(14) Ibid. in Præfat.

(15) Ibid.

(16) July 10, 1679, pag. 222.

(17) See Mr Baillet, of the Anti, n. 256.

[F] He had no Talent for Preaching.] See what is quoted from Samuel Mareſius, in the End of the Remark [C]. I have heard ſay, that Blondel did not preach by Meditation; and that it was with much difficulty he learned his Sermons Word by Word. So that the Pulpit was not his Talent.

[G] The National Synod of Charenton made him Honorary Profeſſor.] From That time he was reputed free from any Engagement to the Church; he was no longer obliged to Reſidence, and had full Permiſſion to ſettle at Paris, to be at hand to conſult the Libraries. Theſe were the Reaſons, which induced the Synod to confer That Title upon him: Here is my Voucher for it. 'Poſterior '(Synodus) Blondello honorarii profeſſoris nomen & 'ſtipendium aſſignaverat, ſoluto vinculo quo ſuæ 'Eccleſiæ tenebatur, & facta ei facultate ſedes ſuas 'ob commoditatem libroram ipſi neceſſariorum ad 'Baronii promiſſam refutationem' ſigendi' Lutetiæ (18).'

(18) Samuel Mareſius, Refutat. Corcell. p. 304.

[H] He wrote a great Book concerning the Primacy of the Church.] This Work is much eſteemed, and confutes Cardinal du Perron moſt learnedly. Mr Colomiés concerning Pope Joan, is a ridiculous Fable [I]. After the Death of Voſſius, he was Colomiés tells us, that the Author was preparing a (19) Colomeſ. in Opuſculis, pag. 99. second Part: 'I heard, ſays he (19), Mr Daillé ſay,

'that Mr Blondel had left a Continuation of the 'Primacy of the Church, almoſt as large as That 'which is printed. It is in the Hands of a Miniſter
'near Leyden, whoſe Name is Curcellæus, the Son
'of him, who turned Arminian.'

[I] Some were offended at the Book, which he publiſhed - - - concerning Pope Joan.] I ſhall not make uſe of an Univerſal Propoſition; though a very zealous Divine of Groningen does it. 'Aliis quiri-
'tantibus de Johannæ Papiſſæ hiſtoria per ipſum
'ſuggillata ac in fabulam commutata, non ſine of-
(20) Mareſius, Exercitat. III. de Gratia, n. 22. He ſays, in his Anſwer to Curcellæus, p. 315. That no Proteſtant would have adviſed him to write ſuch a ſcandalous Book. 'fenſione OMNIUM Proteſtantium (20). - - - - - -
'Others enquiring about the Story of Pope Joan,
'which he refuted and turned into a Fable, not
'without offending All Proteſtants.' I ſhould fear it would be looked upon as a ſatirical Stroke. I am therefore contented to ſay, that That Work of Blondel offended ſome Proteſtants. This is undeniable. The Reaſons of this Scandal, which I am going to mention, are ſo diſhonourable, or even ſo ſhameful, that if the Divine of Groningen had not avouched them, I ſhould think, that the Arminian Profeſſor of Amſterdam imputed them to the Reformed, to make them ridiculous, or ſuſpected of a ſtrange Infatuation. Curcellæus is the Arminian Profeſſor, of whom I ſpeak. He ſays, that, as ſoon as Blondel's Work appeared in Public, ſome Perſons condemned it without any farther Knowledge of the Matter, and had not patience to read it; it was ſufficient for them to know what the Author aimed at, to ſay, that he had done very ill, and to complain grievouſly of him for depriving them of an occaſion to inſult the Roman Catholics. 'Non defuerunt qui audito
'ſolum ejus argumento damnatoriam confeſtim ſen-
'tentiam ferrent, indignati quod materia ſibi eripe-
'retur Romano-Catholicis poſthac inſultandi, &
'mulierem Romæ Pontificium ſedem aliquando tenu-
(21) In Præfat. Apologet. apud Marcſ. pag. 312. 'iſſe objiciendi (21).' They inquired into Blondel's Motives, and, inſtead of believing, that a Man, who had read ſo much, and had ſuch a vaſt Knowledge, might have diſcovered the weak ſide of That Story, they maintained, that Honeſty had no ſhare in his Action, that he wanted a good Benefice, and that, to obtain it, he had made his Court to the Pope of Rome. 'Prætereo illos quos non pu-
'det jactare Blondellum in fabulam transformare moli-
'tum eſſe quod certa plurium hiſtoricorum fides de
'Johanna prodidit, ut Pontifici Romano gratificare-
(22) Ibid. 'tur & ab eo pingue aliquod Beneficium extorque-
'ret (22).' He, who mentions this raſh Judgment, refutes it by a Reaſon drawn from the diſobliging things ſaid of Popery in That Book of Blondel's. 'Malignam iſtam ſuſpicionem Scriptum, unde ca-
'lumniandi anſam arripuerunt, plane jugulat, in
'quo tantum abeſt ut partium illarum gratiam ambi-
'verit, ut contra multis in locis acriter eas pungere
'non dubitarit.' He adds another Reaſon, which is, that the Work of the Primacy of the Church was in the Preſs, when the Author was writing his Treatiſe concerning Pope Joan. Others were leſs partial; they confeſſed, that the Author had refuted the Hiſtory of the She-Pope by ſuch powerful Reaſons, that they could not ſee any good Anſwer could be made to it; but they took it very ill, that he had made uſe of his Time and Knowledge to refute a Tradition of That Nature. 'The Pro-
'teſtant Intereſt, ſaid they, requires it ſhould be 'true; why muſt a Miniſter diſcover the Falſity of
'it? Would it not have been better to leave the 'Papiſts the Trouble of waſhing off their own
'filth? Did they deſerve, that any one ſhould do
'them this good Office, they who ceaſe not to 'traduce the Memory of the Reformers?' Such was the Diſcourſe of the moſt moderate; and thus Men will always ſpeak, when the Intereſt of a Party has a greater ſhare in what is ſaid, than Honeſty, and the Love of Truth in general: I ſay, in general; for they are two very different things, to love Truth in itſelf, and to love the Party, which one takes for the true One, being reſolved never to take it for the Falſe. 'Alii erga Au-
'ctorem & opus paulo æquiores, fatentur quidem
'ipſum tam efficacibus opinionem vulgarem argu-
'mentis impugnaſſe, ut non videant quid ad illa re-
'poni cum ſpecie poſſit: ſed tamen ajunt non de-
'buiſſe otio ſuo & eruditione abuti, in confutanda
'fabula quam pro vera hiſtoria haberi Proteſtantium
'interfit. Præſtitiſſe ſordes ſuas Pontificiis eluendas
'relinquere: indignos enim eſſe quibus noſtri ope-
'ram ea in re ſuam commodent; cum Lutherum,
'Zuinglium, Calvinum, alioſque Proteſtantium Do-
'ctores, ſoleant atrocibus convitiis proſcindere,
'quibus illorum memoriam, quantum in ſe eſt, toti
'mundo odioſam reddant (23).' Mareſius, who refu- (23) Id. ibid. pag. 314.
ted Curcellæus, does not deny, that Theſe Judgments were paſſed, nor does he ſay, that People were in the wrong in ſo doing. But, on the contrary, he confirms, to the utmoſt of his Skill, the Opinion of thoſe, who ſaid, that Blondel compoſed That Book, on purpoſe to pleaſe the Roman Catholics. 'Nec potuit id conſilium Blondelli non diſplicere
'bonis inter Proteſtantes, quibus monſtri quid a-
'lere viſa eſt præpoſtera hæc diligentia in agenda
'cauſa Adverſariorum, ac ſi ipſimet ei pares non
'eſſent (24). - - - - - - Nor could this Undertaking of (24) Mareſius, ubi ſupra, pag. 321.
'Blondel be otherwiſe than diſpleaſing to good Men
'among the Proteſtants, who thought this prepoſte-
'rous Diligence in defending the Cauſe of the Ad-
'verſaries, as if they were themſelves unequal to
'it, ſomething monſtrous.' He relates (25) a Paſ- (25) Ib. ibid. pag. 313.
ſage of the Sieur Coignard, an Advocate of Roüen, who wrote againſt Blondel, and who ſaid, that moſt of the Reformed were ſtrangely ſurpriſed at This Author's Deſign, and that their Opinion was, that he had a Mind to make a ſhew of his Learning, or to inſinuate himſelf into the Favour of Great Perſons. See, below, the Remark [P]. The Church of Rome is full of People, who judge in the ſame manner of thoſe, who confute the Legends: They are called Heretics, or Favourers of them; ſo that, on both ſides, a Man, who does not deſign to confirm himſelf, by his Searches and Studies, in all the Opinions of his Communion, expoſes himſelf to great Inconveniences.

Blondel's Treatiſe, concerning Pope Joan, appeared at ſeveral times, and in two Languages. In the Year 1647, they printed, at Amſterdam his Familiar Explication of the Queſtion, Whether a Woman was ſeated in the Papal Chair of Rome between Leo IV and Benedict III? After his Death, Curcellæus cauſed the ſame Work to be printed in Latin at Amſterdam, in the Year 1657, but much larger. This is the Title it; De Joanna Papiſſa, ſive famoſæ quæſtionis, an fœmina ulla inter Leonem IV. & Benedictum III. Romanos Pontifices media ſederit, ordinesque ſit. Curcellæus ſays, that the Author kept his Manuſcript above nine Years by him, and that, when he firſt began it, he thought of nothing leſs, than of printing it (26). He had only the Com- (26) Curcell. ubi ſupra, pag. 314.
plaiſance to examine a Matter, upon which one of his Friends had conſulted him; but, at laſt, he ſubmitted to the earneſt Sollicitations of his Friends, who aſſured him, that This Work would very much pleaſe the Curious in Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory. Mareſius affirms, that Blondel denied, that he had a hand in the Impreſſion of his Book, and that, by ſuch a Proteſtation, he endeavoured to leſſen the Scandal, and to avoid the Cenſure of the Synod. Quam (promulgationem) tum etiam Blondellus ut ſe inſcio factam excuſabat, ad offenſionem elevandam, & cenſuram ſynodicam cautius declinandam (27). He adds, (27) Mareſius, in Relatat Præfat. pag. 324.
that the Manuſcript was not directly ſent into Holland; but from Paris to London, and from London to Amſterdam: All which was by way of Precaution againſt the Cenſures, which were to be feared: Ut ſi lis ulla ſuper ejus editione ſua Autori moveretur, eadem præſto eſſet excuſatio qua bodie utitur Dallæus. To ſpeak the Truth, I do not believe, that This Work was put to the Preſs without the Author's Conſent and Knowledge. Mr Menage relates a thing, which makes for our Purpoſe, and which ſhews, that he did not well remember the chief Circumſtances; for he was ignorant of the French Edition. 'I was the occaſion, ſaid he (28), (28) Menagiana, pag. 344. Edit. Holl.
'of printing David Blondel's Treatiſe concerning
'Pope Joan. At firſt he had only written a Diſ-
'courſe in French, which he ſent me, and which 'I kept ſome time. I lent it afterwards to Mr Nu-
'blé, who kept it near a Year. David Blondel came 'afterwards to ask it of me; but I would not give
'it

SOME matters of fact concerning David Blondel's Treatiſe about Pope JOAN.

was invited to succeed him in the Professorship of History, by the Curators of the Illustrious School of Amsterdam. He went thither in the Year 1650, and continued to study with his usual Application; which, together with the change of Air, drew many Indispositions upon him, and made him lose his Sight. It is affirmed, that, in this Condition, he dictated two Volumes in Folio, concerning the Genealogy of the Kings of France, against Chifflet (o). It is said, that he undertook this Work at the Request of the Chancellor Seguier. There were some morose Persons in Holland, who endeavoured to make him suspected of Arminianism [K], and who blamed the Religious and Political Considerations, which he published (o) They are in Latin, and were printed at Amsterdam, in 1654.

' it him at first, because I feared he would suppress it. I told him it was a Piece, which deserved to be printed, and that, probably, he intended to deny it the Public; but he assured me so positively, that he would cause it to be printed, that I gave it him again. Accordingly he got it printed in Latin; but he made it quite another thing than it was before.' It is reported, that, on the first News Salmasius had of this Book of Blondel, he cried out, Let it be brought me; I will destroy it with one Blast of my Mouth. ' Cum primum ejus Fama ad Claudium Salmasium diffusissimæ eruditionis, ut omnes sciunt, viri aures pervenisset, excidit ipsi ut parum considerate diceret; tradatur mihi liber; ego illum uno halitu dissipabo (29).' Blondel sent him the Original of his Latin Work, and required no other Condition, but that it should be published entire, either at the beginning, or the end, of the Answer. Salmasius accepted this Condition, and lived six Years after; but, though he had promised to answer it, he did not; and nothing was found among his Papers, which concerned the Refutation of Blondel (30). The same Curcellæus, who tells us all this, affirms, that Rivetus had written to him, that he questioned, whether any solid Answer could be made to Blondel; Valde se dubitare an bene ei responderi posset, & cum lectoris cordati satisfactione. An Advocate of Roüen, whose Name is Coignard, answered the French Book, the very same Year that Blondel died. Maresius answered the Latin, a Year after it was printed, and inserted it entire in his Answer; which is a plain Proof, that he did not perceive the great Difficulties, which perplexed Rivetus, or that he thought he had fully removed them. For a Man is never so imprudent as to publish the entire Work, which he answers, when he is persuaded, that he cannot answer several Difficulties; in such a Case, he makes choice of what he pleases in the Writings of his Antagonist, and pretends not to have seen That, which he knows not how to answer. There are many Books, against which nothing would be said, if it were necessary to insert them at length in the Answer to them (31). It is not long since Mr Spanheim, Professor in Divinity, wrote a Book, to re-establish Pope Joan (32). He was not discouraged by the Difficulties, which perplexed Rivetus and Salmasius. It may be said of his Book, and of That of Maresius, that, if they cannot convince all sorts of Readers, that the History of Pope Joan is true, they may at least convince them of their Authors Ability and Learning.

(29) Curcell. ubi supra, pag. 324.

(30) Id. ibid. Maresius owns Salmasius's Promise. Id non præstitit Salmasius cujus spem fecerat amicis & mihi sæpe. ubi supra, pag. 326.

(31) Mr Arnauld was of opinion, that his Book, entituled, Le Renversement de la Morale, was of this Nature. See the Nouv. de la Republique des Lettres, Nov. 1684. Art. 11. p. 975.

(32) This Book, translated into French, by Mr Lenfant, Minister of Berlin, was printed at Amsterdam, in 1694, and re-printed at the Hague, in 1720, by the Care of Mr Des Vignoles.

(37) Sarrav Epist. 178. pag. 181, Edit. Utraj.

One of Sarravius's Letters informs me, that Blondel having, at the Request of some Persons, examined the Question about Pope Joan, found, that the common Opinion was fabulous, and composed a Latin Book on That Subject; which some approved, and others condemned: The latter pretended, that a Protestant made himself infamous, when he opposed the common Opinions of his Party. Quasi probrosum foret viro Protestantium Partibus addicto quidquam attulisse, quod vulgatas suorum opiniones convelleret (33). Blondel had some regard to the pannic Fears of weak Minds, and put his Work into Sarravius's Hands, that he might refuse it to some Persons, who might have a Design to publish it against his Will. He examined This Question again in the Year 1639, because a Report was spread, that he confuted, at large, the History of Pope Joan, in a Book which was printing at that time. It was That of the Pope's Supremacy. Not to be at the trouble of turning over all the Sheets of such a large Book, They enquired of him concerning This Report. He answered, that he did not handle This Question in the Work, which was then in the Press; but, that they might know what his Opinion was, he composed a French Treatise, shorter than the Latin, and which soon came into the Hands of several Persons. Salmasius saw it at Paris, in the Year 1641. Sarravius refused to declare how this Work was sent to the Bookseller Blaeu, who published it at Amsterdam in 1647, but he declares, that the Author said, that That Business had been managed without his Knowledge. Certe auctor affirmat se inconsulto, quidquid id est, procuratum fuisse (34). He adds, that, after the Publication of That Book, some praised Blondel's Ingenuity, and others almost loaded him with abusive Language (35): The most moderate taxed him with Imprudence. Some of Salmasius's Letters, wherein he promised to patronize the Tradition, which Blondel had rejected, and to restore it speedily and easily, comforted Those, who regretted the loss of an Argument, which, in their Opinion, overthrew the Church of Rome. Recreasti animos eorum quibus dolebat eripi sibi telum, ut arbitrantur, acutissimum, quo Roma in capite feriretur (36). Sarravius was one of those, who were pleased with this new Design of Salmasius; but he warned him to take great Care of what he was about. Note, That he sent him Blondel's Latin Treatise, and that he acquainted him, that Chamier, Peter du Moulin, and Bochart of Caen, three of the most learned Ministers of France, believed, that the Story of Pope Joan was fabulous. He did not forget to say, that du Moulin, who might have jested admirably well on this History, had never employed his Wit about it. Multa certe cum scripserit (Petrus Molinæus) quibus Romanum suggillaverit pudorem, ab ipso tamen fœmina semper manum abstinuit: & poterat tamen vir non infacetus alicujus liberalis joci inde captare occasionem. I believe, one might add Mr Basnage to those three famous Ministers, who took the Story of Pope Joan for a meer Fable. See what he wrote upon it, giving an Historical Account of the Reasons of each Party (37), and you will apprehend what his Thoughts are.

(33) Sarravius, ubi supra.

(34) Sarravius, ubi supra.

(35) Alii pene optimo viro convicturi. ibid.

(36) Id. ibid.

(37) Basnage, Hist. de l' Eglise, Tom. I, pag. 408, & seq.

[K] Some morose Persons endeavoured to make him suspected of Arminianism.] There are many Persons in Foreign Countries, who have a wrong Notion of the Dutch Liberty, and the French Servitude (38). They are in the right to say, that the Tribunal of the Spanish Inquisition is abhorred in Holland. But, nevertheless, there are many jealous, suspicious, Persons, and Inquisitors, who take notice what Friends a Man has, and who build a thousand rash Judgments upon it, which they impart to many Persons from House to House, and chiefly to Those, who may either serve or hurt, according as they are prepossessed for or against. Poor David Blondel fancied, that, going from France to Amsterdam, he should pass from Servitude to Liberty; and did not know that he was going to put himself under the Eyes of certain Spies, who would make it a heinous Crime in him to hold Correspondence with an old Friend (39), who had contributed to his Vocation, and whose Acquaintance was of great use to him in an unknown Country. He knew not that Those Spies would report all he should say, and that a wrong Interpretation would be put upon certain things, which might escape him in Conversation: so that he would be loaded with Slanders, and accounted a Man, who conspired against the State, and Church. I advance nothing but what I have read in the Writings of a famous Divine, who has taken the Pains to inform the Public of These many Slanders: ' Quod illi Apologiæ (40) prologum galeatum præfixerit ὁ πανυ Blondellus ----- multum detrivit de ipsius existimatione apud plerosque, ac si meditatus fuisset in gratiam Remonstrantium Evse-

(38) A great many Persons imagine, that no one dares speak his Mind in France, and yet they speak and write very freely. How could our News Writers know what they publish about France, if the Inhabitants of that Country did not write their Thoughts with the greatest Freedom? They talk more freely still, than they write.

(39) That is, with Curcellæus, an Arminian Professor.

(40) He means a Piece of Mr Daillé, concerning Universal Grace.

(o) This appears from a Letter, wherein David Blondel wrote to him, April 20, 1645. It is to be found at the beginning of the French Book concerning Pope Joan.

lished during the War between Cromwell and the Dutch [L]. He died the sixth of April, 1655, aged Sixty four Years. He had two elder Brothers, both Miniſters; one's Name was Moſes, and the other's Aaron. MOSES BLONDEL was Miniſter at Meaux, and afterwards at London, and publiſhed a Book of Controverſy, which ſhewed, that he had Learning [M]. It is ſaid, that his Knowledge was not uſeleſs to his Brother [N]. He was living in the Year 1645 (p). It was he, who

(41) See what it is ſome Author ſays, in the Preface to The Free and Charitable Conſiderations on Blondel's Authentic Acts.

(42) See the following Remark.

(43) Mareſius, Exercit. III. de Gratia, n. 22.

(44) Quæ omnia dici & jactari in illum eò mihi ægrius accidit quod ſumma mihi cùm ipſo neceſſitudo ſemper intercefſerit. Id. ibid.

(45) Dallæus in vindicta Apolog. Part III. cap. VIII. pag. 431.

(46) Spizelius, in Infelice Literato, p. 693, &c.

(47) Curcellæus in Præfat. Apolog. pag. 309.

(48) Mareſius, in Refutatione Præf. pag. 309, 310, 311.

Some Miſtakes about our BLONDEL.

ſIONEM doctrinæ publicæ in his Eccleſiis (41): Aliis obſervantibus intimam illam & jugem quam cum D. Curcellæo familiaritatem coluit ex quo vixit in Belgio: Aliis ad animum revocantibus liberiores quaſdam voces ipſius in ſententiam Auguſtini & Synodum Dordracenam: ------ Aliis indignantibus quod juſto profundius ſe immiſcuerit negotiis hujus Reip. (42) in qua erat recentior hoſpes (43). —— Blondel's prefixing a Preface to This Apology injured his Character with many Perſons, who conſidered him as attempting to ſubvert, in favour of the Remonſtrants, the public Doctrine in Theſe Churches. Some took notice of his Intimacy with Curcellæus ſince his Reſidence in Holland; others recollected ſome free Expreſſions of his concerning the Opinion of St Auſtin, and the Synod of Dort. And there were ſome, who were angry that he intermeddled too far in the Affairs of This Republic, upon ſo ſhort an Acquaintance.' I omit many other ill Reports, which the ſame Author collected to his great Grief, as he ſays (44), and yet ſo carefully, that Mr Daillé reproaches him very much for it, after having refuted them one after another. 'Hæc ſunt quæ Epicrita contra clariſſimam optimi & eruditiſſimi viri famam, aut finxit ipſe, aut à malevolis plebeiiſque ingeniis excogitata magno ſtudio conquirenda & corradenda & in publicam hominum lucem edenda putavit; quæ quam ſint putida, & ad id, quod agit, conficiendum inepta, omnes jam intelligunt. ------ Nunc quo nomine appellabo illam Epiſcritæ diligentiam, qua is quiſquilias & nugas, partim futiles, partim falſas, pleraſque dubias & incertas, aut ipſe commentus eſt, aut ex otioſorum hominum circulis atque rumuſculis ſtudioſiſſime collegit hoc animo, ut perſuadeat eximium Dei ſervum, & poſt emenſos in Chriſti vinea labores è terris nuper in cœlos receptum, hoc antequam moreretur egiſſe ac meditatum eſſe ut publicam Eccleſiæ, in qua degebat, doctrinam everteret (45)? —— Theſe are the ſcandalous Reports, which This Writer either invented himſelf, or carefully collected from the invention of malevolent Perſons, againſt the Reputation of this Great Man, and which he thought fit to publiſh to the World; the Abſurdity of which all Men now ſee through. Now what ſhall I call this Diligence in inventing, or collecting from the Circles of the Idle, or Common Fame, ſuch trifling Stuff, partly falſe, and partly uncertain, and publiſhed with a View of perſuading the World, that That excellent Servant of GOD, after his Labours in the Vineyard of CHRIST received up into Heaven, had, before his Death, attempted publickly to ſubvert the Doctrine of the Church, in which he lived?' Since the Death of Blondel, Things are much worſe, and chiefly ſince certain factious and haughty Men, come out of France, would make themſelves formidable by ſome Attempts towards an Inquiſition. See how a Miniſter of Germany (46) laments David Blondel's Misfortune, who, though a mild and peaceable Man, and notwithſtanding the Services he had done the Cauſe, was, nevertheleſs, expoſed to a thouſand Revilings, both in his Life-time, and after his Death.

[L] And blamed the Religious and Political Conſiderations, which he publiſhed during the War between Cromwell, and the Dutch.] We have ſeen, in the preceding Remark, that his Enemies drew from thence one of their Proofs of his pretended Conſpiracy againſt the Church. His Apologiſt pretends, that it was out of Hatred to the States of Holland, that Blondel's Conſiderations were blamed (47); but Mareſius anſwered him, that That Work contained ſeveral things, which could not but diſpleaſe the States of That Province, and which diſpleaſed many good People; and that, beſides, it contained many Invectives againſt the Members of the Parliament of England, and againſt thoſe Princes, who, inſtead of revenging the Death of King Charles I, made Leagues with Cromwell (48). This is as much as to ſay, that, if Blondel had lived two or three Years longer, he would have run the hazard of finding himſelf accuſed of a Crime againſt the Government for having wrote a Libel againſt the Commonwealth of England; I ſay, a Libel, which was a ſevere Cenſure of the Union, which reigned, after This Miniſter's Death, between Holland and England.

[M] MOSES BLONDEL was a Miniſter at Meaux, and publiſhed a Book of Controverſy.] The Book is entituled, Jeruſalem au Secours de Geneve: It was printed at Sedan in the Year 1624. The Author juſtifies the Opinion of the Proteſtants concerning the Apocryphal Books, by the Teſtimony of the Jews, and of the Fathers. The famous Controverſiſt Peter Veron accuſes Blondel of Plagiariſm. John Reynolds an Engliſhman, ſays he, compoſed a great Book in Quarto, containing about Six hundred Leaves (49), entituled, A Cenſure of the Apocryphal Books of the Old-Teſtament, againſt the Papiſts, and chiefly againſt Robert Bellarmin MDCXI. ---- Out of the Pieces of That great Volume was compiled the Book of Blondel, then Miniſter of Meaux, on That Subject. He entituled it, Jeruſalem & Rome au Secours de Geneve (50). I cannot tell, whether Veron believed, that this Blondel, Miniſter of Meaux, was David Blondel; but he was the Cauſe, that Chifflet took the one for the other. Before Chifflet publiſhed his Reply to the great Volume of Blondel, he paved the way for it by a ſmall Piece of thirty Pages, under the Title of Imago Franciſci Everſoris Davidis Blondelli Miniſtri Calviniſtæ. Clypei Auſtriaci liber prodromus. He rails much at Blondel, who had not ſpared him, and accuſes him of Plagiariſm. He pretends, that it is an old Sin in him, and refers him to Father Veron's Words, which we have juſt now ſeen. Blondellum Neoclide furaciorem, Bouchete, Dominice, ac Tenneurio, totum inequitare nihil novi eſt; antiquum obtinet dum plagiarium agit; non ignorat hæc Pilæa, non Tyttygias. Recordatur tyrocinii ſui fœdos dies, cum apud Meldenſes miniſtellum agens Genevæ ſuæ ab Hieroſolymis & ipſa Roma ſuppetias fruſtra quæſivit, de quibus Franciſci Veronis, &c (51). He was therefore perſuaded, that his Adverſary was That Miniſter of Meaux, who wrote the Book entituled, Jeruſalem au Secours de Geneve; but This is to aſcribe to David Blondel what belongs only to his Brother Moſes. The Miſtake of the Abbot de Marolles is leſs conſiderable than That. He gives Blondel the Name of Daniel, inſtead of David. It is in the Enumeration of the Authors, who preſented him with their Works, or who ſpoke honourably of him. He ſays, that Blondel made him a Preſent of his Book concerning Pope Joan, having made uſe, adds he, of a conſiderable Obſervation, which I imparted to him one Day in the late Mr du Puy's Cloſet, on That Subject. He ſays the ſame thing in his Hiſtory of France, and ſhews in what That Obſervation conſiſted.

(40) It contains above 800 Leaves.

(50) Veron's Fifth Controverſy about Canonical Books, Part II. chap. VI. n. 3.

(51) Chifflet. Imag. Franciſci Everſoris.

[N] His Knowledge was not uſeleſs to David Blondel.] Here is what I find in the Profeſſor of Groningen. 'Cæterum inde apud noſtros noſtri Sæculi Photius dictus eſt Blondellus, quod ex ſuis & ſui fratris, Moſis Blondelli, viri pientiſſimi & diligentiſſimi, laboribus, veterum Pontificum Epiſtolas Decretales, quas jamdiu tamen nemo ſanus volebat admittere, in ſuo Pſeudo-Iſidoro & Turriano vapulantibus, ſuam in veterum Canonum notitia peritiam abunde comprobaſſet, & inſuper diligentiſſime evolviſſet Canones & Conſtitutiones Synodorum Nationalium Reformatarum, ejuſdem Moſis fratris ſui adjutus induſtriâ: cui comprobandæ id proferre poſſim quod habeam in meo Muſæo, ex manu Moſis Blondelli, præter excerpta quædam Patrum Græcorum & Latinorum, & Bellarmini opuſculum de Scriptor. Eccl. variis notis manuſcriptis elucidatum, Diſciplinam Eccleſiarum who gave the Manuscript, from which the Book concerning Pope Joan was printed (q). I have forgot to observe, that Amand Flavien is a fictitious Name, which David Blondel gave himself in a little Book about Liberty of Conscience, which he opposed to the Bull of Innocent X, against the Peace of Munster. Nor have I spoken of the great Endeavours the Catholics used to draw our Blondel into their Communion. A Minister, who did not love him, pretended, that it did him no credit. His Thought deserves some Examination [O]. He maintained also, that Blondel had a Pension from the Court of France, which diverted him from refuting Baronius [P].

Galliæ

(q) The same Letter page 56.

' He

' Galliæ nitidissimè Scriptam, variis Schòliis ex ' Synodorum Nationalium decisionibus illustratam ' (52). —— Blondel was by us called the Photius of our Age for his great Skill in the ancient Canons, which he showed in his Pseudo-Isidorus & Turrianus vapulantes, in relation to the Decretal Epistles of the ancient Popes, which yet no thinking Man would admit; in which he was assisted by his Brother, Moses Blondel, a most pious and diligent Man; as also in turning over the Canons and Constitutions of the National Synods of the Reformed Churches; to prove which I can produce a Manuscript of Moses Blondel, besides some Extracts out of the Greek and Latin Fathers, and a Work of Bellarmin concerning the Ecclesiastical Writers, illustrated with several Manuscript Notes, and the Discipline of the French Churches most beautifully written, and illustrated with several Scholia taken from the Decisions of the National Synods.' Observe, that this Professor intimates, that it was not necessary to shew the Falsity of the Decretals. To this let us add these Words of Mr Baillet: ' As to the False Isidorus, Father Sirmond called Mr Blondel a Breaker of open Doors, ' by reason of the Heat, with which he pursued ' these two Authors, whose Defeat was neither difficult nor very considerable, since so many Catholic Critics had already discovered Isidorus's Impostures, and the Proceeding of Turrianus had ' been hissed at, and censured, by the most judicious among our Writers before him (53).' Rivetus speaks much more advantageously of this Book of Blondel (54).

(52) Maresius ubi supra, pag. 253.

(53) Baillet, Jugem. des Sav. Num. 265.

(54) See Rivetî Oper. Tom. II. pag. 1079.

[O] His Thought deserves Examination.] Among other Things, Curcellæus had said, in David Blondel's Praise, that The Catholics admired his Learning so much, that they offered him a Mitre, while he was a single Man; and afterwards a good Post either at Court, or in the Parliament, if he would abjure his Heresy (55). Maresius replies, that such a thing does not deserve Praise, as well because the Papists bait their Hooks at all times, and in all Places, as because a virtuous Woman will not praise herself for having rejected an immodest Proposal. Sed nec ad laudes ipsius pertinere mihi videtur quod eum libenter corrupissent Pontifici, cum horum hamus ubique pateat, nec soleat honestas matronas suis laudibus accensere quod impudicis sollicitationibus quondam restiterit (56). This last Maxim is not absolutely true; it must be viewed on a certain side, not to appear false. It is a Dishonour to a Woman, that any Proposals of Love should be made to her; for it shews, that They had no very good Opinion of her Virtue; and, therefore, any Woman, who boasts of having resisted unchaste Sollicitations, discovers, at the same time, that she has not been so tender of her Reputation as she should have been, or that she knew not how to inspire all the Respect, which a virtuous Woman deserves. In this Sense, the Maxim of David Blondel's Censurer ought to be admitted. It will be granted me, without doubt, that of two Women, equally beautiful and charming, and engaged in the World, she, who has never had any dishonest Proposal made to her, would have more Reason to boast, than she, who has often repulsed the Tempter; for it would be a Proof, that the latter has not imprinted such a Character of Prudence on her Conduct, as may persuade a Man, that he would be very ill received, and that it would certainly be in vain to set up for a Lover. No finer Praise can be given to a Minister of State, than to tell him he is like Cato, of whom no one durst ask an unjust Thing. Sciappius made use of this Thought in praising a Cardinal. ' Erga amicos ' parco quamvis eximia & constanti voluntate esse ' soleas, eam tamen, cum quid momenti majoris petere instituerint, religionem adhibere solos, ut non temere etiam qui te caussâ sua omnia velle sciat, vel sibi quicquam, vel amicis, auste postulare quod ' te tribuere vel indulgere minus dignum videatur, ' eaque re in te conveniat, quod de Catone Tullium dixisse legimus: ô te felicem M. Porci, à quo rem improbam petere nemo audet (57).' —— Though you are always ready to serve your Friends; yet no one dares ask for himself, or others, what is improper for you to give; in which we may apply to you what Cicero said to Cato; Happy Marcus Portius, of whom no one durst ask an unreasonable Thing.' But let us turn the Tables, and we shall see, that the Professor of Groningen has not justly censured Curcellæus. Generally speaking, it is not true, that a virtuous Woman ought not to think herself worthy of Praise, for having often resisted dishonest Sollicitations. Every Family, which can name such, or such a Woman, who has refused the Offers of some great Financier, or Prince, thinks itself crowned with Glory (58). The strongest and most frequent Temptations are the best Proofs that a Woman is Honest and Virtuous, and worthy of Esteem. Some Relations inform us, that the most virtuous Woman in Spain are very glad to be alone with a Man, who desires the last Favour of them, and that they take it very ill if he does not. Not that they will grant it him, but they take Delight in refusing such earnest Requests. After all, there was reason to praise Blondel for the very thing, which Maresius censured. The French Catholics would not have used so many Promises, if they had not taken him for a Person of great Merit. There is a great Difference between a Minister, to whom Honours are offered, if he will change his Religion, and a Woman, who is courted with Presents. The Action, which is proposed to the Minister, is not bad according to the Principles of those, who propose it; and he is not required to do it whilst he believes it to be an ill thing (59): He is exhorted to instruct himself, with a Promise, that if he can undeceive himself, the Pains he shall take to seek, and find, the Truth, shall be largely rewarded. But what is proposed to a Woman is a bad Action, both according to her own Principles, and according to the Principles of the Tempter. So that she cannot be tempted without an Affront offered; that is, without believing her very capable of committing a Thing, of which she knows the Obscenity: Therefore Maresius's Comparison is not just; for there is no Injury done to a Man in believing him capable of seeing his Errors, and acknowledging the Truth; or which is the same thing, in soliciting him to change his Religion. I am sure, that, if Maresius had wrote the Panegyric of a Minister, who had refused many great Advantages, which the Catholics had offered him, he would have drawn from it the Subject of a fine Elogy, and would not have scrupled to praise it as a very noble Exploit. Observe, by the by, how Pyrrhonism prevails in most Disputes. There are many Maxims, which are true on one side, and false on the other. They are made use of by turns, either for one's own Cause, or against an Adversary: But is this the way to attain to Certainty? See, besides this, in relation to the Praise, which a virtuous Woman deserves, either for having never been sollicited, or for having resisted wicked Sollicitations, the whole Remark [D] of the Article JUDITH.

(55) Curcell. In Præfat. Apolog. pag. 338. See, above, the Remark [C].

(56) Maresius in Refutat. Præf. pag. 338.

Whether a Woman deserves praise for rejecting immodest Proposals: And a Man for rejecting Temptations to change his Religion.

(57) Sciopp. Epist. Dedicat. Elementor. Philosophiæ Stoicæ Moralis ad Cynthium Cardinalem S. Georgii.

(58) See Monsieur's George Dandin.

(59) I speak only of honest Conversers.

[P] It has been said, that Blondel had a Pension, and that This diverted him from refuting Baronius.] Maresius declares, that Blondel told him, that 'He had a singular way of studying; he lay on the Floor, and had round 'about him the necessary Books for the Work he had in hand (r).' He, who informs me of this, tells it for certain Truth: He says also, that the anonymous Author, who wrote the Free and Charitable Considerations on the Collection of Authentic Acts, compiled by Mr Blondel, was one Gauthier, a Minister near Rochelle. This Collection displeased the Divines, who had opposed Mr Amyraut. I have seen a Letter full of Complaints on this Subject [Q]. I shall give an Extract from it.

(r) Ancillon, Mélange Critique, Tom. I. pag. 407.

that he was importuned by the Enticements of the World (60). He adds, that Demery, Super-intendant of the Finances, paid this Minister a Pension, and that this Pension obliged him to publish his Pope Joan. 'Nec dubium quin Blondellus in sua 'Papissa Moderationis laudem sibi comparare studuerit, præsertim quo tempore eum in suis stipendiis ex annua pensione habebat supremus Ærario Præfectus (61). — Blondel, in his Pope Joan, certainly aimed at the Reputation of a moderate Writer, especially at the time when the Super-intendant of the Finances, paid him a Pension.' 'Ubi (Lutetiæ) tamen nihil minus quam Baronio vacavit; sed conjuncta D. Demery, summi Præfecti ærario Regio, pensione, cum Ecclesiarum stipendio, animum appulit ad ea, quæ ab illa professione honoraria, inter Reformatos, satis remota erant. Quæ etiam offensioni fuisse multis piis & bonis viris, mihi abunde constitit cum essem Lutetiæ. Unde natum 'consilium de ipso in Belgium, si pote foret, transmittendo, quo sic & illis sumptibus sibi inutilibus Ecclesiæ liberarentur, & ipse expediretur ex Aulæ & Sæculi inescationibus, quas & sibi graves & importunas esse, apud me tum satis aperte professus est. ----- Where however (at Paris) he thought but little of Baronius; but, enjoying a Pension from Demery, Super intendant of the Finances, together with a Stipend from the Churches, he applied himself to Studies very remote from that honorary Profession among the Reformed. That this gave Offence to many pious and good Men, I was fully convinced when I was at Paris. Whence arose the Design of sending him, if possible, into Holland, that the Churches might be freed from an unnecessary Expence, and Blondel himself be extricated from the Temptations of a Court and of the World, which he very frankly confessed to me, at that time, were stronger than he could well resist.' If this Author had been asked, How he knew that Demery paid Blondel a Pension? he would have answered with a Hear-say.

(60) Maresius in Refutat. Præf. pag. 305.

(61) Ib. pag. 313. See also the Præface to his Epicrisis Theologica adversus Joh. Dallæi Apologiam.

Mr Ancillon informs us of a strange Particular: 'I know from him, that the President de Mesmes, 'tho' a very good Roman Catholic, gave him a 'yearly Pension of twelve hundred Livres, to write 'against the Pope's Supremacy, and that a Counsellor of the Parliament of Paris, a very good 'Roman Catholic too, whom he named to me, but 'whose Name I have forgot, gave him a Pension 'of Six hundred Livres on the same Account, and, 'that, to satisfy these two Gentlemen, he composed that great Volume in Folio, of the Pope's Supremacy, which serves for an Answer to the Book, 'which Cardinal du Perron wrote against James I 'King of Great Britain (62).' Either these two Magistrates had only the Name, and out-side, of Roman Catholics, or their Pensioner betrayed them; for the Interests of the Calvinists cannot be more strongly maintained, than Blondel has maintained them in his Work of the Primacy.

(62) Mélange Critique de Literature Tom. I. pag. 407, 408.

[Q] I have seen a Letter full of Complaints against his Collection of Authentic Acts.] It was written by Mrs Mary du Moulin Daughter of Peter du Moulin (63). Mr de Wilhem (64) did me the Favour to communicate the Original to me; it is dated from Delft the Twenty fourth of June 1655. It appears by this Letter, that the two Persons, whom Blondel had most abused, were du Moulin, and Rivetus, 'to whom nevertheless he professed himself a great Friend, and 'by whom he was sincerely beloved, as may be 'proved by the good Offices, which he had received from them, and by the Acknowledgments 'which he made for them. Several Dozens of his 'Letters might be produced, which he wrote to 'Monsieur Rivet, wherein he calls him Father, 'his faithful Friend, his Protector, and Benefactor, 'and one might easily think, that he spoke the 'Sentiments of his Heart: for he was indebted to 'him alone for the Post, which extricated him 'from the Inconveniencies and Dangers, wherein 'the most Judicious thought him involved, when 'he was at Paris, surrounded with great Men, 'and busy about their Genealogies. This good 'Soul, who was continually upon his Guard against 'Scandal, thought it necessary to extricate him 'from those Snares, that his Talents might be employed more usefully. He made use of all his Credit to compass his Aim (65), wherein he met 'with so many Obstacles, that a less constant Friend 'would have been discouraged; and I am witness 'of the Troubles and Fatigues, which he suffered 'on that Occasion; and, though he was too much 'used to be paid with Ingratitude, yet he never 'feared any such thing from him, who appeared 'so thankful, and who wanted his continual Support in a Place where he had not the good Fortune to please at first; all which may be seen in 'his Letters, which are in the Hands of Rivet, 'the Son.' A little lower, in the same Letter of Mary du Moulin, we read these Words. 'He had 'very few Friends in This Country, except among 'the Arminians, whose Confident he was from the 'very beginning; nor was his Manner of Life 'prudent enough to acquire him the Esteem of 'the Wife of this Country; the extravagant Va'nity of his Wife would have been a sufficient Ob'stacle to it.' Afterwards she enlarges on the Praises of Rivetus, and assures us, that the Memoirs, which he left, of his Life, contain a true Account of what passed in relation to these Matters of Controversy, after the National Synod of Tonneins, in 1614, where he was Secretary, and by which his Moderation may be easily known. 'I wish, says Mrs du Moulin, 'that this satirical Piece may not fall into my Father's Hands; for I should fear his infirm Age 'would be too much shocked with Blows, that can'not be received as Balm, and that have nothing 'of the Faithfulness of Friendship.' There is no doubt, but that Rivetus used all his good Offices to have Blondel in Holland; for it appears by Sarravius's Letters, that he was desired to promote That Affair, and that they shewed him the Importance of it. 'Utinam vero cogitare velletis de Blondello 'nostro, qui hic plane ad alienum scribit & vivit arbitrium. Posset istic, honorariæ fungens professionis munere, singulis annis singulos Annalistæ Tomos confodere, & alia, quæ mortalium nemo queat præstare, ad Historiæ Ecclesiasticæ purissimum 'intellectum. Idem scribo Riveto: hoc agite: nos 'adjutorem habebitis (66). —— I wish you would 'think of our Blondel, who lives here, and employs 'his Pen, at the Will of other People. With the Character of Honorary Professor, he might there, each 'Year, confute a Volume of the Annalist, and contribute to the clearing up of Ecclesiastical History. 'I write the same to Rivetus: you shall have my 'Assistance in effecting This.'

(63) She died at the Hague in February 1699.

(64) Of whom I speak in Remark [L] of the Article BORE, and more fully in Remark [F] of the Article WILHEM.

(65) That is, to procure him an Invitation to Amsterdam.

(66) Sarravius, Epist. 166. ad Salmas. pag. 170. See also the 194th Letter, which was not written by Salmasius to Sarravius, as is said, at the beginning, but by Sarravius to Salmasius.

Note, that Mr Ancillon observes, that the Author of the Free and charitable Considerations on the authentic Acts, which were printed at Groningen in the Year 1658, with a Preface of Maresius, treats Mr Blondel very ill (67): Which, though common enough, is at the bottom a scandalous thing; but the worst is, that That Author, and Blondel, do not agree in their Accounts. The same Disagreement has appeared between the Narrative of Rivetus, and That of Mr Amyraut. These Gentlemen might be excused for not thinking alike on difficult matters, and for explaining the System of Grace differently; But ought they not to agree when they relate Matters of Fact? What can one think, when it appears, that they confute each other in their Historical Narratives of what passed before their Eyes? Can one believe, that it is only a Defect of Memory? Is not a Man tempted to say, that one, or other, of them acts insincerely, or rather that there is some Artifice and Trick on both sides, and that that each relates what is for his own Advantage, and suppresses the rest? This contrariety in Matters of Fact prevails every where. We saw a famous instance of it, the last Year (a), in the Relations concerning Quietism.

(67) Ancillon, Mélange Crit. Tom. I. pag. 408.

(a) That is to the Year 1698.

BLONDEL (FRANCIS), Professor of Physic in the University of Paris, was a very learned Man; but his Knowledge was indigested [A]; and, besides, his Prejudices against Chymistry, and Antimony, filled the Faculty with Troubles and Divisions. Guy Patin, though he agreed with him concerning Antimony, yet speaks of him as a litigious Man, and a bad Writer [B]. Perhaps no one has more ingeniously or more pleasantly characterized this Physician, than the Sieur Lamy; but, as he had been persecuted by him, it must be considered whether Passion has not too great a share in the malicious Turn, which is observable in his Description of Blondel [C]. Nothing shews more powerfully how little this Doctor was loved or esteemed, than to see in what manner his Death was mentioned in the Mercure Galant, Sept. 1682 [D]. Not one obliging Expression attends This News, to lessen the Blemish, which is cast on the Memory of the Deceased. I cannot tell whether the Books, which he promised the Public, are printed [E]. I must

[A] His Knowledge was indigested.] 'Our Monsieur Blondel is a very learned Man, but 'he writes in an obscure and intricate Style.' Thus Guy Patin speaks of him in his four hundred and fifth Letter (1). He says, in another place, that Father Theophilus Raynaud's Style is worse than That of Lipsius; Redolet Lipsianum, quo tamen est multo deterior (2); and 'that no Author, at this day, 'writes so, except it be perhaps Monsieur Blondel, 'our Dean, who, tho' he is one of the most Learned Men in the World, affects this kind of barbarity, & eadem scabie laborat cum Tertulliano (3).' See some other Testimonies of his indigested Studies in the Remark [C].

(1) Pag. 200, of the third Volume of the Geneva Edition.

(2) Patin, Letter 173. pag. 65. of the 2*d Vol.*

(3) Ibid. This Letter of Patin is dated April 27, 1663. Blondel was made Dean of the Faculty of Physic, Nov. 2. 1658. Patin, Letter 224. Tom. I. pag. 483.

[B] Patin represents him as a litigious Man, and a bad Writer.] 'Our Monsieur Blondel —— is a 'litigious Man, and a Caviller, and loves to go to 'Law: he had rather go to Law, than compose and end Quarrels: he has a Law-Suit with Thevart le Camus, who is another litigious fellow; he is 'printing a Case in his Defence; there are as yet but two Sheets printed; he told me, there would 'be eight. He makes great Complaints of the First 'President, whom he took, as he says, for his 'Friend: I know not what to make of the nonsense 'of these Pettifoggers. As soon as the Case comes out, I will send it you, as also a Book, which 'he promises, de Vomitu, Stibiique venenu, in which 'he will prove, that Antimony is a Poison, since 'it causes Vomiting (4). —— This Man loves the 'Law too much; but it is great pity; for he is a 'very learned Man (5).'

(4) Patin says so in his 405*th Letter, pag.* 200, of the 2*d Vol.*

(5) Ibid. pag. 203. See also the 290*th Letter of the* 2*d Vol. pag.* 545.

[C] It must be considered, whether Passion has not too great a Share, in the malicious Turn, which is observable in his Description of Blondel.] There being many Readers, who desire to find, in a Dictionary, not only an Abridgment of Mens Lives, but also what is said of their Manners and Character; I think I shall not be blamed for transcribing some Passages out of Mr Lamy's Book. 'He is one of 'our most ancient Doctors, says he (6), speaking of 'Blondel, and passes for a learned Man with some. 'He has read much, and has a happy Memory. 'He can decide very well how a Greek Word in Hippocrates and Galen is to be read. He idolizes them in such a manner, that he will hear of nothing but what they have said, and is better pleased with old Errors, than new Truths. He knows the Names of Plants, like the Gardeners. He knows their Virtues after the Galenic manner. He measures the degrees of Cold and Heat in them, with an exactness, which surprizes every Body. He cultivates many of them very carefully. He is so averse to Chymistry, that he cannot hear a word of it without exclaiming against it. He has a very great Inclination to teach, without any Interest, and without being obliged to it. I assure you, that I have seen him take the pains to come every Day from St Denis's Gate to our Schools, for a single Scholar, who left him at last because he was not learned enough to understand him, and because the Hebrew and the Greek, of which his Discourse was full, were Languages not all, or but little, known to him. It is true, this Gentleman is very curious in Etymologies, and endeavours to collect, in his Treatises, all that he formerly read. Insomuch that, in a 'Book, which he wrote about vomiting, and Emetic Remedies, he inserted a Preface concerning 'Chymistry; and, to find the Author of it, he went 'back as far as the Times, which preceded the 'Flood, and made a Query, Whether Tubal-Cain 'was not the Inventor of it; because it is said of 'him, in the fourth Chapter of Genesis, that he 'was an Artificer in Brass and Iron.' Mr Lamy adds, that Dr Blondel accused him, in a full Auditory, of advancing an Heresy, because, as he was disputing against a Thesis, wherein the Motion of the Heavens was maintained, he objected, that the Rapidity of the Primum Mobile would be incredible, since, according to the System of Copernicus, the Equator of the Earth moves as fast as a Cannon-Ball. The Accused answered, 'That there might be an error in the Supposition, which he made; 'but that it could not be said, that there was any 'Heresy in it, since it is not a Point of Religion 'to be able to calculate well.' Dr Blondel replied, 'That it was not a matter of Physic; I granted it, 'says Mr Lamy, and, thereupon, a Doctor taking 'my part, told him, That since the Proposition was 'inserted in the Thesis, I might dispute against it. 'Well then, replied Mr Blondel, let him prove, 'that the Earth turns round; but let him prove 'it medicinally. I confess, I could not do it, and 'I was forced to stop there. An ingenious Student of Physic, who never had any Quarrel 'with Dr Blondel, nor any reason to impose any 'thing upon him, assured me, that he once said, 'in our Schools, that all those, who make use of the 'Chinchina (or Cortex Peruvianus) commit a mortal Sin, and that they make an implicit Pact with the 'Devil. And, to shew, that the Cure, which is 'obtained by That Remedy, is magical; it ought 'to be observed, said he, that it works on all sorts 'of Tempers, and that, after a certain Time, the 'Disease returns, which has been acknowledged 'by all those, who have wrote against Magicians, 'to be the true Character of a Diabolical Cure.'

(6) See the 4*th Letter prefixed to his Anatomical Discourses, printed at* Rouen 1675.

[D] His Death was mentioned in the Mercure Galant.] These are Mr de Visé's Words: 'The Faculty of Physicians of Paris enjoys, at present, a 'great Repose by the Death of Dr Blondel. He 'was the only one, who remained obstinately bent 'against the general Approbation of Antimony, the 'good Effects whereof he opposed, having so much 'troubled That learned Company for thirty Years, 'that they seemed to be always divided. As it 'is likely, that his Opinions will die with him, 'there is reason to hope, that Union and Peace 'will again be established among so many civil Persons (7).' It is certain, that, in many places, the Death of one Professor is more effectual for the Restoration of Peace, than the Mediations of an hundred Assemblies: But can any one be sure, that This great Disturber of the Public Repose will not soon be succeeded by others? These kind of People have no end; non avulso non deficit alter. Since Mankind must be unhappy in this World, these sort of Persons are necessary, They are essential Parts of Civil Society.

(7) Mercure Galant, Sept.mber, 1682. pag. 25, 26.

[E] The Books, which he promised the Public.] In April 1657, his Treatise de Pleuritide wanted but three Months of being finished (8). The Author was come to the Chapter de Purgatione, which was

(8) Patin, Letter 113 Vol. I. pag. 430.

I must not omit, that the great Care he had taken to make himself Master of Grammatical and Critical Learning, and to acquire a wild Erudition, did not hinder him from storing himself with the most profound Cunning of a malicious Persecutor [F], and from knowing how to conceal the Violence of his Temper under That Cover. He pretended to oppose Novelties, only out of Zeal for Truth, and for the Glory of God. He must not be confounded with another FRANCIS BLONDEL, a Physician, who wrote a Book on the Baths of Aix la Chapelle, entituled Thermarum Aquisgranensium & Porcetanarum Descriptio: congruorum quoque ac salubrium usuum balneationis & potationis elucidatio. It was printed at Aix, in the Year 1671, in 12mo.

was to be a general Method, and to contain fine and uncommon things de orgasmo Hipp. and upon the Explication of the Twenty second Aphorism, Sect. 1. Here is what Patin says in another place: 'The second of November, in the Morning, we 'made a new Dean, to wit, Monsieur Blondel, 'which the Antimonian Flock is very much asto-'nished at, and sorry for. He is thought to be 'the Author of the Alethophanes, a curious Piece, 'as you know, against Antimony, and the chief 'Antimonials, and principally against Guenaut, des 'Fougerais, Ramsant, Mauvilain, S. Jaques, and 'Thevart (9).' See the Remarks [B] and [C], concerning the Treatise de Vomitu.

(9) Letter 124, dated Novem. 8. 1658. Vol. I. p. 483.

[F] He acquired the Cunning of a malicious Persecutor.] If any one is not satisfied with the following Testimony, I cannot help it. 'To finish my 'first Draught, says Mr Lamy (10), I will tell you, 'that he values himself much on Integrity; that 'he seems to trample all worldly Interests under-'foot, in order to maintain our Statutes in force; 'that all he says, or does, is always grounded up-'on a very laudable Motive, and that he never does 'any one harm, but out of Charity.' Dr Blondel was one of the eight Examiners, which were appointed Mr Lamy; and he desired one of them to pretend business, and not to be at the Assembly: and then he stopped the Decision, under pretence, that they were but seven. He shewed some Remarks, larger than Mr Lamy's Book, which tended to hinder the Impression. He said, that Mr Lamy's Opinions were against Galen, against the Statutes, and against the Holy Scripture. The absent Examiner was so much desired to come on a set-day to the Assembly, that he would have been actually there, if Dr Blondel had not sent him word, that there would be no Conference. Mr Lamy went early to the Place of Conference, which was at Dr Blondel's House; he waited two Hours, and was very much tired to hear him say nothing, though never so trivial, without calling Hypocrates, Plato, and Aristotle to witness. Dr Blondel being told, that some body asked for him, he went out of his Chamber, and came in again a little while after, to tell Mr Lamy, that the Doctor, whom they stayed for, sent word, that he could not come. 'He blamed That Gentleman's Negligence very 'much, continues Mr Lamy, who failed always to 'come to the Place of Assignation, and gave me 'so much trouble. ------- See the Honesty and 'Integrity of this Gentleman, who has always 'God and the Laws in his Mouth to justify his 'Actions.' When it was thought that all these shifts were at an end, he made use of this; he presented his Remarks, 'and by an Artifice, which 'cannot be sufficiently detested, he brought some 'Propositions, separate from others, which rectified 'them, and which, in truth, could not pass 'alone.' This raised a Contest; the places of the Book were read; and, after much noise, it was resolved, that the Book should pass, provided the Faculty of Divinity approved of it. This was sufficient for Blondel to obtain his Ends; for the Diviners, who read the Book, would neither subscribe to, nor against, it: And Mr Lamy would not engage to prove to them, that his Book did not contain any Heresy. 'Upon what a Sea should I 'embark? says he: I should enrage it's Waves in 'such great numbers against me, that they would 'infallibly swallow me up, though unjustly. The 'Multitude, destitute of Judgment, would think 'they sought for the Interest of Heaven, and 'should offer a pleasing Sacrifice to God, if they 'made me the Victim of it.'

(10) Lami, Letter 4. before his Discours Anat.

BLONDEL (Francis), The King's Professor of Mathematics and Architecture, was very much esteemed for the Knowledge he had acquired in all that belongs to That Profession. He had been Governour of Lewis Henry de Lomenie Count de Brienne; and he accompanied That young Lord, who had already obtained the Reversion of the Office of Minister, and Secretary of State; I say, he accompanied him in his Travels, which began in the Month of July, 1652, and ended in the Month of November, 1655. The Latin Relation of it has been twice printed [A]. He had moreover some considerable Employments in the War, both by Sea and Land; and he managed some Negotiations with foreign Princes; insomuch that he attained to the Dignity of a Marshal de Camp, and to That of Counsellor of State. He had the Honour of being chosen to teach the Dauphin Mathematics; and it is He, who gave the Draught of the new Gates erected at Paris, since

[A] The Latin Relation of it has been twice printed.] The first Edition is of the Year 1660, and contains only Thirty nine Pages in 12mo. The second was procured two Years after by Charles Patin, and contains Ninety six Pages in 8vo; the Index Geographicus (1), which was added to it, being comprehended in it, and without reckoning many Latin Verses, which the most excellent Poets compose in praise of the young Lord, who performed These Travels. But if, on the one hand, many things were added to the second Edition; on the other, a very singular Passage was cut off from it. It is That, where the Author reports, that, in crossing the Forests of Westrogothia on Horseback, they stopped a while at Lincopen, to look upon a Column of Stone, wherein there was a Hole designed for a use, which cannot decently be expressed in Vulgar Language: but here is the Latin of it. 'Vestrogoticis silvis equitantes inducti, Lin-'copiæ, ob loci religionem non omittendæ, tan-'tillum substitimus: ibi cippus lapideus, pertusus, 'explorandæ maritorum membrositati: qui pares 'foraminâ, approbantur, impares excluduntur con-'nubiali toro: inde matrimonia aut stant aut ca-'dunt, pro modulo peculii (2).' The Preface to the second Edition informs us why This Passage was suppressed. 'Unum te moneo, huic Editioni, cui 'nihil deest, voluisse Lomenium aliquid deesse; 'quod scilicet in Westrogoticis silvis, per errabunda 'vestigia, morosæ viæ pellendis tædiis juveniliter 'luserat, sapientiorem ætatem & pudorem suppres-'sisse (3). —— Take notice of one Thing; viz. that 'Lomenius would have This Edition, which is 'very compleat, to be imperfect in one Particular, 'and that discreeter Age, and Modesty, conspired 'to suppress what he had jocosely related, to take off 'from the Tediousness of a Journey through the 'Forests of Westrogothia.' The Reason of the Suppression

(1) Made by Nicolas Sanson.

(2) Ludovici Henrici Lomenii Itinerar. pag. 182. Edit. 1660.

(3) Ibid. in Præfat. Edit. 2062.

since the Dutch War of 1672, and of all the Embellishments, which have been added to That Capital City of the Kingdom (a). He wrote also some of the Inscriptions, which are to be seen on Those new Gates; for he was as well versed in the Knowledge of good Literature, as in Geometry; as he made appear by his Comparison of Pindar and Horace. He has been Director of the Academy of Architecture, and a Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences. We have many Books of His [B]. He died, the first of February, 1686 (b).

(a) See the Description of the City of Paris, printed in 1684.

(b) De Witte, in Diario Biograph.

Suppression is a very good one, since the thing was not related, because That Custom was actually observed in That Place, but only as a witty Conceit invented during the Fatigues of a troublesome Journey. So that the Readers had been deceived, and, besides, had been presented with a very obscene Account, and which was very injurious to the Inhabitants of That Country; and consequently there was all the Reason in the World to strike out That Part of the Relation. If any one should ask me, ought it to have been left out, if the thing were true? I would freely answer, that we must distinguish between Books and Books, and between Authors and Authors. There are some Persons, whose Character requires an extraordinary Gravity, and who deserve praise for making a scruple to relate a true Story of this Nature; and there are some Books, wherein it would be no ways proper to insert such Facts: But I do not think, that a Layman, who writes the History of a Country, or the Relation of his Travels, is obliged to be silent about a public Custom, under pretence, that it is ridiculous, obscene, and of an ill example. If you lay down a contrary Maxim, you will find, that it will be necessarily concluded, and without many gradual Consequences, that the Labour of Historians is bad, and that their Profession ought to be placed among the unlawful and pernicious Arts; for it is impossible to write History, without relating infamous and abominable Actions. Let us remember, that the most rigid Critics do not blame the Historians, who mention all the Particulars of a villainous Murther, or of a horrid Treason: and that they would not blame those, who should truly say, that, in some Towns, they choose, for their Burgomasters, those, who have practised such and such brutish ways of making themselves drunk, that unless a Man has been able to bear such a Trial, he is not made a Consul, &c. They only condemn the Relations, which mention some Customs contrary to Chastity: For example, They would condemn a Writer, who should give the Particulars of the Practice of the Congress, which has been at last so wisely abolished by the Parliament of Paris; and They do not consider, that Their Criticisms fall upon the ancient Fathers, who very ingenuously represented the horrid Impurities practised among the Pagans and Heretics. However it be, I will venture to say, that, if the Column of Stone, mentioned in the Travels of Mr de Lomenie, had actually served as a Standard to judge of the Validity or Invalidity of Marriages by; it might not only have been related in the first, but also in the second Edition; and that, therefore, the only true reason of suppressing it in the second, is, because it was a meer Fable. I maintain, that, supposing such a thing was practised by public Authority, Mr Blondel had all manner of right to inform his Readers of it. Nay, I maintain, that some Inquiries might have been made about the Original of this Custom, and inserted in an History; I say, one might have inquired into the Inconveniencies, which had occasioned this manner of distinguishing Those, who were incapable of Marriage, from Those, who were fit for it; what sort of Processes there were, before, between Husbands and Wives; what Consultations were held to prevent them, and to invent this foolish Remedy; for, in short, the History of Men, of their Follies and Extravagancies, and of the infinite Varieties, which are to be found in the Laws, and Usages of Nations, are not things, of which the Readers ought to be frustrated, and from which we can reap no benefit. It will not be amiss to consider, whether what has been said of Philosophers may not be applied to Legislators: It has been said, that there is nothing so absurd, but has been maintained by some Philosophers (4). Huetius inserted, in the Relation of his Journey to Stockholm, the ridiculous manner of electing the Burgomaster of a certain place called Hardenburg. He says, that, on the Day of the Election, the Burghers place themselves round a Table, and lean their Chins, furnished with a long Beard, upon it; after which, a Louse is fairly put in the Middle of the Table, and he, into whose Beard the Louse creeps, is chosen Burgomaster. My Translation is so negligent, that I must set down the excellent Verses of The Author:

Nec Hardenbergam fere sub nocte venimus:
Ridetur nobis veteri mos ductus ab ævo.
Quippe ubi deligitur revoluto tempore Consul,
Barbati circa mensam statuuntur acernam,
Hispidaque imponunt attenti menta Quirites:
Porrigitur series barbarum desuper ingens.
Bestia, pes, mordax, sueta inter crescere sordes,
Ponitur in medio; tum cujus numine Divûm,
Barbam adiit, festo huic gratantur murmure Patres,
Atque celebratur subjecta per oppida Consul (5).

(4) Nescio quomodo nihil tam absurde dici potest, quod non dicatur ab aliquo Philosophorum. Cicero de Divinat. lib. ii. cap. 58. Nemo agrotus quicquam somniat tam infandum quod non aliquis dicat Philosophus. Varro in Eumenid. apud Nonium voce infans, pag. 56.

(5) Huetius, in Itinere Suecico, pag. 7. Edit. 1682.

I cannot tell whether the witty Conceit, which Mr Blondel inserted in his first Edition, was grounded on some Jest of the Inhabitants of the Country. It may be, that some, considering the Hole of That old Column, seriously inquired into the Reason of it (6), and that others, being used to jest upon every thing, invented what he said. It is well known, that silly Jesters will tell, in their free Conversations, I know not how many Stories concerning Complaints of Disproportion, brought before the Courts of Justice by married Persons; and that they falsly suppose, that the Lawyers, who plead such Causes, do not deny the Disproportion, and are contented to maintain reciprocally, that the fault is not to be imputed to their Client, but to the adverse Party; and that they make use of Gestures or Signs, when Words may seem too impudent. Sweden might have had such Jesters, who occasioned the Story, related by Mr Blondel.

(6) The learned Suarez, Bishop of Vaison, wrote a very learned Dissertation De foraminibus lapidum.

[B] We have many Books of His.] Notes on Savot's Architecture; A Course of Architecture, in three Volumes, in Folio; A Course of Mathematics; The Art of throwing Bombs; The History of the Roman Calendar; A new way of Fortifying Places, &c. I must not forget to observe, as to this last Work, that The Author, having presented it to the King his Master, his Majesty would not suffer it to be published, before the Fortifications, which he caused to be made in divers places, according to this new Method, were finished; it not being just, that Strangers should have the Benefit of it before That time. For the same reason, the Impression of the Art of throwing Bombs was put off till another Time, when the Author shewed the Manuscript of it to his Majesty, in 1675 (7). This Precaution has been of no use to those of Dieppe, this present Year 1694.

(7) See at well for this, as for the Body of the Article, Mr Blondel's Books, or the Extracts published by the Journalists. See the Acta Eruditor. in 1684. pag. 225. in 1685. pag. 184, 438. Nouvel. de la Rep. des Let. 1684. pag. 427, & 745. Edit. 2.

BLONDUS (Flavius), born at Forli in Italy in the Year 1388 [A], applied himself so closely to polite Learning, and with such Success, that, going to Rome at a time, when learned Men were more scarce, than They have been since, he

[A] He was born in the year 1388.] I infer this from his Epitaph, in which we read, that he lived Seventy five years, and that he died the fourth of June 1463. Vossius relates it, as taken from the Description of Rome, by George Fabricius (1). Father Labbe, in his Thesaurus Epitaphiorum (2), and Schraderus

(1) Vossius de Hist. Lat. pag. 386.

(2) See Pope Blount Censura Autor. pag. 328.

he immediatcly met with Patrons even among the Cardinals, who recommended him to Pope Eugenius IV, and procured him the Place of Secretary to that Pope (a). He was continued in this Employ by the Succeſſors of Eugenius, down to Pius II, in whoſe Pontificate he died, on the fourth of June, 1463. He compoſed ſeveral Books (b), and, among others, an Hiſtory, from the Year 400 down to 1440 (c). He does not come up to That Purity of Stile, which appeared in ſome Hiſtorians of the XVIth Century, nor does he deſerve any great Credit; for however ſincere we may ſuppoſe him to have been, we muſt conſider, that he followed deceitful Guides (d), and that he had more in view the collecting a great Number of Facts, than examining into the Truth of them [B]. It would, however, be ungrateful and unjuſt to deny, that his Labours have been of uſe to the Learned World, and to forget the Difficulties he encountred, being almoſt the Firſt, who attempted to reſtore the Roman Antiquities. Though he had the Charge of a Family, he behaved like a true Philoſopher with reſpect to Riches: he did not endeavour to acquire them, and would not leave any Portion of Inheritance to his Sons (e) [C]; for, finding them grown up, and able to take care for themſelves, he left all he had to his Daughters. They, who would know the ſeveral Judgments paſſed upon his Books, may conſult the Eponymologium of Magius (f), Hankius de Scriptoribus Rerum Romanarum (g), and the Cenſura celebriorum Autorum of Sir Thomas-Pope Blount (h). Some pretend we ought to call him Blondus Flavius, and not Flavius Blondus. Theſe two Names are of the ſame Signification.

(a) Boiſſard in Iconib. apud Pope Blount, pag. 327.

(b) See the Titles of them in Moreri.

(c) See Voſſ. de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 585.

(d) See in Pope Blount, pag. 328, the Paſſage of Giſanius.

(e) He left five, who were all Learned, according to Leand. Albert. Deſcript. Ital. pag. 478.

(f) Pag. 134.

(g) Tom. I. pag. 202. & Tom. II. pag. 343.

(h) Pag. 327, 328.

(3) See Hankius Schradcrus, in his Italian Monuments (3), relate it after the ſame manner. Others relate it as if it gave Blondus but Seventy one years of Life (4); but This, I believe, proceeds from an Error of the Preſs, copied ſeveral Times, which we ought not to take the advantage of, to ſupport what Paul Jovius has ſaid, that he died at the age of Seventy years (5). I ſhall occaſionally remark a like Miſtake, which occurs in Voſſius: The Printer has put CIↃCCCCLVIII inſtead of CIↃCCCCLXIII (6); for the queſtion is about the year, which John Gobelin points out, in ſpeaking of the Death of Flavius Blondus. Now Voſſius knew very well, that this year is the Sixty third of the XVth Century. Sandius has not obſerved this Fault (7). Magirus, in giving an account of the Epitaph, and wherever elſe he ſpeaks of the year of Blondus's Death, puts 1363, inſtead of 1463 (8).

(4) See Hankius ubi ſupra, & Tom. I. pag. 202, & Magirus in Eponymolog. pag. 135.

(5) Sandius ſeems to have done it. Not. in Voſſium de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 219.

(6) Voſſius de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 585.

(7) Sandius in Not. in Voſſium de Hiſt. Latinis.

(8) Magiri Eponymolog. pag. 135.

[B] He had more in view the collecting a great number of Facts, than examining into the Truth of Them.] The Author of the Hiſtory of what paſſed in the Times of Pius II paſſes this Judgment on him. ‘ Blondus Flavius — ab Honorio Arcadioque ‘ Cæſaribus (quo tempore inclinaſſe Romanum Im- ‘ perium memorant) uſque ad ætatem ſuam Univerſalem ſcripſit Hiſtoriam. Opus certe laborioſum ‘ & utile, verum expolitore emendatoreque dignum. ‘ Procul Blondus ab eloquentia priſca fuit, neque ſatis ‘ diligenter quæ ſcripſit examinavit; non quam ‘ vera, ſed quam multa ſcriberet, curam habuit (9). ‘ —— Extant & alia Blondi Opera non parvæ utilitatis, quamvis cautè legenda ſunt, ne falſa pro veris ‘ accipias; in pluribus enim erraſſe deprehenditur ‘ (10). —— Blondus Flavius —— wrote an Univerſal Hiſtory, from the Emperors Honorius and Arcadius (at which time the Roman Empire began ‘ to decline) down to his own Time. The work is certainly laborious, and uſeful, but wants poliſhing and correcting. Blondus does not come up to the ancient Eloquence, nor did he carefully examine what he wrote, being more ſollicitous how many, than how true, the Facts were, of which he wrote. ‘ —— There are extant other Works of Blondus of great uſe; but they muſt be read with Caution, leſt you take for true what is falſe; for he is detected of Error in many Things.’

(9) Jo. Gobelinus Comment. Pii II. lib. xi. p. 310.

(10) Idem ibidem.

[C] He did not endeavour to enrich himſelf, nor would leave his Son any portion of his Inheritance.] Let the Author, whom I quote in the preceding Remark, go on. ‘ Mortuus & Romæ pauper, ut ‘ Philoſophum decuit; familiam bene inſtitutum reliquit utriuſque ſexus. Patrimonium quod habuit ‘ tenue dotium cauſa inter Fœminas diviſit; Maſculis ‘ præter doctrinam bonoſque mores nihil reliquit. ‘ Id morienti ſat fuit ejus ætatis filios dimiſiſſe, qui ‘ ſibi ipſis conſulere poſſent (11). —— He died at Rome poor, as became a Philoſopher; He left a well regulated Family both of Sons and Daughters; The ſmall Patrimony, he had, he divided among the Females, leaving the Males nothing but Learning and Good Manners. It was ſatisfaction enough to him upon his Death-bed, that his Sons were of an Age capable of providing for themſelves.’

(11) Idem ibidem.

BOCCACE (JOHN), one of the moſt polite and learned Writers of his Age, was born at Certaldo [A] in Tuſcany, in the Year 1313. His Father, though a poor Peaſant, burthened with a Family, deſigned him for ſomething above his Birth: This he reſolved upon, after having obſerved, that the Child's Phyſiognomy and Inclinations promiſed much. He deſigned him for Trade, and put him to a Florentine Merchant, who carried him to Paris. Boccace ſerved this Maſter ſix Years, and was well beloved by him; for he underſtood keeping Accompts [B]; but [A] He was born at Certaldo.] Betuſſi, who is here my Author, affirms it (1); ſeveral others ſay the ſame; but I do not know how to reconcile This with a Paſſage of Boccace. It is That, where he mentions the River, which runs near the Caſtle of Certaldo (2). ‘ I willingly celebrate, ſays he (3), ‘ the Memory of That Caſtle, which was the place ‘ of the Nativity, and Abode, of my Anceſtors, be- ‘ fore the City of Florence received them into the ‘ Number of it's Citizens.’ Would he ſpeak thus, if he was born there? Betuſſi could not be ignorant of This Paſſage; for he tranſlated, into Italian, the Treatiſe from whence I have taken it. Perhaps, if he had attended to it, he would not have ſaid, that the City of Florence gave Boccace the freedom of a Citizen. Quello per le ſue degne virtù fu fatto cittadino Fiorentino (4). Would not this Gift have been ſuperfluous to a Man, whoſe Anceſtors were Florentines? Sabellicus pretends, that Boccace was of Florence, and of the Family of Certaldo; Florentinus Certaldæ domo (5). Let not theſe Difficulties trouble you, ſince Boccace affirms, in the Epitaph, which he compoſed for himſelf, and which is on his Tomb, that he was born at Certaldo.

(1) Giuſeppe Betuſſi, in the Life of Boccace.

(2) It is called Elſa.

(3) Boccace, in the Treatiſe of Rivers, at the Word Elſa.

(4) Betuſſi ib.

(5) Sabellicus lib. ix. apud Betuſſi, ibid.

[B] Boccace —— was well beloved by his Maſter, for he underſtood keeping Accompts.] This Love did not continue. Boccace being more fit to be a Wit, than a Bookkeeper, was diſguſted at Trade, and neglected his Maſter's Buſineſs, who, being diſpleaſed with his Conduct, ſent him back into his Country. Egli odiando tale eſſercitio, & poco curando i negotii del Padrone, da lui fu licenciato, & rimandata alla patria (6). I wonder more at this Merchant's patience, than at his ſending him away: I ſay, I wonder, that he could keep a Youth ſix Years, who aſpired only to Poetry; an Inclina-

(6) Benvenuto da Imola apud Betuſſi, in vita Boccacii.

but he grew weary of this Employment; and, as he shewed an aptneſs for Study, They made him change his Occupation, and learn the Canon-Law, as being a Calling, which might enrich him. He loſt almoſt as much time in this ſecond Employ, as in the firſt; it did not pleaſe him, and he thought of nothing but Poetry; his Father's Orders, the Reproofs, and Exhortations, of his Friends, did not check his natural Inclination to verſify, and philoſophize [C]. It was in vain to tell him, that it was not the way to make his Fortune, and that he would deceive the Hopes, which the good Man, his Father, had conceived, to find himſelf one Day at eaſe by the Help of ſuch a Son: Notwithſtanding all this, he continued to have an Averſion to the Lawyer's Trade. However, he could not free himſelf from this unpleaſant Study, 'till after his Father's Death; he was forced to put a Reſtraint upon himſelf till That Time: But, as ſoon as he attained to Independency, he totally renounced his former Occupations, and gave himſelf over to the Reading of the Poets. He put himſelf under the Diſcipline of Petrarch; he ſought tion much leſs agreeable to This Maſter's Intereſt, than the reading of the Compleat Merchant, and the knowledge of a Banker's Trade.

Cent francs au denier cinq, combien ſont-ils? vingt livres.

\- - - - - - - - - - - -

Cinq & quatre ſont neuf, otez deux, reſte ſept. (7).

(7) Boileau, Sat. viii. ver. 184, 214.

Add an hundred Francs to five Deniers, what is the Sum Total? Twenty Livres. —— Five and Four make nine; take away Two; there remain Seven.

Theſe are the Sciences, with which young Boccace ought to have been in love, if he would have continued in his Maſter's Favour. But, on the other ſide, it was a good ſign of his becoming a Poet, to ſee him have an averſion to ſuch Calculations.

Romani pueri longis rationibus aſſem
Diſcunt in partes centum diducere. Dicat
Filius Albini, ſi de quincunce remota eſt
Uncia, quid ſuperat? poteras dixiſſe, Triens: heus,
Rem poteris ſervare tuam: redit uncia: quid fit?
Semis. Ad hæc animos ærugo & cura peculi
Cùm ſemel imbuerit, ſperamus carmina fingi
Poſſe linenda cedro, & levi ſervanda cupreſſo (8)?

(8) Horat. de Art. Poet. ver. 325.

Our Roman Youth is bred another way,
And taught no Arts but Thoſe of Uſury;
And the glad Father glories in his Child,
When he can ſubdivide a Fraction.
Can Souls, who by their Parents, from their Birth,
Have been devoted thus to ruſt and gain,
Be capable of high and generous Thoughts?
Can Verſes, writ by ſuch an Author, live?

Lord ROSCOMMON.

(C) His Father's Orders — did not check his natural Inclination to verſify.] Conſult him in the fifteenth Book of the Genealogy of the Gods: 'Faſtidiebat hæc animus, ſays he (9), adeò ut in 'neutrum horum officiorum, aut præceptoris doctrina aut genitoris autoritate, qua novis mandatis 'angebar continuè, aut amicorum precibus ſeu objurgationibus inclinari poſſet, in tantum illum 'poëtica trahebat affectio. —— I diſliked them ſo much, that neither the Precepts of a Teacher, the Authority of an urgent Father, nor the Intreaties or Reproofs of Friends, could incline me to either of theſe Employs; ſo fond was I of Poetry.' What he adds concerning the Inclination, which he had from his childhood, to Fictions, is curious: 'Nec 'ex novo ſumpto conſilio in poëſim animus totis 'tendebat pedibus: quinimò à teneriſſima diſpoſi'tione ibat impulſus, nam ſatis memor ſum, nondum 'ad ſeptimum ætatis annum deveneram, nec dum 'fictiones videram, nondum doctores aliquos adive'ram, vix prima literarum elementa cognoveram, '& ecce ipſa impellente natura fingendi deſiderium 'affuit, & ſi nullius eſſent momenti, tamen aliquas 'fictiunculas edidi, non enim ſuppetebant tenellæ 'ætatis officio tanti vires ingenii (10). —— Nor 'was it a new Inclination, that turned my Thoughts 'wholly to Poetry, but a Diſpoſition of long ſtanding; 'for I very well remember, that, before ſeven Years 'of Age, when as yet I had ſeen no Fictions, had 'applied to no Maſters, and ſcarce knew my A, B, C, 'I had a Natural Talent for Fiction, and produced 'ſome trifling Tales, my tender Age not being arri'ved to ſuch a ſtrength of Genius.' He obſerves, that he ſoon acquired the Reputation of a Poet, and even before he knew the Rules of the Art: and he complains of his Father, who, thinking of nothing but what is profitable, would not ſuffer him to apply himſelf to That Study. 'He is the 'cauſe ſays he, that I am neither a Merchant 'nor a Canoniſt, as he wiſhed me to be; and that 'I have loſt the Advantage of ſignalizing my ſelf 'in Poetry.' 'Mirabile dictu, cùm nondum noviſſem, quibus ſeu quòt pedibus carmen incederet, 'me etiam prò viribus renitente, quod nondùm ſum, 'poëta ferè à notis omnibus vocatus fui: nec dubito dum ætas in hoc aptior erat, ſi æquo genitor 'tuliſſet animo, quin inter celebres poëtas unus 'evaſiſſem: verùm dum in lucroſas artes primò, 'inde in lucroſam facultatem ingenium flectere 'conarer meum, factum eſt, ut nec negociator ſim, 'nec evaderem Canoniſta, & perderem poëtam eſſe 'conſpicuum (11).' It is eaſy to imagine the old Man's Trouble: he was not rich, and he found, that he had a Son capable of advancing himſelf; but, inſtead of finding in him any Inclination for gainful Employments, he ſaw his Mind wholly bent upon Philoſophy and Poetry: which are things generally contrary to the Acquiſition of Riches. 'Piacendogli ſommamente legere e intendere i buoni 'poeti, a quali era molto inchinato, e in tutte le 'ſue attioni la vita philoſophica imitando. Nondimeno queſto ſuo propoſito gli era non impedito, 'ma quaſi vietato dal padre, il quale ſi perche era 'male agiato, come ancho perche giudicava gli ſtudi 'della humanità e Philoſophia congiunti con la poeſia 'potergli dare poco utili, deſiderava e voleva che 'ſi metteſſe ad altra profeſſione, per lo mezzo della 'quale poteſſe ſoſtentar ſe e dare a jutto a lui (12).' This puts me in mind of a Paſſage of Mr Boileau.

(9) Boccacius, de Genealog. Deorum, lib. xv. apud Papyr. Maſſonem, Elog. Tom. II. pag. 188.

(10) Id. ibid.

(11) Id ibid. pag. 189.

(12) Retuſſi, vita di Boccaccio.

Fils, frere, oncle, couſin, beau frere de Greffier,
Pouvant charger mon bras d'une utile liaſſe,
J'allay loin du Palais errer ſur le Parnaſſe.
La Famille en pâlit, & vit en fremiſſant
Dans la poudre du Greffe un Poëte naiſſant.
On vid avec horreur une Muſe effrenée
Dormir chez un Greffier la graſſe matinée.
Deſlors à la richeſſe il ſalut renoncer (13).

(13) Boileau Epitre v. ver. 112.

My Father, Brother, Uncle, Regiſters,
My Couſin, Brother-in-law, with equal Cares,
Held the ſame Poſt, and I the ſame with Theirs.
Soon weary of the muſty Rolls, I fled
The Court, and turned to brighter Things my Head.
I ſought the Nymphs, that haunt the Aonian Floods,
And early ſtray'd in the Parnaſſian Woods.
The Family beheld, with rage and Scorn,
A Poet in the duſty Office born.
To them the lawleſs Muſe with horrour ſnor'd
On Scrolls, o'er which with ſo much gain they por'd.

OZELL.

fought every where for other Masters, and, not having a sufficient Revenue to maintain himself, he sold his Patrimony, and exhausted it in such a Manner, that he stood in need of the Charity of others [D]. He caused Homer to be translated into Latin for his own use, and procured a Professorship at Florence for a Grecian, to explain That Poet [E]. He did not addict himself so much to Poetry, as to neglect other Studies: He undertook also to read the Bible; but, being an old Man, he only run it over, and thought, that, GOD having called him to the Culture of Poetry, he ought to dwell on That [F]. The Republic of Florence honoured him with the Freedom of a Citizen(a), and employed him in public Affairs, and particularly to negotiate the Return of Petrarch. They sent him to him; but Petrarch not only did not return to Florence, but made Boccace also resolve to leave That Place, considering the Factions, which divided it. I believe it was with no great Difficulty he inspired him with This Design; for Boccace was a Man, who loved Quiet, and would not join with any Faction. 'A Person, who is thus inclined, acts but a mean part in a divided City. Having left Florence, he rambled over

(a) See the Remark [A].

[D] He sought every where for other Masters --- and exhausted his Patrimony in such a manner, that he stood in need of the Charity of others.] He went into Sicily, to hear the Lectures of a Calabrian (14), who had the Reputation of being very learned in the Greek Language (15). He praises very much Andalus de Nigro, a Native of Genoa, who had taught him Astronomy (16). We shall see, hereafter, that he was acquainted with a learned Man of Thessalonica: the following Words shew that he was reduced very low; 'Ma non posendo il povero poeta col debile patrimonio, che quasi gia 'se n'era andato lungamente piu negli studi continuare, come disperato se ne stava quasi per pigliare novo partito & senza dubbio sarebbe stato 'a cio constretto dalla necessita: ma il divino Petrarcha, che molto l'amava, incominciò sovenirlo 'in diverse cose, ajutandolo secondo i bisogni di 'denari, e provedendogli di libri, & altre necessarie 'cose: onde sempre egli lo chiamò padre e bone-'fattor suo (17). This informs us, that, if Petrarch had not supplied poor Boccace with Money and Books, and such like Assistances, the latter must have been obliged to give over his Studies, by reason of his Poverty, and to take some other course. Note, that Petrarch bequeathed him, by his Will, fifty Florins for a Winter-Suit, that he might follow his Studies commodiously (18).

(14) It was without doubt the Monk Barlaam.

(15) Betussi, ib.

(16) Boccacius, de Geneal. Deor. lib. xv. cap. 6. See Papyrius Masso, Elog. Tom. II. pag. 195.

(17) Betussi, ib.

(18) Don Eugenio Gamurrini, Abbate Camaldolese, Istoria genealogi ca delle famiglie nobili Toscane e Umbre, in the Journal des Sçavans, Febr. 7. 1678, pag. 58, of the Dutch Edition.

[E] He procured a Professorship for a Grecian.] This Man was of Thessalonica, and his Name was Leontius Pylatus. Let us see what Boccace says of him: 'Ego, Leontium Pylatum à Venetiis occi-'duam Babylonem quærentem à longa peregrina-'tione meis flexi consiliis, in patria tenui, illum in 'propriam domum suscepi, & diu hospitem habui: '& maximo labore meo curavi ut inter doctores 'Florentini studii susciperetur, ei ex publico mer-'cede apposita. Fui equidem ipse insuper, qui 'primus meis sumptibus Homeri libros & alios quos-'dam Græcos in Hetruriam revocavi, ex qua mul-'tis antè sæculis abierant non redituri. Nec in 'Hetruriam tantùm, sed in patriam deduxi. Ipse 'ego fui qui primus ex Latinis à Leontio Pylato 'in privato Iliadem audivi. Ipse insuper fui, qui 'ut legerentur publicè libri Homeri operatus sum: '& esto non satis plenè perceperim, percepi tamen 'quantum potui: nec dubium si permansisset homo 'ille vagus diutiùs penes nos, quin pleniùs per-'cepissem, sed quantulumcumque ex multis didice-'rim, nonnullos tamen præceptoris demonstratione 'crebra integrè intellexi, eosque prout oportunum 'visum est, huic operi miscui (19). —— My Advice prevailed upon Leontius Pylatus, who was going from Venice to Rome, to lay aside the thoughts of so long a Journey; I kept him at home, I took him into my own house, and entertained him a long time: afterwards I procured him a Professorship at Florence. It was owing to me, that the Books of Homer, and other Greek Authors, were brought back into Hetruria, which they had left, never to return. I was the first, among the Latins, who privately heard the Iliad of Homer from the mouth of Leontius Pylatus: I was besides, the Person who procured that Homer's Books should be publickly read; and, granting that I did not thoroughly understand him, I understood as much as was in my Power: and I doubt not but I should have had a fuller Knowledge of him, if that rambling Fellow had staid longer among us. However some Things I had a clear conception of, and inserted them in This Work, as Opportunity offered.' He quotes him in several places of the Genealogy of the Gods; not that This Pylatus had written any Books; but Boccace had heard him say many things, which he preserved in his Collections. We shall see, in the following Words, part of This Greek Doctor's Character. It may easily be concluded from them, that he was a Pedant: 'Leontium Pylatum Thessalonicensem virum, &, 'ut ipse asserit, Barlaæ auditorem, persæpè deduco; 'specta horridus homo est, turpi facie, barba prolixa, & capillitio nigro, & meditatione occupatus 'assidua, moribus incultus, nec satis urbanus homo, 'verùm, uti experientia notum fecit, literarum 'Græcarum doctissimus, & quodammodo Græcarum 'historiarum atque fabularum artiumque inexhaustum, 'esto Latinarum non satis adhuc instructus sit. Hujus 'ego nullum vidi opus, sanè quicquid ex eo recito 'ab eo viva voce referente percepi. Nam eum legentem Homerum, & mecum singulari amicitia 'conversantem ferè tribus annis audivi, nec in-'finitis ab eo recitatis, urgente etiam alia cura ani-'mum, acrior sufficisset memoria, nisi in schedulis 'commendassem. (20). —— I often consult Leontius 'Pylatus of Thessalonica, who was, as he himself tells 'me, an Auditor of the Monk Barlaam: He is of 'an hideous Aspect, has a long Beard, black Hair, 'and ever buried in Thought; Unpolite, but very 'learned in the Greek Tongue, as Experience 'shews: I allow, indeed, he has, as yet, very little 'knowledge of the Latin. This Man never wrote 'any Thing, and whatever I recite from him passed in 'Discourse between us. For I heard him read 'Homer, and conversed freely with him almost 'three Years; nor could I have remembered the 'many things, I have heard from him, my mind 'being taken up with other cares likewise, had I 'not committed them to Writing.

(19) Boccatius, de Geneal. Deor. lib. xv. cap. vii. apud Papyrium Massonem, Elog. Tom. II. pag. 191, 192.

(20) Boccacius, ibid. cap. vi. apud eund. pag. 193.

[F] He undertook also to read the Bible, but, being an old Man, he only run it over.] Let us set down a Passage of Betussi. 'Diede quell' opra 'maggiore che per lui si potesse alla poesia, & an-'cho si pose a studiare nelle sacre lettere; ma 'essendo hoggimai quasi vecchio, si come testi-'monia egli stesso nell' ultimo d'i presenti libri (21) 'dicendo. Cætera facultatum studia, & si placerent, quoniam usus sic impellerent, minime secuturum. Vidi tamen sacra volumina a quibus, quoniam annosa est ætas; & tenuitas ingenii disuasere, desitii, turpissimum ratus senem, ut ita loquar, elementarium novo inchoare studia, & cunctos indecentissimum esse id attentasse, quod minime arbitreris perficere posse. Così non molto in questo studi si 'fermo, anzi lasciandogli da parte attese alla sua 'cara poesia: alla quale da i cieli era chiamato, si 'come continuando segue dicendo. Et ideo cum existimem Dei beneplacito me in hac vocatione vocatum, in eadem consistere mens est (22) —— He gives this 'as his reason, at the end of the second Book. I 'followed not other Studies, how pleasing soever, 'because the bent of my Inclination lay another way. 'Indeed I just looked into the sacred Volumes, but 'desisted, on account of my Age, and want of 'Talents, thinking it shameful for an old Man to 'set about new Studies, and unbecoming all 'Persons to attempt what they cannot go through 'with.

(21) Betussi, ubi supra.

(22) Vis. de Geneal. Deor.

over several Places of Italy, and stopped at last at the Court of Naples, where King Robert gave him a very good Reception. He fell greatly in love with That Prince's Natural Daughter (b), which made him stay a considerable time at Naples. He made also a long Abode in Sicily, where he had a good share in Queen Joan's Favour. He returned to Florence, when the Troubles were somewhat appeased, but could not like the Course of Life, which he must have led there. For which reason he retired to Certaldo, where, far from the Noise of the World, he spent his Time in Study, according to his Fancy. He always loved Liberty; which was the Reason, why he would never put himself into the Service of any great Lord, though he was desired to do it by many. His applying himself too much to Study, occasioned an illness in his Stomach, of which he died at Certaldo, in the Year 1375. He was buried there in St James's and St Philip's Church. He was of an amorous Complection, and yet he would never marry, and left but one natural Child (c) [G]. He composed many Books [H], some learned and serious, and others of Tales and Gallantry. It is chiefly by the latter, that he immortalized himself [I]. He

(b) See the Remark [N], of the Article NAPLES, [JOAN, Queen of].

(c) Taken from his Life, written by Giuseppe Betussi da Bassano. It is prefixed to the Italian Translation of Boccace's Book De genealogia Deorum, written by the same Betussi.

'with. Thus he continued attached to his favourite 'Poetry, as he goes on to tell us; esteeming there 'fore, that God had called me to this Study, I de- 'termine to pursue it.' This is observable. He believed, that, even in his old Age, he ought to apply himself chiefly to Poetry, and that it was the Talent, which God had intrusted him with, and the Ministry, to which Heaven had called him. He followed the Maxim, quam quisque noverit artem, in hac se exerceat, every one should exercise the Trade he understands.

[G] He was of an amorous Complection, and yet he would never marry] Let us quote Betussi again. 'Fu medesimamente molto inchinato all' amore & 'libidinoso, & non poco gli piacquero le donne, 'come che di loro in molti luoghi dell' opere sue 'ne dicesse quel peggio che dire si potesse: tutta- 'via di alquante nelle scritture sue sotto finto nome 'ne fa honorato ricordo —— non lascio di se heredi 'legittimi: perche non hebbe mai moglie, solamente 'di lui rimase un figlivolo naturale sanza piu (23). '—— He was likewise very amorous, and lustful, 'as appears from the many wanton Passages in his 'Works —— He left no legitimate Heirs, having ne- 'ver been married, and but one Natural Son.

(23) Betussi, ubi supra.

[H] He composed many Books.] An Abridgement of the Roman History from Romulus till the Year of Rome 724, with a Parallel of the seven Kings of Rome, and of the Emperors, till Nero, inclusive. This Work was printed at Cologne, in the Year 1534, in 8vo. The History of illustrious Women, printed at Bern, in the Year 1539, in Folio. The Genealogy of the Gods, with a Treatise of Mountains, Seas, Rivers, Lakes, &c. This work was printed at Basil, in the Year 1532, in Folio, with the Notes of James Micyllus. De casibus virorum illustrium: This Work began with Adam, and ended with John King of France, taken by the English in the Year 1356. It was printed at Paris, in Folio, by the care of John Thierri, of Beauvais: I do not know in what Year, and consequently I cannot tell whether This Edition be later than That of Ausbourg, 1544. This Book was translated into Italian, Spanish, English, and French, at Paris, 1578, in 8vo: the name of the Translator is Claudius Vitart. I wonder Vossius spoke of most of these Works, as if they were only in Manuscript (24). As for the Books, which are ascribed to Boccace, de victoriis Sigismundi Imperatoris in Turchas; de hæresibus Bosmorum; de capta Constantinopoli; de Tartarorum victoria in Turchas (25); they seem to me chimerical; and some of them certainly are so. Let us say something of Boccace's Italian Compositions. He wrote il Philocolo, ea Fiammetta, l'Ameto, il Labirinto d'amore, la vita di Dante (26), il Decamerone, of which I am going to speak, &c. All these Books, and most of the Latin, have been translated into French long since (27). As for his Italian Verses, I shall only say, that he wrote many, and that he did not shew a great Talent in them. Per dire il vero, lo stile volgare in verso non gli fu troppo amico (28). Nevertheless, he was one of the Triumvirs, or three Princes of the Poets of That Age; it is true, he had only the last Rank given him in the Poetical Triumvirate; the first was given to Dante, and the second to Petrarch (29). Note, that the Theseide of Boccace was a Poem of a new Invention, which is much to his Credit: for none but great Wits can trace out new ways, unknown to others. Scrisse la Theseide opra in ottava rima, nella cui si contengono i fatti di Theseo, & fu il primo inventore di tale tessura perciochè per inanzi non mi ricordo io havir trovato ch' altri la usasse (30). Let us not forget, that he acknowledged his inferiority: for having seen Petrarch's Sonnets, and Songs, he resolved to throw his Poems into the Fire. Petrarch writ a Letter to him to dissuade him from that design (31). Betussi stops there; but, he should have said also, that Boccace actually burnt his Italian Verses, after having seen that they came not near those of Petrarch. See the Author that I quote (32).

(24) Vossius de Hist. Lat. p. 527.

(25) Pocciantius de Scrip. Florentinis, pag. 92. Betussi in vita Boccacii. See also Gesner in Biblioth. fol. 390.

(26) It was printed at Rome, in 1504, in 16mo, and at Florence 1576, in 8vo.

(27) See the Bibliotheque Francoise of Du Verdier vau-Privas, at the word John Boccace.

(28) Betussi, ubi supra.

(29) Id. ibid.

(30) Id. ibid.

(31) Id. ibid.

(32) Petrarcha Epist. ad Boccacium lib. v. rerum senilium apud Papyr. Massonem, Elog. Tom II. p. 192.

[I] It is chiefly by the latter, that he immortalized himself.] This ought especially to be understood of the Decameron, which is a Collection of an Hundred Novels, wherein there are very diverting Adventures of Love, and many roguish Tricks played to Husbands. That Work has been translated into several Languages, and re-printed a thousand times. It is by that Book that many People, who would have been ignorant of the other Writings of This Author, know that Boccace was an Ornament of his Age, a fine Genius, an excellent Author, a Virtuose, &c. Paul Jovius makes this Remark: 'Obsolescunt & ægrè quidem vitæ spiritum retinent 'libri de Genealogia Deorum, varietateque Fortunæ, '& de fontibus accuratè potius quàm feliciter elabo- 'rati, quando jam illæ decem dierum fabulæ, Mile- 'siarum imitatione in gratiam oblectandi ocii, ad- 'mirabili jucunditate compositæ, in omnium natio- 'num linguas adoptentur, & sine ulla suspicione in- 'teritus, applaudente populo, cunctorum operum 'gratiam antecedant (33). —— His books on the Ge- 'nealogy of the Gods, and the variety of Fortune, and 'on Fountains, composed more accurately than happily, 'grow obsolete, and hardly live, while his ten Days 'Tales, writ for Diversion, in imitation of the Mi- 'lesian Tales, with admirable pleasantry, are adopted 'into all Languages, and without any objection, and 'with the applause of the World, are received more 'favourably than any other of his Works.' There are some Protestants, to whom the Decameron is not disagreeable; they find in it Railleries against the Monks, and the Popish Devotions. In eo fabulis & historiis centum papale regnum, confessionem auricularem, Sanctos, lipsanolatriam, purgatorium &c. acerrime perstrinxit, perversitatis Papæ non ignarus (34). Doubtless this is the reason why some Catholic Authors call him impious: 'Boccacius 'Hetruscorum Cicero, fabulator jucundus, & elo- 'quens sermone patrio, sed Latini parum peritus, 'Theogoniæ non admodum accuratus, & Mytholo- 'giæ non satis idoneus enarrator, in omnibus ob- 'scœnus, IMPIUS, & versificator ineptissimus (35). '—— Boccace, the Cicero of Tuscany, a pleasant 'story Teller, and eloquent in his own Language, 'but not well skilled in the Latin, not very accu- 'rate in his Theogony, nor a nice explainer of My 'thology, every where obscene, IMPIOUS, and a 'paltry versifier.' You see he is also accounted obscene. The Gentlemen of Port-Royal reproach him with the same thing. It ought to be observed, say they (36). 'That there are some Passages in 'That Author, which shew plainly, that he was 'less scrupulous of breaking the Rules of Purity 'of (33) Paulus Jovius, Elog. cap. 6. pag. 23.

(34) Bernegger. Idol. Lafaret. pag. 128, & seq. apud Tho. Pope Blount, Censura Author. p. 308.

(35) Balthasar Bonifacius, Hist. Ludicræ, lib. xv. cap. 3. pag. 432, 433.

(36) Baillet, Jugem. des Savans, n. 206. des Critiques Grammairiens. He quotes the Preface to the Italian Grammar of the Gentlemen of Port Royal.

He is taxed with Plagiarism [K]. I shall make a Remark on the Care, which the Inquisitors of Manners, which we have received from GOD himself, than of offending in the least against those, concerning the Purity of Language, which proceed only from Caprice, or the Will of Men.' Let us see what Mr Bullart observes, concerning That Book. 'The most considerable of his Compositions, says he (37), is the Decameron; which, having been received with applause by all Italy, was likewise so favourably entertained by Foreign Nations, that each defired to have it in their own Language; and it was the more eagerly sought after, because endeavours were used to suppress it; and it was censured, for speaking too freely and satirically against the Monks.' Boccace published it in the Year One thousand three hundred forty eight, at a time when the City of Florence was laid waste, and made almost desert, by a raging Pestilence. It may be reckoned among the finest of Pieces, which are writ for Amusement, and have some mixture of the profitable and delightful. Petrarch, having read it over, found so many beauties in it, that he took the pains to translate a Piece of that fine Work into Latin for his own diversion, which was the incredible Patience of Griselide towards her Husband the Marquis of Saluces.' Petrarch dedicated his Latin Translation of the Story of Griselide to Boccace, and told him, that, in running over the Decameron, he had observed, that the Author had been obliged to reprove certain Satirists, who could do nothing but find fault with what they would not, or could not do: 'Animadverti alicubi librum ipsum canum dentibus lacessitum, tuo tamen baculo egregiè, tuaque voce defensum. Nec miratus sum: nam & vires ingenii tui novi, & scio expertus esse hominum genus, & insolens & ignavum, qui quicquid ipsi vel nolunt, vel nesciunt, vel non possunt, in aliis reprehendunt, ad hoc unum docti & arguti. Sed elingues ad reliqua (38). —— I observed somewhere, that the book itself has been attacked by Dogs open-mouthed, but excellently defended by your Voice and Cudgel. I do not wonder at it, for I know the strength of your Genius, and know likewise by experience, that there are a sort of Men, that are both insolent and lazy, who blame, in others, whatever they themselves either know not, or will not or cannot, do. In this single thing they are learned, and sharp; for any thing else, they have not a word to say.' He adds, that he excuses the lascivious Passages on account of the Writer's Age, the nature of the Subject, and the Character of the Persons, who would read such a Work: 'Si quid lasciviæ liberioris occurreret, excusabat ætas tunc tua dum id scriberes, filius, idioma, ipsa quoque rerum levitas, & eorum qui lecturi talia videbantur: refert enim largiter quibus scribas, morumque varietate stili varietas excusatur (39). —— If any thing occurred a little too loose, your age at the time of writing of it, the Stile, the Idiom, as also the levity of the subject itself, and of those who were likely to read it, serves to excuse it: for it is a great matter to whom you write, and variety of stile is excused by variety of manners.' Nothing can be more equitable than this; Whoever pretends to judge of a Book, ought to go by this Rule; to consider the Author's Age and Profession, the nature of the Subject, and for what sort of Persons he writes; for That, which would be intolerable in a Dogmatical Work, is not so in a Work designed for Diversion. However, the obscenities of the Decameron did not hinder the wisest and most virtuous Princess of France from ordering it to be translated into French; for it was in obedience to the most Illustrious Margaret de Valois, Queen of Navarre, that Antony le Maçon (40) translated it into That Language. Du Verdier Vau Privas takes notice of five Editions of That Translation (41), without mentioning either That which I make use of, which is That of Paris by Martin le Jeune 1559, in 8vo, or That of Paris by Oliver de Harsy 1569. He observes that the same Book had been translated long before by one Laurens. Note, that there is an Italian Edition of the Decameron (42), to which Francis Sansovin prefixed a Preface, and the Author's Life. A new French Translation of This Work, with Cuts, was published at Amsterdam in the Year 1697.

(37) Bullart, Academ. des Scien. Tom. I. p. 263.

(38) Petrarcha apud Papyr. Massonem, Elog. Tom. II. p. 458, 399.

(39) Id. ibid.

(40) He was a Native of Dauphiné, Treasurer of the Wars, and Secretary to the Queen of Navarre, the only Sister of Francis I.

(41) Du Verdier Biblioth. Françoise, pag. 72.

(42) At Venice 1549, in 4to.

The Translator, owns, in the Preface, that he has unfolded the Graces of the Original, that he has dressed them according to our fashion, that he has abridged several things, and avoided Repetitions; 'That he has often altered not only whole Periods, but also the Plan of the Work; that he has only taken the essential part of the Novel, and that, to avoid the Preambles prefixed to each Story, he thought fit not to name the Interlocutors, and to omit the distinction of the Days; that, when he met with any licentious Passages, he took a particular care to wrap up things in such a manner, that the Fair Sex might laugh without blushing.' He hopes there will be no cause to complain, that he has spoiled any thing by too scrupulous a Circumspection. But many people are persuaded, that every one, who is able to read the Decameron in Italian, will dislike a Translation so different from the Original, and will rather chuse to make use of the old ones, than of this; and Translators, when, instead of translating literally, they take the liberty to cut off, and alter, whatever they please, meet with as heavy censures from these People, as your good Topers daily bestow on a Vintner, who seldom has any thing in his Cellar but mixtures, wherein Art destroys Nature.

Perhaps no Body has exclaimed more against Boccace than Vannozzi. He pretends, that reading the Decameron has made so many Courtezans, that a Man would be astonished, if he knew the number of them. 'Al fuoco, al fuoco, cries he (43), fi fatti volumi, spengasi il seme una volta di cosi maligna Zizania. Chi potesse contare quante puttane ha fatto il Decameron del Boccacio, rimarebbe stupido, & senza senso; Che cose dicano di lui duo Florentini savi, & letterati amendue, leggasi in due lettere, una di Francesco Petrarcha tra le lattine, & una di Bartolomeo Cavalcanti tra le vulgari, & intenderallo. Ma che occorre cercar piu oltre di quello, che n'habbia giudicato la santa inquisitione dannandolo? Non si può negare, che l'opera del Decameron, non sia stata di notabil giovamento alla lingua Tosca, della quale egli è veramente Maestro; ma per conto delle materie, & delle cose narrata da esso, in quel suo novelliere, non si può dire, quanto, & quale sia stato, & perseveri tuttavia, il danno, che se ne sente. —— To the fire, to the fire, with such foolish books; destroy at once the seeds of these malignant Tares. If a Man could but tell how many Whores Boccace's Decameron has made, he would be amazed and stupified. What two Florentines, both of them wise and learned Men, say of him, may be seen in two Letters, one from Francis Petrarch in Latin, the other from Bartholomew Cavalcante in Italian: but what need we look any further? Has not the holy Inquisition condemned it? It cannot be denied, that the Decameron contains notable helps to the Tuscan Language, of which he is truly a Master: but, as for the matter contained in the Novels there related, no body can tell what damage it has done, and daily does, without being observed.' There are, in this Letter of Vannozzi, several other Testimonies of his Zeal against Books of Love-Intrigues.

(43) Bonifacio Vannozzi delle Lettre Miscellanee, Vol. I. pag. 580.

[K] He is taxed with Plagiarism.] It is said (44), that his Book, de genealogia Deorum, was taken from a piece of the same kind done by the Civilian Paul of Perugia, Library-keeper to King Robert (45). But, since he confesses, that he took many things out of it, and particularly those he put out under the Name of Theodontius (46), it ought not to be imputed to him as a Crime. He is not so excusable as to what he has taken out of another Author, and out of Vibius Sequester's Book de Nominibus Fluminum, Fontium, Lacuum, Nemorum, Paludum, & Gentium (47): for he never quotes him. 'Boccacius in opere de genealogia Deorum Fulgentii mythologiam, etiam cum non citat, graviter exscripsit, adeò ut ex Boccacio in non paucis emendari Fulgentius potuerit (48). —— Boccace, in his Book on the Genealogy of the Gods, has grossly copied the Mythology of Fulgentius, even when he does not cite him, so that Fulgentius might be corrected out of Boccace in several Places.' It is a question, whether he is the true Author of the Ameto, and of the amatoria visione (49). Thomasius has not put him in (44) Leand. Albertus Descript. Ital. pag. 101.

(45) He was King of Naples.

(46) Boccat. de Geneal. Deor. lib. xv. cap. 6. See Vossius de Hist Lat pag. 525, 526.

(47) See Vossius de Philologia, cap. xi. n. 10. pag 57.

(48) Faber in Decad. n. 95.

(49) Leand Albert. ubi supra pag 76.

Inquisitors have taken to place his Decameron in the List of forbidden Books [L]. His Labyrinth of Love had been lately translated [M]: that Book is a Proof of his disorderly Engagements with the Fair Sex, and of the Troubles they were attended with. I do not question but there are a great many particular, and very curious, things concerning Boccace, and his Books, in the Istoria della volgar poesia, published in the Year 1698, in 4to, by the Abbot Giovanni Mario de Crescembeni. I have not that Book, which would be very useful to me, neither do I know any Body that has it. Some say, that Boccace was either the Author or the Approver of the Book De tribus Impostoribus (d). I would here supply one Omission, which is, that it would be a very great Error to take the Adventures related in his Decameron for Truth. Some of them may perhaps be founded on Realities, which he was acquainted with, to which he only added the Ornaments; but the greatest Part are the Productions of Wit, and invented at different times; one of his best Tales is extant in Apuleius [N].

(d) M. de Sus de Jean à Lapid., pag. 190.

in his List of Plagiaries. Vannozzi takes notice that the Decameron is full of Plagiarism. ' In un libro ' di Novelle, & di bel parlare gentile, anteriore al ' Boccacio, & di doue egli cauo alcune delle risposte ' da lui nel suo Decameron, ò Principe Galeotto, ' che vuol dire Principe de' Ruffiani, si legge questa ' cosi puntalmente, & de verbo ad verbum descritta ' (50). —— In a book of Tales and polite speaking, prior to Boccace, and from whence he took some of the things he has put in his Decameron, or Prince Galeotto, that is the Prince of Ruffians, you may find several Passages which he has copied exactly, even word for word.' Having quoted the Words of the Author, who lived before Boccace, he observes that the Copyist had corrupted his Original in a scandalous manner. The Persons, mentioned in the Copy, are Clergymen, who lose their Virtue: those of the other Author, were Lay-men, who had forsaken their evil ways. ' Jo ho copiato qui ' questa novelletta, dal suso detto libro, acciò si noti ' il peggioramento, che n'ha fatto il Boccacio, trasferendola tra le sue, che è quella à punto di Masetto da Lamporecchio tanto peggiorata, & cosi ' scandalosamente alterata, come giudicherà chiunque la sapia: attribuendo à persone sacre il Boccacio quella colpa, che dal suo anteriore fu ascritta ' à persone profane, & dove quelli fà di cattive ' douentar buone le sue; il Boccacio fà di buone ' douentar cattive le nostre (51). —— I have copied this Tale from the book above-mentioned, to shew the injury Boccace has done them by transferring them into his; that this, particularly, of the Masetto di Lamporecchio, is made so much worse and so scandalously altered, as whoever understands it must judge, Boccace attributing to sacred Persons, what, by his Predecessor, had been ascribed to profane ones: and whereas the other made his wicked Men become good, Boccace makes our good Men turn wicked.'

(50) Vannozzi Miscel. Let. Vol. I. pag. 580.

(51) Id. Ibid.

[L] The Inquisitors have placed his Decameron in the List of forbidden Books.] Mr Arnauld observes ' that the Books of the Pagan Poets, full of ' so much filth, which may incline the Readers to ' sin, have not been forbid, for this one reason, because they are necessary for some Persons to learn ' the Latin Tongue . . . . . and therefore they, ' who made the Rules of the Index, did not believe, ' that, by any positive Law, it ought to be forbidden, that young Persons, who are Masters of their ' Reading, to whom those Books are much more ' dangerous than to Children, should read the infamous Passages of Martial, Juvenal, Horace, Petronius, Apuleius, &c. Not but that they thought, ' that most of those who read them did ill; but because others, who are sufficiently confirmed in Virtue, so as not to be affected with those bad Ideas, ' and to mind only the neatness and elegancy of the ' Greek and Latin Tongue, may read them innocently, it was thought expedient to keep to the ' Law of Nature, and to leave those things to every ' one's Conscience, and to the Judgment of the ' Directors and Confessors. The like was done with ' respect to Boccace's Decameron. Because the Italians find the greatest delicacy of their Language ' in it, the Licentiousness of his Stories did not hinder it from being left in every Body's Hands, ' provided it was corrected. And I have been told, ' that that Correction consists only in changing, in ' the scandalous Stories, the Words Monks and Nuns ' for others. But since things, which may be a ' Temptation to Impurity, are the more dangerous, ' when they are related in a pleasant Style, it is ' not a thing, that does much honour to the Christian Religion, to leave a Book, so dangerous in ' that respect, in every Body's Hands, because it ' is writ very politely, whilst many others are forbid, wherein there is more to be learned, and the ' danger infinitely less. I speak, comparing so many ' forbidden Books with that of Boccace, which is ' not forbidden (52).' All this Discourse is very judicious, and has something in it would almost make one believe, that, provided the Clergy be not concerned in the matter, they do not care much what harm the reading of Boccace may do.

(52) Difficultés proposées à Mr Steyaert, Part IX. pag. 324.

[M] His Labyrinth of Love, has been lately translated: That Book is a proof of his disorderly Intrigues with the fair Sex, and of the Troubles they were attended with.] The French Translation, printed at Paris in 1699, was immediately re-printed at Amsterdam: It bears the Title of Boccace's Dream, and is an Invective against Women. The Author writ it when he was angry with a Widow, whom he had loved, and who had played him an ill Trick. He, who translated that Work, has taken more liberty even than the new Translator of the Decameron. He has left out many things, which he has filled up with Stories, Fragments, and Verses, composed either by his Friends, or by other Writers of our Time. Mr de Beauval says, ' That it is no ' ways a regular Translation of Boccace's Dream, ' but an ill, injudicious, Collection of Boccace's ' Dream, and of all that the Moderns, long since ' Boccace, have said about Women (53).' Another Journalist is yet more severe: he says, ' That the ' Supplements make the whole piece monstrous, and ' quite destroy the Oeconomy of it. Nothing appears more out of it's place in a Book of Boccace, ' who lived above Three hundred Years ago, than ' Verses of Mademoiselle de Scuderi, Reflexions of ' Mr de la Bruyere, Maxims of the Duke de la Rochefoucault, and Pieces of a yet later date (54).' Note, that the Translator advertises us, that ' he ' has left out . . . . . many things that Modesty ' would not bear;' but that he has preserved Boccace's Devotion, because he thought he should have too much disfigured his Work, if he had deprived him of that, after taking away his Obscenities. He takes notice, that it is the usual way of That Author to mix Morality and pious Thoughts among Trifles.

(53) Hist. des Ouvrages des Savans, March, 1699, pag. 128.

(54) Bernard, Nouvelles de la Rep. des Lettres, April, 1699, pag. 476.

I observe, that, generally speaking, no Writers slander the Fair Sex so much as those who have most frequented, loved, and idolized them; and therefore Women ought to mind their Slanders but little: They are proofs of their Dominion; they are the Murmurings of a Slave, who feels the weight of his Chains, or who, being at Liberty, sees the marks of his Servitude remaining on his Body.

[N] One of his best Tales is extant in Apuleius.] 'Tis that of the Woman that hid her Gallant under a Tub. Beroald has remarked the same. ' Joannes ' Boccacius, says he (55), eloquio vernaculo diser- ' tissimus, condidit centum Fabulas, argumento & ' stylo lepidissimo, festivissimoque, inter quas Apuleianam hanc inseruit, transposuitque commodissimè, ' non ut Interpres, sed ut Conditor; quam fœminæ ' nostrates non surdis auribus audiunt, neque invitæ ' legunt —— John Boccace, a very eloquent Man in his Mother Tongue, composed an hundred Tales on very merry subjects, and in a most pleasant and witty Stile, among which he has inserted this of Apuleius, and transplanted it nicely, not as a Trans- ' lator, (55) Philip Beroald's Notes on the 11th Book of Apuleius's Golden Ass, p. 297, 298. Edit. Basil 1597 in 8vo.

(56) In the 2d Volume of his Tales, pag. 190. Edit. Amſt. 1685, in 8vo.

'ſlator, but as the original Author, which the Wo'men of our Time hear and read with a deal of 'Pleaſure.' Mr de la Fontaine has alſo given us this Tale, under the Title of the Cooper (56), but he has not taken notice that he borrowed it from another Author. He ſometimes points out the Fountain he draws from; I wonder he has not always done ſo.

BOCCALINI (TRAJAN), born at Rome, was a very fine Genius in the beginning of the XVIIth Century. He was too much given to Raillery and Detraction, and took a new and pleaſant Turn to criticize what he pleaſed; which was to feign, that Apollo, holding his general Court on Parnaſſus, heard the Complaints of all Perſons, and did juſtice according to the Exigency of the Caſe. This produced the Ragguagli di Parnaſſo, which have been tranſlated into ſeveral Languages (a), and well reliſhed by the Public. He fell into the common Fault of thoſe who delight too much in Satire; that is, he muſt needs level his Detractions at Thrones, and crowned Heads, and attacked chiefly thoſe which made then the greateſt Noiſe in Europe. He attacked the Court of Spain; and that in a manner the more poignant, as he pretended to ſhew, that the Monarchy of that Name was not ſo powerful as was imagined, and that it's Strength might eaſily be undermined by certain ways which he pointed out (b). This has been thought the Occaſion of his Death. The Spaniards complain heavily of his ſlandering them [A]. See in Moreri how he was killed. This Man, who cenſured every Body, and who found ſo much fault with the Government, made it appear, that his Theory, and his Practice, did not well agree together [B]; for the Juriſdiction, which he exerciſed in ſome places of the Eccleſiaſtical State, was no ways conformable to the Rules of Equity and Juſtice. People were going continually to Rome to complain of him; which occaſioned many malicious Reflexions, as well againſt the Advocates and Phyſicians, as againſt the Divines [C]. Thoſe who have been pleaſed to ſay, that he was meditating political Diſcourſes on Tacitus (c), when he was murdered [D], were not

(a) I have ſeen a French Tranſlation of the IIth Century, printed at Paris, in 1615, in 8vo: the Tranſlator calls himſelf Fongaſſe.

(b) Nicius Erythræus Pinacoth. II. pag. 223, ſpeaking of the Book entituled, Pietra del paragone politico.

(c) Moreri is one of them.

[A] The Spaniards complain heavily of his ſlandering them.] Hear what one of their Authors ſays on this ſubject. 'De nueſtros tiempos ſer notados 'por de genio critico y maldiciente, Franciſco Berna, Poeta contra los de ſu nacion Italianos: Tra'jano Bocalini, diſcurſiſta paradoxo contra toda la na'cion Eſpannola. —— In our time are noted for 'their Critical and Satirical Genius, Franciſcus Ber'na an Italian Poet againſt thoſe of his own Nation; 'Trajano Boccalini for his Paradoxical Diſcourſes 'againſt the whole Spaniſh Nation.' Theſe are the words of John Vitrian, in his Notes on Philip de Comines (1).

(1) Chap. I. Letter (F), pag. 3.

[B] His Theory and his Practice did not well agree together.] See what Nicius Erythræus ſaid of it. 'At qui ſe aliis Reip. bene gerendæ ducem ac 'magiſtrum profitetur ac præſtat, in iis oppidis, 'quorum illi adminiſtratio commiſſa fuerat, regen'dis, ſuis ipſe præceptis non paruit, ſed multa, ut 'ajunt, commiſit, quæ ab illorum rationibus eſſent 'aliena. Quamobrem fiebat, ut Romam crebræ de 'ipſius injuriis querimoniæ deferrentur (2). —— 'But he, who profeſſes himſelf, and really was, a 'Maſter and Guide to others in the good Admini'ſtration of Government, in governing theſe Towns 'committed to his management, never obeyed his own 'Rules, but acted in many things quite contrary to 'them, ſo that frequent complaints were carried to 'Rome of his injuſtice.' It is but too common for thoſe who write Political Books, and even good ones, to ſhew but little Capacity when they happen to be promoted to great Offices. So true is it, that the application of Rules is more difficult, than the Art of diſcourſing well of them!

(2) Pinacoth. I. pag. 272.

[C] This occaſioned many malicious Reflexions as well againſt the Advocates and Phyſicians as againſt the Divines.] Nicius Erythræus pretends, that this occaſioned a Proverb, importing, that there are three ſorts of Men, who make almoſt no uſe of the Laws they preſcribe to others. No body ſwerves more from the Law in Practice, than a Lawyer; no Body obſerves the Regimen of Health, leſs than a Phyſician; no Body fears the remorſe of Conſcience leſs than a Divine. You will find, in the Original, the Exception which the Author has made. He does not relate the thing as Jeſters commonly do. They ſay, That the Lawyers, who adviſe others ſo much to go to Law, do ſeldom go to Law themſelves; That Phyſicians, who preſcribe ſo much Phyſic to their Patients, take but little themſelves; and that Divines, who ſet down ſo many Articles of Faith for others, believe but few themſelves (3). Theſe are the Latin Words of Nicius Erythræus. 'Quamobrem fiebat, ut Romam crebræ 'de ipſius [Boccalini] injuriis querimoniæ defer'rentur, ac locus proverbio fieret, quo dicitur, tria 'eſſe hominum genera, qui nihil fere legibus, quas 'ipſi aliis imponunt, utantur, nimirum Juriſconſultos, 'medicos, atque theologos: nulli enim magis in 'negociis ab jure, ab æquitate, diſcedunt quam 'J. C. nulli tuendæ valetudinis rationem minus 'ſervant quam medici, nulli conſcientiæ aculeos 'minus metuunt quam theologi. Itaque qui juſti'tiam, valetudinem, & conſcientiam amittere ſata'gunt, juris doctorum, medicorum, theologorum'que amicitias colant: quod tamen de iis tantum 'intelligendum, qui ea ſtudia non ſerio ac ſedulo, 'verum in ſpeciem, & dicis cauſa, profitentur (4). '—— So that frequent complaints were carried 'to Rome, of his [Boccalini's] Injuſtice, and Occa'ſion was given for a Proverb, which ſays that 'there are three ſorts of Men, who ſcarce make any 'uſe of the Laws they preſcribe to others; to wit, 'the Lawyers, Phyſicians, and Divines: For no Body 'ſwerves more from Law and Equity in Buſineſs 'than the Lawyers; no Body obſerves the Rules for 'preſervation of Health leſs than the Phyſicians; 'no Body fears the Stings of Conſcience leſs than 'the Divines. And therefore whoever has a mind 'to get rid of Juſtice, Health, and Conſcience; 'need but aſſociate with Lawyers, Doctors, and Di'vines: but this is to be underſtood only of thoſe 'who profeſs theſe Studies, not ſeriouſly and dili'gently, but only in ſhew and for form ſake.

(3) See the Courtier of Baldaſſar Caſtiglione pag. 295.

(4) Nicius Erythræus Pinacoth. I. pag. 272.

[§ On this Reflection, which by the way is Panurge's, lib. iii. cap 29. of Rabelais, Benjamin Priolo formed one of his Maxims, mentioned by Mr Bayle, Remark [K] of the Article Priolo. REM CRIT.]

[D] It has been ſaid that he was meditating Political Diſcourſes upon Tacitus, when he was murdered.] They ſhould have ſaid, not only that thoſe Diſcourſes were compoſed; but alſo, that they had been printed twice at Geneva. To ſet a great Value upon thoſe Editions, People have been made to believe, firſt, That the Manuſcript of that Work was a very rare Piece. Secondly, That the Senate of Venice had carefully kept the Original, till they made a Preſent of it to the Queen of Sweden. Thirdly, that with great Charges, and much Trouble, they had found means to get a Copy of the Manuſcript, given to that Princeſs by the Senate of Venice. Meer Knavery. That Manuſcript was handed about every where, Twenty Years before that Queen's coming into Italy. There are at leaſt thirty Copies of it, in ſeveral Libraries of Italy. The Author preſented this Work himſelf to divers Perſons, and particularly to Cardinal Barberini at Rome, and to the Procurator Moroſini at Venice. The Cardinal preſented his Copy to the Academy of not well informed. He left some Children [E]. He has been numbered among the Plagiaries [F], and some Faults have been committed in that Point, as I have shewn in one of my Remarks (d).

(d) See the end of the Remark [F].

of the Humoriſts, and it was tranſcribed by ſeveral People. The Copy of Moroſini has been as often tranſcribed; ſo that it was not difficult to buy Copies of it. The Governor of an Engliſh Lord bought one of them, and parted with it to a Bookſeller at Geneva, who printed it (5). About the ſame time, a German Gentleman brought another Copy of it from Italy, and gave it to a Profeſſor of Tubingen, whoſe Name was Mr du May, who added ſome Remarks to it, and ſent it to Mr Leti at Geneva. Mr Leti got it printed by the Sieur Widerbold, and intituled it, Bilancia Politica, and added a third Volume to it, to which he put his own Name (6). That Book of Boccalini has not been eſteemed: Mr Amelot de la Houſſaye ſpeaks very ſlightly of it (7).

(5) It was the Sieur de Tour-

(6) All theſe particulars are taken from a Memorial that comes from good hands. I keep the Original by me.

(7) In the critical Diſcourſe prefixed to his Morals of Tacitus, and to his Tranſlation of the ſix firſt Books of Tacitus's Annals.

[E] He left ſome Children.] I have his Pietra del Paragone Politico, or Political Touchſtone, printed at Paris, in the Year 1626, in 8vo, and dedicated to Cardinal de la Valette. It is Boccalini's Son, who dedicated that Work to this Cardinal: The Epiſtle Dedicatory is dated from Paris the tenth of April 1626 (8). That which ſurprizes me is to ſee that that Work is looked on as a Poſthumous one, for I have ſeen an Edition, of the Year 1615, of Boccalini's Book intituled, Pietra del Paragone Politico. This would make me conjecture, that the Work, dedicated to Cardinal de la Valette, was a Continuation, or a Second Part, of the Pietra del Paragone Politico. I deſire thoſe who have leiſure, and many Editions in Hand, to verify the thing. Mr Giri had publiſhed his French Tranſlation of that Work of Boccalini, before the Author's Son publiſhed it in Italian, in the Year 1626. The Latin Verſion of the ſame work, made by Erneſt John Creutz, was printed at Amſterdam in the Year 1642, in 12mo, under the title of Lapis Lydius Politicus.

(8) This appears by the Epiſtle Dedicatory.

[F] He has been numbered among the Plagiaries.] This Term ſeems to me improper, becauſe Boccalini is not accuſed of having ſtole the Labours of other Men, but of having lent his Name to hide the true Author. It is ſaid, that he imitated certain Perſons, who, to free their Eccleſiaſtical Patron from the ſhame of having got a Servant-Maid with Child, take it upon themſelves, and marry her, being reſolved to own all the Children that may come from the ſame Quarter. 'Tis pretended, that Cardinal Cajetan is the true Author of the Books which came out under the Name of Boccalini (9); and if you enquire, Why Cardinal Cajetan diveſted himſelf of his Right in favour of another; They will anſwer you, That he did it to have the pleaſure of cenſuring and biting, without prejudicing his Dignity, or raiſing himſelf any Enemies. I cannot believe this to be true; I believe only that Boccalini did like Terence: he communicated his Thoughts to the Cardinals, who proteſted him (10), and made uſe of their Advice, and of the Thoughts they ſuggeſted to him. He thought that the Opinion People would have, that he was aſſiſted by ſuch Perſons, would be an Honour to him: 'twas juſt the Taſte of Terence. ' Quemadmodum Terentio ' malevoli objiciebant, ipſum, in fabulis faciendis, ' Scipionis Africani, Lælii qui dictus eſt ſapiens, ' & Furii Pii, opera uti, aſſidueque cum illis una ' ſcribere; ita etiam de Trajano fama diſtulerat, in ' his actis referendis homines nobiliſſimos ſocios & ' adjutores habere. Verum id ſibi non minus laudi ' ducebat, quam Terentius, qui glorioſum ſibi putabat, id quod malevoli quaſi maledictum vehemens exiſtimabant, ac ſit veriſimile hæc cum illis eum communicaſſe, quibus, ad notanda & animadvertenda aliorum vitia, eadem eſſet voluntas atque propenſio (11). — As malevolent Perſons objected to Terence, that he had the Aſſiſtance of Scipio Africanus, Lælius, who was called the Wiſe, and of Furius Pius, and daily wrote with them; ſo likewiſe Fame gave out concerning Trajan, that he had ſome of the Prime Nobility for his Companions and Aſſiſtants, in relating theſe Acts. But be accounted That no leſs Praiſe to him, than Terence did, who eſteemed That a Glory to himſelf, which his enemies looked upon as a moſt vehement reproach; and it is very probable he might communicate theſe things to them, who had the ſame will and inclination to obſerve and animadvert on the Faults of others.' Some for want of taking ſufficient notice of the order of Time, have ſaid, that Cardinal Cajetan, who diſputed againſt Luther, wrote the Ragguagli del Parnaſſo, and the Pietra del Paragone. Mr Chevreau imputes that fault to John Rhodius, a Daniſh Phyſician, and to Peter Stevenius; but he is miſtaken; for they meant another Cardinal Cajetan; and he refutes them by a bad Reaſon: Boccalini, ſays he (12), who was the Son of an Architect of Rome, was murthered at Venice by order of the Spaniſh Embaſſador. Is this a Proof that he could not lend his Name to a Book of Cardinal Thomas de Vio, who diſputed againſt Luther? Note, That Nicius Erythræus affirms, that Perenda, who had been Secretary to Cardinal Henry Cajetan, helped Boccalini to compoſe the Ragguagli (13).

(9) Scevenius, n. 89. affirms it, apud Rhodium de Auctoribus ſuppoſititiis, pag. 42. Morhofius Polyhiſt. p. 81. mentions that opinion. See Placcius de Pſeudonym. pag. 165. & Deckherrus de Script. anieſp. pag. 253, 254.

(10) He dedicated the Iſt Century of the Ragguagli in 1612, to Cardinal Borgheſe, and the ſecond in 1613, to Cardinal Cajetan.

(11) Nicius Erythræus, Pinacoth. III. pag. 222.

(12) Chevreau, Hiſt. du monde liv. v. cap. iv. p. 185, of the Dutch Edit. 1687.

(13) Pinacoth. III. pag. 131.

BOCHART (MATTHEW), Miniſter of the Holy Goſpel at Alençon in the XVIIth Century, publiſhed ſome Books [A], which gained him the Reputation of a Learned Man. That which he compoſed againſt the Sacrifice of the Maſs brought him into Trouble, as Mr Daillé obſerves: A Miſſionary, thinking it more proper to bring him before the Secular Judges than to anſwer his Arguments, began a Conteſt at Law with him for giving the Miniſters the Title of Paſtors (a). There is no reaſon to queſtion the thing; but it is very manifeſt that Mr Daillé did not well remember the Circumſtances [B]. Matthew Bochart has ſometimes been (a) Daillé Replique à Adam & Cottiby. Part. II. pag. 103.

[A] He has publiſhed ſome Books.] The chief of his Works are, a Treatiſe againſt Relics, and a Treatiſe againſt the Sacrifice of the Maſs. He wrote alſo a Dialogue on the Difficulties which the Miſſionaries raiſed continually againſt the Proteſtants of France, by reaſon of what had paſſed in the National Synod of Charenton, concerning the Toleration of the Lutheran Errors. That Dialogue having fallen into the Hands of the Elector Palatine, he thought it proper to incline the Princes of the Confeſſion of Ausburg, to endeavour the Re-union of the two Proteſtant Churches (1); and accordingly he ſhewed it to them during the Aſſembly of Francfort. This good News being come to the Author's Knowledge, drew from him a Latin Book, intituled Diallacticon, which he dedicated to that Elector. It was printed at Sedan in the Year 1662, and contains a Project of Re-union between the Lutherans and the Calviniſts.

(1) Epiſt. Dedicat. Diallact. Matth. Bocharti.

[B] A ſuit at Law was commenced againſt him for giving the Miniſters the title of Paſtors — Mr Daillé did not well remember the Circumſtances.] I need no other proof for it, than Mr Daillé himſelf. He ſays, That the Miſſionary, being put to a non-plus by Matthew Bochart's Book againſt the Sacrifice of the Maſs, brought an Action againſt the Author, in the Year 1657; but he owns, in one of the Tables of his Book, that the Treatiſe againſt the Sacrifice of the Maſs was printed at Geneva in the Year 1658. He obſerves in the four hundred and ſeventeenth Page of the firſt Part of his Reply, that this excellent Treatiſe of the Sacrifice of the Maſs (2) was publiſhed but three Years before. What he ſays, toward the end of his Preface, is a certain proof that he compoſed his Reply in 1661. So that it cannot be true, that the Miſſionary, who went to Law with Matthew Bochart in 1657, found that way more proper, been confounded with his Cousin Samuel Bochart [C], of whom I am going to speak:

(2) He praiſes it much in that place.

than to refute the Book of the Sacrifice of the Mass. Moreover, Mr Daillé declares, that he does not know, that, before the Law-Suit, begun against Mr Bochart in 1657, any Complaint was ever brought against the Ministers for filling themselves Pastors. And yet, immediately after, he makes mention of a Decree of the Parliament of Rouen, given 22, or 23, Years after the Year 1633, when the Ministers of Charenton stiled themselves Pastors of the Reformed Church of Paris in the Approbation of a Book (3). That Decree of the Parliament of Rouen was doubtless made upon the Complaint brought against the Minister Bochart; for otherwise, Mr Daillé would contradict himself: And therefore, it is not true, that the Law-Suit against that Minister, fell in the Year 1657. So that Mr Daillé must be mistaken, both as to the time the Suit was commenced, and as to the Book that gave occasion for it. He is mistaken again upon another account, since it is certain, that, in the Year 1633, the General Agents of the Clergy of France complained, that Mr Aubertin had printed a Book, wherein he took the Title of Pastor of the Reformed Church of Paris, and wherein his Colleagues, Mestrezat, Drelincourt, and Daillé, signed in the Approbation, the two first, Pastors of the reform'd Church of Paris, and the last, Minister of the holy Gospel of the said Church (4). On that Complaint, the Privy-Council made a Decree, the fourteenth of July 1633, importing, that Mr Aubertin should be arrested, and that his Colleagues should be summoned to appear, with an Injunction to the Ministers, to take no other Title upon them, than what was given them by the Edicts (5).

(3) It is Mr Daillé's Apology.

(4) See the Collection of Edicts for the Clergy.

(5) See the Remark [B] of the Article AUBERTIN.

[C] Has been sometimes confounded with his Cousin Samuel Bochart.] Mr le Fevre, Doctor of the Sorbonne, has quoted the Diallacticon of our Bochart in his Reply to Mr Arnauld for the defence of his Invincible Motives. I believe he will not take it ill, if I judge that he took it for a Work of Mr Bochart of Caen. If he had known that two Ministers of that Name have writ Works of Controversy; or, if at least he had known that the Author of the Diallacticon is not the same Bochart, who made himself admired in the Common-wealth of Learning by his Phaleg, &c. he would never have quoted the Author of the Diallacticon, with this Elogy of the Learned Bochart (6), as he has done more than once. It were in vain to say, that the Minister of Alençon was a learned Man, and that Mr le Fevre might have called him so without any Exaggeration, or Flattery; I am sure, that no intelligent Readers will ever be persuaded that this Remark is ill-grounded.

(6) Pag. 27, 129.

BOCHART (Samuel), Minister of the Word of God at Caen, was one of the most learned Men in the World. He was of Rouen, and of a very good Family [A], and was born in the Year 1599. He made early a very great Progress: one may judge of it by the Forty four Greek Verses which he composed in Praise of Thomas Dempster (a), who published them in 1612, in the Front of his Roman Antiquities. At that time he studied under that learned Scotchman, and it is likely that he lodged then in the House of the Famous Peter du Moulin, Minister of the Church of Paris, who was his Uncle by the Mother's Side (b). He went through his Philosophy at Sedan, where he maintained public Theses, in the Year 1615, which gained him great Honour, not only because he answered the Arguments well, but also by reason of some Verses which he added to them, very artificially suited to the Figure of a Circle (c). It is thought that he studied Divinity at Saumur under Cameron (d), and it is well known that he followed him to London, when the Civil War had destroyed that Academy. He made no long abode in England; for it is known that he was at Leyden about the latter end of the Year 1621, where he applied himself earnestly to the Study of the Arabic Tongue under Erpenius. He found a Professor of Divinity in that University, who conceived a very particular Esteem for him, and gave him public Marks of it in the Year 1629, by dedicating his Catholicus Orthodoxus to him [B]. I mean Mr Rivet, who was at that time married to a Sister of our Bochart's Mother. Mr Bochart, being in France, was soon made a Minister there, and presented to the Church of Caen. The first thing remarkable, which he did there, was to maintain a long Conference with Father Veron, in which he came off with an entire Victory. That Man, provided with a special Mission from the Court to dispute, and as it were invested with the Office of a warranted Controvertist all over the Kingdom, challenged Mr Bochart the fourth Day of September 1628, and did not cease to make a Noise, till he had obtained a Day and Place to enter publickly into the Lists with him. The Dispute was managed in the Castle of Caen, in the Presence of a great many Persons of both Religions. The Duke of Longueville, Governour of the Province, came thither as often as his Affairs permitted him, and Commissioners were appointed

(a) They are in the new Edition of his works 1692.

(b) Tunc nisi memoria me fallit hospitabatur Parisiis apud avunculum Petrum Molinæum. - - - - Then if my memory fail not, he lodged with his Uncle Peter du Moulin. Steph. Morin. de Bocharto, & ejus Scriptis.

(c) They are in the abovementioned Edition.

(d) Puto me dicere quod Salmurii audiverit Cameronem, & eo præside theses theologicas defenderit. Morinus ibid.

[A] He was of a very good Family.] His Father RENE BOCHART du Menillet, Minister of the Reformed Church of Rouen, was Great-Grandson of JOHN BOCHART Counsellor in the Parliament of Paris in 1490, and Grandson of JOHN BOCHART, who pleaded so strongly for the Pragmatic Sanction (1), and Son of STEPHEN BOCHART, who made the Branch of Menillet. Moreri's Dictionary shews the Relation that was between our Samuel Bochart, and the Bochart Champigni's, who have exercised so many fine Offices in the Gown.

(1) It was in the presence of Francis I. he opposed the Concordate.

[B] Rivet - - - - - dedicated his Catholicus Orthodoxus to him] Mr Rivet dedicated that Book to four Persons, viz. to Peter du Moulin Minister and Professor at Sedan; to William Rivet Minister of Teillebourg; to John Maximilian de Langle Minister of Rouen; and to Samuel Bochart Minister of Caen. He praises the last for his Dispute against Veron, in which, says he to him, you shewed him that he was ignorant in Greek and in Hebrew, and put a bridle on his impudent Sophistry, which he has endeavoured to shake off by telling many Lies (according to his custom) about his imaginary Victories; but wise Men have not been deceived by them, and you have discovered his Vanity by your Answer. This may serve for a Supplement to my Relation of that Dispute, taken from Mr Morin. By this it appears, that Veron ascribed the Victory to himself. In the same Year, 1629, Mr du Moulin dedicated his Antibarbare (2) to Mr Bochart. The latter had given him notice of a mistake, which was, that du Moulin, having promised that Treatise of Controversy, in the Table of the Novelty of Popery, had forgot to publish it.

(2) So that Book is intituled, and not l'Anti-barbarie, as in the Catalogue of the Bodleian Library, pag. 462, and in Mr Baillet n. 176. §. 6. of the Anti-appointed on both sides to be present. The Dispute lasted from the Twenty second of September to the third of October, and the two Disputants went through almost the whole wide Field of Controversies in Nine successive Meetings which they had. The Acts of this Dispute, well attested and collated, were published on both sides; but Mr Bochart added several things of his own, which the turbulent Spirit of his Antagonist would not let him put in order on the Spot; he added also the Dispute concerning the Eucharist, and Celibacy, which they had agreed to examine, but had not gone through with them, because Veron quitted the Field (e). This Minister's Reputation, the Foundation of which was laid at that time, increased very much in the Year 1646, by the Publication of his Phaleg, and his Canaan [C], wherein he treats, I. Of the Dispersion of Mankind caused by the Confusion of Languages: And, II. Of the Colonies, and Language of the Phenicians. The Enquiries which he must have made, in order to compose those Works, and some others, and which obliged him to search into all the ancient Authors, and the most hidden Treasures of the Oriental Languages, had this Relation to his being a Minister, that he engaged in them by degrees, only because he had undertaken to preach on Genesis; for when he came to the second Chapter he was obliged to explain the Situation of the Terrestrial Paradise: The following Chapters engaged him to examine the Origin of Nations, and a great many other Passages required that he should write on the Animals, Plants, and precious Stones, mentioned in the Bible. If he had lived long enough, he would have left compleat Treatises on those matters, but he could only finish that concerning Animals. It was printed at London in 1663, under the Title of Hierozoicon. His Collections on the Terrestrial Paradise, on Plants, and precious Stones, were not found in a Condition, after his Death, to make any thing of them. Every body knows that the Queen of Sweden invited him to her Court [D], and that he went thither in the Year 1652. It is not necessary to speak in particular of several Pieces which were published by him at different times, and redounded to his Reputation. For example, in the Year 1650, he published a Letter about the Authority of Kings, and about the Institution of Bishops and Priests. He published one in 1661, against the Jesuit la Barre, concerning the Toleration of Lutheranism decided in the National Synod of Charenton; and another in 1663, wherein he shewed, by many learned Reasons, that there is no likelihood that Æneas ever came into Italy. He died at Caen, May 16, 1667, having lost his Speech and his Senses all of a sudden in the Academy that met at the House of Mr de Brieux. His Papers are in the Hands of Mr de Colleville, Son of his only Daughter (f), and formerly a Counsellor in the Parliament of Normandy. Among those Papers there are a great many Sermons written with Mr Bochart's own Hand, viz. those which he preached on Genesis,

(e) Adversarius vadimonium deseruit. Steph. Morinus, ubi supra.

(f) She was married to a Counsellor in the Parliament of Normandy, called Mr de Colleville. It was the name of a Lordship: the name of the Family was le Sueur.

[C] His Reputation encreased much in the Year 1646, by the Publication of his Phaleg, and his Canaan.] These are the Titles of the two Parts of Mr Bochart's Geographia Sacra. A Printer of Reputation was sent for to Caen (3), in order to have that Work more correct, and the sooner printed. If we may believe those who re-printed it at Francfort in 4°, in 1681, the Edition of Caen is full of faults, from which they boast to have purged theirs: ab infinitis σφαλμασι, quibus exemplar Cadomi impressum refertum erat, purgatum. To their Edition they joined two of Mr Bochart's Letters, one concerning Episcopacy, and the Right of Kings, written to Dr Morley Chaplain to King Charles II of England; and the other to Mr Segrais, on the Question, Whether Æneas ever came into Italy (4). The first of those two Letters was printed in 1650, as I have already said. Spizelius knew nothing of it; for after having quoted one of Sarravius's Letters, which shewed, that it would be a piece of Injustice not to publish that fine Production of Mr Bochart; He adds, that it was notwithstanding still unpublished (5). I know nothing of the Edition of the Geographia Sacra, mentioned by Sir Thomas-Pope Blount, as made at Caen in Folio, in the Year 1651, and I believe, there never was such an Edition. As for the Hierozoicon, (which is the Title of the Volume de Animalibus Sacræ Scripturæ) it was re-printed at Francfort in the Year 1675, and an Abridgment of it was made in the Year 1690, which was printed at Franeker. The Author of that Abridgment is an Hungarian, named Vecsius.

(3) His Name was John Jannon. See Steph. Morin. in Dissert. de Bocharto & ejus Script.

(4) See the Nouv. de la Repub. des Lettr. for July 1684, art. iv.

(5) Spizelius in infel. literat, p. 913. Note, that in the Errata he says he had seen it in the Francfort Edition of the Geographia Sacra 1674.

[D] The Queen of Sweden invited him to her Court.] I have heard a thousand foolish Stories of this Journey of Mr Bochart; as for Example: That one Day, in the Queen's Library, he was suddenly asked this Question, What do you think of a certain Book called the Bible? It is pretended that he took the thing with as serious a Tone, as he ought; and made a large Discourse on the Marks of Divinity which shine in the Scripture; but that the Standers by did but laugh at it. They add, that the Abbot Bourdelot had made the Queen believe, that Mr Bochart played admirably on the Flute, but that he would not play before her Majesty, except she absolutely commanded him; and that, thereupon, the Queen, without giving any ear to his repeated protestations of Ignorance, absolutely required him to play on it, and that he obeyed her Commands. I have heard a great many People say these things, and others of the same nature; but on a close enquiry I cannot find any thing to render them credible. Nevertheless, I mention them here, that those, who hear these idle Stories, may give no credit to them. Mr Huet, the present Bishop of Avranches, who went with Mr Bochart into Sweden, has given a very pretty Relation of that Journey (6). I have cited it in Remark [B] Citation (6) of the Article (FRANCIS) BLONDEL, the Mathematician.

(6) It is in Latin Verse.

This Remark was finished, when the Menagiana fell into my Hands, where I found these Words: 'It was a fine sight to see Mr Bochart play at Shuttle-'cock with the Queen of Sweden! The Queen 'having pressed him one Day to play at it with 'her, he laid down his Cloak and played. His 'Friends laughed at him for it; and told him, that 'he ought absolutely to have refused it (7).' I find there also, that the Queen had resolved to be at a Meeting, where he was to read some Part of his Phaleg; but that Mr Bourdelot, to deprive him of that Honour, felt the Queen's Pulse, and told her, that she was out of order, and must take Physic. So that she kept her Bed that Day. If there had been any ground for the Story of the Flute, it would have been in the Book I have just now quoted.

(7) Menagiana, pag. 349. of the first Dutch Edition.

neſis, from the first Chapter to the eighteenth Verſe of the nineteenth Chapter. As many of this great Man's Manuſcript Diſſertations as could be found, have been collected and added to the new Edition of all his Works, publiſhed in Holland in the Year 1692 [E]. Mr Morin formerly a Colleague of Mr Bochart, and now Miniſter of the French Church at Amſterdam, and Profeſſor of the Oriental Languages in the Illuſtrious School of the ſame City, has joined a Diſcourſe to that Edition (g), which I have made uſe of in compoſing this Article. They who have a mind to ſee the Encomiums that have been beſtowed upon Mr Bochart, may find them in the Authors which I refer to (b). His Learning, vaſt as it was, was not his chief Excellence; he had ſuch a Share of Modeſty as was infinitely more to be eſteemed than all his Learning. And accordingly he enjoyed his Reputation with great Tranquillity, being free from thoſe unhappy Quarrels which ſo many learned Men draw upon themſelves by their Pride, and the Vehemence of their Stile. I never heard of a certain Treatiſe which Mr Menage aſcribes to him [F].

(g) De clariſſimo Bocharto & omnibus ejus ſcriptis. - - - Of the famous Bochart and all his writings.

(b) Colomés in bis Gallia Orient. quæ ch be dedicated to him. Sir Thomas Pope Blount, Cenſura cbr. Author. Sprengbut, in inſtit. hi rat. pag. 916, & ſeq.

[E] Some Diſſertations were prefixed to the new Edition of all his Works - - - - in 1692.] Moreri was not altogether in the wrong, to give ſome hopes that Mr le Moyne would publiſh Mr Bochart's Manuſcripts; for it is certain, that he had ſuch a deſign, but not having all the leiſure neceſſary for ſuch an Undertaking, he committed the care of it to Mr de Villemandy, promiſing to aſſiſt him with his Advice, and to ſupply him with many of Bochart's Letters and Diſſertations. Death hindered him from performing his Promiſe. But on the other hand, it is certain, that Moreri is groſſly miſtaken in that Article, both when he ſays, that all the Manuſcript Treatiſes of Bochart were in the Hands of Mr le Moyne; and when he ſays, that a troubleſome Buſineſs had obliged Mr le Moyne to leave the Kingdom. It is notorious that he did not go out of France without leave from the Court; and that it was his fault that he did not continue in his Church of Roum, which did all they could to retain him. He only left the Kingdom to take poſſeſſion of a Profeſſorſhip of Divinity that had been offered him long before at Leyden. It is true, that, in 1674, a vexatious Suit was commenced againſt him, occaſioned by a young Gentlewoman of the Proteſtant Religion, who having left her Father, who was a Catholic Counſellor in Parliament, had fled into England; but it is alſo true, that, after ſome Months Impriſonment, he was fully re-eſtabliſhed in his former Condition.

Moreri criticized for ſomething he had ſaid concerning Mr Le Moyne.

[F] I never heard of a certain Treatiſe which Mr Menage aſcribes to him.] It were to be wiſhed, that Mr Bochart had publiſhed his Collections on ſo curious a Matter, as that mentioned by Mr Menage. It turns upon certain things that are to be found but once in Writers. 'Multa eſſe in libris Juris, ut 'libros cæteros taceam, ſingularia atque ut Gram- 'matici Græci loqui amant μονήρη, ſive ἅπαξ 'εἰρημένα (quo titulo librum audio ſcripſiſſe Samuelem Bochartum) quis neſcit (8)? —— Who 'does not know, that there are many things in Books 'of Law, to mention no other, which are ſingular, 'and as the Greek Grammarians call it μονήρη, or 'ἅπαξ εἰρημένα, i. e. once mentioned? I hear that 'Samuel Bochart has written a Treatiſe with that 'Title?'

(8) Menag. Jur. Civilis amœn. c. xx. p. 99, 100.

BOCHIUS (John), a good Latin Poet, and Secretary of the City of Antwerp, was born at Bruſſels the Twenty ſeventh of July 1555 (a). He went through his firſt Studies at Lire, and in the City of Aeth, and diſtinguiſhed himſelf from his School-fellows. He excelled chiefly in Poetry, ſo that he might be called the Virgil of the Low Countries [A]. He was admitted into the Houſe of Cardinal George Radzivil, by which means he had an Opportunity to ſtudy Divinity at Rome, when Bellarmin explained the Controverſies there. Bochius attended his Lectures conſtantly. He travelled afterwards into ſeveral Countries; he viſited Poland, Lithuania, and Moſcovy, not without grievous Inconveniencies, and great dangers (b); for, as he went from Smolensko to Moſcow, the Cold was ſo violent that his Feet were quite frozen. They had begun to talk of cutting them off, when one of the Czar's Surgeons found that they needed not come to that Extremity: The Remedy which he made uſe of would not perhaps have performed the Cure, if another accident had not happened. Bochius had got himſelf carried to the Livonian Quarters, and was there when the great Duke Baſilides came with an Army to plunder the Country [B]. Bochius being ſtruck with fear fled where he could, and, after having been ſtript and beaten, he eſcaped from the Soldiers hands,

(a) Valer. Andreas Bibl. Belg. pag. 461.

(b) He gives an account of them in his Notes on the CXLVIIth Pſalm.

[A] He might be called the Virgil of the Low-Countries.] I muſt ſet down the very words of Valerius Andreas, to ſhew the better with what Precipitation Moreri compiled his Dictionary. 'In 'poetica palmam cæteris facilè præripuit, adeo ut 'alterum Belgii noſtri Maronem nominare liceat (1). '—— In Poetry he far excelled all others, ſo that 'he may be called the Virgil of the Low-Countries.' In the Copy which I make uſe of, the firſt Letter of the Word Maronem is not well printed: ſo that if it be not carefully obſerved, it may eaſily be taken for a V. I fancy that Moreri's Copy had the ſame fault, and that ſo he read Varonem inſtead of Maronem. Whereupon, he remembered that Varro was accounted the moſt learned of the Romans, from whence he concluded, that ſince Bochius was ſirnamed the Varro of the Netherlands, he ought to ſay of him, that he was famous for his Erudition, that he made a wonderful progreſs in the knowledge of learned Languages, and in all ſorts of Literature, and that he improved in all the ſublime Sciences of Controverſy, of the Civil and Canon Law, and of Scholaſtic Divinity. Francis Swertius, who loved, and knew him very particularly, beſtows no praiſe upon him, that can give us ſuch a Notion of him. Melchior Adam and Valerius Andreas, who praiſe him a little more, are alſo far from ſaying any ſuch thing. The latter does not ſo much as ſay, that he was ſirnamed the Virgil of the Netherlands; but only, that he deſerved that Title.

(1) Val. Andreas, Biblioth. Belg. pag. 461.

[B] Bochius had got himſelf carried into the Livonian quarters, when Baſilides came with an army to plunder the Country.] The reaſon, or pretence, of that Violence, was, That the Patriarch of the Muſcovites complained to the Czar, that the Germans (under which Name thoſe of Livonia were alſo comprehended) enervated the Courage of the Muſcovites, and made them ſpend a great deal of Money on divers ſorts of Drinks which they ſold them. 'Quæ- 'ſi Germani, in quibus Livones, deliciis Moſchos 'corrumperent, coctiſque variis potus generibus 'pecuniæ emungerent, & muſculos animos enerva- 'rent (2).'

(2) Melchior Adam, in vitis Philoſ. p. 498.

[C] He

hands, and returned the next Day to his Quarters. That Exercise very much hastened the Effect of his Remedies. After he returned into his own Country, he made a Poem, which pleased the Duke of Parma so well, that he procured him the Place of Secretary of Antwerp. That Poem was a Panegyric on the Duke of Parma, on the taking of That City. He composed afterwards divers Court Poems [C], and at last made David's Psalms the chief Subject of his Pen. He died before the Impression of what he had done in them was finished (c) [D]. It was the thirteenth of January 1609 (d). He published his Life of David in 1608. He left but one Daughter. A Collection of his Epigrams, Elegies, and other scattered Poems was printed at Cologne in 1615; to which are added all the Verses that could be found of his Son John Ascanius Bochius, who died in Italy in the Flower of his Youth. Francis Swertius, who took care of that Edition, informs us, that his good Friend John Bochius was unhappy in a Wife, which, says he, is often the Fate of Great Men (e).

(c) Melchior Adam. in vita Philos. p. 498.

(d) Idibus Jan. Id. ibid. Vat. Andreas ubi supra. Moreri renders it the 15th of January; which is wrong.

(e) Matrimonio implicitus fuit non usquequaque felici ac concordi quod fere viris magnis commune. Swert. Athen. Belg. pag. 393.

[C] He composed divers Court Poems.] Thus I call, for Example, the Description of the Honours done to the Governours of the Netherlands, when they took possession of their Government. That which he made upon the Journey and Installation of Albert of Austria, and of his Spouse the Infanta Isabella Clara Eugenia, was not printed in the Year 1595, as Valerius Andreas affirms; for they did not make their Entry till 1599.

[D] He died before the Impression of what he had done on the Psalms was finished.] Melchior Adam asserts it twice together in plain Terms (3). Nevertheless it might be questioned, if we should refer ourselves to Francis Swertius, who makes no manner of mention of any Books of Bochius printed after his Death, except a Collection of divers Poems. Besides, he observes, that the Physical, Moral, Political, and Historical Observations of Bochius, which are doubtless his Work on the Psalter, were printed in the Year 1608. But when I consider, that Valerius Andreas, whose Work is without comparison less faulty than that of Francis Swertius, ascribes to Bochius a Book entituled, Observationes Physicæ, Ethicæ, Politicæ & Historicæ in Psalmos à Græcis Latinisque Autoribus, without noting the Year of the Impression, I cannot think, that the Year 1608, marked by Francis Swertius, is right, and consequently, I am of opinion, that it is best to keep to Melchior Adam's Narrative, as if the Author of the Athenæ Belgicæ had said nothing.

(3) Id. ibid.

BODEGRAVE, a Village of Holland on the Rhine. I only speak of it to correct Moreri's Dictionary, wherein we find it is a Borough famous for the Victory, which the French obtained there over the Dutch in 1672. Which is a Falsity [A]. Baudrand is quoted for it, which is another Falsity [B].

[A] Moreri says it is a Town famous for a battle - - - - - - which is a Falsity.] There never was any Battle or Skirmish at Bodegrave, between the French and the Dutch. All that can be said, is, that about the latter end of December 1672, the French drew up a considerable Army to penetrate into the Heart of Holland by the favour of the Ice, but that a great Thaw, that happened suddenly, obliged them to give over their Enterprize. Their Vexation at that Disappointment, carried them to extreme Cruelties against the Inhabitants of Bodegrave, which was one of the Posts they had possessed themselves of, and were forced to abandon. The Particulars of their Barbarities are to be found in a Book published by Mr Wicquefort, on that Subject (1).

(1) Intituled, Avis fidelle aux veritables Hollandois.

[B] - - - - - - Moreri cites Baudrand, which is another Falsity.] For Mr Baudrand does not say, that the French obtained a Victory over the Dutch, in that Place: He says only, that the Dutch were ill treated there by the French: ubi Belgæ uniti male habiti fuere à Francis anno 1672. Perhaps I have already said but too often, that a Translator, who ventures to paraphrase, or to depart never so little from his Original, ought to be thoroughly acquainted with the Matter in question. Without which, he exposes himself to mistake so much the more blameable, because upon that account many People impute them to those that are very innocent of them; I mean, to the Authors translated. An hundred Examples of this Disorder might easily be shewn.

BODIN (JOHN), a Native of Angers, one of the most able Men that were in France in the XVIth Century, 'studied the Civil Law at Toulouse (a), and having 'taken his Degrees there, he read Law Lectures with great Applause of his 'Auditors (b). — At that time he designed to settle himself at Toulouse in the 'Quality of Professor of the Civil Law. And with this view, in order to get the 'good will of the Toulousains, he made his Oration de Instituenda in Republica juventute, 'which he dedicated to the People and Senate of Toulouse, and recited publickly in 'the Schools of that City.' It has also been said, 'that, with the same Design, he 'made the Epitaph of Clementia Isaura (c) [A] engraved at Toulouse in 1557, un-'der the Statue of the said Clementia. But at last he preferred Pleading to the 'Civil

(a) Menage, Remarques sur la vie de Pierre Ayrault, p. 141.

(b) See his Latin Letter to Pibrac, prefixed to his Republic.

(c) Who instituted the Floral Games of Toulouse, as is falsly pretended.

[A] It has been said - - - - - that he made the Epitaph of Clementia Isaura, engraved - - - - - - under her Statue.] Mr Menard asserts it in his Illustrious Men of Anjou (1); but Catel says, in his Memoirs of the History of Languedoc, that Bodin, who is thought to be Author of that Epitaph, was not so; but that Martin Gascon was the Author of it. Thus Mr Menage has expressed himself. Let us see Catel's Words: 'No Body doubts but the Inscription on 'the Pedestal of the said Statue is new, and done 'in the Year 1557; though it is uncertain by whom; 'for some say, that it was Bodin, who writ the Book 'on the Republic, when he was a Student at Tou-'louse; Others say, that it was an Advocate named 'Dutil; but I believe, it was an Advocate called 'Mr Martin Gascon, born in the Isle of Rhodes, who 'was Capitoul that Year, and a very good Latinist, according to the Testimony of the Learned 'Physician Ferrier, who in a small Poem, which he 'published concerning the excellent Men of Toulouse, 'speaks thus of the said Gascon:

Ipsaque de longis regionibus inclyta fama
Gasconum adduxit Rhodium, Ciceronis alumnum (2).

Their spreading Fame has brought from distant Rhodes
Gascon, great Tully's Scholar.

(1) Menage, Remarq. sur la vie de Pierre Ayrault, p. 141.

(2) Catel. Memoirs de l'Hist. du Languedoc, pag. 402.

[B] Loysel

' Civil Law, and left the School of Toulouſe for the Bar of Paris. Loyſel and Sammarthanus ſay, that he had no great Succeſs in his Pleading [B]. And doubtleſs this was the Reaſon that made him leave the Bar, to apply himſelf to the Compoſing of Books, wherein he ſucceeded admirably well. His firſt Performance was his Commentary upon Oppian's Books on Hunting, and his Tranſlation of thoſe Books into Latin Verſe.' He is accuſed of having been a Plagiary there [C]. I ſhall give the Liſt of his other Books [D] in a Remark, and ſhall not forget what concerns his Heptaplomeres, which never was printed, and wherein it is ſaid, that he

[B] Loyſell and Sammarthanus ſay, that he had no great ſucceſs in his pleading.] See, above, the words of Anthony Loyſel (3), to which add this Paſſage of Sammarthanus: ' Neque vero quam ' ſcriptis comparaverat exiſtimationem preſentia ſua ' minuebat, ſi quando in familiari hominum con' greſſu de quacunque re propoſita diſerte copio' ſeque diſputaret. Quo magis mirandum eſt, ho' minem ea facultate præditum inter nobiliores ' curiæ Pariſienſis advocatos locum obtinere non ' potuiſſe: præſertim cum æquales haberet Briſſonios, ' Paſcaſios, Pithœos, & alios cumplures, ingenii lau' de præſtantes viros, qui amœnioribus etiam diſ' ciplinis incumberent, nec eo minus celebriter in ' fori luce verſarentur (4). —— Nor did he, by his preſence, leſs any of the Credit, he had obtained by his Writings; for, in familiar Converſation, he would diſpute elegantly and copiouſly on any ſubject propoſed. Which makes it the more wonderful, that a Man endowed with ſuch Faculties could not obtain a Place amongſt the firſt Rate Advocates in the Court of Paris. Eſpecially as he had for his Cotemporaries, the Briſſon's, the Paſcaſius's and Pithœus's, and ſeveral other Men, eminent for great Parts, who applied themſelves to the pleaſanter Studies, and were not therefore the leſs famous and eminent in the Court.

(3) In the Remark [A], of the Article (PETER) AYRAULT, Citation (1).

(4) Sammarth. Elog. lib. iv. pag 92, 93.

[C] He wrote a Commentary on Oppian: he is accuſed of having been a Plagiary there.] ' James ' Bongars pretends, in one of his Letters to Conrad ' Ritterſhuſius, a Commentator and Tranſlator of ' Oppian, that Bodin had compoſed that Work out ' of the Writings of Turnebus, which ſeems very ' unlikely; ſince Bodin was not inferior in Learn' ing to Turnebus; and in 1555, when Bodin ' printed his Oppian, for which he had obtained ' a Licence in 1553, Turnebus was ſtill living; for ' he died not before the Year 1565. However, ' Turnebus himſelf complains, at the end of his E' dition of Oppian of 1555, that his Emendations ' on that Author had been ſtolen from him. Sep' tem ab hinc annis, leviter emendaveram Oppia' num de Venatione, partim animi conjecturâ, par' tim libri veteris ope. Eas emendationes quidam ' uſurpavit, & ſibi donavit: quas tamen non pu' tabam tanti, ut in furtivis rebus eſſe deberent. ' Eas à nobis vindicatas & recuperatas eſſe, nemo ' conqueri debebit: nam rerum furtivarum, lege, ' æterna eſt auctoritas. —— Seven Years ago I made ſome ſlight Emendations on Oppian's Book of Hunting, partly by conjecture, and partly by the aſſiſtance of an antient Book. A certain perſon has made uſe of theſe Emendations, and put them off for his own; 'tis true, I did not think them of ſo much Value, as to be worth ſtealing. Yet no Body ought to blame me for claiming and taking them again; for, by Law, I have a perpetual Right to things that have been ſtole from me. Which probably ought to be underſtood of Bodin. On the other ſide Bodin complains in his Method of Hiſtory, that a Grammarian had made uſe of his Commentary upon Oppian in an ungrateful manner. Quos ego de Venatione libros, cùm Latino verſu & Commentariis illuſtraſſem, quidam Grammaticus, quantum libuit de meo labore detrahens, iterum pervulgavit. —— Which Books on Hunting, after I had illuſtrated them with Latin Verſes and Notes, a certain Grammarian, extracting from my work what he thought fit, has publiſhed again. In the ſame Year 1555, William Morel printed the Tranſlation in Latin Verſe of Oppian's Books de Piſcatione, and Oppian's Books de Venatione in Latin Proſe: and 'tis likely Bodin meant that Tranſlation of ' Oppian's Books de Venatione (5).' Note that Bongars's Letter, quoted by Mr Menage, is to be found in the Eighty ſecond and Eighty third Pages of the Gallia Orientalis. It is dated from Francfort the fourth of April 1600. Mr Colomies's Father received a Copy of it in the Year 1648. He that ſent it him had it from Mr Gronovius, the Father, who had tranſcribed the Original at Nuremberg, in the Year 1632, in the Houſe of Nicholas Ritterſhuſius the Son of Conrad. There are many things diſadvantageous to Bodin in that Letter. That which concerns his Plagiariſm is conceived in theſe Terms: Jam edidiſſe illum lectiones Turnebi in Oppianum pro ſuis, nemo noſtrorum ignorat (6). —— Now we all know that he publiſhed Turnebus's Readings on Oppian for his own. Note alſo, that Mr Menage has given but a weak reaſon to juſtify him. It is grounded on Bodin's being not inferior in Learning to Turnebus. I believe, that, take all together, he is in the right; for without doubt Bodin was better skilled in the Civil-Law, Politics, and Modern Hiſtory, than Turnebus; but he was inferior to him in Critical and Philological Learning; now the Book in diſpute belongs to that kind of Knowlege,

(5) Menage, ubi ſupra, pag. 142.

(6) See Colomies's Gallia Orientalis, pag 83. See alſo Richerus. Letters, pag. 203.

[D] Here follows the Liſt of his other Books.] He publiſhed his Method of Hiſtory in the Year 1566, and his Diſcourſe on Coins, together with his Anſwer to the Paradoxes of Malateroit, concerning the advance of the Price of every thing, and the means to remedy it, in the Year 1568. His Republic was printed in Folio in the Year 1576, and ſeveral times afterwards in 8vo (7), and got him a very great Reputation. ' Mornac ſpeaks of it in ' theſe terms:

(7) See the Remark [N], Citation (48).

Jani Bodini Gallicam Rempublicam
Qui viderit, majus nihil fatebitur
In erudita luce priſci ſæculi.
Gallis hic, olim quod Quiriti Tullius.

Whoever reads John Bodin's Republic in French, will own, that the bright Learning of the Antients produced nothing greater. He is to the French, what Tully once was to the Romans.

' The Preſident Thuanus ſpeaks no leſs advanta' geouſly of that Work; tho' he ſpeaks leſs advan' tageouſly of the Author, accuſing him of Vanity, ' which he calls the Vice of the Angevins (8). O' pus magnum de Republica Gallicè publicavit: in ' quo, ut omni ſcientiarum genere, non tinctâ, ſed ' imbuti ingenii fidem fecit, ſic nonnullis, qui rectè ' judicant, non omnino ab oſtentationis innato gen' ti vitio vacuum ſe probavit. —— He publiſhed in French a large work, concerning a Commonwealth, in which as he gave proofs of a not ſuperficial, but ſolid, Skill in all kinds of Learning, ſo he ſhewed to a few, who judge well, that he was not free from the innate fault of his Nation, Vanity. Theſe great Encomiums on Bodin's Republic, put me in mind to impart to my Readers, what I heard Mr Naudé ſay once: That ' Ariſtotle's Rhetoric, Scaliger's Poetic, Charron's Wiſdom, and Bodin's Republic, were, of all Books, thoſe that were writ with moſt Art. In 1578. ' Bodin publiſhed his Tables of the Law, intitu' led, Juris univerſi Diſtributio. They were ' printed at Lyons by John de Tournes, for James ' Dupuy Bookſeller of Paris. In the Dedication ' of his Method of Hiſtory, he makes mention of ' that Work in theſe Terms: Juris univerſi for' mam ſic adumbravimus in Tabula quam tibi ex' hibuimus ſpectandam, ut ab ipſis cauſſis ſumma ' genera, generumque partitionem ad infima dedu' ceremus: ea tamen ratione, ut omnia membra ' inter ſe apta cohærerent. In quo veriſſimè à ' Platone dictum intellexi, nihil difficilius ac divi' nius, quàm rectè partiri. —— I have ſketched out the

(8) Menage is miſtaken; for Thuanus means the French in general, and not the Angevins in particular.

he set forth many impious things. 'His Reputation for a learned Man, and a fine 'Genius, excited the Curiosity of Henry III [E], who loved Men of Letters, and 'was pleased with their Conversation (d). Henry III therefore sent for Bodin; and 'as his Conversation was delightful (for he had read much and remembered all 'that he had read) Henry was mightily pleased with him. He had at first so great 'an esteem for him, that he imprisoned John de Serre, who had wrote an abusive 'Libel against Bodin, forbidding him on Pain of Death to publish that Piece (e). 'But his Favour was of no long Continuance. His Enviers soon did him such ill 'Offices with the King as took off the Regard he had for him. Seeing himself 'courted at that time by Francis of France, Duke of Alençon and Anjou, Brother of 'the Kings Francis II, Charles IX, and Henry III, he went to him. The Duke of 'Alençon made him Secretary of his Commands, one of the Masters of the Requests 'of his Palace, and Chief Justice in Eyre *, and carried him into England and 'Flanders, as one of his chief Counsellors. While he was in England, he had the 'Satisfaction and Honour to see his Books of the Republic, which the English had 'translated into Latin, publickly read in the University of Cambridge [F]. This 'obliged him to translate them afterwards into Latin.—— The History of Flanders 'takes notice that it was he, who advised the Duke of Alençon to seize Antwerp. 'After the Death of the Duke of Alençon, which happened a little after the Enterprize

(d) Menage, ibid. pag. 145.

(e) See the Remark [O], Citation (69).

* See the Abbot le Laboureur, pag. 385, of his IIId Vol. of Memoirs of Castelnau.

'the form of the whole Civil-Law in the Table I presented for your perusal in such a manner, that I have deduced the highest Genera from their very causes, and followed the Division of the Genera to the very lowest Species. Yet so as that all the Parts aptly cohere. I experienced the Truth of this Saying of Plato, that nothing is harder or more divine than to divide aright. Afterwards in 1579, 'he published his Demonomanie des Sorciers, which 'he dedicated to Christopher Thuanus, first President 'of the Parliament of Paris; at the end whereof, 'he added a Refutation of the Book de Lamiis 'writ by John Wierus, Physician to the Duke 'of Cleves. In 1576, he had published a Rela'tion of the States of Blois. That Relation was 'printed, but without the Author's Name. And 'a little before his Death he wrote his Theatre 'de la nature universelle. Besides all these Books 'he wrote a Dialogue concerning Religions, 'which has not yet been printed, intituled Hep'taplomeron, sive de Abditis rerum sublimium ar'canis. In that Dialogue he gave the advantage 'to the Jewish Religion; which made many Peo'ple believe, that he was a Jew ------ In the 'fifth Chapter of his Method of History, he makes 'mention of his Book de Decretis. Sed hæc uberius 'in libro, de Decretis disseruimus. —— But I have 'spoken more at large of these things in a Book de Decretis. That Book is not printed. He or'dered by his Will (of which I have seen the 'Original) that his Books de Imperio, & Juris'dictione, & Legis Actionibus, & Decretis, & 'Judiciis, should be burnt, which was done be'fore his Death in his presence. Augur Ferrier 'of Toulouse, a Physician and Astronomer, and John 'de Serre of Montpellier, and Peter de Mostail 'wrote against him. He answered them under 'the Name of René Herpin, who was a Man of 'the City of Angers (9).' Mr Teissier ascribes to him the French Version of the Latin Speech, made by Charles des Cars, Bishop of Langres, to the Embassadors of Poland in the City of Metz, in the Year 1573 (10). 'Et Consilium de prin'cipe recte instituendo, & paradoxon quod nec 'virtus ulla in mediocritate, nec summum homi'nis bonum in virtutis actione consistere possit, & 'historica narratio profectionis & inaugurationis 'Alberti & Isabellæ Austriæ Archiducum, & eorum 'in Belgio adventus (11). —— Advice for the good 'Education of a Prince, and a Paradox that there 'is no Virtue in Mediocrity, nor the chief Good of 'Man in the Exercise of Virtue, and an Histori'cal Narration of the Journey, and Inauguration of 'Albert, and Isabella, Arch-Duke, and Arch'Duchess, of Austria; and their arrival in the 'Low-Countries.' He is mistaken as to this last Book; for Bodin died before that Journey of the Arch-Duke Albert and the Infanta Isabella Clara Eugenia.

(9) Menage, Remarks on the life of P. Ayrault, pag. 142, 143.

(10) Du Verdier vau-Privas mentions it, pag. 654, of his Bibliotheque Françoise.

(11) Teiss. Addit. aux Eloges, Tom. II. p. 249.

As for the Manuscript which Mr Menage calls Heptaplomeron, &c. of which Mr Huet spoke in his Demonstratio Evangelica, as of an abominable Book (12), I refer to the News from the Common-wealth of Learning (13), to avoid repetitions. Mr Teissier is mistaken when he says, that Mr Diecman published that Work of Bodin at Leipsic (14). He ought to have said, that many Particulars concerning that Book, are to be found in a Schediasma inaugurale &c. An Inaugural Oration on the Naturalism of sundry Persons, but especially John Bodin, published by Mr Diecman, at Kiel, in the Year 1683, and reprinted in the Year following at Leipsic in 12mo, and at Jena in 4to 1700.

(12) Mr Menage in the Life of Ayrault, pag. 143, cites three Passages out of it.

(13) June 1684. Art. iii.

(14) Teiss. Addit. aux Eloges, pag. 250. Edit. 1696.

[§ 'Tis known that Bodin followed the Duke of Anjou, into the Low-Countries. Busbeck, in the fifteenth Epistle of his Embassy to France, says, that of three different Accounts, which appeared in 1583, immediately after the attempt of that Duke upon Antwerp, the second, which was in French, and in form of a Letter, went for Bodin's. REM. CRIT.]

[E] His Reputation for a learned Man, and fine genius, excited the Curiosity of Henry III.] Thuanus relates this in a manner very glorious for Bodin. 'Dum hæc scriberet à Rege Henrico III, 'qui literatis disceptationibus per otium oblectaba'tur, ad familiare secretum cum plerisque aliis viris 'doctis sæpius est admissus, magnamque laudem ex 'iis reportavit, quippe qui ingenium in numerato 'haberet, & paratum ad omnia, quæ proponerentur 'pulcherrimarum rerum copiam qua pollebat acri 'memoria effunderet (15). That is to say, accord-(15) Thuanus, lib. cxvii. p. 778. ing to Mr Teissier's Translation: 'Whilst he was 'compoſing that Book, King Henry III, who, at 'his leisure Hours, took delight in the Conver'sation of the Learned, discoursed several times 'with him in the presence of some Learned Men, 'and those Conferences procured him great Ho'nour; for having a ready Wit, and all the Trea'sures of his Mind as it were in present Money, 'he produced a prodigious number of curious 'Things, which his excellent Memory supplied him 'with extempore.' This Narrative of Thuanus contains an Anachronism, which Mr Menage should have rectify'd, but on the contrary has adopted. Thuanus pretends, that Bodin continued still in favour with Henry III, when that Author was about his Demonomanie. He supposes also that Bodin, when he found himself out of favour, apply'd to the Duke of Alençon, and obtained an honourable Post in his House. This is confounding times. He had not undertaken to write the Book intituled de la Demonomanie des Sorciers, but in consequence of a Judgment that had been given against a Witch, to which he had been called the thirtieth of April 1578 (16), and he was Master of the Requests, and Counsellor to the Duke of Alençon, in the Year 1571 (17). Hereafter (18) we shall see a Passage of Thuanus, which will inform us, that Bodin's Conduct in the States of Blois, in the Year 1576, lost him the King's favour.

(16) Bodin, Preface to his Demonomanie.

(17) Id. de Republica, lib. I. cap. x. pag. 255. Edit. Uriel. 1602.

[F] The Satisfaction and Honour to see his Books, of the Republic, read in the University of Cambridge.] I have often observed, that, in order to reduce within due bounds, the Ideas which Authors give of the glorious Prosperity of Persons they speak of, it is necessary to consult, that very Man, on whom they be-

(18) In the Remark [I].

' prize upon Antwerp, Bodin finding himself frustrated in his Hopes resolved to re-
' treat. He retired to Laon, where he married the Sister of a Magistrate [G].' He had an Office in the Presidial Court of That City [H], and it was probably on account of that Office, that he was deputed in the Year 1576, by the third State of Vermandois, to the States of Blois: though, in his Account of those States, he stiles himself only Deputy of the third State of Vermandois (f). He shewed there a very good Disposition to maintain the Rights of the People [I], and he believed that to be the Reason why he did not obtain the Office of Master of Requests, which had been designed for him. He had the Courage strenuously to oppose those who would have had all the King's Subjects forced to profess the Catholic Religion (g). He represented vigorously, that That Request was a Violation of the Edicts, and that such a Violation would necessarily produce a War, which had been so often fatal to all the Kingdom. The Freedom, wherewith he represented this, raised him many Enemies; wherefore perceiving that there was a Combination to make that Petition pass, and that by reason of the fatal Blindness of the King and his Counsellors, those who might have prevented that ill Resolution, durst not say any thing, he abstained from proposing his Opinion, which was prejudicial to himself, and could do no good to the Public (h). Some Cities complained, that he had gone beyond his Commission, by opposing that Request; but the King's Council, who examined those Complaints, discharged him (i). Every body knows, that in the Ragguagli

(f) Menage, Remarks on the Life of P. Ayrault, pag. 146.

(g) Thuanus, lib. lxiii. pag. 183. ad ann. 1576. See the Remark [I].

(h) Thuanus is guilty of a Contradiction, and has refuted this himself. See the end of the Remark [I].

(i) Ex Thuano ibid. See the Remark [I].

stow so much Glory: and then we find that tho' he is not sparing of his own Praises, yet what he says is sufficient to rectify the Hyperboles of his Historians. Bodin will not be so clear an instance of this, as I could wish; however, I may say, that his Expressions are not so distinct as those of Sammarthanus. See here what he says: ' Tametsi
' nova occasione ad id (19) maxime impulsus essem,
' cum Londini Olybium Gallum hominem in pri-
' vatis illustrium virorum ædibus; alium item apud
' Cantabriges in ipsa Academia difficili ac molesta
' ratione Anglis Rempublicam nostram interpretari
' comperissem (20). —— Tho' I was principally moved to it on a new occasion, having understood that Olybius a Frenchman explained my Republic in private Families of great Men at London; and another Person at Cambridge, in the University itself, after a difficult and troublesome Manner.' Those who know that there are private and public Lectures in the Colleges of the Universities of England, will find that Sammarthanus goes beyond Bodin; for he says positively, that Bodin's Republic was explained at Cambridge in the publick Auditories: ' Quem (Andium ducem) in Angliam secutus, cum
' illic E SUGGESTU PUBLICO sua scripta juvenibus enarrari comperisset, ex hoc inusitatæ
' gloriolæ proventu non mediocrem vigiliarum suarum fructum sibi visus est collegisse (21). —— When he followed him [the Duke of Anjou] into England, finding that his Writings were explained to the youth at THE PUBLIC LECTURES, he thought he had reaped an extraordinary fruit of his Lucubrations, in this small Crop of uncommon Glory.' Mr Menage has followed the same Notion.

(19) That is, to translate his Republic into Latin.

(20) Bodinus Epist. Dedicat. Interp. de Repub. the Latin Edition.

(21) Sammarth. Elog. lib. iv. pag. 93.

[G] He retired to Laon, where he married.] ' He married Frances Trouillart, the Widow of Claudius Guyart, Comptroller of the King's Demesnes in Vermandois, and Sister of Nicolas Trouillart the ' King's Attorney in the Bailiwic, and Presidial ' Court of Laon. The Contract of his Marriage is ' dated February 25, 1576 (22).' This date shews, that it is necessary to rectify Mr Menage's Narrative. I have followed it, but it was with a design to shew the defect of it in this place. Mr Menage supposes that Bodin went into England, and into the Low-Countries, with the Duke of Alençon, before the Year 1576; he will have it also, that the Duke of Alençon's Death happened before the same Year; but it is a great falsity. That Duke went into England in the Year 1579. He returned thither in the Year 1582. He attempted to make himself Master of Antwerp in the Year 1583, and he died the Year following. Menage should not therefore have said, that Bodin, being frustrated in his hopes after the Death of That Prince, retired to Laon, and married there; but that he returned home to Laon, where he had married in the Year 1576. Note, that he had three Children by his Wife, two Sons, Eliat and John, and one Daughter. He out-lived Eliat, and John died young and unmarried. The Daughter fell distracted, was never married, and lived above Eighty Years (23).

(22) Menage, Remarks on the Life of P. Ayrault, pag. 146.

(23) Id. ibid. pag. 147, 148.

[H] He had an Office in the Presidial Court of Laon.] ' Thuanus says in the Hundred and seventeenth Book of his History, that he was Lieutenant General there. Mr Menard says in his Illustrious Men of Anjou, that he was the King's Attorney there. Mr Joly in his Notes upon Loysel's Dialogue concerning the Advocates of Paris, and Mr de Mezeray in his History of France, both of them say that he was the King's Advocate there. Sammarthanus in the Elogy of Bodin, says in general, that he was a Magistrate there. It is certain, that he was the King's Attorney there in the room of his Brother-in-law, the Sieur Trouillart. He says in his Will, that he is one of the poorest Attorneys of the King of France (24).' Observe, That Thuanus supposes that he had not the Lieutenant-General's Place till after the Death of the Duke of Alençon.

(24) Menage, ubi supra.

[I] He shewed a very good Disposition to maintain the Rights of the People.] ' To use the words of Mr Mezeray. He remonstrated there with the ' Freedom of an old Gaul, that the Funds of the ' Royal Demesnes belonged to the Provinces, and ' that the King had only the use of them. King Henry III did not take this ill, saying, that Bodin ' was an honest Man. See Bodin's Relation. He ' also remonstrated there, that the Deputies of two ' Bodies could decide nothing to the prejudice of ' the third: And upon his Remonstrance, the Deputies ' of the Ecclesiastical Order, and of the Nobility, who ' had been of the contrary Opinion, changed their ' Mind: which made King Henry III say, that Bodin was that Day Master of the States. See the ' seventh Chapter of the third Book of Bodin's Republic (25).' See also the Latin Letter which he wrote to Pibrac, prefixed to the French Editions of his Republic, and you will find there what follows: ' Res ipsa planum fecit, me in legatione ad Galliæ
' conventus pro populi commodis adversus potentiorum opes, non sine capitis mei periculo, dimicaviss: ac primum omnium ne bella civilia,
' popularis fundi calamitas, renovarentur, acerrimè restitisse: deinde authorem fuisse ne quis è
' numero legatorum cooptaretur, qui populi rogationibus judicandis interesset: contra quam ab
' omnibus ordinibus, una omnium voce decretum
' erat, cùm res ipsa popularis ac speciosa videretur, esset tamen à populi commodis valdè aliena: ego ad collegium pontificum & patricios ire
' jussus, ordinis nostri decreto, illos à propositâ,
' susceptaque sententia deduxi. Cùm verò prædia
' publica sub hastâ vendere, & quidem alienatione sempiternâ, ac tributa duplicare specie levandæ plebis propositum esset, idque modis omnibus tentaretur, nos tanto studio intercessimus,
' ut cùm nihil obtineri potuisset, Rex ipse Homaro Burdegalensium Præside, Dureto Præside
' Molineorum, Ripuario Aquitaniæ Syndico, ac
' plerisque aliis audientibus dixerit, Bodinum ab
' ejus commodis non modò dissentire, verumetiam collegarum voluntates ac studia à se avertere
' consuesse. Si tamen procurator regius tunc fuissem,

(25) Id. ibid.

Ragguagli of Boccalini, he was condemned to be burnt, as an Athieſt, notorio Atheiſta, for having ſaid in his Books on a Republic, that Liberty of Conſcience ought to be granted to Sectaries (k). 'The Abbot le Laboureur, ſays in the 'Three hundred Eighty fifth Page of the ſecond Volume of his Caſtelnau, that 'he had been Lieutenant-General of the Table of Marble (l). It is certain, that in the 'time (k) Ragguagli di Parnaſſo, Centur. 1. cap. lxiv. pag. 195.

(l) Menage, Remarks on the Life of P. Ayrault, pag. 146.

'iſſem, non aliter ſentirem: quia neceſſe eſt ſi 'lien intumeſcat, ut caput ipſum, ac cætera 'membra contabeſcant; quid igitur facere decuit 'plebis legatum? Cùm autem nullis illecebris fle-'cti potuiſſem, omnes penè Viromanduorum ci-'vitates, quæ me abſentem, & certè repugnan-'tem, communibus ſuffragiis elegerant, literis quo-'rundam perſuaſæ, procuratores ad conventus mi-'ſerunt, ut Bodinum, ſi fieri poſſet, à ſuſcepta 'legatione revocarent, quaſi qui duplices in Re-'publica religiones tueretur: ſed non prius pro-'curatorias tabulas in comitio aperuerant, quam 'ſumma cum ignominia exploſi fuere. Ex eo tu-'men quantum detrimenti meis rationibus alla-'tum ſit, ſatis intelligunt, qui ſæpius audierunt 'libellorum in regia magiſtrum me deſignatum à 'Principe antea fuiſſe. —— The thing itſelf ſhows 'plainly, that, during my deputation to the States of 'France, it was not without hazard of my Life, 'that I had contended for the Privileges of the Peo-'ple againſt the Power of the great, and firſt that 'I made a ſtrong reſiſtance, againſt renewing the 'Civil-Wars, the deſtruction of the Peoples ſubſtance: 'then, that I was the occaſion that no body was 'choſen from among the Deputies, to be preſent at 'judging the Bills of the People, contrary to what 'had been reſolved by the Unanimous Voice of all 'the State: the thing ſeeming ſpecious and popular, 'but being in reality contrary to the Intereſt of the 'People. I being ordered by a Decree of our State, 'to go to the College of Eccleſiaſtics, and to the No-'bility, brought them over from their former Reſolu-'tions. And when it was propoſed to ſet the Public 'Lands to ſale, and alienate them for ever, and dou-'ble the Taxes, on pretence of eaſing the common 'People, and all means were tried to bring this a-'bout, I oppoſed it ſo earneſtly, that, when nothing 'could be done, the King himſelf declared in the 'preſence of Homar, Preſident of Bourdeaux, and Duret, Preſident of Molin, and Ripar, Syndic of Aquitain, and ſeveral others, that Bodin was not 'only himſelf averſe from his Intereſt, but alſo uſed 'to turn the inclinations of his Colleagues againſt 'him. But, tho' I had been the King's Attorney, 'at that time I could not have been of another mind: 'becauſe if the Spleen grows too big, the Head it-'ſelf, and other Members, muſt of neceſſity pine a-'way: what then could a Deputy of the People do? 'But when I could not be moved by any Allurements, 'almoſt all the Cities of Virmandois, who had choſen 'me by common Suffrage in my abſence, and againſt 'my Will, perſuaded by letters from certain Perſons, 'ſent their Attornies to the States, to recal Bodin if 'poſſible from the Office he had undertaken, as one 'who was for two Religions in the State, but their 'Letters of Procuration were no ſooner opened in the 'Aſſembly, than they were rejected with the great-'eſt Ignominy. What detriment this was to my 'affairs is well known to thoſe who have often heard 'that I was before nominated by the King, to be 'Maſter of Requeſts in his Palace.'

What Thuanus ſays, concerning theſe ſame things, is moſt glorious for Bodin. He ſays, That the Reſolutions of the States having been preſented to the King, it was propoſed to the Third State, to appoint Twelve Commiſſioners to aſſiſt at the Examination, that was to be made of thoſe Reſolutions in the King's Council (26). This was approved at firſt; but when the thing was examined again, Bodin was of Opinion, that no ſuch thing ought to be done, and adviſed his Colleagues not to nominate any Deputy, and to oppoſe the Deputations which the Clergy and the Nobility intended to make. He was ſent to the other two Houſes, and ſhewed them by ſeveral Reaſons how dangerous it was to commit the Deciſion of what had been asked by the three States of the Kingdom to a ſmall number of Perſons; that tho' the Commiſſioners ſhould be proof againſt Bribes, yet the King's Preſence might intimidate them, and the Solicitations and Cabals of the Courtiers ſeduce them. He was anſwered, he made a Reply, and at laſt gained his Cauſe by the firmneſs wherewith he gave them to underſtand, that the Third State would oppoſe their Deputations. Henry III was vexed at this, and bore Bodin an ill-will for it. 'Itaque Rex Bodinum, 'quem unice diligebat, & ob raram eruditionem 'ac multam variarum rerum experientiam, dum 'cibum caperet, libenter audiebat, ab eo tempore 'non tam benigno vultu dignatus eſt, quod ordi-'nib. prioris ſententiæ mutandæ auctor extitiſſet, '& ea in re quantum ad circumagenda ordinum 'ingenia momenti haberet, minus grato regi ex-'perimento docuiſſet (27). —— Bodin was a par-'ticular Favourite of the King, and he loved to hear 'him when he was at Table, for his extraordinary 'Learning, and great experience in various things: 'but, from this time, he looked leſs favourably on 'him, becauſe he had perſuaded the States to change 'their former Opinion, and ſhewed in that affair, 'by an experiment, no ways pleaſing to the King, 'of what conſequence he was to ſway the diſpoſitions 'of the States.' That Prince cauſed it to be repreſented to the States that he was under a neceſſity of alienating part of his Demeſnes: 'Neceſſitate, quæ 'potentiſſimum telum eſt, urgente, id licere con-'tenderet, quippe cum conſtet, ſalutem populi 'ſupremam legem eſſe debere (28). —— He inſiſted, 'that ſince neceſſity, that moſt powerful weapon, urg-'ged, the thing might be done; becauſe it was cer-'tain, that the ſafety of the People ought to be 'the ſupreme Law: but they rejected that Propoſal, and it was Bodin chiefly, who brought them to that Reſolution; for the moſt conſiderable Deputies being corrupted with promiſes were already wavering. 'Peſſimum de domanio affectatæ neceſſi-'tatis obtentu alienando commentum, Bodino præ-'cipue auctore (nam præcipui jam promiſſis cor-'rupti murabant) evanuit, quod ſi locum tunc ha-'buiſſet, ſub principe profuſo miſere dilapidatum 'fuiſſet (29). —— That wicked contrivance of alie-'nating the Royal Demeſnes, on pretence of feigned 'neceſſity, came to nothing, chiefly by the means of 'Bodin, (for the moſt conſiderable being corrupted 'with promiſes were already wavering) if the deſign 'had ſucceeded at that time, miſerable waſte would 'have been made under that profuſed Prince. The ſame Bodin ſtoutly oppoſed the Cabals of the Party of Meſſieurs de Guiſe, who would have had the War againſt the Huguenots (30) reſolved on. We may infer from this that Mezeray is miſtaken, when he aſſerts, that the King praiſed Bodin for oppoſing the alienation of the Demeſnes. He confounds two things which he ſhould have diſtinguiſhed. Bodin's Conduct was approved by the King's Council, when ſome Cities complained that he had oppoſed the Propoſal of not ſuffering two Religions in the Kingdom; 'Homines à factioſis ſubornati vene-'runt, qui Bodinum contra mandata ſua inter-'ceſſiſſe dicerent, quibus in conſiſtorio regio audi-'tis, nihilominus pronunciatum eſt, Bodinum ni-'hil niſi rectè feciſſe (31). —— There came 'Men ſuborned by the factious, who ſaid that Bo-'din had interpoſed contrary to his Orders; they 'had a hearing in the King's Council, but never-'theleſs it was declared, that Bodin had done no 'thing amiſs: this happened before the two Affairs which we have juſt now read in the paſſage of Thuanus, and which made Bodin loſe King Henry IIId's favour. Let us alſo obſerve a Contradiction of Thuanus. He ſays, Page 183, that, when Bodin perceived that his Remonſtrances againſt the Combinations of thoſe, who were for infringing the Edicts of Pacification, would be in vain, he abſtained from ſpeaking about that matter. 'Cum 'videret homo futuri providus conjurationæ factæ 'eò animos inclinare, & fatali Regis ac conſiliari-'orum ejus cœcitate effici, ut ab illis, qui pro-'hibere poterant, præpoſtera prudentia in ea re 'diſſimularetur, hujuſmodi publicis ſibi pernicio-'ſis

(26) Thuanus, lib. lxiii. p. 187.

(27) Thuanus, lib. lxiii. p. 187.

(28) Id. ibid.

(29) Id. ibid. pag. 188. col. 2.

(30) Id. ibid. col. 2.

(31) Id. ibid. pag. 183.

time of Charles IX he was the King's Attorney, in a Commiſſion for the Foreſts of Normandy [K].' He had been a Proteſtant, 'yet in 1589 he perſuaded the Inhabitants of Laon to declare for the Duke of Mayenne [L]; remonſtrating to them, that the Riſing of ſo many Cities, and of ſo many Parliaments in favour of Meſſieurs de Guiſe, ought not to be called a Rebellion, but a Revolution (m); and at that time he printed a Letter on That Subject (n). —— He died of the Plague at Laon, in 1596 —— in his Sixty ſeventh Year [M],' and was buried in ſis & in publicum nihil profuturis admonitionibus deinceps abſtinuit (32) —— When, he who was a Man of great foreſight, perceived that, by Combination amongſt them, they all leaned that way, and that the fatal blindneſs of the King, and his Council, made thoſe who could have hindered it, out of a prepoſterous Prudence, diſſemble in the matter, he abſtained from ſuch public Remonſtrances, which were hurtful to himſelf, and not like to profit the public.' But in Pag. 188, he tells us that this ſame Civilian vigorouſly oppoſed the Faction of Meſſieurs de Guiſe, even when the Reſolutions of the States had been preſented to the King, and it ſeemed that the Commiſſion of the Deputies was expired. The Oppoſition was concerning the deſign of renewing the War againſt the Proteſtants. The Partiſans of the Duke of Guiſe had gained the Clergy and the Nobility: thoſe two Bodies had ſeveral private Meetings to put off the Propoſals of Peace. Bodin, who, becauſe the Deputies of Paris were abſent, was then at the head of the Third State, oppoſed thoſe practices with great Courage (33); and when they told him that the thing had been thus reſolved upon in the States, and that the Aſſembly had no longer any Authority; he anſwered them boldly, you are then a company of Rebels, ſince you acknowledge that your Deputation is ended, and yet you do not leave off meeting together: But I am of another Opinion, we may yet preſent a Petition to the King; the Aſſemblies wherein they treated of the Peace at Rome, were not required to be ſo ſolemn as thoſe wherein the beginning of the War was in agitation: 'Et cum illi ita in comitiis conventum dicerent, & poſtulatis ſemel Regi obtatis nullas ordinum partes eſſe, quippe exſtinctis mandatis, audacter reſpondit, in perduellionis crimen ipſos incurrere, qui eum poteſtatem agendi vel propria confeſſione non habeant, tamen cottidie conventicula celebrent, verum ſe aliter cenſere, & licere adhuc Regi ſupplicare. Nam ut &c (34).' It was neceſſary that I ſhould ſhew Thuanus's contradiction: for he had conſiderably leſſened Bodin's Reputation without any Reaſon.

(m) Menage, ib. pag. 147.

(n) Dated from Laon the 29th of January 1590. Id. ibid.

(32) Id. Ibid.

(33) Summa fiducia interceſſit. Id. pag. 188.

(34) Id. Ibid.

[K] He was the King's Attorney in a Commiſſion for the Foreſts of Normandy.] 'Maſter John Bodin, Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, perſuaded King Charles IX, that the Right of Tiers and Danger, was a general Right over all the Foreſts of Normandy, and took the care of that Inquiry upon himſelf, as the King's Attorney for the Reformation. There was hardly any Family in the Province, but what he proceeded againſt. He himſelf ſays in his Writings, that he made Four-hundred Cafes ready for Trial: And he carried the matter ſo far, that there was nothing wanting for the Execution of his Deſign, but the actual Diſpoſſeſſion of all thoſe, who had any Foreſts. All Normandy was in commotion at his Undertaking, and the Parliament met, ſeveral times, about that matter: They appointed Deputies; and the Nobility followed their Example. At laſt the King was moved with their Complaints, and convinced by the Reaſons which were repreſented to him. And to put a ſtop to that Search, which had laſted ſeveral Years, he made an Edict in the Year 1571, whereby he ordered the Alienation of the Rights of Tiers and Danger, which belonged to him, on the Foreſts of Normandy; and he acknowledged by that ſame Edict, that thoſe Foreſts were but few, and that the Revenue which he drew from them, was inconſiderable. Bodin, who could not yield, oppoſed the regiſtring of it: But the King ſet forth a Declaration, whereby, without having any regard to his Oppoſition and Proteſtations, which he declared void, he ordered it to be put in execution (35).' I thought this Paſſage deſerved to be ſet down at length: Firſt, Becauſe it contains a fact that is curious, and but little known. Secondly, Becauſe it ſerves to diſcover Bodin's Temper, I mean, his Ardour, his Activity, his Vigilance, and his Steadineſs.

(35) Gérard, defenſes pour les particuliers qui poſſedent des bois en Normandie, contre la pretenſion des Droits de Tiers & Danger, apud Menage, ubi ſupra, p. 146, 147.

He himſelf tells us ſome Circumſtances of his Proceedings, which will confirm the thing. 'And I remember, that Charles IX having ordered his Letters Patents, in the Year M D LXX, for a general Regulation of the Waters and Foreſts in Normandy, which drew after it the Cognizance of the fineſt part of his Demeſne, the Preſidents and Counſellors of the Parliament of Roan were forbidden to take any Cognizance of it: And altho' they uſed all poſſible Endeavours to prevent that Prohibition, yet they at laſt agreed to it, after I had preſented to them ſeveral Repeated Commands from the King, and ſued xxii Counſellors, and the firſt Preſident ſeverally for Cafes reſulting from the Commiſſion, and the whole City of Roan, for the Rights which they claimed againſt the King, and which was the Reaſon why I obtained the Prohibition (36).'

(36) Bodin de la Republ. liv. iii, cap. ii. pag. 381. See alſo the VIth Book, pag. 1031.

[L] He had been a Proteſtant; yet, in 1589, he perſuaded the Inhabitants of Laon to declare for the Duke of Mayenne.] Mr Menage ſays, that he diſcovered that Bodin was a Proteſtant, by one of his Letters to John Bautru des Matras, a famous Advocate in the Parliament of Paris (37). Mr Colomies publiſhed part of that Letter in his Gallia Orientalis (38). It is as clear as day, that it is a Letter from a good Huguenot: It is not dated; it appears only that it was written after the firſt Civil-War: I mean, that which was ended in the Month of March, 1563. Thuanus ſays, that the League, having ſent Orders to Laon, not to acknowledge King Henry III any more; Bodin, who had been a Proteſtant, and who was never ſince an Enemy to the Reformed Religion, praiſed the Conduct of the League, and by the Biſhop's Advice made a Speech to the People, and removed the Scruples and Fears of the Inhabitants (39). He did not ſcruple to call the King a perfidious Man, and an Hypocrite, nor to foretel him miſchief; he is, ſaid he, the Sixty third King of France, and he ſhall be the laſt: as the Climacterical Year Sixty three is commonly the laſt of Human Life. In this manner he ſtirred up the City of Laon to join with the Leaguers: He writ a Letter on that (40) Subject, which was printed (41). Thus the Nicodemites do ſometimes more harm than an open Enemy; they know that they are ſuſpected, and therefore for fear of being undone, if they do not remove thoſe Suſpicions, they ſhew more Zeal for the prevailing Party, than thoſe who have already given ſufficient Proofs of the ſame Zeal. Obſerve theſe Words of Thuanus: Videri regem huic regno Francico fatalem, & ultimum ex ea familia fore. —The King ſeemed fatal to this Kingdom of France, and would be the laſt of that Family. What did Bodin mean by this Prognoſtication? Did he pretend that Henry III ſhould be the laſt King of the Branch of Valois? He needed be no great Prophet to foretel that, of a Prince, who was the only one remaining of that Branch, and was married to a young Woman that was barren. Did he pretend that no Prince of the third Race ſhould aſcend the Throne after Henry III? In that caſe the Event has given him the lye; and yet Thuanus makes a great Account of Bodin's Predictions. 'He repaired that (42) Fault by an admirable Prediction of the unhoped for Iſſue of thoſe Troubles; for though there was no likelyhood of a Peace, he publiſhed before-hand both the Year and the Month wherein it would be concluded, and the Event anſwered what he had foretold (43):'

(37) Menage, ubi ſupra, pag. 147.

(38) Pag. 76. & ſeq.

(39) Thuan. lib. xciv. pag. 262. ad ann. 1589.

(40) To Preſident Briſſon.

(41) Thuanus, lib. xciv. p. 262.

(42) He means the Fault which Bodin committed, by ſaying many things that were injurious to King Henry III, and to the King of Navarre.

[M] He died - - - - - - in 1596 - - - - - - in his Sixty ſeventh Year.] He ſays in his Will, dated the (43) Id. lib. cxvii. pag. 771. cited by Teiſſier addit. Tom. II. pag. 247.

in the Church of the Franciscans in the same City, as he had ordered by his Will (o). He had been a Carmelite in his Youth, if we may believe Thuanus; but Mr Baudry, Advocate in the Great-Council, and Grand Nephew of Bodin, told Mr Menage several times, that Thuanus had been misinformed in That Particular (p). It seems to me, that there is as much Exaggeration in the Praises which Gabriel Naudé bestowed upon Bodin, as Injustice in the Contempt which Cujacius, Scaliger, and some others have treated him with [N]. Possevin is not the only Man, who accuses the seventh of June, 1596, that he was above Sixty-six Years of Age (44); which confutes those who say, that he died in the Year 1585 (45), and those who affirm that he lived above Seventy Years (46), or that he lived but Fifty-five Years (47). Note, that the Epistle Dedicatory of his Universæ Naturæ Theatrum, is dated from Laon the Twenty fifth of February, 1596. This is a little mortifying to those who place his Death in the Year 1585.

(o) Id. ibid. pag. 148.

(p) Id. ibid. pag. 141.

[N] As much Exaggeration in the Praises which Gabriel Naudé bestows on him as Injustice in the Contempt which Cujacius, Scaliger, and some others have treated him with.] Naudé made this Judgment of Bodin, in a Book which he published in 1625. 'This 'first Man of France, John Bodin ------- after 'having, with a wonderful quickness of Wit, accompanied with a solid Judgment, treated of all 'Subjects Divine, Natural, and Civil, would perhaps have forgot that he was a Man, and would infallibly have been taken by us for a Superior 'Intelligence, if he had not left some Marks and 'Foot-steps of his Humanity in his Demonomanie, 'which was, as the late most Serene King of Great-Britain well observed †, majori collecta studio quam scripta judicio: collected with more pains than wrote with Judgment. Perhaps the Reason 'of it is, Because that great Genius, who understood the Holy Language very well, applied himself, more than was requisite, to the Doctrine 'of the Rabbies and Talmudists, quibus, as the Jesuit Possevin observes ‡, hoc libro tam videtur addictus, ut ad eos sæpius recurrat quàm ad Evangelium (48). —— To whom he seems so addicted that he often recurs to them in this Book, than to the Gospel. In 1627, Naudé published his Advice how to erect a Library, and observed that if there be any Question about Bodin's Republic it must be inferred, that it ought to be taken in, because the Author was one of the most famous and renowned Men in his Age, and who, among the Moderns, treated first of that 'Subject, because the matter of it is very necessary, 'and very much sought after at this present time, 'and because the Book is common, translated into several Languages, and printed almost every 'five or six Years (49).' Add to this, what he said to Mr Menage (50), and what he published in his Bibliographia politica (51), where he does not seem to be in cool Blood when he praises Bodin, but rather to be seized with the most violent Rapture, that ever raised the Hyperboles of Poets to the Skies. It being a book which may easily be had, and the Passage concerning Bodin containing many Lines, I refer my Readers to it, and shall copy nothing out of it.

Now let us speak of Cujacius's Contempt. We are informed by a Letter from Bongars, that Cujacius having heard that he was censured in Bodin's Republic, and not being able to find that Book at the Booksellers, he borrowed it of Bongars (52), and some Days after, he declaimed against Bodin, above two Hours. That Lecture of Cujacius was sent to Bodin, and obliged him to put a Latin Epistle before the Second Edition of his Republic, wherein he treated Cujacius roughly. But he made good use of his remarks, for he left out in that Edition all that Cujacius had censured, eorum quæ Cujacius notaverat in ista altera editione nec volam reliquit nec vestigium (53). Cujacius answered in the Thirty eighth Chapter of the eighth Book of his Observations, and made use of the Anagram Andius fine bono, to denote his Antagonist. See Mr Menage, who observes besides, that Bodin had abused Cujacius without naming him, in these Words of the Preface to his Method of History. 'Hostium aspectum ferre non magis possunt, quàm is qui in 'Scholis Biturigum tanta cum gloria florebat: id 'est, Strabo inter cœcos acutissimè cernebat. Cum 'in totum venisset, de levissima quæstione consultus obmutuit: non sine acerba Riandi reprehensione (54). —— They can no more bear the sight of an Enemy than he who flourished with so much Glory, in the Schools of Bourges; that is, an owl among Bats could see clearest. When he came into the Court, being asked a very trifling question, he was speechless: For which he had a very severe reprimand from Riandus.' Observe by the by, that Moreri, and several others, who say, that Bodin was called Andius fine bono, because of his Poverty, are mistaken, Cujacius made no Allusion to Bodin's Fortune in that Anagram; he only considered the Qualities of his mind. A certain Author gives out, that Queen Elizabeth made use of that Expression, speaking to our Bodin, and he quotes Burgoldensis (55). He is mistaken in his Quotation, for Burgoldensis says only, that she called him Badin. 'Homo iste sine bono, five Badin '(uti illum Elizabetha Angl. Regina appellavit.) licitum esse putat suorum popularium dignitatem honesto mendacio tueri in suâ Methodo Histor. c. 4 (56). —— That Man without good, or Badin [Trifler] (as Elizabeth Queen of England called him) thinks it lawful to keep up the dignity of his own People, by an honest lye, in his Method of History.' Another Author pretends, that the disadvantageous manner in which Bodin has spoke of Women, in the fifth Chapter of the sixth Book of the Republic, drew upon him 'a very sharp 'Jest ------ Queen Elizabeth, who had otherwise 'some esteem for him, was pleased to send for him 'into England, on purpose to send him back with 'these Words; Bodin, when you see me, learn 'that you are but a Badin (57).' A Doctor of Louvain says, that when Bodin was at London, to negotiate the Marriage of his Master Hercules Duke of Alençon (58), the Queen used to call him Master John Badin: Pro Bodino solebat eum Regina Magistrum Joannem Badinum appellare (59). 'Tis not improbable that the Queen might call him so; for at that time the Court was not less fond of Puns than the People; but it is false, that That Princess sent for him over on purpose to mortify him by such a sorry Joke. He was at London in the Retinue of his Master the Duke of Alençon. He was there also in quality of Envoy from the same Duke.

What Scaliger said of Bodin, was very disobliging. 'Bodinus patrem Jul. Scaligerum falso 'ignorantiæ Matheseos arguit, ipse indoctissimus valdeque jejunus, cum quicquid à multis annis doctrinæ consequutus est, transcripserit ex aliorum laboribus, imo & ex meo libello in Varronem de lingua Latina, cujus paginas integras suas fecit' fur impudentissimus, & in unum velut chaos congessit, plurima scribens quæ ipse non intelligit. 'Denique librum de Methodo legendæ historiæ inscripsit, in quo nihil minus quam est de re tractat' ut titulo suo nullo modo respondeat oratio, quod quidem Verrius Flaccus notavit in Originibus 'Catonis, quæ nihil minus inquirunt quam Italiæ origines. Porro si quis velit in illum scribere, Je lui dresserai tout son fait: neque enim mihi honoris loco ducam aliquid proferre quod meo nomine circumferatur (60). —— Bodin falsly accuses my Father Jul. Scaliger of Ignorance in the Mathematics, being himself very unlearned, and dry, for whatever Learning he has pursued for many Years, he has transcribed out of the Labours of others, even out of my Book, on Varro de Linguâ Latinâ, whole pages of which the impudent Thief has made his own, and thrown together like a Chaos, Writing many things which he does not understand. In short, he entitles one of his Books The Method of Reading History, in which he treats of nothing less than that matter, so that his Discourse has no relation at all to his Title;

(44) Menage, Remarks on the Life of P. Ayrault, pag. 147.

(45) As Moreri, Hofman, Buchol-cerus in Indice Chronol. p. 682. Paul Freherus in Theatro, p. 895, & Saldenus Ot. Theol. p. 797. who does not know that our Bodin is the Author of the Dialogues de abditis rerum sublimium arcanis.

(46) Thuanus, lib. cxvii. pag. 771.

(47) Menard, cited by Menage, Remarks on the Life of P. Ayrault. pag. 147.

† In lib. de strigibus.

‡ In Judicio Librorum Bodini.

(48) Naudé Apolog. des grans hommes, cap. vii. pag. 127.

(49) Naudé, Advis pour dresser une Bibliotheque pag. 96.

(50) See above, Citation (9).

(51) Pag. 523, & seq. in Edit. Rotterodam. 1692, in 4to.

(52) It was in 1576. Bongars was lately come from Germany to study the Civil Law under Cujacius.

(53) Taken from Bongars's Letter to Conrad Rittershusius, published by Colomesius, in his Gallia Orientalis.

(54) Menage, Remarks on the Life of P. Ayrault, pag. 144.

(55) Diecmann. de Naturalismo, pag. 2.

(56) Burgold. notitia rerum Imperii Romano-Germanici. Parte I. pag. 33.

(57) Ancillon, Mélange critique, Tom. II. pag. 5.

(58) Mr Crenius, Animadv. Part. II. p. 93. has no reason to find fault with this Name and this Title.

(59) Libert. Fromondus, Meteorolog. lib. v. cap. i. art. iv. pag. 240.

(60) Scaligerana prima, pag. 302, 31.

accuſes him of having wrote many things contrary to Religion [O], and ſome Perſons ſuſpected him of Magic (q), or affirmed that he died a Jew (r). Note, that

(q) See the end of the Remark [θ].

(r) See Citation (66).

' as Verrius Flaccus obſerved of the Origines of ' Cato, which treat of nothing leſs than the Anti- ' quities of Italy. If any body would write a- ' gainſt him, I'll furniſh his matter for him, but do ' not think it conſiſtent with my Honour to publiſh any ' thing againſt him in my own Name.' You ſee that he calls him a moſt ignorant Man, and that he would think it a diſhonour to anſwer him. What Arrogance is this! and how ill becoming learned Men, tho' it is very common among them! Let us appeal from this Judgment of Scaliger to that of Thuanus, and if we will not grant that Bodin was an exact and judicious Writer, let us confeſs however that he had a great Genius, a vaſt Knowledge, and a prodigious Memory and Reading. The Works, by which he got ſo much Glory, needed not that he ſhould borrow any thing from a Commentary on Varro; they were not ſuch as could receive any luſtre from thence, and there is reaſon to believe that Scaliger and Cujacius would not have been able to produce what he did with ſo much Strength at the States of Blois.

[O] Poſſevin is not the only Man, who accuſes him of having writ many things - - - - - - contrary to Religion.] Let us in the firſt place quote his Panegyriſt Naudé, who obſerves, that thoſe who have writ againſt Bodin's Republic, were only Pygmies attacking Hercules; ſo that this Author having nothing to fear from that ſide, ought only to dread the Cenſures of the Church. ' Scio e- ' quidem, Fabium Albergatum hominem Italum, ' & Serrium, ac Augerium Ferrerium, Gallos (61), ' magnis conatibus, & libris ad id conſequendum ' editis, periculum illi ac ruinam intentaſſe: ſed ' eventus docuit eundem fuiſſe iſtius pugnæ even- ' tum, quem Pygmæorum cum Hercule: ut non ' jam ad miniatas alicujus Attici aut Hyperattici ' ceras trepidare debeat, ſed ad Eccleſiæ ſolius ju- ' dicium; cujus cenſuris quoniam vehementius ur- ' getur, quàm inimicorum argumentis, hinc eſt, quod ' ipſius libri evolvi minime debeant, niſi obtenta ' prius & hunc & quoſlibet auctores politicos le- ' gendi facultate (62). —— I know that Fabius ' Albergatus an Italian, and Sirrius and Augerius ' Ferrerius, two Frenchmen, laboured with all ' their Might, and publiſhed ſeveral Books on pur- ' poſe to bring him into Danger, and to ruin him, ' but the Event ſhewed that the Succeſs of this Bat- ' tle was the ſame with that of the Pygmies a- ' gainſt Hercules, ſo that now he has no need to ' ſtand in Awe of the Writings of any Critic or ' Hypercritic, but only of the Judgment of the ' Church; and becauſe her Cenſures bear harder up- ' on him than the Arguments of his Adverſaries, ' therefore his Books ought not to be read without a ' Licence firſt obtained for reading both him and ' all other Political Authors.' A little lower he blames him for having too much expoſed the Intereſts of the true Faith, and in that regard he approves of Poſſevin's Complaints. ' Quibus (quæ- ' ſtionibus) certe compeſcendis dirigendiſque ad finem ' Religionis Chriſtianæ præceptis ac inſtituto con- ' ſentaneum, ſane haud neceſſe erit diverſas inter ' ſe Religiones committere; quemadmodum non ſine ' diſpendio veræ pietatis ſuperioribus annis fecere, ' Petrus de Alliaco Cardinalis & Epiſcopus Came- ' racenſis, in opuſculo quodam aſtrologico de tribus ' ſectis; Hieronymus Cardanus in libris ſuis de ' ſubtilitate; & Joannes Bodinus, compoſito, ſed ' nondum edito, (atque utinam nunquam edatur) ' de rerum ſublimium arcanis ingenti volumine; ' quod equidem, Jeſuitam Poſſevinum non perpe- ' ram de ipſo judicium tuliſſe, argumento eſſe po- ' teſt validiſſimo certe manifeſtiſſimoque (63). —— ' For reſtaining which [queſtions] and directing ' them to an end agreeable to the Precepts and In- ' ſtitutions of the Chriſtian Religion, it will not, ' be neceſſary to compare different Religions one ' with another, as has been done heretofore, not with- ' out Damage to true Piety, by Cardinal Petrus ' Alliacus Biſhop of Cambray in an Aſtrological ' Tract, concerning the three Sects; Cardan in his ' Book de Subtilitate; and John Bodin in a large ' Volume, de Rerum Sublimium Arcanis, writ by ' him, but not yet publiſhed (at I wiſh it never may), ' which is a ſtrong and manifeſt Argument that the ' Jeſuit Poſſevin had formed no wrong Judgment ' of him.' The Author of the Book de juſta Reip. Chriſtianæ in reges impios & hæreticos authoritate, accuſes Bodin of indifference about Religion, and of being a Favourer of the Proteſtants. Unius viri indifferentis, & Proteſtantibus non iniqui teſtimonio comparationem hanc tranſigam (64). The Jeſuit Martin del Rio maintains, that the Demonomanie of Bodin is full of Errors, and that in the very Edition of Antwerp, which was publiſhed as corrected, there remained many dangerous things, and which ſhew the doubtful Religion of the Author; Manent multa noxia, & quæ ambiguam auctoris fidem ſatis conteſtantur, neceque legentibus poſſunt (65). Wherefore, adds he, that Book was juſtly placed by the Inquiſition of Rome in the Catalogue of prohibited Books. He promiſes to make it appear, that the Theatrum univerſæ Naturæ, of the ſame Author, contains ſome Doctrines ſo contrary to Divinity, that they may at leaſt be called erroneous, and altogether raſh. Let us obſerve that his Republic had the ſame fate at Rome, as his Demonomanie, tho' certain things had been inſerted in the Italian Tranſlation, which ſome officious Friends thought proper, to preſerve Bodin's reputation of a good Catholic (66). His Method of Hiſtory, and his Theatre of Nature had no better fate with the Inquiſitors. Here is ſomething terrible: ' Thoſe ' that get into the Pulpit here, tell Stories, de- ' claim againſt Bodin, for a whole Sermon, and ' tear him in pieces, without calling to mind that ' the Villain was a Leaguer, and died a Jew, with- ' out mentioning Jesus Christ in his laſt ' Words, which I have in Verſe (67).' This is to be found in a Letter of James Gillot to Scaliger, dated from Paris the ninth of February 1607. That which Mr Diecman found in a Manuſcript, and which he inſerted in his Book de Naturaliſmo, is yet more terrible. Naudæus in διατυπωμάτῳ Gallice ex MSto laudati Patini mecum benevole a Viro Nob. communicato, de hoc opere, &c. —Naudæus in a French Abſtract from the Famous Patin, kindly communicated to me by a Nobleman, concerning this Work, ' It is a Book well writ, ' ſays he, but very dangerous, becauſe he laughs ' at all Religions, and concludes at laſt, that there ' is none; neither had he any himſelf: He died ' like a Dog, without any ſenſe of Piety, being nei- ther Jew, Chriſtian, nor Turk. Another uncer- ' tain Author in Patin's Manuſcript, ſays, Bodin ' was a ſtrange Fellow in point of Religion. He ' died of the Plague at Laon in 1596, being pretty ' old, and ſaid not one word of Jesus Christ ' when he died (68).' I cannot tell whether thoſe that preached againſt Bodin in the Pulpits of Paris in the Year 1607, had heard any thing of the Diſpoſitions which he ſhewed when he died, or of the pernicious Doctrines of the Heptaplomeres. Scaliger could not apprehend from whence their Fury proceeded. He writ to Charles l'Abbé, towards the end of the Month of February 1607, the following Words: ' Illud velim ex te ſcire ' quare Pontificii tam acerbe quotidie in Bodinum ' declament. Certe quod mancipium ambitionis ' fuerit, propterea odio illis eſſe eum non credi- ' derim. Aliam ſubeſſe cauſam neceſſe eſt, quam ' ex te ſcire velim. Hujus igitur tam inopinati ' odii cauſam, & quare hominem pridem mortuum ' canes ex tumulo eruant, neque ejus manes qui- ' eſcere ſinant, à vobis expecto (69). —— I deſire ' to know from you, why the Papiſts declaim ſo ' violently, every Day, againſt Bodin. Certainly I ' cannot think they hated him, becauſe he was a ' Slave to Ambition. There muſt be ſome other ' Reaſon at Bottom which I would gladly know. ' I therefore expect to hear from you the Reaſon ' of this ſo unexpected Hatred, and why the Dogs ' tear, from the Grave, a Man long ſince dead, and ' won't ſuffer his Aſhes to be at Peace." I muſt not forget that as ſoon as Bodin's Republic came out, ſome Preachers exclaimed againſt him. Read his Latin Letter of the thirtieth of March 1581, at the

(61) Note, that Bodin in the beginning of René Herpin's Apology, mentions not only one Oſtatus Vaſco (it is he whom Menage calls, above, Citation (9) Peter l'Hoſtail) but alſo an Andreas Frankebergerus Saxo, who had wrote againſt his Republic.

(62) Naudæus Bibliogr. polit. pag. 23, 24.

(63) Naudæus ibid. pag. 33.

(64) G. Guillel. Roſſeus de juſta Reip. Auctorit. &c cap. iv n. 3. pag. 104. Edit. Antwerp, 1592.

(65) Del Rio, Diſq. Magic. lib. i. cap. iii. p. 23.

(66) Loſcher de latrorimo in ſcript. publ. p. 41. apud Diecmannum de Naturaliſmo, p. 4.

(67) French Epiſtles written to Scaliger, pag. 439.

(68) Diecmannum de Natural. ſmo, pag. 12.

(69) See Colomeſius's Gallia Orientalis, pag. 86.

that, tho' he declared freely enough againſt thoſe who maintain that the Authority of Monarchs is unlimited [P], he diſpleaſed the Common-wealth Men. I believe it was (among other Reaſons) becauſe on the one hand he maintained, that there were ſome Abſolute Monarchs in Europe, and on the other, That it does not belong to any Subject in particular, nor to all in general, to attempt againſt the Honour, or the Life, of ſuch Monarchs, either by violent means, or in a juridical way, though they ſhould have committed all the Wickedneſs, Impieties, and Cruelties that can be named the beginning of René Herpin's Apology, and you will find that he obſerves two things in it, the one that de Serres, who had publiſhed a great deal of abuſive Language againſt him, had been ſeverely puniſhed for it; the other is, that tho' thoſe that ſlander a Man in the Pulpit, are as guilty as thoſe that offend him in their Writings, yet there are ſome Preachers, who ſtain his Reputation, and that of divers other good Men, with impunity. 'Serranus ille qui inaudito genere ſcribendi, ac probris inuſitatis libellum complevit, ipſius principis juſſu pœnas graviores dedit, quàm optare potuiſſem. Ac tametſi eodem ſcelere obligantur, qui publicis in concionibus nomen cujuſquam læſerunt, videmus tamen legibus ſolutos, non modò meam, ſed etiam optimi cujuſque exiſtimationem impune violare, qui prudentur ferendum putat, quod auferri non poteſt (70).'

(70) Apologie de René Herpin, fol. 2. verſo.

But, among the Roman Catholics, none has expreſſed more warmth againſt this Civilian, than the Jeſuit Poſſevin. See with what deſire of finding fault he ſcans the Method of Hiſtory, and with what turns of Sophiſtry he puts an ill Conſtruction upon the Propoſitions that may have a good ſenſe. His great grief is, that Bodin ſpeaks of Luther, Calvin, and Melanchthon, in civil Terms, and that he would have ſome bounds ſet to the Papal Power (71). But above all, ſee the little book wherein Poſſevin gives his Judgment de quatuor Scriptoribus, Philippo la Nua, Jo. Bodino, Philippo Mornæo, & Nic. Machiavello (72). He pretended, that Bodin's Works contained a great number of Errors, Hereſies, and Impieties (73).

(71) Poſſevin in Biblioth. ſelecta lib. xvi. cap. ix. pag. 269, 270. Tom. II.

(72) It was printed at Rome in 1592, and at Lyons in 1593.

(73) Teiſſier, Additions aux Eloges de Mr de Thou, Tom. II. pag. 248.

The Proteſtants have not been ſilent about this Writer's Errors; for, to ſay nothing of Grotius, who declares, that Bodin had very much ſtaggered his Faith by keeping Company with the Jews (74), We may cite Meric Caſaubon, who confeſſes, that he knows not what to think of this Man's Religion, whether he ought to reckon him among the Catholics, or among the Proteſtants (75). The Lutheran Miniſter, who informs me of this, carries his doubts much farther, and ſeems very much diſpoſed to believe that at laſt Bodin loſt all ſenſe of Chriſtianity (76). He endeavours particularly to convict him of having reduced all to Natural Religion. Another Lutheran Doctor has obſerved, that there are, in John Bodin's Phyſics, divers things which ought to be abhorred by Chriſtians (77). He obſerves alſo, that they are ſet forth under the Name of Theodorus, and that another Perſon under the Name of Myſtagogus anſwers ſomewhat coldly, nothing ought to be raſhly affirmed on ſuch difficult Subjects, de tam arduis nil temere eſſe affirmandum. And indeed I find that Bodin's Myſtagogus, Page 222 of the Theatrum Naturæ, Edition of Hanaw 1605, makes this Anſwer; 'De rebus tam arduis & à communi ſenſu remotis nec temere quicquam affirmare, nec leviter cuiquam aſſentiri velim; mihi ſatis eſt certiſſimis argumentis & ad aſſentiendum neceſſariis demonſtraviſſe cometas non eſſe incendia ab exhalationibus concepta. —— In ſuch ſublime matters, and ſo remote from common Senſe, I would neither raſhly affirm any thing, nor eaſily aſſent to any body's Opinion: it is enough that I have ſhown, by unqueſtionable, and neceſſarily concluſive, Arguments, that Comets are not Flames, kindled from exhalations.' This Anſwer relates to a very ſtrange Opinion which Bodin had mentioned juſt before under the Name of Theodorus, viz. That Comets are Spirits, who having lived innumerable Ages on Earth, and being at laſt come near Death, celebrate their laſt Triumph, or are brought again into the Firmament as ſhining Stars. This is attended with Famine and Peſtilence, &c. becauſe the Cities, and the People, loſe the Governours and Chiefs, who appeaſed the Wrath of God. It is neceſſary that I ſhould ſet down his Words. 'Democriti ſententia in mentem mihi recurrit, ut exiſtimem cometas eſſe illuſtrium virorum mentes, quæ poſteaquàm innumerabilibus ſeculis viguerunt in terris, tandem obituræ, ut omnia quæ oriuntur occaſum minantur, extremos peragunt triumphos, aut in cœlum ſtellatum quaſi ſplendida ſydera revocantur; ac propterea ſequuntur fames, morbi populares, civilia bella, quaſi civitates ac populi ducibus illis optimis & gubernatoribus qui divinos furores placabant, deſererentur (78).' It is plain, that there is a fault in the Words illuſtrium virorum; or that Bodin gives thoſe Words a very particular Senſe; for the common ſignification, Illuſtrious Men, does not agree with what follows, that is, with thoſe innumerable Ages of Life upon Earth, which Bodin aſcribes to the Spirits which he mentions. He means therefore Genii or Angels, and he ſuppoſes them ſubject to Death. Voſſius skipped two or three very eſſential Words, in relating this Paſſage, Viguerunt in terris. Yet he finds an Impiety in it: 'Ubi quod animas mori ait, ſays he (79), id ſi non aliud voluit dicere quam verba videntur ſonare, ſane impietate ſumma non vacat. Tolerabilius quod ait heroum animas in ſidera revocari. —— In ſaying that Spirits die, if he did not mean ſomething elſe, than what the Words ſeem to import, it is great Impiety. 'Tis more excuſable that he ſays, the Souls of Heroes are called back to the Stars.' This Omiſſion is in the Edition I make uſe of, which is that of Germany in 4to. It is alſo in that of Amſterdam in Folio 1668; for Mr Crenius, who relates this Paſſage of Voſſius (80), with the omiſſion of viguerunt in terris, quotes the Edition of Amſterdam.

(78) Bodin, in Theatro Naturæ, lib. ii. pag. 221, 222.

(79) Voſſius de Orig. & Prog. Idol. lib. iii. cap. ix. p. 774.

(80) Crenii Animadv. Philolog. & Hiſtor. Part. II. p. 175.

Let us end with theſe Words of Thuanus, which inform us, that it was believed, that John Bodin was a Magician: 'Poſtea & Dæmonomaniam Gallice itidem ſcripſit, in qua dum materiam ab aliis tantopere agitatam adverſus Joannis Wieri plerunque ſententiam, enucleatius retractat, magicæ rei ac vetitarum iſtiuſmodi artium crimen minime effugit (81). —— Afterwards he writ his Demonomania in French likewiſe, in which, while he treats more explicitly of a matter ſo much toſſed about by others, chiefly againſt the Opinion of Joannes Wierus, he did not keep clear of the Crime of Magic, and ſuch like forbidden Arts.

(81) Thuan. Hiſt. cxvii. pag. 771.

[P] He declared freely enough againſt thoſe who maintain, that the Authority of Monarchs is unlimited] He maintained, that Monarchs cannot impoſe Taxes, without the Conſent of the People, and that they are more obliged to obſerve the Laws of God, and thoſe of Nature, than their Subjects, and that the Covenants, which they make, impoſe the ſame Obligation on them as on their Subjects. He ſays, that moſt Civilians had taught the contrary, and that he was the firſt who durſt oppoſe the Opinion of thoſe, who wrote about the means of extending the Rights of the King. Theſe are his Words: 'Muror tamen eſſe qui putent unius poteſtati tribuere me plus aliquantum, quàm decet ſortem in Republica civem: cùm alibi ſæpe, tùm verò libro primo, capite octavo, noſtræ Reipublicæ, cos ego qui de jure ſifci ac regalibus amplificandis ſcripſere, ſententias primus omnium, & quidem periculoſiſſimis temporibus refellere non dubitarim, quòd Regibus infinitam ſupraque divinas & naturæ leges tribuerent poteſtatem: quid autem magis populare quam quod ſcribere auſus ſum, ne regibus quidem licere, ſine ſumma civium conſenſione, imperare tributa? aut illud quanti eſt quod item tradidi principes arctiori vinculo divinis ac naturæ legibus teneri, quam qui, ſub imperium ſubjecti ſunt? illos etiam pactis conventis perinde ut alios cives obligari? contra quam tamen omnes pene juris ſcientiæ magiſtri docuere (82). —— But I wonder there are any who think, that I attribute more to the Power of a ſingle Perſon, than a brave Citizen,

(82) Bodin. Epiſt. ad Vidum Fabrum in limine operis Gallicè de Republica, named (s) This Opinion does not seem to agree with the Doctrine, which he had also maintained, that the Power of those Monarchs is limited, and that they are obliged to govern according to the Laws; but after all it appears, that in both those Doctrines he aimed at the Public Good, the Peace and Tranquillity of the State [2]. The Germans complain much of him, and use him ill. See many Passages upon this in the Collections of Magirus (t), and in those of Sir Thomas-Pope Blount (u). Consult also the Speech of Thomas Lansius against France (x). Nevertheless some of the Germans own he had a sublime Wit and Judgment, and very great Erudition.

(s) Bodin, de la Republ. lib. ii. cap. v. pag. 302.

(t) Tobias Magirus Eponymol. pag. 137, & seq.

(u) Sir Thomas Pope Blount Cens. Author. pag. 524, & seq.

(x) Pag. 301, 302.

' Citizen in a State ought to do; when in several ' Places, and particularly in the eighth Chap- ' ter of the first Book of my Republic, I before any ' one else, and That in the most dangerous times, ' ventured to refute the Opinion of those who had ' writ on the Right of Taxation, and for enlarging ' the Prerogative; because they had attributed ' to Kings an infinite Power, above the Laws of ' GOD and Nature; and what is more popular than ' that I dared to write, that it was not lawful, ' even for Kings, to impose Taxes, without consent of ' the People? Or this, that I also laid down, that ' Princes are more strictly bound to observe the Laws ' of GOD and Nature, than Subjects, and that they ' are bound by Covenants as well as other Citizens? ' Though most Doctors of Civil Law have taught the ' contrary.' If he had said no more, he would not have offended the Republicans; but because he maintained on the other side, That Subjects ought not to despose a lawful Monarch, who governs tyrannically, many Persons were offended at his Doctrine. He tells us the Reason, which moved him to maintain that Opinion, which is, that he saw, almost every where, People in War against their Princes; and because a vast number of Writings were dispersed in all Parts, which, by maintaining, that Kings may be deposed, and the Succession of Crowns regulated as it pleases the People, served only to shake all the Foundations of Society. He thought therefore, that his Duty obliged him to oppose those Maxims, which he judged so pernicious. ' Sed ' cum viderem ubique subditos in principes armari, ' libros etiam, veluti faces ad rerum publicarum incendia, palàm proferri, quibus docemur principes ' divinitus hominum generi tributos, tyrannidis objecta specie, de imperio deturbare, reges item ' non à stirpe, sed à populi arbitrio peti oportere: ' easque disciplinas, non solum hujus imperii, verumetiam rerum omnium publicarum fundamenta ' labefactare: ego boni viri, aut boni civis esse negavi suum principem quantumvis tyrannum ulla ' ratione violare: hanc denique ultionem immortali ' Deo aliisque principibus relinqui oportere: idque ' cum divinis & humanis legibus ac testimoniis, ' tum etiam rationibus ad assentiendum necessariis, ' confirmavi (83). - - - But observing Subjects every ' where armed against their Princes, and that Books, ' like Firebrands to consume States, were publickly ' set forth, whereby we are taught, that Princes, ' who are given to Mankind by GOD, may be de- ' throned on pretence of Tyranny, and that Kings are ' not to be taken by Descent, but by the Pleasure of ' the People, and that these Doctrines shake the ' Foundations, not only of this Kingdom, but also ' of all other States. I denied it to be the part of ' a good Man, or a good Citizen, to offer any vio- ' lence to his Prince, how tyrannical so ever. Lastly, ' that this revenge ought to be left to GOD and other ' Princes: and I confirmed it by Laws and Testimonies, ' both Humane and Divine, and also by undeniable ' Reasons.' Note, That intending to say, that the Protestants had a hand in those sort of Writings, he does it in a very moderate manner, clearing Luther and Calvin: these are his Words: ' It would ' be time lost to answer the frivolous Objections and ' Arguments of those, who hold the contrary Opinion: But, as he who doubts whether there is a ' GOD, deserves to feel the Punishment of the ' Laws, without using any Arguments; so do also ' those, who have called so clear a thing in question, and even published in printed Books, that ' Subjects may justly take up Arms against a Prince ' that is a Tyrant, and put him to Death in any ' manner whatsoever, although their most Eminent ' and Learned Divines † hold, that it is never lawful to kill, nor so much as to rebel against one's ' Sovereign Prince, unless there is a special and undeniable Command of GOD for it; as we read of ' Jehu ‡, who was elected by GOD, and anointed King by the Prophet, with an express Command to destroy the Race of Ahab (84).' He shews, in another place, some Moderation towards those of Geneva, tho' he thought he had occasion of complaint against them, for the Edition of his Book published in their City. He does not come to Particulars, nor say like Possevin, That those of Geneva altered many things in that Work (85), but keeps within general Terms. If you understand Latin, you will be convinced of it: ' Alterum reprehensionis genus est eorum qui apud Genevates secundam editionem Reipublicæ nostræ promulgarunt: ' quam vel typis mandare, suisque civibus ad intuendum proponere minimè debuerant, vel authorem à calumnia vindicare: si meminissent legis ' illius quæ à S. P. Q. Genevate lata est Nonis Jun. MDLIX. qua sanctissime vetitum est, secundo capite, in eos scriptores invehi quos interpretêre. ' Quid autem à me scriptum est quod vel à privati cujusquam dignitate, vel ab illius Reipublicæ majestate sit alienum? at etiam laudavi quæ ab illis ' sunt laudabiliter instituta. Quæ verò reprehensione digna putarunt, abundè, ut nobis quidem videmur, & suo quisque loco & ordine refutavimus, ' cum ea qua decuit animi temperantia, quam in illius civitatis scriptoribus plerique populi defidesiderare solent (86). - - - - - - Another kind of reproof ' I have had, from the Publishers of the second Edi- ' tion of my Republic at Geneva: which they either ' ought not to have put to the Press, and exposed to ' the perusal of their Citizens, or else to have vindi- ' cated the Author from slander: if they had remem- ' bered a Law, made by the States of Geneva on the ' fifth of June 1559, whereby, in the second Chapter, ' it is strictly forbidden to reflect on those Writers you ' interpret. But what have I writ, to the prejudice ' of either the Dignity of any private Man, or the ' Majesty of that Common-wealth? Nay, I have ' commended their Institutions that are laudable. ' But what they thought worthy of blame, I have, as ' I think, abundantly refuted, every thing in it's pro- ' per place and order, with that due temperature of ' mind, which most People find so much wanting in ' the Writers of that City.' Take notice, that he makes a great distinction between the Subjects of a Tyrant, and Foreign Princes; for he does not approve that Subjects should take up Arms to deliver themselves from Tyranny: but he approves that their Neighbours should come and deliver them from it. ' There is a great difference between saying, that a ' Tyrant may be lawfully killed by a foreign Prince, ' and that he may by a Subject. And as it is very ' glorious, and proper for any one, to defend by ' force the Estates, Honours, and Lives, of those ' who are unjustly oppressed, when there is no way ' to Justice open, as Moses did, seeing one of his ' Brethren abused and beaten, and that there was ' no way to get him Right: So it is a most noble ' and magnificent thing for a Prince to take up ' Arms, in order to revenge a whole Nation unjustly oppressed by the Cruelty of a Tyrant; as ' the great Hercules did, who went all over the ' World to exterminate those monstrous Tyrants, ' and was deified for his great Exploits: So did ' also Dion, Timoleon, Aratus, and other generous ' Princes, who were stiled the Chastizers and Cor- ' rectors of Tyrants (87).' Richeome makes many Reflexions on this Passage of Bodin, in the thirteenth Chapter of his Examen Categorique de l'Anti-Coton (88).

(83) Id. ibid.

† Mart. Luth. Calvinus in Joannem, & in Instit. cap. ult. lib. iv. §. xxxi.

† Kings iv. cap. vi, & x.

(84) Bodin de la Republique, lib. ii. cap. v. pag. 305.

(85) Genevates Bodinum reprehendentes in libris ejusdem de Republica pleraque immutarunt. Possev. Biblioth. Tom. II. p. 269.

(86) Bodin. Epist. ad Vidum Fabram.

(87) Id. de Republica, lib. ii. cap. v. p. 300.

(88) Pag. 113. & seq.

[2] It appears that, in both these Doctrines, he aimed at the Public Good, the Peace and Tranquillity of the State.] He maintained the first, when he saw Henry the Third's Flatterers or Creatures propose such things as might create great Abuses, to the oppression

Erudition. See the ſame Collections. He was likewiſe cenſured by the Italians, as appears from the Political Diſcourſe of Fabio Albergati, whoſe Method did not pleaſe Bonifacio Vanozzi. See the firſt Volume of his Letters (y). A very ingenious Anſwer was made to Bodin in England [R], to ſhew him that he had wanted Prudence in his Diſcourſe. He had ſo good a Conſtitution of Stomach, that in all his Voyages he never was Sea-ſick [S]. His Opinion about Comets was ſomewhat ſtrange. See the Remark [O].

(y) Pag. 103, & ſeq.

of the People; and he maintained the ſecond, when he ſaw France full of Factions, and torn by Civil-Wars, which gave birth to a great number of Manifeſto's, and other Books, in which the moſt eſſential and fundamental Laws of Government were undermined. The Power of the People was aſſerted, in common Diſcourſe, and in print, as freely as if it had been in a Democratical State, and Endeavours were uſed to exerciſe that Power; for a Tranſlation of the Crown was deſigned. Nay, Aſſaſſins were approved, who, under pretence of Tyranny, attempted upon the Lives of Monarchs. This could not but produce the moſt dreadful Deſolations. Wherefore Bodin ſhewed himſelf very well affected to the Public Good, by oppoſing ſuch a Licentiouſneſs. 'Qui regias opes & honores popularibus commodis poſthabuit, idem ſcriptis ac ſermonibus execratus ſum eos qui tyrannidis ſpecie ſuo principi manus afferre, deque regibus populi ſuffragio creandis rogationes promulgare, & è manibus legitimorum principum ſceptra violenter extorquere conantur. (89). —— I who poſtponed the King's Wealth and Honours to the Public Good, did likewiſe, both in writing and Diſcourſes, deteſt thoſe who endeavour, on pretence of Tyranny, to lay hands on their Kings, and promote Bills for creating Kings by the Suffrage of the People, and to wreſt Scepters out of the hands of lawful Princes.' He had the misfortune to contradict himſelf after the Death of Henry III; for he ſided with the League; but the Fall of a Sinner does not ſpoil the good Actions that he has done.

(89) Bodin. Epiſt. ad Vidum Fabrum.

[R] A very ingenious Anſwer was made to Bodin in England.] 'Bodin being in England, along with Mr de Mompenſier, made himſelf odious to the Engliſh, and fooliſh to the French, by his Curioſity. Being at Dinner at an Engliſh Lord's Houſe, he fell on the Pretenſions of Princes to the Crown of England, and ſaid, that a certain Princeſs was preſumptive Heir to it, if ſhe was not excluded, as being born out of the Country *, by a Law whereof he never knew the Author, or the Original, nor could ever learn where it was to be found. You may find it, anſwers the Engliſh Lord, on the back of the Salique Law. A Repartee, which ſilenced this Prater, and gave him to underſtand, that it is not proper for Strangers to ſcan the Secrets of a State.' This is what we read in the Eighty ſecond Page of Mr Colomiés's Gallia Orientalis; he cites theſe Words as taken out of the Two Hundred and thirty ſeventh Page of the ſecond Volume of the Hiſtory of Henry IV, written by Peter Matthieu. I have conſulted my Edition (90), and found there, not Bodin being in England along with Mr du Mompenſier, but a learned Man, who had followed the late Monſieur in his Voyage to England (91). I am certain, that That learned Man is our Bodin; but it would be wrong to ſay, that he went into England with Mr de Mompenſier; he went thither with the Duke of Alençon, who in Peter Matthieu's time might have been ſtiled feu Monſieur (the late Monſieur). Mr Menage does not agree with that Hiſtorian, as to the Circumſtances. 'The motive, ſays he (92), of the Duke of Alençon's Voyage into England, was his Marriage with Queen Elizabeth. Bodin diſcourſing one Day with an Engliſhman on that Subject, the Engliſhman told him, that the Marriage would never be; Strangers being excluded by a Law from the Royalty of England. Bodin, who was well verſed in all the Engliſh Laws, as alſo in thoſe of all other Kingdoms, asked the Engliſhman bluntly, where that Law was to be found? The Engliſhman anſwered as bluntly, That it was to be found on the back of the Salique Law: Which has ſince paſſed among us for a Proverb. I have this particular from Mr du Puy.' Note, that there are two Citations in Peter Matthieu, and Mr Colomiés takes notice but of one (93).

(90) That of Geneva 1620, in 8vo.

(91) Matthieu, Hiſt. of Henry IV. in the 2d Narration of the 6th Book, pag. 527.

(92) Menage, Remarks on the Life of P. Ayrault, pag. 149.

(93) The other is, Voy l'Ambaſſadeur de M. Hotman.

Bodin informs us, That he was ſent into England in the Year 1581, by his Maſter the Duke of Anjou (94), during the ſitting of the Parliament, where it was forbidden to ſpeak of the Queen's Succeſſor, on pain of High-Treaſon; that he harangued the Queen, and propoſed to her the Adoption of the King of Scotland, and afterwards a Marriage. Deinde Lenoxiæ principis connubio & arctiſſima fœderis conjunctione. Hæc mea fuit ad reginam oratio (95).

(94) The ſame with the Duke of Alençon.

(95) Bodin. de Rep. lib. vi. p. 1132.

[S] In all his Voyages, he was never Sea ſick.] He relates this himſelf in his Theatrum Naturæ. How comes it, ſays he, that the Sea excites a Vomiting and a Looſneſs? He anſwers, That this is not general, and that he was ſeven times on the Sea, and even in a violent Storm, without finding any ſuch thing. 'Id quidem inſuetis navigare, nec tamen omnibus contingit: ſepties mari Oceano vectus, nihil tamen ejuſmodi paſſus ſum, etiamſi ſæviſſima procella jactatus, ac ruptis velis extrema pericula ſubierim: vidi tamen qui ſanguinem vomerent (96).' I need not mention the Phyſical Reaſon he gives; but the perſonal Fact of which he informs us, ſeemed to me worthy to be mentioned: it is part of his Hiſtory.

(96) Bodin, in Theatro Naturæ, lib. ii. pag. 196, 197.

* Whoſoever is born out of England, can lay no Claim to the Crown of England. See Thuanus's Hiſtory.

BOI, commonly called IL SIRACUSANO, the Syracuſan, was a very famous Player at Cheſs, and very much conſidered in the Court of Spain under King Philip II. He received many fine Preſents from That Prince. He received alſo many from Pope Urban VIII, and it was his own Fault that he did not receive a good Biſhopric of him; for it was offered him (a), but he would not be a Clergyman. Having had the Misfortune to be taken by Corſairs, and to ſee himſelf reduced to Slavery, he found means to make thoſe Turkiſh and ſavage Men tractable by his Skill at Cheſs. They admired him for it, treated him civilly, and exacted no other Ranſom from him but the Leſſons he gave them for ſome Months on That Game (b). We ſhall ſpeak of another excellent Gameſter at Cheſs in the Article GIOACHINO GRECO. It were to be wiſhed that thoſe two great Maſters had given us ſome regular Treatiſe concerning That Game; but we have only ſome Fragments of the one, and ſome manners of playing by the other, which are not ſufficient to make a formal Study of it. —— Nevertheleſs a Collection has been made of what was found moſt proper to be put in uſe, and it has ſerved to make a Book on That Subject (c) [A].

(a) What an abuſe! and what a fine way to attain to Epiſcopacy!

(b) Taken from a Letter inſerted in the Mercure Galant, Auguſt 1688, and December 1693.

(c) Mercure Galant, December 1693, pag. 109.

[A] His Leſſons and thoſe of Gioachino Greco on Cheſs have been collected, to make a Book on that Subject.] The Author whom I quote, ſpeaks of it, as of a Work ready to come out. By joining, ſays he (1), to what has been taken from thoſe two famous Gameſters, the Knowledge which has been had from others, 'and the Obſervations which have been made, either by playing, or ſeeing others play at it; out of this whole matter a regular Body has been compoſed, which contains the Practical Science of Cheſs. I inform you, that it is going to be publiſhed as a ſingular

(1) Letter inſerted in the Mercure Galant, Auguſt 1688, and December 1693.

'singular Work in it's kind, and the Copy has 'been a long time in the Hands of one of the 'best Chess-Players in France, who has the Honour 'to play at it with his Royal Highness the Duke 'of Chartres.'

BOISSARD (JOHN JAMES), born at Bezançon in the Year 1528, composed several great Collections, which are of Use for understanding the Roman Antiquities. He himself took Draughts of all the ancient Monuments he could find in Italy; he had an incredible Passion for That Study, as appears plainly by what happened to him in Cardinal Carpi's Garden [A]. He designed to go into Syria, but a violent Fever which seized him at Methone prevented it. He had already satisfied his Curiosity for Antiquities in the Islands of Corfu, Cephalonia, Zante, and in the Morea, and after his Recovery he continued to visit the Places in the Neighbourhood of Methone. After he returned into his own Country, he was Governor to the Sons of Antony de Vienne, Baron of Clervant, and travelled with them into France, Germany, and Italy. He had left the Antiquities, which he had collected with so much trouble, with his Sister at Mombeliard, and had the Misfortune to lose most of them, when the Lorrains ravaged the Franche Comté. He preserved only those which he had sent to Metz before That Invasion; but as it was known, that he intended to give the Public a great Collection on that fine part of Literature, many Draughts, and Sketches of old Monuments were sent him from all Parts. He had settled himself at Metz, where he died the thirtieth of October 1602 (a). His Works are much valued by Antiquaries [B], and are grown very scarce. He made Latin Verses [C]. It appears from a Passage, which I shall quote elsewhere (b), that he was in the Service of Cardinal Caraffa.

(a) Taken from Martinus Hankius, de scriptoribus rerum Romanarum, Tom. I. cap. 76. He says, that he took it in part from two Letters of Boissard, prefixed to his Antiquities.

(b) In one of the Remarks of the Article PAUL IV.

[A] He had an incredible Passion for that Study, as appears plainly by what happened to him in Cardinal Carpi's Garden.] That Garden was full of ancient Marbles, and situated on Mount Quirinal. Boissard came into it one Day with his Friends, and strayed from them on purpose, and hiding himself in some of the Walks let them go home. He spent the remainder of the Day in copying Inscriptions, and sketching old Monuments, and the Gates of the Garden being shut, he remained there all the Night. The Cardinal finding him the next Morning busy at that Work, could not imagine how a Stranger came into his Garden at such an unseasonable time; but when he knew on what account Boissard had been there all Night, he ordered him a good Break-fast, and permitted him to copy and draw all the rare Pieces in his Palace (1).

(1) Martinus Hankius, de rerum Romanarum scriptoribus. Tom. I. cap. 76. p. 257, 258.

[B] His Works are much valued by Antiquaries.] His Roman Antiquities, divided into six Parts, make four Volumes in Folio. They contain a great many Prints, those of the two first Volumes engraved by Theodorus de Bry (2), and those of the other Volumes, by the two Sons of that Theodorus (3). Moreover, Boissard published the Lives of One hundred ninety eight Illustrious Persons, with Cuts of them in Copper. That Work is divided into four Parts in Quarto, which were printed at Francfort; the first, in the Year 1597, the second, and the third, in the Year 1598, and the fourth in the Year 1599 (4). His Treatise de Divinatione & Magicis præstigiis, was printed after his Death. I omit his Emblems, &c.

(2) He was of Liege, and lived at Francfort. Id. ibid. pag. 259.

(3) Id. ibid.

(4) Id. ibid. Tom. II. p. 392.

[C] He made Latin Verses.] I have not the Edition of Metz 1589, in 8vo, which is in the Catalogue of the Library of Oxford, I have only that of Basil 1574, in 12mo. It contains three Books of Epigrams, three Books of Elegies, and three Books of Letters. If those Verses do not deserve all the Praises which Borrichius bestows upon them, neither do they deserve the Contempt which some have expressed of the Verses which James Boissard put under the Cuts of his Illustrious Men (5). Gruterus inserted this Author's Poems in the Deliciæ Poetarum Gallorum.

(5) See Baillet, Jugem. sur les Poetes, n. 1359.

BOLEYN or BULLEN (ANNE), Wife of Henry VIII, King of England, was of a better Family on her Mother's Side, than on her Father's, being Daughter of Thomas Boleyn, who was only a Knight, and of a Daughter of the Duke of Norfolk (a). She was born in the Year 1507, and was carried into France at seven Years of Age by Henry VIII's Sister, Wife of Lewis XII. She did not return into England when that Queen retired thither after the Death of her Husband, but staid in the Service of Queen Claudia, the Wife of Francis I, and after the Death of That Princess, she went to the Duchess of Alençon (b). The Year of her Return into England is not well known; some will have it to be in the Year 1527 (c), others in the Year 1525 (d). Thus much is certain, that she was Maid of Honour to Queen Catherine, and that the King fell in love with her. She behaved herself with so much Art, that, by refusing to satisfy the King's Passion, she made him think of marrying her. That Prince, deceived by her Artifices, thought he should never enjoy her unless she was his Wife; which engaged him to push forward the Affair of the Divorce, and to execute it at last with all the Pomp every body knows. That, which would be very praise-worthy on another Occasion, is Anne Bullen's chief Crime: her refusing to comply with an Amorous King, unless he would divorce his Wife, is a much more enormous Crime than to have been his Concubine. A Concubine would not have dethroned a Queen, nor taken her Crown nor her Husband from her; whereas the crafty Anne Bullen, by pretending to be chast and scrupulous, aimed only at the Usurpation of the Throne, and the Exclusion of Catherine of Arragon, and her Daughter, from all the Honours due to them. However Henry VIII married her privately the fourteenth of November 1532 (e), without waiting for a Sentence against his Marriage with Catherine of Arragon; and as soon as he perceived that his new Wife was with Child, he made his Marriage public, and caused Anne Bullen to be declared Queen of England on Easter-Eve 1533 (f), and to be crowned the first of June following (g). She was brought to bed the seventh of September (b), and continued to be much beloved by the King, till

(a) Mr Lesl's History of Elizabeth, Tom. I. pag. 47. it therefore mistaken, when he says that she was the Daughter of the Lord Clinston.

(b) Burnet, History of the Reformation, Tom. I. Book ii. pag. 44. of the 2d Edit. Lond. 1633.

(c) Id. p. 110.

(d) Le Grand, Hist. du Divorce de Henri VIII. Tom. II. p. 31.

(e) Burnet, Hist. Reformat. Part. I. pag. 126.

(f) Ibid. p. 130.

(g) Ibid. p. 131.

(b) Of a Daughter, who afterwards was Q. Elizabeth p. 134.

till the Charms of Jane Seymour had fired That Prince's Heart in the Year 1536 (i). Then his Love for his Wife was changed into violent Hatred; he believed her to be unchaſt; and cauſed her to be impriſoned, and tried [A]. She was condemned to be either burnt or beheaded (k); her Marriage was declared void [B], becauſe ſhe confeſſed that ſhe married the King when ſhe was engaged by a Contract with Earl Peircy (l). She was beheaded the ninteenth Day of May 1536

(i) Burnet, Hiſt. Reformat. Part. I. pag. 196.

(k) Burnet, Hiſt. Reformat. Part. I. pag. 202.

(l) Ibid. p. 203.

[A] Henry VIII cauſed her to be tried.] Sanders ſays, that Anne's own Father was one of thoſe that condemned her. Doctor Burnet had related the ſame thing on the credit of Dr Heylin; but he retracted it in the Additions (1). He found the Record of the Tryal, but among the Judges found not the Earl of Wiltſhire. So Anne Bullen's Father was ſtiled at that time. It is remarkable, that This Queen 'was indicted of High-Treaſon, 'for that ſhe had procured her Brother and o-'ther four to lie with her, which they had done 'often; that ſhe had ſaid to them, that the King 'never had her Heart, and had ſaid to every one 'of them by themſelves, that ſhe loved him bet-'ter than any Perſon whatſoever, which was to 'the Slander of the Iſſue that was begotten be-'tween the King and her. And this was Treaſon 'according to the Statute made in the Twenty 'ſixth Year of this Reign, ſo that the Law that 'was made for her and the Iſſue of her Marriage 'is now made uſe of to deſtroy her (2).' The Biſhop of Amelia goes farther than Sanders; for he ſays, that Thomas Bullen preſided at the Tryal of his Daughter. Pœnæ miniſtrum filiæ fortuna patrem dedit, qui ſorte capitalium rerum Judex adverſus eam capitis ſententiam tulit (3). What he ſays, that all thoſe who were accuſed of having lain with her, confeſſed it on the Rack, is contradicted by Dr Burnet, who obſerves, that but one confeſſed it. He was a Muſician whoſe Name was Smeton: He owned that he had lain three times with the Queen (4). It is obſervable, that, in the long Reign of Queen Elizabeth, no Endeavours were uſed to juſtify her Mother. The Catholics have taken advantage of it, but they are anſwered, That they ſhould rather praiſe and admire Elizabeth's Prudence, and that of her Miniſters (5). She would have weakened her Right by endeavouring to defend it, and certain things relating to Anne Bullen muſt have been owned, which would have been prejudicial.

(1) See the Additions and Corrections of the IId Part of the Hiſtory of the Reformation, n. 1. of Part. I. p. 363.

(2) Burnet, Hiſt. Reformat. Part. I. Book iii. pag. 202.

(3) Gratianus de caſibus viror. illuſtrium, p. 269.

(4) Burnet, Hiſt. Reformat. Part. I. Book iii. pag. 202.

(5) Ibid. p. 207.

I could name an Hiſtorian, who tells us, That Thevet, a French Capuchin (6), ſays in the fifth Chapter of the ſixteenth Book of his General Coſmography, that divers Engliſh Gentleman had aſſured him, that Smeton the Muſician had diſowned what he had ſaid, and repented for having undone the Queen by a falſe Accuſation. I had a mind to know the Truth of the thing, tho' I knew that the Authority of that Monk is next to nothing; for he is a Man whoſe Books are full of Fables and Ignorance; he is a Lyar without Judgment or Wit. But nevertheleſs, I had a mind to be an Eye-witneſs of what he writ upon this Subject: This is what I found in his Book; 'Many Engliſh Gentlemen 'have aſſured me, that Henry VIII, when at the 'point at Death, repented very much of his Sins, 'and among other things, of the Crime he had 'committed againſt the ſaid Queen Anne Bullen, 'falſly convicted and accuſed of what was im-'puted to her (7).' He ſays nothing at all of the Repentance or Retractation of the Muſician; neither can it be inferred from his Diſcourſe by any conſequence, ſince that Man might have perſiſted in his firſt Depoſition or Confeſſion, and yet Henry VIII might have oppreſſed that Innocent Queen by falſe Witneſſes. At the bottom, Thevet's Teſtimony is of no force, ſince he does not name the Gentlemen who told him ſo; and if they were Queen Elizabeth's Friends, 'tis likely they were prepoſſeſſed, and advanced what they ſaid, on uncertain Reports, to which they would have given no credit if they had not been agreeable to their Deſires. There is another Circumſtance, which enervates that Monk's Authority, which is, that he ſpeaks of Queen Elizabeth in this place as if he hoped to receive a Preſent from her. 'A 'generous and liberal Princeſs to Men of Learning, 'ſays he (8), and chaſte in all her Actions, hav-'ing always had ingenious Perſons in ſingular 'Eſteem, as much as any of her Predeceſſors.' He excuſes her alſo for having introduced Calviniſm into her Kingdom.

(6) He had been a Franciſcan, and not a Capuchin. He left his Order very young.

(7) Thevet, Coſmographie univerſelle, lib. xvi. cap. v. fol. 657. verſo.

(8) Id. ibid. fol. 269.

[B] Her Marriage was declared void.] The Author of the Hiſtory of the Reformation of England informs us I. That the Lord Peircy had told Cardinal Wolſey, that he had given his Word to Anne Bullen before Witneſſes, and that his Conſcience would not ſuffer him to call it in (9). II. That when that Lord was preſſed during the Queen's Tryal, to declare that there had been a Contract at that time between him and Anne Bullen, he took an Oath in the preſence of two Archbiſhops, That there never was any Contract, or Promiſe of Marriage, between him and that Lady, and to make that Oath more ſolemn, he received the Communion in the preſence of divers Counſellors of State; and wiſhed, that the receiving of that Sacrament might be his Damnation, if he had been in any Engagement of that nature. III. That the Queen owned nothing during her Tryal concerning her pretended Engagement with that Lord; but when ſhe was condemned, 'ſhe confeſſed, that there had 'been a Contract between her and Peircy; and 'being brought before the Eccleſiaſtical Court the 'ſeventeenth of May, ſhe declared, that there had 'been a Juſt impediment to her Marriage with 'the King, and that therefore the Marriage could 'not be valid (10).' IV. That upon her Confeſſion the Sentence of Divorce was pronounced (11). V. That the Original of that Sentence was burnt; but what has now been ſaid of it; 'is repeated 'in a Law made by the Parliament a little after 'to regulate the Succeſſion. VI. That the two 'Sentences which were pronounced againſt the 'Queen, (for Adultery, and a Præcontract) are ſo 'oppoſite to each other, that at leaſt one of them 'muſt have been unjuſt. For if that Princeſs's 'Marriage with the King was null from the be-'ginning, ſhe was no ways guilty of Adultery; 'ſince that invalidity hindered her from being Henry's 'lawful Wife. If the Marriage was lawful, it 'was unjuſt to make it void; and if it was not 'lawful, the Queen's Condemnation is plainly con-'trary to Equity; and it cannot be maintained, 'that That Princeſs failed in her Duty to the 'King, ſince ſhe was not then obliged to keep 'her Faith to him.' Many Remarks might be made on this; but I ſhall be contented with theſe three: I. The Lord that denied, with an Oath, and with the Sacrament in his Hand, that there had been any Engagement between him and Anne, was a great Impoſtor either at that time, or when he declared, that he had given his Faith to that Maid (12). If his Oath be preferred before the other Declaration, it muſt be ſaid, that the Queen when juſt ready to die depoſed falſly, that ſhe had been engaged with that Lord; if ſhe was capable of lying in that juncture, it cannot be ſaid for her Juſtification, that ſhe always proteſted her Innocency, even on the Scaffold; for a Woman, who, being ready to appear before GOD, does not ſcruple to tell a falſity, which makes her Children illegitimate, may full as well deny a Truth that loads her with Diſhonour. And we have here a choice Fact, among divers others of the ſame kind, which ſhews, that Hiſtorical Pyrrhoniſm may be proof againſt the Oaths and Proteſtations of dying Perſons. II. The Art of Hiſtorians is remarkable: they make uſe of a Fact, when they can draw any advantage from it, and they deny it when they find themſelves incommoded by it. When it is to be proved, that Anne Bullen did not preſs Henry VIII to Divorce the Queen, it is of uſe to ſhew that ſhe intended in good earneſt to be married to the Lord Peircy. It is then requiſite to own her Engagement. But if on the other ſide ſome Body ſhould tell us, that by that Engagement her Marriage with Henry VIII became void, and that therefore Queen Elizabeth was illegitimate, even

(9) Burnet. Hiſt. Reformat. Part. I. Book iii. p. 203.

(10) Ibid. pag. 203.

(11) Id. ibid.

WHETHER the Oaths of dying Perſons ought to be taken for Proofs.

(12) See Dr Burnet, Part. I. Book iii. pag. 203.

THE ſame Fact denied and owned at different times according to the different Occaſions of the Hiſtorian.

(m) Ibid. p. 205. 1536 (m), and preſerved her good Humour on That Occaſion [C]. Some Catholic Hiſtorians have given themſelves a prodigious Liberty of lying againſt her; as well through Vexation at the Schiſm which ſhe occaſioned, as becauſe they were willing to diſhonour Queen Elizabeth by that means. They are ſome of thoſe inconſiderate Satiriſts, of whom I have already had occaſion to ſpeak, who inſtead of inſiſting only upon true matters of Fact, have engaged themſelves in Slanders which may be eaſily confuted [D]. Their blindneſs is the more inexcuſable, becauſe even tho' Catherine's Divorce had been juſt; then it muſt be ſaid, that this Engagement is a meer Story, and Peiry's Oaths and Communion muſt be inſiſted on. III. No Arbitrary Power did ever go beyond that, which the Parliaments of England exerciſed in the XVI Century. All that the Nation could do in the moſt authentic manner to annul the Marriage of Henry VIII, with Catherine of Arragon, was done; their Daughter Mary was therefore illegitimate, and yet ſhe was acknowledged for Queen, as a legitimate Child of Henry VIII. All that was neceſſary to annul the Marriage of the ſame Prince with Anne, was likewiſe done; Elizabeth, their Daughter, was therefore illegitimate: and yet ſhe was acknowledged for Queen, as a legitimate Child of Henry. The Original of the Sentence of the Divorce was burnt, becauſe they were not willing that a piece ſo diſadvantageous to Queen Elizabeth ſhould be preſerved. Obſerve well, that, in Hereditary Kingdoms, it is a Fundamental Law, That Baſtards ſhould be poſtponed to all the legitimate Relations of the Royal Family.

THE PARLIAMENT of England exerciſing arbitrary Power.

[C] She was beheaded —— and preſerved her good Humour, at that juncture.] In the time of her Impriſonment, ſhe acted very different parts: ſometimes ſhe ſeemed devout, and ſhed abundance of Tears, and then, all on a ſudden, would break out into a loud Laughter (13). ------ As ſoon as the Judges, who came to examine her, were gone, ſhe fell on her Knees, and melting in Tears, cryed many times, LORD JESUS have mercy upon me, and at the ſame time broke out into a Laugh (14). Some Hours before her Death ſhe ſaid, that the Executioner was very handy, and, beſides, ſhe had a very ſmall Neck (15). At the ſame time ſhe felt it with her Hands, and laughed heartily. Tho' Gratiani is not favourable to her, yet he owns that ſhe died with great Reſolution, and that ſhe took care to ſpread her Gown about her Feet, that ſhe might not fall indecently: Poſtremo genibus poſitis ultimos quoque pedes quo honeſtius procumberet veſte contexit (16). The Poets ſay the ſame of Polyxena: The Hiſtorians obſerve it of Julius Cæſar: See the Remark [H] of the Article OLYMPIAS. I queſtion much, what the ſame Author reports, that when ſhe was brought to the Place of Execution (17), ſhe fell into a great Paſſion at the People who ſhewed her no reſpect, and told them, that in ſpite of their Teeth, ſhe was, and died, their Queen. 'Cum è carceribus in aream, quæ perampla eſt ante Arcem, produceretur, quò omnis multitudo concurrerat ad ſpectandam necem ejus, quam nuper demiſſe adorare conſueverant, nec tranſeuntem ullo honore dignarentur; illa, ne tum quidem obſita ſuperbiæ, contumelioſiſſimè eos compellans convicio increpuit, eſſe moriturumque ſe Reginam eorum ferens, diſrumperentur omnes licet (18). '—— When ſhe was brought out of the Priſon into the Court, before the Tower, which is very large, where a Crowd was gathered to be Spectators of her Death, they vouchſafed not, as ſhe went along, to pay the leaſt reſpect to the Perſon, whom they had not long ſince uſed humbly to adore: ſhe not forgetting her Pride even then, addreſſing herſelf to them, moſt contumelioufly upbraided them, telling them, that in ſpite of their Teeth ſhe was, and ſhould die, their Queen.'

(13) Burnet, Hiſt. Reformat. Part. I. pag. 198.

(14) Ibid. Book ii. pag. 299.

(15) Ibid. Out of a Letter of the Lieutenant of the Tower, pag. 204, 205.

(16) Gratian. de caſibus viror. illuſt. p. 270.

(17) The open place which it before the Tower, according to him.

(18) Gratian. de caſibus viror. illuſt. pag. 269.

[D] The Catholics have loaded her with Slanders, which may be very eaſily confuted.] For Example; is there any thing more eaſy to be confuted, than the Story which ſo many Perſons have copied from Sanders? viz. That Anne was Henry the VIIIth's Daughter; that her Mother brought her into the World two Years after the departure of Thomas Bullen, on his Embaſſy to France, to which the King nominated him, only that he might enjoy his Wife more freely, in the abſence of her Husband; that Thomas Bullen at his return into England, hearing of his Wife's ill Conduct, ſummoned her before the Official of Canterbury for Adultery, and ſued for a Separation (19); that the King ordered him to ſtop all his Proceedings, and to take his Wife into favour again; that he obeyed, but not till ſhe had owned to him, that the King was the Father of the laſt Daughter of which ſhe was brought to Bed (20); that at fifteen Years of Age Anne Bullen was debauched by her Father's Steward, and by his Chaplain; that ſhe was ſent afterwards into France to a Lord, who educated her as a Maid of great Quality; that ſhe behaved herſelf at the Court of France with ſo little Modeſty, that ſhe was called the Engliſh Hackney, and that, becauſe Francis I had a ſhare in her Favour, ſhe was called the King's Mule; that, during the Love of Henry VIII for that Lady, Thomas Wiat, one of the chief Lords of the Court, came before the Council to depoſe, that he had lain with her, 'at a time 'when he did not believe, that the King thought 'of honouring her ſo far as to marry her;' That Henry not believing that Depoſition, 'Wiat offered 'to make the King an Eye-witneſs of the Favours 'he ſhould receive from that lewd Woman;' that Wiat was called an impudent Fellow, and forbid the Court.

(19) Sanders's Schiſme d'Angleterre, lib. i. pag. 17. of Maucroix's Tranſlation, Edit. Amſterdam 1685.

(20) This Narrative of Sanders has been altered by ſome. Gratiani ſays, that Thom Boleyn was three Years. thers ſay that at his Return he found his Wife with Child, and that the King confeſſed to him, that it was his doing. See Burnet's Hiſtory of the Reformation, and Varillas's Hiſt. de l'Herefie, lib. ix. p. 262.

Doctor Burnet makes uſe of three Arguments, againſt this. I. Sanders reports thoſe things only on the credit of a Piece, which no Body ever ſaw; that is, The Life of Sir Thomas More by Raſtal. II. They begun too late to object them. III. There are ſome impoſſibilities in that Account. See here the ſecond of theſe three Reaſons at length. 'If thoſe things were ſuch as Sanders reports them, 'how comes it that at the Death of Anne Bullen, 'no body was either complaiſant enough to the 'King, or Enemy enough to that unhappy Princeſs, to publiſh her Infamy, which on other Accounts could not be unknown? For ſuch a Woman as Anne Bullen's Mother's being with Child 'two Years after her Husband's departure, who 'was ſent on a conſiderable Embaſſy; her Huſband's ſuing for a Divorce in the Archbiſhop of 'Canterbury's Court, and cauſing his Wife to be 'ſummoned there, are ſuch Circumſtances as the 'World does not forget ſo ſoon. On the other ſide, 'Anne Bullen's being in ſo ill Repute; her ſuffering herſelf firſt to be debauched in her Father's 'Houſe; her ill life in France afterwards; and her 'being kept by two Kings, are other Circumſtances which cannot be very ſecret. Beſides, when 'the Records of the Archbiſhop's Court were yet extant, it was offered to the Public to make it appear, that there was nothing in thoſe Records like 'the Proſecutions which Sanders ſpeaks of. Laſtly, 'All the Writers of thoſe Times, as well thoſe on 'the Pope's, as on the Emperor's ſide, keep a profound ſilence about thoſe things; which they had 'never failed to publiſh, if they had been true, or 'if they had come to their Knowledge. But eighty 'Years (21) after ſomebody or other takes it in 'his head to forge a Hiſtory full of Impoſtures; 'Or, at leaſt, publiſhed it, becauſe it was then 'more ſafe to tell Lies, all thoſe who might have 'been able to diſcover the Truth being dead (22).' As for the third Reaſon, I only relate it in ſhort. Thomas Bullen could not be ſent Embaſſador by King Henry VIII, before the Year 1509. Anne muſt therefore have been born in the Year 1511, and debauched in her Houſe in the Year 1526. Where ſhall we then find the time when ſhe was with a great Lord in France, and afterwards at Court? Where ſhall we find that licentious Life which got her the name of The Engliſh Hackney? I ſay, Where ſhall we find that time, ſince ſhe was returned into England in the Year 1526? Sanders can never be juſtified: His beſt Apologiſt, Mr le Grand,

(21) Limitations ought to take place in this ſort of Cauſes whenever the Accuſation is of ſuch a nature as to be eaſily known, and when the occaſions of producing it have not been wanting, and yet it was never mentioned. See hereunder the Remark [K] of the Article BOLSEC.

(22) Burnet's Hiſtory of the Reformation, 42. See at the end of the IſtVol. his Reflection of Sanders No 21, you will ſecond that the Wit because they might have satisfied their slandering Humour, without exceeding the Bounds of faithful Historians [E]. It is pity that the good Fortune they have had to find a great number of obliging Transcribers and Readers should inspire so many others with the Boldness to imitate them. Sanders is the only Authority of all the Authors who have defamed Anne Bullen, and particularly of Mr Moreri. Those who say, that the Protestants ought to blush for being so much obliged to That Queen, who was of their Religion, would do well to declare first of all, that they are very much vexed at the Services the Empress Irene did to the Cause of Images (n).

(n) See Burnet, Hist. Reformat. Part. I. Book iii. pag. 206.

Consult Mr de Larrey in the first Volume of his History of England, where you will find the Reasons pro and con clearly set down, and our Anne as much justified as the Laws of History could permit.

(23) Le Grand, Hist. du Divorce de Henri VIII. Tom. II. p. 47.

Grand, forsakes him here. 'As I do not pretend 'to palliate his Faults, says he (23), I confess plain- 'ly, that he is too passionate against Anne Bullen; 'that no Author that I know, besides himself, has 'said, that she was Daughter of Henry VIII, or 'that she had led such a disorderly Life.' Sanders affirms, that she was beloved by the King in the Year 1526. Now, before she was beloved by that King, she had been debauched at her supposed Father's at fifteen Years of Age; she had lived in France; she was returned into England; and she was taken in as Maid of Honour to Queen Catherine. She was therefore at least near Twenty Years of Age in 1526, so that she was born in the Year 1506, three Years before King Henry VIII ascended the Throne, and five Years before any of That Prince's Embassadors could have been two Years in his Embassy. It has been found that Anne was born in the Year 1507, and therefore, according to Sanders, Henry VIII must have sent Thomas Bullen Embassador in the Year 1505, and he must have been at that time deeply engaged in an Adultery. Now the first of these two Facts is false; for Henry was not yet King; and the other is not to be believed of a Youth who was but fourteen Years of Age. Add to this, that Thomas Bullen was not sent on his Embassy till the Year 1515. And 'tis to be observed, that, Dr Burnet having urged all these Reasons in refuting Varillas (24), we have not seen in the Reply of the latter any Proof, or any solid Remark in Sanders's favour. I ought not to pass over in silence what concerns Wiat's Deposition. Dr Burnet has spoke more amply of it in a Work of a later date than his History of the Reformation. First of all he shewed how much such a Deposition is contrary to all likelihood, and then he maintained that Wiat 'was never out of Favour; but was employed in 'Foreign Embassies till he died (25).' He quotes an Original Piece, wherein Wiat's Son attests, 'That his Father was Gentleman of the Bed-Cham- 'ber to King Henry, all the while That Marriage 'with Anne Bullen lasted, and yet neither did he 'in discretion retire out of the Court, nor did the 'King seem jealous, or the Queen offended at him. '- - - - - That his Father was afterwards Embassa- 'dor for several Years in Charles Vth's Court (26).

(24) See Dr Burnet's Refutation of Sanders, n. 21.

(25) Critical Remarks on the 9th Book of Mr Varillas's History, pag. 87.

(26) A Defence of the Critical Remarks on Varillas, pag. 107, 108.

The Jesuit, who published three Volumes of the Revolutions of England, seems to me very reasonable in his account of Anne Bullen: I shall set down what he says of her, by which it will appear, that those who have refuted Sanders, have not laboured in vain. 'Sanders relates several things of Anne's 'Birth and Behaviour before Henry fell in Love 'with her, which are not easily to be believed, nor 'supported by any convincing proof. He says, that 'she was Henry's Daughter; that she had a Sister 'whom that Monarch debauched; that she had pro- 'stituted herself almost from her Childhood to the 'Steward and Chaplain of Thomas Bullen, who passed 'for her Father; that when she was at the Court 'of France, Francis I, and his Courtiers, dishonour- 'ed her in such a manner, that she was publickly 'called by infamous Names: But these are things 'which the Protestant Writers exclaim against, and 'have some reason to deny. But that of which 'she cannot be cleared is, that, by counterfeiting the 'virtuous Woman, she gave Henry some hopes that 'she would marry him, if if he could bring about 'that monstrous Divorce which Wolsey proposed to 'him, and that thereby she contributed to the In- 'justice done by That Prince to his lawful Wife, 'and to all the Evils which followed upon it. The 'Tragical End that her Incontinency brought her 'to, which was proved by a legal Tryal, made it 'appear that the Catholick Writers might say, with- 'out judging rashly of her, that she was Chaste 'only when she was Ambitious (27)."

(27) Father d'Orleans Hist. des Revolutions d'Angleterre, Tom. II. p. 427.

[E] They might have said enough ill of her, without exceeding the bounds of faithful Historians.] The Bishop of Meaux urges no other Facts to defame this Queen, than what are owned by the Protestants: By these he proves her guilty of an 'immodest 'Gayety, of indiscreet Liberties, of an irregular and 'licentious Behaviour. A Modest Woman, says he '(28), not to say a Queen, was never seen to suffer 'herself to be so little respected, as to have such 'Declarations made to her as were made to this 'Princess, by Persons of all Conditions, even of 'the meanest. Nay, she was pleased with, and 'gave occasion for them; and was not ashamed to 'tell one of her Gallants, that she perceived he 'deferred marrying, in hopes to have her after the 'King's Death. All these things are acknowledged 'by Anne, and she was so far from looking on 'those bold Lovers with an evil Eye, that it is 'certain, without diving farther into the matter, 'she treated them the better for it. - - - - - - At the 'time she was taken, while she was at prayer to 'God, melting in Tears, she was seen to break out 'into Laughter like one distracted: The Words 'which she spoke in her Transport against her Lo- 'vers, who had betrayed her, shewed the disorder 'she was in, and the trouble of her Conscience '(29). - - - - - - By a shameful compliance Anne 'acknowledged a thing which was not true, viz. 'that she had married Henry in the Life-time of the 'Lord Percy, to whom she was contracted before, 'and by declaring against her Conscience, that her 'Marriage with the King was void, she involved 'her Daughter Elizabeth in her own shame (30). I do not see, that any one can reasonably complain, that the Bishop of Meaux, in the alternative of two Crimes of Anne Bullen, has pitched upon the greatest, out of Animosity; for it is a great deal more likely that Anne was not contracted to her Lord, than that she was; and, consequently, she deserves much more to be accused of a false Oath, whereby, when just ready to appear before God, she unjustly declared her own Daughter a Bastard, than to be accused of Retractation as to a Promise of Marriage.

(28) Histoire des Variations, lib. vii. n. 20. p. 302.

(29) Ibid. p. 303.

(30) Ibid. p. 304.

A Protestant Historian (31) has lately published the first Letter which Anne writ to the King. Nothing can be more contrary to Modesty; she declares her Passion there without any discretion, and offers herself to the King without any exception; for she adds that Clause to the Words, most obedient Servant, with which she subscribes the Letter. That Historian should have added this Reason to those, that hindered him from believing what the Earl of Aylesbury had read in some Manuscripts; viz. That the King having courted That Maid twelve Years, did not know her till after his Marriage (32). But I must observe by the by, that those Manuscripts seem to be very uncertain; there is no likelihood that Henry VIII began to love this Lady in the Year 1519. It is best to believe nothing of it, nor of a Passage in the Forty seventh Page of That Author, viz. that Anne went into France at fifteen Years of Age, when the Princess of England was married to Lewis XII. According to this, she must have been born in the Year 1499, and not, as Camden says, in the Year 1507. It is very strange, that we should so little know at what time she was born, at what time she went out of England, and returned thither, considering that she was a Person who rose to the Royal Dignity in so extraordinary a manner.

(31) Leti, Hist. de la Reine Elizabeth, Tom. I. pag. 60 Amsterdam Edit. 1694.

(32) Ibid. p. 52.

BOLESLAUS, the first of that Name, was the first King of Poland. His Father the Duke Miceslaus, having embraced Christianity, desired the Title and Dignity of King from the Pope; but did not obtain it. His Son found much more facility with the Emperor Otho III, after having received him splendidly at Gnesna, where that Emperor had been in Pilgrimage to venerate the Body of St Adelbert [A], who had been martyred in Prussia four Years before (a). It was in the Year 1000, that Otho performed that Pilgrimage. The Honours he received from Boleslaus obliged him to shew him his Gratitude by conferring the Title of King upon him [B]. He dressed him in his own Garments, and gave him the Insignia of the Empire, and particularly the Sword and the Golden Ball with the Cross. Boleslaus had very good Qualities, he was Liberal to the Church, and very Valiant. He repulsed the Bohemians into the Heart of their own Country; he chastised the Moravians, and made them Tributaries; he punished the Idolatrous Prussians, who had martyred St Adelbert, whose Body he redeemed; he re-established Stopolcus, Duke of Russia, who had been deposed by his own Brother Jaroslaüs, &c. He married Judith, the Daughter of Geisa, Duke of Hungary, by whom he had Children (b).

(a) See Calvisius.

(b) Taken from the Voyage de la Reine de Pologne, by le Labourer, pag. 139, 140.

[A] He received the Emperor Otho splendidly at Gnesna, where he was come in Pilgrimage, to venerate the Body of St Adelbert.] The Emperor Otho III was pretty much addicted to those kind of Devotions. After having punished Crescentius and his Anti-pope in the Year 998, he went to Ratisbon in his return from Italy, 'and made a Vow to go 'in Pilgrimage into Poland to the Tomb of the holy 'Bishop Adelbert. - - - - - - - At his return from Po- 'land, he went to Aix with his Sister Adelaide to 'visit the Tomb of Charlemagne, and to be also at 'a meeting of Bishops (1). Being returned into 'Italy, his first care was to put St Adelbert's Hand 'in St Bartholomew's Church in the Island of the 'Tyber, with divers other Relics of holy Martyrs, 'as also the whole Body of St Bartholomew, which 'he caused to be brought from Benevento - - - - - - 'The same Year, being moved with a serious Re- 'pentance for having caused the Consul Crescentius 'to be put to Death against his Word, he reli- 'giously performed the Penance enjoined him by 'St Romuald, and went on Foot to Mount Gargan, 'and other holy Places (2).'

(1) Blanc, Hist. de Baviere, Tom. II. pag. 147.

[B] Otho conferred on him the Title of King] Baronius ascribes this to Pope Sylvester II, and grounds himself on this, That, a little after Otho IIId's Pilgrimage, the Poles solicited the Pope for the Title of King. Doubtless, they did it ad majorem cautelam - For the greater Safety, and for fear of exasperating that Court, which would not allow the Emperors the Right of erecting Kingdoms However that be, the Poles attribute the first Institution of their Royalty to Otho III (3).

(2) Id. ibid. p. 148.

(3) Le Labourer, Relation du voiage de Pologne, pag. 139, 140.

BOLSEC (JEROME), would have been altogether buried in Oblivion, if he had not made himself famous by some satirical Books, which the Monks and the Missionaries quote still [A], though it must be acknowledged, that they do not speak so often of them as they did about the end of the XVIth Century, and in the beginning of the XVIIth. What is to be found concerning this Man in the Books of the Protestants is as follows. Jerome Bolsec was a Carmelite of Paris, who, having preached somewhat freely in St Bartholomew's Church, forsook his Order, and fled into Italy to Renata of France, Duchess of Ferrara (a). There was the common Sanctuary of those who were persecuted for the new Opinions. He set up for a Physician, and married quickly, but did something or other for which he was expelled (b). He went to Geneva as a Physician; but finding that he did not distinguish himself to his Satisfaction in that Profession, he set up for Divinity, and dogmatized at first in private on the Mystery of Predestination, according to the Principles of Pelagius, and afterwards had the Boldness to make a public Discourse against the received Opinion. As soon as his Conversation with certain Persons, to infect them with his Pelagianism, was known, Calvin went to see him, and censured him mildly: Afterwards he sent for him to his House, and endeavoured to reclaim him from his Error; but this did not hinder Bolsec from delivering in Public an insulting Discourse against the Decree of Eternal Predestination

(a) Paulo liberius in divi Bartholomæi fano concionatus esset, in Italiam abjecta culla profugit, atque repente Medicum factum exorem duxisse. Beza ad Claud. de Xaintes, Apolog altera, Oper. Tom. II. p. 345.

(b) Quum - - - - in Italiam profugisset, ne quoque decepta Ferrariensi Ducissa pulsus. Id in vita Calvini, Oper. Tom. III. p. 374.

[A] He made himself famous by some satirical Works, which the Monks and the Missionaries quote still.] A Multitude of Persons have given out, both in Sermons, and Books, that Calvin was branded with the Flower-de-luce, &c. without any other proof for it than the Testimony of Bolsec. I should not wonder if some Painter had done that Writer the honour to compare him to Homer, I mean, to make a Picture, where Bolsec should have appeared Vomiting, and surrounded with a great number of Priests, Monks, and Lay Controversists, greedy of the Crudities, which he vomited, and swallowing them with so very eager an Appetite, as even to lick the Floor; for it is certain, that they have made the same use of those Ordures, as the Poets who came after Homer did of his Inventions (1).

(1) See Ælian, lib. xiii. var. Hist. cap. xxii.

——— Cujusque ex ore profusos
Omnis posteritas latices in carmina duxit,
Amnemque in tenues ausa est diducere rivos,
Unius fœcunda bonis (2).

(2) Manilius, lib. ii. ver. 8. speaking of Homer.

——— From whose Fountain
Posterity have drawn most plenteous draughts,
Poets have dared the River to divide
Into small streams, and gathered all their Wealth
From Homer's single Store.

See how Fortune sports with things; some Circumstances are sufficient to make the Fate of a Scoundrel equal to that of the greatest Men, and the most brutish Follies as much respected as the finest Productions of Human Wit. What a shameful thing is this! What Ovid said of Homer might have been applied to Bolsec.

Adjice Mæoniden, à quo ceu fonte perenni
Vatum pierius ora rigantur aquis (3).

(3) Ovid. Amor lib. iii. Eleg. xii.

Add Homer too, who, like a constant Spring,
Our Poets with Pierian Draughts supplies.

tion. It is thought that he was the bolder, becauſe he imagined that Calvin was not among his Auditors. He had ſuch a Thought becauſe he did not ſee him in his Place. The Reaſon was, Calvin not coming till after the Sermon was begun kept himſelf hid behind the Crowd. But as ſoon as Bolſec had ended, he ſhewed himſelf, and confuted him ſo ſtrongly by Scripture, by St Auguſtin, and by Reaſon; that Bolſec was the only Perſon that was not aſhamed of his being overcome in that manner [B]. That was not all: One of the Magiſtrates, who had Power to impriſon People, was preſent in that Aſſembly, and immediately exerted his Power; he called Bolſec a ſeditious Fellow, and ſent him to Priſon. The Cauſe was diſcuſſed very fully, and at laſt, with the Advice of the Swiſs Churches [C], the Senate of Geneva declared Bolſec convicted of Sedition and Pelagianiſm [D], and as ſuch baniſhed him from the Territory of the Republic, on the Penalty of being whipped if he ſhould return thither. This was done the Twenty third of December 1551. He retired into a neighbouring Place, which depended on the Canton of Bern, and raiſed ſo many Troubles there, that they baniſhed him out of all the Territories of that Canton [E]. He returned into France, and applied himſelf

[B] He made a Diſcourſe on Predeſtination ---- which Calvin refuted ſo ſtrongly, that he was the only Perſon who was not aſhamed of his being overcome in that manner.] By Beza's manner of relating this affair, it ſeems as if Bolſec made a Sermon; but the Letter, which Calvin writ to the Swiſs Churches in the Name of the Church of Geneva, clears the Fact, and ſhews that Bolſec only cenſured and refuted a Sermon that was then preached upon the Grace of the Holy Ghoſt. 'Tandem virus ſuum nuper (4) aperto gutture evomuit. Nam cum pro more noſtro unus è fratribus illum Joannis locum exponeret, ubi pronuntiat Chriſtus ex Deo non eſſe, qui verba Dei non audiunt, dixiſſetque, quotquot Spiritu Dei renati non ſunt; pervicaciter uſque in finem Deo reſiſtere: quia peculiare ſit obedientiæ donum, quo Deus ſuos electos dignatur: Surrexit nebulo ille, ac dixit falſam & impiam opinionem, cujus auctor fuit Laurentius Valla, noſtro ſeculo exortam eſſe, quod Dei voluntas rerum omnium ſit cauſſa. Hoc autem modo peccata & malorum omnium culpam in Deum tranſcribi, & illi affingi tyrannicam libidinem qualem Poëtæ veteres in ſuo Jove commenti ſunt. Poſtea ad alterum caput deſcendit, non ideo ſalutem conſequi homines, quia electi ſint, ſed ideo eligi, quia credant: nec reprobari quenquam nudo Dei placito, ſed eos tantum, qui ſe communi electione privant. In hac quæſtione agitanda multis, & atrocibus convitiis in nos invectus eſt. Præfectus urbis re audita eum duxit in carcerem, præſertim quia tumultuoſe plebem hortatus fuerat, ne ſe decipi à nobis ſineret. Nunc ad Senatum delata eſt cauſſæ cognitio: ubi errorem ſuum non minori obſtinatione quàm audacia tueri perrexit (5). —— Lately he opened his Mouth, and at laſt diſgorged his Venom. For when, according to our Cuſtom, one of the Brethren was expounding that Place of John, where Chriſt declares, that they are not of God, who do not hear the words of God, and ſaid, that they who are not born again of the Spirit of God, do obſtinately diſobey God to the end; becauſe the Gift of Obedience is a peculiar Favour conferred by God on his Elect: That Wretch roſe up and ſaid, that a falſe and impious Opinion, firſt broached by Laurentius Valla, had ſprung up in our time, that the Will of God is the Cauſe of all things: That by this all Sins and the blame of all evil was tranſferred to God; and a tyrannical Will aſcribed to him, ſuch as the old Poets feigned of Jupiter. Then he came to another Point, viz. that Men do not therefore obtain Salvation, becauſe they are elected, but are therefore elected becauſe they believe: And that no Man is reprobate by the bare Decree of God, but only thoſe who deprive themſelves of the common Election. In diſcuſſing this Queſtion, he inveighed againſt us with many bitter Reproaches. One of the Magiſtrates of the City hearing the matter committed him to Priſon, chiefly becauſe he had, in a tumultuous manner, exhorted the People not to ſuffer themſelves to be deceived by us. Then the Affair was brought before the Senate, where he continued to defend his Error with no leſs Obſtinacy than Aſſurance.' As for the manner, how Calvin confuted him, read theſe Words of Beza: 'Illum tot verbi divini teſtimoniis, tot Auguſtini præſertim locis, tot denique tamque gravibus argumentis, confutavit perculit, obruit, ut omnes præter ipſummet perfrictæ frontis Monachum ipſius vehementer puderet (6). —— He anſwered, overſet, and confounded him with ſo many Teſtimonies from the word of God, with ſo many Paſſages chiefly out of St Auguſtin, in ſhort by ſo many and ſo weighty Arguments, that every Body was miſerably aſhamed for him, except the Brazen-faced Monk himſelf.

(4) The 16th of October 1551, according to Beza in vita Calvini.

(5) Vid Epiſt. cxxxiii. Calvin.

(6) Beza in vita Calvini, Oper. Tom. III. p. 374.

[C] With the Advice of the Swiſs Churches ----.] I have already related a long Paſſage of the Letter which was written to them to conſult them. The beginning of that Letter is thus: 'Eſt hic Hieronymus quidam, qui abjecta monachi cuculla, unus ex circumforaneis medicis factus eſt, qui fallendo, & fruſtrando, tantum ſibi impudentiæ acquirunt, ut ad quidvis audendum prompti ſint, ac parati. Is jam ante octo menſes in publico Eccleſiæ noſtræ cœtu doctrinam de gratuita Dei electione, quam ex verbo Dei acceptam vobiſcum docemus, labefactare conatus eſt. Ac tunc quidem qua fieri potuit moderatione ſedata fuit hominis protervia. Poſtea non deſtitit locis omnibus obſtrepere, ut ſimplicibus fidei hoc caput excuteret.—We have here one Jerome, who left the Monks habit and turned itinerant Doctor, which ſort of People, by their Practice of deceiving, and making fools of Mankind, acquire ſuch a Stock of Impudence, that they are ready and fit to attempt any thing. This Man about eight Months ago, in a public Aſſembly of our Church, endeavoured to overthrow the Doctrine of God's free Election, which we teach with you from the word of God. At that time the Man's Inſolence was ſtopt, with all poſſible Moderation. Yet he ſtill perſiſted, making a noiſe every where, in order to beat off the Simple from this Article of Faith.

[D] The Senate of Geneva declared him convicted of Sedition and Pelagianiſm.] Mr Drelincourt has (7) publiſhed the Extract of a Letter which Mr Lullin, Counſellor and late Syndic of the Republic of Geneva, writ to him. It appears by that Letter, that Bolſec's ill Life contributed to his Baniſhment. Theſe are the Contents of that Extract: 'By a Sentence given after his Anſwers and Confeſſions in the Priſons of this City, the Twenty ſecond of December 1551, and publiſhed with ſound of Trumpet, and which I have read in our Regiſters, he was condemned to perpetual Baniſhment, on the penalty of whipping, for his Scandals, Impieties, and his ill Life.' Beza's words are: 'Cauſa multis diſputationibus agitata, Senatus Helveticarum etiam Eccleſiarum ſententiam percontatus illum tum ut ſeditioſum, tum ut mere Pelagianum 23. Decemb. publice damnatum urbe expulit, fuſtuariam pœnam minatus, ſi vel in urbe vel in urbis territorio eſſet deprehenſus (8). —— The Cauſe being examined, after many Debates, the Senate (having alſo aſked the Judgment of the Swiſs Churches,) on the Twenty third of December, ſentenced him to be baniſhed the City, as a ſeditious Perſon, and a mere Pelagian, on Penalty of being whipped if he were catched any more, either in the City, or it's Territories.'

(7) Defenſe de Calvin, printed at Geneva in 1667. pag. 150, 151.

(8) Beza in vita Calvini, p. 375.

[E] He raiſed ſo many Troubles in the Canton of Bern, that they baniſhed him out of all the Territories himself to the Protestants first at Paris, and afterwards at Orleans [F], and shewed a great Desire of being promoted to the Ministry, and of being reconciled to the Church of Geneva; but the Persecution that arose against the Protestants made him resolve to take up his first Religion, and the Practice of Physic. He went and settled at Autun, where he acted the easy Husband in favour of the Canons of That Place, and shewed a most violent Passion against the Reformed Church (c) [G]. That Consort, of whom he was so little jealous, was his second Wife (d). He changed his Habitation often (e); he lived at Lyons in the Year 1582, as appears by the Title of a Book which he caused to be printed then at Paris against Beza. He died not long after; for he was not living in the Year 1585 [H]. The Book I have just now mentioned is intituled, The History of the Life, Doctrine, and Behaviour of Theodorus Beza, called the Spectable, great Minister of Geneva (f). It was preceded by the History of the Life, Actions, Doctrine, Constancy, and Death of John Calvin, heretofore Minister of Geneva, which was printed at Lyons in the Year 1577 (g). Those two Histories are altogether unworthy of Credit, as well because they were written by an Author full of Resentment for the Affronts he had received [I], as because he is found manifestly guilty

(c) Beza in vita Calvini Oper. Tom. III. pag. 374.

(d) Id. ad Claud. de Xaintes Apolog. altera, pag. 345.

(e) Medicinam Callipoli ad Araxim tam feliciter facere quam olim Theologiam exerc. it. Ibid. I think this Callipolis is Belleville in Beaujolois.

(f) Du Verdier Biblioth. Françoise, p. 566.

(g) Id. ibid.

riteries of that Canton.] He was one of those who boldly accused Calvin of making God the Author of Sin. Calvin, to prevent the impressions, which such Complaints might make on the Gentlemen of Bern, caused himself to be deputed to them, and pleaded his Cause before them. He was so fortunate, that tho' they would not pass Judgment on his Doctrine, nor decide whether it was true or false, yet Bolsec was ordered to depart the Country (9).

(9) Id. ibid. ad ann. 1555.

[F] He returned into France, and applied himself to the Protestants ------ at Orleans.] It was at the National Synod held in that City in the Year 1562. In the Acts of the National Synod that was assembled the Year following at Lyons, we find him among the deposed Ministers. He is there called Infamous, an Impostor, and an Apostate (10). This shews that the Synod of Orleans, deceived by his feigned Show of Repentance, admitted him to the Holy Ministry. Nevertheless it does not appear by Beza's Narratives, repeated in divers places of his Works, that Bolsec was ever a Minister. See his Ecclesiastical History, in the sixth Book, Pages 34, and 35; but correct the Word Bolisec there, which the Printers have put for Bolsec. See also the Life of Calvin in French (11).

(10) See Mr Quick's Synodicon in Gallia Reformata, Tom. I. pag. 47.

(11) Pag. 20.

[G] He went and settled at Autun, where he acted the easy Husband in favour of the Canons, and shewed a most violent Passion against the Reformed Church.] I make use of an Expression less harsh than that of Beza; but he writ in Latin. 'Ubi contra quam sperarat Ecclesias affligi animadvertit, repetita medicina ad hostes Evangelii manifesta defectione (uxore quoque Canonicis Augustodunensibus prostituta) transivit. Unde nunc etiam quibus potest maledictis veritatem proscindit (12). —— When, contrary to his Expectation, he found the Churches were distressed, he took to Physic again, and openly went over to the Enemies of the Reformed Church, and even prostituted his Wife to the Canons of Autun. Where he now wounds the Truth with all the Reproaches he is Master of. What meanness! What baseness! morally speaking a Man had better be subject to the disquiets of Jealousy; the judgment of the Public, howevever corrupt, falls much heavier on voluntary Cuckoldom, than on the infirmities of a jealous Husband. Neither Bolsec's indigence, nor the Profit which he might draw from his indulgence to the Canons of Autun, would have excused him even with those Persons, who make profession to jest upon every thing. People will laugh at, and jest equally upon, a Husband, who gives his Wife no liberty, and upon one who lends a helping hand to the Pleasures she is minded to take; but after all, they will have as much contempt and indignation for the latter as Juvenal had:

(12) Beza in vita Calvini, p. 375, 376.

Cum leno accipiat mœchi bona si capiendi
Jus nullum uxori, doctus spectare lacunar,
Doctus & ad calicem vigilanti stertere naso (13).

(13) Juven. Sat. 1. ver. 55.

The Wife by her procuring Husband sold;
For tho' the Laws make null the adulterous Deed
Of Lands to her the Cuckold may succeed.
Who his taught Eyes up to the Ceiling throws,
And sleeps all over, but his wakeful Nose.

DRYDEN.

[H] He was not living in 1585.] 'Beza in his 'Answer to Genebrard, printed at Geneva in the 'Year 1585, says of Bolsec in the Seventy fifth Page. 'Add as many false Stories as you please, taken from 'that Carmelite, who forsook his Order, and who 'is an infamous Man, having been banished thrice, 'and changed his Religion four times; and who, 'after having aspersed the Dead and the Living, died in Despair.' This you may read in the Defence of Calvin done by Mr Drelincourt (14). But I have read the quite contrary in the Book of another Minister. 'These Witnesses, says he (15); 'are more to be credited, than those whom the Bishop produces, which are Bolsec and Arenius; the 'first of whom greatly lamented and wept in a full 'Synod, for having so wickedly aspersed the memory of so great a Man, and faithful Servant of 'God.' But this ought not to hinder any body from giving credit to the Passage mentioned by Mr Drelincourt; for it is likely that the Minister of Fontenay meant only the steps, which Bolsec made in the Synod of Orleans, with great humility, in the Year 1562. If he meant no more than that, he does not confute the Objection, seeing the Life of Calvin, published by Bolsec, did not come out till fifteen Years after that Synod of Orleans.

(14) Pag. 102.

(15) Peter de la Vallade, Minister at Fontenai le Comte, in the Apology for the Ecclesie of the Ministers of Charenton, opposed to the Book that Armand John du Plessis, Bishop of Luçon, had produced against them, chap. xxii. pag. 298.

[I] His two Histories of Calvin and Beza are altogether unworthy of Credit, &c.] Mr Drelincourt lays a great stress upon that Argument. He sets forth the Reasons which Bolsec had to hate Calvin: he says, that Calvin, having convicted Bolsec of his Errors in a full Assembly, excommunicated him at last with the advice of the whole Consistory: he adds that Calvin was deputed with some others from Geneva, to inform the Potent Republic of Bern of the Life and Morals of this wretched Bolsec (16). So that Calvin may be looked upon as the chief Promoter of the two Sentences of Banishment pronounced against Bolsec, the one at Geneva, and the other at Bern. As for what concerns Beza, he drew Bolsec's Indignation upon himself by the diffamatory things he had published against him in very hard Terms. Mr Drelincourt gives some proofs of it. 'In the Year 1551, says 'he (17), there came into this City one Jerome Bolsec; 'some time before a Carmelite of Paris, who from a 'Divine became suddenly a Physician, or rather a 'Quack, who, to put himself forward, thinking 'himself to be in his Cloister, and not in a Church 'of God, of which he knew nothing but by hearsay, begun here and there, and also in a full Congregation, to reflect upon the Doctrine of Providence and Eternal Predestination. Beza calls this 'Bolsec a Villain, an Impudent Man, and a Wolf in disguise; and after having represented in what 'manner Calvin convicted him of his Errors, he 'says, That the Monk could not tell what to answer, guilty of Calumny in the most heinous Points [K]. There is now hardly any Writer of Reputation, but will acknowledge that this Author is not to be credited [L].

(16) Drelincourt, Defense de Calvin, pag. 101.

(17) Id. ibid. pag. 135. He takes this from the Preface that Beza prefixed to Calvin's Commentary on Joshua, printed in 1564.

La

'fwer, and had nothing left but a Monkish Impudence. To which he adds, Which he shewed even before the Court the Twenty-third of December, when Sentence of Banishment was pronounced against him, with sound of Trumpet, as usual. But it is no wonder; for his impudence has ever since made him odious to every Man of Understanding, seeing he is condemned by his own judgment, as will appear by evidence under his own hand, whenever there is occasion for it. For this wretch, who had deserved Punishment for a seditious Act, being mildly treated by the Magistrates, in hopes that he might in time be cured of his Sophistical Ignorance, after he had given so much offence, and done so much harm to the neighbouring Churches, finding himself thrice banished from the Territories of the Lords of Bern, and grown at last intolerable to every body, gave glory to GOD, acknowledging his Faults, and particularly his evil Conscience, in a full Synod of all the French Churches held at Orleans in the Year 1562. So that something was hoped from him. But being since seized again by a like evil Spirit, he is returned to his first Errors, and being shunned by every body, as he deserves, is, wherever he goes, an Example of the Wrath of God against those who resist the Truth.' Mr Drelincourt recites two other Passages of Beza (18). I shall add to all this, that Beza caused Calvin's Letters to be printed in the Year 1575, among which there is a thundering one against Bolsec (19). Thus all things have their use in this World. The keen Stile of these two Reformers does them great Service here. It shews that Bolsec must needs have been very angry, to see him give such provoking accounts of the Ill, that had been done him, and that therefore what he published in the Year 1577, and 1582, must be full of a Spirit of Resentment, which ought to render all his Stories suspected of falsity. Never man had more need than he of a formal Process and juridical Proof to confirm what he says.

(18) Pag. 137, 138. He takes them from Calvin's Life.

(19) Viz. the 133*d. I have quoted two Passages of it, one in the Remark* [B], the other in the Remark [C].

[K] He is found manifestly guilty of Calumny, in the most heinous Points.] He has given out, that Calvin was convicted of the Sin against Nature, at Noyon, and condemned only to be branded with the Flower de luce; his Bishop having interceeded for him to moderate the Punishment. Now there was never a Romance more fabulous than this, and Bolsec must have been a Man of unheard of Impudence to dare to produce such Stories in the Year 1577, that is to say, Forty three Years after Calvin had left Noyon (20). The Laws of Limitation were never so valid as in this Business. Prescription, which in other cases serves only to stop proceedings, without absolutely deciding the Point in Question, is here an invincible Proof against the Accuser. He lays his Action after Forty three Years are expired; it cannot be admitted; Prescription has barred him, and besides convicts him of Calumny: for if the Crime of which he accuses Calvin was true, they would not have staid so long to make it publick. Calvin, in open War with all the Monks, and Ecclesiastics, always with Sword in hand either to attack them, or to defend himself, (for it was a sharp and desperate fight) I say, Calvin, who occasioned irreparable losses to the Church of Rome, was not a Man in whose favour the sentence of the Flower de luce would have been suppressed for Forty three Years together. Immediately on the beginning of his Ministry at Geneva, it would have been published in the most authentic and legal Form, it would have been translated into all Languages, and posted up at every corner of the Streets. This is plain to any body that will use common Sense; besides, the falsity of this Story has been so demonstratively proved by Mr Drelincourt, that perhaps greater Evidence was never produced in a Question relating to a matter of fact. Bolsec is therefore most evidently a Calumniator as to the most heinous of his Accusations; and therefore he deserves no credit about the rest. Semel malus semper præsumitur malus in eodem genere mali. —— He who is once bad is always presumed bad, in the same kind of Evil. I am not ignorant that he alledges an Act, which he says he had seen in Bertelier's hands, but that does not clear him. It was a supposititious Piece, and he that publishes such Pieces is no less a Calumniator than he that forges them. It is observed, that he forbore to speak of it till Bertelier was dead (21); an evident sign, either that he boasted falsely to have seen that Act in Bertelier's hands, or that he knew that he who shewed it durst not run the hazard of being publickly contradicted. See the Article BERTELIER; he and Bolsec were of the same Faction at Geneva against Calvin.

(20) He left it, for good and all, in the Year 1535 according to Drelincourt, Defense de Calvin, pag. 202.

(21) Rivet, Oper. Tom III. pag. 9. 437.

When I spoke above (22) of Bertelier's pretended Commission, I omitted a Reflexion which comes now into my mind. If he had been sent to Noyon by the Republic, it must have been before the Year 1552, for he was excommunicated that Year. At the end of eighteen Months he endeavoured to be re-instated, but could not succeed, because Calvin opposed it: He brought himself into trouble soon after upon another account, the issue whereof was that he fled, and, not appearing to the Summons, he was condemned to Death for Contumacy, the sixth of August 1555. It is impossible, with all the Chicanery imaginable, to find a proper time for his pretended Deputation, between the day that he was excommunicated, and that wherein he was condemned to Death; and consequently he never was at Noyon with Orders to inform himself of John Calvin's Life, if he was not there before the Year 1552. Now this seems to me a convincing proof that he was not deputed before the Year 1552. If he had been at Noyon before that Year, he would have had the Original Proofs of Calvin's Flower de Luce, when that Minister excommunicated him, and used his utmost Endeavours to lay him under that note of Infamy. Would he have had so little Wit, as not to inform the whole Town, that That great Zealot, who excommunicated others, bore the Infamy of a hot Iron on his back? Would he not have challenged him to his Face to shew his Shoulders? Would he not by that means either have triumphed over his Enemy, or slackened his Persecution? Let any body put himself in Bertelier's place, and he must confess that on such an occasion the discovering of Calvin's Infamy would have been unavoidable. If any body should tell me that Bertelier certainly discovered the Mystery, but that no regard was had to his Recrimination, by reason of Calvin's great credit, I should think it a very incredible Story. What! in a Democracy, would not the Judges dare to make any Proceedings, when an accused Person, who has a public Office, some Relations, and some Friends, summons his Accuser to shew his naked Shoulders, and maintains to his Face, that the marks of the Flower de luce are to be seen there, and that he has brought the Proofs of it to the Republic, in consequence of a Commission, which was delivered to him? Will the Judges, instead of enquiring into the matter, stifle it, and forbid it to be spoke of? They are not so foolish in a Democracy as to oppress one of their Subjects so grossly. But suppose the Magistrates, being tender of Calvin's Reputation, threaten'd those who should make any Complaint against him; I am sure it will be granted me, that this could not suppress the memory of that Incident in private Families, and prevent it's coming to the Ears of Calvin's Enemies. How comes it then that Blandrata, Alciatus, Gentilis, Gribaldus, and so many other Heretics, whom Calvin expelled from Geneva, and whom he persecuted without mercy wherever they fled, never said a word of these Recriminations of Bertelier? This blow cannot be warded off. I know not whether this Reason was ever alledged against the Promoters of the Calumny that Bolsec published first.

A NEW Refutation of the pretended Act of Bertelier.

(22) In the Remark [C] of the Article BERTELIER.

[L] There is scarce any writer of Reputation, but will acknowledge that This Author is not to be credited] It were sufficient to instance Mr Maimbourg, who was not of a Temper to let go his hold without good Reasons; yet having mentioned some Reasons alledged by the Protestants to refute Bolsec's Accusation, La Croix du Maine makes him Author of ſome Books, which were wrote by another Hand [M], for which he falſely alledges the Teſtimony of Beza. Du Verdier Vau-Privas knew better, than he, our Bolſec's Writings. Beſides the two Hiſtories which I have mentioned, he aſcribes to him 'the Mirrour of Truth, to Charles IX, 'and to the Princes and Lords of his Council, from the Judgment made by 'Solomon in his Youth, at the beginning of his Reign, by the Splendor and Reflexion of which Mirrour are diſcovered the true means to appeaſe the Troubles 'and Seditions of the Kingdom of France.' It was printed in the Year 1562.

Accuſation, concerning Calvin's pretended Flower de luce, he has theſe words, Since our Proteſtants will have it ſo, I am willing not to believe that Infamy of the Author of their Sect (23). He had owned before, that Bolſec wrote a Satire, and a continued Invective, rather than an Hiſtory. This witneſs is worth a Thouſand others, unus inſtar omnium: and might ſuffice, but, for ſuper-abundant proof, I add Varillas, who gives a large account of Calvin's Life and Morals, without ſeeming to know that there ever was ſuch a Man as Bolſec in the World (24). He affirms nothing of the Flower de luce, but ſays only that there is ſomething to be ſeen in the Regiſters of Noyon, which in all likelihood gave occaſion to Conrad of Sluſemburg, a Lutheran Miniſter, to write that Calvin had been whipped and branded with the Flower de luce, in his own Country, and to the the famous Jeſuit Leonard Leſſius to compoſe an Apology, with a deſign to juſtify Sluſemburg in that Point (25). This is a cunning turn: Varillas will not quote Bolſec, a diſcredited Author, he chuſes rather to quote a Lutheran Miniſter. This is leſs ſurprizing than to ſee Florimond de Remond reject that Calumny of Bolſec, and confeſs that he is too paſſionate an Author. I omit many things deſigned-ly, ſays he (26), becauſe I am afraid, Hatred has ſometimes prevailed upon them more than Truth: for they have defamed him horribly (27). The Mendicant Peter de Saint Romuald acknowledges the ſame Truth; he confeſſes that whatever Jerome Bolſec, and James Lingey a Scotchman, have writ of Calvin is ſuſpected of too much Paſſion againſt him (28). In the Year 1583, Papyrius Maſſo writing Calvin's Life, and ſpeaking very ill of him, did not vouchſafe to mention the ſtory of the Flower de luce, and called thoſe wretched mobbiſh Authors, who reproached that Miniſter with Lewdneſs. Is it not ſtrange that the great Cardinal de Richelieu, in one of the beſt Books of Controverſy that has been publiſhed on the part of the Church of Rome, ſhould be leſs ſcrupulous, and leſs nice, than Peter de Saint Romuald, Florimond de Remond, and Papyrius Maſſo, and that he ſhould give out, as a true matter of Fact, the Story of Jerome Bolſec, which begun then to be laid aſide by the Miſſionaries? See the Article BERTELIER, Remark [D].

I cannot end this Remark without mentioning ſome Miſtakes of Varillas. I. The Lutheran Miniſter's Name is Conrad Schluſſelburg. II. He mentions only what he had read in printed Books. Hæc publicis ſcriptis Calvino objiciuntur (29). III. Leonard Leſſius compoſed no Apology to juſtify that Miniſter; he juſtified himſelf as well as he could (30), when he was accuſed of having advanced (31) two Calumnies againſt Calvin, whereof one was concerning the Flower de luce. I add further, that Varillas was not ignorant of what Bolſec had publiſhed, but he ſcrupled to quote him: 'That of Jerome Bol-'ſec, a Phyſician of Lyons, is written in ſuch a paſſio-'nate Stile, that a Reader of never ſo little Mode-'ration, will find fault with it from the firſt Page. 'It is full of many ill Actions, which are only 'grounded on that Phyſician's Authority, which I 'do not think to be ſufficient. The Calviniſts, in 'their Anſwers to him, accuſe him of very great 'Ingratitude, on account that Calvin had received 'him in his Houſe, and kept him ſeveral Years as 'his Secretary, and that, notwithſtanding all this, he 'became his greateſt Enemy, out of meer Inconſtancy, or out of Spite, becauſe Beza had inſinuat-'ed himſelf more than he into Calvin's Friendſhip '(32).' I do not queſtion, but that we have here a new Miſtake of That Author. No body, that I know of, did ever reproach Bolſec with Ingratitude on that account. Such a Reproach was made to the Civilian Baudouin; it was he that ſerved John Calvin as Secretary: but Bolſec never had that Funcſion, nor ſuch a Landlord. I ſhould be much ſurprized if any body ſhould ſhew me the contrary.

[M] La Croix du Maine makes him Author of ſome Books, which were written by another Hand.] Thoſe Books are, a Treatiſe of the Providence of GOD: A Treatiſe of the Old and New Man, firſt written in Latin under the Name of Theophilus, which be intituled, Theologia Germanica: A Treatiſe under the Name of Martin Bellie, which be cauſed to be printed in Latin and in French, to which Beza made an Anſwer; and a Tranſlation of the Bible out of Latin into French. Beza, as La Croix du Maine ſays, relates this in his Life of Calvin (33). La Croix du Maine is guilty of two Miſtakes. Thoſe Books were not written by Bolſec, and Beza aſcribes them to Sebaſtian Caſtalio, and not to him. Many Remarks would be neceſſary to rectify this Matter.

(21) Maimb. Hiſt. du Calviniſm, lib. iv. pag. 336.

(22) Varillas Hiſtoire de l'Hereſie, liv. x.

(23) Ibid. pag. 332. of the Dutch Edition.

(24) Hiſtoire de la naiſſance & progrez l'Hereſie, liv. vii. cap. vii.

(25) He quotes in the Margin Bolſec and Surius among others. See Drelincourt in his Defence of Calvin, pag. 126.

(26) Theſor Chronologique ad ann. 1550. cited by Drelincourt in his Defence of Calvin, pag. 128.

(27) La Croix du Maine, Bibli th. Françoiſe, pag. 169.

(28) Schluſſelburg. Theolog. Calviniſt lib. ii. fol. 72.

(29) In the Appendix to the Treatiſe de Antichriſto.

(30) In the Conſultat'o, quæ Fides & Religio ſit capeſſenda.

(31) In the Preface to Tom. I. of the Hiſtory of Hereſy.

(32) Bombaſius, Epiſt. iv. lib. xi. pag. 648. inter Erasmianas.

BOMBASIUS (PAUL), a Native of Bologna in Italy, gained Eſteem by the Profeſſion of Philology, about the beginning of the XVIth Century. He taught the Latin and Greek Languages at Naples [A], and gave ſuch proofs of his Capacity

[A] He taught —— at Naples.] I follow the Author I have quoted, but I am not without fear that he miſtakes; for Eraſmus does not ſpeak one Word of the Profeſſorſhip at Naples, but he ſpeaks only of that at Bologna. I ſhall recite his Words, becauſe they contain part of Bombaſius's Character. 'Equidem exoſculor Paulum Bombaſium prorſus au-'rei pectoris hominem, quo vix alius unquam vixit 'amico amicior, ſed valetudini parcens non admo-'dum indulſit ſtilo. Mox ut erat animi minime ab-'jecti, fordidorum competitorum improbis conten-'tionibus offenſus (nam Bononiæ publico ſalario 'Græcè profitebatur) ad Reip. negotia ſeſe contulit: 'tandem accitus Romam augere rem maluit, quàm 'literis inſeneſcere (1). —— Truly I reverence Paulus Bombaſius, a Man of a moſt noble Heart; than whom ſcarce ever a more friendly Man lived, but in conſideration of his health he wrote not much. Preſently, as he was of no abject diſpoſition, taking offence at the baſe contentions of his ſordid Competitors (for he was Profeſſor of Greek at Bologna, with a public Salary) he betook himſelf to Affairs of State: at laſt being ſent for to Rome, he choſe rather to improve his Fortune, than ſpend his Days in Learning.' Theſe Words of Eraſmus inform us, I. That Bombaſius was a good Friend. II. That to preſerve his Health, he compoſed but few things. III. That having a noble and generous Soul, he grew weary of a Profeſſor's Life, by reaſon of the Quarrels, which the ſordid Jealouſy of his Rivals expoſed him to. IV. That he concerned himſelf with the Affairs of his Country, when he was invited to Rome. He ſays, that Chance, rather than his Will, or the offer of a better Fortune, made him leave his Profeſſorſhip. Me à literaria profeſſione non tam mea voluntas, vel (ut tu ſuſpicaris) fortuna melior avocavit, quam incertus ille, cui pleraque tam mala quam bona debentur, caſus eripuit (2). Moreri makes him a Profeſſor at Naples and at Bologna.

(1) Eraſm. in Ciceronian. p. 72. See alſo the IIſt Adage of the VIth Century of the IIſt Chiliad. pag. 192.

[B] Cardinal

city there, that Cardinal Pucci would have him live with him, and made him his Secretary, with a good Salary [B]. He lived very eaſy at the Court of Rome, under the Protection, and by the Liberality, of That Cardinal; and was in a Condition to end his Days in Plenty, when the City of Rome was plundered under Pope Clement VII. He endeavoured to get into the Caſtle of St Angelo in his Maſter's Retinue, but he could not run faſt enough, ſo that he was ſurrounded with Soldiers, who killed him barbarouſly (a). He was a great Friend of Eraſmus.

(a) Taken from Pierius Valerianus de Literatorum infelicitate, lib. i. pag 22.

[B] Cardinal Pucci - - - - - - made him his Secretary, with a good Salary] Bombaſius calls him the Cardinal of the four Saints. He wrote to Eraſmus in the Year 1517, that againſt his Inclination he was obliged to deprive himſelf of the pleaſures of Rome, to accompany that Cardinal's Nephew in his Nunciature to Switzerland (3). He tells Eraſmus in another Letter (4), that he does not find himſelf very rich, but that he has Four hundred Crowns a Year, and therefore does not fear to ſee himſelf ever reduced to the neceſſity of taking up his former Profeſſion again. 'Quanquam non ita mecum 'maligne agitur ut ad profeſſoriam linguam 'redeundum fore timeam. Nam reditus annuos ad 'CCCC. ducatos nullis ſacris addictos, nec fortunæ ſed induſtriæ meæ acceptos ferendos auxi, 'quos nunquam ex literario illo ocio ſperare ac ne 'ſomniare quidem mihi licuiſſet. —— Tho' it is not 'ſo bad with me, that I am any ways afraid of being obliged to return to teach the learned Languages again. For I have raiſed my annual income, not 'by my Fortune, but my Induſtry, to Four hundred 'Ducats, ſubject to no Payment to the Church, 'which I never could have hoped for, or even dream't 'of, in the idle Trade of teaching.'

(3) That Letter is the 23d of the IId Book of Eraſmus's Letters pag. 129. See alſo the IVth of the IId Book.

(4) It is the XIIIth of the XVIIth Book pag. 756.

BOMBERG (Daniel), a famous Printer, born at Antwerp. His Article is very curious in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary. I ſhall only add two things: the one is that he was the firſt that printed Hebrew Books at Venice, and that he began to do it the Year 1511 [A]. The other, that he brought his Art to Perfection as to the printing of Hebrew, ſo that the Jews acknowledge, that ſince his Death the Hebrew printing has continually grown worſe and worſe (a). You will find the Critical Hiſtory of his Editions of the Bible in Mr Simon (b).

(a) Taken from Bartolocci's Biblioth. Rabbinica, Tom. I. pag. 34. He cites Gans.

(b) Simon, Hiſtoire Critique du Vieux Teſtament, pag. 512, 513.

[A] He began to print Hebrew at Venice, in the Year 1511.] He began with an Edition of the Bible in Quarto. 'Afterwards he made many other impreſſions of it in Folio, in 4to, and in 8vo. He 'learned his Hebrew of Felix Pratenſis, an Italian, 'who made him undertake an Edition of the Rabbinical Bible, that is, with the Commentaries of 'the Rabbies, which Bomberg printed in Folio in '1517, and which was dedicated to Pope Leo X; 'but the Jews did not value that Edition, and Rab'bi Jacob Haiim got another printed by the ſame 'Bomberg in four Volumes in Folio, in the Year '1525 (1). - - - - - - - It is he that begun the Im'preſſion of the Talmud in the Year 1520, which 'he did not finiſh till ſome Years after - - - - - - - in 'eleven Volumes in Folio (2).' He printed the Talmud three times, and each of thoſe Impreſſions coſt him One hundred thouſand Crowns (3). He printed Books to the value of above Four Millions of Gold (4).

(1) Chevillier, origine de l'Imprim. de Paris, pag. 267.

(2) Id. ibid. p. 268.

(3) Scaligerana, at the word Bombergus. pag. 34.

(4) Ibid. at the word Imprimerie pag. 121.

BONCIARIUS (Marc Antony), a Diſciple of Muretus, wrote very polite Latin. He was of a very mean Extraction [A], and taught School all his Life-time at Perugia. He was born within ſix Miles of that City the ninth of February 1555 (a). He had for his Scholar his own Father, who, deſiring to turn Jeſuit at Forty ſeven Years of Age, was obliged to acquire ſome Learning, not being willing to be a bare Lay-Brother. Bonciarius loſt his Sight (b), and was very much afflicted with the Gout (c). He died the ninth of January 1616 (d). Cardinal Ubaldin was his Patron (e). His Letters were printed at Marpurg in the Year 1604. One may find in them the Method he made uſe of to inſtruct his Father in a little time (f). There are other Books of his compoſing both in Verſe and Proſe [B]. He did not publiſh all that he deſigned to publiſh [C].

(a) Oldoinus, In Athen. Auguſto, pag. 225.

(b) See Lanceloti da Perugia, Hoggidi, Part II. pag. 451. & Oldoini in Athen. Auguſto, p. 227.

(c) Nicius Erythræus Pinacoth. I. p. 98, 99.

(d) Oldoin. ubi ſupra, pag. 228.

(e) Du Sauſſai, continuat Bel. larm. de Script. Eccleſ pag 78.

(f) Morhof. Polyhiſt. p. 287.

[A] He was of a mean Extraction] He informs the Public himſelf, that he was the Son of a Shoemaker, and the Grandſon of a Currier. 'Hic 'Peruſii, à vulgaribus, ut ipſe de ſe fatetur, opi'ficibus ortus, cujus quippe avus coriariam, pater 'ſutoriam in adoleſcentia fecerat, generis obſcuritatem ſui literarum ſplendore illuſtravit (1). —— 'This Man, deſcended, as he himſelf owns, of 'mean Artificers at Perugia, for his Grandfather 'was a Currier, and his Father a Shoemaker, in 'his Youth, illuſtrated the Obſcurity of his Deſcent 'by the Splendor of his Learning.'

(1) Nicius Erythræus Pinacoth. I. pag. 98.

[B] There are other Books of his compoſing, as well in Verſe as in Proſe] He wrote a Treatiſe de arte Grammatica; a Poem intituled, Triumphus Auguſtus, ſive de ſanctis Peruſii tranſlatis, which contains four Books; Seraphidos libri tres (2). I do not find that he publiſhed any Greek Grammar, neither can I tell what Authority Moreri has to aſſert it. He would have been more in the right to have aſcribed to him a Treatiſe of Rhetoric, though Nicius Erythræus, the only Author he has quoted, ſays nothing of it. See the following Remark.

(2) Id. ibid. p. 99, 100.

[C] He did not publiſh all that he deſigned to publiſh.] He ſays in his Letters, that he had taken upon him to write the Lives of all thoſe, who had been eminent either in Arms or Learning (3) at Perugia for Four hundred Years paſt. He ſays in the Catalogue of his Works, at the end of his Rhetoric, that he wrote a Book intituled, Epicurus ſive dialogus de antiqua Philoſophia, wherein he ſhewed, that no antient Philoſopher came nearer the Truth than Epicurus, and that none were farther from it than the Stoics. Goſſendus and Naudé had never ſeen that Book, which made Goſſendus believe that perhaps it was never printed. 'M. An'tonius Bonciarius Pariſienſis Profeſſor (4) - - - in 'catalogo Operum ſuorum (5) ſe compoſuiſſe librum 'teſtatur, cui titulum fecerit, Epicurus ſive dialogus 'de antiqua Philoſophia, in quo efficacibus argu'mentis & doctorum virorum teſtimoniis probatur 'neminem ex priſcis Philoſophis acceſſiſſe propius 'ad veritatem quàm Epicurum, contra nullos ab 'ea longius receſſiſſe quam Stoicos. Tametſi iſte 'quoque liber nunquam fortaſſis editus, nec nobis 'eſt viſus nec amico noſtro, quem vix tamen ulli 'rariſſimi fugiunt (6).' Goſſendus has committed a groſs miſtake; Bonciarius taught at Perugia all his Life-time. He was therefore Peruſinus Profeſſor. The word Peruſinus was eaſily changed into Pariſinus, and Pariſinus more eaſily ſtill into Pariſienſis. It appears from hence that Faults of Impreſſion may lead a learned Man into conſiderable Miſtakes.

(3) Ibid. p. 99.

(4) See the end of this Remark.

(5) Goſſendus has put in the Margin in fine Rh.

(6) Goſſendus, de vita & moribus Epicuri lib. vii. cap. vii. p. 224.

BONFADIUS (James), one of the most polite Writers of the XVIth Century, was born in Italy near the Lake di Garda [A]. He was three Years Secretary to Cardinal Bari at Rome, after which, having lost all the Fruit of his Services by the Death of his Master, he went to Cardinal Ghinucci, and served him as Secretary, till a long Sickness took him off from that Employment. When he was recovered he found himself so disgusted with the Court, that he resolved to seek his Fortune by other means. He found nothing in the Kingdom of Naples, where he wandered a pretty long time: he went afterwards to Padua, and then to Genoa, where he read Public Lectures on Aristotle's Politics. He was ordered to make some likewise on his Rhetoric, and, because he succeeded well in it, he had a great many Scholars, who went to learn good Literature of him. His Reputation increased daily, so that the Republic of Genoa made him their Historiographer, and assigned him a very good Pension for That Office. He applied himself with all his Might to compose the Annals of that State, and published the five first Books, wherein he spoke too freely, and too satirically of some Families, whereby he raised himself Enemies, who resolved to ruin him. They caused him to be accused of the Sin against Nature, and, there being Witnesses to convict him of it, he was condemned to be burnt (a) [B]. Some Authors say the Sentence was executed according to it's Form and Tenor; but others assert, that, by the Sollicitations of his Friends, the Punishment was commuted, and that he was beheaded [C]. This happened in (a) Ghilini, Teatro d'huomini illustri Tom. 1. pag 70.

[A] He was born in Italy near the Lake di Garda.] Authors do not agree about Bonfadius's Country. Some say, that he was born at Salona upon that Lake; Salonæ ad Benacum natus (1); others call his Country Gazani, luogo picciolo della Riviera di Brescia (2). —— A small place on the River Brescia. I believe they are in the right; for in a Letter dated from Gazano, wherein he describes that fine Lake, you will meet with these Words, libero mi starò nel mio Gazano. - - - - I shall be free in my Gazano. This Letter was written to Plinio Tomacello, and is in the second Book (3) of Lettere volgari, printed at Venice Anno 1558. Konig is wrong in saying he was of Verona

(1) Thuan. lib. xxvi. pag. 538.

(2) Ghilini Theatr. Tom. I. pag. 70.

(3) Fol. 8. verso.

[B] He was accused of the Sin against Nature - - - - - and was condemned to be burnt.] He was accused of having satisfied that brutish Passion with one of his Scholars. ' Fu calunniato, che in ' dotto da smisurato e pazzo amore, che ad un ' bellissimo giovanetto suo Scolare portava, con esso ' le sozze e impudiche sue voglie sfogasse; sopra ' di questa imputazione fu subito carcerato, e da ' testimonii di sì grave e enorme eccesso convinto, ' fu condamnato al fuoco, nel quale finì i suoi gi- ' orni l'anno 1551 (4). —— It was laid to his ' Charge, that, instigated by an inordinate Passion ' for a very handsome Youth, his Scholar, he ' had gratified his foolish Inclinations with him, ' on which Accusation he was immediately sent to ' Prison, and, being convicted by Evidence of so ' great and enormous a Crime, was condemned to the ' flames, in which he ended his Days in the Year ' 1551.' Thus Ghilini acknowledges the Justice of the Accusation. The Cavalier Marini has likewise acknowledged it: See the two Madrigals of his Ritratti, which Mr Menage quotes (5). Paul Manucius owns it likewise in the Poem that he addresses ad eos qui laborarunt pro salute Bonfadii (6). —— To those who endeavoured to save Bonfadius. See how he speaks,

(4) Ghilini, Teatro d'huomini illustri, pag. 4.

(5) Menage, Antibaillet, cap. lxxxix.

(6) You will find it in the Deliciæ Poëtarum Italorum.

Lapsus erat miser in culpam Bonfadius, index
Detulerat patribus, nec inani teste probarat.
Quid facerent legum custodes? legibus uti Coguntur.

—— Unhappily did poor Bonfadius fall
Into a Crime, for which before the Senate
An Accusation was advanced, the Informer
Produced his Evidence, and prov'd the Charge.
What could the Ministers of Justice do?
They 're bound to put the Laws in Execution.

(7) See Ghilini ubi supra, pag. 71. & Mr Teissier, Eloge. Tom. I. pag. 181. Edit. 1696.

But others pretend, that Bonfadius was oppressed by Calumny. It is the opinion of Giovanni Matteo Toscano in his Peplus Italiæ (7), where we find what follows:

Haud minus intumuit nuper Benacus alumni
Bonfadii, ac Musis, docte Catulle, tuis.
Bis tamen infelix; rapuit nam Roma Catullum,
Bonfadium letho das scelerate Ligur.
Historia æternum cujus fera Genua vivis,
Immeritum sævâ lege necare potes?
Mitius est quod te spumanti vertice marmor
Tundit; & es scopulis durior ipsa tuis.

Not less Benacus boasted of her Son
Bonfadius, than of learn'd Catullus Muse.
But twice unhappy she: Rome of Catullus
Robb'd her, and wicked Genoa took the Life
Of her Bonfadius; can't thou, Cruel Genoa,
Thus sacrifice, t'a barbarous Law, the Man,
Whose History has made thy name immortal?
Milder the Waves, that beat against thy Shores,
With frothy Tops: Thou harder than Thy Rocks.

Scipione Ammirato says nothing on either side, nevertheless he seems more inclined to question Bonfadius's Innocency. You'll see in the following Words, that the true Cause of the Persecution of this unfortunate Man, was, that he inclined the Youth to disapprove the Government that was then established. ' Trovata che egli tirava la gio- ' ventù a governo contrario di quello che allora ' si era indiritto, sotto colore d'impudici amori gli ' poser le mani addosso: e peraventura non tro- ' vatolo senza colpa, il condennarolo al fuoco. Del ' cat tivetto; per che fosse meno scusabile; si ' leggono ancor rime, lequal par che rendan testi- ' monianza di cotesta sua inclinazione (8). —— It ' being found that he inclined the Youth to a Go- ' vernment contrary to what was then established, ' he was seized on pretence of unnatural Lewdness, ' and being found perhaps not altogether blameless, ' he was condemned to the Fire: A wicked Man, for ' he was not excusable; some Verses are extant yet ' which seem to shew this Inclination in him.' It is very likely, that he was guilty of the enormous Crime whereof he was accused, but that he would not have been punished for it, had he not done something else that exposed him to the Hatred of certain Persons.

(8) Scipione Ammirato in his Ritrato del Bonfadio apud Menage Antibaillet, cap. lxxxix.

[C] Others say he was beheaded.] Baccalini, Ghilini, the Cavalier Marini, and some others, assert, that he was burnt: Scipione Ammirato says the same. Questo misero col fuoco in Genova - - - - vedemmo terminare infelice vita (9). But Thuanus is more to be believed, when he says that Bonfadius was beheaded. Ob rem tacendam Genuæ - - - - securi percussus (10). Read these Words of Mr Menage: ' It is true, that he was condemned to be burnt, ' but, at the sollicitation of his Friends, and par- ' ticularly in the Year 1560 (b). Those who blame his Imprudence are in the right, and have fared the worse for imitating it [D]. There are some Speeches, Letters, and Latin and Italian Poems of his. The Day of Execution, he wrote a Note to John Baptist Grimaldi, to testify his Acknowledgment to the Persons who had endeavoured to serve him. He promised to inform them how he found himself in the other World, if it could be done without frightening them. He is not the only one that made such Promises [E]. He recommended to them his Nephew Bonfadino, who (b) Thuan. lib. xxvi. pag. 538. But Ghilini, Tom. I. pag. 70. places Bonfadio's Death in the Year 1551.

(9) Menage, Antibaillet. cap. lxxxix.

(10) Thuan. lib. xxvi pag. 538. Note that Konig instead of Genuæ says Genevæ, which is a great lie.

'ticularly of young Grimaldi; his Punishment was 'changed; and he was only beheaded. This we 'learn from the Latin Poem of Paul Manutius, 'intituled, Ad eos qui laborarunt pro salute Bonfadii, printed in the Delitiæ Poëtarum Italorum. 'Here is that part of the Poem, which concerns the change of that Punishment:

Exprimitur tandem hoc invito à Judice, vivus
Ne comburatur crepitanti deditus igni:
Tum se carnifici sævo Bonfadius ultrò,
Mente Deum spectans, animo imperterritus offert.
Ille ministerio properè functurus iniquo,
Terribilis rigidam suspendit ad alta securim (11).

(11) Menage, Antibaillet, cap. Incedit. pag. 357, 358.

'Tis from the unwilling Judge at last obtain'd,
That to the crackling Flames he shall not be
A Victim given; then, Bonfadius, thou
To the fierce Executioner thy neck
Didst freely offer of thy own Accord;
He, sudden to dispatch his task unjust
And terrible, high rais'd his rigid Sword.

[D] Those who blame his Imprudence are in the right, and have fared the worse for having imitated him.] I have Boccalini in view, who supposes that Bonfadius's complaints, coming out of the Flames (12), were rejected by Apollo, and that the God of Parnassus declared to him, that tho' he had been innocent of the Crime imputed to him, he would have been justly punished for having had the folly to blemish the Honour of some potent Families. It was represented to him, that a Judicious Historian imitates the Grape-gatherers and Gardeners; he forbears to speak of things, before time has ripened them, that is to say, till the Persons who have committed an ill Action are dead, and their Children are not able to revenge themselves on him that publishes it. 'Che i saggi 'virtuosi nello scriver le historie molto prudentemente si consigliavano, all' hora che imitavano i 'vendemiatori, e gl' altri accorti de' frutti, i quali 'percioche conoscevano, che cosa poco grata havrebbono fatto a gli huomini, se dalle viti tagliando l'uva immatura, e da gli alberi staccando 'i pomi acerbi gli havessero portati al mercato 'quella necessaria patienza havevano, che si conveniva anco gli historici di lasciar che il tempo 'conducesse i fatti, e le cose passate alla perfettione 'loro (13). —— That the wise Artists in writing 'History, acted with a great deal of Prudence, when 'thus they imitated the Gatherers of Grapes and 'other Fruit; who, because they know it would not 'be grateful to gather green Grapes, and pluck unripe Fruit, and carry it to Market, wait with the 'necessary Patience: thus also should an Historian let 'time bring out facts, and things come to their 'Maturity. Tacitus was instanced to him, who used the like Precaution, and chose rather to offend against the Laws of History, than to expose himself to danger. 'Che lo stesso gran Maestro de 'gl' Historici saggi Tacito, all' hora che ne gli 'scritti suoi faceva mentione di quei Senatori grandi 'che Tiberio regnante pœnam vel infamiam subiere 'all' hora che posteri manebant. Tac. lib. 4. Ann. 'saggiamente alzava la penna della carta, più tosto 'elegendosi di offender le leggi historiche, che 'pregiudicare alla riputatione di quelle famiglie 'che non di altra cosa erano conosciute far capital maggiore, che dell'honore, stimando quell'huomo fingolare ad un' historico esser cosa di troppo evidente pericolo, nimis ex propinquo diversa arguere. Tac. l. 4. An. (14). —— That that 'Grand Master of wise Historians, Tacitus, when 'he mentioned in his Writings some great Senators 'who had suffered Infamy or Punishment under 'Tiberius, while their Posterity still remained. Tac. 'l. 4. Ann. Wisely with-held his Hand, chusing 'rather to transgress the Laws of History, than 'Prejudice the Reputation of such Families, as were 'known not to stand upon any thing more nicely 'than on their Honour; this singular Man, for an 'Historian, judging it too dangerous to say any thing 'against them, while he was too near them.'

(12) Dal fuoco tutto brustolito comparue Giacomo Bonfadio. Boccalin Ragguagli di Parnasso, Centur. I. c. xxxv. pag. 108.

(13) Id. ibid. pag 108, 109.

(14) Id. ibid. pag. 109.

Thus a Man knows the Maxims of Prudence better than he can practise them; for we have seen that Boccalini lost his Life for having spoken too freely against Spain (15). The Counsels which he ascribes to Apollo are doubtless very judicious. Nothing can be finer in the Theory than the Ideas of the Legislator of Historians; he commands them not to dare to say any thing that is false, and to be bold to say all that is true (16). But they are as impracticable Laws as those of the Decaloge in the State that Mankind is in. If it were proper to compare Human things with Divine, it might be said that the Legislator of the Historians has imitated the Legislator of the Jews: He supposed a State of Innocency, and not a State of Sin; he supposed That Free-will which is lost, and the great Strength that Man would have had, if he had persevered in his original Innocence. Observe on the other hand a great difference between these Laws, that are so a like. A perfect Wisdom is requisite to fulfil the Decalogue, and a Man must be foolish to the highest degree to fulfil the Laws of History. Eternal Life is the Reward of Obedience to the Decalogue, but Temporal Death is almost an unavoidable Consequence of obeying the Lawgiver of the Historians.

(15) See Boccalini immediately after the Citations (b) and (c).

(16) Quis nescit primam esse historiæ legem ne quid falsi dicere audeat, deinde ne quid veri non audeat? Cicero de Oratore lib. ii. cap. xv. See the Preface to the first Edition of this Dictionary, Paragraph IV.

[E] He promised to inform them how he found himself in the other World ------ He is not the only one that has made such Promises.] These are his Words: Se da quel mondo di là si potrà dar qualche segno senza spavento, lo farò. They are taken out of the Note that he sent to Giovani Battista Grimaldi: You will find it entire in the Antibaillet (17). Mr Menage took it out of a Collection of Italian Letters intituled, Lettere di diversi Uomini illustri raccolte da diversi libri, printed in 8vo, at Treviso, appresso Fabritio Zanetti, in 1603. The Barnabite Baranzanus had made the same Promise, and did not perform it. I speak of it in his Article. It is pretended, that Marcilius Ficinus having promised the same thing, kept his Word: Read this passage of Peter de St Romuald. 'Mar'cilius Ficinus, a Priest of Florence, a great Platonic Philosopher, and a great Divine, died, and 'immediately his Ghost, in the form of a Cavalier 'clothed in white, mounted on a Horse of the 'same colour, ran full speed to the Door of Michael Mercatus, who was his intimate Friend, 'and likewise a great Platonic Philosopher, who 'was then studying by break of Day in his Closet, 'in a Town at a good distance from Florence, 'and cried to him, that the Discourses which 'they had together concerning the Life to come, 'were true; and having said this, ran away towards 'the place from whence it came, and quickly escaped his Friend's sight, who called to him to 'stay for him. This happened by reason of the 'Agreement made between them, under the good 'pleasure of God, that he that died first should 'come and tell the Survivor, whether things passed 'in the other life as Plato had written in his Book 'of the Immortality of the Soul. Cardinal Baronius says he had this Story from the Grandson 'of Mercatus (18).' Note, That Baronius, relating this in the fifth Volume of his Annals, observes that Michael Mercatus, who had always lived exemplarily, and like a good Philosopher, raised his Virtue to a higher pitch after that Apparition; for he forsook the Study of Philosophy, and applied himself wholly to the Business of his Salva-who is perhaps the PETER BONFADIUS, who is Author of some Verses extant in the Gareggiamento poëtico del confuso Accademico ordito. It is a Collection of Verses divided into eight Parts, and printed at Venice in the Year 1611.

(17) Menage, ubi supra, pag. 357, 358. cap. lxxxix.

(18) Peter de S. Romuald Abregé Chronologique de l'Historique, Tom. III. p. 251, 252. ad ann. 1499.

(19) Baronius, ad ann. 411. n. 69.

tion (19). The Annalist adds, that the reciprocal Promise, which Marcilius Ficinus and Michael Mercatus made to each other, relating to the state of things after this Life, &c. was attested by divers learned Persons, and had often been related to the People by the Preachers. Haud inexplorata referam, sed quæ complurium eruditorum virorum scimus assertione firmata, immo & à religiosis viris ad populum pro concione sæpe narrata (20). It is pity that Michael Mercatus did not leave a juridical Attestation of it upon Oath, and registred in the Archives of Florence. He was much in the wrong that he did not do it. His Grandson Michael Mercatus, who told this Story to Baronius, was Prothonotary of the Church, and commendable for his Probity and Learning (21).

(20) Id. ibid.

(21) Id. ibid.

The place, where Seneca relates the Tranquillity of Mind, wherewith Canius Julius went to his Execution, is admirable. That good Man was condemned to Death by Caligula, and was not executed till Ten Days after his Condemnation. He passed them without any disquiet, and when it was told him that he must go to the place of Execution, he lost nothing of his Chearfulness. Why do you afflict yourselves, said he to his Friends? You enquire, whether the Soul subsists after our Death, I shall quickly know it. The Philosopher, who accompanied him, asked him, what he thought of at that Moment? I do design, answered Canius, to observe well, whether my Soul will perceive it's going out. He promised that if he learned any thing, he would come and see his Friends to declare his Condition to them. ‘ Tristes erant amici, ‘ talem amissuri virum. Quid mœsti, inquit, estis? ‘ Vos quæritis, an immortales animæ sint: ego jam ‘ sciam. Nec desiit in ipso veritatem sine scrutari, ‘ & ex more suo quæstionem habere. Prosequebatur illum philosophus suus: nec jam procul erat ‘ tumultus, in quo Cæsari Deo nostro fiebat quotidianum sacrum. Quid, inquit, Canî nunc cogitas? ‘ aut quæ tibi mens est? Observare, inquit Canius, ‘ proposui illo velocissimo momento, an sensurus sit animus, exire se. Promisitque, si quid explorasset, ‘ circumiturum amicos, & indicaturum quis esset ‘ animarum status (22).’ Seneca does not tell us whether they heard any news of Julius in consequence of his Promise.

(22) Seneca, de Tranquillit. Animi, cap. xiv. p. 671.

Some Considerations on the Nature of the Proof drawn from the Apparition of a Soul.

Perhaps the Reader will not be displeased to find here the discussion of two Questions, which naturally present themselves. The first is, Whether the Friends of this Julius had any good pretence to question the Immortality of the Soul, because they did not hear of him as he had given them to expect? The second is, Whether they would have had a good reason to believe the Immortality of the Soul, in case they had heard news of him by some Phantom.

I answer as to the first Point, That such a pretence for questioning the Immortality of the Soul, would be very bad; for tho' a very good reason might be given for the non-performance of Julius's Promises, by supposing that his Soul did no longer exist, it does not thence follow, that That Hypothesis can justly be used to shew the Causes of the non-performance of his Word. When a Phænomenon may be accounted for by three or four probable Suppositions, there is none that can form a Conviction. No demonstrative Proof can be given, but when the Hypotheses, different from that made use of, are either impossible, or manifestly false. Since then, supposing the Immortality of the Soul, good Reasons may be given why Julius did not return to tell his Friends in what State he was, the Hypothesis of the Mortality of the Soul may be very well rejected, notwithstanding that it may be very proper to explain that Event. It may with great reason be supposed, either that a Soul, separated from it's Body, remembers no more the Promise it made in this Life; or that, if it does remember it, it is ignorant of the Expedients requisite to perform it, or has not the liberty to put them in practice; either because it dares not, or will not disobey some Superior Cause, that forbids it to have any Commerce with Mankind. Let us say then, that Bonfadius's Friends would have argued very ill, if they had inferred the Mortality of the Soul from his not keeping his word with them.

The second Point is more nice; and first of all I make a distinction. If a Phantom, calling itself the Soul of Julius, had appeared to the Friends of that Roman, and had told them some News from the other World; they might in consequence of that have looked upon the Hypothesis of the Immortality of the Soul as very probable: but if they had taken that Apparition for a demonstrative Proof that the Soul of Julius did still exist, they would not have judged right; for as I have already said, an Hypothesis does not afford any demonstrative Proofs, when the matter of Fact, which it accounts for, may be accounted for by different Hypotheses. A Proof cannot be said to be demonstrative, unless it be made appear that the contrary is impossible, or manifestly false. Since then some possible Causes may be given of the Apparition of a Phantom, calling itself the Soul of such a Man, and performing certain Promises which that Man had made to his Friends; since, I say, this may be explained by possible Hypotheses, without supposing that the Soul of Man is immortal, it is plain, that Julius's Friends would not have philosophised with the utmost exactness, if they had taken such an Apparition for a demonstrative Proof that the Soul of their Friend was living. They might have been told, ‘ it is possible, ‘ that tho' the Soul of your Friend be dead, you ‘ may have seen a Phantom that told you what he ‘ had promised to come and acquaint you with. ‘ There are many Genii in the World that know ‘ what we do, and that can act on our Organs. ‘ One of them diverted himself with deceiving you, ‘ and made you believe that he was the Soul of Julius. We cannot prove to you by natural and ‘ convincing Reasons that this is true; nor can you ‘ prove it to be false. Do not go so fast then, do ‘ not draw a certain Conclusion; be contented to ‘ take it as a very probable Hypothesis.’ Julius's Friends might have replied, that the Existence itself of those Genii is a proof of the Immortality of our Soul; for if those Genii are immortal, why should not our Soul be so too? It might be answered, That those Genii might have power to do many things in the stead, and under the Name, of the dead Soul of Julius, even tho' they were mortal. Are not all Men mortal? Do not all of them die, some sooner, and some later? Would that hinder them from deceiving Beasts, in the Supposition that I am going to make. Suppose that the Souls of Dogs should be persuaded that they subsist after their separation from the Body. Suppose that one Dog, in particular, has promised the rest to come and tell them how he finds himself after Death. Lastly, suppose that a Man knows that Promise, and the manner how the Dog has agreed to perform it. Is it not true, that That Man might easily do what would be necessary to deceive the other Dogs? He could shew them Phantoms; he could make Puppets bark, &c. If from thence the Dogs should conclude that their Souls are immortal, or at least that Men are immortal, would they not be mistaken? Any one, that reflects ever so little upon it, may easily apprehend that the invisible Spirits of the Universe, which the Platonists call Genii, might do all that the Art of Necromancy attributes to them, even tho' they were mortal; provided their Species was preserved, notwithstanding the successive Death of all the Individuals, as our Kind preserves itself, tho' all Men die. To say, that the Generation of Individuals is impossible among the Genii, is to decide rashly what is not, nor can be, known to us. The Infinity of Nature may contain a thousand sorts of Propagation that we are ignorant of. Note, That some Pagans believed the Mortality of the Genii.

Let us conclude from all this, That what is called the Return or Apparition of Spirits, is not strictly speaking, a necessary Proof (23) either of the Immortality of our Souls, or of the Immortality of the the Genii. I do not deny, that it is such a Proof of it, as one may prudently and reasonably acquiesce in; but I speak here of demonstrative Proofs: I speak of such Proofs as can only be eluded by Cavils, the Defenders whereof may be easily reduced to an Absurdity.

(23) These two Conditions ought to be carefully minded, I. Strictly speaking. II. Necessary Proof.

BONFINIUS (a) (ANTONY), a Native of Ascoli in Italy in the Marca d'Ancona, flourished in the XVth Century. He applied himself to the Study of Philology, with good Success. Matthias Corvinus, King of Hungary, having heard a Report of his Learning, sent for him. Bonfinius had the Honour to kiss that Prince's Hand at Reez, a few Days before he made his Public Entry into the City of Vienna, which he had conquered (b). At this first Audience he presented several Books, which he had lately published [A], and had dedicated to that King, or to Beatrix of Arragon his Queen. The King read these Books with great Pleasure in his Camp, and was present with all his Court at a Speech made by Bonfinius in Vienna, the first Day of January; and having ordered the Books of that Author to be brought to him, he distributed them to his Prelates and Courtiers, and recommended them to their Reading; and he was so far from granting Bonfinius leave to return into Italy, that he retained him with a good Pension, and gave him several things to compose, and commanded him to follow him in his Armies (c). He ordered him to compose the History of the Huns: Bonfinius began to work upon it before the Death of that Prince (d), but it was by the Order of King Uladislaus that he wrote the whole History of Hungary. Though that Work cannot be looked upon as a finished Piece, yet it is certain that the Author deserves a Place among the good Historians [B]. He brought that History as far as the Year 1495. It contains four Decads, and a half, that is to say, Forty five Books. The Original of it was placed in the Library of Buda, and the Public saw nothing of it till after the Death of the Author. One Martin Brenner, a Transylvanian, got an imperfect Copy of that Work, and published thirty Books of it in the Year 1543. Sambucus found the other Fifteen, and published the whole Work in the Year 1568, revised and collated from the best Copies (e). I cannot say when, or where Bonfinius departed this Life; but I believe he did not return home, as many learned Men of Italy did, whom Matthias Corvinus had sent for into his Kingdom [C]. This Historian is accused of having been a Slanderer [D], and is blamed for having (a) He calls himself Bonfinius in his History of Hungary.

(b) In 1485, according to Calvisius.

(c) Ex Bonfinio Decad. IV. lib. viii. pag. 463.

(d) Id. in Epist. Dedicator.

(e) He published a better Edition of it in 1575, at Francfort by Andrew Wechel. The other was printed at Basil by Oporinus.

[A] He presented to the King of Hungary several Books, which he had lately published.] He himself informs us of it: He tells us, that three of those Books were dedicated to King Matthias, viz. The Translation of Hermogenes, and that of Herodian, and the Genealogy of the Corvinus's; that two of them were dedicated to the Queen, one of which treated of Virginity, and Conjugal Chastity; and the other was an History of Ascoli: That, besides, he had dedicated a small Collection of Epigrams to the young Prince John Corvinus, to which he had prefixed a Preface that treated of the Education of a Prince (1). He adds, that having followed against his Will Matthias Corvinus to the Army, he translated Philostratus for his Diversion. 'Castra sequi præceperat Scriptoribus & philosophantibus inimica. Quod cum ille invitus facere cogeretur, ne ingrato in castrensi tumultu molestiaque ocio uteretur, oblatum sibi Philostratum tribus mensibus in Latinum transtulit (2). —— He ordered him to follow the Camp, a disagreeable Place to Writers and Philosophers. Which he being forced to do, to avoid the Tædium of Idleness, in the Tumult and hurry of a Camp, Philostratus falling in his way, he translated him into Latin in three Months.' I must say something of his Book concerning Virginity and Conjugal Chastity. It is written by way of Dialogue; Sambucus got it printed in the Year 1572. It is intituled, Sympotion Beatricis. Matthias Corvinus, and his Wife Beatrix of Arragon, are very much praised in it: The Author takes notice in that Book of the particular Regard they had for him (3). The Congregation of the Index has condemned that Work.

(1) Bonfin. rerum Ungaric. Decad. IV. lib. vii. pag. 463. Edit. 1690.

(2) Id. ibid.

(3) Vossius de Hist. Lat. p. 659.

[B] He deserves a place among the good Historians.] Sambucus speaks thus in praise of Bonfinius; 'Quantum ingenio non ad hoc argumentum modo, sed ad omnem omnino Philosophiam, excelluerit, Dialogi ejus de pudicitia conjugali vulgo testantur, Herodianus, Hermogenes Latini: nec vino hæc opus est hedera. Præterire tamen nequeo paucarum esse gentium historias copia & stylo pares (4). —— What an excellent Genius he had, not only for this Subject, but for all kind of Philosophy, his Books on Conjugal Chastity, Herodian and Hermogenes in Latin, are an Evidence to the World: These Works need no Recommendation. I cannot omit, that the Histories of few Nations are equal to it in Style and Copiousness.' He adds, that Seldius was wont to say, 'Nullo se in scriptore post Livium & æquales ejus quam ipso hoc Bonfinio vacuas horas libentius ponere solitum. —— He never spent his leisure Hours so agreeably in any Author, since Livy and his Contemporaries, as in Bonfinius.' In the Preface to the Dialogues is a Judgment no less favourable. 'Sambuci in Dialogorum Præfattone tale de Bonfinio judicium est, ingenio ad omnes res arduas & laudabiles excelluisse, Styloque uti idoneo non ad historiam minus quam Philosophiam vel orationes (5). —— Sambucus's Judgment of Bonfinius in the Preface to his Dialogues is this, that he excelled in Ingenuity in all difficult and laudable matters, and that he wrote a Stile proper, as well for History, as Philosophy or Orations.

(4) Sambuc. in Epist. Dedicator.

(5) Vossius, ubi supra.

[C] I believe he did not return home, as many learned Men of Italy did, whom Matthias Corvinus had sent for into his Kingdom.] Bonfinius tells us, that they returned home poorer than they came. 'Invitati etiam muneribus Poëtæ, Rhetores, & Grammatici, qui falsi opinione sua miseriores longe musas quam adduxerint in Italiam reduxerunt (6).

(6) Bonfin. Decad. IV. lib. vii. pag. 459.

[D] He is accused of having been a Slanderer.] Sambucus accuses him of it; he fancies that his Pen was often directed by his complaisance to Matthias, whose Pensioner he was; but he observes, that That Prince was little spared himself. 'Cæterum ut Bonfinii laudes non sunt obscuræ, ita dissimulare nequeo nonnihil ipsum officii sui interdum oblitum in mores privatos & vitam calumnioso impotentiusque effusum: secus quam Livium, Salustium, Tacitum, Suetonium, in Romanos orbis dominos gentemque togatum feciisse constat (7), idque fortasse redempto à Matthia judicio & calamo ejus, quæ rerum seriei nihil detrahunt. Nec Matthiæ tamen pepercit, quem impudentem, voluptuosum, theatris deditum, ambitiosum, ferum, in adjungendis amicis præcipitem, in reliquendis facilem, adulatoribus benignum, immemorem beneficiorum, ausus sit dicere (8). — But as the Merit of Bonfinius is not obscure, so I cannot dissemble it, that he has sometimes a little forgot his Duty, and Inveighed against the Lives and Manners of private Persons

MATTHIAS CORVINUS roughly treated by Bonfinius.

(7) It is nevertheless true, that most of those Historians do sharply inveigh against the Vices and Disorders of Rome.

(8) Sambuc. in Epist. Dedicat. Hist. Ungaric.

ing uſed too many heatheniſh Expreſſions in his Stile [E]. His Notes on Horace are not good (f). Moreri's Faults here are more numerous than conſiderable [F].

(f) Bonfinio nullus ineptit magis, & dum ab aliis diſſentire ſtudioſe geſtit, Siculis gerris vaniora communiſcitur. - - - - No body trifles more than Bonfinius, who, out of a fondneſs of differing from others, writes the ſilieſt Stuff imaginable. Hadrian. Junius Epiſt. I. where he gives his Judgment on the Commentaries upon Horace.

(9) Bonfin. Hiſt. Ungaric. Decad. IV. lib. vii. p. 459.

(10) Zeiller. de Hiſtor. pag. 21.

' Perſons too reproachfully and weakly, contrary to ' the practice of Livy, Saluſt, Tacitus, Suetonius, ' towards the Romans, Maſters of the World, and ' a Nation of Senators; perhaps Matthias bought his ' Pen and Judgment in theſe Caſes, which no ways ' affect the Series of the Story. Nor yet did he ſpare ' Matthias, whom he has ventured to call impudent, ' voluptuous, a lover of Stage-Plays, ambitious, cruel, ' haſty in taking Friends, eaſy in leaving them, kind ' to Flatterers, unmindful of benefits.' To this might have been added, that he ſays, that Matthias invited all ſorts of learned Men to come to him, without excepting the Magicians. ' Viros quaque arte præſtantiſſimos undique diſquiſivit, conduxitque. Aſtronomos, Medicos, Mathematicos, Juriſque conſultos dilexit. Ne Magos quidem & Nigromantes abominatus eſt: nullam artem contemſit unquam (9). —— He ſought out every where, and ' engaged the moſt excellent Men in every Art; he ' loved Aſtronomers, Phyſicians, Mathematicians, ' and Civilians; he had no Averſion even to Magi- ' cians and Necromancers; he never deſpiſed any Art.' A German, named Zeillerus, obſerves, that among other things People complained of what Bonfinius ſaid of the unhappy Queen Gertrude: Taxatur etiam à quibuſdam ejus Hiſtoria Ungarica, imprimis narratio de morte innocentis Reginæ Gertrudis. Vid. Brunnerus Part iii. Annal. Boic pag. 602 (10).

[E] And for having uſed too many Heatheniſh Expreſſions in his Stile.] The Jeſuit Raderus is here his Accuſer, as the ſame Zeillerus teſtifies. ' Matthæus ' Raderus, volum. ii. Bavariæ ſanctæ, pag. 191. hæc ' de eo ſcribit: Bonfinius profanus nimiùm & pa- ' ganus ſcriptor, cum ſanctos appellat Deos & numina; Dei matrem numen & Deam. Catholicæ ' religionis diſciplina non novit nec colit niſi unum ' Deum & unum Numen. Bonfinius dum vult ' Latine, quod ipſum fiocere non poteſt, ſcribere, ' ſuperſtitioſe & profane, ne quid dicam gravius, loquitur. —— Bonfinius is too profane and heatheniſh ' a Writer, for he calls the Saints Gods and ' Deities; the Mother of God, a Deity and Goddeſs. ' The Doctrine of the Catholic Religion knows not, ' nor worſhips, any more than one God and one Deity. ' Bonfinius, while he endeavours to write Latin, ' which plainly he cannot do, writes ſuperſtitiouſly ' and profanely, to ſay nothing worſe.' It muſt be acknowledged, that ſome Italian Authors have made themſelves ridiculous, for ſcrupling, when they ſpoke of Chriſtianity, to make uſe of any other Terms than what they found in the beſt Latin Authors (11): but I cannot approve Raderus's Nicety, or rather his Partiality. He thinks it ſtrange, that Bonfinius ſhould give the Name of Numen to the Holy Virgin; but is it not the ſtile of a great many Devotees, as Mr Dreſincourt has proved demonſtratively (12)?

(11) See the Remark [B] of the Article BEMBUS.

(12) See his Queries to the Biſhop of Bellay.

[F] Moreri's Faults, on this Head, are more numerous than conſiderable.] He ſays, that Sambucus added five Books, which were not in the firſt Edition. He ought to have ſaid fifteen. He ſays, that Bonfinius tranſlated Hermagenes's Rhetoric; he ſhould have ſaid Hermogenes. He cites Voſſius, lib. i. de Hiſtor. Lat. he ought to have cited lib. iii. He quotes Miræus in Auſt. he ſhould have ſaid, in Auctario. He cites Raderus, tom. III. Bavar. Sanctæ, pag. 191. and immediately after Zeillerus. It may be affirmed, that he quotes him only on the Credit of Zeillerus. Now the latter marks the ſecond Volume of Raderus pag. 191, and does not ſay that Raderus blames any thing elſe but the Paganiſm of Bonfinius's Stile. And yet, if we believe Moreri, that Jeſuit cenſures many things in his Hiſtory of Hungary. The fault that follows is worſe. Moreri takes Bonfinius for a ſimple Man, who ſpoke things plainly, and without any deſign. Never was Criticiſm falſer than this. Bonfinius was no Fool: He was cunning, ſubtle, and worthy of his Country; and when he ſlandered any Body, or made uſe of certain Terms, it was not undeſignedly. If I take notice of ſome miſtakes, which are plainly Errors of the Preſs, 'tis for the ſake of ſo many People, who have bought the many Editions of Moreri's Dictionary. It may be there are five hundred Perſons, who believe very honeſtly, that Moreri has cited an Hiſtory of Auſtria, written by Aubertus Miræus.

BONGARS (James), in Latin Bongarſius, born at Orleans, was one of the learned Men of the XVIth Century. He followed the prevailing Taſte of thoſe Times; that is, he applied himſelf to Critical Learning, and though he went not ſo far as your Lipſius's and Caſaubon's, yet he acquired great Reputation by it, and perhaps would have equalled them in that Kind of Learning, if he could have ſpent all his Time in it, as they did; but State Affairs did not permit him. He was employed near thirty Years in the moſt important Negotiations of King Henry IV (a) [A], for whom he was ſeveral times Reſident with the Princes of Germany, and afterwards Embaſſador. The Letters, which he wrote during his Employments, are very much eſteemed [B]. But to return to his Study of Critical Learning,

(a) See the Preface to his Letters, prefixed to the French Tranſlation.

[A] He was employed for thirty Years in the moſt important Negotiations of King Henry IV.] It is true that Bongars negotiated in Germany under the Reign of Henry III. but it was for the King of Navarre, and not for Henry III. Moreri has not made this diſtinction.

[B] The Letters, which he wrote during his Employments, are very much eſteemed.] Tho' he did not, like Bembo and Manucius, reject all terms that are not in the beſt Roman Authors; yet his Stile is fine, clear, polite, and full of natural Charms; his Letters were tranſlated, when the Dauphin began to learn the Latin Tongue, and it appears by the Epiſtle Dedicatory to that young Prince, and by the Tranſlator's Preface, that it was thought nothing could be more proper for a Scholar of Quality than to read this Work of Bongars. Becauſe by reading it, a Man learns, at the ſame time, both to expreſs himſelf in noble terms about State Affairs, and to judge well of the Conduct of an Embaſſador. Not only Words and Phraſes are to be learned by it, but alſo the Courſe of the Affairs of thoſe times, and many particular Facts, which ſtill have ſome relation to the preſent time, and may be of greater uſe than any thing that is to be found in Cicero's Letters. We are more inclined to concern ourſelves with the Affairs of our own Country and our own Age, than with thoſe of the Ancient Romans: beſides the latter were managed after a manner infinitely leſs agreeable to the preſent time, than that wherein things were managed in the laſt Age, and the beginning of this. All theſe Thoughts and many others, to the Praiſe of Bongars's Letters, are very well ſet forth in the Tranſlator's Preface. Morhofius obſerves that the French Letters of Bongars were lately publiſhed at Paris. ' Poſt mortem ejus editæ fuerunt tum hæ Latinæ epiſtolæ, ' tum aliæ Gallica Lingua quæ nuper admodum ' Pariſiis lucem viderunt (1). - - - - After his Death, ' were publiſhed both theſe Latin Letters, and o- ' thers in French, which are very lately come out ' at Paris.' He is in the right, if he means a ſmall Book intituled, The Plain Secretary, or a Collection of divers Letters of the Sieur James de Bongars, &c. with the Inſtructions given him by the late Marſhal de Boullon. That Collection contains Thirty four Letters, which are inſerted in the Edition of the Hague 1695. I ought not to forget that there reigns, throughout theſe Letters of Bongars, a certain Character of an honeſt Man, which prepoſſeſſes the Readers very much in his Favour.

(1) Morhof. in Polyhiſt. pag. 306. That Book of Morhofius was printed in 1688.

Note

Learning, I must observe, that he published an Edition of Justin, which is very good [C]; he restored many corrupted Passages, and cleared many difficulties by his Notes; and in all this he shewed his Sagacity, his Erudition, and the Pains he had taken to consult good Manuscripts. He had a vast Knowledge of Books both Manuscript, and printed, and made a very great Collection of them. In 1603 he bought, jointly with Paul Petavius, the Manuscripts of Peter Daniel. His share of them fell at last to the Vatican Library [D]. The Library of Bern gained much by that of James Bongars (b), which he had very much increased, and with the broken Remains of that of Cujacius [E]. He died at Paris in the Year 1612, being Fifty eight Years of Age (c). His Death was new Matter of Grief to Casaubon [F]. The Emperor's Partisans endeavoured to prejudice France, by spreading certain Reports against this Agent [G]. He was of the Reformed Religion,

(b) See Father Jacob's Traité des Bibliotheques, pag. 226.

(c) Witte, Diar. Biograph.

Note, that the French Translation which I have mentioned was printed at Paris in the Year 1668, and re-printed in Holland soon after. A new Edition of it was published in the Year 1694, and it was said in the Title that it was corrected and inlarged. It was to deceive the Reader: this can be said, only of the Edition of the Hague 1695. Many mistakes of the Translator are corrected in that, and many things which he had cut off out of bigottry are restored (2). Note also, that Mr Spanheim, Professor of Divinity at Leyden, caused a Collection of our Bongars's Latin Letters to be printed there in 1647, to which he prefixed a Letter by way of Preface, which was inserted in the Edition of the Hague, 1695.

(2) See the Advertisement in the Edition of the Hague 1695.

[C] He published an Edition of Justin which is very good.] I do not mind the Scaligerana, where it is said, that it was another James Bongars, and not he, who had published that Author. Every body ascribes that Work to the same Bongars, who negotiated in Germany for Henry IV (3); and besides, Scaliger speaks in that place so inaccurately, that there is reason to believe he had but a confused notion of what he said. It is twenty Years, says he, since the other Jacobus Bongarsius gave his Justin to Monsieur de l'Escale at Bordeaux. He must then have given it at the farthest in the Year 1558 (4), and the two Vassans must have heard Scaliger say this in the Year 1578. These two things are impossible; the first Edition of James Bongars's Justin is that of Paris 1581, in 8vo. The Vassans were not with Scaliger till after he was settled at Leyden in the Year 1593.

(3) See the Epistle Dedicatory of Grævius's Justin, and a Letter of Frederic Spanheim prefixed to those of Bongars.

(4) The Year in which Julius Cæsar Scaliger died.

[D] His Manuscripts ----- fell to the Vatican Library.] The curious will be glad to find here a Passage relating to the History of Libraries, taken from a Book of the Learned Father Mabillon. When, in the Year 1562, the Protestants plundered the Abbey of Fleuri, they found there a great many good Manuscripts. Peter Daniel (5) making a dexterous use of the Interest he had with Cardinal Chatillon Commendatary Abbot of that Abbey, got many of those Manuscripts from the Soldiers, and among others a Servius on Virgil, which he published in the Year 1600. After his death (6) his Heirs sold the Manuscripts for the Sum of 1500 Livres to Paul Petavius, and to Bongars. Paul Petavius's share was left to his Son Alexander Petavius, who sold it to the Queen of Sweden. That of Bongars was carried to Strasburg, where he made his residence: He left it by Will to one Granicet (7), who was his Landlady's Son (8). Gruterus, Library-Keeper to the Elector Palatine, perswaded that Prince to buy the Manuscripts which Bongars had left to Granicet, and thus they were carried to Heydelberg, and from thence to Rome (9).

(5) An Advocate at Orleans, and Bailiff of the Abbey of Fleury.

(6) He died in the Year 1603.

(7) I think it should be Gravicet, or rather Graviffet.

(8) She was of Lyons, and a Jeweller's Wife. Mabillon ubi infra.

(9) Mabillon, præfat. libri de Liturgia Gallicana, published at Paris in the Year 1685.

[E] He had increased his Library very much with the broken Remains of Cujacius's Library.] What he says upon this, in a Letter of the nineteenth of January 1604, shews so plainly the great Fondness he had for Study and Books, that I cannot forbear placing it here. 'Whilst I was on this 'Journey, I could not write to you, because I was 'wholly taking up with my Domestic Affairs, 'which it was necessary for me to put into some 'Order before my departure. In that very Occu'pation, the greatest of my cares has been to 'seek some Remains of Mr Cujacius's Library. Doubt'less you will laugh very heartily, when you re'present to your self that crowd of People that 'go to the Court as to a Fair, to make their 'Fortunes, and to endeavour to get Money from 'the King, and that at the same time a Courtier, 'as I am, who is not overstocked with Money, 'should go into by-places to bestow part of his 'Estate upon Books and Papers half eaten by Worms. 'By this you may see whether I am very covetous. 'When I am to buy Books, I value neither Pains 'nor Expence. Would to God I were free from 'business and at leisure to read them. Then I 'would neither envy the Riches of Mr de Rosny, 'nor the golden Mountains of the Persians (10)'

(10) Bongars, Letter 35, pag. 99. Edit. of the Hague 1695. See also the 47*th Letter of* Lingelsheim.

[F] His Death was new Matter of Grief to Casaubon.] That Critic's Letters testify that he was extremely obliged to James Bongars, and that he esteemed him very much. See particularly the Six hundred and ninety eighth, and the Six hundred and ninety ninth, wherein he speaks of his death. There he grieves because that good Man had not received at Paris the Funeral Honours that were due to him, and which infallibly would have been done him in Germany. 'Qui 'si in Germania diem ultimum obiisset, habuissent 'docti viri rationem funeris ejus, & ornandæ illius 'memoriæ pro meritis ingentibus τῦ μακαρίτε (11). ---- Who if he had died in Germany 'learned Men would have taken care of his Fune'ral, and adorning his Memory, agreeably to the 'great Merits of the deceased.' Mr Colomies is mistaken when he says that Bongars died at Bern (12).

(11) Casaub. Epist. DCXCVIII. pag. 882. Edit. 1656.

(12) Colomiés Biblioth. choisie. pag. 189.

[G] Certain Reports were spread against this Agent.] Cardinal d'Ossat's Letters inform us of the matter. It is reported here, [this he writ from Rome to Mr de Villeroy the second of December 1600] 'That the King keeps a Gentleman with 'the Protestant Princes in Germany, named Bon'gars, who tells them, and those of their Sect, 'that the King, notwithstanding his Conversion, 'has not altered his Opinion in his heart, but 'only makes an outward show in order to enjoy 'his Kingdom peaceably, complying with the times 'as it is his Interest. I cannot believe that the 'said Bongars speaks in a manner, so contrary to 'Truth and Sincerity, for which the King ought 'to be commended, not only to the Catholics, 'but even to the Protestants, who otherwise could 'not trust him, nor would use their Interest for 'him: but I take it to be a Savoyard or Spanish 'Invention (13).' That Cardinal had too much sense not to apprehend the prejudice this might do the King at the Court of Rome; therefore he thought it best to deny that Bongars had said any such thing. It was offered to be proved to him; let us see the consequences of those offers. 'Several 'Letters, says he, were put into my hands, writ'ten in Latin to a learned German here, named 'Gaspar Schoppius, some written by the said Bon'gars, and others by one Velser who lives at 'Ausburg. I understood by all those Letters, 'that Schoppius had been a Huguenot, and that, 'having been converted in this City, he writ to 'his Friends that were Huguenots, and among 'others to the said Bongars, some sharp and in'jurious Letters, more fit to exasperate and harden 'them in their Opinion, than to gain and con'vert them, which Bongars somewhat resented, and 'answered him bluntly, but not without great Re'spect and Modesty: and in all those Letters there 'is not one word concerning the abovesaid Dis'course, nor any thing like it: So that the pro'duction of those Letters justifies him in my O'pinion.

(13) D'Ossat, Letter cxvii. lib. vi. pag. 595.

ligion; but there is reaſon to ſuſpect from his Letters, that he had ſome Scruples about the Civil-Wars of the Proteſtants [H]. The Public is indebted to him for the Publication of ſeveral Authors, who wrote the Hiſtory of the Expeditions into Paleſtine (d). I do not think that he was ever married: A French Lady, whom he was to marry, died on the very Day appointed for the Wedding, in the Year 1597 [I].

(d) That Work is intituled, Geſta Dei per Francos. It was printed at Hanaw in 1611, in two Vol. in Folio.

He ſtudied at Strasburg in the Year 1571, and had an Anabaptiſt for his Tutor (e). He ſtudied under Cujacius in 1576 (f). The Anſwer which he publiſhed in Germany to a Piece, wherein the bad Succeſs of the Expedition of the Year 1587 was imputed to the French, who accompanied the Germans, was praiſed by Thuanus [K]. But that Anſwer, though never ſo glorious to the Author, is nothing, if (e) Colomiés Biblioth. choiſie, p. 189.

(f) See below, Citation (52) of the Article BODIN.

' pinion. But I find among the Letters of the ' abovementioned Velſer, that thoſe which he ſaid ' Bongars writ to the ſaid Schoppius, paſſed through ' the hands of Velſer, who opened and read them ' and ſent them afterwards to Schoppius; and there ' is one of Velſer's to Schoppius, wherein he ſuggeſts to ' him that in replying to Bongars he ſhould reproach ' him with the Converſion of his King, and that ' he had ſaid ſuch and ſuch things about it to the ' Proteſtant Princes of Germany. But it appears ' that this Velſer is an Enemy of Bongars, and ' partial to the Houſe of Auſtria, as Schoppius was ' maintained by the late Cardinal Madruccio, who ' was ſo much for the ſaid Houſe, that the King ' of Spain had truſted him with the Secret of the ' Conclave, rather than his own Embaſſadors, or ' the Spaniſh Cardinals. So that I take this Impu- ' tation, and Charge laid on Bongars, to be a meer ' Calumny, contrived chiefly to prejudice the King ' (14).' As for my ſelf, I look upon that which Velſer would have had James Bongars reproached with, to be probable enough. There were but very few among the Proteſtants, who, during the firſt Years of Henry IV's Catholiciſm, were perſwaded that he had altered his Opinion. His Envoy in Germany was not a Man who could eaſily imagine, that at the age of Henry IV, one may begin to believe Tranſubſtantiation and what depends on it. It is therefore probable that he might have ſaid, without thinking to tell a lie, that his Maſter's Converſion was a work of meer neceſſity, and like the Riſus Sardonius only from the Teeth outwards. But ſuppoſe that he judged otherwiſe; can it be thought that he would ſcruple to have recourſe to an officious Lie, to prevent the Proteſtants of Germany from withdrawing themſelves from Henry IV? Can it be thought that, in order to keep them in the Intereſt of France, he would have made a difficulty to tell them confidently, that the King was ſtill a good Huguenot in his Heart, though he believed no ſuch thing? It is juſt as when du Bellay made the ſame Princes believe that Francis I was not averſe to the Reformation (15). Ay, will ſome ſay, but du Bellay was a Papiſt, and Bongars was a Proteſtant. What then? A Proteſtant Embaſſador is made like another; he makes the ſame uſe of Political Addreſs that others do, and if he ſuffers himſelf to be bubbled, it is not out of Zeal, or out of any Scruple of Conſcience. Take notice, that, according to the commonly received Notions of things, Bongars would have done nothing againſt the duty of a Man of Honour, in doing his Maſter good ſervices by the Inſinuations in queſtion. The main thing was to take care that the Spaniards ſhould know nothing of it.

(14) Id. Letter octavo, lib. vii. pag. 602, dated from Rome the 2*d of* January 1601.

(15) See above, the Article BELLAY (William du).

[H] He had ſome Scruples about the Civil-Wars of the Proteſtants.] Mr Colomies made this Remark, and has inſerted it in the One hundred and fifteenth Page of his Obſervationes Sacræ, printed at Rochelle in the Year 1679, and in the Two hundred and Twenty ſixth Page of a Collection which he printed in England in the Year 1687. ' Chriſtianiſſimè in hanc rem Jacobus Bongarſius, Aurelianenſis, Henrici 4. ad Germaniæ Principes olim legatus, vir pietate ac eruditione illuſtris, in quadam ad Joachimum Camerarium Joachimi F. Epiſtola: Hic, clariſſime & prudentiſſime Domine, effundam in ſinum tuum amicum & candidum, quæ me ſæpè agitant, nec turbant tamen. Repete & noſtros Duces qui armis ſuis Religionem præ- tulerunt. Videbis vitios veſtros à Carolo V. cap- toſque & affectos contumelis, privatos etiam bonis. In Gallia captum primo belli Condæum, tertio oc- ciſum: Amiralium ſemper victum; tandem truci- datum cum magna Procerum turba. In Belgio, Aurangium itidem globo proſtratum. Certè judi- care aliud non poſſum, quàm ingrata illorum ar- ma Deo fuiſſe (16). —— Moſt Chriſtian-like to this Purpoſe, James Bongars of Orleans formerly Embaſſador from Henry IV, to the Princes of Germany, a Man famous for his Piety and Learning, in a Letter to Joachim Camerarius the Son. Here, moſt excellent and prudent Sir, I will pour into your friendly and candid Boſom what often moves but does not diſturb me. Conſider now our Generals who have made Religion a Pretence for their Arms. You will ſee your People beat, taken Priſoners, harraſſed, and deprived of their Goods by Charles V. In France, in the firſt War Condé taken, in the third killed: the Admiral always beat, and at laſt murdered, with a great number of the Nobility. In the Low-Countries, the Prince of Orange killed with a Ball. Certainly I can judge no other than that theſe Arms were diſpleaſing to God.' This Paſſage of Bongars is in his nineteenth Letter to Joachim Camerarius. It has been a little curtailed in the Paris Edition. See the Advertiſement of the Edition of the Hague 1695.

(16) Colomeſ. Obſervat. ſacr. pag. 115, 116.

[I] A French Lady, whom he was to marry, died on the very day appointed for the Wedding.] Her Name was Odette Spifame de Chalonge. They had been near ſix Years in love with each other, and had deſired to be married: but the Journies he was obliged to make for the King's Service prevented the execution of their mutual Deſires during that time. Nuptias utrinque optatas peregri- nationes meæ & regia negotia hactenus impedive- runt (17). The King not permitting Bongars to come home to marry her, ſhe was ſo obliging as to go with her Father to her Lover; they had agreed to marry at Baſil. She came to Montbeliard in the middle of the Winter, and through many dangers: and underſtanding that Bongars could not come and meet here till eight days after ſhe went to him as far as Strasburg. There it was reſolved to perform the Ceremony of the Wedding; but the poor Lady fell ſick eight days after, and died the fourth day of her ſickneſs. Bongars was extraordinarily afflicted at it, as appears by his Letters. I have taken theſe Particulars from the Letter he wrote to John William Stuckius the eighth of February 1597; it is in the ſeventh Page of the Edition of Strasburg 1660, and in the Sixty ſixth Page of the Edition of the Hague 1695. That Edition of Strasburg contains but a ſmall part of James Bongars's Letters; but thoſe from Lingelſheim to him were added to them; which I ſhould have liked better, had not a great many Proper Names been left out, which hinders the Reader from underſtanding what Lingelſheim ſpeaks of in thoſe places, and makes one believe that thoſe Paſſages were curious. I do not believe that Mr Morhof apprehended any thing, in the Advertiſement to the Reader, which is prefixed to Bongars's and Lingelſheim's Letters (18).

(17) Bongarſ. Epiſtol. pag. 70 Edit. Argentin. 1660.

[K] His Anſwer ----- concerning the Expedition of 1587 was praiſed by Thuanus.] Theſe are the Words of the great Hiſtorian. ' Donavius anno inſequenti ------ librum Germanicâ linguâ edit, quo facti invidiam omnem à ſe amoliebatur, eamque in Navarri turditatem, Bullionii imperitiam, & Gallorum Ducum imprudentiam, five in diſtribuendis manſionibus malignitatem quæ Germanis tumultuandi occaſionem dediſſet, retorquebat; idque captato tempore fecerat Dona- vius, if it be compared to that, which he had made to a Bull of Pope Sixtus, and which he had the Courage to poſt up in Rome. I have not read this any where, but in Mr Varillas, whoſe Words I ſhall recite [L], and I will make ſome Critical Notes upon them [M]. It was Bongars that publiſhed the Queſtions, which the Jeſuit Cotton had drawn up to be put the Devil [N].

(18) See the Article LINGELSHEIM, Remark [B].

'vius, cum Francofurtenſes propediem Nundinæ 'exituræ eſſent, ne ad ſcriptum reſponderi poſſet, 'interea volitaret illud per manus Germanorum, '& nemine contradicente imponeres ea mentibus, 'quæ haud facile poſtea eximi poſſent. Verum 'aſtu cognito, Jacobus Bongarſius juvenis ingenio '& eruditione præſtans, & Gallici decoris perquam 'ſtudioſus, qui Navarri res iſtic procurabat, ſcripti 'exemplo ab amicis accepto, extemporaneo ſed 'aculeato ſcripto contrario, quod & eadem feſtina-'tione typis mandari curavit, antequam Nundinæ 'exirent, reſpondit, & omnem rei male geſtæ 'culpam primum —— rejicit —— deinde in &c (19). —— Donau the Year following —— publiſhed 'a Book in the German Language, in which he 'ſhifted all the blame of the thing from himſelf, and 'laid it on the Dilatorineſs of Navarre, the unskil-'fulneſs of Boullon, and the Imprudence of the 'French Officers, or their Malice in appointing quar-'ters, which occaſioned the Germans to mutiny; and 'he choſe the time for publication, juſt before the 'end of the Fair of Franckfort, that no anſwer might 'be made to it, and in the mean time, the Book 'might be diſperſed among the Germans, and (no-'thing being ſaid againſt it) make ſuch impreſſions in 'their minds, as could not eaſily be effaced. But the 'Trick being diſcovered, James Bongars, a young Man 'of excellent Genius and Learning, and zealous for 'the Honour of the French, who was charged with the 'Affairs of Navarre there, getting a Copy of the Piece 'from his Friends, replied in an extemporary, but 'ſtinging, Anſwer, which he got printed with like 'expedition, before the Fair was ended, and removed 'the charge of the ill Succeſs firſt —— then, &c.' Note that theſe words are not to be found in the Editions of Thuanus, but they were in his Manuſcript. See Thuanus Reſtitutus.

(19) Thuanus, Hiſt. lib. 138 pag. 705, 706.

[L] He had the Courage to poſt up, in Rome, his Anſwer to the Bull of Sixtus V. I have not read this any where but in Varillas, whoſe Words I ſhall recite.] Having related the violent Proceedings of Sixtus V againſt the King of Navarre; and againſt the Prince of Condé, he adds, that the Bull of That Pope 'remained a long time poſted up in the Field 'of Flora, till James Bongars, a Calviniſt, and Citi-'zen of Orleans, who was then at Rome, tho' at 'that time he was but ſeventeen Years of Age, 'reſolved to revenge the Honour of France, aſper-'ſed in the two firſt Princes of the Blood, and ac-'quitted himſelf of it in ſuch an undaunted man-'ner, that it deſerves a place in Hiſtory (20). —— As he was very learned, he compoſed a 'very ſtrong and ſatirical Anſwer to the Pope's 'Bull. He tranſcribed it himſelf, in form of a Pla-'cart, and taking the opportunity of a very dark 'Night, fixed it up near the Bull in the Field of 'Flora. He was ſo fortunate, that he was neither 'perceived, nor ſo much as ſuſpected; and it would 'have been unknown to this time, if he had not 'ſpoke of it afterwards himſelf; and given convin-'cing proofs of it. He appealed, in the Name of 'the two Princes, from the Bull of Sixtus V, 'who called himſelf Pope of Rome, to the 'Court of the Peers of France; he gave his Holi-'neſs the Lie, as to the crime of Hereſy, whereof 'he accuſed them; and he offered to prove in their 'behalf, in a Council lawfully aſſembled, that the 'Pope was a Heretic himſelf: He called him Anti-'chriſt, if he did not ſubmit to it, and declared a 'perpetual and irreconcilable War againſt him in 'their Name. He proteſted, that the wrong that 'was done to the Moſt Chriſtian King, to the Royal 'Family, and to the three States of the Kingdom, 'would be revenged on the Court of Rome: To 'that end, he implored the aſſiſtance of all truly 'Chriſtian Princes, and conjured all the Allies of 'the French Monarchy, to oppoſe the Pope's Ty-'ranny, and the fatal deſigns of the League (21).' Varillas affirms, that, tho' all the Accounts that he had ſeen of that Action, ſuppoſe that Bongars was then but ſeventeen Years of Age, he cannot be perſuaded that a Writing, of that force, was the firſt 'Eſſay of ſo young a Man (22). He adds, I have 'enquired into the cauſe of that Error a long time (23), 'and what ſeems to me moſt likely, is, that Ste-'phen de la Boiſſe had writ, being likewiſe but 'ſeventeen Years of Age, the famous Satire againſt 'all the Monarchs in the World, intituled le Contre-'Un, and that this Satire had been at leaſt as much 'admired for it's Strength, as blamed for the Te-'merity of the Author; that la Boiſſe was a Catho-'lic, and that the Calviniſts, in order to ſet up a 'Man againſt him, that came near his Stile, pre-'tended that Bongars, who was of their Commu-'nion, was not older than he, when at Rome he 'defended the Dignity of the two firſt Princes of 'the Blood of France, with the utmoſt hazard of 'his Life. However Bongars ſtaid not long there, 'and after he had repaſſed the Alps, (Pope Sixtus 'V not having been able to diſcover, that it was 'he who had treated him ſo ill) the Court of 'France gave him eleven ſolemn Embaſſies ſucceſ-'ſively, of which he acquitted himſelf with great 'Honour. I have only ſeen the laſt, which is a-'mong the Manuſcripts of Lomenie in the King's 'Library; it relates to the Treaties of Henry the 'Great for the Succeſſion of Cleves and Juliers, 'and I think is in ſome manner ſufficient to com-'fort the Public for the loſs of the reſt.'

(20) Varillas, Hiſt. de Henry III. lib. ix pag. 29 ad ann. 1585. Dutch Edition.

(21) Id. ibid. pag. 30.

(22) Id. in the Preface.

(23) Id. ib. fol. 7. verſo.

[M] And I'll make ſome Critical Notes upon them.] I. He is to blame for not telling us whence he had his Account of this Action of Bongars. He could not be ignorant that our moſt celebrated Hiſtorians (24) take no notice of that Circumſtance; ſo that it muſt be very ſecret; it was therefore requiſite that he ſhould diſcover how he had been more lucky than ſo many other Writers. II. I defy all the world to name any good Author, who ſays that Bongars was but ſeventeen Years of Age, when Sixtus V fulminated his Bull againſt the King of Navarre in 1585. Nay, I queſtion whether any bad Authors have ſaid it before Varillas. It is certain that Bongars was then in his Thirty firſt Year. III. Varillas ſhould have ſaid Stephen de la Boetie, and not Stephen de la Boiſſe. IV. The Contre-Un is ill defined, a famous Satire againſt all the Monarchs in the World. V. La Boetie was above ſeventeen Years of Age when he wrote that Piece. Thuanus obſerves that he wrote it in the Year 1548, when he was ſcarce nineteen Years of Age (25), and that he died in the Year 1563, not much above Thirty three Years of Age (26). VI. There was never a more phantaſtical Notion, than to imagine, that the Proteſtants leſſened Bongars's Age, to have an occaſion to boaſt that they had produced as admirable a Man, as la Boetie, among the Catholics. VII. There is a great deal of Exaggeration in the Eleven ſolemn Embaſſies, which the Court of France gave to Bongars, according to Varillas. They were moſt of them meer Deputations under the Character of Envoy, or Reſident, and it ought to be remembered that the firſt Deputations did not proceed from the Court of France, but only from the King of Navarre. 'Ab eo etiam (Henrico IV) 'ad Germaniæ Principes creperis rebus ſæpius miſ-'ſus, ſuam Regi fidem, candorem, & integritatem 'omnibus probavit, prolegati munere aliquoties, 'legati ſemel & quidem pro dignitate functus (27). '— Being likewiſe ſeveral times ſent by him [Henry 'IV.] to the Princes of Germany in critical Af-'fairs, he gave proofs of his Fidelity to the King, 'and his Candour and Integrity to every body, diſ-'charging ſometimes the Office of Envoy, and once 'of Embaſſador, and that with due dignity.'

(24) Thuanus, Mezerai, Pereſixe, &c.

(25) Thuanus, Hiſt. lib. v. pag. 105.

(26) Id lib. xxxv. circa fin.

(27) Frid. Spanhem. Epiſt. litteris Bongarſii præfixa.

[N] It was he who publiſhed the Queſtions, which the Jeſuit Cotton had drawn up to be put to the Devil.] Benedict Turretin, Paſtor and Profeſſor of Divinity at Geneva, examining the Reaſons given by that Jeſuit to juſtify his Conduct with reſpect to thoſe Interrogations, had this Objection to anſwer. Some made them amount to thirty; ſome to forty, fifty, ſixty, &c. Hence Father Cotton concluded that that they did not proceed fairly; and that it was a piece of Calumny. 'It may be, answered Mr 'Turretin (28), That some of them did not tran- 'scribe all the Questions; for every one is not so 'curious —— but the Original Paper, from which 'that swarm of Interrogations proceeds, has the 'number which is printed in Latin and in French, 'and it was not forgotten in the Physiognomonia 'Jesuitica. Now the abovesaid Original was seen 'by a great number of illustrious Persons yet live- 'ing, who can testify it; and moreover, he who 'got it printed with that Preface, was one of the 'King's Officers in an honourable Post, to wit, 'the late Monsieur Bongars, to whom Father 'Cotton having complained of the Publication of 'the Anti-Cotton; he made answer, That he was 'not the Author of it; but that he had indeed 'caused his Questions to the Devil to be printed.'

(28) Benedict Turretin, Recheute du Jesuite plagaire, p. 61.

BONONIA (JOHN de), a Sicilian by Nation, Archdeacon of Palermo (a), Bachelor of the Faculty of Paris, and Chaplain to the Emperor Charles V, was Professor at Louvain in the XVIth Century. In the Year 1553 he was at the Assembly of Divines, who, at the Instance of that Emperor, examined whether a certain Country, which he does not name, and in favour of which a Translation of the Scripture was made, ought to enjoy the Liberty of reading it (b). They decided unanimously, that they ought not to have that Liberty continued to them. Bononia was one of the hottest against the translating of the Scriptures into the Vulgar Tongue, and suspected those of Heresy who approved of it (c). In the Year 1555 he published a Book at Louvain about the Doctrine of Predestination. I shall observe below what Judgment a Jansenist gave of it [A].

(a) Gery, Apologie des censures de Louvain, & de Douai, p. 50, 51.

(b) See Mr Simon, Nouvelles Observations, p. 495. 496.

(c) Id. pag. 495.

[A] He published a Book - - - - - a Jansenist gave this Judgment of it.] That Work, dedicated to Charles V, is intituled, De æterna Dei Prædestinatione & Reprobatione, &c 'The Author shews 'some subtility of Wit in it, but no great Solidity; he forms a System concerning Grace and 'Predestination, peculiar to himself, which he pre- 'tends to build upon St Chrysostom, without seem- 'ing to lay any great stress on St Augustin's Doc- 'trine, or to understand the Opinions of those two 'Saints. Neither can I tell whether he understood 'his own well; for there are gross Contradictions 'in it. He has some Expressions which seem to 'ascribe a Sovereign Power to Grace over the Soul 'of Man, and an efficacious Operation upon it; 'but a Page or two after you will find, that he 'gives so great a Power to the Will, that he be- 'lieves it capable to make all the Operations of 'Grace useless. In short, he is a Man that con- 'founds every thing, who thinks sometimes he is 'opposing the Opinion of the Catholics, when he 'only attacks that of the Heretics (1). - - - - - He 'believes that the Opinion, which admits the Fore- 'knowledge of the good and ill use of Free will and 'Grace, (for he distinguishes those two Opinions) 'are contrary to the Apostle, to St Augustin, and 'even to Faith, being nothing else but meer Pe- 'lagianism (2).' He acknowledges, that he had grounded his System on new Notions, and so different from the common Doctrine of the Schools, that at first, he almost despaired of bringing any one Divine to his Opinion (3).

(1) Gery, Apolog. des censures, p. 51.

(2) Id. ibid p. 52.

(3) Gery, id. ib. pag. 53.

BORE (CATHERINE de), Wife of Martin Luther, was the Daughter of a private Gentleman (a). She left the Monastery of Nimptschen, where she was a Nun, in the Year 1523. One Leonard Coppe, a Senator of Torgau, took her and eight other Nuns out. That Action, done in the holy Week, having made a great noise, and given much Offence; the Elector of Saxony did not think fit to approve it openly; he was contented to provide by private Gratifications for the Maintenance of those unveiled Nuns: But Luther published an Apology for them, and for Leonard Coppe, who had so well assisted them in their Design of leaving their Convent (b). Some have said, that Catherine de Bore, having been carried to Wittemberg, lived there in all kind of Freedom among the young Students of the University (c), and was very profuse of her Kisses (d), till Martin Luther married her two Years after; but the Lutherans maintain, that she behaved herself very modestly, and that she had a good Reputation (e). Those who say, that Luther who still wore the Habit of his Order, having seen the nine Nuns, who had deserted the Convent of Nimptschen, very much liked our Catherine, because she was very handsome [A], and designed her for his Wife, have but little consulted his Letters. They

(a) Seckendorf. Hist Lutheran. lib. v. pag. 273. lit. d.

(b) Id. ibid. pag. 272.

(c) Maimbourg, Hist. du Luther. lib. ii. pag. 120. Post biennium in sæculo, vaga inter scholares Academicos conversatione, Wittenbergæ exactum - - - facta est Luthero (si Diis placet) uxor. - - - - After two Year spent in the World in loose Conversation with the Scholars of the University of Wittemberg, Luther has taken her for a Wife. Cochleus de Act. & Script. Luther. pag. 102.

(d) Bellam illam Catharinam jam annos aliquot Wittembergæ varia per studiosorum oscula volutatam, sibi uxorem duxit. - - - He married the beautiful Catharine who had been for some Years wallowed in the promiscuous Embraces of the Students at Wittenburg. Lindan. dubit. Disq. 2. p. 104.

(e) Seckendorf. lib. ii. pag. 150.

[A] She was very handsome] Let us hear Father Maimbourg; Among those nine libertine and unveiled Nuns, who were all Maids of Quality, there was one named Catherine de Bore, whom Luther, who was yet in a Religious Habit, thought VERY HANDSOME, and fell violently in Love with (1). Erasmus praises this young Woman's Beauty. 'Lu- 'therus, says he (2) duxit uxorem, puellam MIRE 'VENUSTAM, ex clara familia Bornæ (3), sed 'ut narrant indotatam, quæ ante annos complures '(4) Vestalis esse desierat. —— Luther married a 'very beautiful young Woman, of the Illustrious Fa- 'mily of Bore, but without Fortune (as it is said) 'who had thrown off a Nuns Habit some Years before.' Mr Seckendorf thinks there is a great deal of Exaggeration in those Words as to Catherine de Bore's Beauty (5). No body is more to be credited in this Affair than he, and therefore we may say, that Luther's Wife was not extraordinary handsome. But let us reflect a little on the artificial and malicious Design of those, who affect to represent this Nun as a very handsome Woman. Their aim is, generally, to reflect upon Luther's Choice, and to conclude from thence, that he was too much given to his Pleasures, and that he did not marry purely to bridle his Incontinence, but to satisfy Nature in the highest degree of Concupiscence. They put an ill construction upon a thing which may be very innocent: No Man, that desires to marry, is forbidden to make choice of a handsome Wife, rather than of one that is not so; nay, one may have a very good reason for so doing; a Man may be afraid his Conjugal Affection should unluckily cool, a thing most opposite to the Duties of a Christian Husband; I say, he may fear such a thing, if he makes choice of a Wife that is but ordinary. If therefore, in hopes of being always a good and affectionate Husband, as Reason and Religion require, he makes choice of a handsome Woman, preferably to any other, is it not certain, that he goes upon an honest Principle? And how do we know, but that, if Catherine de Bore was a beautiful Woman, Luther might choose her among the nine Nuns from this laudable Motive? I might say, that the fairer the Object was, the more Luther was to be excused for not being able to resist the Temptations; and it is very likely, that if he had married a homely Woman, his Enemies would have cried

(1) Hist. du Lutheran. liv. ii. pag. 120.

(2) Erasm. Epist. xi. lib. xviii.

(3) It should be Borinæ, or à Bore.

(4) It was but some Years.

(5) Histor. Lutheran. liv. ii. pag. 28. n. 12.

REFLEXIONS upon what some People affect to say, that Luther married a very handsome Nun.

They would have seen there, that he resolved to marry her all on a sudden, in the Year 1525 [B], and that This Resolution was put in Execution with the utmost speed to please his Father, and to put a Stop to Scandal [C]. It is even true, that he made haste, because, as he believed he should not live long, and was unwilling to die a Bachelor, lest he should transgress a Commandment, and retain something of Popery, and frustrate the Desires of his Father, who wished he was already a Grandfather, he thought he had no time to lose [D]. Besides there was a little Share of Spite to the cried out, that his Incontinence was so great, that it wanted no Charms to kindle it. In a word, I might say, that one would be more ready to pardon a Person who should break an obligatory Fast at the sight of a well-dressed Partridge, than one who should do the same thing, at the sight of a piece of rusty Bacon. But in truth, this Apology does not seem to be satisfactory; it has two Faces, and therefore it is better to let it alone: For it might be said, all things being otherwise equal, that of two Men, who should have the liberty to choose a very delicious Ragoo, or a piece of Beef, he that contented himself with the Beef, would do an act of Sobriety, and shew that he eat only to live, and to satisfy natural necessity; whereas the other, that should make choice of a Ragoo, would do an act of Gluttony and Daintiness, and shew that he only thinks to satisfy his voluptuous Appetite. The application is easy: If Luther had only looked for a remedy against Incontinence, and an opportunity to beget Children for the Church and his Country, he would have imitated him, who prefers a piece of Beef before the greatest Dainties. It were therefore to no purpose to judge of those things by a Comparison with eating. But besides the reason of Fact, I mean, besides Catharine de Bore's being not very handsome, one might alledge other Reasons of Right in favour of Martin Luther.

[B] His resolution to marry her was taken all on a sudden, in the Year 1525.] Eight Days before his Espousals (6), he wrote to Rubelius, That if his Example was necessary for the Cardinal of Brandenburg, Archbishop of Mentz, he would soon marry, tho' he had been ever in doubt whether he was fit for Marriage, and that besides tho' he intended to marry before he died, his Marriage might perhaps, prove an Engagement like that of St Joseph. ' Si ' Electori forte dicet, cur ego ipse non ducam uxo- ' rem, qui omnes ad nubendum incito, respondebis, ' me semper adhuc dubitasse an idoneus ad id sim. ' Attamen si meo matrimonio Electori confirmari ' posset, propediem paratus essem ad exemplum ei ' præbendum. Nam & alias cogito, antequam ex ' hac vita discedam, ut matrimonium contraham, ' quia id à Deo exigi puto, licet forte futura esset ' desponsatio Josephica (7). —— If the Elector chance to ask why I myself do not take a Wife, who perswade every body else to marry, answer him, that I have always doubted whether I were fit for it. Yet if the Elector could be determined by my Marriage, I would soon be ready to set him an Example. For on other accounts, I think to marry before I leave the World, because I think it is required by God, tho' perhaps it may be a Marriage like that of Joseph.' A Man, who speaks thus, seems to look as yet on Marriage at some distance, and therefore, Luther must have changed his mind very suddenly. He thought that his change was a work of Providence, and he says that the wife Men of his Party, who blamed his Marriage so much, were forced to acknowledge the Hand of God in it. ' Vehementer irritantur sapientes inter nostros: rem ' coguntur Dei fateri, sed personæ larva tam meæ ' quam puellæ illos dementat, impia cogitare & di- ' cere facit (8). —— The wise Men of our party are greatly provoked: they are forced to own the thing to be of God, but the disguise of the Persons, both of myself and the young Woman, makes them mad, and makes them think and say wicked things.' In another place he speaks in this manner: ' Domi- ' nus me subito aliaque cogitantem conjecit mire in ' conjugium cum Catharina Borensi moniali illa (9). ' —— The Lord brought me suddenly, when I was thinking of other matters, to a Marriage with ' Catharine de Bore, the Nun.' Observe nevertheless, that he shews in a Letter of the fifth of May, of the same Year, that he had a design to marry his Catherine.

(6) The 3d of June 1525: The Day that they were betrothed was the 11th of June. See Seckendorf, lib. ii. pag. 16, n. 3.

(7) Lutherus, Oper. Tom. III. fol. 140. apud Seckendorf, lib. ii. §. 3.

(8) Luther. in Epist. ad Michael. Stifelium, pag. 294, dated the 10th of June 1525. apud Seckendorf, lib. ii. §. 5.

(9) Luther. in Epist. ad Wenceslaum Linckium, dated the 20th of June, cited by Seckendorf. lib. ii. §. 5.

[C] To put a stop to Scandal.] This is what he wrote to Rubelius the fifteenth of June 1525. ' Po- ' stulante patre meo conjugium inii, & ut linguas ' maledicorum & impedimenta vitarem, congressum ' nuptialem properanter institui (10). —— I took a ' Wife in obedience to my Father's Commands, and ' hastened the Consummation, in order to shun the ' Tongues of Slanderers, and all obstacles.' Had we no other Passage but this, we could not certainly know the nature of the Slanders which he designed to avoid; one might think, that he had no other aim than to put a stop to a thousand foolish Stories, that are reported in Towns during the time of Courtship. At that time People will say what they know, and what they know not; and it happens but too often, that the Brochers of News hinder the conclusion of a Marriage: but when the Business is concluded, it affords little occasion for talk. It might therefore be said, that Luther was not willing to give those Newsmongers time to spread the News of his design through the Town, and that therefore he put it in execution as soon as he had formed it; but we know by some other passages of his Letters, that there was a necessity to put a stop to another sort of Reports. Or obstruxi, says he to his Friend Spalatinus, infamantibus me cum Catharina Borana (11). —— I have stopped their Mouths who reproach me with Catharine de Bore. Vera est itaque fama, me esse cum Catharina subito copulatum antequam ora cogerer audire tumultuosa in me, sicut solet fieri (12). —— To another he says the Report is true that I am married on a sudden to Catharine, before I was obliged to hear a Clamour against me as usual on such occasions. In all likelihood they spoke ill of him and her, because without doubt he saw her familiarly. He loved her, and called her His Catharine. ' Fortasse etiam rumoribus ' mota de quibus Lutherus epistola supra allegata ' queritur, quibus tamen ipse aliquam occasionem ' dedisse videtur, optime enim cupiebat virgini, & ' suam vocare solebat Catharinam (13). —— Per- ' haps too she was moved by the Reports, of which ' Luther complains in the Letter above cited, for ' which nevertheless he seems to have given some ' occasion; for he was very fond of her and used ' to call her his Catharine.' Mr Seckendorf conjectures that those prattlings were one of the Reasons, that made her declare she would not marry Doctor Glatius; but that she was very willing to be married either to Luther, or Amsdorf. Let us add to all this what Melanchthon writ on that Marriage. Si quid vulgo fertur aliud indecentius, id mendacium & calumniam esse perspicuum est (14). —— If common fame says any thing indecent, it is manifest it is a Lie and a Calumny.

(10) Lutherus, Tom. III. fol. 150 cited by Seckendorf. lib. ii. n. 4.

(11) Lutheri Epist. lib ii. p. 292. apud Seckendorf, lib. ii. n. 5.

(12) Epist. ad Amsdorfium, lib. ii. pag. 295, dated the 22d of June, apud Seckendorf. lib. ii. n. 7.

(13) Seckendorf. Hist Lutheran. lib. ii. pag. 17. n. 8.

(14) Melanch. apud Seckendorf. lib. ii. n. 10.

[D] He made haste, because, as he believed he should not live long, he thought he had no time to lose.] Here is the Proof of the two or three Facts contained in the Period that begins with the Text of this Remark. ' Ecce, quia sic insaniunt, (they are Luther's words (15), he means those who exclaimed against him on account of the War of Boors) ' ita me paravi, ut ante mortem meam, in statu, ' quo creatus sum, à Deo inveniar, & quantum ' potero, nihil ex priori vita mea papistica retineam. ' Ferant itaque tanto acrius, & hæc ultima & va- ' ledictoria erunt. Mens enim mihi præsagit, me ' à Deo ad gratiam suam evocatum iri. Itaque, ' postulante patre meo, conjugium inii. —— See, ' because they are thus mad, I have so prepared my ' self that, before I die, I may be found by God ' in the State in which I was created, & if pos- ' sible retain nothing of my former Popish Life. ' Therefore let them rave yet more, and this will ' be their last farewel. For my mind presages ' that I shall soon be called by God into his Grace. ' Therefore at my Father's Desire, I have taken a ' Wife.'

(15) Epist. ad Ruhelium. Tom. III. fol. 150, dated the 15th of June, cited by Seckendorf, lib. ii. §. 5. n. 4.

the Papiſts in this Deſign of his Marriage (f). This young Woman refuſed the Man whom he adviſed her to marry, and told Amſdorf that ſuch a Marriage did not pleaſe her; but that if Luther or Amſdorf would take her to Wife, ſhe was ready to accept of either of them [E]. There went a Report that ſhe was brought to bed ſoon after her Marriage [F]; but Eraſmus, who had wrote that News to one of his Friends, acknowledged the Falſity of it a little after. Luther, with all his Courage, was at firſt a little put out of Countenance, by the Clamours which his Marriage raiſed both at home and abroad [G]. But he quickly took heart again, (f) See the Remark [E].

'Wife.' In another Letter he ſpeaks thus. 'Spero 'enim me breve tempus adhuc victurum, & hoc 'noviſſimum obſequium parenti meo poſtulanti 'nolui denegare ſpe prolis, ſimul ut confirmem 'facta quæ docui (16). - - - - - For I hope I ſhall 'live a little longer, and I would not deny this 'laſt Obedience to my Father, who required it in 'hopes of Iſſue, and alſo to confirm the Doctrines 'I have taught.' And this is what he ſays in another place. 'Alias cogito antequam ex hac 'vita diſcedam ut matrimonium contraham, quia 'id à Deo exigi puto (17). - - - - - Beſides I think 'I ſhall marry before I leave the World, becauſe 'I believe it is commanded by God.'

(16) Lutheri Epiſt. ad Amſdorf. cited by Seckendorf, lib ii. n. 7.

(17) Luther. Epiſt. ad. Ruhelium apud Seckendorf. lib. ii. n. 2.

[E] She refuſed to marry Glacius - - - - but for Luther or Amſdorf ſhe was ready to accept of either of them.] We know this from a Manuſcript Memorial, which Abraham Scultetus has inſerted in his Annals (18). The Man, whom Luther had deſired Catharine to marry, was a Miniſter of Orlamund, one Doctor Glacius. Perhaps he might be called in French, le Docteur de la Glace [i. e. Doctor Ice] (a). The young Woman refuſed him; Vellet Lutherus, vellet Amſdorffius, ſi paratam cum alterutro beneſtum inire matrimonium: cum D. Glacio nullo modo. Luther, having heard this on one ſide, and having heard on the other, that if he married, he would make all the World, and the Devil himſelf, laugh, reſolved to marry the Nun Catharine, to ſpite the World and the Devil. 'Hoc ubi 'Lutherus intellexit, audiſſetque ex D. Hieronymi 'Schurfii ore: Si Monachus iſte uxorem duceret 'riſuros mundum univerſum & diabolum ipſum, 'facturumque ipſum irritas actiones ſuas univerſas: 'ut ægre faceret mundo & diabolo, ut parenti 'etiam hoc ſuadenti gratificaretur, Catharinam ſibi 'uxorem ducendam cenſuit (19). —— When Luther underſtood this, and heard from the Mouth of Jerom Schurfius: That if that Monk married, all the World and the Devil himſelf would laugh at him, and he would undo all he had done: in order to vex the World and the Devil, and gratify his Father who deſired it, he reſolved to marry Catharine.' This agrees with what he wrote the fifteenth of May 1525, to Rubelius: 'Si domum venero ad mortem me Deo juvante 'præparabo, & novos iſtos dominos & latrones exſpectabo - - - - - - Illis autem ut ægre faciam, ſi 'fieri poteſt, Catharinam meam uxorem ducam, 'antequam moriar, ſi pergere eos intellexero: ne'que enim os mihi obſtruent, nec gaudium adi'ment (20) - - - - - - If I get home, I will, by 'God's Aſſiſtance, prepare my ſelf for Death, and 'wait for thoſe new Lords and Robbers - - - - - But 'to vex them, if poſſible, I will marry my Catharine before I die, if I hear they go on, for 'they ſhall neither ſtop my Mouth nor rob me of 'my Happineſs.' When I enquire what Reaſons he could have to believe, that he would vex the Papiſts by his Marriage, I find none more likely than this, that he imagined they had yet ſome kind of Conſolation left, becauſe they thought he had ſtill a regard for the Doctrine of Monaſtical Vows.

(18) Ad. ann. 1525, pag. 274. apud Seckend. pag. 17. n. 8.

(19) Ibid.

(20) Ibid. n. 9.

[§ (a) Glacius, from the German, Glaſs, which ſignifies either a drinking Glaſs, or ſimply Glaſs, ought to have been rendered in French, by la Glace. Eyſs is the German word anſwering to this French Word. REM. CRIT.]

[F] There went a Report that ſhe was brought to bed, ſoon after her Marriage.] See here what Eraſmus wrote about it; 'Lutherus, quod felix 'fauſtumque ſit, depoſito Philoſophi pallio duxit 'uxorem ex clara familia Bornæ (21), puellam ele'ganti forma natam, annos viginti ſex, ſed indo'tatam & quæ pridem deſierat eſſe Veſtalis. At'que ut ſcias auſpicatas fuiſſe nuptias, pauculis 'diebus poſt decantatum hymenæum nova nupta 'peperit (22). - - - - - - Luther, I wiſh him joy of 'it, has laid down his Philoſopher's Cloak, and 'married a Wife of the noted Family of Bore, a 'Lady of excellent Beauty, Twenty ſix Years of Age, 'but with no Fortune, and one that had lately 'been a Nun. And to ſhow that it was a lucky 'Match, the Bride was brought to bed a few 'Days after the Solemnization of the Marriage.' This was an egregious Falſity, Eraſmus knew it by the Event, and owned that it was a falſe Report. The Letter, in which he makes that Confeſſion, is dated the thirteenth of March 1526. He ſays only that Luther's Wife was with Child, and that ſhe had not conquered the fierce Spirit of her Husband, ſeeing the Book that Luther had compoſed againſt him ſince his Wedding, was the moſt furious one that ever came from his Pen. 'De 'conjugio Lutheri certum eſt, de partu maturo 'ſponſæ vanus erat rumor, nunc tamen gravida 'eſſe dicitur. Si vera eſt vulgi fabula Antichriſtum 'naſciturum ex monacho & monacha, quemadmo'dum iſti jactitant, quot Antichriſtorum millia jam 'olim habet mundus? At ego ſperabam fore, ut 'Lutherum uxor redderet magis cicurem. Verùm 'ille præter omnem expectationem emiſit librum 'in me ſummâ quidem curâ elaboratum, ſed adeo 'virulentum, ut huctenus in neminem ſcripſerit 'hoſtiliùs (23). - - - - - - - Luther's Marriage is 'certain; the Report of his Wife's being ſo ſpeedily brought to bed is falſe; but I hear ſhe is now 'with Child. If the common Story be true, 'that Antichriſt ſhall be born of a Monk and a 'Nun, as they pretend, how many thouſands of Antichriſts are there in the World already? I was 'in hopes that a Wife would have made Luther a little tamer. But he, contrary to all expectation, has publiſhed a moſt elaborate Book againſt 'me, but as virulent as any book that ever he 'wrote.

(21) See above, Citation (3).

(22) Eraſm. apud Scultetum Annal. ad ann. 1525. pag. 278. citatum à Seckendorfio, pag. 18. n. 11.

(23) Eraſm. Epiſt. xxii. lib. xviii.

[G] Luther was put out of Countenance by the Clamours that his Marriage raiſed both at home and abroad.] He confeſſes himſelf, that his Marriage made him ſo deſpicable, that he hoped that Humiliation would rejoice the Angels, and vex the Devils. 'Sic me vilem & contemptum 'his nuptiis feci, ut Angelos ridere & omnes dæ'mones flere ſperem (24).' Melanchthon found him ſo afflicted with that change of Life, that he wrote ſome Letters of Conſolation to him. 'Quoniam vero ipſum Lutherum quodammodo 'triſtiorem eſſe cerno, & perturbatum ob vitæ 'mutationem, omni ſtudio & benevolentia conſolari 'eum cono (25).' He adds that the prejudice, which that Marriage did to Luther's great Reputation, would very likely produce a good effect: he meant, that it would prevent the Vanity of which the wiſeſt Men are too full in the Splendor of great Glory. 'Erit etiam, meo quidem judi'cio, nec inutilis quidem caſus iſte ad demiſſionem 'quandam pertinens, cum alte ſuſtolli & efferri 'ſemper ſit periculoſum, non ſolum facerdotio 'ſungentibus, ſed cunctis mortalibus. Nam actionum felicitas occaſionem dat pravitatis elati animi 'non modo, quemadmodum Orator inquit, dementibus, ſed interdum etiam ſapientibus. —— And indeed even this Accident will not, in my Opinion, be without it's uſe, as it tends to humble him a little; for it is dangerous, not only for a Prieſt but for any Man, to be too much elated and puffed up. For great ſucceſs gives occaſion to the Sin of a high Mind, not only, as the Orator ſays, in fools, but ſometimes even in wiſe Men.' It was not ſo much the Marriage, as the Circumſtances of the time, and the Precipitation with which it was done, that occaſioned the cenſures paſſed upon Luther. He married all on a ſudden, and again, and seemed very well satisfied with his Match; insomuch that when his Wife had born him a Son a little after, he said he would not change his Condition for that of Crœsus; so sensible he was that GOD had given him a good Wife [H]. He was like to die of a Stoppage of Urine in the Year 1537, and in that State he praised his Wife very much (g). In his Will, which he made in 1542, he expressed a great Affection, and took care to provide for her (h). He did not pretend, that she was without Faults, but he believed she was less faulty than others (i). It has been observed, that she took a little too much upon her, and was too imperious (k), but it was an excusable Fault, considering the Glory that attended her Husband. In some things she was too saving, and in others too prodigal: she was sparing in her House-keeping, and too expensive in Building, which is the Character of a Woman that loves to make a shew. After the Death of Luther she maintained herself and her Family decently, with the indifferent Estate of the Deceased, and the Assistance she received from the Elector of Saxony, and the Counts of Mansfeld. At last she went from Wittemberg to Torgau, and died there the twentieth of December 1552 (l). If Erasmus was not mistaken when he said, that she married at Twenty six Years of Age (m), she must have been Fifty three Yars old when she died. Varillas has committed a prodigious Number of Faults in speaking of This Woman [I].

(24) Lutheri, Epiſt. ad Spalatinum apud Seckendorf. pag. 18. n. 3.

(25) Extat hæc epiſtola (quæ in editione Londinenſi eſt 24. lib. iv.) è Græco verſa apud Seckendorf. ubi ſupra, pag. 17. n. 10.

(g) Seckendorf, lib. iii. pag. 205. n. 4.

(h) Id. ibid. p. 651.

(i) See the Remark [H].

(k) Seckendorf, l.b. iii. pag. 651. lit. n. See the Remark [K], Citation (49).

(l) Id. lit. (o).

(m) See the Remark [F], Citation (22).

Mr Mayer

at a time when Germany was almost laid desolate by the War of the Boors; a War which was said to be owing to Lutheranism. No body could account for that precipitation. Luther was then Forty two Years of Age: and till then he had kept a chast Celibacy during the hottest transports of Youth: It cannot be said that the incapacity of containing himself obliged him to conclude his Marriage so suddenly. But granting, as Melanchthon insinuates, that the remiss life which Luther led, delighting too much in company, revived Nature, which the Monastical Retreat had in some measure laid asleep: In a word; Granting that he was necessitated to marry by the Lust of the Flesh; must he therefore pass by all Formalities? Could he not put off his Marriage for some Months, to communicate the matter to his Friends, and to prepare the Public for the News of his Marriage, by some preliminary Addresses? I do not wonder that, for want of good Reasons to explain those difficulties, Luther and others have acknowledged something Divine in that Marriage, θεῖον τι, as in certain Diseases (26). ' Quod autem in re intempestivum & inconsultum inest, (in quo maxime ' delicias obtrectandi & accusandi studium adversariorum facit) videndum, ne nos conturbet. Isto ' enim sub negotio fortasse aliquid occulti, & quiddam ' divinius subest, de quo nos curiose quærere non decet, neque curare nugas deridentium, & convitia ' facientium quorundam, à quibus neque pietas ad ' Deum, neque ad homines virtus exercetur (27). ' ------ But as for the Unseasonableness and want ' of Consideration in the affair (on which Accounts ' chiefly our Adversaries will gratifie their desire ' of railing and slandering) we must take care ' that That do not disturb us. For perhaps there ' is some Secret, or something divine, couched under it, ' concerning which it does not become us to enquire ' too curiously, or to mind the trifling of some, who ' deride and reproach us, who neither exercise Piety ' towards God nor Virtue towards Men.'

(26) See above in the Remark [B], Citation (8).

(27) Melanchth. Epist ad Camerar. apud Seckendorf. pag. 17. n. 10. See also the Remark [B], Citation (8).

[H] ---- But afterwards he would not have changed his Condition for that of Crœsus, his Wife proved so very good.] Here is part of the Letter which he wrote, the eleventh of August 1526, to Michael Stifelius. ' Salutat te Ketha costa mea, ' & gratias agit quod eam literis tuis tam suavibus ' dignatus es. Ipsa belle habet Dei dono, mihique morigera & in omnibus obsequens est, & ' commoda plusquam ausus fuissem sperare (Deo ' gratia), ita ut paupertatem meam nollem cum ' Crœsi divitiis commutare (28). ------ My Rib, ' Kate, salutes you, and thanks you for the Favour ' of your kind Letter. She is very well through ' God's Mercy, and is obedient and complying with ' me in all things, and more agreeable (I thank ' God) than I could have expected, so that I would ' not change my Poverty for the Wealth of Crœsus. He was heard to say that he would not exchange his Wife for the Kingdom of France, nor for the Riches of the Venetians (29), and that for three Reasons. I. Because, she had been given him by God, at the time when he implored the assistance of the Holy Ghost in finding a good Wife. II. Because, though she was not without faults, yet she had fewer than other Women. III. Because she kept the conjugal Fidelity which she owed him. In his Will he gave her a good Character for Probity, Fidelity, and Modesty; he acknowledged that she had loved and served him, and that she had been fruitful, &c (30). He would not have the World to think that she had made a private purse, and he left her at full liberty to marry again (31).

(28) Luther. Epist. pag. 318. apud Seckend. pag. 18. n. 10.

(29) This is related by Bavarus, Tom. I. p. 229. apud Seckendorf. lib. iii. pag. 651. lit. (n).

(30) His last Will is dated the 16th of September 1542. He had then five Children alive.

[I] Mr Varillas has committed a prodigious number of Faults in speaking of this Woman] He says that Catharine de Bore, and eight of her Companions, were taken out of a Nunnery, in a small Town called Timigue, two Leagues from Wittemberg (32). But, I. There never was a Nunnery of that Name, either in the Neighbourhood of Wittemberg, or any where else. II. The Convent which was near Wittemberg, and was called Nimmat, was of Regular Canons of St Augustin, and ought not to be confounded, as it has been by some Authors, with the Convent of Nimptschen. III. The nine Nuns were taken out of Nimptschen on the Mulde, near Grimma, two days Journey from Wittemberg. IV. Leonard Coppe, who took them from thence, was not, as Varillas affirms, Provost of the Scholars at Wittemberg; there is no such Character or Function known in the Universities of Germany: But he was a Counsellor of the City of Torgau, the place of his Nativity. V. It is not true that Catharine de Bore, the handsomest of them all, was from that time designed to be the Wife of Doctor Luther. He thought on nothing less at that time than on Marriage. A Letter, which he wrote about the end of the Year 1524, certifies, that God might alter his Mind, but that whilst his Heart should be disposed, as it always had been, and still was, he should never marry. ' Not but that I feel, says he, my Flesh and my ' Sex, I am neither of Wood nor Stone; but I ' have an aversion for Marriage, because I pre' pare myself for the Punishment wherewith Here' tics are punished (33).' See what has been said before (34) of the Precipitation wherewith he concluded his Marriage with Catharine de Bore, in the Month of June, One thousand five hundred twenty five. VI. Varillas should not have spoken of Luther's Marriage in the Year 1526, but in the foregoing Year. VII. There never was any Abbess of Misnia. VIII. However that Dignity did never belong to Catharine de Bore. Varillas, who gives it her in the Eighty sixth Page, had said in the seventh Page, that she was a meer Nun, and that she fled with eight others on a Good-friday, while the SUPERIORS were extraordinary busy. By Misnia he means either a Town or a Province; if he means a Province, he is guilty of a great absurdity, for he supposes then that there was but one Monastery in a Country where there were Thirty. If he means a Town, he names it wrong; he should have called it Misne * IX. It is false that Catharine de Bore was of an illustrious (31) See Seckendorf lib. iii. pag. 651. lit. (n).

(32) Varillas, Histoire de l'Heresie, liv. vi. p. 6.

(33) Lutherus, Epist. lib. ii. apud Seck. lib. i. p. 314. n. 2.

(34) Citation (6).

* The true name both of the Country and Town is Meissen.

(n) Of whom I have spoken before in Citation (35) of the Article BELLARMIN.

Mr Mayer (n) to whom I muſt make my Acknowledgement here, for the Favour he has done me in declaring publickly that he honours me with his Friendſhip, publiſhed a Diſſertation which will afford me a very curious Supplement [K]. I do illuſtrious Family, and that ſome of her Relations had a great Power in the Court of Saxony. She had a Brother that ſtood in need of Luther's recommendation to the new Elector of Saxony in the Year 1542 (35). Luther begged of the Elector, that he might have an Office inſtead of that which was taken from him; ſo that his Wife's Relations had more need of his Credit, than he of theirs. What protection can one expect from a Family, which is not able to give a Daughter a Portion? This was the condition of our Nun's Father, according to the account of the Author we criticiſe (36). X. The frequent viſits, which Varillas ſays Luther made to Catharine in the Nunnery of Miſnia (37), are meer Chimeras. Doubtleſs by Miſnia he means the Town of Miſnia. Grant him for once this Falſity, viz. That Catherine was Abbeſs of Miſne, yet he ſuppoſed very falſly, that Luther made many Viſits to that Abbeſs; for ſince the Town of Miſne belonged partly to the Biſhop, and partly to George Duke of Saxony, a great Enemy of the Reformation, Luther would have run very great dangers in Miſne. I add, that if the Abbeſs had received his Viſits ſo eaſily, there had been no need of any addreſs to carry away Catharine de Bore, while the Superiors could not look after her. Thus we find many Contradictions between Page 7, and Page 86, of Varillas. Laſtly, Thoſe frequent Viſits are ſtrongly refuted by the two days Journey which is between Catharine de Bore's Convent, and the City of Wittemberg. XI. It appears by the firſt Letters of Luther which have been publiſhed, that he had ſome Thoughts of marrying from the time that he ſeparated from the Communion of the Church. Varillas affirms this, but it is a ſign that he never looked into thoſe Letters. We plainly find there, that Luther thought on nothing leſs than Marriage during the firſt years of his Reformation, and that he reſolved on it all on a ſudden in the Year 1525. Have I not ſhewed that he would have married his Catharine to another Man? XII. The firſt meaſures he took with John Frederic, Brother and Succeſſor to the deceaſed Elector (38), were, that he ſhould permit him to marry the Abbeſs. A new miſtake of Varillas. John Frederic was not Brother of the deceaſed Elector, nor did he ſucceed him. He that ſucceeded him was called John, and was his Brother: He was the Father of John Frederic, who did not come to the Electorate before the Year 1532. It does not appear that Luther communicated his Marriage to the Elector John, who was taken up with the War of the Boors; I ſay it does not appear that he did communicate it to him before he concluded it. XIII. Laſtly, That Wedding was not ſo magnificent, that it did not differ in any thing from thoſe of the moſt eminent Perſons of the Empire (39). Who could imagine that ſuch a famous Hiſtorian ſhould heap up ſo many faults in ſo few Words? A Man would hardly be able to do it, if he were hired for the Purpoſe.

[K] Mr Mayer - - - - - - has wrote a Diſſertation which will afford me a very curious Supplement.] It is a Book of Seventy two Pages in Quarto, intituled, De Catharina Lutheri conjuge diſſertatio, printed at Hamburg in the Year 1698. The Author has omitted nothing that can be of uſe towards a full knowledge of the Hiſtory of Catharine de Bore, and he gives a curious and exact account of the Children ſhe brought to Luther. He brings always good proof for what he ſays, whereby the Falſities of Cochleus, Maimbourg, Varillas, and many other Writers, are ſolidly refuted. He ſhews, that the Example of the eight Nuns, who went with her out of the Convent of Nimptſchen (40), was ſoon after followed by Sixteen Nuns of the Convent of Widerſtetten in the County of Mansfield, and that this was the fruit of the good and ſound Doctrine, which Luther had taught, concerning the Laudableneſs of Marriage, and the Iniquity of Monaſtic Vows (41); that in all this, there was no force uſed to carry them away; for that theſe young Women were well perſuaded that they might return into the World, and were willing to do it (42); that Maimbourg was in the wrong to pretend that Luther durſt not marry Catharine, ſo long as the Elector Frederic was living; for why ſhould That Prince have condemned Luther's Marriage, after having permitted Feltkirchius, Carolſtad, and ſome other Miniſters, to marry (43)? and that ſome have ſpoken hyperbolically of Catharine's Beauty: Luther fell in Love with a very beautiful Nun of Quality, whom he had taken out of her Convent. Theſe are the Words of the Biſhop of Meaux, cited by Mr Mayer (44); and, to make it appear that they are over-ſtrained, he gives a Print of that Woman, drawn by his order from three Pictures compared together, which were done in Catharine's Life time, by Luke Cranachius, an excellent Painter (45), and one of the Gueſts at Martin Luther's Wedding-feaſt (46), that is, at the Entertainment which was given without noiſe on his Wedding-day; for, ſome Weeks after, a more ſolemn and pompous Feaſt was made, to the Charges of which the Senate of Wittemberg contributed ſomething. Senatus Wittebergenſis nonnulla ex publico aerario ſuppeditavit, ut videre eſt in Conſiliis Witebergenſibus parte IV. p. 9. Mr Mayer refers us to the Twenty ſecond Page of the fourth Part of the Conſilia Witebergenſia, and to the ſixth Chapter of the Defenſio Lutheri defenſi of Jul. Molerus againſt Charles de Creuſius, a Jeſuit of Pruſſia. I ſay, he refers us thither, to ſee the Refutation of the Calumny which had been ſpread, and the excuſes for Luther's marrying without publiſhing the Banns in a Church. His Enemies gave out that he had made ſo much haſte to marry, becauſe Catharine found herſelf with Child (47). This was falſe (48). There are alſo in Mr Mayer's Diſſertation many proofs of the Love and Eſteem which Luther had for his Wife. They are taken out of his Letters, and we are forewarned to give more credit to them than to a Letter of Pontanus, written to the Elector of Saxony after the Death of Luther. This Pontanus accuſed Catharine de Bore of Pride, and of having ſpent a great deal of Money in Building, and chiefly upon a Farm which was aſſigned her for her Dowry. Huic itaque (Luthero) potius teſti credamus quam Pontano apud Seckendorfium, lib. iii. p. 651. qui in literis poſt mortem Lutheri ad Electorem Sax. ſcriptis arguit eum animo fuiſſe elatiore & imperioſo, tenacemque in victu domeſtico, etſi ſumtuoſam in ædificia, imprimis in prædium Zeuſſdorf, quod ei in teſtamento dotalitii nomine Lutherus aſſignavit (49). Some pretend that Luther ſubmitted to the government of his Wife, and cite the Letters wherein he called her his Lord. Mr Mayer owns he has ſeen ſuch Letters, but he maintains, that it was but a jeſt (50), and that Luther, who had given his Wife full Authority over Houſhold Affairs, always reſerved the Rights of a Husband to himſelf. 'Tu mihi 'perſuades quicquid vis, totum habes Dominium. 'In œconomia quidem tibi concedo dominium ſalvo jure meo. Mulierum enim Dominium nihil 'boni unquam effecit (51). — You perſuade me to 'what you pleaſe, you have all the Dominion. I 'grant you the Dominion in the management of your 'Houſe, ſaving my own right; for the Dominion of 'Women never did any good.' He has the Original of a Letter, wherein Luther exclaimed againſt the weakneſs of thoſe Husbands, who ſuffer themſelves to be maſtered by their Wives, and encouraged one of them to curb the Inſolence of his Wife (52). The following fact ſhews our Catharine's Conjugal Affection. Luther intending to make an Expoſition of the Twenty ſecond Pfalm, took ſome Bread and Salt, and ſhut himſelf up in his Cloſet, and continued there three Days. His Wife looked for him every where, and was in the utmoſt concern; ſhe knocked at the Door, ſhe called him, and being at laſt no longer able to reſiſt her Grief, ſhe cauſed the Door to be broken open, and found him Meditating. He was vexed that his Meditations on a Subject ſo ſacred, and of ſo great concern, ſhould be interrupted; but at laſt, he could not find fault with his Wife's Care and Uneaſineſs (53). She gave a remarkable

(35) See Seckendorf lib. iii. p. 381 n. 22.

(36) Varillas, Hiſt. de l'Herel. v. vii. pag. 86.

(37) Id. ibid. pag. 87.

(38) His Name was Frederic.

(39) Moſt of theſe Animadverſions upon Varillas, are taken from Mr de Seckendorf, Hiſt. Lutheran. lib. i. pag. 273, 274.

(40) Nimtſchenſe Ciſtercienſium Monaſterium. Mayer Diſſert. de Luther. Conjug. pag. 11.

(41) Id. ibid. pag. 14.

(42) Id. ibid.

(43) Ib. pag. 19.

(44) Mayer, ubi ſupra, pag. 21. He quotes, Hiſtoire des Variations, Tom. I. pag. 49.

(45) Ib. pag. 22.

(46) Ib. pag. 24.

(47) See Lindanus de voto virginitatis, pag. 23.

(48) See the Remark [f].

(49) Mayer, p. 55.

(50) Quis non videt, genii præſertim bexti virl non ignaros, hoc innoxio joco ab illo factum? - - Who does not ſee, eſpecially if he knows any thing of the Genius of this bleſſed Man, that it was done only as an innocent Joke? Ib. p. 56.

(51) Luther apud Mayer, page 57.

(52) It may be ſeen in Mr Mayer's Book, page 57, 58.

(53) Id. pag. 59. He quotes Reinhard. Bakius ad Pſal. xxii.

I do not think that any body will blame me for publishing, in this Place of my Dictionary, a Letter which has never been made public, written by Erasmus, before he was undeceived about the false Report that was spread, concerning Catharine de Bore's being brought to bed a little while after her Marriage [L].

a remarkable Instance both of her Affection and Constancy in a Sickness which he had in the Year 1527, which was so great and dangerous, that he made his Will, and took his leave of his Wife and his Son (54). Our Catharine continued the first Year of her Widowhood at Wittemberg, tho' her Husband had advised her to go elsewhere. Mr Mayer justifies her in that disobedience (55). She went from Wittemberg in the Year 1547, when the Town was furrendred to Charles V. Before her departure, she had received a Present of Fifty Crowns from Christian III, King of Denmark; and, as the Elector of Saxony and the Counts of Mansfelt gave her good Tokens of their Liberality, with the Addition of these helps, to what Luther had left her, she had wherewithal to maintain herself and her Family handsomely. She returned to Wittemberg, when the Town was restored to the Elector, where she lived piously, till the Plague made her resolve to leave it in the Year 1552. She sold what she had there, and retired to Torgau, with a Resolution to end her Life there. An unfortunate Accident happened to her in her Journey: The Horses growing unruly, she leaped out of the Waggon, and got a Fall, which hurt her very much, so that she died soon after (56) at Torgau, the Twentieth of December 1552. She was buried there in the great Church, where her Tomb and Epitaph are still to be seen. The University of Wittemberg, which was then at Torgau (57), made a public Programma concerning the Funeral Pomp (58). It may be seen at length in Mr Mayer's Book; it was printed in the Year 1553, in Intimationibus Witembergensibus (59). I had read it in the Four hundred and forty first, and Four hundred and forty second, Leaf of a Book printed at Wittemberg in the Year 1560 in 8vo, and intituled, Scriptorum publice propositorum à professoribus in Academia Witebergensi, ab anno 1540, usque ad annum 1553. Tomus primus.

(54) Id. pag. 59 & seq.

(55) Ibid. p. 66.

(56) A quarter of a Year after, and some few Days more. See the Funeral Programma.

(57) Because the Plague raged at Wittemberg.

(58) Mayer, ib. pag. 66. & seq.

(59) Id. pag. 69.

[L] I shall insert a Letter written by Erasmus, before he was undeceived about the false Report of Catharine de Bore's lying-in soon after her Marriage.] It was written to an Illustrious Person, to wit, Nicolas Everard, President of the High Council of Holland at the Hague. I have seen the Original, which is very well preserved: Erasmus's Seal, with the Deus Terminus and the nulli cedo, remain still intire. Mr de Wilhem, Counsellor in the Court of Brabant (60), has been so kind as to shew me that original Letter, and to give me a Copy of it, which I have compared with the Original. I think, the Readers will not be displeased to find it printed in this place of my Dictionary, since it was never made public.

(60) I speak of him at large in the Remark [F], of the Article WILHEM.

' S. P. Ornatissime Præses. Solent Comici tumultus ferè in matrimonium exire, atque hinc subita rerum omnium tranquillitas. Verum hanc catastrophen plerumque nunc habent Principum Tragediæ, non admodum lætam populo, sed tamen bellis potiorem. Malebat ille compilari quam venire. ' Simulem exitum habitura videtur Lutherana Tragœdia. Duxit uxorem monachus monacham; & ut scias nuptias prosperis auibus initas, diebus à decantato hymeneo ferme quatuordecim enixa est nova nupta. Lutherus nunc mitior esse incipit, nec perinde sævit calamo. Nihil est tam serum quod non cicuret uxor. Ego sedulo hortor utramque partem, ut æquis conditionibus jungant fœdus, & insana prælia dirimant. Vis scire quantum proficiamus? Quantum solent, ij, qui inter duos armatos ira vinoque furentes intercedunt dirempturi, & utrimque vulnerantur. Opinor te legisse Apologiam meam adversus Sutorem. Quis credidisset tam stupidum animal latere inter Theologos & Cartusianos? Et tamen hoc portentum habet Theologos applaudentes. Si venduntur isthic (61) desultorii libri Jodoci Clithovei, quæso ut legas in Antiluthero 3. libri cap. primum, num. 3. nam Beda literis indicavit eum locum ad me pertinere; quod si verum, quis non intelligit in illo pediculoso capite nullam esse micam sanæ mentis? Et tamen hujusmodi nebulones Luterus armavit in nos: Nullum video finem nisi si quis ' Deus à machina, quod aiunt, apparens fabulam explicet. Luterana factio nunquam sustulit majores spiritus. Et altera pars adeo nihil remittit, ut indies astringat priora vincula. Habent novum dogma, sed simpliciter insanum; totos hos tumultus exortos ex Linguis & bonis litteris. Hoc jam Principibus aliquot persuaserunt. Quoniam te videre aliter non licet, per literas saluto. Dorpium amisimus ante diem. Hic longe supra centum millia rusticorum interfecta sunt, & quotidie sacerdotes capiuntur, torquentur, suspenduntur, decollantur, exuruntur. Non nego necessarium remedium, quamvis immite, sed Germani magis novimus malefacta punire quam excludere.

(61) It is desultorii in the Copy: Mr de Wilhem told me, that none of those, who helped to read the Original, have been able to find out the meaning of that Word. I guess at a venture, that it ought to be read, desultoril.

' Tibi, uxori tuæ, tuisque liberis precor omnia ' læta.

' Qui has reddet est Franciscus Dilft, quondam convictor meus; juvenis honesto loco natus, moribus mirè civilibus. Quem cupio ut digneris cognoscere.

' Datum Bas. pridie Natal. Domini, an. 1525.

ERASMUS ROT. verè tuus.

Ex tempore manu propria.

Non vacabat relegere, ignosce.

' Most Honourable President, Greeting. The broils in Comedies generally ended in Matrimony, and that made all quiet at once. But now-a-days the Tragedies of Princes have commonly the same Catastrophe, not very pleasing to the People, but yet better than War. They had rather be stripped than sold. Luther's Tragedy is likely to have the same end. The Monk has married a Nun: and to shew that the Wedding was in a lucky Hour, the Bride was brought to bed in fourteen Days after the Solemnization. Luther begins now to be a little quieter, and is not so busy with his Pen. There is nothing too savage for a Wife to tame. I earnestly exhort both Parties to make Peace on fair Terms, and put an end to this destructive War. Would you know my Success, it is just the same with theirs, who interpose to part armed Men in a drunken quarrel, and get wounded on both Sides. I suppose you have read my Apology against Sutor. Who would have thought, there had been so stupid an Animal among the Divines, and Carthusians too? and yet this Monster has Divines that applaud him. If the desultory books of Jodocus Clithoveus are to be had with you, I beg you would read the Antiluther, lib. iii. cap. i. num. iii. For Beda informs me, in his Letter, that That Passage relates to me: which if it do, it is plain to all the World, that there is not a grain of sound Sense in all that lousy Chapter: and yet such wretches as this has Luther armed against me. I see no end, unless some GOD appears to unravel the Plot. The Lutheran Faction never had more Courage than now, and the other Party are so far from abating any thing, that they are daily straitening their former bands. They have got a new notion, but a silly senseless one, that all these Tumults, are owing to Language and good Literature. They have already persuaded some Princes into their Opinion. Not having opportunity to see you, I salute you by Letter. We have lost Dorpius a Day or two ago. Above a Hundred thousand of the Boors have been killed here, and every Day some Priest or other is taken, and tortured, hanged, beheaded, or burnt. I do not deny the remedy to be necessary, tho' inhuman, but we Germans know better how to punish Crimes than to prevent them.

' I wish all happiness to yourself, your Spouse and ' Children.

' The Bearer hereof is one Francis Dilft, formerly my Boarder, a young Man well born, and of very Gentleman-like Behaviour. I beg you would be pleased to admit him to your acquaintance.'

Dated at Basil 24th of December 1525.

Yours sincerely.

ERASMUS ROTT.

Extempore, with my own hand. I had not time to read it over, excuse Faults.

(a) That which blows from the North.

(b) Pindar. Od. iv. Pythior.

(c) Balzac. Entret. v. cap ii. pag. 80.

BOREAS, one of the four Cardinal Winds (a), and one of the Deities of the Heathens, was the Son of Astræus and Aurora [A], and had his Seat in Thrace [B]. Pindar calls him the King of Winds (b). 'I think, I have read somewhere that 'he had the Privileges of a Citizen given him in a City of Greece. I have read 'also, that they built Temples, and ordered Sacrifices to be made to him in 'another City; once, for having sunk a Fleet of the Enemies; and another time, 'for having blown the Dust into the Eyes of a Land Army of the same Enemies. 'If I am not mistaken, he was by a public Decree solemnly called the Son-in-law 'of the Athenians, because of his Wife Orithya, who was an Athenian (c).' The Author from whom I borrow these Words, (whose Originals I shall also shew) [C] makes [A] Was the Son of Astræus and Aurora.] Natalis Comes confesses, he never read that the Inventors of Fables had said who Boreas's Father and Mother were, Boreas à quibus parentibus ortus sit fabularum inventores non tradiderunt, quod ego legerim (1); and yet he had quoted Hesiod, who says, that the God Astræus, having lain with the Goddess Aurora, begat the four Winds (2). Here are the three Verses that he quotes:

(1) Natal. Comes, Mythol. lib. vii. cap. xi. pag. 861.

(2) Id. ib. d. lib. vi. cap. ii. pag. 551.

Ἀστραίῳ δ' Ἠὼς ἀνέμους τέκε καρτερο θύμους,
Ἀργέστην, Ζέφυρον, Βορέην τ' αἰθρηγενέα θεόν,
Καὶ Νότον, ἐν φιλότητι θεῷ θεὰ εὐνηθεῖσα.

Astræo vero Aurora ventos peperit magnanimos,
Argestem, Zephyrum, Boreamque rapidum,
Et Notum, in amore cum deo dea congressa (3).

(3) Hesiodus in Deor. Generat. ver. 378. p. 166.

Aurora, by Astræus' close Embrace,
Impregnate, bore the Winds magnanimous,
Eurus, with rapid Boreas, Auster moist,
And gentle Zephyr.

I must here take notice of a Fault of Mr Hofman. He says, that the Wind Boreas was the Son of Astræus according to some, or of Strymon according to others. He ought not to have expressed himself so; he ought to have said, that some Persons have maintained, that the Ravisher of Orithya was not the Wind Boreas, but the Son of Strymon. Ἡσαγόρας δὲ ἐν τοῖς Μεγαρικοῖς τὸν τὴν Ὠρείθυιαν ἁρπάσαντα Βορέαν υἱὸν Στρυμόνος φησὶν ἀλλὰ δὲ τὸν ἄνεμον (4). Hesagoras, in the Megarica, says that Boreas, the Ravisher of Orythia, was the Son of Strymon, and not the Wind.

(4) Schol. Apollonii in lib. i. ver. 211.

[B] And had his Seat in Thrace.] A great many Authors have said this, and you will find many Authorities for it in Lloyd's Dictionary (5), and in the learned Commentary of Mr Spanheim on Callimachus (6). The Origin of that Hypothesis, is, that the Poets, who have spoken of that Wind, lived in a Country which had Thrace on the North. I speak of the Greek Poets. The Latin Poets, who imitate the Greek Phrases and Epithetes, have placed the Wind Boreas in the same Country, tho' they had not the same reason for it. Read these Words of Mr Dacier; they are taken out of his Note on the Thracio Bacchante magis sub interlunia vento (7). 'Horace speaks after the manner of the Greeks, who 'call Boreas or Aquilo, Thracian, because it came 'to them from Thrace.' I believe, it had been well to have commented in the same manner on this place of the same Poet, Nunc mare, nunc silvæ Threïcio Aquilone sonant (8), without pretending that 'Boreas or Aquile, that is to say, the North North-'East, was truly a Thracian Wind for the Romans, 'as well as for the Greeks; because Thrace extended 'very far (9).' I cannot believe, that Horace had in view, either the large extent of that Country, or the Subdivision of the Winds. He intended only to imitate the Greek Epithet of the North Wind; and the same Criticism might be made upon him here, as on this Passage of the Twelfth Ode of the fourth Book: Jam veris comites, quæ mare temperant, impellunt animæ lintea Thraciæ (10). I think, I ought not to omit this Passage of Balzac, because it is Critical: 'This Aquilo, of Thracian Origin, 'makes Excursions, and Travels over all the 'World; but if we may believe our African, who 'speaks Stones and Iron, his Stile is so rough and 'harsh, he makes his particular abode in the Euxine 'Sea. How many Leagues from Thrace? I shall 'inquire about it presently in the Map. Well, A-'quilo shall inhabit the Euxine Sea, for this time, 'Ubi dies nusquam patens, sol nunquam liber, unus 'aër, nebula totus annus, hibernum, omne quod fla-'verit Aquilo est. —— Where the Day is no where 'clear, the Sun never free, the Air unvaried, Fogs 'all the Year, always Winter, all that blows is the 'North Wind. But, by the by, I desire you to 'observe, whether there is not a kind of contradi-'ction in these Words, Nebula and Aquilo; for in 'my opinion, they cannot well agree together (11).'

(5) At the Word Boreas.

(6) Ezech. Spanhem us in Callimachum, pag. 213, 214, 344, 366.

(7) Horat. Od. xxv. lib. i.

(8) Id. Od. xiii. Epod.

(9) Dacier upon Horace, Tom. v. pag. 260, 261, of the Dutch Edition.

(10) See Tanaquillus Faber's 24th Epistle of the 2d Book.

(11) Balzac, Entretiens. cap. ii. pag. 81.

[C] I borrow these words from Balzac; I will shew his Originals.] There are some Books in which it is allowable, and even commendable, not to name the Authors from whom a Writer takes what he alledges. This suits a vain Man extremely well; for these general Terms, I have read somewhere, a certain Author relates, &c. give an advantageous Idea of an Author. The Reader thinks, he that speaks so, would not do it, if the Book he mentions, without naming the Author, was known to other learned Men. It is therefore believed, that he found that Treasure in a very rare Manuscript. In a Word, if Balzac had said, I have read in Pausanias, or in Herodotus, he would not have made so good a figure with his Readers. As for me, I endeavour chiefly to satisfy the Curiosity of my Readers, and therefore I always name the Authors from whom I take what I relate; nay, I endeavour to discover from whence the Moderns have taken what they alledge. I have succeeded in it, as to this Passage of Balzac's Entretiens (12).

(12) That which I have set down in the Text of this Article. See above, Citat. (c).

I. Ælian observes, that the Inhabitants of Thurium, having been delivered from a great danger by a Storm which destroyed their Enemy's Fleet (13), offered Sacrifices to the Wind Boreas, who had caused that Shipwrack, and conferred on him the Freedom of their City. They provided him a House, and a settled Revenue, and celebrated every Year a Day of Worship in Honour of him (14).

(13) It was Dionysius the Tyrant.

(14) Ælian. diversf. Histor. lib. xii. cap. lxii.

II. The Megalopolitans consecrated a Temple to him, where they offered Sacrifices on a certain Day of the Year, and honoured no Deity more than him. It was in acknowledgment of a great Assistance, which they received from him, when Agis King of Lacedæmon besieged their City. The Besiegers Engine battered the Wall so furiously, that doubtless the Breach would have been very great the next Day; but there came a North Wind which overset the Engine. This is what Pausanias says (15).

(15) Pausan. lib. viii. pag. 259, 266.

III. Herodotus informs us, That an Oracle having ordered the Athenians to call their Son-in-law to their Assistance, they invoked Boreas; for as he was married to Orithya the Daughter of Erechtheus their King, they took him for their Son-in-law. Wherefore, when Xerxes's Fleet was come to the Coasts of Magnesia, they implored the assistance of that Wind, and his Spouse, with Victims and Prayers; and being persuaded that the Storm which scattered that Fleet, was the effect of that Worship; they caused a Temple to be built to Boreas on the Banks of the Ilissus (16). They believed, that the same Deities had already destroyed the Persian Fleet near Mount Athos (17). I have not as yet been able to find The Author, who speaks of the great Service which this Wind did the Greeks in throwing dust into the Eyes of an Army of Persians. I have read indeed in Xenophon, that the Greeks, who repassed the Euphrates after the Defeat of young Cyrus, endured a great deal of cold because the Wind Boreas was full in their Faces; but that it was laid as soon as they had offered Sacrifices to it by the Advice of a Soothsayer (18). Note, that Apollonius represented to the Athenians that Boreas was their near Relation (19). Balzac might have added that (16) A River of Athens.

(17) Herodot. lib. vii. c. 189.

(18) Xenophon. de Cyri expedit. lib. ii. pag. 143.

(19) Philostrat. in Vita Apollonii, lib. iv. pag. 167.

makes a Remark on Orithya's not complaining of the Coldneſs of ſuch a Huſband [D]: but that Remark is more pleaſant than ſolid; for Boreas, how cold ſo ever he is repreſented, was very warm in his Love [E]. He had ſeveral Children, and the Athenians ſwore by the Deity of Boreas, and that his Feſtival was celebrated by them with great Solemnity, and rich Banquets (20). Caſaubon is going to tell us this in his Commentary on theſe Words of Matron, τῶν καὶ βορέης ἠράσσατο πεπτομενάων, quarum dum coquerentur, five recens coactarum vel Boreas poterat affici deſiderio (21). —— Which while they were baking, or new baked, even Boreas might long for (21). 'Senſus autem eſt, adeò 'bonos panes illos aut placentas fuiſſe: ut etiam Bo'realia celebrantibus apponi potuerint. Moris fuit 'Athenis Boreæ ſacra facere, demerendi illius gra'tia. Magna ſolennitate is dies celebrabatur, atque 'in primis lautis opiariſque epulis. Βορεάζειν hoc 'dicebant & Βορεασμὸς ſuperſtitionis hujus ritum. 'Heſychius Βορεασμοί, Ἀθήνησιν οἱ ἀγοντες τῷ Βορέᾳ ἑορτὰς καὶ γοίνας ἵνα ἄνεμοι (malim ἀνεσοι) πνέωσιν. ἐκαλοῦντο δὲ βορεασμοί. Videtur dicere thiaſotas horum ſacrorum fuiſſe apellatos Βορεασμούς. Ego arbitror Βορεασμον id eſſe 'quod jam diximus: at qui ſuperſtitionis hujus ſacra 'concelebrarent, eos eſſe dictos Βορεαδὰς, ut εἰναδίσιδς, τετραδίσιδς, & ſimileis (22). —— The 'meaning is, that thoſe Loaves or Cakes were ſogood 'that they might be ſerved at the Feſtival of* Boreas. 'It was a Cuſtom, among the* Athenians, to ſacrifice 'to Boreas, in order to appeaſe him. That Day was 'celebrated with great Solemnity, eſpecially with ele'gant and dainty Feaſts. This they called Βορεάζειν, 'and the Ceremony of this ſuperſtition Βορεασμὸς. 'Heſychius ſays. Βορεασμοὶ at* Athens were thoſe 'who celebrated Feſtivals and Games to Boreas, for 'the preſervation of their breath: they were called Βορεασμοι. ------ He ſeems to ſay that the Aſ'ſiſtants at theſe Feſtivals were called Βορεασμοὶ. I 'am of opinion that Βορεασμὸς is what I have ſaid, 'that the Aſſiſtants at the Ceremony were called Βορεασδὰι, as εἰναδίσιδς, τετραδίσιδς and the 'like.' Caſtellan does not mention that Feſtival (23); but Fazoldus has taken notice of it (24). To conclude, I ſhall obſerve that mention is made of the Altar of the God Boreas, in a Dialogue of Plato (25); it is alſo ſaid there, that it was built where it was thought Orithya had been ſtolen away. We ſhall make a Reflexion hereafter (26) on this folly of the Athenians.

(20) Libanus Declam. 20.

(21) Matron apud Athenæum lib iv. cap. v. pag. 134.

(22) Caſaub. in Athen. lib. iv. cap. v. p. 254.

(23) In tractatu de feſtis Græcorum.

(24) Fazoldus in Icrologia p. 124.

(25) Plato in Phædro circa init. pag. 1211.

(26) In the Remark [G].

(27) Balzac. Entret. 5 cap. ii. pag. 80, 81.

[D] Orithya's not complaining of the Coldneſs of ſuch a Husband.] After the Words I have inſerted in the body of this Article, Balzac continues in this manner: 'Whereupon a Signor Dottore, who has 'been ſome Months in my Houſe, to whom I have 'communicated ſome of your Obſervations, deſires 'you to conſider, that the Women of thoſe Times 'were more modeſt, and more patient, than thoſe 'of our Time, and that if an Orithya of theſe 'Times had married a Husband as cold as the North 'Wind, ſhe would have accuſed him of Impotency 'the Day after her Wedding, and petitioned for a 'Divorce. However the Athenian Lady did not 'complain to the Areopagites, nor employ an Ad'vocate to plead the Law de Frigidis, nor live ill 'with Boreas, or otherwiſe with Aquilo (27).'

[B] Boreas was very warm in his Love.] Balzac may be allowed to joke on the Impatiency of modern Women; but he ought not to take the liberty to ſtrengthen his obſervations with the praiſes of Orithya's Patience; for that Lady had no occaſion to exerciſe that quality. None, not Jupiter himſelf, ſurpaſſed the Wind Boreas in warmth of Conſtitution. Poor Europa, who was carried away by force, had no ſooner called upon him for his aſſiſtance, but ſhe retracted her Prayers: ſhe conſidered that the one was as good as the other, and that ſhe ſhould get nothing by the change. Thus ſhe complains, 'in the midſt of the Waves, on the back of her 'Lover, as Nonnus relates it in the firſt of his Dio'nyſiaca: O undæ, ô littora, mutæ undæ, ſurdaque littora, meas audite preces, meque huic ſubtrahite Tauro. Tuque, Borea, pennis me ſubleva tuis. At verò miſera, quem appellas, cujus imploras auxilium, ad quem confugis? nempe ad eum qui Nympham Orithyam rapuit, qui ſic effuſus eſt in venerem, ut magis nemo. —— O 'Waves, O Shores, dumb Waves, deaf Shores, bear 'my Prayers, and deliver me from this Bull. And 'thou* Boreas, take me up on thy Wings. But poor 'Wretch whom do you call? Whoſe Aid do you ask? 'To whom do you fly? Even to him who raviſhed the 'Nymph Orithya, who is ſo prone to Venery, as none 'more. And certainly what Homer ſays, in the twentieth Book of his Iliad (28), confirms theſe laſt Words of Europa: Erant Erichthonio Regi Dardaniæ Equæ ter mille, quæ circa paludes paſcebantur. Eas ut vidit Boreas, ut perſit, ut malus eum abſtulit amor. Equi ſpeciem induit, ſalitque feminas, & ex eis ſuſcepit pullos duodecim, currere ſic pernices, ut ſummas ariſtas non læderent (29).' But obſerve, that this Tranſlation is not literal. However it is true that Homer ſays, that Boreas fell in Love with Erichthonius's Mares, and that, having aſſumed the ſhape of a Horſe, he covered them (that is ſome of them) and had twelve Colts by them. Caſaubon ſhould not have ſaid, that thoſe Mares did belong to Dardanus (30). Mr Hoffman has committed the ſame error. It has been ſaid expreſsly and particularly, that Orithya was very well ſatisfied with her Raviſher, and did not find him cruel; Crudelem & Boream rapta Orithya negavit (31). Be the Husband ſhe was married to as cold as you pleaſe, ſhe was ſoon brought to bed of Twins:

(28) Verſe 221.

(29) Notes ſur l'Ariſtée de Virgile, pag. 106. Edit. Lyons. 1668.

(30) Caſaubon in Athen. pag. 254.

(31) Propert. Eleg. xxvi. lib. ii.

Dum volat, arſerunt agitati fortius ignes,
Nec prius aërii curſus ſuppreſſit habenas
Quam Ciconum tenuit populos & mœnia raptor.
Illic & gelidi conjux Actæa tyranni
Et genitrix facta eſt, partuque enixa gemellos (32).

(32) Ovid. Metamor. lib. vi. ver. 709.

He flew, his Fires increaſing in his Flight;
Nor check'd his Chariot in it's airy Height,
Till now the Raviſher had reach'd the Walls
Of the cold Cicones, where Hebrus falls.
And there in time the bright Athenian Dame
The Mother of a double birth became:

His Fire increaſed by the ſwiftneſs of his flight; and therefore it is very likely that he was not long in his Paſſage; ſo that Ovid does not repreſent him too patient, when he ſuppoſes that the Marriage was not conſummated before they came to the Town where the Raviſher made his abode. But others aſſert that he did not tarry ſo long before he ſatisfied his Love. They pretend that as he flew over the Sea he ſpied a Plain covered with Flowers, which ſeemed fit to ſerve him for a Nuptial Bed, and that he made uſe of it for that purpoſe. Read what follows.

Hîc miſere rorem infeſtat crudelis, & aſper.
At prædo, & facilis, & rapta conjuge mitis.
Namque per aërias Ponti dum præterit oras
Vota ferens, vidit procul in convalle remota
Planitiem viridi late floreſcere campo.
Admonuit locus optatæ cum conjuge noctis.
Deſilit, ac molli lacrymantem amplexus in herba,
Expliciteque ſinus, munuſque implevit amantis.
Illa gravis oculos ab humo vix anxia tollens
Flebat, eam inſolito conjux ſolatur honore
His ego pro lacrymis florum, gratuſque memorque, Nocturnos ſpargam rores, ea præmia ſunto.
Debeat hoc raptæ pontus memor Orithyiæ.
Subrifit, tenerumque genis ſuffudit honorem,
Læta viri dictis, & tanto munere conjux.
Ille novam ſenſit labi per pectora flammam,
Optatos repetens ſomnos, mollique quiete
Leniit accenſum complexu conjugis ignem.
Scilicet & Boreas calido contrarius Auſtro, &c (33).

(33) Joviānus Pontanus in Meteoris cap. de pruina & rore, fol. 113. verſo.

------- This cruel wind and ſharp,
Is dreadful enemy to gentle Dews, and among others Zetes and Calais, whose History I shall give [F]. The Megalopolitans honoured him as their chief Deity (d). I speak of it in the Remarks, and likewise (d) See the Remark [C], n. II.

But when, a Raviſher, h' had ſtol'n a Wife
Gentle and mild. - - - - - For as his airy Courſe, Bearing his prize, o'er Pontus he purſu'd,
By chance he ſpy'd, in a retired vale,
A verdant Plain; the place ſo opportune
Preſenting to th' Enjoyment wiſh'd invites;
Quick he alights, and on the tender Graſs
Places the weeping Fair, unfold, her Charms,
And there performs the ardent Lover's part:
She anxious weeps, ſcarce lifting from the Ground
Her drooping Eyes; mean while the Husband ſtrives,
With promis'd Honours, to allay her Grief;
Theſe Flowers my Gratitude ſhall ever ſhore;
Then for theſe Tears I'll e'er with nightly Dews
Reward, and Pontus ever thankful ſhall
This benefit to raviſh'd Orithya owe.
Pleas'd with the Speech, and with a Boon ſo great,
The fair one ſmil'd, and ſtraight a modeſt Bluſh
O'erſpread her Cheeks; he felt new Flames ariſe
Within his Breaſt, and ſatiate now he ſeeks
Needful Repoſe, and, in a gentle Sleep,
Compos'd the Tumults of his amorous Thoughts.

Apollonius pretends that the Raviſher enjoyed Orithya on the Bank of a River in Thrace (34), and that he covered her with a Cloud (35). You muſt not think that the Poets have offended againſt Probability, in repreſenting the ſame God both very amorous and covered with Ice.

(34) Called Erginc.

(35) Apollon. Argon. lib. i. ver. 216.

(36) Ovid. Triſt. Eleg. ii. lib. i. ver. 29.

Nunc gelidus ſiccâ Boreas bacchatur ab Arcto (36).

—— and now
Comes frozen Boreas raging from the North.

(37) Silius Ital. lib. i.

Thracius hos Boreas ſcopulos immitia regna
Solus habet, ſemperque rigens nunc littora. ——
Atque ubi ſe terris glaciali fundit ab Arcto (37).

Now Thracian Boreas ever frozen rules
Theſe Rocks, inhoſpitable Realms; The Shores ——
When from the icy North he ſallying out
Spreads o'er the Earth. ——

(38) Claudian. de raptu Proſerp. lib. i. ver. 70.

Cum gravis armatur Boreas, glacieque minaci
Hiſpidus, & Getica concretus grandine pennas (38).

When dreadful Boreas arms, all ſhagged o'er
With horrid Ice, his Plumes congealed with Hail.

(39) In the Remark [I], of the Article ERMITE. No. VI.

Does not Hiſtory tell us, that Love reigns in the moſt icy Climates? In this reſpect all the Zones of the Earth are torrid, as I have ſaid elſewhere (39). Why ſhould not Boreas be in Love, ſeeing Neptune in the midſt of all his Waves, and Pluto in the abode of the Manes, have been likewiſe in Love? Why ſhould not he feel the effects of that Paſſion, ſeeing Polyphemus was ſtruck with it in his Cave?

Omnia vincit Amor.

Love conquers all; nothing can reſiſt him. He ſports no leſs with Lions than with Sparrows, and triumphs in the Euxine Sea as well as in France. Propertius has expreſſed it in few words.

Hic Deus & terras, & maria alta domat.

This God commands both Earth and Sea.

(40) Note[a] for l'Ariſtée de Virgile, pag. 97.

(41) Id. ibid. pag. 110, 111.

And Guarini in the firſt Scene of the firſt Act of his Paſtor Fido (40). The Author whom I quote relates the whole Paſſage of Paſtor Fido; I refer my Reader thither. This Spark, adds he (41) ſpeaking of Boreas, is of a good Temper. Tho' he burns with Love, yet he is familiar with Cold and Snow:

Scit nivibus ſervare fidem:

And as Virgil ſays,

Boreæ penetrabile frigus adurit.

A proof of Boreas's Senſibility in point of Love may be gathered from his fury, which made him daſh a Miſtreſs to pieces againſt a Rock, becauſe ſhe had preferred Pan before him. I will quote the ſame Author again, ſeeing I muſt criticiſe him in ſome things. Orithya, ſays he, did wiſely (42), not to ſhew any Grief for having been raviſhed, 'for ſhe 'had to do with a ſtrange Raviſher, who might have 'daſhed her againſt ſome Rock, as he did the Fair 'Pitys, according to Pauſanias (43). Hear what 'Achilles Bocchius ſays of it, in his Emblems.' He ſets down the Verſes of Bocchius at length; you will find the Senſe of them in this Paſſage of a Commentator upon Propertius: 'Vere amica Pinus Arcadio 'Deo, utpote quem Boreæ amatori item ſuo, tunc 'quum puella adhuc eſſet, longe præferret, unde 'Thrax ille injuriæ impatiens deprehenſam forte 'ſolam ſpatioſo campo ſaxo allîſit, quam infeliciter 'moribundam exceptam intra gremium ſuum tellus 'in arborem cognominem commutavit, cujus fron-'dibus poſtea tempora præcinctus ſemper ſpectatus 'eſt Arcadius Deus. Quæ fabula exſtat apud Con-'ſtantinum Geoponic. XI. & tangitur à Nonno in 'Dionyſ. (44). —— Pinus was truly a Friend to the 'God Pan; for when ſhe was very young, ſhe preferred 'him to her other Lover Boreas; at which Injury the 'Thracian was ſo provoked, that, catching her one 'Day alone in a ſpacious Plain, he daſhed her againſt 'a Rock: the Earth receiving the unhappy dying Maid 'into her boſom, changed her into a Tree of the ſame 'Name, with the Boughs whereof the* Arcadian God 'was ever after ſeen crowned. This Fable is extant 'in Conſtantine, Geoponic. XI, and is touched on 'by Nonnus in Dionyſ.' If I would ſay with Mr Hofman that Boreas was in Love with the beautiful Youth Hyacinthus, who was alſo beloved by Apollo, I ſhould have a ſecond Example of the raging Jealouſy of that Raviſher of Orithya; for every body knows that Apollo's Rival was ſo enraged, that he had not the preference, that he killed Hyacinthus, by driving back upon his Head the Quoit, which Apollo had thrown: But Mr Hofman is miſtaken; for it was the Wind Zephyrus, and not the Wind Boreas, that did this (45). Note, that this Writer commits another fault in calling Orithya's Father Erechtonius, inſtead of Erechtheus.

(42) Id. ibid. pag. 102.

(43) It is not true that Pauſanias mentions it.

(44) Douza filius in hunc verſus Propertii Eleg. 18. lib. i. vers. 20. & Arcadio Pinus amata Deo

(45) See Paſiphatus cap. xxvii. Lucian in Dialog. Mercurii & Apollinis. Philoſtrat. in Hyacintho. Tzetzes Chil. i. cap. xii.

[F] Zetes and Calais, whoſe Hiſtory I ſhall give.] They were Twins, and, as Ovid ſays, the firſt born Children of Orithya, but, as others (46) ſay, they were born after their Siſters Chione, Cleonia, and Cleopatra. They were in the company of the Argonauts, and did their Brother-in-law Phineus very great Service (47); they drove away the Harpies which tormented him cruelly; for they took away all the Meat that was brought upon his Table, and if they left any thing, they infected it with an horrible ſtench. They purſued them as far as the Iſlands Strophades, and would have deſtroyed them, if an unknown Voice from the Gods had not forbid it (48). 'In the Games celebrated by Aeg-'ſius the Son of Peleus, at which all the Argo-'nautæ were preſent, Zethes and Calais obtained 'the Victory: In Indis quos fecit Ateſtus Pelei fi-'lius, vicerunt Zetes Aquilonis filius dolichodrome, 'Calais ejuſdem filius diaulo.' I take this from the Notes on Virgil's Ariſteus. The Latin Paſſage is taken from Hyginus, Chapter 273. 'They were 'killed by Hercules, ſays the Author of theſe Notes, 'in the Iſle of Tenos at the Funeral of King Pelias, 'for having taken the part of Typhis, Captain of the 'Ship Argo, againſt Telamon, who would have had 'them wait for Hercules, who was gone from them 'to ſeek his dear Hylas. The Gods being moved 'at their Death changed them into Winds, which 'commonly precede the riſing of the Dog Star a-'bout eight Days; hence it is that they are called 'πρόδρομοι, that is, Forerunners. Nevertheleſs Hy-'ginus ſays in his fourteenth Chapter, that they 'were buried, and that their Sepulchre is ſeen to 'move at the blowing of their Father (49). We find ſome other Reaſons for the Anger, which made Hercules

(46) Scholiaſt. Apollon. in lib. ver. 211. See alſo Apollodorus, lib. iii. pag. 246.

(47) He had been married to Cleopatra.

(48) Ex Valer. Flacco, lib. 4.

(49) Notes ſur l'Ariſtée de Virgile, pag. 141. The Author took this from Vigenere upon Philoſtratus in Gluncus Ponticus, pag. 741, 742. of the Iſt Tome in 4to. Apollonius is the firſt Author who mentions this. Argon. lib. i. ver. 1300, &c.

likewise of the Worship which the Athenians paid him (e). The Circumstances of Orithya's Rape are variously reported [G]. The anonymous Author, who published a French Translation of Virgil's Aristeus (f) with Notes, in the Year 1668, has collected many things concerning the History, and Qualities of This Wind, and particularly concerning the Violence peculiar to it, which Ovid describes so well (g). He, who calls it the Author of Shipwracks (b), would keep that Epithet for other Winds, if he was to represent what passes in the Channel, and on the Coasts of the Netherlands. It is not the North Wind, but the North-West, and South

(e) See the same Remark, n. III.

(f) It is an Episode of the Georgics.

(g) Ovid. Metam. lib. vi. circa fin.

(b) See Balzac, Entretien xxxvi. pag. 351.

Hercules kill them (50); but there is no mention made of a thing which raised his Jealousy, and perhaps provoked him more than any thing else. — Propertius says that those two Brothers perceiving that Hylas, the favourite of Hercules, was going by himself to look for a Fountain, followed him, and caressed him passionately (51).

Callimachus mentions three Daughters of Boreas, who carried Offerings to the Isle of Delos (52). He calls them Oupis, Loxo, and Hecaërga. It is said also that the Rape of Orithya is not the only Act of that kind which Boreas committed; it is pretended that he carried away Chloris the Daughter of Arcturus, and that he had a Daughter by her. ' Memoriæ ' proditum est à Cleanthe in primo libro de moribus, Boream rapuisse Chlorim quoque Arcturi filiam, atque illam in collem Niphatem asportasse, qui postea thorus Boreæ vocatus fuit, antequam ' diceretur Caucasus, de qua filiam suscepit Hyrpacem (53). —— It is recorded by Cleanthes, in the first book de Moribus, that Boreas took away Chloris, the Daughter of Arcturus, and carried her up to the Hill Niphates, which was afterwards called Boreas's-Bed, before it was called Caucasus, and by her he had a Daughter called Hyrpace.' See the Remark [H].

(50) See Natalis Comes, Mythol. lib. viii. cap. xi. pag. 863, 864, who had it from the Scholiast upon Apollonius, lib. i.

(51) Propert. Eleg. xx. lib. i.

(52) Callimach. hymn. in Delum. ver. 292.

(53) Natalis Comes, Mythol. lib. viii. cap. xi. p. 864.

[G] The Circumstances of Orithya's Rape are variously reported. Some say that she was on the Bank of the River Ilissus, when she was carried away; it is the opinion of Apollonius (54), Pausanias (55), and Dionysius Periegetes. ' Τζετζες follows this opinion in his Chiliades. Yet Chœrilus says, that ' it was on the Banks of the Fountain Cephissus, ' and Simonides near the River Brilissus (56). The Author, from whom I borrow this Passage, took it from Natalis Comes. He should have observed that the Original does not say that Brilissus was a River. There are only these words in it. Simonides tamen Poëta non ab Ilisso, sed à Brilisso, raptam fuisse Orithyam putavit (57). —— Yet Simonides the Poet was of opinion, that Orithya was taken, not from Ilissus, but from Brilissus. This is taken from the Scholiast upon Apollonius. These are his Words: τὴν δὲ Ὠρείθυιαν Σιμωνίδης ἀπὸ Βριλισσοῦ φησὶν ἁρπαγῆναι, καὶ τὴν Σιμωνίδειαν φύσιν τῆς Θρᾴκης ἐπεχθῆναι (58). But Simonides says that Orithya was taken from Brilissus and carried to the Sarpedonian Rock in Thrace. It is very likely that his Brilissus is the Mountain Brilessus, mentioned by Thucydides (59), Strabo (60), and Pliny (61), and which was in Attica. It is the same Scholiast who informs us of Chœrilus's Opinion. Χοιρίλος δέ, says he (62), ἁρπασθῆναι φησὶν αὐτὴν ἄνθη ἀμέλγουσαν ὑπὸ τὰς τῆ Κηφισσῷ πηγάς. But Chœrilus says, that she was taken, as she was gathering Flowers, by the Fountain of Cephissus. By these last Words might be understood the Spring of the River Cephissus near Lilea in Phocis (63), but it is better to understand them of a particular Fountain, called Cephissus, near Athens (64). We have not yet said all that concerns the different accounts of Authors concerning the place where the Rape was committed. Plato observes that there was a Tradition, that Orithya was carried away from the Areopagus. Ἡ ἐξ Ἀρείου πάγου· λέγεται γὰρ αὖ καὶ τόδε ὁ λόγος ὡς ἐκεῖθεν ἁλλ' ἢ ἐνθένδε ἁρπασθῆ. (65). Or out of the Areopagus. For there is another Tradition, that she was not taken from this Place, but from thence. He had just before touched upon the most general Opinion, viz. that Ilissus was the place from whence she was carried away. We must not take for a new Opinion what Mr. Guillet says, that Boreas stole away the young Orithya in that part of Athens, called Agra or Agræ, and that it was the first time the Goddess Diana went a Hunting (66). The Altar of Boreas, and the Temple of Diana Agræa, stood there on the Banks of the Ilissus.

(54) Apollon. Argon. lib. i. ver. 215.

(55) Pausanias, lib. i. pag. 17.

(56) Notes for l'Aristée de Virgile p. 101, 102.

(57) Natalis Comes, Mythol. p. 864.

(58) Scholiast. Apollon. in Lib. i. ver. 211.

(59) Thucyd. lib. ii.

(60) Strabo, lib. ix. pag. 275.

(61) Plin. lib. iv. cap. vii. p. 423.

(62) Scholiast. Apollon. lib. i. ver. 211.

(63) Ὁ ποταμὸς ἐνταῦθα ἔχει τὰς πηγάς. Here are the Fountains of the River Pausan. lib. x. pag 351.

(64) Plinius lib. iv. cap. vii. see also Aulus Gellius lib. xviii. cap. x.

(65) Plato in Phædro, pag. 229.

(66) Guillet, Athenes ancienne & nouvelle, pag. 264.

This may be inferred from two Passages compared together, one of Plato (67), and the other of Pausanias (68).

The different Reports concerning Orithya's Employment are these. Some say in general that she was diverting herself (69); others that she was gathering Flowers (70); others that she was going over the Ilissus (71); others that she was dancing; others that she was bathing. Plato insinuates the last Opinion very clearly (72); and we find the fourth in expres Words in these Verses of Apollonius.

Ἔσ χατιὴν ἠθήνης δυσχείμερον· ἔνθ' ἄρα τὴν γε
Θρῃκίῳ βορέης ἀνερίψατο κικλήσκουσι,
Ἰλισσοῦ περάσασα χορῷ ἔνι δινεύουσαν (73).

In ultima intempesta Thracia, quo iftam
Thracius Aquilo rejecerat è Cecropia,
Cum se propter Ilissum in choro circumagebat.

To the remote and rigid Climes of Thrace
The fair, by Thracian Boreas, was convey'd
From Attica, where on Ilissus banks
He found her dancing.

(67) Plato in Phædro pag. 229.

(68) Pausanias, lib. i. pag. 17.

(69) Id. ibid.

(70) See above, Citation (62).

(71) Apollon. lib. iii. pag. 247.

(72) Plato in Phædro, pag. 229.

(73) Apollonius lib. i. ver. 213. pag. 24.

I only quote this Passage to shew the rashness of the Historian of another Apollonius. He supposes that his Hero, censuring the Athenians, told them, that, if Orithya had danced, she would not have inspired any Love. That Passage of Philostratus is curious enough to deserve that I should set down the Latin Translation of it. ' Oportet ventos venerari, præsertim cum locii vestri sint, & pro vobis maxime spirent, neque Boream affinem vestrum, qui maxime ventorum omnium masculus est, fœminam facere decet, neque enim ipse Boreas Orythiam amasset, si eam vidisset tripudiantem (74). ' —— You ought to reverence the Winds, especially ' because they are your Allies, and blow mostly for ' you, nor is it fit that Boreas your Kinsman, who is ' the most Masculine of all Winds, be made a Wo- ' man; for Boreas himself would not have loved Orithya, if he had seen her dancing.' Artus Thomas, Sieur d'Embri, who wrote a Commentary upon that Work of Philostratus, should have informed us of the opposition there is between the discourse of Apollonius the Poet, and that of Apollonius the Philosopher. It had been more reputable for him to observe the Impertinences of the latter, than to tell us, ' That some make Boreas the Son of Astreus, ' and others say that he was a Thracian. II. That Simonides calls the River, near which Orithya was ravished, Brilissus (75). Here are two Faults; for to be the Son of Astreus, and to be of Thrace, are not contraries, and Simonides does not say that Brilissus was a River. It would be to no purpose to say, that Apollonius's design being to reform the Athenians, he would have been to blame if he had gone about to refute the Stories which they related of Boreas; I say such a Reason ought not to be alledged, seeing there was a Medium which might easily have been kept, between refuting ridiculous Traditions, and supposing them to be true. He should not have mentioned them; a Philosopher, who was persuaded that a Refutation of those idle Stories would offend his hearers, ought to have said nothing of them. But what a disorder is this! The Athenians, so ingenious, so polite, so knowing, so acute a People, suffer themselves to be persuaded that the Daughter of one of their Kings made a Wind in love with her, that she lay with him, that she conceived by him; that That Marriage occasioned an Alliance between them and that Wind, and that this Ally proved very serviceable to them, when they implored his assistance in the War against the Persians. They were so persuaded of all these things, that they confirmed them by public Decrees, by erecting an Altar, and by the celebration of an Anniversary. I make this observation, lest it should be objected to me, that the Rape of Orithya was looked upon at Athens as a poetical Fiction, and a witty Conceit. That Objection is absolutely false. All that I have said concerning the Wind Boreas, was an Article of Faith among the Athenians. I am apt to believe, that at first it was only a poetical Fancy sung about the Streets; but at length it became part of the Public Religion. The same might be said of the other parts of the Pagan Religion, and we may observe upon this occasion a remarkable difference between Mahometism and Paganism. An Impostor founded Mahometism; it was his design. But Paganism was formed out of the witty Conceits of some Poets, who had no design to sanctifie their Fictions, but invented them only for amusement. It is of them, it might have been said, Hæ nugæ seria ducunt in mala. -- These trifles lead into serious mischief. When once those Fooleries came to be looked on as a point of Faith, they never after lost their credit. It is in this respect that the Egyptians might have said to the Greeks, Ω Σόλων, Σόλων, Ελληνες αὶ παῖδες ἐστε ---------- νεοῖς (sic) τὰς ψυχὰς πάντες (76). O Solon, Solon, ye Greeks are always Children, your minds are always young. But the Greeks might yet better reproach them with the same thing in that respect:

(74) Philostrat. in Vita Apollonii lib. iv. pag. 147.

(75) Artus Thomas Sieur d'Embri in his Annotations upon Apollonius's Life, translated into French by Vigenere, Tom. I. pag 801.

South-West Winds, that are feared there. Those are the two Authors of Shipwracks there. I make this Observation to shew that Poets, who are too servile Imitators of Antiquity, give us often Descriptions not well suited to their Country. I must add, to what I have already said, an Observation on a Passage of Natalis Comes [H], which I have quoted at the End of the Remark [F] of this Article.

(76) Plato in Timæo, p. 1043. C.

> Quis nescit Volusi Bithynice, qualia demens
> Ægyptus portenta colat —— (77).
>
> How Egypt, mad with Superstition grown,
> Makes Gods of Monsters, but too well is known.
>
> DRYDEN.

(77) Juvenal. Sat. xv. init.

And indeed we do not find any Author among them that deserves the civility, which a Roman shewed to Diodorus Siculus, of whom he said, that he was the first among the Greeks that left off fooling (78).

(78) Apud Græcos desiit nugari Dio orus. Plin. in Præfat. p. 2c.

I do not pretend that all the Athenians were so simple, as to believe those idle Stories. I remember the answer, which Plato put in the Mouth of Socrates, who was asked whether he believed that the Tradition of the Rape of Orithya was true: ἀλλ' εἰπὲ πρὸς Διός, ὦ Σώκρατες, καὶ σὺ τοῦτο τὸ μυθολογημα πεισθῆναι ἀληθὲς εἶναι: sed dic per Jovem Socrates, tune hanc fabulam putas veram fuisse (79)? If I disbelieved it as wise Men do, answered he, I should not be absurd: Ἀλλ' εἰ ἀπιστοίην ὥσπερ οἱ σοφοὶ, οὐκ ἂν ἄτοπος εἴην (80). Jam si non putarem ut sapientes absurdus non essem. It appears by these words on the one side, that the most knowing Persons judged rightly of it; and on the other, that they explained their Thoughts cautiously upon that Subject in a public Work. However, a great many Athenians, Men of Parts and good Sense in all other things, and much more capable to deceive others than to be deceived, believed honestly what was told them of Boreas and Orithya. This is a matter of Wonder, and affords a good Moral Reflexion about the Weakness of Humane Understanding. Let us judge of the Ancients by the Moderns. At this day, in Rome, where there is so much Wit, and so much Prudence, they commonly believe most of the Traditions, upon which the Worship of some particular Chapels is grounded. Some few thinking Men give no credit to them. We must argue in this manner as to ancient Greece.

(79) Plato in Phædro p. 1211. A.

(80) Id. ibid.

[H] An Observation on a Passage of Natalis Comes.] We have seen (81) that That Author asserts, that Boreas stole away Chloris, Daughter Arcturus, and carried her to the top of the Mountain Niphates, which was afterwards called the bed of Boreas; and that he had a Daughter by her named Hyrpace. Natalis Comes pretends that Cleanthes has related this in his first Book de Moribus: but here is what Plutarch says (82). Mount Niphates was called the Bed of Boreas, from the time that this God carried thither Chloris, the Daughter of Arcturus (83). He had a Son by her called Harpax, who succeeded King Heniochus. This Mountain was afterward called Caucasus, because Saturn, taking his refuge there, after the War of the Giants, for fear of the Menaces of his Son, killed a Shepherd there, whose name was Caucasus. He was driven from that Asylum, and thrown into Tartarus. Jupiter threw him there, and ordered the Mountain to be called Caucasus, in honour of that Shepherd, and fastened Prometheus to it. This is what Cleanthes has related in the third Book of the Theomachia. It is not certain that Plutarch cited him in what relates to the Wind Boreas; so that Natalis Comes is faulty in several Respects.

(81) See above, Citation (58).

(82) Plutarch. de Fluviis, pag. 18.

(83) It was the River called afterwards Phasis.

BORGARUTIUS (PROSPER), an Italian Physician, lived in the XVIth Century. He published some Works, the first of which was a Treatise of Anatomy. He composed it in his Native Language; and finding it met with so good a Reception, that the Professors of Anatomy in the Universities of Italy scrupled not to use his very words, he resolved to translate it into Latin, with the Addition of several new Observations, which he had made while he taught Anatomy publickly at Padua. He not only communicated to the Public the Discoveries he had made by Dissection of Bodies, but studied Medicines also, and printed something on that Subject, though he had sworn never to have any thing to do with the Booksellers [A]. He took a Journey to the Court of France in the Year 1567; and as he

[A] He published something ------ though he had sworn never to have any thing to do with the Booksellers] The trouble he was involved in during the printing of his Book of Anatomy, and the Vexation he met with in the Printers Work, made him, in a Fret, take such an Oath, but, when he was got from under the Press, he broke his word. He compares himself in this to those Women, who, in the Pains of Childbirth, protest they will never expose themselves to the like any more; yet notwithstanding when the Pain is over forget their Protestations: ‘ Quod accidere universis parturientibus solet, mihi plane contigisse videtur, ut dum in labore quidem versantur se jurent amplius non parituras: postea vero extra discrimen positæ, rursus & concipiunt & pariunt. Nam quod haud ita pridem Contemplationem Anatomicam, laboriosissimum partum, exarandam in publicam Studiosorum commoditatem curarem; ac partim quidem immensis laboribus fractus, partim præli difficultates ac molestias summas pertæsus, constituissem, ac propemodum apud me dejerâssem, non futuram mihi amplius rem cum Typographis. Postea quam fœtus jam editus est in lucem, violare jusjurandum compulsus fui; fabricam Pharmacopolitereon (ut interim de meo pestilentis morbi Tractatu, ac Methodo de Morbo Gallico verba facere non curem) duodecim classibus digestam, publice educavi, ac meo quidem lacte tam diu sustuli, donec hinc inde seipsa audaciter evolavit he writes himself Medicus Regius, the King's Physician, I conjecture that he obtained this Title at that time. He found at Paris the Manuscript of the Great Surgery of Vesalius, and bought it, and published it at Venice (a) in the Year 1569 in 8vo [B]. His Epistle Dedicatory, dated from Padua the thirteenth of September 1568, affords me this Information.

(a) Ex officinâ Valgrisianâ.

(1) Prosper Borgarutius Epist. Dedicat. Chirurgiæ Magnæ.

' evolavit (1).' He adds that his Zeal for the good of the Public obliged him to break his Oath, for he saw that the Faults committed in the Composition of Remedies stood in need of Correction, and that he could employ himself therein to good purpose. I know not whether he published the four Books he promised de Morborum Puerorum curandi ratione (2). They are not mentioned in Lindenius renovatus, nor in the Epitome of the Bibliotheque of Gesner (3), nor in the Supplement to it; but that is not sufficient reason to conclude that he did not publish that Work; for he has published some others which these Authors do not mention.

(2) Id. ibid.

(3) There he is called Bergarutius instead of Borgarutius.

Every body knows the Story of the Woman, who made the Protestations above hinted at, who notwithstanding was no sooner delivered, than she desired that the blessed Candle, which was burning on the Table, might be put out: for says she, it may serve me another time. One cannot here properly apply the Italian Proverb, Passato il pericolo, gabbato il Santo; when the Danger's over, send the Saint a grazing. It is well known that there are particular and indispensible Reasons which very justly discharge a Woman from any thing she may have sworn on such an Occasion. It is not the same thing in respect to Vows made at Sea in a Storm, which are commonly forgot on Shore.

There are no Authors so subject as Poets, to forget that they solemnly promised to print no more.

O! combien l'homme est inconstant, divers,
Foible, legér, tenant mal sa parole,
J'avois juré, même en assez beaux vers,
De renoncer à tout Conte frivole.
Et quand juré? c'est ce qui me confond:
Depuis deux jours j'ai fait cette promesse.
Puis fiez-vous à Rimeur qui repond
D'un seul moment. Dieu ne fit la sagesse
Pour les cerveaux qui hantent les neuf Sœurs.
How light, and inconstant, is Man,
How apt of his Promise to fail!
I have sworn, in the best Verse I can,
To meddle no more with a Tale.
Sworn! when? ay, that confounds me sore,
'Tis two days since I made that Oath,
Henceforth who'll trust a Rymer more,
That for one Moment pawns his troth.
Wisdom by Heaven was never made
T'adorn a Poet's giddy Head.

These are the Words of the ingenious la Fontaine, in the beginning of one of his Tales (4). Mr Menage bestowed two Chapters (5), to prove, that Poets after they have swore to write no more, do still write on (6).

(4) La Fontaine au Conte de la Clochette, Tom. I. pag. 192.

(5) In the Anti-baillet, Tom. II. chap. cxxxii, &c.

(6) See the Index to Anti-baillet at the word Poets.

[B] He found at Paris the Manuscript of the great Surgery of Vesalius —— and published it at Venice, in the Year 1569 in 8vo.] He corrected and digested it into order, and made it, in a manner, his own Work; as he says in the Title Page.

Andreæ Vesalii, Bruxellensis, Philippi
Hispaniarum Regis medici,
Chirurgia Magna, in septem libros digesta,
In quâ nihil desiderari potest, quod ad perfectam atque integram, de curandis humani Corporis malis, methodum pertineat.
Ab Excellentissimo Philosopho, ac Medico Regio, Prospero Borgarutio, recognita, emendata, ac in lucem edita.
Formæ etiam Instrumentorum, quibus Chirurgi utuntur, his in libris apprime descriptæ sunt.
Venetiis, Ex Officina Valgrisianâ. 1569.

BORRHAUS (MARTIN), Professor of Divinity at Basil, was first known by the Name of Cellarius. He was born at Stutgard in the Duchy of Wittemberg in the Year 1499 (a); and was a Disciple of Capnio (b). He took his Degree of Master in Philosophy at Heidelberg (c), and going afterwards to Wittemberg, he there acquired the Friendship of Melanchthon, with whom he had already some Acquaintance at Tubingen (d). As he wanted neither Parts nor Learning, he had a great many Scholars, by which he got a deal of Money. He was admitted to that Employment on Melanchthon's Recommendation. He suffered himself to be miserably seduced by Stubner, one of the first Founders of Anabaptism, and laboured with much Zeal to establish that Sect (e). He had a Conference with Luther in the Year 1522 [A], wherein he shewed a great deal of Fanaticism. Being gone into Prussia in the Year 1525, he was imprisoned there by order of the Prince; yet he went on, and wrote several Books to support his Errors (f). But when he saw

(a) Konig, Bibl. pag. 226.

(b) Frider. Spanhemius de origine & progressu Anabapt. n. 2.

(c) Hoornbeck, summa Controv. pag. 356.

(d) Camerar in vita Melanchthonis, pag. 48.

(e) Ex eodem ibid. pag. 47, 48.

(f) Id. pag. 47.

[A] He had a Conference with Luther, in the Year 1522.] The first fury of Anabaptism broke out at Zwiccaw, where Nicolas Storch, Mark Stubner, and Thomas Munzer, set up for Prophets, and boasted that they frequently had Conversation with GOD. They drew a great number of Hearers after them; for they promised that the new Reign of the Messiah would soon come. All this while Luther lay concealed; but he was informed of the great stir of those Fanatics, and of the Progress they made at Wittemberg, where they had also staggered Melanchthon (1). As for our Cellarius, they gained him intirely, and he became as zealous as any of them. ' Non paucos in suam ' sententiam perducebat (Marcus Stubnerus) quo- ' rum caput fuit Martinus Cellarius, qui istis per- ' tinacissimè diu sane adhæsit, & causam hanc egit ' atque defendit (2).' Luther leaving his retreat came to Wittemberg in the Month of March 1522, and stopped the progress of those Men by his Sermons. Nay, their Disciples heard him with great Veneration; but as soon as Stubner, who was gone from Wittemberg about some business, came back again, they adhered to him as before, and encouraged him to maintain his Opinions. Cellarius especially exhorted him to it (3). Stubner desired a Conference with Luther, and at last a Day and Hour was appointed for that purpose. He came to the Assignation accompanied with Cellarius and another; Luther had only Melanchthon with him. You will see in the Latin Passage recited below, that Cellarius shewed more Passion than Stubner, and how those Fanatics left Wittemberg the same day, and retired to Chemberg, from whence they wrote a Letter full of Curses to Luther. ' Audivit Lu- ' therus placide narrantem Marcum sua. Cum di- ' cendi finem feciſſet, nihil contra illa adeo absur- ' da & futilia disserendum ratus Lutherus, hoc mo- ' do

(1) See Seckendorf, Histor. Lutheran. lib. i. p. 193.

(2) Camerarius in vita Melanchthon. pag. 47.

(3) Inque omnibus maxime & ardentissime M. Cellarius. Id. ibid. pag. 506 saw that his Sect received great checks daily, and that the Hopes they had given of the Renovation of all things proved false, he was converted, and retired to Basil in the Year 1536 (g). He not only quitted Anabaptism, but also the Name of Cellarius, and took upon him the Name of Borrhaus. He married, and applied himself some time to a Trade for a Livelihood (b). At last he was admitted into the number of the Professors of the University; he taught Rhetoric first, and afterwards Divinity. He wrote some Books [B], and died of the Plague at Basil in the Year 1564 (i).

(g) Hoornbeeck, ubi supra, pag. 355. See also Camerarius, ubi supra, pag. 48.

(b) Victûs causâ fenestrario opificio se aliquando accinxit. — — He followed the Trade of a Glazier some time for a Livelihood. Hornb. ib pag. 356.

(i) Id. ibid.

' do monuit; viderent quid agerent. Nihil eorum quæ commemorassent sacris literis niti, commentaque esse cogitationum curiosarum, aut etiam fallacis & fraudulenti spiritus deliras & pernicioſas subjectiones. Ibi Cellarius & voce & gestibus vesanis, cum & solum pedibus & propositam mensulam manibus feriret, exclamare & indignari, ausum esse Lutherum suspicari tale aliquid de divino homine. At Marcus paulo sedatior, ut scias, inquit, Lutere, me spiritu Dei prædictum esse, ego quid in animo tuo conceperis sum indicaturus, idque est: To incipere inclinari ad hæc ut mecum doctrinam veram esse credas. Cum Luterus, ut ipse postea dixit, istam dedita opera sententiam cogitando esset complexus: Interpret te Deus Satana: Post hæc plus verborum faciendum Luterus non putavit, & minantes gloriantesque eos dimisit, ac nescio quid pollicentes de mirabilibus effectionibus, quibus probaturi sua essent, cum hoc modo dixisset: Is Deus quem ego veneror & colo facilè vestra numina, ne quid tale efficiatur, cœrcebit; eo die oppido illi excesserunt, & Chembergo, distante passibus amplius millibus quinque, literas plenas maledictis & execrationibus ad Lutherum miserunt (4). —— Luther patiently heard Marcus lay down his Doctrine. When he had done, Luther, not thinking proper to dispute against such absurd and empty stuff, only gave them this Admonition, to take care what they did. That none of those things, they had laid down, were founded on Scripture, that they were the Devices of curious Minds, or rather the pernicious Suggestions of a deceitful and lying Spirit. At that Cellarius, with all the Extravagance of Gesture as well as Voice, stamping, beating the Table, and exclaiming, testified his Indignation, that Luther should suspect such a thing of the divine Man. But Marcus, who was a little more sedate, said to Luther, to let you see that I am endued with the Spirit of God, I will tell you what you have now in your Thoughts; and that is, you begin to incline to believe my Doctrine to be true. When Luther, as he said himself afterwards, had on purpose fixed his Thoughts on this Sentence; God rebuke thee Satan: After this Luther thought not fit to say any more, but let them go threatning and boasting, and promising to prove their Doctrine by I know not what Miracles, to which he only replied, the God, whom I fear and worship, will easily restrain your God from bringing any such thing to pass; the same Day they went out of the Town, and sent Luther a Letter from Chemberg, about five Miles distant, full of Curses and Maledictions.

(4) Id. ibid. pag. 51, 52.

(5) Præter scripta logica & mathematica libris aliquot commentarius in Vetus Testamentum & Ecclesiæ Dei commendavit. Spanhemius de orig. & progr. Anabapt. n. 2.

(6) Hoornbeeck summ. Controv. pag. 356, makes mention of it.

(7) Konig, in Bibloth. vet. & nova, pag. 126.

[B] He wrote some Books.] He published Notes on Aristotle's Politics in the Year 1545. A Commentary on Aristotle's Rhetoric in the Year 1551. A Commentary on the Pentateuch in the Year 1557. One upon Isaiah and the Revelations in the Year 1561. One on Job and Ecclesiastes in the Year 1664. I have not seen what he wrote on Logic and the Mathematics (5), nor his Commentary on the Book of Judges, and on the Book of Kings (6). Konig ascribes to him a Philosophical Work divided into three Books, de censura veri & falsi (7).

BORRI (Joseph Francis), in Latin Burrhus, a famous Chymist, Quack, and Heretic in the XVIIth Century, was a Milanese (a). He finished his Studies in the Seminary at Rome [A], where the Jesuits admired him as a Prodigy for his Memory and Capacity. He applied himself afterwards to the Court of Rome, but that did not hinder him from making several Discoveries in Chymistry. He plunged himself into the most extravagant Debaucheries, and in the Year 1654 was obliged to take refuge in a Church. A little while after he set up for a religious Man, and privately scattered certain visionary Notions [B]. He communicated to his Confidents the Revelations which he boasted he had received: but after the Death of Innocent X, finding that the new Pope Alexander VII renewed the Tribunals, and caused more care to be taken of every thing, he despaired of having time sufficient to encrease the Number of his Followers, as his Design required; and therefore he left Rome, and returned to Milan. He acted the Devotee there, and by that means gained Credit with several People, whom he caused to perform certain pious Exercises, which had a great Appearance of a spiritual Life. He engaged the Members of his new Congregation, to take an Oath of Secrecy to him; and when he found them confirmed in the Belief of his extraordinary Mission, he prescribed to them certain Vows by the Suggestion of his Angel, as he pretended. One of those Vows was that of Poverty, for the Performance whereof he caused all the Money which every one had, to be consigned to himself. The

(a) See the Remark [I].

[A] He finished his Studies in the Seminary at Rome.] The Author of his Life has omitted a Circumstance, which well deserved to be mentioned. I shall give it in the Words of a Memorial which came to my hands from Mr Baudrand the Geographer. ' Borri, being in the Seminary of ' the Jesuits, raised a Sedition against them, and ' shut himself up with others for three days, so ' that they were forced to send for the Barig, or ' Grand Provost, with his Officers to bring Borri ' and the other Scholars to Reason. In the Year ' 1653, he was Secretary to the Marquis Mirogli ' Resident of the Archduke of Inspruc at Rome, ' where I saw him at that time, as also in ' 1654, but there was no talk of his Heresies; in ' the Year 1655 he went to Inspruc, and afterwards to Milan.' These things do not well agree with the printed Life of Borri.

[B] After he had run into the most extravagant Debaucheries, he set up for Devotion, and privately scattered certain visionary Notions.] Affecting an appearance of a great Zeal, he lamented the corruption of Manners which prevailed at Rome, saying that the Distemper was come to the height, and that the time of the Recovery drew near: A happy time, wherein there would be but one Sheepfold on the Earth, whereof the Pope was to be the only Shepherd. ' Whosoever shall refuse, said he, to enter into that Sheepfold, shall ' be destroyed by the Pope's Armies; God has ' predestinated me to be the General of those Armies; I am sure that they shall want nothing; ' I shall

The fifth of those Vows engaged them to a most ardent Zeal for the holy Propagation of the Kingdom of GOD. It was to be the Reign of the Most High, the Reign of one sole Flock, in the Jargon of this new Sect (b). Borri was to be Captain-General of the Troops, which were to bring all Mankind into one Sheepfold; he was to be assisted in a particular manner by Michael the Archangel; he had already received a Sword from Heaven, on the Handle of which appeared the Image of the seven Intelligences, and the Pope himself was to be killed, if he had not the requisite Mark on his Forehead. I omit the particulars of his other Visions (c), to say something of the new Doctrines of the Cavalier Borri. He taught, among other things, that the Holy Virgin was a real Goddess, and properly the Holy Ghost incarnate, for that she was born of St Anne, in the same manner as JESUS CHRIST was born of her. He called her the only Daughter of GOD, conceived by Inspiration, and caused this to be added to the Mass when the Priests his Sectaries celebrated it (d). He said, that as to her Humanity she was present at the Sacrament of the Eucharist, and alledged certain Passages of Scripture to maintain his Doctrine. He took it in his Head to dictate a Treatise on his System to his Followers [C]. I have said already, that he boasted of having a great Share of heavenly Revelations: and it was by that means he had learned, that St Paul had communicated to him the same Power, which GOD conferred on that Apostle to censure St Peter's Conduct. He boasted that he could communicate to others the Gift of Illumination for understanding Mysteries, and made use of the Imposition of Hands, beseeching the Trinity to receive the Novice into the Religion of the Evangelical Nationalists (e). His Design was, in case he could get a sufficient Number of Followers, to appear in the great Square in Milan, there to represent eloquently the Abuses of the Ecclesiastical and Secular Government, to encourage the People to Liberty, and so to profess himself of the City and Country of Milan, and then to pursue his Conquests as well as he could. But all his Designs miscarried by the Imprisonment of some of his Disciples, and, as soon as he saw that first step of the Inquisition, he fled with all the haste he could, and took care not to appear to the Summons of that formidable Tribunal. They proceeded against him for Contumacy in 1659, and 1660: he was condemned as an Heretic, and burnt in Effigy, with his Writings, in the Field of Flora at Rome, by the Hands of the Executioner, the third of January 1661 [D]. He staid some time in the City of Strasburg, where he found some support and assistance, as being persecuted by the Inquisition, and also as a great Chymist; but he wanted a larger Theatre. He looked for it in Holland in the Year 1661, and found it at Amsterdam. He made a great noise there; People flocked to him as to the universal Physician for all Diseases; he appeared there in a stately Equipage, and took upon him the Title of Excellency; they talked of marrying him to the greatest Fortunes, &c. The Chance turned, his Reputation began to sink, either because his Miracles no longer found any Credit, or because his Faith could work no more

(b) Quanto si doveva fare nello spazio di pochi anni col suo imag'narsi Regno dell' Altissimo ed il suo suo Civile Vita del Cavaglier Borri, pag. 347.

(c) See the Remark.

(d) See the Remark [C] at the end.

(e) Coll' importo loro tutte due le mani sovra il capo invocando la Santissima Trinità affinche gradisse d'accettarli nella religione de Nazionalisti Vangelici. Vita del Borri, pag. 361.

'I shall quickly finish my Chymical Labours by 'the happy Production of the Philosophers Stone, 'and by that means I shall have as much Gold 'as is necessary for the Business. I am sure of 'the assistance of the Angels, and particularly of 'that of Michael the Archangel. When I began 'to walk in the Spiritual Life, I had a Vision in 'the Night attended with an Angelical Voice, 'which assured me that I should become a Pro'phet: the Sign that was given me for it was a 'Palm that seemed to me quite surrounded with 'the Light of Paradise (1).' He boasted that St Michael the Archangel had taken Post in his heart, and that whole Bands of Angels revealed to him the Secrets of Heaven, and what passed in the Conclave of Alexander VII. I only mention a few of his chimerical Notions: which may suffice to give an Idea of the whole.

(1) Gli apparisce una palma circondata d'ogni intorno, da lumi paradisiali. Vita del Cavagliere Borri, pag. 342.

[C] He dictated a Treatise on his System to his Followers.] He took it from them as soon as he understood that the Inquisition had heard something of their Nocturnal Assemblies, and hid all his Papers in a Nunnery. From thence they fell into the hands of the Inquisition: they contained very extravagant Doctrines; as: 'That the Son of 'GOD, through an ambitious Principle, had to 'become equal to his Father, moved him to create 'Beings; that Lucifer's Fall proceeded from his refusing to adore JESUS CHRIST and the Holy 'Virgin in idea: That the Angels, who adhered 'to Lucifer, not thro' deliberation, but only out of 'desire, remain in the Air: That GOD made use of 'the Ministry of rebellious Angels for the Creation of 'the Elements and Animals: That the Souls of Beasts 'are a Production, or rather an Emanation, of the 'substance of the wicked Angels, and that is the 'reason why they are mortal: That the Holy Vir'gin proceeded condecified from the Bosom of the 'Divine Nature, and that, otherwise, she could not 'have been the Spouse of the Holy Ghost, because 'of the disproportion of Natures (2).' I have said in the Body of this Article, that he called her the only Daughter of GOD. I shall now quote my Author. 'Chiamava la Vergine, sagratissima 'Dea, ed unispirata figlia dell' Altissimo, e da que' 'Sacerdoti suoi sciocchi seguaci faceva aggiugnere 'al Canone della Messa le parole UNIUNSPIRATA 'FILIA (3). —— He called the Virgin, most Holy 'Goddess, and only inspired Daughter of the most 'High, and made the Priests, who were his followers, 'add to the Canon of the Mass the Words, ONLY-'INSPIRED DAUGHTER.'

(2) Vita del Cavagliere Borri, pag. 354, and following.

(3) Ibid. pag. 351.

[D] He was burnt in Effigy at Rome. - - - - - the third of January 1661.] The same Thought, which many Writers have ascribed to Henry Stephens, is likewise ascribed to him, viz. that he should say, he never was so cold as on the day that he was burnt at Rome. It is said that Antonio de Dominis used the same Raillery. 'Gli pervenne la nuova 'che la sua effigie era abbrucciata, e si lasciò intendere, che non aveva mai avuto tanto freddo 'quanto quel giorno, all' imitazione di Marco Antonio de Dominis, che disse lo stesso, mentre ritrovandosi egli in Inghilterra si faceva della sua 'effigie simil' esecuzione (4). —— News was brought 'him that his Effigy was burnt, and he said that 'he never had been so cold as he was that Day, in 'imitation of Marco Antonio de Dominis, who said 'the same when he was in England, at the time 'the like Execution was done on his Effigy.'

(4) Id. p. 369.

more Miracles (f). In short he broke, and fled one Night from Amsterdam with a great many Jewels and Sums of Money which he had pilfered (g). He went to Hamburgh where Queen Christina was at that time; he put himself under her Protection, and persuaded her to venture a great deal of Money in order to find out the Philosophers Stone; which came to nothing. Afterwards he went to Copenhagen, and inspired his Danish Majesty with a strong Desire to search for the same Secret. By that means he acquired that Prince's Favour so far as to become very odious to all the great Persons of the Kingdom. Immediately after that King's Death, whom he had put upon great Expences in vain, he left Denmark for fear of being imprisoned, and resolved to go into Turkey (b). Being come to the Frontiers, at a time when the Conspiracy of Nadasti, Serini, and Frangipani was discovered, he was taken at Goldingen for one of the Accomplices; wherefore the Lord of the Place invited him to lodge at his House, and secured his Person; and understanding that his Prisoner's Name was Joseph Francis Borri, he sent that Name to his Imperial Majesty, to see if he was one of the Conspirators. The Pope's Nuncio had Audience of the Emperor at the same time when the Count of Goldingen's Letter was brought. As soon as he heard the Name of Borri, he demanded, in the Pope's Name, that the Prisoner should be delivered to him. The Emperor, having consented to it, ordered that Borri should be sent to Vienna; and obtained a promise from the Pope that he should not be put to death, and sent him to Rome, where he was condemned to remain all his Life in the Prison of the Inquisition, and to make the Amende honorable [E]. Some Years after, he obtained leave to come out, to attend the Duke d'Estrée, whom all the Physicians had given over for lost; and he cured him, which occasioned this Saying, that an Arch-Heretic had done a great Miracle in Rome [F]. The Duke obtained, that his Prison should be changed, and that he should be sent to the Castle of St Angelo. There was a Report since that time, that he was permitted to go abroad twice a Week, and to walk in the City with Guards (i) [G]. Some Pieces were printed at (f) Cominciando à far delle nuove miracolose alla sua fede à le sue miracolose. Id. pag. 372.

(g) Se ne fuggì da Amsterdam carico di gioje e di molti danari alla sfuggita, portando seco anche alcune coppie. Ib.

(h) Borri's Journey to the Court of Saxony, has been forgotten in the Book, out of which this Article is extracted. See the Acta Eruditorum, 1688. p. 587.

(i) Taken from a Book, intituled, Breve relazione della vita del Cavagliere Giuseppe Francesco Borri Milanese, printed at Geneva, (the Title says, in Colonia appo Pietro del Martello, in 1681, with another Treatise intituled, la Chiave del Gabinetto del Cavagliere Giuseppe Francesco Borri.

[E] He was condemned to remain all his Life in the Prison of the Inquisition, and to make the Amende honorable.] The Reader will be glad to find here more at large, what I have touched upon in general, concerning the Punishment inflicted on the Cavalier Borri. 'On the last Sunday of the Month 'of October 1672, he was condemned to make Abjuration of his Errors in the Church della Minerva; for which end, he was brought upon a Scaffold raised on purpose for him, where one of his 'Adversaries, who was a Priest, read the Tryal aloud, with his Confession and Abjuration. The 'Sentence was pronounced by the Holy Office, he being on his Knees, with a Torch in his Hands, whilst his Abjuration was reading: which done, 'he arose, and thanked the Sacred College for the Mildness wherewith he had been treated, in not inflicting a greater Punishment upon him, which 'he confessed he deserved. This was done in the Presence of a vast crowd of People, who were curious to see such a famous Man, and such a solemn and extraordinary Action. He was surrounded with a great many Archers, and Officers of the Holy Office. Many Prelates were also present, with the Sacred College, and an innumerable multitude of other Persons. The said Borri, seeing so many Archers, and other People of that sort about him, fell twice into a Swoon. The Ceremony being over, he was sent back into Prison, from whence he was carried to Loretto, as being too pernicious a Man in Christendom, with express Orders to make him say the Creed every Day, and the Penitential Psalms once every Week (5). —— He was also ordered, by his Sentence, to receive the Sacrament once every Day, when he came to Loretto (6). - - - - - Before he came out of the Prison of the Inquisition, he was visited by several Men and Women, and also by some Princes and Princesses, Knights, and other Persons of Quality. When he came out of the Prison, they made him pass through a Troop of the Pope's Lanciers, which made a Lane. He mounted the Scaffold with his Hands bound, and a lighted Taper between them, and kneeled all the while they were reading his Sentence, by which he was condemned to a perpetual Imprisonment, for having been (these are the very Words of the Sentence) an Inventor of a new Heresy: and to wear, for Penance, the Habit of the Inquisition all his Life, with a Red-cross on his Breast, and another on his Back. He was astonished to hear of a perpetual Imprisonment; 'but the Inquisitors comforted him with this Reason, That if that expedient had not been found, 'they would certainly have taken away his Life; 'and that they had done him that favour, because he had made an Abjuration of his Errors 'thirteen Years before (7); which he ratified to 'the Inquisitors Casanatta and Pozzobonelli: The 'Pope, on hearing of the Confirmation of that Abjuration, was so well pleased, that he gave a plenary Indulgence of all Sins to all those that were 'present at it; for the Ceremony lasted above five 'Hours (8).'

(5) Mercure Hollandois of the Year 1672. pag. 463, 464.

(6) Ib. pag. 465, 466.

(7) The Author of his Life says nothing of that; he says that Borri was condemned for refusing to appear, and that he fled from Milan, as soon as he knew that he was discovered.

(8) Mercure Hollandois of 1672. pag. 465, 466.

Mr Baudrand informed me. I. That it is not true that our Borri was sent to Loretto after his Abjuration. II. That the Inquisition could not put him to Death, since he was not a Relapse, and that he made an Abjuration of his Errors at the Minerva, before the Cardinals of the Congregation of the Holy Office. I wish that all who hereafter shall cite the Mercure Hollandois were apprised of these two faults.

[F] He cured the Duke d'Estrée, which occasioned this Saying, that an Arch-Heretic had done a great Miracle in Rome.] The Physicians had given over the sick Person; he was therefore accounted as dead, and therefore his Recovery was looked upon as a Resurrection. Sendo cosa strana che un Eresiarca abbia fatto un miracolo di resuscitar' un morto, come veniva creduto da' medici (9).

(9) Vita del Borri, pag. 379.

[G] It has been said, that he was permitted to go abroad twice a Week —— with Guards.] I have it from very good Hands, that the Queen of Sweden sent for him sometimes in a Coach; but that, after the Death of that Princess, he went no more abroad, and that none could speak with him, without special leave from the Pope. I have been assured, that he pretended he was not a Prisoner in the Castle of St Angelo, but that he lodged there, as it was a large Palace, to apply himself to Study and Chymical Operations, and that he neglected opportunities of making his escape, which frequently offered.

Note, That Mr Masclari, having read this last Passage, informed me, that, when he was at Rome (10), he saw the Cavalier Borri several times, and that he knows very well, that he 'could come no lower 'than a certain Door in the middle of the Stairs, 'of the Dungeon of the Castle of St Angelo: so far 'he waited upon those who came to see him: that 'he had a pretty good Apartment, consisting of 'three Rooms and a Laboratory: that none could 'be admitted to see him without a Note from Cardinal Cibo, and that he looked upon that Castle 'as at Geneva, in 1681; which are ascribed to him [H]. We shall see in the Remarks what was Sorbiere's Opinion of this Man [I]. It will be a pretty curious Supplement to this Article. You will see likewise what Monconis thought of him [K].

(10) That it is 1679, and 1680.

Mr Frischman

' as a real Prison to him, from which he did not ' despair but that the Duke d'Estrée would deliver ' him.' The difference of these Relations may be reconciled by distinguishing times, and those, who know the Character of our Borri, may easily see, that, when he had obtained permission to go abroad sometimes, he might perhaps boast, that he was no longer a Prisoner.

[H] Some Pieces were printed at Geneva in 1681, which are ascribed to him.] They may be reduced to two, viz. Letters concerning Chymistry, and Political Reflexions. The first of those Works is entituled, La chiave del Gabinetto del Cavagliere Gioseppe Francesco Borri Milanese. It contains ten Letters; the two first, dated from Copenhagen in the Year 1666, are in substance the very same with le Comte de Gabalis, published by the Abbot de Villars in the Year 1670. Let the curious examine which of those two Pieces ought to pass for the Original. The other Letters run upon Chymical Questions, except the last, wherein the Author maintains Des Cartes's Opinion concerning the Souls of Beasts. The Title of the other Treatise is, Istruzioni politiche del Cavagliere Gioseppe Francesco Borri Milanese date al Re di Danimarca. They are some Political Aphorisms, with a pretty long Commentary. Borri's Life informs us, that, when he was at Strasburg, he published a Letter which went all over the World (11). The Bibliotheque of the Physicians mentions two of his Letters printed at Copenhagen in the Year 1699, and inscribed to Bartholinus, one of them de ortu cerebri, & usu medico; the other, de artificio oculorum humeros restituendi (12). Konig ascribes another Piece to him, intituled, Notitia Gentis Barrborum.

(11) Stampò la lettera di restituire l'occhio ad un cavallo, che corre per tutto il mondo. Vita del Cav. Borri, pag. 370. He could cure sore Eyes very well. See the Remark [K].

(12) Mercklinus in Lindenio renovato, pag. 289. at the word Franciscus Josephus Burrhus. The Journal des Sçavans of the 2*d of* September, 1669, speaks fully of those two Letters.

[I] This is Sorbiere's Opinion of this Man.] ' I ' have only to add a few Words concerning the ' famous Cavalier Borri, whom I have seen at Amsterdam, this last time I have been there. You ' have a mind to know how it came to pass, that a ' such a distance he made so great a noise at Paris, ' that some Persons of Quality have been carried ' into Holland in Litters to be cured by that Quack; ' and that some ingenious Persons have gone thither on purpose to see so great a Man. I can ' say nothing more to it, Sir, than this, that it is ' as true now, as it was formerly, that our poor ' Humanity might be defined by the inclination to ' Lying, and by Credulity, Homo animal credulum & mendax, Man is a credulous and lying Animal, Φιλόλογον ζῶον. Those that can so easily believe the Stories which are told of those Workers ' of Miracles, such as Borri was taken to be, before the World was undeceived, must have been ' accustomed, without doubt, in their Infancy, to ' listen attentively to old Wives Tales; it is a ' mark of a good Nature, and a very tractable Disposition. I could make several Reflexions upon ' this (13). —— Some People after they —— have ' laughed at Physicians, on a sudden give intire ' Credit to the promises of a Quack, and suffer ' themselves to be bubbled by his new Method, ' tho' he only sells the same Ware. He, whom I ' am going to describe to you, is a tall black Man, ' pretty well shaped; he wears good Cloaths, and ' and spends pretty high, tho' not so much as is ' imagined; for eight or ten Thousand Livres will ' go a great way at Amsterdam. But a House of ' fifteen thousand Crowns bought in a good Place, ' five or six Foot-men, a Suit after the French Fashion, now and then a Collation to the Ladies, ' the refusing Money in some Cases, five or six ' Rix-dollars distributed to the Poor in a proper ' Time and Place, arrogant Words, and such like ' Arts, made some credulous Persons, or some who ' could have wished it had been true, say, that he ' gave handfuls of Diamonds, that he had found ' the Philosophers Stone, and that he had the Universal Medicine (14). The Truth is, the Sieur Borri ' is a cunning Blade, the Son of an able Physician ' of Milan (15), who left him some Estate; but he ' has added to it, what he has got by the Industry ' I am going to speak of. As he does not want ' for Parts, and has some Learning, he has found ' means to prevail with some Princes to supply him ' with Money, by giving them expectation that he ' would communicate to them the Philosophers ' Stone, which he was upon the point of finding. ' He has, without doubt, some Skill, or some Practice, in Chymical Preparations, some Knowledge ' in Metals, some imitation of Pearls and Jewels, ' and, it may be, some purgative or stomachical Remedies, which are commonly very general. As ' most diseases come from that Region, by this Lure ' he has insinuated himself into the good Opinion ' of those whom he stood in need of; and some ' Merchants, as well as some Princes, have fallen ' into the Trap. Witness a Promissory Note for ' two hundred thousand Livres, which he gave to ' one Demery, who had supplied his Expences, for ' which the Heirs of that Merchant are at Law ' with the Spagyrist; for the Spark has worded it ' in such an odd manner, that no body knows ' what to make of it. This Cheat, to come into ' Credit, and make himself talked of, set up at ' first for an Heresiarch. He had heard say, that ' Physicians were suspected not to believe enough, ' and therefore he pretended to believe more than ' was required; and striving as it were to pay a ' greater Honour to the Holy Virgin, than what the ' Church prescribes, he began to say, That she ' was a fourth Person of the Divinity. The Inquisition prosecuted him for it; and he was condemned to be burnt for Non-appearance. He went ' to Inspruc (16), where the late Archduke be- (16) See the end of this Remark, n. 2. ' came the first of his Dupes. And by his means ' he proceeded in his way to Holland, and settled at Amsterdam, as being a fit place to make ' his Persecution at Rome sound aloud; and where ' he might find several People ready to advance ' large Sums, on account of the great Profits ' he would give them expectation of. There he ' set up for a Man of Consequence. At first he ' acquired some Credit among the Citizens; and ' maintained himself there for some time by the ' support of an old Burgomaster, whom he kept ' up with his Cordial-waters, till every body discovered his knavery, and laughed at his artifices. ' They consist chiefly in a Method of debasing ' Coin, with impunity, and in some alteration of ' Metals, which is not yet well known. For as ' to his Cures, People are no more the better for ' them where he is, than they are in this City for ' the Remedies of a famous Mountebank, who has ' almost as great a Reputation in the Country of ' Liege and in Holland, as Borri has in Paris ' —— (17). Some say, that Borri being at Naples (17) Sorbiere, Relation d'un voiage en Angleterre, p. 163. ' in the time of the Plague, and having an excellent Preservative, went into the infected Houses, ' which were forsaken by reason of the Infection ' and Mortality, where he thrived pretty well. ' I do not know what ground there is for it.

There are two things to be observed in this Narrative of Sorbiere. I. The first is that the Author of Borri's Life does not say that he was the Son of a Physician, but rather intimates the contrary. ' Nacque in Milano, says he, figlio del ' Signor Branda Borri, di Famiglia antica della ' Citta di Milano. —— He was born in Milan, ' Son of Signor Brandi Borri, of an antient Family ' of the City of Milan.' He adds that the Cavalier Borri boasted that he was descended from Burrus Governor of Nero. II. The second is, that the same Author says, that Borri, when he left Italy, went to Switzerland, and thence to Strasburg, Amsterdam, Hamburgh, &c. Shunning the Catholic Countries. ' Il Borri, dit il (18), uscito d'Italia, (18) Vita del Borri, pag. 368. ' e passati li monti con quella fretta che ricercava ' il suo scampo se ne passo nell' Elvezia, ed indi ' ad Argentina fuggendo à piu potere il passare ' per paesi Catolici.' However it is certain that Borri distilled with the Archduke. See Monconis Part ii. pag. 149, 404.

(13) Sorbiere, Relation d'un voiage en Angleterre, pag. 155.

(14) Ibid. pag. 158.

(15) See the end of this Remark, n. 1.

[K] Likewise what Monconis says of him.] He saw him at the Hague in 1663, and heard him say several things concerning Chymical Secrets. The substance substance of which may be seen in the Relation of his Travels (19). Borri's Affairs were already in an ill condition; he was afraid of his Enemies, and mistrusted those he had most confided in, and spoke of retiring into Turkey (20). He said, it was indifferent to him, whether the World took him for a learned Man or an ignorant one; and with the same indifferency he neglected to justify the Truth of his Belief (21). He added, 'That no 'Body could be a good Philosopher, without being a good Christian. When I told him, (continues Monconis) that he was accused of having 'said, that the Holy Ghost had incarnated himself in the Virgin, and his Gentleman had replied, 'Why is he accused of a thing, of which they 'never had any proof, since they could not 'shew any of his Writings, wherein there was 'any such thing: He answered Si bene, Yes indeed, in 'one that the Pope had had, which was the only 'one that remained by chance, when he had 'burnt all the rest; and as for supernatural things, 'no Misfortune did ever happen to him, but he 'was forewarned of it by a Star that appeared 'before him, even tho' he had his Eyes shut.' See, in the hundred fifty fifth Page of the same Relation, the Stories which were told Monconis about Borri's Cheats, and in the hundred seventy eighth Page an admirable Cure of an Eye. The Painter Otho told Monconis, that Borri had perfectly cured him of a Cancer in his Eye, which deprived him of his sight, and hindered him from working, which all the Doctors held incurable (22).

Mr Frischman, the French Resident at Strasburg, wrote a Piece, worth reading, concerning Borri [L]. The Supplement to Dr Burnet's Travels is not exact on this Subject [M]. The Utrecht Gazette of the ninth of September 1695, informed the Public that Borri was lately dead in the Castle of S. Angelo, being Seventy nine Years of Age.

(19) Monconis, Voyage, Part. II. pag. 135, 137, 145, 146, 147, &c. of the Lyons Edition.

(20) Ibid. pag. 144, 145.

(21) Ibid. pag. 147.

(22) Ibid. pag. 178.

[L] Mr Frischman wrote a Piece worth reading concerning Borri.] It bears this Title, Monumentum in laudem gentis Burrhorum Calend. Jan. MDCLX. Francisco Josepho Burrho Medico Italo structum. The four Letters F. R. C. S. which stand for the Author's Name, signifie Frischmannus Regis Christianissimi Resident. He who gives me this Information, explains, in this manner, the Contents of that Piece: 'In quo, says he (23), potens ar-'tifex plantas in cineres, earumdem cineres ad 'eandem pristinam speciem, ignis beneficio rite 'suppositi balneo Mariæ deducens, Romæ ut fama 'sed incerta est, similem suam παλιγγενεσιαν, 'quæ est combustorum è cineribus resurrectio, 'exspectans, laudatus est. - - - - Wherein says he, 'the mighty Artist, reducing Plants into Ashes, 'and the Ashes into their former shape, by help of 'fire properly disposed in Balneo Mariæ, expecting 'for himself a like παλιγγενεσιαν, which is a 'Resurrection of things burnt from their Ashes, 'was, as some, though uncertain, reports say, greatly 'commended for it at Rome.' He refers us to Tuldenus, who mentions the proceedings of the Inquisition against Borri, that is, the Proceedings of 1659, and 1660.

(23) Deckherrus, de Script. adespot. pag. 131. Tuldenus, Hist. Europ. Part. IV. pag. 644. & in Tractat. p. 303.

[M] The Supplement to Dr Burnet's Travels is not exact on this Subject.] Three Letters concerning the present State of Italy, are called a Supplement to those Travels: Those Letters were translated out of English, and published at Amsterdam in the Year 1688. We are told there, that Burrhi (for thus the Translator calls him) is a Gentleman of the Milaneze, who had about Eight thousand Crowns a Year, Paternal Estate (24). He travelled in his Youth, and being returned to Milan, he held some Conferences there on the new Philosophy and Chymistry. He was put into the Inquisition; but as nothing could be proved against him, he was set at liberty (25). He went into Germany and Holland. The Inquisition complained of him to the Emperor; he was stopped at Vienna, and afterward sent back into Italy. He was accused of strange Opinions, which were all proved against him, tho' he protests, that he never thought of them (26), and he was obliged to abjure them in the Year 1668 (27). He was condemned to a perpetual Imprisonment. Of those Eight thousand Crowns a Year, they leave him but Three thousand (28); for the good Fathers out of Charity retained five thousand for themselves, and the three thousand are so curtailed by those, thro' whose Hands they pass, that he does not receive One thousand five hundred yearly. The Author of the three Letters imagines, that all the ground of Borri's Heresies, is, his speaking of Religious Things in the mysterious and unintelligible Jargon of certain Chymists. I know some Persons, who believe, that Borri pretended to explain the Trinity, the Incarnation, &c. by the Principles of Chymistry. Mr Baudrand says, that Borri had so small a Patrimony, that he could not live upon it.

(24) Pag. 140, &c.

(25) Had he been taken and judged by the Inquisition, the Italian Author of his Life would not have said, that he made his Escape, and that he was summoned to appear, which he refusing to do, he was condemned.

(26) But he did not deny to Monconis, that he had taught the Incarnation of the Holy Ghost in the Holy Virgin. See the Remark [I].

(27) It was in 1672. See above, the Remark [E].

(28) It is not at all likely, that Borri had then so large a Patrimony, and that the Inquisition left him 9000 Livres a Year.

BORRICHIUS (OLAUS), one of the most learned Men of his Age, was the Son of a Lutheran Minister in the Diocese of Ripen in Denmark, and was born the seventh of April 1626. He was sent to the University of Copenhagen in the Year 1644, where he applied himself six Years to several Sorts of Study; but chiefly to Physic. He taught a Class in the College of Copenhagen, and acquitted himself very well of that Function; for he was indefatigable, and a very sober Man. This gained him the Esteem of Gaspar Brochman, Bishop of Sealand, and that of the Chancellor of the Kingdom, and, by their Recommendation, he obtained a Canonicate at Lunden. The Rectorship of the Illustrious School of Herlow was offered him by Mr de Rosecrantz, after he had taught that Class of Copenhagen four Years; but he refused it, because he thought it would prove an obstacle to his Design of travelling, and perfecting himself in Physic. He began to practise it in the time of a dismal Plague, which destroyed a great many People in the Metropolis of the Kingdom. When the Contagion was over, he spent a Year more in teaching his Class, and then made ready for his Travels. But he was obliged to put off his Design to another time; for Mr Gerstorff, Prime Minister of State, would have him in his House for Tutor to his Children. He was there five Years, after which he satisfied his Inclination to travel; but, before he set out, he had the Advantage of being declared Professor of Philology, Poetry, Chymistry, and Botany, in the University of Copenhagen. He set out in the Month of November 1660, and having seen some famous Physicians at Hamburgh, he came to Holland, where he stayed a considerable time. There he met Mr Gerstorff's Sons (a), whom he took under his Conduct. He shewed them the Spanish Netherlands, and England, and carried them to Paris, where he stayed two Years; their Guardians called them home, which gave him Opportunity to continue his Travels with more Liberty. He was made Doctor of Physic at Angers, and saw the chief Cities of the Kingdom; afterwards he went into Italy, and arrived at Rome in the Month of October 1665. He was there till the end of March 1666. After which he was obliged to return home: the Office, which had been conferred upon him in the Univerſity of Copenhagen, required his Reſidence. He croſſed Germany, and arrived in Denmark in the Month of October 1666. His long Travels muſt needs have been very beneficial to him, ſince he made himſelf known to the moſt learned Men in every City he came to [A]. He made it appear in the Exerciſe of his Office, that he was very worthy of it; being laborious to the higheſt Degree, and furniſhed with a great Variety of Learning. The Books, which he publiſhed, were an authentic Proof of it [B]. He never would marry, for fear of abridging his Liberty of Philoſophizing (b). He was promoted to the Office of a Counſellor in the Supream Council of Juſtice in the Year 1686, and to that of the Royal Chancery in 1689. In that ſame Year he began to be troubled with the Stone (c). The Diſtemper increaſed daily, and at laſt, finding no other remedy than to be cut, he reſolved to run the Hazard of that rigorous Operation the thirteenth of September 1690. It did not ſucceed; the Stone was ſo large and ſo hard that it was not poſſible to extract it. He bore that Accident, and all it's Conſequences, with great Conſtancy and Piety, till he died, which happened the third of October the ſame Year. His Will was a Proof that he made a pious Uſe of the Riches he had got (d) [C].

(a) He died after Borrichius's Departure.

(b) A conjugio tota vita abſtinuit ut eo philoſopharetur expeditius. Borrich. in vita ſua. See below.

(c) Taken from his Life, written by himſelf, and prefixed to his Latin Poems in the ſecond Tome of the Deliciæ quorundam poëtarum Danorum, collected by Frederic Rostgaard, and printed at Leyden in 1693.

(d) Taken from his Funeral Programma, made by John Mulerius, Profeſſor at Copenhagen.

[A] He made himſelf known to the moſt learned Men in every City he came to.] The account of his Life, written by himſelf, and inſerted in the ſecond part of the Delights of the Daniſh Poets, contains the Names of ſeveral of thoſe learned Men, and of ſeveral Perſons of Quality, who ſhewed their Eſteem for him in his Travels. The Marquis de Planezza entertained him ſplendidly at Turin. At Rome he had ſeveral Audiences of Cardinal Pallavicini, and was often ſent for by the Queen of Sweden, who loved Chymiſtry extreamly. Adhibitus & quandoque colloquiis CARDINALIS PALLAVICINI, & ſæpe accerſitus ad diſſerendum cum REGINA CHRISTINA de artcantoris Chemiæ ſtudio, veritate, experimentiis, quibus tum ſacris ſe Palladia virago devoverat (1).

(1) Vita Borrichii in Tom. II. Deliciar. Poëtarum Danorum, pag. 378.

[B] He was worthy of his Poſt of Profeſſor. —The Books, which he publiſhed, were an authentic proof of it.] His Conſpectus præſtantiorum Scriptorum Linguæ Latinæ, is but a ſmall part of a great Work compoſed by him on that Subject, which is among his Papers. We have ſeen his Cogitationes de variis linguæ Latinæ ætatibus & ſcripto G. J. Voſſii de vitiis ſermonis, and his Analecta Philologica & judicium de Lexicis Latinis Græciſque. We have alſo ſeen his Antiquæ Romæ imago, and his Treatiſe De ſyllabarum quantitate, which he intituled, Parnaſſus in nuce. Having obſerved that ſome Apothecaries, and even ſome Phyſicians, do not pronounce right the Latin Name of Remedies, he publiſhed a Piece intituled, Lingua Pharmacopœorum. His Diſſertations De Poëtis Græcis & Latinis, are not the leaſt of his Works. Having ſeen that his Prodromus de ortu & progreſſu Chemiæ had been criticized by Conringius, he made an Apology for it, intituled, De Hermetis Ægyptiorum & Chemicorum ſapientia. He explained a whole Courſe of Chymiſtry twice in public. That Work is not yet printed. His Latin Treatiſe Decimaſtice metallica has been tranſlated into High-Dutch and Daniſh. There are ſeveral Chymical and Botanic Memoirs of his in the Acta medica Hafnienſia. He alſo publiſhed a Book, De uſu indigenarum plantarum in medicina; a Treatiſe De ſomno & ſomniferis; another De Cabala characterali; another De cauſis diverſitatis linguarum. Add to this, Oratio jubilæa Evangelica, and Memoria Dn. Oligari Vindri (2), and Deuſingius beautontimorumenos. This laſt Work contains ſome ſatirical Letters againſt Deuſingius, wherein he gives himſelf the falſe Name of Benedictus Blotefandæus, which is the ſame thing as Benedictus Nudiertius (3); for blot ſignifies naked, in Daniſh, and ſande ſignifies the Truth, as Mr Placcius obſerves in the hundred and fifth Page of his Pſeudonymous Writers. I omit the Titles of ſome other Books of Borrichius, which I might tranſcribe out of that Work of Mr Mollerus, which I have quoted [a], and wherein he promiſes to ſpeak of that Author at large in his Cimbria literata. I ſhall only give the Title of a poſthumous Book, which was printed at Copenhagen in the Year 1697. Olai Borrichii conſpectus Scriptorum Chymicorum illuſtriorum.

(2) Taken from his Life, ubi ſupra, pag. 379. & ſeq.

(3) Jo. Mollerus Spicileg. hypomnematum de ſcriptis Danorum, pag. 36.

(4) Jo. Mollerus, ubi ſupra, & in hypomnematis, pag. 354.

[C] He made a very pious Uſe of the Riches he had got.] He dedicated great part of them to the good of the Poor, and to the benefit of Students. Read the particulars of it in the following Paſſage: "Inſtituit ut & ſufficeret juventuti Academicæ neceſſariis deſtitutæ adminiculis præſidium aliquod in uberiora ſtudiorum incrementa, & famelicis afflictiſque ſolamen obtingeret: Illis quippe domum plane lateritiam magnificentiſſimæ ſtructuræ reliquit, ubi omnia cernuntur ſplendide apparata, cubicula octo cum ſuis conclaviis, ſedecim deſtinata ſtudioſis, modeſtia, virtute, ac doctrina conſpicuis: amplum auditorium variè exornatum ut in hac palæſtra commodius lacertos moveant juniores ſacris Apollineis devoti; ſupellex libraria exquiſitæ elegantiæ diverſo ſtudiorum generi inſerviens, cui adhærent manuſcripta rariora; cernitur ſibi quoque laboratorium Chemicum medicinam excolentibus profuturum; cernitur hortus floridus arboribuſque conſitus, oculis recreandis, animo paſcendo dicatus. Hoc tam ſumtuoſe ſtructuræ domicilium vocari maluit COLLEGIUM MEDICEUM, quam ut à ſuo nomine appellationem haberet; nihil enim arrogantiæ, nihil faſtuoſi oſtentabat toto vitæ curſu, ſed ſortuna ac felicitate ſua ſumma uſus eſt modeſtia. Utriſque tum hujus Collegii incolis, tum aliis egeſtate, ærumnis & imbecilli valetudine oppreſſis, nec non alumnis ſcholæ Ripenſis ingentem pecuniæ ſummam attribuit, quæ reſignatis poſt obitum teſtamenti tabulis, in Collegio Conſiſtoriali annuo ſpatio reſervatis, explevit numerum viginti ſex mille & trecentorum Joachimicorum (5). ——— He made a Proviſion, both to afford ſome Aſſiſtance to ſuch Youth in the Univerſity, as were deſtitute of the neceſſary Supports for the thorough Improvement of their Studies, and to adminiſter ſome Comfort to the hungry and afflicted. For he left the former a brick Houſe, a Structure really magnificent, and ſplendidly furniſhed throughout; eight lodging Rooms, with proper Cloſets, deſigned for ſixteen Students, eminent for Modeſty, Virtue, and Learning; a large School with variety of Ornaments, for the Exerciſe of the young Devotees to Literature, where they might exerciſe themſelves conveniently: a Library furniſhed with moſt exquiſite Elegance, for different kinds of Study, and enriched with ſome rare Manuſcripts; there is alſo a Chymical Laboratory for the uſe of thoſe who ſtudy Phyſic, and likewiſe a beautiful Garden ſet with Trees for Recreation and delight. This ſumptuous Edifice he choſe rather to call the Medical College, than to give it any Appellation from his own name, for he had never ſhewn the leaſt Arrogance or Pride in all his Life, but poſſeſſed his Fortune and Felicity with the utmoſt Modeſty. He left both to this College, and to other people, poor, miſerable, and ſick, as alſo to the School of Ripen, a prodigious Sum of Money, which, after his Death, on opening his Will, (which had been kept for a Year in the Conſiſtorial College.) amounted to 26300 Crowns.' To ſhew the amount of his Eſtate, I add, that in the Diviſion which which he made of it between his Relations, and the Students, &c. he beſtowed 26300 Crowns upon the latter, and left 50000 Crowns to the former (6). God grant that this may ſerve for an Example to thoſe, who are able to do the like.

(5) Taken from his Funeral Programma, pag. 381, 384. of the 2d Tome of Deliciæ quorundam Poëtarum Danorum.

(6) Jo. Mollerus, ubi ſupra, pag. 354.

BORSTEL (Adolphus de), a German Gentleman, with whom Balzac had a Correſpondence, and has given him great Encomiums, he was the Son of Conrad de Borſtel, Lord of Guſten, Plotzka, and other Places, and Prime Miniſter to the Princes of Anhalt, and Governour-General of that Principality. He was Envoy to France from the King of Bohemia, and the Princes, of the Empire in the Reign of Lewis XIII; and when his Negotiations were ended, he ſettled in the Kingdom, and procured Letters of Neutrality, and the Office of Gentleman of the Bed-Chamber to the King. He married Charlotte de Farou de Sainte Marcolle, by whom he had a Son, who has a numerous Family [A]. This Lady married a ſecond time to Joſeph le Brun, Knight, Lord of Broſſe, Governour of the Town, and Caſtle of Chinon. She died in her Caſtle of Zaille in Loudunois the fourteenth of March 1705, aged Forty three Years. She was of one of the beſt Families of Poitou (a). I ſhall ſay ſomething of the Genealogy of this Adolphus de Borſtel [B], who had two illuſtrious Nephews [C].

(a) Taken from the Mercure Galant for March 1705, pag. 257, &c.

[A] He had a Son, who has a numerous Family.] He married a Couſin of the Marquis de Raſſili, the King's Lieutenant-General in Touraine, and Sub-Governour of the Children of France. The eldeſt of his Sons has ſerved in the Marines, theſe twelve Years, and is Enſign of the King's Ships: the youngeſt was Page to the Duke du Maine, and is Provincial Commiſſary of the Artillery (1).

(1) Id. ibid. pag. 264.

[B] I ſhall ſay ſomething of the Genealogy of this Adolphus de Borſtel.] The Author of the Mercure Galant ſays, that the Houſe of Borſtel is one of the moſt Ancient and moſt Illuſtrious in Germany. It is, continues he, originally from Zeland, and a certain Lord de Borſtel, who was poſſeſſed of the Towns Fluſhing and de Wert, married the laſt Counteſs of Holland, and by his Marriage became Sovereign of that Province, which the Duke of Brabant afterwards took from him. After this Uſurpation, ſeveral of that Houſe ſettled in upper Saxony, where they built the Caſtle of Borſtel, remarkable in the Maps; and we find, that ſo early as the time of the Emperor Otho I, they made a a very great Figure, and had the chief Employments of State both in the Miniſtry, in War, and in Embaſſies (2). Here are a great many faults; for in the firſt place, it was Francis de Borſel, or de Borſelle and not de Borſtel, who married the laſt Counteſs of Holland. II. He ought not to have ſaid de Wert, but de la Verat or rather de Ter-Veer (3). III. He did not not become Sovereign of Holland by his Marriage: the Duke of Burgundy, Philip the Good, would have put him to Death, if the Counteſs of Holland had not given him all her Dominions to ſave her Husband's Life (4). IV. He ought not to have ſaid the Duke of Brabant but of Burgundy. V. I obſerve that this Counteſs of Holland died in 1436, and that the Emperor Otho I died in the Year 973. Judge then, whether, after this pretended Uſurpation in prejudice of the Counteſs of Holland's Husband, ſeveral Perſons of the Houſe of Borſtel could ſettle in Saxony, build a Caſtle there, and ſhine in Employments, in the time of this Emperor.

(2) Id. ibid. pag. 259.

(3) See the Article BERSALA, Remark [B].

(4) See Part. II. of Réponſe aux Queſtions d'un Provincial, p. 6.

[C] He had two illuſtrious Nephews.] One of them, Frederic de Borstel, was Captain of the Life-guard to the late King of Sweden, Colonel of the Regiment of Weſtergothia, Governor of Gottenbourg and Bahous, and Major-General of the Forces of his Swediſh Majeſty, who, in Conſideration of his Services, made him Baron of the Realm; and the other Ernest Amedee de Borstel firſt Cupbearer to his late Electoral Highneſs of Brandenbourg, Colonel of the Regiment of his Guards, Major-General of his Forces, and Governor of the Duchy of Magdeburg, which Government is yet in the Hands of John Henry de Borſtel (5). The Mercure Galant adds, that there is in France a Lady de Borstel who married Mr de Doumany, Lieutenant of Grenadiers in the Regiment of French Guards, who was Maid of Honour to the Electreſs Palatine, Mother of Madam (6), that her Mother was Governeſs to the Elector of Brandenbourg; and that ſhe has now a Nephew who is firſt Gentleman of the Bed-Chamber to the Electoral Prince.

(5) Mercure Galant, March 1705. pag. 262, 262.

(6) That is, the Widow of the Duke of Orleans, only Brother of King Lewis XIV.

BOSC (John du), in Latin Boſchæus, Lord of Eſmendreville, Preſident in the Court of Aids at Rouen, put to Death by the public Executioner, on account of Religion, in the Year 1562. See ESMENDREVILLE.

BOSC (N. du), a Franciſcan, lived in the XVIIth Century. He made himſelf known by a Book intituled, The honeſt Woman. His good Friend d'Ablancourt prefixed a Preface to it (a). I have heard ſay, that the Tranſlation of Father Narni's Sermons, which went under the Name of Father du Boſc, is a Work of d'Ablancourt [A]. It is ſaid, that this Franciſcan, having lived ſeveral Years out of the Convent by the Pope's Permiſſion, took the Habit again (b). He wrote ſeveral Books which are now in no eſteem; his Heroic Woman is one of them. The moſt deſpicable of his Works are thoſe he wrote againſt the Janſeniſts. No body would vouchſafe to anſwer them [B]; and that Silence, which is in reality a kind of (a) Hiſtoire de l'Academ. Franſoiſe, pag. 351.

(b) Colomiés, Biblioth. choiſie, pag. 171.

[A] I have heard that the Tranſlation of Father Narni's Sermons, which went under the name of du Boſc, is a Work of d'Ablancourt.] I have heard the thing related thus: du Boſc, having no Money, deſired d'Ablancourt to lend him ſome: d'Ablancourt, being very ſorry that he had none, offered him a Tranſlation which he had made of Father Narni's Sermons, and gave him leave to diſpoſe of it as he pleaſed. Du Boſc accepted the Manuſcript, and agreed with a Bookſeller for the Sum of thirty or forty Piſtoles, and publiſhed it in his own Name. They are but few Authors who would teſtify their Friendſhip by ſuch kind of Preſents (1).

(1) See Mr Colomiés in his Biblotheque choiſie, pag. 171. He had heard the thing related much in the ſame manner.

[B] His Books againſt the Janſeniſts were very much deſpiſed. No body would vouchſafe to anſwer them.] Mr Arnauld has given a very diſobliging reaſon why Father du Boſc's Books were not anſwered. It is in a Paſſage of the third Volume of the Morale Pratique, where he lays down ſeveral Rules whereby to judge, whether not anſwering an Adverſary ought to paſs for a proof of Weakneſs. This is his fourth Rule: 'It cannot be ſaid, that 'thoſe, who leave a Book unanſwered, are not able 'to anſwer it, when, in forbearing to anſwer, they 'follow the Judgment of the Public. Now this 'happens when one ſcorns to refute mean Authors, of blemish upon the Author, has been interpreted to his Glory by some Anti-Jansenist [C].

'who

' who, to get a Name, take part in the Quarrels of ' the learned. —— It is for that reason, that, at the ' same time that care was taken to answer Father ' Annat and Father Ferrier, Morandé and du Bosc ' were suffered to bark, without doing them the ' honour to think of them (2).

(2) Arnauld, Morale pratique, Tom. III. cap. xi. pag. 261.

[C] That Silence - - - - - has been interpreted to his Glory by some Anti-Jansenists.] ' The Question ' about the assistance of Grace for the Free-will of ' Man, was debated under Pope Clement VIII, and ' left as it was, that is to say, undecided under ' Paul V. Nevertheless, the Jansenists have lately ' printed it, to create a belief that That Sovereign ' Pontiff is on their side concerning efficacious ' Grace; but Father du Bosc, a Franciscan, struck ' them dumb by his Book intituled, le Pacifique Apostolique.' These are the words of Dom Peter de Saint Romuald (3).

(3) In the Journal Chronologique & Historique under the 30th of November, pag. 574, 575.

BOSC (PETER du), a French Minister, and the greatest Preacher in his time among those of the Protestant Religion, was the Son of William du Bosc, Advocate in the Parliament of Rouen, and was born at Baieux the Twenty first of February 1623. When he had studied Divinity eighteen Months at Montauban, and three Years at Saumur, he had made so great a Progress, that though he was but in his Twenty third Year, he was qualified to serve the Church of Caen. He was presented to that Church the fifteenth of November 1645, and received the Imposition of Hands the seventeenth of December the same Year. Notwithstanding the Merit of his Colleagues, especially of Mr Bochart, and the Nicety of his Hearers, he acquired in a little time the Reputation of one of the chief Men of his Cloth. He was looked upon in his Country as a PERFECT ORATOR, and his Eloquence became so famous all over the Kingdom, that the Church of Charenton would have had him for their Minister, and sent Deputies to request him of his Church, in the beginning of the Year 1658. The most powerful Sollicitations were made use of; but neither the Eloquence of the Deputies of Paris (a), nor the Letters of the most considerable Persons in France, among the Reformed [A], could persuade the Church of Caen to deprive themselves of such an Excellent Pastor, neither would that Pastor leave his Flock. The Sollicitations of the Church of Charenton, which were renewed several times after, with all imaginable eagerness, did not prove more successful. It was impossible that so great Merit, and so advantageous to his Party as he was, should not disquiet and give umbrage to the Enemies of the Protestant Religion. They shewed it in the Year 1664, by surreptitiously obtaining a Letter de cachet (b), which confined him to Châlons till further Order. One Pomier (c) boasted that he was the Cause of that Disgrace. He deposed falsly, that Mr du Bosc had spoken of Auricular Confession in the most offensive Terms; insomuch, that he accused him of having compared the Priests Ears to a Common-Shore, a Sink, and a Channel that receives all the Filth of the City. Which was the Reason why Mr du Bosc, as he went through Paris, in his way to the Place of his Exile, explained his Opinion about Confession to Mr le Tellier, and in what manner he had spoken of it. Mr le Tellier seemed satisfied with it, and even told him, that he had never questioned the Falshood of the Accusation. Mr du Bosc obtained the Liberty of returning to his Church the fifteenth of October 1664, and the Joy that appeared among the Brethren, when he returned to Caen the eighth of November, is inexpressible. Many considerable Persons of the contrary Party came to wish him Joy, and there was a Catholic Gentleman, who did at that time one of the strangest things that ever was known [B]. That Exile of Mr du Bosc shewed him how much he was beloved and esteemed [C]. The Civilities, which he received from the (a) Mr Cachen Minister, and Mr de Massanes, Lay-Elder.

(b) Dated the 2d of April.

(c) He was of Montauban, and had been a Protestant.

[A] They made use of - - - - Letters of the most considerable Persons in France among the Reformed.] Mr and Madam de Turenne, Mr and Madam de la Force, Madam de la Tremouille, and Madam de Rohan, sent some Letters to Mr du Bosc, written in their own Names, or with their own Hands, whereby they earnestly sollicited him to accept the Call of the Church of Paris. Their Letters are still in his Closet. That which Mr de Turenne wrote to him proprio pugno, is inserted in the Life of Mr du Bosc (1), with two very fine Letters, which Mr Pelisson wrote to this Minister, whom he had formerly known at Montauban.

(1) Life of Mr du Bosc, pag. 7.

[B] At his return to Caën, a Catholic Gentleman did one of the strangest things that ever was known.] ' An eminent Gentleman of the Romish Church, ' whose Life was not very regular, but who o- ' penly professed to love the Ministers, that had ' particular Talents, and who seemed altogether ' charmed with Mr du Bosc's Merit, having a- ' mind to solemnize that Day with a Drinking- ' bout, took two Franciscans, whom he knew to be ' Good-fellows, and made them drink so much, ' that one of them died on the Spot. The next ' Day he went to see Mr du Bosc, and told him, ' that he thought it his Duty to sacrifice a Monk ' to the public Joy: that this Sacrifice would ' have been more reasonable, if it had been a Je- ' suit; but that his Offering ought not to dis- ' please him, tho' it was but a Franciscan. That ' Tragical Accident, whereof he was only the in- ' nocent Cause, did nevertheless interrupt the Joy ' he had to find himself again with his Family, ' and his Flock. He expressed it in the first Ser- ' mon he made, having taken these Words for his ' Text, Here I am, O Lord, and the children that ' thou hast given me (2).'

(2) Ibid. pag. 44.

[C] His Exile shewed him how much he was beloved and esteemed.] Mr de Turenne desired Mr Boucherat, (who is at present Chancellor) (3) to obtain a Letter from the Intendant of Caen, to give a good Testimony of Mr du Bosc to Mr Le Tellier (4). The Count de Rouffi, who had a great Estate near Châlons, was so kind as to take care of Mr du Bosc's Lodgings, and of all other things which might conduce to allay his Grief (5). The Duke of Montausier undertook to acquaint the King with his Innocence. The advantageous Testimony which he gave him, together with the good Offices of Mr de Turenne, and Mr de Beringhen chief Equerry to the King, and of several other Persons of Quality of both Religions, proved effectual (6). Mr de la Frillière read to his Majesty the Letter which he had received from Mr du Bosc (7).

(3) I write this in 1699.

(4) Life of Mr Bosc, pag. 33.

(5) Ibid. pag. 364

(6) Ibid. pag. 380.

(7) Ibid. pag. 412.

[D] The

the Bishop of Châlons, ought not to be forgot [D]. In the Year 1665 he began to have some Affairs, wherein he signalized his Prudence, his Gravity, and his Eloquence; I mean the Prosecutions commenced against the Churches. He defended that of Caen, and many others of the same Province, against the unjust Pursuits of the Bishop of Baieux. The King having published a grievous Declaration, in 1666, against those of the Reformed Religion, all the Churches sent a Deputation to Paris, to make a most humble Remonstrance to his Majesty. The Churches of Normandy deputed Mr du Bosc, who set out from Caen the third of July 1668. As soon as he came to Paris the other Deputies chose him to draw up several Memorials (d). It being noised abroad that the King intended to suppress some Chambers of the Edict (e), all the Deputies of the Provinces hastened to Mr de Ruvigni the Deputy-General, to speak to him in a Business of such Importance. Their Design was to obtain leave to throw themselves at his Majesty's Feet; it was obtained, but in such a manner that none but Mr du Bosc was admitted to the Audience. He made a Speech to the King, who was alone in his Closet the Twenty seventh of November 1668, and after he had ended his Discourse, he had the Liberty to represent several things, in all which he succeeded so well, that the whole Court spoke of his Eloquence, and Prudence. After several Conferences with Mr le Tellier, and several times going and coming, something was obtained in the Month of April 1669, against the Declaration of the Year 1666. After that time Mr du Bosc made many Journies for the Affairs of the Churches, and defended them before the Ministers of State, and the Intendants, with all the Force and Ability imaginable (f), till he himself was forbid exercising his Ministry in the Kingdom, by an Arrêt of the Parliament of Normandy the sixth of June 1685. If it had been possible to save the Reformed Churches of France by way of Negotiation, he was more proper to succeed in it than any other that could have been employed (g). It is certain that he kept off the Evil by his Care and Prudence (h), and that he knew how to manage those Affairs with so much dexterity, that they could not be in better Hands (i). After his Interdiction he went into Holland, where he was Minister of the Church of Rotterdam till his Death, which happened the second of January 1692. He died like a good Christian, and his Death was answerable to that regular and edifying Life which he always lived (k). No Man ever maintained the Gravity of his Character better than he: His Body in this Respect was answerable to his Mind; for he had a majestic Presence, which contributed not a little to the Glory he acquired by his Preaching: this is easy to imagine. He had also very great Talents for presiding in a Synod [E], and gained esteem among Persons of Quality [F]. They did him Justice in Holland, where he was generally esteemed; the very Sectaries could not refuse the Respect which he deserved for his wise Conduct; and they reverenced Mr du Bosc, as much as they despised those violent Men, who, by their turbulent and misanthropic Humour, made themselves unworthy of the Approbation of those that are without, the gaining of which the Scripture recommends so expressly to the Ministers of JESUS CHRIST (l). He was twice married, and left but two Daughters [G]. We (d) For example, the Observations upon the Declaration of 1666, printed at Amsterdam by James le Jeune in 1670, and the Observations on the Declaration against Relaps'd that relaps'd. They are also printed.

(e) Those of Paris and Rouen.

(f) Mr le Gendre, vol. infra, gives an exact and particular account of his Conduct and Management of those Affairs.

(g) Si Pergama dextra
Defendi possent, etiam hac defensa fuissent.
If by a mortal hand old Priam's Throne
Could be defended, 'twas by his alone.
DRYDEN, Virgil. Æn. lib. ii. ver. 291.

(h) In the Life of Mr Bosc, pag. 2.

(i) Ibid. pag. 3.

(k) Taken from his Life written by Mr le Gendre, heretofore Minister at Rouen, and now at Rotterdam.

(l) 1 Tim. iii. 7.

[D] The Civilities, which he received from the Bishop of Châlons, ought not to be forgot.] I shall make use of the words of Mr le Gendre, Author of Mr du Bosc's Life. 'The Bishop of that place, of 'the Family of Herse Violart, was also pleased to 'contribute to his comfort. He received all man- 'ner of civility from that excellent Prelate. If he 'would have accepted his Generosity, he had eat 'at no other Table; he dined with him twice 'every Week regularly. One day as this Lord 'shewed him his House, which was richly furnish- 'ed, and the Apartments very sumptuous, he ask- 'ed him what he thought of it, and whether he 'looked upon that Magnificence to be very Apo- 'stolical? Mr du Bosc, who would neither diso- 'blige his Benefactor, nor belie his own Character, 'answered, That he had two Titles in the City, 'that he was Count and Bishop of Châlons, and 'that his Dignity of Count gave him quite dif- 'ferent Rights and Privileges from those of Epis- 'copacy; that he saw nothing in his House that 'was above the Magnificence suitable to a Peer of 'France. This gallant Answer did not displease the 'Prelate (8).

(8) Ibid. pag. 36.

[E] He had very great Talents for presiding in a Synod.] His Historian expresses this so happily that I shall use his own words. (9) 'He was, says he, 'one of the Presidents of the Synod held at Rouen 'in 1663. Some intricate and difficult Matters 'were examined there; and he acquired no less 'Honour in it than he had done elsewhere. It is 'certain that he succeeded admirably well in those 'Assemblies. The Readiness and Clearness of his Ap- 'prehension, the Force and Solidity of his Judg- 'ment, appeared there with great Lustre. He had 'surprizing Reaches and Hints, which often helped 'those Assemblies out of the most intricate Affairs. 'Add to this that he spoke so pertinently, and 'could give so easy and pleasant a turn to mat- 'ters, that he commonly brought the Assembly to 'his Opinion.'

(9) Ibid. pag. 31.

[F] —— and gaining Esteem among Persons of Quality.] I have already (10) named several Persons of the first Rank, who had a very particular esteem for him. I add, that the Duke of Roquelaure, who was complimented by Mr du Bosc in the Year 1674, when he was sent to command on the Coasts of Normandy, conceived an affection for him which he expressed all his Life in the most obliging manner. Mr de Schomberg and his Lady loved and esteemed him very much, and when he went out of the Kingdom they gave him the most obliging Letters of Recommendation to several Officers and Commanders of Places, and Garrisons, that were in his Road (11). The Count de Roye was very much pleased that he had to inform him, that the Queen of Denmark offered him a Retreat in her Dominions, and assured him both of a Flock, of which she herself would willingly be one, and an advantageous Settlement for his Family (12). The Prince and Princess of Orange did him all manner of Kindness at his coming into Holland, and gave him marks of their Esteem on all occasions. The Text of this Remark will be confirmed by several things which I shall mention below (13).

(10) In the Remarks [A] and [C].

(11) Life of Mr du Bosc, p. 147.

(12) Ibid. pag. 144.

[G] He was twice married, and left but two Daughters.] He married his first Wife in 1650, and lost her in 1656. She left him two Children, a (13) In the Remark [H].

Son

We speak of his Writings in one of our Remarks [H]. He is mentioned in the Menagiana in a manner no ways disadvantageous to him [I].

Son and a Daughter. The Son died in 1676, Lieutenant-Colonel, in the Regiment of Schomberg. The Daughter was married in Normandy to Michael de Neel, Lord of Boüillonniere, who fled into Holland with his Wife and Children, at the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. He chose rather to forsake great Riches than abjure his Religion. He died at Rotterdam in the Month of October 1697. Mr du Bosc's second Wife is yet living (14): He married her about the end of the Year 1657. The Daughter which he had by her was married in Holland to Philip le Gendre, formerly Minister of Rouen, and at present of Rotterdam. It is he who composed the Life of Mr du Bosc, which I quote so often in this Article.

(14) I write this the 14th of June 1699.

[H] We speak of his Writings in one of our Remarks.] There are two Volumes of Sermons, and a Collection of divers Pieces, which was published after his Death. He had published some of those Sermons in France: The first of them was St Peter's Tears. He preached it on a Fast-day; the Missionaries found something in it, for which they begun a Process against him, and the Duke of Longueville was obliged to use 'his Authority to put a stop 'to that Persecution: He did it earnestly, as well 'because he was sollicited to it by the Duchess de 'la Tremouille, at whose desire the Sermon had 'been printed, and who made it her own concern, 'as because he always had a particular kindness 'for the Author (15). He preached upon the Doctrine of Grace in the Year 1661. The Jesuits pretended, That he had imputed some Opinions to the Church of Rome which she does not hold, which obliged him to print his Sermon (16). Some Years after he published two Sermons, intituled, The Censure of the Lukewarm. These Sermons, and most of those which had already appeared, were re-printed in Holland, with several others which had never been printed. They make two Volumes in 8°, as I have said already. Mr du Bosc out-lived the publication of the latter Volume but few Days. The Collection of divers Pieces contains, I. The Requests, Petitions, Memoirs, and Remarks relating to the Affairs of the Reformed, which Mr du Bosc managed at Paris. II. The Speeches he made, and the Letters which he wrote, and received, on divers Occasions. The first Speech is that he made (17) to the Duchess of Longueville, who was charmed with it (18). III. Divers Letters by way of Dissertation upon some Passages of the Scripture, and some Points of Divinity. IV. Some Greek, Latin, and French Verses, which he composed at several times, and some other Poems made in his Praise. The Public is obliged for this Collection to the same Mr le Gendre, who composed the curious Life of that Great Man. Those Pieces shew, that Mr du Bosc was very fit for Business, a good Divine, a polite Man, and well versed in good Literature. I must not forget the Letter, which he wrote, in the Year 1660, to Mr Brevint, Chaplain to his Britannic Majesty Charles II, wherein he discovers his Opinion concerning Episcopacy. Part of that Letter was inserted in a Book composed on that Subject: The Presbyterians complained of it. The whole Letter is to be found in the Author's Life (19). Mr le Gendre has added this Remark to it. 'The joy which Mr du Bosc expressed in that 'Letter for the Re-establishment of the King of 'England, shews, that he differed not in his Opinion from the rest of our Divines, who have openly condemned the Parricide of Charles I. He always looked upon Kings as the lively Images of 'God on Earth, whose Character ought to render them inviolable to their People. No Body ever spoke of them with more respect, no Body submitted himself more cheerfully and freely to the Powers than he. He forgot nothing which might inspire his Flock with the Love and Obedience that is due to them. He chiefly applied himself to it upon extraordinary Occasions, as he did at Rouen in 1663, where preaching, in the presence of the Synod, on the first Chapter of the Revelations, the fifteenth Verse, he gave a Character of his Most Christian Majesty, altogether fit to confirm his Subjects in all their Duties. That Piece being now scarce, it will perhaps be re-printed to confute the Calumnies of those, who represent the Ministers as Enemies of Royalty (20).' Another thing which must not be forgot, is, that in 1665, there appeared 'a Sermon (21) printed at Paris in his Name, wherein they had inserted several things concerning the Blessed Mother of the Son of God (22), which were so ill digested, that they might have created trouble to the Person to whom the Piece was falsly ascribed. But he pursued the Printer so smartly, that they could take no hold of him (23).'

(15) Life of Mr du Bosc, pag. 17.

(16) Ibid. p. 31.

(17) In 1648.

(18) Ibid. pag. 50.

(19) Pag. 18. and following.

(20) Ibid. pag. 30, 31.

(21) Upon St Matthew, chap. 1. ver. 23.

(22) This related to the false Complaints lately made by a Jesuit in the Pulpit, that Mr du Bosc had said something against the Honour of the Virgin. Mr Bochart and Mr du Bosc went to the Intendant, and confounded the Jesuit in his Presence. Life of Mr Bosc, p. 45.

(23) Ibid.

The Public will quickly see (24) three Volumes of Mr du Bosc's Sermons on the three first Chapters of the Epistle to the Ephesians (25), and perhaps they will be followed by a fourth on several Texts.

[I] He is mentioned in the Menagiana in a manner no ways disadvantageous to him.] 'When I 'was at Caen, I heard the Minister du Bosc preach. 'I never heard a Minister preach but that time. 'He preached very well; but it seemed strange to 'me, to see a Preacher in the Pulpit with a Hat 'on his Head. Montagne says, that there is no-'thing more ridiculous than the square Caps of 'our Priests. We are used to it (26).' Mr Menage would not have gone to hear Mr du Bosc's Sermon, if he had not been told, that he was a very good Preacher. His Friends, that is to say, the most learned and ingenious Persons of that City, were of Opinion, that he would not know all that was remarkable in it, if he had not heard the Huguenot Preacher, whom the Catholics themselves admired.

(24) I write this the 14th of June 1699.

(25) Those three Volumes, and the two foregoing have been printed at Rotterdam by Reinier Leers.

(26) Menagiana, pag. 260 of the 3d Dutch Edit.

BOSQUET (Francis), Bishop of Montpellier, was one of the most learned Prelates of France in the XVIIth Century. He was born at Narbonne, and performed the greatest Part of his Studies at Toulouse. Before he took Orders he had discharged several considerable Offices; he had been Intendant of Guienne and Languedoc, Attorney-General in the Parliament of Normandy, and Counsellor of State in Ordinary (a). John de Plantavit, whose Friendship he carefully cultivated, from the time he lodged with him in the College de Foix at Toulouse, resigned his Bishopric of Lodeve to him in the Year 1648. Mr Bosquet took Possession of it in the Month of January 1650. Five Years after he became Bishop of Montpellier, and continued so till his Death, which happened the Twenty fourth of June 1676. He was in his Sixty third Year, and a Year before his Death he had his Nephew the Abbot de Pradel for his Coadjutor. He composed some Books in Latin, which are in good Esteem [A]. Mr Moreri, out of whose Dictionary I have taken the greatest

(a) Journal des Sçavans of the 31*st of* August 1676.

[A] He composed some Books in Latin, which are in good Esteem.] The first Work he made public, is an Abridgment of the Civil-Law, which Psellus had composed in Greek Verse for his Disciple Michael Ducas in the XIth Century. That Poem of Psellus had never been printed: Mr Bosquet not only translated it into Latin, but also added some Notes, wherein he shews what Authors Psellus had made use of, and explains the most difficult Passages. The second Work (1), is the History of the Gallican Fra-

(1) I mention those Books in the same order as they are mentioned in the Journal des Sçavans, who re- greateſt Part of what I have ſaid in this Article, has very much commended this Prelate, and has not committed many Faults [B]. I had almoſt forgot to ſay, that Henry can Church, from the beginning of Chriſtianity in Gaul, to the Reign of Conſtantine. There are two Editions of it. The ſame Author publiſhed the Hiſtory of the French Popes, who reſided at Avignon. It is the Hiſtory of eight Popes: It reaches from the Year 1305, to 1394. He publiſhed alſo ſeveral Epiſtles of Innocent III (2), with very learned Notes. The Biſhop of Montpellier, and the Abbot de Lacan, Nephews of Mr Boſquet, intend to publiſh two conſiderable Works of that learned Man: The one relates to the Liberties of the Galliſican Church, and the other contains Notes on all the Canon Law (3). Mr Doujat, who might have read this in the Journal des Sçavans of the Thirty firſt of Auguſt 1676, confeſſed in the Year 1686, that he had not been able to find out where the Notes of Mr Boſquet on the Decree of Gratian were. Plura alia majoris molis opera a litteratis expetita, inprimis verò Commentaria vel Notæ in Decretum Gratiani nondum prodierunt, nec ubi lateant diſcere ulla ratione adhuc potui (4). If it were poſſible Authors ſhould be acquainted with the moſt common Books, and with the moſt ſcarce Pamphlets; they would learn ſome things by them, the ignorance of which does them no honour. Further, the Abbot de la Roque ſhould not have forgot (5) the Year, wherein each of Mr Boſquet's Books were printed. I find (6) that the Synopſis Legum of Pſellus was printed at Paris in the Year 1632, in 8°. The Oxford Catalogue mentions, in the ſame Year, the Hiſtory of the Popes who reſided at Avignon. We find there that the Epiſtles of Innocent II, were printed at Toulouſe in 1635. Now as the Abbot de la Roque places the Hiſtory of the Gallican Church in the ſecond Rank, therefore it muſt have appeared in the Year 1632, at the fartheſt; and ſo, Mr Boſquet muſt have publiſhed moſt of his Books at Nineteen Years of Age, and left off writing Books at Twenty-two, which would be a very haſty retreat, and almoſt without example. He deſerves a Place in the Liſt des Enfans celebres, if Mr Baillet reprints it. I am ſure, the Journaliſt has not obſerved the Order well; for if the Hiſtory of the Gallican Church was Mr Boſquet's ſecond Work, it is very unlikely that Father Morin ſhould not have mentioned it, when, in 1633, he beſtowed this Encomium upon that young Author: ' Nec ' non eruditus juvenis Franciſcus Boſquetus docta ' ſynopſeos legum Michaëlis Pſelli è Græco in La- ' tinum verſione, & Hiſtoriæ Pontificum qui è Gal- ' liis orti in ea ſederunt correcta editione, horum- ' que eruditis notis illuſtratione, apud omnes anti- ' quitatis amantes merito charus & acceptus (7). —— ' Likewiſe the learned Youth Francis Boſquet is de- ' ſervedly loved and eſteemed by all Lovers of Anti- ' quity, for his learned Latin Verſion of Michael ' Pſellus's Greek Synopſis of the Laws, a correct ' Edition of his Hiſtory of the Popes of French Ex- ' traction, who reſided in France, and an Illuſtra- ' tion of both with learned Notes.' This Paſſage alone would be ſufficient to convince me, that the Hiſtoria Eccleſiæ Gallicanæ was printed after the Year 1633, and after that of the Popes of Avignon.

A REMARKABLE Paſſage left out in a ſecond Edition.

The ſecond Edition of that Hiſtory of the Gallican Church, is of the Year 1636, in Quarto: it is much larger than the firſt, which was in 8vo, but ſome Lines have been left out of it, which Archbiſhop Uſher has taken the pains to preſerve (8). They are ſo conſiderable, that I will inſert them in this place of my Dictionary. It appears from them that Mr Boſquet acknowledged, that the falſe Zeal of the Monks was the firſt cauſe of the fabulous Traditions, which have covered the Origin of the Galliſican Church with ſuch thick darkneſs. ' Quod de Gallicana nobis proxima Eccleſia nota- ' vit nuper prætor Narbonenſis Franciſcus Boſque- ' tus, incertam longa antiquitate & poſterorum com- ' mentis originem illius extitiſſe, idem in noſtris quo- ' que Britannicis veriſſimum fuiſſe comperimus (9). ' —— What Francis Boſquet late Intendant of Nar- ' bonne obſerved of the Gallican Church, our next ' Neighbours; that it's Original is rendered uncer- ' tain, by it's great Antiquity and the Fictions of later ' times, the ſame we find true concerning our Britiſh ' Churches alſo.' He thinks, that the heat of their Zeal, and the deſire of inſpiring more Devotion into the People, made them believe what they taught others afterwards, concerning the pretended Wonders and Antiquity of certain Saints. One can hardly have ſo good and charitable an Opinion of the firſt Inventers of Fables; but it would be very unjuſt not to entertain it of thoſe who ſucceeded them. However it be, here follows the Words in queſtion: ' Primos, ſi verum amamus, hu- ' juſmodi zelotas monachos in Galliis habuimus. ' Illi ſimplici ac ſervida ideoque minus cauta & ' ſæpe inconſulta religione perculſi ad illiciendas ' hominum mentes, & auguſtiori ſanctorum nomine ' ad eorum cultum revocandas, illuſtres eorum ti- ' tulos primum ſibi dein credulæ plebi perſuaſos pro- ' poſuerunt. Ex horum officina Martialis Lemo- ' vicenſis Apoſtolatus, Urſini Bituricenſis Diſcipula- ' tus, Dionyſii Pariſienſis Areopagitica, Pauli Nar- ' bonenſis proconſularis dignitas, amborum Apoſto- ' li Pauli magiſterium, & in aliis Eccleſiis ſimilia ' prodiere. Quibus quidem ſano judicio & conſtan- ' ti animo Galli primum Epiſcopi reſtitere. At ubi ' Eccleſiæ Gallicanæ parentibus, ſanctiſſimis fidei ' præconibus, detractis his ſpoliis, injuriam fieri ' mentibus ingenuis & probis perſuaſum eſt, paula- ' tim error communi conſenſu conſurgere, & tan- ' dem antiquitate ſua contra veritatem præſcribere (10). ' —— To ſay Truth, we had the firſt of this Sort of ' zealot Monks in France. They out of a ſimple and ' fervent, and conſequently leſs cautious and often ' inconſiderate, Zeal, in order to allure Mens minds, ' and bring them over to the Worſhip of the Saints, ' by giving them more auguſt Names, firſt perſuad- ' ed themſelves, and afterwards the credulous Peo- ' ple, of their illuſtrious Titles. From this quarter ' came the Apoſtleſhip of Martial, of Limoges; the ' Diſcipleſhip of Urſin, of Bourges; the Areopagiti- ' cal Office of Dionyſius, of Paris; the proconſular ' Dignity of Paul, of Narbonne; and the like in other ' Churches. Which indeed were at firſt oppoſed with ' good Judgment and Reſolution by the French Bi- ' ſhops. But when the Fathers of the Gallican ' Church, and the moſt holy Preachers of the Faith, ' had given their Opinion, that ingenuous and honeſt ' minds might be hurt by removing thoſe things, the ' Errors of this kind grew by Degrees, by common ' conſent, and at laſt by their Antiquity out-weighed ' the Truth.' I queſtion whether it was a good piece of Policy to ſuppreſs theſe fine Words in the ſecond Edition. The omiſſion of this Paſſage plainly ſhews that the Roman Catholics are extremely cautious with reſpect to Errors; and that they, whoſe Intereſt it is to maintain them, are eaſily offended at any diſcovery of that kind. They ſhould have conſidered, that the ſuppreſſing of thoſe Words would raiſe the Curioſity of moſt People; and that thoſe, who would have read them curſorily, and with little attention, would, for that very reaſon, look upon them as a thing of the greateſt Importance. They might very well think, that the Proteſtants would not fail to make their Reflexions upon it. In a word, we may ſay of this Paſſage, what an Hiſtorian ſaid of Brutus and Caſſius, whoſe Images did not appear in a Funeral Pomp (11). The ſuppreſſing of it gives it a greater luſtre. We obſerve more eaſily when a Man is not at a certain Feaſt, than when he is there. Here is a Paſſage of Seneca: ' C. Cæſar villam in Herculanenſi pulcher- ' rimam, quia mater ſua aliquando in illa cuſtodita ' erat, diruit, fecitque ejus per hoc notabilem for- ' tunam: ſtantem enim præternavigabamus, nunc ' cauſa diruitæ quæritur (12). —— C. Cæſar pulled ' down a very fine Houſe near Herculanum, becauſe ' his Mother had once been confined there, and by ' that means made her misfortune remarkable; for ' while it was ſtanding People uſed to ſail by, now ' they enquire why it was pulled down.' Compare with this, what I have ſaid in another Place (13).

(2) That is, the 13th, 14th, 15th and 16th Books of that Pope's Regiſter in fol. Journ des Sçavans of the 31ſt of Auguſt 1676.

(3) Taken from Mr Boſquet's Elogy inſerted in the Journal des Sçavans of the 31ſt of Auguſt 1676.

(4) Doujat, præno. Canonic. pag. 653.

(5) Journal des Sçavans of the 31ſt of Auguſt 1676.

(6) Apud Cave Hiſt. literar. pag. 606. The Oxford Catalogue mentions but one Paris Edition of 1633.

(7) Morin. Exercitat. Biblic. pag. 18 Edit. in 4to. 1633.

(8) See Colomies, Bibliotheque Choiſie, pag. 84.

(9) Uſſerius in Præf. Britann. Eccleſiarum Antiquitatum, printed at Dublin 1639.

(10) Boſquet apud Uſſerium An tiquitat. Britann. Eccleſiar. Præfat.

(11) Viginti clariſſimarum familiarum imagines antelatæ ſunt, Manlii Quinctii, aliaque ejuſdem nobilitatis nomina: ſed præfulgebant Caſſius atque Brutus eo ipſo quod effigies eorum non viſebantur. Tacitus Annal. lib. iii. in fine.

(12) Seneca de Ira, lib. iii. cap. xxii.

(13) In the Remark [RR] of the Article ARNAULD (Anthony the Doctor).

[B] Moreri —— has not committed many faults.] I. He does not ſpeak exactly, when he ſays, that Mr Boſquet

Henry de Mêmes, President in the Parliament of Paris, was the first Patron of Francis Bosquet, and that Mr de la Chambre was very useful to him, by the good Character he gave of him to the Chancellor Seguier (b). A Passage, which that Prelate left out of his Gallican History, when he reprinted it (c), shews, that tho' he was cautious in representing the Abuses of his Church, he was not ignorant of them.

(b) Journal des Scavans, ubi supra. See also Doujat. Prænot. Canon. pag. 63.

(c) See the Remark [A].

Mr Bosquet studied in the College de Foix at Toulouse; for there are neither Professors, nor any other Teachers, in that College. It is a House where a certain number of Students are maintained, who give a certain Sum at their Entrance into it. There are, or have been, several such Colleges in the same City. In a certain sense it is very true, that Mr Bosquet studied in the College de Foix; for he lodged there during his Studies, and he was constant in the Library of that College; but this is not what is commonly understood by Studying in a College. The expression of the Journalist is therefore fallacious: it gives his Readers a false Notion, that the College of Foix is a Place of Learning. II. The Abbot de la Roque, is not more exact, when he places the Pugio Fidei of Raimond Martini among the Works of Mr Bosquet; for tho' he adds these Words, which he took out of the Library of the College de Foix, he leads his Readers into this Error, that Mr Bosquet published the Pugio Fidei. We shall see elsewhere (14), what share he had in the Edition of that Book.

(14) In the Remark [A] of the Article RAIMOND (MARTINI).

BOSQUET (GEORGE), Advocate in the Parliament of Toulouse (a), in the Reign of Charles IX, wrote some Books, and among the rest one which was condemned to the Flames [A].

(a) De Verdier, Bibl. Franç. pag. 448.

[A] He wrote some Books, and among the rest one which was condemned to the Flames.] His Latin Treatise, on the Edict of Henry II, concerning Marriages contracted by Children of a good Family, without the Knowledge or Consent of their Parents, was printed at Toulouse, by Jaques Colomies, in the Year 1558, in 8vo. He published, by the same Man, in 1563, Hugonorum Hæreticorum Tolosæ conjuratorum: profligatio memoriæ posita, in 4to (1). It is this last work, If I mistake not, to which the following words relate: 'The King '—— has commanded, and does hereby command, that the Book composed by one George 'Bosquet, of the said City of Toulouse, containing 'a diffamatory Libel, shall be burnt; and that all 'Bookfellers and Printers be forbid to print or 'cause to be printed, or to sell, the said Book, 'and that all Persons be forbid to buy the same '(2)." These are the Words of an Arrêt of the Privy-Council, held at the Chateau de Vincennes the eighteenth of June 1653 (3).

(1) De Verdier Biblioth. Franç. pag. 448.

(2) Rene Hist. Ecclesiast. liv. x. pag. 59, 60.

(3) Ibid. pag. 60.

BOSSU (JAMES le), in Latin Bossulus, Doctor of Divinity in the University of Paris, and a Monk of St Denis, was one of the most violent Preachers of the League, before and after the Death of Henry III. I cannot tell whether he declaimed in the Pulpits of Paris, but I know very well that those of Nantes were the Stage of his Rebellion; and besides, not content to preach with the most brutal Fury against Henry III and Henry IV, he also printed at Nantes some Dialogues (a) between a Catholic and a Politician, wherein he vented the most extravagant Maxims of the Spirit of Sedition. He maintained in the first place, that Henry III was worse, and more atheistical than Judas (b). II. That James Clement was inspired by GOD to stab him (c). III. That no Prayers ought to be made to GOD for the Repose of his Soul (d). IV. That it was lawful for any body to kill him, on account of the notoriousness of his Tyranny, &c (e). The abusive Expressions of that furious Preacher against the Parliament of Paris sitting at Tours, and against all the Catholics who remained faithful to Henry IV, cannot be sufficiently detested. He maintained that the Catholics, who had any Commerce with Heretics, were ipso facto excommunicated (f); and that Heresy being worse than Paganism, and Paganism being true Atheism, Heresy ought to be called Atheism, and the most enormous of all Sins; and that Heretics ought to be shunned as the Plague (g). At that time France was full of such Preachers, and, to compleat her Misfortunes, was constrained not only to let them go unpunished, but to grant them what they desired, I mean that France should refuse to submit to it's lawful Prince, unless he turned Catholic. The Triumph of those rebellious Preachers over Justice will serve for a Model in all such like Cases; whereas if those Trumpeters of Sedition had been punished according to their Deserts, such an example would have served as a Curb for the time to come. There is nothing more dangerous in a State than such People; and with respect to this Evil, Sovereigns ought to be put in mind of the Maxim, principiis obsta. Mr Arnauld, or a very good Friend of his, will not contradict me in it [A]. Father le Bossu must have been a Man of some Merit, since

(a) He calls them Devis.

(b) Second Devis pag. 80.

(c) Third Dev's pag. 17, 18. He says the same of him, who killed the Prince of Orange.

(d) Ibid. pag. 8.

(e) Ibid. pag. 28.

(f) Traité contre l'adhesion aux Heretiques, pag. 56.

(g) Ibid. pag. 30.

[A] Mr Arnauld . . . . will not contradict me in it.] I have promised in the Article of that Doctor of Sorbonne (1), to insert here an important Reflection which was made on a Conventicle, wherein something was hatched against him. It is as follows: 'Indeed, you Gentlemen in Author'rity, you are fine Folks to suffer such attempts. 'Do not you perceive that if the Proceedings of 'that Conventicle should succeed, (for this is not 'a chimerical Conventicle, as those of Mr Arnauld) 'there is not one honest Man in Liege, but is 'liable to the like insults from them, if he should 'displease them, or be suspected to favour the 'pretended Jansenism, of which they make Mr Ar'nauld the Head? It is always dangerous to suffer 'such Audaciousness to get head, and it gathers 'Strength daily, when no care is taken to quash 'it in the beginning. Believe me, an Assembly 'of Men, moved by a false Zeal of Religion, 'supported by the Reputation, which their Habit, 'their Condition, and outward Austerity, procure 'them, armed with the Power which the direction 'of Consciences gives them over the Minds of 'the People, and above all animated, encouraged, 'and directed by a Rector of the Jesuits, are more to 'be feared than is imagined; and if your Politicians 'laugh since, besides his teaching Divinity among the Benedictins, he was one of the Members of the Congregation de Auxiliis under Pope Paul V (b). Mr Arnauld has commended him very much [B]. I believe this is the same Bossu, whom Mr du Plessis Mornay mentions in these Words. 'Le Bossu (i) Steward of the Bishopric of 'Nantes discovered this (k), preached against it, made Remonstrances to Mr de 'Mercœur about it, made the Agent of Spain protest against it.' This made him forbear speaking to him (l). Thus the very Heads of the League were Slaves to the Preachers.

(1) Cent. (1).

(b) See the Compendium of the Acts of that Congregation, printed at Francfort, and at Rotterdam in 1687. pag. 9.

(k) That is to say, that the Duke of Mercœur had a Design to confer with a Royalist secretly.

(l) That is, the Duke of Mercœur.

(i) Memoirs of Du Plessis Tom. II pag. 274. under the 5th of September 1602. See also the Life of Mr du Plessis pag. 186. where Bossu is called Theologal of Nantes.

'laugh at it, I dare say, they understand nothing 'of the matter. Father d'Ijarin boasts already that 'he has either a Commission, or a Permission, from 'his Highness to arrest Mr Arnauld, wherever 'he shall find him in the Diocese - - - - Believe me 'such Men must not be allowed too much Liberty. 'For if, notwithstanding the Advices given to the 'Superiors, of which they made no account, nor 'do make the use that was desired, we see them 'so heartily disposed to use Violences of that nature, so far as to be willing to take the Execution 'upon themselves by the Sovereign's leave, they will 'make no difficulty of acting without that leave 'in any thing they are pleased to undertake, as 'soon as they see themselves strong enough, and 'sufficiently supported by the Mob (2).'

Of WHAT consequence it is to keep a close Rein on the ECCLESIASTICS.

(2) Question Curieuse si Mr Arnauld est heretique, pag. 197.

[B] Mr Arnauld has commended him very much.] A Letter, written from Rome, says he, which was lately shewn me (3), 'contained an Extract of 'the Memoirs of Mr Pegna, who was Dean of the 'Rota, under Clement VIII, and Paul V, concerning what had passed under those two Popes in 'the Congregation de Auxiliis. Out of those Memoirs they had transcribed the Suffrage of Mr le 'Bossu, a Monk of St Denys, and Doctor of 'Sorbonne, of the Month of October 1607, one of 'the most learned Directors of that Congregation. He declared by that Suffrage, that he did 'not approve that a certain University should be 'consulted about the Matters that were in agitation there; and among other Reasons he gave 'these two: First, That they had not condemned 'certain Notes on Cassian, which tended to give 'a pretended good sense to the erroneous Propositions of that Author, whose Works had been 'censured by Pope Gelasius: Secondly, That they 'had divulged the Bull of Pius V, and Gregory XIII. 'These are that learned Doctor's own Words 'concerning this second Complaint against that 'University, &c.

(3) Difficultez proposées à Monsieur Steyaert Part. ix. p. 251. Cologne 1692.

BOSSULUS (MATTHEW), a Parisian (a), taught in Boncour College at Paris in the Year 1583 (b) [A]. He was a great Orator: he had been Preceptor to Don Carlos, Son of Philip II [B], and taught Rhetoric in the University of Valencia in Spain [C]. I do not find that he has appeared in Print.

(a) La Croix du Maine, pag. 183.

(b) Id. pag. 389.

[A] He taught in Boncour College at Paris in the Year 1583.] In that Year Bossulus made a Speech in Boncour College, which lasted about an Hour and a half (1). Du Perron remembered it so well that he could have recited it word for word. He recited a great part of it in the presence of la Croix du Maine three Days after. That Speech was an Eulogy on the Art of Oratory and Orators, Bossulus spoke of a certain Orator, who seemed to come from Heaven, to hinder the two Armies of Francis I and the Emperor Charles V, from fighting (2). I wish that Speech was printed, that I might know the Name of that Orator, who did a thing which Signior Julio Mazarini imitated so happily near Cazal, and which was the beginning of his Glory and Fortune. Bossulus wrote only the Heads of his Speeches, he supplied the rest in the Pulpit extempore (3).

(1) La Croix du Maine, pag. 183.

(2) Id. Ibid.

(3) Id. pag. 184.

[B] He had been Preceptor to Don Carlos, Son of Philip II.] Brantome informs me of this. 'I 'have been told, says he (4), that a Book was wrote 'in Spain, and even printed, concerning the Stubbornness, Caprice, Whims and Maggots of Don 'Carlos, in which is amusement of all kinds for 'the Reader. His Preceptor was Mr Bossulus a 'Frenchman, whom we have seen since in France, 'one of the most learned and eloquent Men of 'his time, who also spoke several Languages fluently; but lead a wicked Life, in which he was 'capable of giving him fine Lessons.' Here is a Man, who, according to Brantome and la Croix du Maine, was very Learned and very Eloquent; and for all that, I am sure, he is but little known in the Common-wealth of Letters, and a great many Persons less Learned than he, are a hundred times better known: The reason is, because they published Books; whereas the Press was never employed on his Productions. It extremely concerns learned Men, who desire not to fall into oblivion after their Death, to set up for Authors; without which, their Name seldom out-lives the first Generation, res erat unius ætatis. The generality of Readers do not take notice of the Names of those learned Men, whom they only know by the Testimony of others: A Man is soon forgot, when the Encomium bestowed upon him ends thus, The Public has seen nothing of his. We must except those, who, like Mr de Peiresc, signalize themselves in a singular manner.

(4) Brant. vies des Capitaines étrangers, Tom. II. pag. 117.

THE Learned who desire to be spoken of after their Death, ought to print Books.

[C] He taught Rhetoric in the University of Valencia in Spain.] I found this in a Book of the Jesuit Andrew Schot (5). I believe they took Bossulus from that Post to place him with Don Carlos, or at least, that his teaching Rhetoric served him for a mediate Introduction; and I cannot but wonder, that a Frenchman was chosen for such an Employment. I wonder yet more, that the French have spoken so little of a Man of their own Nation, who was honoured with such a Place in the Court of Spain in the XVIth Century.

(5) Bibliotheca Hispanica, pag. 33, where instead of Matthæus Bossutus Parisiensis, it should have been Bossulus, &c.

BOSSUS (MATTHEW), born at Verona in the Year 1427, deserves an honourable Place among those who have been illustrious for Virtue and Learning. He was sent very young to Milan to study the belles Lettres under Francis Philelphus, and Peter Perleon, and made good Improvement; but he had been spoiled as to his Morals, if he had not soon left a City so corrupt as that was in those Times, where he was at his own Disposal, in the midst of Temptations, and without the Assistance of the good Counsels or Censure of a good Tutor. Being called back to Verona, he lived under a better Discipline; and found fewer Occasions of perverting himself; He had vigilant Directors who made him weary of the Vanities of the World. He turned his Thoughts another way, and devoted himself to an Ecclesiastical State in the Year 1451, in the Congregation of the Regular Canons of Lateran. Timothy Mapheus, who was afterwards Archbishop of Ragusa, persuaded him to take that good Resolution, and brought him soon after to Padua; where he taught Divinity. Bossus improved much under him, both in the Sciences, and in the Art of Preaching; and with a great Zeal and Capacity he discharged the Duties of the Employments his Superiors gave him. He caused many Houses of his Order to be repaired, and particularly the Abbey of Fiesoli in Tuscany. Cosmo de Medicis gave Seventy thousand Crowns for the Reparation of that Abbey: It was an admirable Building, and the Workmanship of Philip Brunelleschi, a Florentine, one of the most excellent Architects of that Time (a). It was in that Church that Matthew Bossus gave the Ornaments of the Cardinalate to John de Medicis [A]. Laurence de Medicis would have it so; which I observe only to shew how much he considered Matthew Bossus. Pope Sixtus IV had as great an Esteem for him; for as soon as he was raised to the Pontificate, he undertook to put a Stop to the Disorders of the Nuns of Liguria, and of the Neighbouring Provinces, and intrusted him with that Employment. As a Reward for his Pains, which had not been to much purpose [B], he offered him a very good Prelacy three several times, and pressed him to accept it; but Bossus excused himself, and by his Intreaties prevailed with the Pope to leave him in the Condition he was in. He stoutly opposed the Decree of Innocent VIII, whereby all sorts of Monks were ordered to give the Clerks of his Chamber, yearly, part of their Revenues. He was five times Visitor of the Order, and twice their Procurator-General at the Court of Rome. I do not mention several Deputations wherein he displayed his Eloquence, and other most necessary

(a) The Vault of the Cathedral Church of Florence is accounted a master-piece. It must be who had the Direction of it. Philippo inquam illo Architectorum coriphæo, cujus prodigiosum ingenium super antiques quoscunque ac moderniores unus tholus seu testudo mavvis templi Florentini æternam extollit. Lyceum Lateranense, Tom. II, lib. xi. pag. 34.

[A] He gave the Ornaments of the Cardinalate to John de Medicis.] John de Medicis was so young when Innocent VIII made him Cardinal, that, to salve appearances, it was thought fit to require of him, that he should be debarred the use of the public Marks of the Cardinalate for three Years. 'Cum puer ad sacrum illum Senatum assumptus, 'fuerit ab Innocentio octavo Pontifice, hac una 'explicita conditione, ne palam insignibus uteretur 'aut se ut Cardinalis haberet nisi triennio expleto 'ad augendam ætatem (1).' That time being expired, Matthew Bossus was chosen to instal that Youth in the Dignity of a Cardinal. He performed the Ceremony with a great deal of Gravity in the Abbey of Fiesoli. Laurence de Medicis, the Father of John, chose him for that Function, which was attended with a most magnificent Pomp. You will find an account of that Ceremony in the hundred and eighth Letter of Matthæo Bossus. The Author whom I quote, has inserted a long Extract of it in his Lyceum Lateranense (2). It appears there, that John de Medicis was but fifteen Years of Age (3), when he was named to the Cardinalate by Innocent VIII. I need not say that he was made Pope after the Death of Julius II, by the Name of Leo X.

(1) Celsus de Rosinis in Lyceo Lateranensi, Tom. II. lib. xi. pag. 38.

(2) Id. ibid.

(3) Others say he was but 14.

[B] The pains —— he took to reform the Nuns —— was to little purpose.] This business is much to the Honour of the Memory of Sixtus IV. One of his first thoughts, after his Exaltation, was to correct the disorders of the Nuns, and particularly to restrain the Licentiousness of those of Genoa, who were going the broad way to Perdition. 'Vixdum sacro diademate caput ornaverat magnus 'ille Pontifex Sixtus quartus de Ruere, cum homo 'ligur mentem altam dirigens ad sanctimoniales 'regionis illius, & cohærentis insubriæ, adque Genuenses præsertim reformandas, quarum status 'patulas vias perditionis instraverat; tantam provinciam, tamque laboriosam, tali tempore dubiam, 'implicitam uni Bosso commendatam voluit (4). '— The great Pope Sixtus the fourth de Rovere, who 'was of the Province of Genoa, had scarce well put 'on the sacred Crown, before he turned his Thoughts 'on the Reformation of the Nuns of his own Coun'try, and the Milanese his Neighbours, but espe'cially those of the City of Genoa, who were in 'a State leading directly the broad way to Destruction; this Business, so great and laborious, and, at that time, critical and intricate, be'assigned to Bossus alone.' Our Matthew was chosen for such a difficult Employment, and of such a doubtful Success, that he was unwilling to accept of it. Nevertheless, he acquitted himself of it with great Courage and Vigilance. He gave them exhortations both public and private in the most pathetical manner he could, he animated the Magistrates, and shewed them what they ought to do; he despised the Dangers to which his Reputation, and even his Life, were exposed (5), and he had already put things upon a good Foot, when the Governour of Genoa, corrupted with Presents, ceased to second him, and spoiled what had been so happily begun. 'Quæ plane res Christo propitio & magistratibus suffragantibus omnibus eo tum 'loci pervasit, atque iis fuit vallata & constituta 'præsidiis, ut qui desiderabatur exitus prorsus foret habitura, nisi urbis tunc Præsidens alienatus 'magna vi munerum, quod maximum esse solet 'ad omne scelus incitamentum, à nobis turpiter 'defecisset, cœptaque omnia pertutbasset, & quæ 'erant jam acta sanctissime avarus ille atque infidus evertisset (6). - - - - Which business, by the 'help of Christ, and concurrence of all the Ma'gistrates, was really come to such a point, and was 'guarded and secured by such fences, that it must 'certainly have had the desired end, had not the 'Governor of the City been alienated with large 'presents, (the common Temptations to any kind of 'wickedness) and basely fallen off from us, and 'spoiled all our undertaking, and by his Covetous'ness and Treachery undone all we had been doing.' Some time after, as the Letter from which I have taken this Passage informs us, the Magistrates took more effectual measures to bring it last those disorderly Nuns to Reason. Bossus heard that news with great satisfaction. 'Quod ego 'semper, optavi qui Genuensem patriam istam singulari pietate atque constantia sum prosecutus, 'tuis literis audio fieri - - - - - Cives scilicet istos 'ardenter curare atque moliri ut tandem Monialibus suis istis minus honeste, minusque sobrie ac 'religiose versantibus, modus adhibeatur, adhibereque jam cœperint (7). - - - - - - - What I, who 'have a singular and constant Love for my Coun'try, Genoa, always wished, I understand by your 'Letter is done - - - - - that is, the Citizens are 'studying and contriving how at last to lay a Re'straint on their Nuns, who do not live so honestly, 'soberly, and religiously, as they ought, and that 'they have begun to restrain them.' The Magistrates forbad the Superiors of Nunneries to receive any Maids; they deprived them of their great Riches, which occasioned the Luxury, and other Irregularities which they intended to reform. 'Quod scribis modo concordi, publicoque decreto 'quæsitum, simulque definitum omnibus atque propositum, ne puellæ videlicet ea ipsa in Monasteria 'ullo modo amplius excipi possint; videtur mihi 'sane optimus modus, optima ratio, - - - - addunt 'æque fœminis istis magnæ opes & ingerunt fomenta libidinum, ambitionis, delitiarum, & sumptuum, quibus si vel ex parte caruerint, in his 'fortasse frigescet ardens & petulca luxuries. - - - - 'What, as you write, is now ordered by a Public 'Decree, and given in Charge to them all, viz. 'that no Maids shall hence forward be received in 'the Monastery itself, on any account, seems to me 'certainly the very best Method. - - - Great Wealth 'is to all these Women only a great Increase of 'Fuel for Lust, Ambition, Pleasure, and Magnificence, 'which if they are but partly deprived of, perhaps 'their wanton, flaming, Luxury may cool a little.' Note, That Bossus's Care did not prove altogether useless; for though he made no general Reformation, yet some Nuns were affected with his Discourses, and renounced their disorderly Life (8). He had a peculiar Talent at representing to the Nuns

(4) Lycei Lateranensis, Tom. II. pag. 40.

(5) Quantum exudaverim, quantum dimicaverim, quantum denique ad discrimen usque famæ & vitæ contenderim, potes tu satis meminisse. Matth. Bossus, Epist. 87. apud Celsum de Rosinis Lycei Lateranensis Tom. II. pag. 41.

(6) Id. ibid. apud eumdem.

(7) Ibid.

(8) Ibid. Tom. II. pag. 42.

neceſſary Qualifications. He compoſed ſeveral Books which are worth reading [C]; for there is a great deal of good Morality in them, and they are wrote in a polite Stile for that time. His Book on Womens Dreſs, and to prevent the recalling of the Prohibition they were under not to wear Ornaments, is very pious [D]. He was eſteemed by Perſons of the beſt Quality, and the moſt celebrated Scholars of his Time. He died at Padua, in the Year 1502, aged Seventy five Years. This Article is taken from the ſecond Tome (b) of the Lyceum Lateranenſe, of Abbot Roſini, printed at Ceſene, in the Year 1649, in two Volumes in Folio.

(b) Pag. 24. and following.

Nuns their Duty. See the Letters which he wrote to Iſota Nogarola, a learned and devout Nun, to Violante Seraphica, to Caſſandra Fidelis, to Antonia of Reggio, to Margaret of Mantua, a Woman of a great deal of Wit, a good Memory, and great Learning, and to Paulina (9). He would have the Nuns (and he had good reaſon for it) to converſe but ſeldom with Men, even with the moſt virtuous, and to obſerve a great deal of Circumſpection in that too (10). O what good Advice was this!

(9) Ibid.

(10) De parce cauteque verſando ſanctis etiam cum viris. Ibid.

[C] He wrote ſeveral Books which are worth reading.] His Dialogues De veris ac ſalutaribus animi gaudiis; De inſtituendo ſapientia animo: De tolerandis adverſis, are none of the leaſt of his Works. His Treatiſe De gerendo magiſtratu, juſtitiaque colenda, is a good one: Thoſe four Books, with another De immoderato mulierum cultu, were re-printed at Strasburg in 4to, in the Year 1509, with a Letter of Politian, wherein the Author's Life and Learning are very much praiſed (11). His Speeches, Sermons, and Letters are worthy of him, and have been printed a great many times. A new Edition of his Works was publiſhed at Florence in the Year 1627 (12). As for the Commentary which he made on ſome Pieces of Cicero (13), it is not known whether it was printed, or not. He mentions it in one of his Letters (14). He had the pleaſure to ſee four Editions of his Works; but becauſe they were printed ſeparately, he reſolved to collect them into a Body, and to add to them ſome other Pieces which were ſtill in the Duſt of his Cloſet, or among the Papers of his Brethren. He intituled that Collection, Recuperationes Feſulanæ, and dedicated it to Cardinal John de Medicis (15). Note, That he made a kind of Apology for Phalaris Tyrant of Agrigentum, and that he ſolidly refuted an apocryphal Book, which the Preſident Caſſanæus was not aſhamed to inſert in his Works: Read this Latin;

(11) Geſner. in Biblioth. fol. 505. verſo.

(12) Celſus de Roſinis Lycei Lateran. Tom. II. pag. 67.

(13) Upon five Orations, and upon the Rhetoric.

(14) In the Epiſtle to Bartholomew of Placentia. See Celſus de Roſinis Lycei Lateran. Tom. II. pag. 68.

(15) Id. ibid. Tom. II. p. 65.

‘ Phalaridem dudum Agrigentinum tyrannum ab oppoſitionibus Benedicti Calchi Concanonici tutatus eſt, occaſione Epiſtolarum quas ille ſcripſit, in quibus præter eloquentiam raram atque mirabilem, multa graviſſima, multa ſanctiſſima, ſummo Philoſopho & Chriſtiano digna comperiuntur. Sacerdotum temporale Chriſti Domini apocrypham cantilenam evidentiſſimis rationibus confutavit ſcribens ad Policletum Phiſicum, quem tamen ineptiſſime Bartholomæus Caſſanæus in ſuo Gloriæ mundi theatro inſeruit ex Libello ineptiore (16).

(16) Id. ibid. pag. 60.

‘ ------ He defended Phalaris, Tyrant of Agrigentum, from the Objections of Benedictus Calchus Concanonicus, on Account of the Epiſtles wrote by him; in which, beſides a rare and admirable Eloquence, there are many very grave and pious things, and worthy of an excellent Philoſopher and a Chriſtian. He confuted an apocryphal Song, called the Temporal Prieſthood of Chriſt the Lord, with the moſt ſolid Reaſons, in a Letter to Policletus Phiſicus. And yet Bartholomew Caſſanæus has been weak enough to inſert it in his Theatrum Gloriæ Mundi, from a Book yet more fooliſh.’

[D] His Book on Womens dreſs ------ is very pious.] Timotheus Maphæus, preaching in Lent at Bologna, ſhewed ſo clearly in his Sermons, that Women ought to be forbid all ſuperfluity of Dreſs by a public Decree, that ſuch a Law was promulged. Egiſſet ex pulpito ut publico decreto petulantior mulierum cultus, & inundans veſtimentorum luxuries comprimeretur (17). Soon after came out an Harangue addreſſed to Cardinal Beſſarion, Legate of Bologna, wherein it was attempted to be proved, that Women ought not to be deprived of their Ornaments, and that it was proper to revoke the Prohibition. Maphæus, who was gone to Tuſcany, as ſoon as Lent was over, was not in condition to refute the Cenſurer of the Decree which he had obtained, nor to prevent the impreſſions this Apologiſt for the Women might make on Peoples minds. So the Diſcourſe of the Apologiſt was ſpread without Oppoſition; and as it was pretty eloquent, and maintained a Theſis very agreeable to the World, it was applauded by many: but the wiſer heads were provoked, that the Extravagance of Dreſs, ſo contrary to Modeſty, and ſo dangerous with reſpect to Chaſtity, ſhould find an Advocate to ſupport it with all the turns of Rhetoric. Alii vero, quorum ſanior erat mens, rectiuſque judicium, dolebant ornamentorum licentiam, injuriâ continentiæ, pudicitiæque diſcrimine, literis illuſtratam (18). Our Matthew Boſſus was therefore earneſtly deſired to refute it. Obſerve, that the Apologiſt concealed his Name, and introduced a modeſt Lady, called Nicoloſa Sanuta, pleading the Cauſe of the fair Sex. He repreſented her very angry at the Prohibition, and making Heaven and Earth reſound with her complaints and murmurs. It is not known, whether that Lady took it amiſs, that her Name was made uſe of on ſuch an Occaſion. We only know that ſhe was eſteemed a Woman of Honour: ‘ Operi, ob turpitudinem, nomen non cuderit Auctor ſuum; verum ingenuam matronam Nicoloſam Sanutam loquentem adduxerit, omnia muliebri querimoniâ replentem: cui ignotum gratiámne an injuriam fecerit, cum nobiliſſima fœmina magis præſe ferre videretur pudicitiam, honeſtatem, frugalitatem, antiquos mores atque animi conſtantiam, quam laſciviam & immoderatum ornamentorum affectum (19).’ Boſſus undertook to plead the Cauſe of the Preacher Maphæus, and addreſſed a very fine diſcourſe to Cardinal Beſſarion (20), to ſhew him that he ought not to give leave to the Women of Bologna, to uſe their Ornaments again. This diſcourſe had all the effect the Author could deſire; for the Decree continued in it's full Force all the time of that Cardinal's Legateſhip (21). When that was expired, a Piece came out addreſſed by a very learned Perſon (22) to Sanctes Bentivoglio, a Man of great Authority in Bologna. The Author adviſed him, in this Piece, to give the Women liberty to adorn themſelves, and ſell very foul on thoſe who held the contrary. Boſſus wrote a handſome Letter to that Author, and retouched the matter ſo dextrouſly, that he brought him into the right way (23). I do not wonder that he converted his Antagoniſt; but I ſhould have wondered, if he had Eloquence enough to perſuade the Women to conſent to the Decree. There was the Difficulty. Hoc opus, hic labor eſt. I have ſaid elſewhere (24), they were obliged to aboliſh ſuch a Law in Rome. See alſo Remark [C] of the Article PYTHAGORAS, and the fourth Chapter of the ſecond Book of Chriſtian Advice for the Education of Children. Mr Joly, the Author, ſpeaks there of this Diſpute of Matthew Boſſus, and cites ſeveral curious things from it. I ſhall content myſelf with theſe. ‘ One of the moſt difficult Points to manage with Women, is to root out their curioſity for Cloaths and Ornaments of the Body. The reaſon of it is, Women naturally love to be fine. St Jerome † calls the Female Sex Philocoſmon ↓, that is to ſay, which loves Finery: and adds, that he knew a great many Women of extraordinary Chaſtity, who dreſſed themſelves ſolely for their own ſatisfaction, without deſign of pleaſing any Man. ‘ This therefore is one of the peculiar imperfections, with which he reproaches the Sex in theſe Words to Euſtochius: ‘ Imperfectiſſimus mulierum affectus. Semper in veſtibus, ſemper in auro, lapidibus & ornamentis, extrinſecus gloriam ponunt ‡. ------ The affection of Women is very imperfect, in that they place all their Glory in the outſide, always in Cloaths, always in Gold, Jewels, and external

(17) Id. ibid.

(18) Celſi de Roſinis Lateranenſ. Tom. II. pag. 61.

(19) Id. ibid.

(20) It is intituled, No fœminæ ornamenta Bononienſibus reſtituantur, ad Beſſarionem Cardinalem atque Legatum cohortatio. It is alſo cited by the Title of de immoderato mulierum cultu.

(21) Celſi de Roſinis Lyceum Lateranenſe, Tom. II. pag. 61.

(22) Guarin de Veronne.

(23) Celſi de Roſinis Lyceum Lateranenſe, Tome II. pag. 61.

(24) In the Article PRETEXTATE, about the middle of the Remark [B].

† In Epiſt. ad Gaudentium, de Pacatulæ Inſt.

↓ Φιλοκοσμον.

‡ Hier. in Virginit. ſervandâ.

'external Ornaments. And to Demetrias: Quando eras in seculo, ea quæ erant seculi diligebas: polire faciem purpurissо, & cerussa ora depingere, ornare crinem, & alienis capillis turritum verticem struere. Ut taceam de inauribus pretiis, candore margaritarum, rubri maris profunda testantium, smaragdorum virore, cerauniorum flammis, hyacinthorum pelago, ad quæ ardent & insaniunt studia matronarum (25). —— When you were in the World, you loved the things of the World, as to whiten your Face, to set off your Complexion with Vermillion, to curl your Hair, and adorn your Head with strange Hairs. I say nothing of the richness of Diamonds, the whiteness of Pearls fished from the bottom of the Red-Sea, of the beautiful green of Emeralds, the lustre of Rubies, nor the Sky Colour which appears in Saphirs and Jacinths, which are the objects of Passion, Admiration, and Folly of Ladies of Quality.'

(25) Joly, Institution des Enfans, pag. 257, 258.

BOTAL (LEONARD), in Latin Botallus, lived in the XVIth Century. He was born at Asti in Piedmont, and took his Degree of Doctor of Physic at Pavia. He came into France where he made his Fortune; for he was Physician to the Duke of Alençon, and to Henry III. He introduced at Paris the Practice of frequent Bleeding. Some Persons wrote against him on that Subject, and his Method was condemned by the Faculty of Physic. We shall see, below, Proofs of all this [A]. He published several Books of Physic and Surgery (a), a new Edition of which was printed at Leyden, in the Year 1660, in 8vo, by the Care, and with the Notes of John van Horne, a Physician (b).

(a) The Titles of them are to be found in Lindenius Renovatus, pag. 741.

(b) Ibid.

[A] He introduced at Paris the Practice of frequent bleeding, for which he was written against. Here are the Proofs of all this.] 'Botal --- a Piedmontese, of the Town of Asti, and Doctor of Pavia, having found the great effects of bleeding in the Distempers which came under his care, having large Practice in Paris, and at Court, in the Service of Francis Duke of Alençon, fourth Son of Henry the Second, he wrote a Book on that Subject, to which one Bonaventure Grangier a Physician in Paris wrote an Answer, to moderate the frequent Practice of drawing Blood, and shew how to make a proper Use of that great Remedy (1).' Another Evidence, and the more authentic, as he was particularly acquainted with our Botal, says thus, 'And not to leave the Subject of Bleeding, I remember, when I was young (2), Physicians were very moderate in it, and took a great deal of care before they ordered it, and more before they repeated it. Mr Duret, my Friend, a Physician of a singular good Character, visiting me when I was ill, and playing on the equivocal meaning of the word Seigneur [Bleeder], used to say that he was but a very little Seigneur [Lord].

'Afterwards there arrived in France one Botal, a Piedmontese, who was Physician to Henry III, who used Bleeding in all manner of Distempers, even in the Gout, and would not stick to repeat it four or five times to one Patient. And as I was remonstrating to him one Day, (for I was his Advocate) that instead of curing Distempers, it was the way to turn them into Consumptions. He answered, that the more stagnated Water you draw out of a pit, the more good comes in it's Place; and the more a Nurse is sucked by her Child, the more Milk she has. That it was the same with respect to Blood and Bleeding. Notwithstanding, this Proposition was at that time condemned by our Faculty of Physic. Nay, there was a Book written expressly against it by Grangier, which was received with general Applause. And yet after the Death of Botal, his Practice revived in the Opinion of our Physicians, who do not spare repetition of Bleeding, not only to their Patients that are Strangers to them, but even to their own Wives, Children and Brothers by which they have had very good Success.'

(1) Riolan. Recherches des Eschol. de Medicine, pag. 236, 237.

(2) It is Stephen Pasquier who says this, Book x. x. pag. 548. of Tom. II.

Whatever helps to shew the Original and Progress of any thing is so pleasing to a multitude of Readers, that they will not be sorry to find here this Passage entire, and to be informed that I have recited elsewhere (3), the same Author's account of the Bleeding practised by Averroës.

(3) Remark [D] in the Article AVERROES, near the end.

BOTEREIUS (RODOLPHUS), Advocate in the Grand Council at Paris, Author of a History of Henry IV. See the Article BOTERO, Remark [B].

BOTERO, or BOTERUS (JOHN), Native of Bene (a) in Piemont, flourished towards the end of the XVIth Century. He was Tutor to the Children of Charles Emanuel, Duke of Savoy, and died in the Year 1608 (b). He wrote several Books in Italian, which have been translated into divers Languages. They are accounts of the Government and Forces of several States of Europe, or bare Recitals of modern Transactions. He wrote also Discourses on Politics, &c. [A]. Consult Mr Moreri, and the Observations I make below [B]. Thuanus blames the Translator

(a) Hence he is called in Latin Benensis or Benenfis.

(b) Baudrand in Catalogo Geographorum ad calcem Lexici Geographici.

[A] He wrote ----- Discourses on Politics, &c.] I shall take notice of one only: which is intituled, Della Ragion di Stato, libri dieci, contro libri delle Cause della Grandezza e Magnificenza della Città. It was printed at Venice by the Giolitti, in the Year 1589 in 4to. The Author observes in his Epistle Dedicatory, dated at Rome the tenth of May 1589, that he had spent some Years past in several Journies, to the Courts of Kings and great Princes, both within the Alps and without. Naudé mentions Botero's Works in several Places of his Bibliographie Politique, and seems to value them.

[B] Consult Mr Moreri, and the Observations I make below.] It is pleasant enough to see all Piedmont erected into an Abbey: Boterus Abbot of Piedmont says Mr Moreri. A Comma after Abbot would help it a little, but would not hide the Author's negligence in expression. It is certain Botero had an Abbey: viz. that of St Michael de Clausula (1). He published his Works in Italian: and therefore it ought not to have been said, that he published his Relations under this Title, Amphitheatrum seu relationes Universales. It is falsly said, that Rodolphus Botereius, from whom this Author ought to be distinguished, is called indifferently BOTERUS or BOTEREY, and that the History which he published in 1610, reaches from the Reign of Henry II, to the beginning of that of Lewis XIII, and that it is different from the Latin Work, extant in three Volumes in Octavo, under the Title of Commentaries in XVIII Books. Here are a number of Faults in a few Lines. I do not well know the French name of the Advocate, who gives himself this Latin name Rodolphus Botereius at the head of his Works. Father du Breul cites him often, and calls him sometimes Master Raoul Boterey (2), sometimes Boterays (3), sometimes Botrays (4), sometimes Monsieur Boterays (5), sometimes Monsieur Bouterays (6). And all this in citing a Poem composed by This Author on the City of Paris (7). I think Mr Baillet in some of his Works has rendered Botereius by Bouteroue. The Bodleian Catalogue fixes his name Botereius; but mentions two others, Botereus and Bouthrays. Among so many variations I find

(1) Baudrand in Catalogo Geographor. ad calcem Lexici fuis.

(a) Antiquitez de Paris pag. 10, 14. Edit. 1639. in 4to.

(3) Pag. 61.

(4) Pag. 426.

(5) Pag. 564.

(6) Pag. 726.

(7) Intituled Lutetia.

BIRMINGHAM LAW SOCIETY

Translator of Botero, and calls him Impostor [C]. I will recite his Words, which shew that Engraving is as capable of falsifying History as Printing, and that the Licentiousness in publishing the Print of a fictitious public Monument did not begin in our Days.

I find not the name Boterus, which Moreri prefixes to the two others. The History published by Boterëius in 1610, begins but in the Year 1594, and ends with the Death of Henry the Great. And therefore it is not true, that it extends from the Reign of Henry II, to the beginning of that of Lewis XIII. It is intituled, de Rebus in Galliâ & pene toto orbe gestis Commentariorum Libri XVIII in tres tomos tributi. The first Tome contains eight Books, and ends with the Year 1601, the second Tome contains nine Books, and ends with the three first Months of the Year 1610; the third Tome contains but one Book of Twenty four Pages, which is only a relation of the Death of Henry the Great, and what followed in a few Days after.

[C] Thuanus blames the Translator of Botero, and calls him Impostor.] That is on Account of the Absolution of Henry IV. The King's Proxies, among other Ceremonies, were obliged to kneel before the Throne of Clement VIII, and bow their Heads, while the fifty first Psalm was read (8). At every verse the Pope gave them a gentle tap with his Wand; so the Ritual has appointed, according to the old Practice of the ancient Romans in enfranchising Slaves. Henry IV was considered as a Person loaded with the Chains of Excommunication, who was going to be solemnly set free. It is certain the Pope gave himself too many haughty airs, and he ought not to think it strange that the Protestants blamed him for it; but then they ought to keep within the bounds of Truth, and not to carry their raillery too far; for then it is no longer a just complaint, but a Lampoon, and malicious Falsification. This does not effect d'Aubigné; for as his Catholic Confession of Sanci is truly a learned and ingenious, but burlesque, Piece, no Body takes all that he says literally. That is not the Case of Botero's Accounts; they are taken for grave and serious Narrations; and therefore the Latin Translator ought not to have falsified them, by pretending that the King's Proxies received a hundred blows with the Cudgel (9), and that the Pope erected a Column for an eternal Monument of his Triumph over France. Thuanus complains of him thus. ' Relationem de eâ re a Joanne Botero (10) ' Benensi, aliis editis libris non obscuro, vernaculè ' scriptam qui latine vertit, & Coloniæ cum inep- ' tâ admodum & mendaci picturâ typis excuden- ' dam curavit, erga Regem Regnumque injuriosus ' fuit, quippe qui in explicanda vindictæ adhibitæ ' ratione suttibus eosdem procuratores dicit, quod ' maxime apud nos contumeliosum dicitur. De- ' inde procuratores qui vestibus modestiæ sacerdo- ' tali convenientibus induti erant cùm penulis & ' gladiis in scenam inducit, & columnam quasi ' insigne triumphantis de Rege, & regni calamitate ' Pontificis monumentum Romæ erectum confingit ' (11).— John Botero of Bene, a Man noted for some other Pieces, having published an Account of that Affair in French, it was translated into Latin, and printed at Cologne with a very foolish and lying Frontispiece; the Translator has abused both the King and Kingdom, for in setting forth the matter of inflicting the Penance, he says that the Proxies were beat with Cudgels, which in our Country is the utmost contumely. And then the Proxies, who were cloathed in a modest Habit, suitable to Priests, he has introduced with Cloaks and Swords, and feigns of his own Head, that a Column was erected at Rome, as a Monument of the Pope's Triumph over the King, and the Calamity of the Kingdom.' It is a common Saying, that Pictures are the Books of the ignorant: Authors ought therefore to make Conscience of putting false Prints into their Books: for they deceive such Persons as are least able to guard against Error. They deceive even the learned; for when we see a Print, which was published at the time the thing represented is supposed to have existed, it is looked on as an authentic Proof; so that they who see that figure of a Column which Thuanus complains of, dare not doubt but the Pope did really raise himself that pompous Trophy. And when a Man finds himself deceived by a representation of pretended public Monuments, he can no longer tell what to trust to: he cannot tell whether Medals, Inscriptions, and such like Monuments are more sincere than a mercenary Historian kept in annual Pay; and this is a Confirmation of Historical Pyrrhonism. Let us dispel the gloom of this Criticism by the Railleries of the Sieur d'Aubigné; ' Do not ' you see, say they, how the State submits to the ' Church, that this brave King, after defeating so ' many Armies, reducing so many Subjects to Obe- ' dience, and subduing so many great Princes, his ' Enemies, is obliged to prostrate himself at the ' Pope's feet, and suffer a drubbing in the Persons ' of Mr the Converter and the Cardinal d'Ossat? ' Who lay flat on the Ground upon their Bellies, ' like a Couple of Mackerel on a Gridiron, from ' Miserere to Vitulos. And besides, say they, this ' Game he was obliged to play over again between ' himself in Person and the Legate, but that was ' done gently, and under the Rose (12). See the ' Remark [K] of the Article HENRY IV, and ' Remark [A] of the Article TEXERA.

(11) Thuanus, Hist. lib. cxiii. sub fin. pag. 698. ad ann. 1595.

(12) Confess. Cath. de Sancy, liv. i. cap. i. at the beginning.

CEREMONIES of the Absolution of Henry IV.

(8) Or the 50; according to the Latins. It is the Miserere.

(9) At the Creation of several Knights the Ceremonial requires that they shall have a blown on the Cheek, or with a naked Sword on the back. They do but just touch them. If that Act were repeated several times, would an Author have any Ground to say that the Knight received a hundred Blows with the flat of a Sword.

(10) The Edition of Francfort in 1628, which I make use of says Botero.

BOUCHER (JOHN), a Parisian (a), Doctor of the Sorbonne, and Curate of St Bennet at Paris, in the time of the League, was a Trumpet of Sedition, and the most mutinous and furious Spirit among the Rebels. Their first Assembly was held in his Apartment, in the College of Fortet, in the Year 1585 (b). It was he, who, by ordering the Alarm-Bell to be rung in his Church the second of September 1587 (c), contributed more than any body else to a Commotion of the People, the Consequences of which were so ignominious to Henry III. The Success of that Day made him more insolent, and the next he preached violently against the Person of the King, and against his Counsellors (d). History observes, that the Weakness of this Prince was the principal Cause of the Boldness of the Rebels [A]. Boucher prostituted, not only his Tongue, but also his Pen to the Head of the League, and published, among other things, a Discourse on the Justice of deposing Henry III [B]. The

(a) Thuanus, lib. xcv. p. 280.

(b) Varillas, Hist. Hen. III. lib. viii. pag. 325. Edit. of Holland.

(c) Thuanus, lib. lxxxvii. pag. 127.

(d) Concionatores vero & in iis familiam ducens Bucerus ex Ambone in Regem & ejus Consiliarios palam debacchatus. Id. ibid.

[A] The weakness of Henry III, was the principal Cause of the boldness of the Rebels.] See Thuanus (1) and Mezerai (2). This confirms what I have somewhere (3) said, that it is not usually Tyranny, but want of Capacity to make themselves feared, that causes Princes to lose their Sceptres and Crowns. The Flatterers of the People would gladly persuade us, that there is nothing to be feared from them as long as they are well governed. But this is an Imposition: an enterprizing Man does what he will with the People, under a soft and gentle Government.

(1) Thuan. Hist. lib. lxxxvii. pag. 126, 127.

(2) Tom. III. in folio. pag. 644.

(3) In the Remark [A] of the Article AMPHARES, near the end.

[B] He published, among the rest, a Discourse on the Justice of deposing Henry III.] This we learn from William Barclay, in his Answer to that Book, which is part of his Work against the Monarchomachi (4). Thuanus mentions it still more clearly: See the next Remark. The same Barclay observes, that Boucher published another Book in French, under the Name of Francis de Verone Constantin. ' Quo- ' niam

(4) The 6th Book, the particular Title whereof is, Anacrisis libro- rum Jo. Bouche- rii de justâ imo injustâ Hen- rici III. abdica- tione e Franco- rum Regno.

The most infamous Satire imaginable [C]. There is a strong probability that he was an Accomplice in the enormous Action of James Clement [D]. He was the bolder after the Death of that Prince, because he could then screen himself under a pretence that the Successor was actually and notoriously a Huguenot. That pretence failed him to his great Grief, when Henry IV professed himself a Roman Catholic; nevertheless he persisted in his first Opinion. He continued to preach, that he ought not to be obeyed, and published nine Sermons, dedicated to the Cardinal of Placentia, wherein he maintained that the Abjuration of the * Bearnois was but a Feint, and that his Absolution was void [E]. Notwithstanding all his Sermons, and Libels, the Parisians submitted to Henry IV. The Day after the Reduction of the City his Sermons were burnt at la Croix du Tiroir (e). But he persisted in the Party of the Leaguers, and retired into the Netherlands (f) with the Spanish Garrison, which had been in Paris during the League, and

[* So he called Henry IV. born in Bearn. Rem. Crit.]

(e) Cayet Chron. Novenaire, fol. 225. verso ad ann. 1593.

(f) Mezerai, Abr. Chronol. ad ann. 1594. pag. 824.

'niam — turbas illas civiles prioribus tuis Libris & 'Concionibus excitatas, accensaque in Reges odia, 'posteriore scripto, quod patriâ linguâ, sub Fran'cisci Veronensis Constantini nomine divulgâsti, 'non modo non mitigare & compescere, sed novo 'artificio fovere & propagare de industriâ nisus es: 'patere me tecum vehementius paulò, sed lenius 'tamen quam rei indignitas flagitat, regum & reg'norum omnium nomine de hâc injuria expostulare

(g) Gul. Barclaius lib. v. contra monarchomach. pag. 599.

'(g). —— Since —— in a late piece published by 'you in French, under the Name of Francis de Ve'ronne Constantin, you have endeavoured by a new 'Artifice, not to compose and mitigate, but to cherish 'and propagate the civil Tumults and Hatred of the 'King, caused by your former Books and Sermons; 'suffer me to expostulate with you in the Name of 'all Kings and Kingdoms, concerning this Injury, 'which tho' I do some what warmly, yet will it be 'much more mildly than the baseness of the thing 'deserves. The French Book he charges him with, is even more wicked than the Latin one; for it is the infamous Apology for John Châtel, under this Title, An Apology for John Châtel, a Parisian, who was executed, and for the Fathers and Scholars of the Society of Jesus, who were banished the Kingdom of France, against the Arrêt of Parliament, passed against them at Paris, the twenty second of December (1594); in five Parts. By Francis de Verone Constantin. The Name of Francis de Verone Constantin is a convincing proof, that Barclay attributes this Apology for John Châtel to Boucher: nevertheless I shall give another Reason; and quote a Passage which will put the thing out of all manner of doubt. 'Cur in spurcissimâ illâ & infami 'tuâ Apologiâ, quam pro parricidâ & perduelle 'manifesto, recenti irâ & inveterato odio furens & 'fremens evomuisti, nefarium perditi adolescentis 'conatum, facinusque omni memoriâ execrandum, 'in Regis itidem Christianissimi, & (si alium Gal'lia unquam habuit) clementissimi perniciem medi'tatum, ut pulcherrimum & prope divinum, atque

(6) Id. ibid. lib. vi. cap. xxv. pag. 795.

'omni ex parte heroicum commendasti (6)? ----- 'Why did you, in that most filthy and infamous A'pology of your's, which you, fretting and foaming 'with fresh rage and inveterate hate, spued out for a 'manifest Murderer and Rebel, and extol an Act 'to be cursed to all Posterity, contrived for the de'struction of a most Christian and (if ever France 'had one) a most merciful King; I say why did you 'extol it as a most beautiful and almost divine 'Action, and in every respect heroic.' Barclay after having said this, praises the Apology which the Jesuits had published, wherein they detested Châtel's Action and confessed that he was justly punished, as a Parricide. We shall see in the Remark [H] Citation (15), that Cardinal d'Ossat was of Barclay's Mind, concerning the Apology for John Châtel.

[C] It was the most infamous Satire imaginable.] Thuanus says that William Rose Bishop of Senlis, the little Feuillant, the Jesuit Commolet, Genebrard Feuardent, Launoi, (a Minister who turned Papist,) Boucher, and some others, defamed King Henry III, with a prodigious rage, both with their Tongues and in anonymous Libels, and that at last they gloried in putting their Names to those satirical Writings. He adds that Boucher was so bold as to put his Name to the Book in question, which was printed in a fine Letter for Nicolas Nivelle, but the Impression was not finished 'till a little after the tragical Death of that King (d). He vented in that Book all manner of abominable stuff against the King: Read what follows: 'Hac fiducia fretus 'librum scripsit Bucherus de justa Henrici III 'abdicatione, nomen suum professus apud Nicolaum 'Nivellum characteribus elegantibus expressum, 'neque dum, cum rex vivere desiit, consummatum 'quo non aliud flagitiosius toto illo effrenatæ li'centiæ tempore publicatum est, eoque rabula 'impudentissimus innumera dictu fœda & auditu 'horrenda per summam calumniam Regi affingebat, 'propter quæ eum tanquam à communione ec'clesiæ ipso jure exclusum, ab omni regni jure 'excidisse, & legitime abdicatum, ac tandem justo 'Dei judicio & impulsu interfectum esse colligebat

(7) Thuan Hist. lib. xcv pag. 280. col. 2.

'(7). —— Emboldened by this, Boucher wrote a 'Book on the Justice of deposing Henry III, with 'his Name prefixed, printed by Nicolas Nivelle, *'in an elegant Letter, but not finished till after 'the Death of the King. A more flagitious thing 'than this had not appeared in all that time of 'exorbitant licentiousness: there the impudent Brawler 'had, in a most reproachful Manner, aspersed the 'King with many abominable and shocking Things; 'for which, as in his account, he was justly ex'cluded from the Communion of the Church: so 'he concluded, he had likewise lost all Right to the 'Kingdom, and was lawfully deposed, and at last 'slain by the just Judgment and Impulse of 'God.'

[§ (d) See the Catholicon d'Espagne Edit. 1712, Tom. II. pag. 332. Rem. Crit.]

[D] There is a strong Probability, that he was an Accomplice in the enormous Action of James Clement (8).] 'Antony Loysel has left in writing in his 'Journal, that the same Day the King was wound'ed, and before any News was brought of his 'Wound, he heard a Sermon at St Merry's by 'Dr Boucher, who said, to comfort his Hearers, 'that as on that Day, the First of the Month 'August, in which they celebrated the Feast of 'St Peter in Bonds, God had delivered that A'postle out of Herod's Hands, they ought to hope, 'that he would grant them the like favour. Where'upon he did not scruple to advance this damna'ble Proposition, that it was an Act of great Me'rit to kill a King, who is a Heretic or a fa'vourer of Heretics. The other Preachers, going 'Hand in Hand with him, preached at the same 'time with more passion and fury than ever they 'had done against Henry de Valois; and the same 'unexceptionable Witness says, that they gave the 'People certain hopes that God would soon 'deliver them from him: Which made many 'Persons believe that they had been acquainted 'with the horrible design of that Parricide (9).' I take this from Maimbourg, an Author, who is not hasty in drawing consequences upon such a Subject.

(8) A Dominican Monk who killed Henry III.

(9) Maimbourg, Hist. de la Ligue lib. iii. ad ann 1589 pag. 1co. Dutch Edit.

[E] He published nine Sermons, against the Abjuration of Henry IV, wherein he maintained that his Absolution was void.] He published them the first time at Paris: He printed a second Edition of them at Douay after he had left France: A poor comfort for his vexation to see upon the Throne a Prince, whom he had so much reviled in his Discourses and Writings. Thuanus uses him as he deserves. 'Inter eos vero, says he (10), unus 'repertus est Joannes Bucherus S. Benedicti Curio 'qui maledicendi rabie efferatus cum in desunctum and marched out the Twenty second of March 1594. He obtained a Canonicate at Tournay, and died Dean of the Chapter of that City fifty Years after, but very much altered in his Humour, being as zealous a Frenchman among Foreigners, as he had been a furious Spaniard in France (g) [F]. His Character may be judged of by the Diſcourſe which I mention in the Remarks; it is a Reproof given him by King Henry III [G]. On the News that he was to come to Rome, Cardinal d'Oſſat intreated the Pope to cauſe him to be impriſoned [H], and ſpoke vigorouſly

(10) Thuan. Hist. lib. cvii. pag. 558. ad ann. 1593.

(g) Id. ibid.

' regem contumelioſus fuiſſet, in hunc injurioſus ' eſſe voluit, & IX. longas conciones ad Mederi- ' ci fanum habuit de ſimulata Henrici Borbonii ' Benearni Principis ad eccleſiam reconciliatione, ' & irrita abſolutione, quas anno proximo Kalend. ' Mart. Cardinali Placentino inſcriptas ac typis in ' urbe excuſas, poſtea cum ab ea exularet, Duci ' in Atrebatibus recudendas curavit, furore nondum ' per ſecutam rerum converſionem aut locorum ' aut temporis intercapedinem domito. —— But ' among them was one John Boucher, Curate of ' St Bennet, a furious railing Fellow, who as he had ' contumelioufly treated the late King, was reſolv- ' ed to abuſe the preſent; and preached nine long ' Sermons in St Merry's Church, on the feigned Re- ' conciliation of Henry of Bourbon, Prince of Bearne, ' to the Church, and the Nullity of his Abſolution, ' which he got printed in the City, and publiſhed ' the Year following on the firſt of March, dedicated ' to the Cardinal of Placentia, and again, in his ' Exile, reprinted at Douay, his rage not being yet ' conquered by the Change of affairs that followed, ' or the diſtance of time or place.

The whole Title of that Work according to my Edition is thus: ' Some Sermons concerning the ' feigned Converſion and the Nullity of the pre- ' tended Abſolution of Henry de Bourbon, Prince of ' Bearn, at St Denis in France, Sunday the twenty ' fifth of July 1593, on the ſubject of the Goſpel ' for the ſame Day, Attendite à falſis prophetis, ' &c. Matth. vii. delivered in St Merry's Church in ' Paris, from the firſt day of Auguſt following, to ' the Ninth of the ſaid Month. By JOHN BOU- ' CHER Doctor of Divinity. Nonne qui oderunt ' te Domine oderam, & ſuper inimicos tuos tabeſce- ' bam. Pſalm cxxxviii. According to the Copy ' Printed at Paris for G. Chaudiere, R. Nivelle, ' and R. Thierry, in St James's Street M.D.XCIV.' The Approbation of the Divines of Paris is to be ſeen on the back of the Title Page. The Epiſtle Dedicatory to the Cardinal of Placentia, Legate of the Holy Apoſtolical See in the Kingdom of France, is dated from Paris the firſt of March 1594, and ſigned J. B. The Adverti ſement to the Reader ſays that ſeveral things have been added to what had been preached. At the end there are ſome Letters of Henry IV, to the Canton of Bern, to the Lady de Tintevelle, to the Queen of England, to the City of Rochelle and ſuch others, and to ſome private Perſons, who were Huguenots.

[F] He died, Dean of Tournay; ---- but very much altered in his Humour, and as zealous a Frenchman among Strangers, as he had been a furious Spaniard in France.] The continual railing of the Flemings againſt the French, could not but awaken by degrees a natural tenderneſs for his Country in the Soul of this mutineer. People at Paris were not thoroughly perſuaded that he was changed in the Year 1625. For the Libel which came out at that time againſt France, which we ſhall ſee the Title of below, was aſcribed by many Perſons to Boucher: But he denied it by Letters; let us ſee what the Mercure François, ſays on this Subject: ' To prevent it's being diſcovered ' that this Book was firſt printed in Italy, it was ' given out that it was firſt diſperſed in Flanders ' before it it was handed about in France, and ' that Dr Boucher (who is yet living at Tournay, ' and who formerly wrote ſeveral Books on thoſe ' matters during the League of 1588, and the ' following Years, and againſt the moſt Chriſtian ' Kings) was the Author of it: But that Doctor ' having notice of it, proteſted in Letters, which he ' wrote to his Friends at Paris, that it was falſly ' aſcribed to him, and that upon the Word of a ' Prieſt, he had not ſeen that ſmall Book intitu- ' led Admonitio: His Letter was alſo ſhewn to ' the curious, which removed the ſuſpicion that ' was entertained of him, and made it fall on the ' Jeſuit Eudemon Joannes, a Greek by Nation, ' who came into France with the Legate (11).'

(11) Mercure Fran. Tom XI. pag. 1058, 1059.

There never was more indignation ſhewn in France againſt any Book than againſt that: It was intituled G. G. R. ' Theologi, ad Ludovicum de- ' cimum tertium Galliæ & Navarræ Regem Chriſtia- ' niſſimum, ADMONITIO, fideliſſimè, humillimè ' veriſſimè facta, & ex Gallico in Latinum tranſlata. ' Qua breviter & nervosè demonſtratur Galliam ' fœdè & turpiter impium fœdus iniiſſe, & injuſtum ' bellum hoc tempore contra Catholicos moviſſe, ' ſalvaque Religione proſequi non poſſe. Auguſtæ ' Francorum, cum facultate Catholici Magiſtratus ' Anno M.D.C.XXV. — An Admonition moſt faith- ' fully, humbly, and truly given to Lewis XIII, moſt ' Chriſtian King of France and Navarre, by G.G.R. ' Divine, wherein is briefly and fully proved, that ' France has baſely and ſcandalouſly entered into ' an impious Alliance, and moved an unjuſt War at ' this time, againſt the Catholics, which they can- ' not carry on without Injury to Religion; at Soiſſons ' with Licence of the Catholic Magiſtrate Anno 1625.' It was condemned by the Sorbonne, and by the Aſſembly of the Clergy of France: The Lieutenant Civil cauſed it to be burnt by the Common Executioner: The Parliament of Paris made ſeveral Decrees to hinder the Cenſure of the Aſſembly of the Clergy from being enervated. See the Mercure Jeſuite, in the firſt Volume, a Work that is aſcribed to James Godefroy the Son of Denys (12).

(12) Vide Præfat. Samuel. Mareſii ad Aſſiniones Cadanæi.

[G] His Character may be judged of by a Reproof given him by King Henry III.] That Prince ſent for the Parliament and the Faculty of Divinity to the Louvre: ' and ſeverely reprimanded the ' Divines for the inſolent and unbridled liberty ' they took to preach againſt him and all his Actions ----- and addreſſing himſelf particularly to ' Boucher, Rector of St Bennet, he called him a ' wicked Man, and told him that his Uncle Poiſſe, ' who had undeſervedly been a Counſellor of the ' Court, was a wicked Fellow, but that he was ſtill ' worſe, and that his Companions were but little ' better: He added that he directed his Speech ' particularly to him, becauſe he had been ſo im- ' pudent as to preach that he had cauſed Burlat, ' a Doctor of Divinity of Orleans, to be drowned ' in a Sack, though the ſaid Burlat was daily ' eating, drinking, and making merry with him; ' telling them moreover, that they could not deny ' that they were notoriouſly wretched and damned ' for two reaſons, firſt for having ſlandered him ' their Natural and Lawful Prince in the Pulpit ' of Truth, and ſpoken ſeveral calumnies againſt ' his Honour, which is forbidden them in the ' Holy Scripture. Secondly, that when they came ' out of the Pulpit, after they had ſlandered and ' told many Lies of him, they went directly to ' ſay Maſs at the Altar, without reconciling them- ' ſelves and confeſſing the ſaid Lies and Slanders, ' though they preached daily that if any one has ' told a Lie or ſpoke evil of any body whatſo- ' ever, according to the Words of the Goſpel, he ' muſt go and reconcile himſelf with him before ' he preſents himſelf at the Altar (13).' Nothing can be more ſolid than this cenſure; but it is not for a King to make uſe of it; he ought to have recourſe to other Arms; and if Henry III had been as well verſed in the Art of reigning as in the Morality of the Goſpel, he would not have been reduced to the condition of a Catechiſt to the Preachers of Paris.

(13) See the Journal of Henry III, on the 30th of December 1587. pag. 109.

[H] On news that he was to come to Rome Cardinal d'Oſſat intreated the Pope to cauſe him to be impriſoned.] The account he gives of it to Mr de Villeroy will yet further diſcover the Actions and Character of that Man: Wherefore I inſert it at length. ' I told him (14) alſo that Dr ' Boucher

(14) Viz. the Pope.

rously to him against this Mutineer. Can any thing be more horrible than the Complaint he made to the Duke of Maienne, after the just Punishment of those who had caused the first President Brisson to be hanged? Had he not the Impiety to say that these profligate Wretches were Martyrs of JESUS CHRIST [I]? I add that he was one of the Adversaries of Richer, and published several Pieces against him in French, under the feigned names of Paul Timoris, and Pompey Ribemont (b).

(b) See the Journal des Sçavans of the 14th of December 1702.

Boucher had left that Country before the said Count, to come to Rome to visit LIMINA APOSTOLORUM PETRI & PAULI, in the Name of the Bishop of Tournay who had given him a Canonicate in his Church: And hereupon I exposed to his Holiness the violence and rage of that Man, the Books he had written against the late King, and since against the Life and Conversation of the King now reigning, justifying the Parricide attempted by John Châtel (15), and exhorting every one to finish what that Murderer had begun, and that he had also written several things against the Authority and Power of the Pope and the Holy See, and was yet more obstinate and violent to this Day than ever, and there was but too much Cause and Reason to make him a Prisoner, and punish him severely for his crimes and blasphemies. But if his Holiness's Goodness and Clemency, and the condition of the Times and other considerations, did not permit him to use that Man so rigorously as he deserved, that at least his Holiness should shew him, by not admitting him to kiss his Feet or otherwise, that such Persons were not acceptable to him, nor ought to expect from his Holiness the reception and favours, which are due to good, peaceable, and moderate Men. The Pope answered me, that he remembred he had formerly heard of that Man, and also that the Sieur Malvaisie, at that time Nuncio in the Netherlands, had wrote to him, that he said the Pope could not observe the King. His Holiness asked me whether he was come. I told him, not that I knew. Well (said he) we shall see (16).' When one considers that the Spaniards not only gave a Retreat, but also a Canonicate, to such a Man as he, one cannot forbear saying that in this World all things are sacrificed to Political Interest, and National Hatred. They knew he was a Man, who to satisfy the rage with which he was transported against the Person of Henry IV, overturned both the Civil and Ecclesiastical Authority: He took the Power of Absolution from the Pope, he submitted Crowns to the caprice of Subjects, and the Life of Kings to the Daggers of Assassins. Those Principles were as opposite to the Faith of the Spaniards as to that of the French Nation: Nevertheless they were tolerated in that Doctor, because he hated the King of France, and as I have already said, they gave him Benefices. Nay, They let him pronounce and publish the Funeral Oration of Philip II (17). I have not been able to find out yet whether he performed his Journey or not. Cardinal d'Ossat wrote the twentieth of January 1601, that he had been told that Boucher remained Sick at Cologne (18). He was not the only one whom the Spaniards protected and rewarded in the Netherlands. Did not Mongaillard, so well known by the Name of the little Feuillant, one of the Panegyrists of the Murderer of King Henry III, obtain an Abbey (19)?

(15) This shews, that Cardinal d'Ossat believed that the pretended François de Verone Constantin, who wrote the Apology for John Châtel, was no other than John Boucher. It was also William Barclay's Opinion. See above the Remark [B].

(16) The Letter wherein Cardinal d'Ossat speaks thus, was written from Rome the 1st of December 1600.

(17) At Tournay the 25th of October 1598.

(18) It is the 253th Letter in the Edition of Mr Amelot de la Houssaie.

(19) That of Orval.

[I] He had the Impiety to say that the profligate Wretches, who caused the President Brisson to be hanged, were Martyrs of JESUS CHRIST.] These are Thuanus's Words. ' Joannes Bucerus Curio S. Benedicti homo vecors Catholicorum bonorum ac zelotarum nomine Orationem expostulatoriam ad ipsum (Meduanum) habuit, qua publicam ultionem, carnificinam, merito supplicio facinorosos affectos, Dei martyres, insigni impudentiâ vocabat (20). — John Boucher Curate of St Bennet, a furious Man, made an expostulatory Oration to him (the Duke de Mayenne), in which he had the consummate Impudence to call the public Vengeance Murder, and the criminals, deservedly put to Death, Martyrs of God.

(20) Thuan. Hist. lib. cli. pag. 443, 444. ad ann. 1591. See also Moreri Tom. III. in fol. pag. 998.

REFLEXIONS on the Rewards which the Spaniards bestowed upon those, who made Panegyrics upon the murtherers of kings.

BOUCHET (WILLIAM), Sieur de Brocourt, published a Book, intituled, Les Sérées, in the Year 1584, and dedicated it to the Merchants of the City of Poitiers, who had constituted him their Judge and Consul. He divided it into twelve Chapters, and continued the Work to the third Volume: so his Sérées are divided into three Parts, each containing twelve Chapters. The Reason of the Title is because they are Discourses supposed to have passed in Evening Conversations. These Discourses are stuffed with all manner of Jokes and Puns: gross Obscenities are frequent there: but they have this particular Character, that you find a great deal of Learning in them, and that the Author had read a great deal. He was dead when the Epistle Dedicatory of the third Volume was writ, the first Day of November 1607. There are several Editions of his Sérées: I make use of that of Paris, by Jeremy Perier, in 1608, in three Volumes in 12mo.

BOUCHET (JOHN), Author of a great Number of French Books, some in Verse and some in Prose, was of Poitiers, and flourished in the XVIth Century. He was an Advocate, or a Counsellor at Law, if we believe la Croix du Maine (a); but du Verdier vau Privas makes him only an Attorney (b). The most considerable of his Works is that intituled, Les Annales d'Aquitaine — The Annals of Aquitain [A]. He published it at Paris, in the Year 1537, in Folio (c); he afterwards revised it, and had it reprinted at Poitiers (d), in 1557, in Folio; he continued

(a) La Croix du Maine Biblioth. Franç. pag. 208.

(b) Du Verdier, Biblioth. Franç. pag. 656.

(c) Id. ibid.

(d) By Englebert de Marnef.

[A] The most considerable of his pieces is that of the Annals of Aquitain.] ' It is a very laborious Work, and full of fine and very memorable Stories, and, to repeat the Judgment of Robert Ceneau called Cenalis, Bishop of Auranches &c, in a learned Book which he wrote on the French; this Book of Annals by John Bouchet is one of the most valuable of all our French Histories, and deserves to be translated into Latin that Foreigners may be acquainted with it (1)' There is no Flattery in this Judgment, but as for Encomiums given to this Author, and to the Annals of Aquitain by John Quintin (2), I believe we may make large Abatements, without calling in question his Assertion, that John Bouchet did not write after common talk, as many others had done, but examined the most certain Monuments: ' De quibus (Gallis) tam multa egregiè Bouchetus, ut e dolio (quod aiunt) hausisse videatur: nec ea (crede) ex tonstrinis sutrinisque deprompta, quò maximè nomine malè audit bona nostrorum historicorum pars. Paginas in Annalibus Magistratuum, Fastisque, non sine longæ inquisitionis tædio ac sudore percurrit, lectu fæpe difficiles (scio) exesas jam tineis membranas vel literis exolescentibus, verbisque interpunctis. Veterum monumenta, scalptos lapides, ruderata etiam marmora, omnia (hercule) in historiâ (non mediocre fidei & diligentiæ tinued it to that very Year; for it ends with a long detail of the secret Machinations of the Spaniards against several Places in France: and as these Enterprizes were carried on during the Truce concluded in the Year 1556, he pretends to prove that King Henry II did not break it first [B]. John Bouchet must have been pretty old at that time; for he tells us that Peter Bouchet his Father, Attorney in the Court Laye at Poictiers, being at Supper in the Year 1480 with another Attorney his Neighbour, took the Poison which his Neighbour's dissolute Wife had prepared for her Husband, and died the third Day after (e). He says farther, that in the Year 1486 'he saw the Nativity, Passion, and Resurrection of our LORD JESUS CHRIST 'acted and represented by Mysteries and Personages at Poictiers, in great Triumph 'and Magnificence: at which were present a great many Gentlemen and Ladies 'of the Province of Poictou, and the neighbouring Places (f).'

(1) La Croix du Maine, pag. 208.

(2) In a Latin Preface to the Annals of Aquitain.

(e) Bouchet Annal. d'Aquit. in the Year 1480. fol. 162 Edit. 1557.

(f) Bouchet Annal. d'Aquit. in the Year 1480, fol. 168. Edit. 1557.

'ligentiæ argumentum) sedulâ manu revolvit, tempora temporibus, gesta gestis, resque rebus, acri admodum, & oculata supputatione componens (3). —— Concerning whom (the French) Bouchet has said so many things excellently well, that he seems (as we say) to have gone to the Fountain, his stories not taken from Barbers Shops or Coblers Stalls, on which account chiefly great part of our Historians are blamed. He, with infinite Labour and Pains, revolved the Annals of Magistrates and public Records, which (I know) are often difficult to read, the Parchment being moth eaten, the letters very old, and the words interpointed. He examined with Sedulity the Monuments of the Antients, Inscriptions, and even Marbles, buried in rubbish; every thing (in short) relating to History (no small Argument of his Fidelity and Diligence), comparing Times with Times, Actions with Actions, and Things with Things, with the greatest Sagacity and Judgment.'

(3) Joannes Quintinus Heduus, in Epist. ad lectorem Annalibus Aquitanicis præfixâ.

[B] He pretends to prove that King Henry II did not break the Truce first.] He was accused of it, and Appearances were against him. John Bouchet is not alone in his endeavours to justify him. The Sieur Francis de Boyvin, Baron du Villars, has also given a detail of the secret Practices of the Spaniards, and says, that whoever considers impartially these Maranesque Intrigues, will excuse the Resentment of the French (4). The Maxim, which he had advanced on Occasion of the like Plots of the Spaniards in the Year 1550, might have place here. 'To say the truth, they break 'the Peace, not who first make War, but who 'arm privately and use secret practices in prejudice 'of Treaties and Alliances, as the Emperor did (5)'

(4) Memoirs de du Villars, liv. viii. pag. 717, 718.

(5) Id. liv. x. p. 15.

In reality, the Aggressor is not he who gives the first blow; but he who first resolves and prepares to do it. This Mr Puffendorf has well determined. 'But when we have evident Proof, says he (6), 'that another does actually intend, and has taken 'proper measures to do us an injury, altho' he has 'not openly declared such his intention; then we 'may fairly put ourselves on our Defence, and anticipate the Aggressor, before he compleats the Preparations he is making to do us the designed mischief: provided notwithstanding we have endeavoured by friendly Advice, to move him to lay aside his ill purposes, so long that there remain 'no hopes of his being prevailed upon to do so by 'fair and gentle means: In using which friendly 'Advice and gentle Means, care must be taken 'that it be not done when it may prove a prejudice and a disadvantage to our own Affairs. He 'who first forms the design to do an injurious Act, 'and first makes preparation to bring it about, is 'to be accounted the Aggressor, altho' it may perhaps so fall out, that the other using greater diligence may prevent him, and so commit the first 'open Acts of Hostility. It is not absolutely necessary to a justifiable self-defence, that I received 'the first stroke, or that I only ward off and avoid the blows that are actually aimed at me.'

(6) Puffendorf, Duties of the Man and the Citizen, Book I. Chap. V. §. 17. of the English Translation.

According to John Bouchet and the Baron du Villars, this was the Case of Henry II, with Charles V.

BOUCHIN (STEPHEN), Counsellor, and King's Attorney in the Royal Courts of Beaune in Burgundy, exercised that Office for twenty Years, after his Father and Grandfather who had held it for sixty Years (a). He published some Pleadings and Conclusions, which he had taken during his Exercise of that Employ, and printed a second Edition of them, with Additions, in the Year 1620 [A]. He had a great (a) Bouchin, Epistle Dedicatory to his Pleadings.

[A] He printed a second Edition of his Pleadings in the Year 1620.] This Edition was printed at Paris by Claude Morel in 8vo, it contains but six Pleas; and yet it is Three hundred and sixty Pages. The matter of these Discourses is pretty curious, and gives him room to quote a great many Love Stories. The first Plea is 'on the Case of one pretended to be under Age, who was accused and 'brought to Trial for having said in several Places, 'that a married Woman had been found divers 'times with the Curate of her Parish, who knew 'her carnally. The second, against a young Woman accused of having, by a pretended Charm, 'hindered the Consummation of a Marriage. The 'third, against a Son accused as a Criminal by his 'Father. The fourth, for a Husbandman condemned in a Fine for stealing some Bread Dough 'in a time of Famine. The fifth, touching the preference of Creditors and Privileged Persons, at 'the sale of Goods left by an Ecclesiastic. The 'sixth, on a Charivary, or Mock Music, given to 'a Woman that was married again immediately 'after the Death of her Husband (1).' They who had given it, the next Day 'demanded Money of 'the new married Couple for the Charge they had 'been at (2);' that being refused, they 'brought 'them before a Judge, who ordered them a small 'Sum (3).' The married folks appealed from the Sentence. Bouchin concluded by the Evidence that it was ill judged, and the Appeal good (4).

(1) Three Weeks after.

(2) Bouchin, Plaidoies, pag. 301, 302.

(3) Note he observes, pag. 316, that Thomas Faber and Chasseneus do not approve the Charivary, yet others are of a contrary opinion, and have wrote that non fit injuria secundo nubenti si carivarium detur.

(4) Bouchin, Plaidoies, pag. 360.

He leaves no manner of common place untouched; he begins with praising Virginity, and Widowers who do not marry again; then he proceeds to declaim against second Marriages; and especially against the impatience of Widows who marry too hastily, and against the impudence of old Men that marry, and lastly against Step-Mothers; and then, on a sudden, excuses or justifies all that he had been condemning, and confirms the whole by Quotations and Examples as before.

To give an Idea of his motley Stile, I will give a Specimen of it from the place where he details the inconveniencies of second Marriages*. 'So 'that one may say with Hesiod, that he who mar- 'ries a second time

* Ibid. pag. 330. and following.

Naufragus navigat his profundum difficile.

Hesiod, ex I. Epigram.

Ναυηγὸς πλάει δὶς βυθὸν ἀργάλεον,

'he is shipwrecked in a place where there is no 'bottom; after the Death of one Wife to seek a 'second, is, according to the Opinion of the comic 'Philemon, to desire to float again on a Sea of Disquiet and Misery: it is a game where Chance has 'more share than Reason, and an effect of a blank 'Lottery, where every Body is hunting for Benefits, and the luckiest get them; and it is in vain 'for the unlucky to complain, that Cupid has not 'struck them with a golden Dart, armed with a 'shining point.

Cujus

great deal of Reading, but according to the Cuſtom of that time he diſplays it too profuſely [B]: for without counting the Greek and French Verſes, which he cites, there is almoſt as much Latin as French in his Pleadings. He followed the ſame Method in his Book, intituled, The Perfect Magiſtrate.

Ovid. vii. Met. Fab. 26. ver. 673.

- - - cujus ſuit aurea cuſpis.

'which is the Dart that begets Love in Hearts 'wounded with it; but with that which is endow-'ed with a contrary Virtue, and creates Hatred in-'ſtead of Love, being quite blunt and armed only 'with Lead.

Idem. 1 Met. Fab. ix. pag. 469.

- - - fugat hoc, facit illud amorem.

'That if there be in the Wife ſome ſmall remains 'of Beauty plaſtered according to cuſtom,

Plaut. in Merc. Act. 2. Sc. 2.

Quaſi ſit ſignum pictum in pariete,

'ſays Plautus,

Plaut. in Moſtellaria, Act. 1. Sc. 2.

Nam iſthæc veteres quæ ſe unguentis unctitans, interpoles
Vetulæ, edentulæ, quæ vitia corporis fuco occulunt,
Ubi ſeſe ſudor cum unguentis conſociavit, illico
Itidem olent, quaſi quom una multa Jura confundit coquus.

'That if they adjuſt their Hair with a little more 'artifice than ordinary,

Ovid. i. Faſt. ver. 406.

- - - comptis arte manuque comis:

'If they dip it in the Water of the River Gratis or 'Cybaris, to make it look like thread of Gold,

Id. i. Met. ver. 315. Fab. 18.

Electro ſimiles faciunt auroque capillos:

'If they never go without their Chains and Neck-'laces, Propert. lib. ii. Eleg. 2.

Auratis circumdata colla catenis:

'And if there is ſtill any thing agreeable.

Ovid. ii. de Arte Amandi, ver. 678.

Et faciunt curâ, ne videantur anus:

'If, contrary to Soſtrata in Plautus, they are com-'plaiſant and cajoling, the Husband's Head akes, 'and he grows jealous, Idem. vii. Met. Fab. 26. ver. 715.

Eſſe metus cœpit, ne jura jugalia conjux
Non bene ſervaſſet.

'The Wife as ſuſceptible of Jealouſy as the Huſ-'band, more pale than the jealous Procris, Idem. iii. de Arte Amandi, ver. 703.

Palluit ut ſerâ lectus de vite racemus:

'More dry of this peccant Humour, and yellower 'than Leaves blown off by an ill Wind, or nipped 'by the cold,

Id. ib. ver. 704.

Frondes quas nova læſit Hyems;

Plutarch Roman Queſtions, Qu. 16. Emilius Probus lib. xv.

'And who would not ſuffer her Maids to enter the 'Temple of the Goddeſs Leucothea, if it were not to 'box them, may on the other Hand complain with 'old Syra, that the Husbands imagine they have 'greater Privileges than the Wives,

Plaut. in Merc. Act. 4. Sc. 6.

Ecaſtor lege durâ vivunt mulieres,
Multoque iniquiore miſeræ, quam viri:
Nam ſi vir ſcortum duxit clam uxore ſuâ,
Id ſi reſcivit uxor, impune eſt viro:
Uxor vero, ſi clam domo egreſſa eſt foràs,
Viro ſit cauſa, exigitur matrimonio.
Utinam lex eſſet eadem uxori, quæ eſt viro.

'She is ſuſceptible of Jealouſy if a Heifer but break 'into her Paſture (theſe are the Words of Oenone 'to Paris) or if her Husband

Ovid. Epiſt. v. Oenone Paridi.

Fundum alienum arat, incultum familiarem deſerit;

Plaut. in Aſinaria. Act. v. Sc. 2.

'which ſhe does not think more lawful for him 'than for herſelf, periniquum eſt ut pudicitiam vir 'ab uxore exigat, quam ipſe non præſtet, ſays the 'Civilian Papinian, that if he takes too much Liber-'ty, or arrogates too much to himſelf, ſhe common-'ly follows his Steps,

Vitio eſt improba facta viri:

Ovid. ii. de Arte Amandi, ver. 400.

'which, among other inconveniencies of Marriage, 'cauſes domeſtic quarrels, which happens, it may 'be, for want of having ſacrificed to Juno Jugalis, 'the Inventreſs of Marriage, and who takes care of 'the Nuptials,

Toris quæ præſidet alma maritis,

Idem. Epiſt. ii. Phil. Demophoon. ver. 4.

'to whom Dido, deſiring to marry Æneas, took 'care to make the firſt ſacrifice, Junoni ante omnes, cui jura jugalia curæ.

Virg. 4. Æneid. 49.

[B] According to the Cuſtom of that time he diſplays his reading too profuſely (5).] This ill Cuſtom, which prevailed not only at the Bar, but alſo in the Pulpit, is by degrees aboliſhed. Mr de la Bruyere expreſſes this change very well. 'It is 'not an Age ago, ſays he (6), that a French Book 'was a certain Number of Latin Pages with a 'few Lines, or a few Words of French ſcattered 'here and there in them. Paſſages, Inſtances, Ci-'tations, would not ſuffice barely as ſuch. Ovid 'and Catullus decided finally concerning Marriages 'and Wills, and came with the Pandects to the 'Aſſiſtance of Widows and Orphans; ſacred and 'prophane did not ſhun each other: they were got 'together even into the Pulpit; where St Cyril, 'Horace, St Cyprian, and Lucretius talked alternate-'ly; the Poets were of the Opinion of St Auſtin and 'all the Fathers; they would talk Latin a long while 'together, and even Greek before the Women and 'Sextons. A Man muſt have a prodigious deal of 'Learning to preach ſo ill. Different times, diffe-'rent Cuſtoms: the Text is ſtill Latin, all the 'Diſcourſe is French and fine French, the Goſpel 'itſelf is hardly cited. Now a Man needs but 'little Learning to preach well.' The Advocates were not alone in this Practice; the Advocates-General and Firſt Preſidents ran into it as well as they. This appears by the Collections of Harangues pronounced at the opening of Seſſions, and Arrêts pronounced in the red Robe. Mr Balzac very much diſapproved this Cuſtom (7), and makes merry with a Firſt Preſident, who in the middle of his Speech made an Apoſtrophe to the Attorneys, telling them they might learn their Duty in the Scholiaſt on Homer, on ten or a dozen Verſes which he re-cited. 'Illum (Fori Principem) certe nos ipſi audi-'vimus, in medio Orationis curſu compellantem 'his verbis Procuratores, quos vocant & Pragmati-'cos. Docebit vos, o Procuratores, officium veſtrum 'Homerus Iliados x & Euſtathius Scholiaſtes Homeri, 'in illos verſus, quos memoriter ad decem aut 'duodecim recitabat, nullâ numerorum & accen-'tuum habita ratione, ut ſcires qui loqueretur vere 'principem & legibus ſolutum eſſe. Vetus hic Fori 'Pariſienſis morbus eſt, quo Faii, Pibracii, Briſſo-'nii, docti profecto & egregii viri, miſerum in 'modum laboravere (8). —— I my ſelf heard him 'the Firſt Preſident), in the midſt of his Diſcourſe, 'addreſſing himſelf to the Attorneys and Solicitors, 'in theſe Words; Homer will teach you your Duty, 'ye Attorneys, in the tenth Iliad, and Euſtathius, 'the Scholiaſt of Homer, on theſe Verſes, which 'he repeated by heart to the Number of ten or 'twelve, without any regard to Numbers or Accents, 'to let you ſee he was truly free from Leaus. This 'is an old Diſtemper of the Law Courts of Paris, 'with which your Fayes, your Pibracs, your Briſſons, 'tho' really learned and excellent Men, were miſera-

(5) Compare this with Remark [B] of the Article SEGLA

(6) La Bruyere Characteres de ce Siecle, in the Chapter on the Pulpit, pag. 533. of the Paris Edit. 1699.

(7) See the 5th and 6th Latin Letters of Balzac.

(8) Balzacius Epiſtolar. Selectæ pag. 54. Edit. in Folio.

' bly affected.' I will add to this Paſſage another ' wherein he cenſures the ſame fault in the famous ' Lewis Servin. ' Scis enim quo genere dicendi ' uteretur Ludovicus * (Servinus), & quam exo- ' ticis deliciis gauderet, doctrinaque aliunde appor- ' tata, vir alias priſci moris retinens, & civis patriæ ' amantiſſimus. Apud te ſunt variæ quas reliquit ' orationes. Vide ut etiam de Cloaca aut fullicidio ' verba facturus,

Doctor ab Auroræ populis & littore rubro
Ægyptum viresque Orientis & ultima ſecum Bactra vehat.

' Raro ibi reperies Prudentum Reſponſa, Paulos, ' Labeones, Scævolas. At paſſim occurrent Rabbi ' Maimon in Hal Beth Habecchira, cap. 4. & in ' Hal. Cele Hammikdaſch, cap. 10, & Rabbi Abra- ' ham ben David, & Rabbi Zacuth in Libro Ju- ' caſin, & Talmud in Maſſecta Joma, &c. - - - - - ' You know Lewis (Servin)'s manner of ſpeaking, ' and what foreign Kickſhaws he delighted in, and ' Learning imported from abroad; a Man otherwiſe ' of uncorrupt Behaviour, and a true Lover of his ' Country. You have by you ſeveral of his Ora- ' tions, which he left behind him. See how, when ' he is to ſpeak about a Sink, or the Eves of a ' Houſe,

The Doctor fetches Egypt to his Aid,
From Aſia brings the Pow'rs of all the Eaſt;
Not India ſcapes.

' You ſhall ſeldom find, there, the Deciſions of Lawyers, ' the Pauli, the Labeones, or the Scævolæ. But, ' every now and then, you have Rabbi Maimon, &c." Let us obſerve, by the way, that even when this Mixture of Literature was moſt in uſe at the Bar, there were Advocates who ſeldom cited Claſſic Authors, either becauſe they ſaw the Abuſe, or they wanted the Art to apply their Learning, or elſe they were not well verſed in the Claſſics. Their Method was certainly better than the other: for what purpoſe could this train of Citations ſerve, but to with-draw the Judge's Attention, and hide the true State of the Cauſe? An Advocate, ſuch as our Stephen Boucbin, pleaded more for himſelf than for his Client; he laboured more to ſhew his own Learning than to prepare the Judges to determine rightly. What could Homer's Verſes ſignify to the Judges of Beaune? Did the People underſtand Greek in theſe little Juriſdictions? It is to be feared that the oppoſite extream, which we have ſometime ſince fallen into, will make the Advocates deſpiſe Learning as a piece of Furniture entirely uſeleſs: but what can be done? It is deſtined that the Remedy of one Abuſe is the Introduction of another.

BOUGI (The Marquis of), Lieutenant-General in the Armies of France in the XVIIth Century. See REVEREND.

BOUHOURS (DOMINIQUE), a famous Jeſuit, died at Paris, the Place of his Birth, the Twenty ſeventh of May 1702, in his Seventy fifth Year. I do not give the Article concerning him, becauſe it is already done in ſeveral Pieces which are in every body's hand, viz. in the Memoires de Trevoux (a), in the Nouvelles de la Republique de Lettres (b), in Journal des Sçavans (c), and in the Mercure Hiſtorique (d). I ſhall therefore only refer to them, and obſerve that among theſe ſeveral Elogies, thoſe in the Journal de Sçavans, and in the Mercure Hiſtorique are the moſt inſtructive.

(a) In the month of Auguſt 1702. pag. 328, French Edit. and month of March 1703. pag. 163. Amſt. Edit.

(b) Auguſt 1702. pag. 231.

(c) July 24, 1702.

(d) October 1702. pag. 413.

BOULAI (CÆSAR EGASSE du), in Latin Bulæus, Regiſter and Hiſtoriographer of the Univerſity of Paris, was Profeſſor of Rhetoric many Years in the College of Navarre. He publiſhed a Treatiſe of Rhetoric, intituled Speculum Eloquentiæ, which was valued. His Theſaurus Antiquitatum Romanarum, which he publiſhed at Paris in the Year 1650, in Folio, is very uſeful not only to thoſe who underſtand nothing but French, but alſo to thoſe who underſtand Latin. Divers Law Caſes of his compoſing have been publiſhed, relating to the Differences which aroſe concerning the Election of the Officers of the Univerſity, or ſuch like matters. Thoſe Pieces ſhew his Zeal for the Faculty of Arts, and the great Knowledge he had of the Uſages and Cuſtoms of that Univerſity. The Work which chiefly ought to immortalize him, is the Hiſtory of the Univerſity of Paris, which he publiſhed in ſix Volumes in Folio [A]. The Impreſſion of it was ſtopt for ſome time (a); but the Commiſſioners appointed by the King to examine what was already printed, and the Author's Deſign, reported that nothing could hinder the Impreſſion from being continued. Du Boulai was not of Tours [B], as has been commonly believed. He died the ſixteenth of October 1678.

(a) See the Mercure Galant, Nov. 1678.

[A] The work which ought chiefly to immortalize him is his Hiſtory of the Univerſity of Paris, in ſix Volumes in folio.] See here what Mr Baillet ſays of it. ' The reaſons for cenſuring that great ' Work ſeem to diminiſh, by degrees, and all of ' them will perhaps vaniſh at laſt, that the Pub- ' lic, notwithſtanding that endeavours have been ' uſed to the contrary, may have a juſt value for a ' work, which is indeed a mixture of good and ' bad things, but is otherwiſe very uſeful to give ' Information of the Actions and Writings of the ' learned Men of France, and even of thoſe Foreigners ' who have appeared in that firſt Univerſity of the ' Kingdom. And indeed they begin to ſay now ' that it is a good Book generally ſpeaking, and ' that it contains many material Pieces, which it ' would be difficult to find elſewhere ſo well col- ' lected (1)."

(1) Baillet, Jugem. des Sçavans, ſur les Critiques Hiſtor. n. 138.

(2) Id. ibid. pag. 170, and not 160, as he is quoted in the Antibaillet, n. 138.

[B] Du Boulai was not of Tours.] Mr Baillet, who makes him a Native of that City (2), was cenſured for it by Mr Menage, whoſe Words are theſe: ' Cæſar Egaſſe du Boulai - - - - - - was ' born in the Village of S. Ellier, in the Lower ' Maine, which is the laſt Pariſh of Maine on the ' ſide of Bretagne. What led Mr Baillet into this ' miſtake is, that du Boulai was Dean of the Tribe ' of Tours in the Univerſity of Paris (3)." Where- upon Mr Menage tells us that in that Univerſity the French Nation is divided into five Tribes, which bear each of them the Name of an Archbiſhopric. ' Theſe five Tribes are thoſe of Paris ' Sens, Reims, Tours, and Bourges - - - - - - The ' Members of the Nations are of the Tribe that ' bears the Name of the Archbiſhopric which is ' their Native Country, or of the Biſhopric where ' they where born holding of that Archbiſhopric. ' And therefore Cæſar Egaſſe du Boulai, who was ' of the Dioceſe of the Biſhop of Mans, firſt Suf- ' fragan of the Archbiſhop of Tours, was of the ' Tribe of Tours.' Mr Patin is therefore miſtaken when he ſays that du Boulai was of the Province of Anjou. I ſhall recite the whole Paſſage, becauſe the Reader will find by it at what time the Hiſtory of the Univerſity of Paris was begun to be printed, and what was then said of it. ‘ The University of Paris have appointed a learned ‘ Man, whose Name is Mr Boulai, of Anjou, who ‘ taught Rhetoric for several Years in the College ‘ of Navarre, to write the History of their own ‘ Body, Studii Parisiensis: It will make several ‘ Volumes in Folio; the first will shortly be put ‘ to the Press; it gives an Account of the State ‘ of Learning at Paris before the University, and ‘ then explains and proves the Foundation of it ‘ by the good King Charlemagne in the VIIIth Cen- ‘ tury, and the Continuation thereof (4).’

(3) Menage, Antibaillet cap. 34.

(4) Patin, 2 Vol. Letter 218, dated Novemb. 26. 1660. pag. 258.

BOULEN (Anne), Mistress, and afterwards Wife of Henry VIII, King of England. See BOLEYN.

BOUQUIN (Peter), a Carmelite Fryar, took his Degree of Doctor of Divinity at Bourges the Twenty third of April 1539 (a). He was Prior of the Convent of that City, and might have come to higher dignities in his Order, if he had not rather chosen to leave it in order to go to the Protestants in Germany (b). He went first to Basil in the Year 1541, where he spent the Winter. Afterwards he took a Journey to Wittemberg where Luther and Melanchthon received him very kindly. His design was to go to a good Friend of his in Pomerania; but Melanchthon made him alter his Design, and engaged him to go to Strasburg, where they wanted a Man to fill up the place which Calvin had left vacant by his Return to Geneva. He read Lectures in the College of Strasburg on the Epistle of St Paul to the Galatians. Some time after he returned to France, where he had a Brother who was Doctor of Divinity, and no enemy to the Protestants. He lodged with him at Bourges, but did not return into the Monastery. Hesshusius taxed him falsly with having returned into it: Bouquin, being persuaded by his Brother that there was reason to hope for the Reformation of the Gallican Church, read Public Lectures on the Hebrew Grammar, and afterwards on the Holy Scripture. He did it without a Salary; but after he had waited upon Margaret de Valois [A], when she went by Bourges at the time of the Marriage of her Daughter Joan d'Albret (c), he was gratified with a Pension by order of that Princess (d), who besides procured him the Place of Preacher in the great Church of Bourges with the Archbishop's Consent. Those Employments and Gratifications continued after the Death of that Lady; for Michael de l'Hôpital, Chancellor of another Margaret de Valois (e), who had the same Inclinations as the first, brought her easily to make no alteration in Bouquin's Fortune. But that Protection was at last insufficient; he found himself exposed to so many dangers, that seeing no likelihood to make his Labours serviceable to the Work of the Gospel, he quitted his Employment. His Resignation did not stop the ill Designs of his Enemies: They brought him into trouble, and he was obliged to plead his Cause before the Parliament of Paris, and afterwards before the Archbishop of Bourges, not without hazard of his Life. He had the good Fortune to escape all those dangers, and took care not to be any more exposed to them. He returned to Strasburg [B], where he exercised the Ministry in the French Church for some Months. Otho Henry, Elector Palatine, invited him to Heidelberg in the Year 1557, and made him Professor of Divinity. That Employment exercised Bouquin's Patience very much by reason of the Disputes about Ubiquity, and the real Presence. Endeavours were used to suppress them at the Conference of Maulbrun, at which he was present in the Year 1564; but it had no better effect than most of the Assemblies of that nature, which inflame the Wounds instead of healing it. Being turned out of his Place in the Year 1577, with all the other Professors, who would not adhere to Lutheranism, he was invited to Lausanne, where he taught Divinity till his Death, that is, till the Year 1582 (f). I shall give the List of his Books [C], and observe that Baudouin says he

(a) Catherinot, Calvinisme de Berri, pag. 3.

(b) Melchior. Adam. in vit. exter. Theolog. pag. 143.

(c) That is, in the Year 1548.

(d) Note, that she was not only Queen of Navarre, but also Duchess of Berry.

(e) ‘ Sister of Henry II. and Duchess of Berry. Bouquin had presented her with his Book, intituled, L'homme parfait. See Melch. Adam in vitis Theolog. exterorum, pag. 145.

(f) Taken from his Life written by Melchior Adam. See vita Theologor. exterorum.

[A] He waited upon Margaret de Valois.] I add, that he presented her with a Book of the Necessity and Use of the Holy Scripture, and that he presented another, intituled Jesus Christ the Spiritual Spouse, to the Princess Joan d'Albret. He was the Author of those two Pieces (1). Note That no Professor of Divinity had a public Salary at Bourges before him, nor was any given after him. Stipendium ex ærario publico ei numerari jussit, (Regina Navarræ) quod nec ante nec post eum Theologorum concessum fuit nemini (2). Here is a passage of John Chaumeau Lord of Lassai: The Doctors whom I knew in the Noble University of Bourges, are Mr Peter Bouquin, Professor of the Hebrew Tongue, &c (3).

(1) Melchior. Adam in vitis Theolog. exter. pag. 145.

(2) Id. ibid.

(3) Chaumeau, Histoire de Berri printed in the Year 1566. pag. 242. See Colomiés Gall. Orien. pag. 32.

[B] He returned to Strasburg.] Melchior Adam forgot a circumstance which informs us of the Year of that Journey, which is, that Bouquin left Bourges with the Civilian Francis Baudouin, and went with him into Germany. Baudouin says so himself, and that it was in the Year 1555. ‘ Cum ‘ jam septem annis in ea Schola (Bituricensi) Bal- ‘ duinus magna cum laude fecisset officium suum ‘ tandem, qui fuit annus M.D.LV. dare se cœpit ‘ quibusdam eum in Germaniam ad excitanda pu- ‘ rioris jurisprudentiæ studia vocantibus. - - - - - - ‘ Comitem & (ut loqueris) assectam habuit Boqui- ‘ num nunc vestrum Doctorem Theologiæ. Eum ‘ non recusamus testem totius professionis (4). - - - ‘ When now Baudouin had done his Duty with ‘ great applause in that School [Bourges] for seven ‘ Years, at last, in the Year M.D.LV, he began to ‘ listen to some who invited him into Germany, to ‘ reform the Study of the Civil-Law - - - - - He had ‘ for his Companion Bouquin, now your Doctor of ‘ Divinity. I appeal to him as a witness of the ‘ whole Journey’

(4) Balduinus in Resp. ad Calvin. & Bezam. fol. 85.

[C] Here is the List of his Books.] I give it such as I find it in Melchior Adam (5). ‘ De- ‘ fensio ad calumnias Doctoris cujusdam Avii in ‘ Evangelii Professores (6). Examen libri quem ‘ D. Tilemannus Hesshusius inscripsit de præsentia ‘ corporis Christi in cœna Domini (7). Theses de ‘ cœna Domini. Exegesis divinæ communicationis. ‘ Assertio

(5) Vitæ Theologor. exterorum, pag. 147.

(6) Printed in the Year 1558. in 4to.

(7) Printed at Basil for Oporinus 1561.

he assisted him in the Misery to which the Reformed had reduced him [D]. Consult the Gallia Orinetalis (g).

(g) Colomesius, Gall. Orientalis pag. 32, 33.

' Adsertio veteris ac veri Christianismi adversus novum & fictum Jesuitismum (8). Brevis notatio ' præcipuarum causarum diuturnitatis controversiæ ' de cœna Domini (9). Canones quibus defenditur ' Στάνοτος in verbis Christi hoc est corpus meum, ' & controversiæ de cœna Domini atque similium ' dijudicandæ certissima ratio demonstratur, item ' adsertio ritus frangendi & in manus sumendi panis Eucharistichi (10). The Dates, which I have placed in the Margin, are taken either out of the Epitomy of Gesner's Bibliotheque, or out of the Sacramentary History of Hospinian. I have found a Book in that History which Melchior Adam does not speak of, viz. ' Petri Boquini justa defensio ' adversus injustam vim Hesshusii & Villagagnonis ' de judicio Philippi Melanchthonis ad Electorem ' Palatinum misso de cœna Domini (11).

(8) Printed at Heidelberg 1579, in 8vo.

(9) Printed in the Year 1576.

(10) Printed at Heidelberg 1563, in 8vo.

(11) Printed in 1562.

[D] Baudouin says that he assisted him in the misery to which the reformed had reduced him.] He expresses this in a most odious manner: ' Ipse ' cum volet & audebit Bouquinus idoneus testis ' erit: quem vos quia vos fugiens Gallus Germa' nis initio se dabat tam crudeliter persecuti estis, ' ut nisi subvenisset liberalis misericordia Balduini ' qui miserum aleret, vestra clementia hominem ' fame & frigore enectum jugulasset. Atque is ' tamen dicebatur paulo post mortuo Principe Ot' thone Henrico abs vobis corruptus objecta spe ' offæ novæ, & ubi vobis turpiter servire cœpit ' repente, vestro judicio ex fœtido hirco (sicuti ' paulo ante loquebamini, ad hominis nomen alludentes) factus catellus Melitæus qui vobis esset in ' deliciis (12). —— Bouquin himself when he is willing and dares do it, will be a proper witness: whom you persecuted because he, being a French' man, had at first shunned you and joined the Germans, that if the liberal Compassion of Baudouin, ' who supported the wretch, had not prevented, your ' Clemency would have starved the Man to Death. ' And yet, soon after Prince Otho Henry was dead, ' he being corrupted by you with hopes of a new ' Morsel, and basely entering on a sudden into your ' Service, was in your Judgment, from a stinking Goat ' (as you used to speak but just before, alluding to the ' Man's name) become your most favourite Lap-Dog.' Thus he reproaches Calvin and Beza, for having first persecuted that Man, and afterwards caressed him, according as they saw him a Friend or an Enemy to the Lutherans.

(12) Responsio ad Calvin. & Bezam pro Franc. Balduino fol. 71.

BOURIGNON (ANTOINETTE), was one of those devout Maids, who think themselves directed by particular Inspirations; for which reason she was called a Fanatic. She published a great many Books full of very singular Doctrines, and there was something extraordinary in her Mind from her Infancy to her old Age. She was born at Lisle the thirteenth of January 1616, so deformed that it was debated for some Days in the Family whether she should not be stifled as a Monster (a). Her deformity lessened, and they resolved to let her live. At four Years of Age, she knew already that Christians did not live according to their Principles. She desired to be carried into the Country of the Christians (b); for she did not believe that she was amongst them, since she observed that People did not live agreeably to the Law of JESUS CHRIST. One of the greatest Vexations she had in her Family was that they had a Mind to marry her; That was not what she desired; a Nunnery seemed to her preferable to a Husband. She perceived her Mother was too unhappy in a married State [A], not to fear the same Inconveniency (c): besides she was endowed with a surprizing Chastity [B], and she found an extraordinary Delight in weaning herself from the Objects of the Senses to unite herself to her Creator in a most intimate manner. Her Father nevertheless promised

(a) Vie continuée de Mademoiselle Bourignon, pag. 11.

(b) Ib. pag. 16, 27.

(c) Id. pag. 20. & vie exterieure pag. 148.

[A] She refused to marry, seeing that her Mother was too unhappy in a married State.] If I did not bring a Proof for what I advance here, it might perhaps be thought that I have not well understood the Author whom I quote; for in short this is not to reject Marriage through a motive worthy of Mrs Bourignon, to shun it because there is some trouble in it. It might therefore be imagined, that he who published the Life of that Woman, has not said what I relate. Let us prevent that rash Judgment by a good quotation. ' That Child ' - - - - - observing that her Father was harsh ' to her Mother, and that sometimes he fell into ' a Passion with her, after having endeavoured to ' soften him with her little fond Embraces, for ' which her Father had some regard, she would ' step aside, where considering what a miserable ' thing it was to be married to a peevish Husband, ' she addressed herself to GOD, saying, My GOD, my GOD! Grant that I may never marry: A ' Prayer very different from that which St Augustin ' lamented to have made before his Conversion; ' Lord, Give me Continency and Chastity; but do ' not give it me so soon: Fearing to be too soon ' cured of that damnable and transient Charm: ' Wherein it is to be believed he has more Accomplices and Brethren, than Mrs Bourignon, yet a ' Child, has Imitators in her Prayer (1).' This Author's reflexion is very good. The Gift of Continency is not a thing that many Persons care for (I speak of those who are not engaged to it by a Vow). St Augustin asked it, and is afraid of being taken at his Word; wherefore he desires GOD not to make too much haste.

(1) Vie continuée de Mademoiselle Bourignon, pag. 20.

[B] She was endowed with a surprizing Chastity.] See here what is said of it in her Life. ' GOD ' gave her the Gift of Chastity and Continency ' from her Child-hood in so perfect a manner, that ' she has often said, she never had in her life-time, ' not even by Temptation or Surprize, the least ' Thought which could be unworthy of the Chastity and Purity of the Virgin State. St Teresa ' says of herself, that GOD had formerly favoured ' her with the same Grace. But Mrs Bourignon ' possessed it in such an abundant manner, that it ' redounded, if one may say so, on those that were ' with her (2). Her Presence and Conversation ' diffused such an odour of Continency, as made ' those who conversed with her forget the Plea' sures of the Flesh; and I leave it to the Expe' rience of those, who read her Books with appli' cation, to judge whether they do not feel some ' Impressions of it, and some Inclinations to that ' Virtue which is so pleasing to GOD (3).' Had I not reason to say that the Chastity of that Maid was surprizing? In School Terms it might be called not only immanent, but also transitive, since it's Effects were diffused outwardly, and did not terminate in her Person. I think your mystical People rather use the Word penetrative, than the Word transitive; for I remember a Carthusian says, that the Holy Virgin had a PENETRATIVE VIRGINITY, whereby those who looked upon her, though she was so beautiful, had none but chaste Thoughts. He adds that St Joseph had the Gift which they call INFRIGIDATION, which kept his Body and Soul free from all sense of Impurity (4). It seems to me that the Talent, which GOD had granted to

(2) We shall see in the following Remark that this did not prove true at all times, and therefore it is said that the Gift of Continency is not a thing to be dependent upon for the present, and for the time to come.

(3) Vie continuée pag. 21.

(4) Peter Garnet felt in his Elucidationes sacræ in 5 libros de imaginibus antiquorum Eremitarum, pag. 645, apud Thomasium in Schediasmate historico. The Book of that Carthusian, was printed at Cologne in 1622.

miſed her in Marriage to a Frenchman: The time was already appointed for the Wedding, and to avoid the performance of it ſhe was forced to run away on Eaſter-day, 1636 (d). It was not to throw herſelf into a Cloiſter; ſhe had learned that the Spirit of the Goſpel did not reign in Convents (e): But it was to retire into ſome Deſart. She dreſſed herſelf, therefore, like a Hermit, and fled as faſt as ſhe could; but being ſuſpected in a Village of Hainault to be a Woman, ſhe was ſtopped (f). She never run ſo much hazard, as to her Virginity, as at that time: She fell into the Hands of a Soldier, who did not let go his hold but by a kind of a Miracle. The Curate of the Place (g) delivered her from that Danger, and obſerving the Spirit of God in her, he mentioned her to the Archbiſhop of Cambray, who came to examine her, and adviſed her againſt a Hermit's Life, and obliged her to return to her Father. She was ſoon after perſecuted again with Propoſals of Marriage, which obliged her to run away a ſecond time. She went to the ſame Archbiſhop, and obtained leave of him to form a ſmall Community in the Country with ſome other young Women of her Humour (h): He retracted it a little while after, which obliged Antoinette to go into the Country of Liege, from whence ſhe returned to Flanders, where ſhe ſpent many Years in retirement, and in great ſimplicity of Life, but not without inſpiring a Man with a great deal of Love, who pretended to Devotion in order to get Acceſs to her. He propoſed Marriage to her, and not finding her pliable, he tried to ſupply by the Strength of his Arms what was wanting to the Efficacy of his Diſcourſe [C]. But ſhe implored the protection of the Magiſtrates; inſomuch that this falſe Devotee was obliged to addreſs himſelf to another devout young Woman, whom he found more tractable [D]. Our Antoinette, who had reſolved to renounce her Patrimony for ever, changed her mind

(d) Vie exterieure, pag. 150.

(e) Ibid. p. 147.

(f) Ibid. pag. 151, & ſeq.

(g) It was the Village of Blacon.

(h) Vie exterieure, pag. 166.

to Mrs Bourignon, ought to be called by that Name. That Word would admirably repreſent the Effect which ſhe produced on her Neighbours: The Gift of Infrigidation ſhould be that which makes thoſe cold who come near us. But ſince uſe muſt determine the force of Terms, I will not inſiſt upon it. I only ſay that the Clauſe, notwithſtanding that ſhe was ſo very handſome, which the Carthuſian made uſe of, is not an expletive or a needleſs Parentheſis: It was eſſential to his Subject; the wonder lies in that; for Nature without Grace might very well confer a penetrative Virginity; there needs only a certain degree of uglineſs for that. Wherefore I wiſh the Author of Mrs Bourignon's Life had inſerted in the above quoted place, by way of Parentheſis, that the Gift of Continency, which ſhe diffuſed outwardly, did not proceed from any Deformity, or any thing diſagreeable, that was obſerved in her Perſon. I conclude with a Reflexion, which, if put to the Vote, would not be diſallowed. I believe there are not many young Nuns that pray for a penetrative Virginity. The moſt virtuous are contented with the Gift of Continency, and would be very unwilling to mortify all the deſires of the Men that look upon them (5). They would think themſelves too much diſgraced by Nature, did they believe that they need only ſhew themſelves to make Mens Eyes and Hearts chaſte; that Thought would not pleaſe them. I believe, therefore, that the moſt ſublime and rareſt degree of Chaſtity, in a Woman, is to wiſh not only to be chaſte, but alſo to make all thoſe chaſte that are round about her, and with whom ſhe converſes. Generally ſpeaking Women do not deſire that this Gift ſhould have a great Sphere of Activity; it is enough if it poſſeſs the whole ſpace of one Perſon.

(5) I omit ſome very rare inſtances of Women, who diſfigured their Faces, leaſt they ſhould occaſion a Temptation.

[C] A Man ------ not finding her pliable in relation to Marriage, tried to ſupply, by the Strength of his Arms, what was wanting to the Efficacy of his Diſcourſe.] That Man's Name was John de St Saulieu: He was the Son of a Peaſant, and if all may be believed that is ſaid of him in the Life of our Antoinette, he was a great Rogue. He inſinuated himſelf into that young Woman's Favour by a devout Countenance and Diſcourſes of the moſt ſublime Spirituality. "The firſt time that 'he met with her ----- he ſpoke like a Prophet, 'but like a moderate and reſerved Prophet, who 'having made an end of his Prophecy, retires quiet-'ly without explaining any thing, or inſiſting to 'make himſelf believed (6). ---- The ſecond time 'he ſpoke to her he pretended to be a Man illu-'minated, charitable, and familiar with God (7)." After he had pretty well inſinuated himſelf, he declared his Paſſion; but finding that ſhe took it ill, he ſeemed to be ſorry for it: they fell out but were reconciled again, and at laſt he attempted to uſe Force. See here what the Lady ſays of him: 'Being often 'in my Houſe, he was ſo importunate and inſo-'lent with me, that I was obliged to give my Maids 'notice to watch him, and to ſhut the Door of 'my Houſe againſt him: For he came ſeveral times 'with a Knife in his Hand, which he preſented 'to my Throat, if I would not yield to his wicked 'deſires, inſomuch that I was at laſt obliged to 'have recourſe to the Arm of Juſtice, becauſe he 'threatened to break the Doors and Windows of 'my Houſe, and to kill me, though he ſhould be 'hanged for it in the Market-Place of Liſle. The 'Provoſt gave me two Men to ſecure me in my 'Houſe, whilſt an Information was making of the 'Inſolencies which the ſaid St Saulieu had com-'mitted againſt me (8)." The Concluſion was that the matter was made up between them; he promiſed never to go to any place where ſhe ſhould be, and retracted his Slanders (9); he proteſted that he knew her to be a good and virtuous Woman.

(6) Vie continuée, pag. 133.

(7) Ibid. p 134.

(8) Vie exterieure, pag. 196.

(9) You muſt know that when he ſaw ſhe rejected his propoſal of a Marriage, he gave out every where, that ſhe had promiſed to marry him, and that he had lain with her. The whole Town talked of it; many believed it, and were offended at it. Traité de la parole de Dieu, pag. 78.

That pious Maid had not always had a good Fame, nor always the Talent of inſpiring Chaſtity. I ſay nothing of the deſign of the Officer of Horſe who ſeized her in a Village, when ſhe was diſguiſed like a Hermit at about twenty Years of Age (10); Soldiers, eſpecially when they are lodged in a Village, are very dangerous upon ſuch an Occaſion, and not very penetrable by a penetrative Virginity: Waving therefore this Adventure, I ſhall ſpeak of the Nephew of the Curate of St Andrews near Liſle. Mrs Bourignon had ſhut herſelf up in a Solitude in the Neighbourhood of that Pariſh. The Curate's Nephew fell in Love with her: He was ſo ſmitten with her that he was continually walking about the Houſe, and diſcovering his Paſſion by Words and Purſuits (11). The ſolitary Lady threatened to leave her Poſt, if ſhe were not delivered from that importunate Perſon. The Uncle turned him out of his Houſe. Then the young Man changed his Love into Rage, and ſometimes diſcharged his Gun through the Chamber of that Recluſe; and ſeeing that he gained nothing by it, he gave out that he was going to marry her. The thing was noiſed all over the Town; the devout Women were offended at it, and threatened to affront Mrs Bourignon, if they met with her in the Streets. The Preachers were obliged to publiſh that there was nothing in the report of that Marriage. I do not think ſhe was ſorry to let the Public know that ſhe had appeared ſo lovely to ſome Men, that they paſſionately deſired to marry her. Old Maids are pleaſed with telling ſuch Stories.

(10) Vie exterieure, pag. 155, & ſeq.

(11) Traité de la parole de Dieu, pag. 64, 65.

[D] And afterwards addreſſed himſelf to another devout Woman, whom he found more tractable.] St Saulieu, having made an Agreement with Antoinette, went to Ghent. He had his Will there of a devout Woman 'till ſhe was with Child, and then mind and took poſſeſſion of it again (i) [E]. She became Governeſs of an Hoſpital in the Year 1653 (k), and ſhut herſelf up there in the Cloiſter in the Year 1658 (l), having taken the Order and Habit of St Auguſtin (m). By a very ſtrange Fatality, Sorcery proved ſo general in that Hoſpital, that all the Girls, who were kept there, had contracted with the Devil (n). Ill Tongues took from thence occaſion to give out that the Governeſs of the Houſe was a Sorcereſs (o): The Magiſtrates of Liſle fell upon Mrs Bourignon; they ſent Sergeants into her Cloiſter; they had her before them, and examined her. She anſwered them pertinently; but believing that her Adverſaries had as much Credit as Paſſion, ſhe did not think it proper to remain expoſed to their Proſecutions, and therefore ſhe fled to Ghent. This happened in 1662. She was no ſooner at Ghent, but GOD diſcovered ſome great Secrets to her (p). She got a Friend at Mechlen who proved always faithful to her. His Name was Mr de Cort; it was, if one may ſay ſo, her firſt ſpiritual Child-birth; but it had this ſingularity, that it gave her the ſame pains as a Child-birth in a proper Senſe [F]. That Man being, twice ſucceſſively, divinely warned, and threatned,

(i) Vie continuée, pag. 128.

(k) It was the Hoſpital of Nôtre Dame des ſept douleurs at Liſle. Vie exterieure, pag. 203.

(l) Ibid. p. 200.

(m) Traité de la parole de Dieu, pag. 79.

(n) Vie exterieure, pag. 226.

(o) Vie continuée, pag. 220.

(p) Ibid. p. 226.

then be returned to Liſle. Mrs Bourignon affirms it (12), and here are other Circumſtances of it: 'Seeing (ſays ſhe (13), that he could not marry 'me by Love or Force, he accoſted one of my 'devout Maids, who ſeemed alſo a Mirror of Perfection, and got her with child, after which he 'would not marry her, 'till after many Intreaties 'and Endeavours of the ſaid Maid, who at laſt 'mollified his Heart by her great Humility, and 'he married her a little before ſhe was delivered 'of a Child. He lived very unchaſtly as well as 'ſhe.' I do not wonder at it; for, if I may be allowed a proverbial Expreſſion, the moſt difficult ſtep is that of the Door: as ſoon as a devout Woman has once got over that firſt ſtep by ſome Gallantry that has made a Noiſe, her Honour is loſt: Now Modeſty once turned out of Doors ſeldom returns again (14). What the Scripture ſays in general, that the Devil transforms himſelf into an Angel of Light, is particularly very true of the Devil called Aſmodeus, who is that of Lewdneſs. The Bigots have invented a thouſand Arts to make a great many devout Women fall into the Snare, who had a ſincere deſire to behave themſelves chaſtly. He, who attacked Mrs Bourignon, made her believe, 'that he was quite dead to Nature; that he had 'been ſome Years a Soldier; and was returned 'from the War as unſpotted as a Child, though 'ſeveral Women had inticed him to lewdneſs, and 'had even come to bed to him with an ill Deſign: That he had remained firm, becauſe he 'converſed daily in his Spirit with GOD (15).' He told her alſo, 'That he had loſt the Taſte of 'Meats and Drinks by his great Abſtinencies and 'Mortifications; and that he could not diſcern delightful Meats from coarſe ones, nor Wine from 'Beer or Water: That all thoſe things ſeemed to 'him to have the ſame taſte, that he loved the one 'as well as the other, and could not percieve any 'difference.' By this we may ſee that a Woman's Honour lies in the Centre of a Circle, the Circumference of which is blocked up by a thouſand ſorts of Enemies. It is a Mark which Men try to hit all manner of ways, and even by the Appearances of the moſt myſtical and illuminated Theology. Witneſs Molinos, and the Quietiſts of Burgundy.

(12) Vie exterieure, pag. 197.

(13) Ibid. p. 194.

(14) Et qui rediit, cum perit, neſcit pudor. Seneca in Agamemnone, Act. 2.

(15) Vie exterieure, pag. 192.

[E] She had reſolved to renounce her Patrimony: ſhe changed her Mind, and took Poſſeſſion of it again.] Three reaſons of Devotion perſuaded her to it (16); for if ſhe had not retaken it, ſhe would have left it to thoſe, it did not belong to, who would have made an ill uſe of it: therefore to ſpare the Crime of poſſeſſing the Eſtate of others, and of employing it to do ill, ſhe thought it her Duty to take it from them, and devote it by GOD's Order to good Uſes. It did not leſſen under her Direction; on the contrary it increaſed: two reaſons contributed to this increaſe; for her Expences were ſmall, and ſhe gave no Alms: So that ſhe might convert the ſuperfluous part of her Income into Stock, which ſhe did not fail to do. Not that ſhe was coveteous; ſhe poſſeſſed her Eſtate without any Affection, and the Poverty of Spirit did not forſake her in the midſt of her Riches. What was it then? She would have enough to make greater Expences for the Glory of GOD, when there ſhould be occaſion for it. The Reaſon why ſhe ſpent ſo little in Alms, was, becauſe ſhe found no body, that was in a real Poverty, and ſhe was afraid People would make an ill uſe of what ſhe ſhould give away. She herſelf informs us of thoſe Articles of her Morals. 'The temporal 'Eſtate I have, ſays ſhe (17), fell to me by Succeſſion, 'or increaſed by what I could not ſpend or give, 'becauſe I could not find enough of People truly 'poor, or honeſt Perſons in neceſſity: Therefore 'I have been ſometimes obliged to increaſe my 'Stock out of the ſuperfluous part of my Income; 'becauſe Sobriety requires no great Expences; and 'the truly poor are ſo ſcarce that they muſt be 'ſought for in another World: For the Aſſiſtances 'which are given in this wretched Age ſerve often to commit more Sins. Wherefore he who 'has a greater yearly Income than is neceſſary, is 'obliged to increaſe his Stock in hopes of finding 'an occaſion to employ it to the greater Glory of 'GOD.' They, who accuſe her of Fanaticiſm, would make a wrong choice of their Proofs, if they ſhould alledge theſe. There is nothing here that favours of a Viſionary or of a Fanatic; Every thing in it ſhews a ſubtile Wit, and a nice way of arguing. See below the Remark [M].

(16) I found myſelf obliged to reaſſume my temporal Eſtate, rather than to leave it to thoſe, whom it did not belong to, (this is her firſt reaſon) and rather than it ſhould ſerve for doing evil: (this is the 2d.) Beſides, God diſcovered to me that I ſhould want it for his Glory, (this is the 3d.) Vie exterieure, pag. 241.

(17) Ibid. p. 140.

[F] Her firſt ſpiritual Birth gave her the ſame Pains as a Child-birth in a proper Senſe.] I ſhall ſet down the whole Paſſage, though it be ſomewhat long; whereby it will appear, that the Diſciples of our Antoinette were not always upon the high ſtrain, and that they deſcended ſometimes from the Sublimity of their Devotion to the innocent Jeſts of the Men of the World. 'When 'GOD gave him to Mrs Bourignon, it was after 'a very particular manner, and as the firſt of her 'ſpiritual Children, for whom ſhe felt great bodily 'Pains, and like the preſſing Pains of Child-birth: 'For it is a certain thing, and known by the Experience of all thoſe who have converſed with her, '(let wicked and impious Scoffers ſay of it what 'they pleaſe) that whenever any perſons received 'ſo much Light and Strength, by her Words or 'Writings, as to reſolve to forſake all, to give 'themſelves to GOD; ſhe felt, wherever ſhe was, 'ſome Pains and Throws like thoſe of a Woman 'in Labour, as it is ſaid of the Woman whom St John ſaw in the twelfth of the Revelations (18). 'She felt them more or leſs, as the Truths, which 'ſhe had delivered, had more or leſs ſtrongly operated in Mens Souls; which occaſioned an innocent Jeſt of the Archdeacon on Mr de Cort: 'For as both of them were diſcourſing with 'Mrs Bourignon of the Chriſtian Life, and of their 'good and new Reſolution, and Mr de Cort having obſerved that ſhe had felt more pains for 'him than for the other, when they reſolved to 'be born again according to GOD; the Archdeacon, conſidering that Mr de Cort was fat and 'corpulent, whereas himſelf was but a little Man, 'and ſeeing that he valued himſelf for having coſt 'their ſpiritual Mother dearer than he, told him 'ſmiling; it is no wonder that our Mother ſuffered more for you than for me, for you are a 'very large Child, whereas I am but a little one. 'Which Repartee made them all laugh (19).'

(18) It might have been added that St Paul, ſpeaking of himſelf in relation to thoſe whom he had converted, makes uſe of a Word, which ſignifies to be in labour. Τεκνία μου ὠδίνω πάλιν. filioli mei quos rurſus parturio. Galat. cap. iv, ver. 19.

(19) Vie continuée, pag. 235.

[G] One

threatened, if he did not obey that Inſpiration (q), had lent almoſt all his Eſtate to ſome Relations, who were endeavouring to drain an Iſland in the Country of Holſtein, which the Sea had overflown (r), and thereby he had acquired the Tenths, and the Direction and part of that Iſland [G]. He ſold a Seat there to Mrs Bourignon, who was preparing to retire thither in the Year 1668 (s), after ſhe had publiſhed at Amſterdam her Book Of the Light of the World [H]. She had written many Treatiſes, and Letters, in Brabant (t), and even on the Diſputes of the Janſeniſts and Moliniſts, ſince her Perſecution at Liſle. Her ſtay at Amſterdam with her dear Proſelyte Mr de Cort, was longer than ſhe thought: She was viſited there by all ſorts of Perſons, without excepting the imaginary Prophets and Propheteſſes (u). This made her hope that the Reformation which ſhe preached might have ſome effect: Nevertheleſs few perſons took a firm Reſolution to conform to it. Labadie and his Diſciples were deſirous to have ſettled with her in Noordſtrandt [I]: Mr de Cort conſented to it; for they offered great ſums of Money to buy the whole Iſland; but the Lady rejected their Propoſals. She had Conferences with ſome Carteſians, and formed a terrible Idea of their Principles [K]. She compoſed more Books at Amſterdam, than ſhe got Followers. Her Converſations with GOD were very frequent there: She learnt a great many particular things by Revelation; and it was then that ſhe had the Viſions which I ſpoke of in the Remarks of the Article ADAM (x). Mr de Cort died the twelfth of November 1669, and made her his Heireſs, which expoſed her for ſome time to more Perſecutions than her Doctrine [L]. Being, moreover, ſick and ill attended, ſhe endured many Miſeries.

(q) Ibid. p. 231.

(r) The Iſle of Northſtrand.

(s) Ibid. p. 280.

(t) Ibid. p. 269. & ſeq.

(u) Ibid. p. 284.

(x) La Remark [G]. See Vie continuée, ubi ſup. 21.

[G] One of her Diſciples had - - - acquired - - - - part of the Iſland of Noordſtrandt.] He was one of the Fathers of the Oratory, and their Superior at Mechlen, and moreover the Director of a Houſe of poor Children (20). The Expences which he had been at to recover Noordſtrandt tended to prepare a Retreat there for the perſecuted Friends of GOD. 'He thought that he had been divinely informed, that ſuch was the deſign of GOD (21) 'in preſuppoſing that the Janſeniſts, were thoſe perſecuted Friends of GOD, 'he drew many 'of them out of France, Flanders, and Holland, 'into that Iſland, part of which he ſold to them. - - - - He reſigned alſo all the reſt that he had 'there, and all his rights and pretenſions into the 'Hands of the Oratory of Mechlen upon certain 'Conditions, which they did not honeſtly perform 'to him, for which he had afterwards redreſs.' All this was attended with great Law-ſuits: the Sieur de Cort was impriſoned at Amſterdam (22), in the Month of March 1669, at the Proſecution of the famous Janſeniſt, Mr de Saintamour, who went by the Name of Lewis Gorin. Before he was put into Priſon he was ſeverely cenſured by a Biſhop (23), who called him a Heretic, and a Man, 'who co-'veted the Riches of this World to the prejudice 'of thoſe whom he had deceived by ſelling Lands 'in Noordſtrandt, a Man given to drinking and 'ſuſpected of having loſt his Faith and Chaſtity, 'and who ſuffered himſelf to be ſeduced by a Maid 'of Liſle, with whom he lived to the great ſcan-'dal of every body (24).' He remained ſix Months in Priſon, and got out only by a fortuitous Accident. He went into his Iſland, where he was poiſoned, and died the twelfth of November 1669. I am but a tranſcriber, and do not warrant the Facts that I borrow from the Books which I quote.

(20) Ibid. p. 230.

(21) Ibid. p. 232.

(22) Ibid. p. 340.

(23) It was probably the Biſhop of Caſterle.

(24) Vie continuée, pag. 331.

[H] Whither ſhe deſigned to retire as ſoon as ſhe had publiſhed - - - - at Amſterdam, her Light of the World.] The firſt Work which ſhe publiſhed is a Letter to the Dean of Liſle concerning the State of the World, and the Judgments of GOD. It was printed at Amſterdam in the beginning of the Year 1668, and inſerted in the ſecond Part of the Light brought forth in Darkneſs: it is the fifth Letter in that Book (5).

WHICH was the firſt work ſhe publiſhed.

(25) Ibid. p. 283.

[I] Labadie and his Diſciples were deſirous to have ſettled with her in Noordſtrandt.] Antoinette would not join with them: and therefore underſtanding that Mr de Cort had a mind to carry them into Noordſtrandt, ſhe ſaid to him (26), you may then go thither without me; Becauſe I perceive and know that we can never agree together. Their Opinions and the Spirit that governs them are altogether contrary to my Light, and the Spirit that governs me. 'She had already had ſome inward 'Sentiments about him from God, and a divine 'Viſion, wherein he made her ſee, in the Spirit, a 'little Man very luſty, with a great Pole in his 'Hand, to hinder the fall of a great Building, or 'of a Church that was falling; and by ſome Con-'ferences, which ſhe had with him, wherein ſhe 'endeavoured, but in vain, to diſſuade him from 'going to brave the Synod of Haerden, and to con-'vince them of their wicked Doctrine of Predeſti-'nation. She was fully perſuaded that he had no 'other Light than what the Learned of theſe 'times have, Reading, Study, ſome barren Specu-'lations, and ſome Acts of his own Mind; and 'for a Motive of his Conduct, only ſome inſi-'tuation, and the Motions of corrupt Paſſions; 'without being any ways enlightened by GOD 'himſelf, or directed by the calm Motions of his 'divine Inſpirations.' This Paſſage will not be uſeleſs to thoſe who have a mind to know by what Spirit our Antoinetta was led. It was a Spirit that would not ſuffer any Companion or Colleague: Wherefore we have ſeen all Sects againſt that Maid, and that Maid againſt all Sects. The very Quakers have alſo wrote againſt her (27).

(25) Ibid. p. 290.

(26) Benjamin Furley, an Engliſhman, a Merchant at Rotterdam, a moderate Quaker within theſe few Years, and a Man of Genius and Learning, wrote ſtrongly againſt her, and made it his buſineſs to ſhew that ſhe contradicted herſelf.

(27) Vie continuée, pag. 295.

[K] She had Conferences with ſome Carteſians, and formed a terrible Idea of their Principles,] Amongſt others with Mr Heydanus and Mr Burman. They were but little ſatisfied with her, nor ſhe with them (28). The Method of the Carteſians did not ſuit her. She would not have the Light of Reaſon to be conſulted, whereas their Principle is to examine all things by that Touch-ſtone. She affirmed, 'That God had ſhewn and even 'expreſsly declared to her, that this Error of Car-'teſianiſm was the worſt, and the moſt curſed, of 'all the Hereſies that ever were in the World, 'and a formal Atheiſm, or a Rejection of GOD, 'in whoſe place corrupt Reaſon was ſet up (29).' Which agrees with what ſhe ſaid to the Philoſophers: 'That their Malady proceeded from their 'pretending to comprehend all things by the 'Activity of human Reaſon, without giving way 'to the Illumination of divine Faith, which 'requires a Ceſſation of our Reaſon, our Minds, 'and weak Underſtanding, that GOD may diffuſe 'or revive that divine Light in them: Without 'which GOD is not only not well known, but 'alſo he and his true Knowledge are driven out 'of the Soul by that Activity of our corrupt Rea-'ſon. Which is a true kind of Atheiſm and 'rejecting of GOD (30).' This Paſſage is proper to ſhew the Principles of the Bourignoniſts. They agree pretty well with thoſe of the Quietiſts (31).

(28) Vie continuée, pag. 295.

(29) Ibid. p. 306.

(30) Ibid. p. 296.

(31) See the Articles BRACHMANS, Remark [K], and DIOSCORIDES, Rem. [A].

[L] The Inheritance of Mr de Cort expoſed her to more Perſecutions than her Doctrine.] Many Law-Suits were commenced againſt her to hinder her from enjoying the Succeſſion of her Diſciple; and if ſome were animated with Zeal againſt her Errors, there were ſome whoſe Zeal for her Eſtate was no leſs forward. This latter Zeal heightened the firſt; for ſome of Mrs Bourignon's Perſecutors cried out

Miſeries. She left Holland in the Year 1671, to go to Noordſtrandt. She ſtopped at ſeveral places in Holſtein, and was obliged to diſmiſs ſome Diſciples, who were come to liſt themſelves under her Banner: perceiving that every body minded his own conveniencies and eaſe, ſhe conceived that That was not the way to make a flock of new Chriſtians (y). She provided herſelf with a Printing-Houſe (z); for her Pen went as faſt as the Tongues of others, I mean like a Torrent. She had her Books printed in French, Dutch, and German. She found herſelf very much defamed by ſome Books which were publiſhed againſt her Tenets and Morals, and ſhe vindicated herſelf by a Work which ſhe intituled The Teſtimony of Truth, wherein ſhe mightily inveighed againſt the Clergy. This was not the way to find Peace: Two Lutheran Miniſters ſounded the Alarm againſt her, and wrote ſome Books, wherein they ſaid, that ſome Perſons had been burnt and beheaded, whoſe Opinions were more tolerable than thoſe of Mrs Bourignon (aa). The Labadiſts wrote againſt her (bb). She was forbid to make uſe of her Preſs. She retired to Flenſburg in the Month of December, 1673 (cc). Her Enemies came to know it, and ſtirred the People ſo violently againſt her, calling her a Witch and Circe, that it was very fortunate for her, that ſhe found means to retire privately. Being perſecuted from Town to Town, ſhe was at laſt obliged to leave Holſtein; ſhe retired to Hamburg in the Year 1676 (dd). She was ſafe there only ſo long as they knew nothing of her Arrival; for as ſoon as they had notice of it, they endeavoured to ſecure her; GOD knows how they would have uſed her, if ſhe had been taken. She hid herſelf for ſome Days, and went afterwards to Eaſt-Frieſland (ee), where the Baron of Lutſburg granted her his Protection. She had the Direction of an Hoſpital there, and conſecrated her Cares and Induſtry, but not her Purſe, to the good of that Houſe [M]. She found Perſecutors there alſo; ſo that ſhe went into Holland in the Year 1680 (ff). She died at Franeker in the Province of Frieſland (gg), the thirtieth of October the ſame Year (hh). The rubs ſhe met with in Germany did not hinder her from writing many Books. It would be a very difficult matter to give an account of her Syſtem. No Coherency muſt be expected from a Perſon who aſcribes every thing to immediate Inſpirations. It cannot be denied that it is a ſtrange Error to pretend, as it is ſaid ſhe did, that the true Church was extinguiſhed, and that the Liturgical Exerciſes of Religion ought to be laid aſide. This laſt Tenet lies extremely open to Perſecution [N]. It is to be remembered that the Journaliſts have mentioned the Works of Antoinette Bourignon

(y) Ibid. p. 380.
(z) Ibid. p. 384.
(aa) Ibid. pag. 388.
(bb) Ibid. p. 391.
(cc) Ibid. p. 394.
(dd) Ibid. p. 446.
(ee) In June, 1677.
(ff) Ibid. pag. 580.
(gg) Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, April 1685, Art. 9.
(hh) Vie contin. pag. 585.

out againſt her Doctrine, that they might exclude her from Mr de Cort's Succeſſion. This may be ſeen at large in her Hiſtory (32).

(32) Vie continuée, chap. xix, & ſeq. pag. 338, & ſeq.

[M] She employed ---- her Care and Induſtry but not her Purſe.] I have already ſpoke (33) of the Reaſons whereon her Sparing was grounded. What I am going to ſay ſhall be a Supplement to it. When ſhe accepted the care of that Hoſpital, ſhe declared that 'ſhe conſented to contribute her Induſtry as well for the building, as for the Diſtribution of the Money and Inſpection of the Poor: But without engaging any part of her Eſtate (34).' She alledged two reaſons for it; one was that ſhe had already conſecrated her Eſtate to GOD, for thoſe who ſincerely endeavour to become true Chriſtians: The other was, that Mankind and all humane things are inconſtant, ſo that it might happen that thoſe, in whoſe favour ſhe might part from her Eſtate, might make themſelves afterwards unworthy of it. This was an admirable Reaſon, never to part with any thing, and to put off all manner of Gifts 'till ſhe ſhould make her Will. The Lady found by Experience that ſhe was not raſhly diffident of the inconſtancy of Men; ſhe was ſo far from finding any body in Eaſt-Frieſland that deſerved to have her Eſtate, 'that ſhe could 'not ſo much as find any, upon whom ſhe might 'beſtow part of her Revenue, meeting with none but 'Poor, who had nothing leſs at Heart than to 'think of a Chriſtian Life, who made uſe of what 'was given them to cheat, guzzle, and live in 'Idleneſs. Nevertheleſs, ſhe and one of her 'Friends diſtributed to them for ſome Months 'certain Revenues of that place, which were annexed to that Hoſpital by the Founder: But 'when ſhe was asked whether ſhe would not contribute ſomething of her own, ſhe anſwered in 'writing, that becauſe thoſe Poor lived like Beaſts 'who had no Souls to ſave, and abuſed the Gifts 'of GOD inſtead of giving him thanks for them, 'ſhe and her Friends would rather chooſe to throw 'their Eſtates, which were conſecrated to GOD, 'into the Sea, than to leave any part of them there. 'Which ſhe and her Friends have alſo carefully 'avoided in all their Tranſactions, ſo far as to re'ſerve to themſelves the Reſtitution of the Money 'they ſhould get to the day wherein they would 'retire from that place (35).' Other Countries were not better provided with Perſons that deſerved her Charity. 'Nullos adhuc inveni (vere pauperes) & 'ſic coacta ſui mea bona ad hunc uſque diem ſer'vare (36). ---- I have found none that are truly 'poor, and ſo have been forced to keep my Eſtate 'to this time. Vellem ut occaſionem haberem ea '(bona mea) ad gloriam Dei impendendi, tunc ne uno 'quidem die retinerem: ſed nullam hucuſque in'veni: multi ſunt qui ea acciperent, ſed non im'penderent ad gloriam Dei ut ego facere deſtino *. '---- I wiſh I had an Opportunity of laying it 'out to the Glory of GOD, and then I would not 'keep it ſo much as one day; but I have found none 'hitherto; there are many who would receive it, but 'would not beſtow it to the Glory of God as I in'tend to do.' So that this Head of Expence did not coſt her much. It ſeems to me that the Children of this Age are not much more prudent in their Generation, than thoſe Children of Light. We ſhall ſee, in the Remark [P], that her Humour was not to ſpare thoſe who ſtole any thing from her. She took it very ill that her Friends had not indicted thoſe Thieves.

(33) In Remark [E].
(34) Ibid. p. 504.
(35) Ibid. p. 505.
(36) Lumiere en ten. &c. Part IV. pag. 215, apud Seckend. Apolog. Relat. pag. 78.
* Ibid. pag. 61, apud eund. Seckendorf. ibid. pag. 79.

[N] She was for abolishing the Liturgical Exerciſes of Religion. ---- a Tenet which lies extreamly open to Perſecution.] Two very powerful Intereſts ingage the Directors of Churches to oppoſe that Tenet: the one is the Intereſt of the whole Body; the other a perſonal Intereſt. Take from the Church her public Aſſemblies, her Rites, Liturgy, and Diſcipline, and you take the way to ruin her before the third Generation. So that it is a Maxim deſtructive of the Church. It is moreover perſonally prejudicial to the Directors; for the more that Tenet is followed, the fewer People will be found in Churches; and ſo the Pains that are taken all the Week to prepare a Sermon become almoſt fruitleſs, whether the Preacher deſigns only the Converſion of the Hearers, or only to get Praiſe, or both theſe things together.

rignon [O]. She had this in common with most Devotees, that she was of a choleric and morose Humour [P]. Notwithstanding her peevishness, and all the Fatigues and Crosses of her Life, one would not have thought her to be much above forty Years of Age, when she was above sixty (ii). She had never made use of Spectacles (kk). The most remarkable Periods of her Life, as her Birth, her coming to be an Author, and her Death, were signified by Comets (ll). The Author of her Life was not aware, that by saying this he gave occasion to think, according to the common Hypothesis, that this Maid was as a scourge of Providence, and not a holy Prophetess. The Vanity and the Danger she found in having her Picture drawn (mm), hindered her from suffering it to be done (nn). She had a very singular Opinion concerning Antichrist [Q], which seemed to be taken from the Hypothesis of many Doctors concerning the Incubus's [R]. See John Mollerus, a Lutheran Author, in his Introduction to the History of the Chersonesus Cimbrica, where he relates several things concerning Antoinette's Abode in Holstein, and concerning the Writers who attacked her (oo).

(ii) Ibid. p. 586.

(kk) Ibid.

(ll) Ibid. p. 590.

(mm) It concerned her extremely that her Face should not be known, by reason of her Persecutors, Ibid. pag. 586.

(nn) Ibid.

(oo) Mollerus, Parte II, pag. 151, & seq.

If

[O] The Journalists have mentioned the Works of Antoinette Bourignon.] See in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres a Memorial of Mr Poiret on that Maid's Life and Doctrine (37). But in the Journal of Leipsic (38) there is an Extract of her Works which has occasioned a Dispute. An anonymous Author complained very sharply of that Extract, and accused the Journalist of a great many Falsehoods. A very ample, and elaborate, Apology was made for that Extract (39). Those who will not take the trouble to look over that Lady's Writings, and yet are desirous to know many things concerning her, need only see that Apology.

(37) April 1685, Art. ix, and May 1685, Art. viii.

(38) In January, 1686, pag 9.

(39) The Acta Eruditorum of May 1687, speak of it. The Index of the ten first Volumes of that Journal informs us, that Mr Seckendorf is the Author of the Apology. Mr Mollerus says so likewise in his Ingoge ad Historiam Chersonesi Cimbricæ, Part II, p. 161, 162.

(40) Seckendorf, in the Apology for the Journal of Leipsic, pag. 76, 77.

(41) Id. ibid.

[P] Like most other Devotees she was of a choleric and morose Humour] Mr Seckendorf found some Proofs of this in the Lady's own Writings. 'Multa vestigia (says he (40), in scriptis ejus apparent, ex quibus judicari posset fœminam hanc duram, immitem, pervicacem, stomachabundam, rixosam - - - - fuisse. - - - - Several Marks appear in her Writings by which one may judge, that she was a fowre, stubborn, passionate, brawling Woman.' It came to that at last that no body could endure her ill Humour, and particularly her Maids were obliged to leave her. 'Unde factum ut nemo ejus morositatem tolerare posset, minime omnium fœminæ quas in sodalitium aut famulitium adsciverat: exercebatur nempe in illas, ut lusit Satyricus, Præfectura domus Sicula non mitior aula (41). - - - - - For which reason no body could bear her ill Humour, especially the Women which she took for Companions or Servants: for she exercised over them, as the Satirist expresses it, A Family Government as cruel as the Sicilian Court.' The following Passage will confirm this: 'If those who lived with her had not had strong Teeth to break some Crusts, very hard to corrupt Nature, they would have left her a thousand times for one. And indeed of so many Persons who have known, and even of those who have followed her, there were not four left that she would have kept with her (42).' Note, that she did not allow that her ill Humour was a fault; she called it love of Justice, and maintained that Anger was a true Virtue, and alledged in her Vindication the Rigours which the Prophets and Apostles used. She severely censured those of her Friends, who had not sued the Boors who had stolen something from her: 'and when her Friends excused themselves, saying they did not know whether she would have had them prosecuted with Rigour; she told them that these were but the Excuses of corrupt Nature, which will not take Pains, nor bear Inconveniencies.' Then she said with a strong Voice, 'Once for all, and I have already so often repeated it, we must prevent Evil, and oppose it with all our might, wherever we find it (43).' How well this agrees with the Patience which is so much recommended to us in the Gospel!

(41) Id. ibid.

(42) Vie continuée, pag. 169. See the Apology for the Journal of Leipsic, pag. 200.

(43) Vie continuée, pag. 477.

[Q] She had a very singular Opinion concerning Antichrist.] She believed he would be a Devil incarnate. When she was asked, whether it was possible that Man should be born by the Operation of the Devil, she answered, 'Yes: Not that the Devil can do this alone without the Co-operation of Man; but having Power over lascivious Men, when they misuse the Principle of Fecundity (which the Scripture calls spilling it on the Ground, Gen. xxxviii, 9) the Devil carries it by his diabolical Interposition into his Witches, from whence he causes wicked Men to be born, who are all dedicated to himself, and are true Antichrists: And that the Devil will incarnate himself in that manner (44).' She believed that the Reign of Antichrist ought to be understood two ways, the one sensually and the other spiritually. In the first Sense, it will be the visible Reign of a Devil incarnate, and that is to come. In the second Sense, it is the Corruption and the Disorders which appear in all Christian Societies; and on this head she gives herself a full Scope, and rails most bitterly against all those Societies, and spares the Protestants no more than the Roman Catholics. 'De spirituali Antichristo longe plura tractat & veluti œstro percita campo decurrit per quem magnus equos Auruncæ flexit alumnus. Ante omnia Romanæ Ecclesiæ —— Antichristum, caput, principem & rectorem —— confidentissime assignat —— nihilo tamen mitius Protestantium cœtus tractavit, ideoque in libris de Antichristo omnia in eundem censum refert, nihil relinquens quod non Antichristianum & diabolicum faciat effreni & incredibili maledicentia (45). —— Concerning the spiritual Antichrist, she says a great deal more, and beats about the Field like one mad. Above all, she calls the head Prince and Governour of the Roman Church Antichrist - - - - nor does she treat the Societies of Protestants more mildly, and therefore in her Books concerning Antichrist she brings them all into one Account, leaving nothing which she does not, by her unbridled and incredible Malediction, make Antichristian and Devilish.' As to the true and sensual Antichrist, viz. a Devil incarnate, according to her Principles, she had known him so well in a Night Vision ratified, that she gave a Description of him, whereby one might see what Complexion, Stature, and Hair he should have (46). The Verses which contained that Description have been suppressed; I say the Verses, for she pretended to make some, without ever having learned the Rules of Poetry. 'Omnia ex Deo didicerit, etiam rythmorum artem, in quâ quidem ita versatur ut facile fidem inveniat se nullo magistro usum esse (47). - - - - She learnt every thing from GOD, even the Art of making Verses, which she does in such a manner that it is manifest she never learned it of any Master.' I must explain in a few words what is meant by a ratified Vision. Mrs Bourignon little valued the Visions 'which are made by the Interposition of the Imagination (48).' If she had any of that kind, she suspected them, 'till having recommended them to God in a profound Recollection, and disintangled from all Images, she learned from God what she ought to think of them, and God ratified the Truth of them to her in so pure, so intimate, and so private a manner, in the Recess of a Soul so disingaged and so given over to God, that there could be no mixture of human Thoughts or diabolical Illusions. In that manner God ratified to her the Truth of the Vision of Antichrist.'

(44) Ibid. p. 555

(45) Seckendorf. ubi supra, p. 154.

(46) Vie continuée, pag. 267.

(47) Seckendorf. ubi supra, p. 254.

(48) Vie continuée, pag. 265, 267.

[R] Which seemed to be taken from the Hypothesis —— concerning the Incubus's.] The Opinion that certain Persons of an extraordinary Merit have

If she was predestinated to be the Instrument of some Revolution of Religion, that Lot was not assigned to her Person, nor to the Ministry of her Voice: It will rather be an effect of her Writings; for during her Life she had but a very small number of Followers, who after her Death decreased every day in the Countries where she was most admired. They want but little of being reduced to Unity, I mean to one single individual. But it is not the same in Countries which were never honoured with her Presence: Her Books have fructified beyond Sea; some Persons in Scotland like her Doctrine, and have undertaken the Propagation of it. They have made themselves formidable; and it was thought necessary to take Pen in Hand in order to stop their Progress. They have taken the same Weapons to defend themselves; and that conflict of Books continues still: You shall see the Extract of a Memorial on that Subject, which a very worthy Man has communicated to me [S].

been begotten by those Spirits is very ancient, and wants not Favourers to this Day. See Leo Allatius in his Book concerning Homer's Country, where declaring for that Opinion, he maintains, that Children procreated in that manner, are nevertheless formed of human Seed (49). The Count de Gabalis explains that ridiculous Whim. 'Sir, said I 'to him, our Divines take care not to say that the 'Devil is the Father of all those Men, who are 'born without our knowing who brings them in- 'to the World. They acknowledge that the De- 'vil is a Spirit, and therefore cannot procreate. 'Gregorius Nyssenus (replied the Count) does not 'say that; for he holds that the Devils multiply 'among themselves like Men. We are not of his 'Opinion, said I, but it happens (as our Doctors 'say) that —— Ha! do not tell, (interrupted the 'Count) do not tell what they say, for then you 'must say a most filthy and immodest thing as they 'do. What an abominable Evasion have they found 'there? It is a wonder, that they should unani- 'mously embrace that filthy Opinion, and take plea- 'sure in placing Hobgobblins in Ambuscades, to 'take advantage of the idle Brutishness of solitary 'Persons, and thereby bring those miraculous Men 'speedily into the World, whose illustrious Me- 'mory they blacken by such a foul Original. Do 'they call that philosophizing? Is it worthy of 'God, to say that he has that Indulgence for the 'Devil to favour those Abominations; to grant 'them the Grace of Fecundity which he has re- 'fused to great Saints; and to reward that filthi- 'ness by creating more heroic Souls for those Em- 'bryo's of Iniquity, than for those who are formed 'in the Chastity of a lawful Marriage? Is it wor- 'thy of Religion to say, as your Doctors do, that 'by that detestable Art the Devil may get a Virgin 'with Child whilst she is asleep without any pre- 'judice to her Virginity? Which is as absurd as 'the Story which Thomas Aquinas (otherwise a 'most solid Author, and who knew something of 'the Cabala) is so heedless as to relate in his fixth 'Quodlibet, of a Daughter lying with her Father, 'to whom he ascribes the Adventure which some 'heretical Rabbins relate of the Daughter of Je- 'remiah, to whom they impute the Conception of 'the great Cabalist Benjorah by going into the 'Bath after the Prophet. I could swear that this 'Impertinency was contrived by some —— (50).'

(49) Allat. de patr. a Homeri, pag. 30. See what shall be quoted out of the Polygamia triumphatrix in the Article of LYSERUS (JOHN), the Author of that Book.

[S] Here follows the Extract of a Memorial, which a very worthy Man has communicated to me concerning the writings for and against her Followers.] I have read there, that the Followers of Antoinette Bourignon are perhaps more numerous in Scotland than in any other part of the World. Some Laymen, and some Clergymen in Scotland have embraced that Sect, some who, by having been too fond of abstracted Speculations, have suffered themselves to be dazzled by the Subtilties of Mr Poiret's Divine Oeconomy (51); others, who because they were not satisfied with the present State of Things, were easily charmed by the magnificent Promises of Antoinette Bourignon. Inclined to Novelty, and greedy of a Change, they too hastily believed that her System would remedy the Disorders they were displeased with. It was their Desire, and therefore it was soon their Hope, and thus they bestowed many pompous Encomiums upon that new Prophetess, who promised them such an advantageous Change, and such a noble Restoration of the Church. Two or three learned and pious Persons, who relished her Writings, encouraged the thing: Their Authority added weight to the frequent Discourses which were held on that new System; and by often speaking of that Woman's Writings, which promised the Reformation of Faith and Manners, and that of Discipline and Worship, and which contain very sharp Censures against all sorts of People, and particularly against the Clergy, Dispositions to Bourignonism were sowed in People's Minds. The first thing that made a noise was the publishing an English Translation of one of the most considerable Pieces of our Antoinette in the Year 1696 (52). A very long Preface was prefixed to it, wherein the Translator maintained that she ought at least to be looked upon as an extraordinary Prophetess. Charles Lesley, a Man of great Merit and Learning, is the first who wrote against the Errors of Mrs Bourignon in Great Britain. The Books he wrote against the Quakers, have been very much esteemed, particularly his Treatise, intituled, The Snake in the Grass, Anguis in herba. Three anonymous Editions of it were published in two Years: in the Preface of the second Edition he took notice of the Errors of Bourignonism; but he and several other Persons engaged Dr Cockburn to refute them more fully. That Doctor acquitted himself very well of it; he published a Book, intituled, Bourignonism Detected. He proposes, and confutes the Judgment of Mr Poiret, Mr de Cort, and the English Translator of the Lux Mundi, concerning that Woman, and shews that neither their Authority nor their Reasons are sufficient to persuade that she was inspired, nor that she had received a Commission from God to reform Christianity. He has since published a Letter, wherein he justifies himself for writing on that Subject, and excuses himself for the delay of the new Relations he had promised, and answers some Difficulties. This was followed by a second Narrative printed in London, wherein having represented all the magnificent things that Mrs Bourignon attributed to herself, he shews that if they were true, she ought not only to be preferred before the Prophets, and the Apostles, but also before JESUS CHRIST. He believed this might be sufficient to undeceive the Bourignonists, and therefore he made no haste to publish the other two Relations, wherein he is to shew, I. That the Life of Antoinette did not answer the great Part that she pretended to act. II. That she had not the Characters peculiar to those who are raised by GOD. III. That there are good reasons to accuse her either of Imposture, or of Diabolical Illusion. IV. That her particular Doctrines, though veiled with a Pretence of a greater Piety, are contrary to true Piety. The Bourignonists of Scotland, not profiting by his writings, thought themselves obliged to write in defence of Antoinette, and therefore published an Apology for her, and an Answer to Dr Cockburn's Relations. This obliges the latter to go on in his Work, which, though chiefly designed to shew the Fanaticism of Mrs Bourignon, serves nevertheless to discover several other Illusions (53).

(50) Quatrième Entretien sur les Sciences secretes, pag. 240, Paris Edit. 1670.

(51) It is a Book printed at Amsterdam, 1687, in seven Volumes in 12mo.

(52) That which is entituled The Light of the World.

(53) Taken from a Memorial imparted to me July 2, 1699.

BOURLOTE (CLAUDIUS DE LA), a Soldier of Fortune, who raised himself by his Valour. Look for LABOURLOTE.

BOURSAULT (EDMUND), known by divers Works in Verse and Prose, which have been in good Esteem, had a great share in the Affection of the Duke of Montausier. It was by his Order that he wrote a Book, in 1671, for the Education of the Dauphin. This Book is entituled L'Etude des Souverains, and is stored with illustrious Examples, necessary for young Princes who are to be instructed. The King was very well pleased with it, and the Duke of Montausier —— recommended him to his Majesty for Sub-Preceptor to the Dauphin, and there was no other Obstacle but his want of the Latin Tongue, that kept him from so considerable Honour and Fortune (a); for it must be observed that Mr Boursault had no Knowledge of the Latin Tongue. He died in the Month of September, 1701. He was putting the last hand to a Work entituled Esope a la Cour (b). It is a kind of Supplement to the other Esop, which he had wrote (c). The Children he left are a Theatin, a Captain of Foot, and a Nun (d).

(a) Mercure Galant, of September 1702, pag. 398, 399.
(b) Id. pag. 400.
(c) Id. pag. 399.
(d) Idem.

BOXHORNIUS, Professor at Leyden. See ZUERIUS.

BRACHMANS, Indian Philosophers, of whom Strabo relates several things which are very singular (a). They begun so early to take care of their Scholars, that they sent learned Men to the Mother as soon as they knew that she had conceived. Those learned Men seemed to go thither to give their Blessing to the Mother and the Child, that she might have a happy time; but their chief design was to give her good Precepts. If the Mother was pleased with those Discourses, it was taken as a good Omen for the Child. As the Children grew up, they went thro' the Discipline of different Masters; as for the Brachmans they kept out of the Town in a Wood, and led a very rigid Life [A]. They slept on Hides, they eat no Flesh [B], nor

(a) Strab. lib. xv, pag. 490, ex Megasthene.

[A] They led a very rigid Life.] It appears by a Passage of Strabo that they inured themselves to Toil; for he speaks of two Brachmans, one of whom made a Trial of Patience by lying on the ground, exposed to the Sun and Rain. The other who was younger made his Tryal, by standing a whole Day sometimes on his Right, and sometimes on his left Leg, holding up a great Piece of Timber with both Hands. They were at Alexander's Court; the youngest returned home, but the other thought it better to follow that Prince, and to comply with the Customs of the Greeks (1). This was in some manner to forsake his Order. Arrianus says, that Alexander admired the Constancy of those Indian Philosophers (2). It would doubtless have been very wonderful, if they had done what Pliny ascribes to them. They look upon the Sun, says he (3), from it's rising to it's setting with a stedfast and unmoveable Eye, and stand all day long, sometimes on one Foot, and sometimes on another, in the hot burning Sands. Philosophos eorum quos Gymnosophistas vocant ab exortu ad occasum perstare contuentes solem immobilibus oculis, ferventibus arenis, toto die alternis pedibus insistere.' Solinus adds, that they sought great Secrets in the Sun (4). He seems to say, that it served them for a Looking-Glass to foretel things to come. It is to no purpose after this to extol and cry up such Saints as Simeon Stylites; they do not come up to those Indian Philosophers. But the Fact is almost as doubtful on one side as on the other. It looks altogether like a Fable with respect to those Philosophers, and if there was no other reason to question it than this, viz. that most of the Authors, who speak of them, do not mention that uneasy Posture, and that perpetual Contemplation, we should have sufficient ground to disbelieve it. It seems to me that standing always on one Foot, and having one's Eyes turned directly to the hottest Sun without the least winking, are such singular things, as no body will ever pass over in silence, who has a Mind to inform any Person what sort of Life those People live, who practise such extraordinary things. And consequently all those who asked any News of those Indian Philosophers, would immediately have been informed of such wonderful things. They must needs be publickly known in the Country, and are the best Part of the Story, the marvellous and rarity of the Sect, and therefore every body may and ought to acquaint Strangers with them. So that it is impossible that an Historian, who looks for Information, should not come to the Knowledge of such things; and if he knows them, he ought to make them the chief Article of his Account: he must have lost his Wits if he thinks they do not deserve to be mentioned. How comes it then that there are so many Writers, who do not say one word of them? Doubtless it is because they never heard of them; or because observing that all those who should have mentioned them, did not do it, they concluded that it was all Romance and Imposture. One may apprehend the reason why an Author may relate fabulous Stories; but one cannot apprehend why he should suppress such Truths as these. There are some cases then wherein a Negative Argument may take place; not only when it is grounded on the Silence of the greatest Number, which is our present Case. Strabo who had read many Relations, and who also cites some ocular Witnesses, says indeed, that those Philosophers suffered the excessive Heat of the Sun all the Day long, some standing, some sitting, and others lying down; and that they did not move out of their Places, till returned to the Town at Night: but he does not speak of their continual standing on one Foot, nor of their perpetual Contemplation of the Sun. Neither does Stephanus Byzantinus speak of it, though he says that the Brachmans were chiefly consecrated to the Sun. Βραχμάνων ἰδεῖν φῦλον ἀνδρῶν φιλοσόφων καὶ θεοῖς φίλων, ἥλιῳ δὲ μάλιστα καθωσιωμένων. Brachmanas visere homines philosophiæ deditos & diis charos, soli vero præcipuè dedicatos (5). — To see the Brachmans Men given to Philosophy, dear to the Gods, but chiefly dedicated to the Sun. I must observe that one of the Austerities of some Indian Philosophers was to continue a whole Day in the same posture, ἀφ' ἑνὸς σχήματος ἀκίνητον διαπελέσαι τὴν ἡμέραν ὅλην (6). It would be a hard Penance for many Persons. See the Remark [F] of the Article GYMNOSOPHISTS.

(1) Strabo, lib. xv, pag. 491.
(2) Arrian. de expedit. lib. 7.
(3) Plin. lib. vii, cap. ii.
(4) In globo igneo rimantes secreta quædam. Solin. cap. lii.

OBSERVATION on a Case where the Negative Argument is strong.

(5) Hierocles in Philistoricis apud Stephanum de Urbibus in Βραχμᾶνες. See also Philostratus in vita Apoll. lib. iii.
(6) Strab. lib xv, pag. 491.

[B] They eat no Flesh.] Porphyry represents them very rigid on that Point: the Carthusians do not come near them. They not only did eat nothing but Fruit and Rice; but they would have thought themselves guilty of the greatest Impiety, had they touched any Food that had had Life. Τὸ δ' ἄλλων τινὸς ἅπτεσθαι, ἢ ἄλλως λέγειν ἔμψυχος τροφῆς ἶσον καὶ τῇ ἰσχάτῃ ἀκαθαρσίᾳ τε καὶ ἀσεβείᾳ νενόμισαι (7). They were moreover very devout, and spent the greatest part of the Day and Night in singing Hymns to the Honour

(7) Porphyr. de Abst. lib iv.

nor had any Commerce with Women [C]. They ſpent their time in fine Diſcourſes, and communicated their Science to thoſe who would come and hear them; But none of their Hearers was allowed to ſpeak or to ſpit: Whoever did it was turned out for that Day. When a Man had been thirty ſeven Years in that Society, he was at liberty to leave it in order to live a more eaſy Life: He was then permitted to eat ſuch Beaſts as do not labour for Men, and to marry many Wives; but he was not allowed to philoſophize with them [D]; for if they were bad, it was feared they would divulge the myſterious things among the prophane; and if they grew better by the Leſſons of their Huſbands, it was feared they would live no longer under their Subjection. The Brachmans ſaid, our Life ought to be conſidered as the State of Conception, and Death as a Birth to a true and happy Life for thoſe who have philoſophized well. They added, that the accidents of human Life are neither good nor evil, ſince the ſame things pleaſe ſome, and diſpleaſe others, and even are agreeable and diſagreeable to one and the ſame Perſon, at different times. Thus much for Morality. As to Phyſics, they taught ſeveral things which favoured of Folly; their main ſkill did not lie in that; their Actions were better than their Words, and they built a good part of their Syſtem on Fables; but otherwiſe they had the ſame Opinion as the Greeks in ſeveral things. They believed that the World had a Beginning, and would have an End; that it was round, and that GOD, who made and governed it, penetrated it every where; that the Principles of the Univerſe differed from each other, but that Water was the Principle of the World, and that there was a Quinteſſence, out of which the Heavens and the Stars were formed. They had alſo ſome Fables, like Plato, concerning the Immortality of the Soul, the Tribunals of Hell, and ſuch like things. It is Strabo, who ſpeaks thus ſlightly of the greateſt Truths of Religion. Apuleius, though he was taken for a Magician, has not ſo deſcribed thoſe Doctrines of the Brachmans [E]. They cultivated Phyſic and Aſtronomy very much (b). Clemens Alexandrinus teſtifies that they drank no Wine, nor eat any thing that had Life, and that becauſe they were perſuaded of a new Birth, they did not value this Life (c). He looks upon them as

(b) Strab. ibid. pag. 494.

(c) Καταφρονᾶσι δὲ θανάτου, καὶ παρ' ἡδὺν ἡγοῦνται τὸν βίον. πεῖθονται γὰρ εἶναι παλιγγενεσίαν. Mortem autem contemnunt & vivere nihil faciunt, credunt enim eſſe regenerationem. - - - - They deſpiſe Death, and ſet no value upon Life, for they believe there is a new Birth. Clemens Alexandr. Stromat. lib. iii, pag. 452.

Honour of the Gods, and praying to them. Each had his Cell, and they could not abide to live in common; Κοινῇ γὰρ Βραχμᾶνες μένειν οὐκ ἀνέχονται (8). Here you ſee true Carthuſians among the Pagans, and I do not even know whether they can be compared with Cenobites, rather than with Anchorites. Bardeſanes repreſents them as Men free from Malice, and who thought only of GOD (9). They drank neither Wine nor Malt-Drink; they eat nothing that had Life; they worſhiped no Images. That which is moſt wonderful is, that there was not a ſmall Number of ſuch great Saints; for there were ſeveral Thouſands of them. Credat Judæus Apella.

(8) Id. ibid.

(9) Bardeſanes apud Euſeb. Præp. Evang. lib. vi, cap. viii.

[C] They had no commerce with Women.] Suidas ſpeaks quite otherwiſe of them; what he ſays of them deſerves to be taken notice of for it's ſingularity. He ſays, that the Brachmans inhabit an Iſland of the Ocean, where the Air is ſo pure that they live a Hundred and fifty Years. They do not live there upon Bread and Water, but upon Water and Apples. They do nothing but pray to GOD. In the Months of July and Auguſt the Fruits, being then very plentiful, heat them with the Fire of Love, ſo that they go to their Wives beyond the River Ganges, and remain forty Days with them, and then return to their Iſland. When a Woman has had two Children, her Husband goes no more to ſee her; and ſhe on her ſide comes no more near any Man: and if any Woman has been five Years barren, her Husband makes no farther attempt upon her; he goes no more over the Sea with the reſt. This was not the way to people the Country: neither was it well peopled, as Suidas obſerves; but he ſhould not have forgot to ſay that theſe are meer Stories and Romances forged by idle Writers. It may be they deſigned to make the neighbouring Nations aſhamed by endeavouring to make them believe that there is a Country in the World, where People are far from being ſuch gluttons as they. However it be, I do not think that in all the ſincere Relations of Travellers there is any Country mentioned, where the Inhabitants are ſo chaſt as the Brachmans ſpoken of by Suidas. There are ſome Sects, and ſome Fraternities every where, that make Profeſſion of renouncing venereal Pleaſures; but the reſt of the Inhabitants laugh at that Morality, and ſcarce confine themſelves to any thing but to ſatiate their Appetites. The moſt ſavage Countries of Africa and America, the moſt icy parts of Lapland, abound with great gluttons in that Reſpect.

[D] They married many Wives, but were not allowed to philoſophize with them.] Some would have made uſe of this Paſſage to adorn the common Topic of Women's prating, if Strabo had not prevented it by obſerving that the Brachmans were only afraid of the Indiſcretion of bad Women. As for good Women, they only feared that as ſoon as they became good Philoſophers, they would free themſelves from the conjugal Servitude. But as all that is ſaid of the Indian Philoſophers ſwarms with Contradictions, we read in the following Page that ſome philoſophized with Women, but in ſuch a manner that they went not beyond Speculations; they begun and ended with the Spirit, they had nothing to do with the Fleſh. Συμπλοσοφεῖν δ' ἐνίοις καὶ γυναῖκας ἀπεχομένας καὶ αὐτὰς ἀφροδισίων. Cum horum etiam nonnullis mulieres philoſophari à venereis abſtinentes (10). - - - - - Women philoſophize with ſome of them, abſtaining from Venery. The Brachmans went quite another way to work; They did not philoſophize with their Wives, but endeavoured to get many Children by them. Ταμεῖν δ' ὑπερλείσας εἰς πολυτεκνίαν. Quamplurimas ducere uxores multiplicandæ prolis gratia (11). - - - - - They marry ſeveral Wives in order to multiply their Off-ſprings. If that Paſſage of Strabo were not ſo mangled as it is, we might ſee all the Reaſons which he had given for their Conduct. Another Hiſtorian ſays that they philoſophized alſo with them (12).

(10) Strabo, lib. xv, pag. 491. See alſo pag. 494.

(11) Id. ibid. pag. 490.

(12) Nearchus apud Strabon. pag. 493.

[E] Apuleius - - - - - has not repreſented the Opinions of the Brachmans as Fables.] Theſe are his Words; 'Brachmanæ pleraque Philoſophiæ ejus '(Pythagoræ) contulerunt, quæ mentium docu-'menta, quæ corporum exercitamenta, quot partes 'animi, quot vices vitæ, quæ Dii manibus pro 'merito ſuo cuique tormenta vel præmia (13). '- - - - - The Brachmans furniſhed great part of 'his (Pythagoras's) Philoſophy, what were the pro-'per Improvements of the Mind, what the Exer-'ciſes of the Body, how many parts of the Soul, 'how many changes of Life, what Rewards or 'Torments the Dii manes had for every Man ac-'cording to his Deſerts.'

(13) Apul. Florid. lib. ii, pag. 352.

as one of the two sorts of Gymnosophists (d) [F]; but it is very difficult to determine among so many contrary Relations, whether the Brachmans went naked or not [G]. Lucian calls the same Indian Philosophers indifferently Brachmans and Gymnosophists (e). We must take care not to be deceived by his Expressions, when he says in an indefinite manner, that they burnt themselves, not by leaping into the Pile, like Peregrinus, but going into it with a grave pace, worthy of their Character of Philosophers [H]. If some did it, it does not follow from thence that it was one of their Customs. He observes also, that, by reason of their Sobriety, they lived a long time (f). The Treatise of Palladius de Gentibus Indiæ & Bragmanibus, which was published at London in the Year 1665, deserves to be consulted [I]. If we had the Book that the Brachman King wrote in his own Language, concerning the Laws and Government of the Brachmans (g), it is likely we might see something very romantic in it.

(d) Id. lib. i, pag. 305.

(e) Lucian. in fugitivis, pag. 790, Tom. II.

(f) Id. in Macrobiis, pag. 632, Tom. II.

(g) Suidas.

The Brachmans subsist still in the East. The third Sect that is in vogue among the Chinese, may be called the Religion of the Brachmans or Bramins, and they call it so themselves. They are Priests who chiefly reverence three things, the God Fo, his Law, and

[F] Clemens Alexandrinus ------ looks upon them to be one of the two sorts of Gymnosophists.] Megasthenes divides the Indian Philosophers into Brachmanes and Germanes (14); the first were more esteemed than the latter: Those that were most esteemed among the Germanes were called Hylobians. The Reason of that Name was taken from their living in Woods (15). They fed only on Leaves and wild Fruits; their Garments were made of Barks of Trees; they abstained from Wine and from the Pleasures of Love. Clemens Alexandrinus follows the same Division of the Gymnosophists, only he calls the last sort Sarmanes, and subdivides them into Allobians, &c (16). I cannot tell whether Germanes ought to be preferred before Sarmanes (17); but it is certain that the Word Ἀλλόβιοι is corrupted, and that it ought to be read Ταλάβιοι, as in Strabo. Now in order to know whether that Division is just, this question must first be decided, whether the Brachmans wore any Cloaths; for it is not to be doubted, that by the Word Gymnosophists the Greeks understood all the Indian Philosophers, who did not cover their Nakedness. See the following Remark, and the Article GYMNOSOPHISTS. Ludovicus Vives had not examined Strabo carefully, when he made him say, that there were two sorts of Philosophers, in India; that some made their abode in the Towns, and others in the Woods; that the first were called Civil, and were covered with Shirts and Skins; those were the Brachmans; and that the last were naked, or were sometimes covered with Leaves and Barks of Trees; they were called Hermanes and Gymnosophists, and from them proceeded the Gymnosophists of Æthiopia (18). This account is far from being exact. I. In the first place, when Strabo speaks of certain Philosophers who were called Civil, he means a Sect which they opposed to the Brachmans, and which did nothing but find fault. II. In the second place, he does not say that That Sect was divided into two Classes, but into three: that of the Mountaineers, that of the Naked, and that of the Civil. Lastly, he says that the last dwelt indifferently in Towns and the Country. How came Vives then to find out that the Gymnosophists of Æthiopia were issued from any particular Indian Sect, rather than from another.

(14) Megasthenes, apud Strabonem, pag. 489.

(15) Ξένται ἐν ταῖς ὕλαις.

(16) Clem. Alexandr. Stromat. lib. I, pag. 305.

(17) Porphyr. de Abstin. lib. iv, divides the Gymnosophists into two Sects, viz. into Brachmans and Samaneans.

(18) Lud. Vives in August. de Civit. Dei, lib. xiv, cap. xvii.

[G] Among so many contrary Relations, it is difficult to determine whether they went naked or not.] We have seen some of the Contradictions, that are to be found in Books concerning the Indian Philosophers. It is past doubt, that they had not all the same Customs: By what right should they have been uniform? Was ever such a Privilege seen any where? But this does not fully justify the Authors, who tell inconsistent things of them; for they have not denoted each Sect by their proper Name. Those, who ascribe such or such a thing to them, make use of the same general Names, as those who do not ascribe it to them. Nay, did not Nearchus say that Calanus was a Brachman (19)? Did not Onesicritus say that he had discoursed with Calanus, and that he found him stark naked (20). One might therefore conclude from those two Witnesses, that the Brachmans went naked, and confirm it by Megasthenes, who reckoned among other Prerogatives of those, who left the Brachmans after having been Thirty seven Years among them, the liberty of wearing a Shirt (21). Yet an Author, named Hierocles, says the Brachmans wore a very singular Garment (22); it was made of Cloth of Stone, and did not consume in the Fire. Philostratus in the Life of Apollonius says they wore flaxen Cloth (23). According to Megasthenes, the Philosophers, who were the most esteemed in the Sect of the Germanes, wore Cloaths made of the Barks of Trees. But Cicero says in general, that the Indian Philosophers go naked (24). Hierocles says that the Brachmans lay always in the open Fields (25); but Onesicritus, who had seen them, affirms that they came every Night into the Town. Arrianus tell us that they spent the Summer under great Trees, and the Winter sub dio. Others say that each of them had his Cell (26). It may be they did not follow the same Institute in all Ages, and that, with a distinction of time, one might reconcile some of the Variations of the Authors, who have spoke of them.

(19) Nearchus, apud Strabonem, pag. 493.

(20) Ibid. pag. 492.

(21) Ibid. pag. 490.

(22) Hierocles apud Stephanum de Urbibus in Βραχμᾶνες.

(23) See what Pliny says of the Flax, Asbestos, lib. xviii, cap. i.

(24) Cicero, Tuscul. lib. v.

(25) Τραπέρας τὸν θέρος χρόνον διατρίβειν. Sub dio totam ætatem degunt. Hierocles apud Stephan. de Urbib. in Βραχμᾶνες.

(26) See Remark [B].

[H] According to Lucian ------ they burnt themselves, going into the Pile with a grave Pace worthy of their Character of Philosophers.] If we believe that Jester, they built the Pile, and stood unmoveable by it whilst the Fire roasted them. Afterwards they stept gravely and majestically into the Flames, and stirred no more than a Statue, after they had laid themselves down in the Fire (27). He opposes this way of burning ones self to that of Peregrinus, who threw himself into the Flames, and pretends that the Method of the Brachmans is much more glorious. Thus a Banterer finds some subject of Ridicule in every thing. If Peregrinus had imitated those Indian Philosophers, Lucian would have accused him of Irresolution; he would have said, he hesitates, he has a mind to fortify himself by degrees; he would shew more Courage if he threw himself headlong into the Fire. See what the Baron des Adrets said to a Soldier who durst not throw himself down a Precipice at the first nor the second Trial (28). Let a Man turn himself all ways imaginable, he will never avoid the satirical Stokes of such Men as Lucian, nor Slander in general. Read Mr de la Fontaine (29).

(27) Lucian de morte Peregrini, pag. 772, 773, Tom. II. He quotes Onesicritus, who had seen Calanus in the Flames. See the same Author in Fugitivis, pag. 790, in the same Tome.

(28) See above, Remark [B], Citation (10), in the Article BEAUMONT, &c.

[I] The Treatise of Palladius de gentibus Indiæ & Bragmanibus ------ deserves to be consulted.] Edward Bissæus (30) published it in Greek and Latin at London in the Year 1665, as the Bodleian Catalogue has it; but I find the Year 1668, in the Title of my Copy, without any Observation of it's being a second Edition. It is likely that this Difference in the Date comes from the Booksellers, who are wont from time to time to renew the Titles of their Books. Bissæus added two other Treatises to that Treatise of Palladius (31), one of St Ambrose, de Moribus Brachmanorum, and the other of an anonymous Author, de Brachmanibus. Neither of them had ever been printed before. Those three Pieces are preceded by an exact Collection of what the Ancients have said concerning the Brachmans: the Testimonies of the Greeks are set down in their Language, and afterwards in Latin.

(29) In the Fable of the Miller. It is the first of the third Book.

(30) Eques Auratus & titulo Clarencii rex armorum. ------ Knight, and Clarencieux King at Arms.

(31) The same who wrote the Historia Lausiaca, and who lived in the IVth Century.

and the Books which contain their particular Statutes (b). They have very odd Opinions about Non-entity, and their Morality has a great affinity with the Visions of our Quietists [K]. The Relation of Father Tachard shews that the Brachmans or Bramins of Bengal lead a very austere Life, that they walk bare-headed and barefooted on their burning Sand, and that they live only upon Herbs (i). The Brachmans of Indostan have very ancient Books which they call Sacred, and which they pretend GOD gave to the great Prophet Brahma (k). They preserve the Language in which those Books were written, and use no other in their divine and philosophical Explications. By that means they keep them from the Knowledge of the Vulgar. They believe the Transmigration of Souls, and eat no Flesh. They say that the production of the World consisted in this, that all things came out of the Bosom of GOD, and that the World shall perish by the return of those same things to their first Original. A Spider serves them for an Emblem to explain that Opinion [L]. The Brachmans of Siam believe that the first Men were bigger than (b) Charles le Gobien, a Jesuit, in his Histoire de l'Edit. de l'Emp. de la Chine en faveur de la Religion Chretienne.

(i) Tachard, Voiage de Siam, Book iv, sub fin. pag. 241, Edit. Holl.

(k) T. Burnet, in Appen. Archæolog. Philosoph.

[K] They have very odd Opinions about Non-entity, and their Morality has a great Affinity with the Visions of our Quietists.] 'The Bramans assert 'that the World is but an Illusion, a Dream, a 'Deceit: and that Bodies, to exist truly, must 'cease to be in themselves, and be confounded with 'Nothingness, which by it's Simplicity makes the 'Perfection of all Beings. - - - - - Their Morality 'is yet more overstrained than that of our Stoics. 'For they carry the Apathia, or Indifference, to 'which they refer all Holiness, so far, that a Man 'must become a Stone or a Statue to acquire the 'Perfection of it. They do not only teach that 'a Wise Man ought to have no Passions, but al'so that he ought not to have any Desire. So 'that he ought continually to apply himself to 'desire nothing, to think on nothing, to feel no'thing, and to remove all Thoughts of Virtue 'and Sanctity so far from his Mind, that there 'remains nothing in him contrary to the perfect 'quiet of the Soul. It is, say they, that profound 'drowsiness of the Mind, that Quiet of all the 'Powers, that continual suspension of the Senses, 'which makes the Happiness of Man (32): in that 'State he is no more subject to change; there is 'no more any Transmigration for him, any Vi'cissitude, any Fear of Things to come, because, pro'perly speaking, he is nothing, or if he is any 'thing, he is Wise, Perfect, Happy, in a word, 'he is God, and perfectly like the God Re: which 'certainly comes somewhat near to Folly. It is 'against this ridiculous Doctrine that the Chinese 'Philosophers display all the Strength of their 'Eloquence. They look upon a perfect Indiffe'rency as a Monster in Morality, and as the over'turning of the civil Society (33).' I omit the solid and short Refutation that follows in Father Gobien.

(32) Compare with this the Nirvepan of the Siamese, of which I speak in the Article SOMMONA-CODOM.

(33) Father Charles le Gobien, in his Preface to the Histoire de l'Edit. de l'Emp. de la Chine.

But I desire you to observe that this Monster of Indifference is the darling Doctrine of the Quietists, and that, according to them, one's true Felicity consists in Nothingness. 'Then in the threefold 'silence of Words, Thoughts, and Desires, finding 'ones self in a spiritual Sleep, in a mystical Drun'kenness, or rather in a mystical Death, all the 'suspended Powers are recalled from the Circum'ferences to the Center: GOD, who is that Cen'ter, makes the Soul feel him by divine Touches, 'by a Tast, by Illapses, by unspeakable Suavities. 'It's Affections being thus moved, it lets them 'rest quietly - - - - - and finds a delicious Repose 'which sets it above all Delights and Extasies, 'above the finest Manifestations, and divine No'tions, and Speculations: one cannot tell what he 'feels, nor what he is (34).' Do not imagine that Mr la Bruyere has made any Amplification: You will see his Book supported with Proofs. You will find this Passage of Molinos in it. 'It is then that 'the divine Spouse, suspending it's Faculties, lulls 'it in a sweet and calm Sleep: It is in that Drow'siness that it enjoys with an unconceivable Calm, 'without knowing wherein it's enjoyment con'sists (35).' You will find there, that 'a spiritual 'Soul ought to be indifferent to all things, either 'for the Body or the Soul, or for temporal or 'eternal Goods, and leave what is past in forget'fulness, and things to come to the Providence of 'GOD, and deny itself the present (36).' And that 'the resignation of the Soul ought to be such 'as to act without any Knowledge, like one that 'ceases to be (37).' That 'the Soul, feels, sees, and 'knows itself no more: it sees, comprehends, and 'distinguishes nothing in GOD; there is no more 'Love, Light, or Knowledge (38).' That 'that 'Soul, not feeling itself, is not at the trouble of 'seeking, or doing any thing: it remains as it is, 'which is sufficient. But what does it? Nothing, 'nothing, and always nothing (39).' That 'the 'Indifferency of this Lover is so great that it can'not incline towards Enjoyment, nor towards Pri'vation. Death and Life are equal to it, and 'though it's Love is incomparably stronger than 'ever it was, yet it cannot desire Paradise, because 'it remains in the Hands of it's Spouse as things 'that are not. This ought to be the Effect of 'the most profound Annihilation (40).' That 'the 'perfect Prayer of Contemplation puts Man besides 'himself, delivers him from all Creatures, makes 'him die and enter into the Rest of GOD; he is 'in Admiration that he is united to GOD, with'out doubting that he is distinguished from GOD. 'He is reduced to nothing, and knows himself no 'more: he lives and lives no more: he ope'rates and operates no more: he is and is no 'more (41).'

(34) La Bruyere Dialogue x, sur le Quietisme, pag. 33, &c seq.

(35) Molinos Guid. spirit. Book iii, ch. xiii, apud Bruyere, ubi supra, pag. 35, 36.

(36) Madame Guyon, moien court, apud eundem, Dial. v, pag. 171.

(37) Regle des Associez à l'enfance de Jesus, apud eund, ibid. pag. 172.

(38) Madame Guyon, in the Book of Torrents, apud eund. ibid.

(39) The same, ibid. apud. eund. Dial. vi, p. 201.

(40) The same, Explicat. du Cantique des Cantiques, apud eund. Dial. v, p. 190.

(41) La Combe, analyse de l'oraison mentale, apud eund. Dialvii, pag. 281.

We do not want Persons in Europe, any more than in China, to confute those foolish Visions eloquently; but to the shame of our Age, and our Climate, they have found Apologists among us, who make themselves formidable. Note, That the Doctrine of the Brachmans is less dreadful in some respects than that of our Mystics; for the latter place Indifferency, and the perfect Quietness, in a Transformation of the Soul into GOD, which they explain by the Notions of the Consummation of Marriage. 'The essential Union, say they (42), in the Spiritual 'Marriage, where there is a communication of Sub'stance, where GOD takes the Soul for his Spouse, 'unites it to himself, not personally, nor by any act or 'means, but immediately, reducing all to an Unity.— 'The Soul ought not, nor can any more make 'any Distinction between GOD and itself: GOD 'is the Soul, and the Soul is GOD, since by the 'Consummation of the Marriage it is returned in'to GOD, and finds itself lost in him without be'ing able to distinguish or find itself again. The 'true Consummation of the Marriage makes the 'Mixture of the Soul with it's GOD. - - - - The 'Marriage is made when the Soul finds itself dead, 'and expired in the Arms of the Spouse, who 'seeing it more disposed, receives it to Union with 'himself; but the Consummation of the Marriage 'is made only, when the Soul is so melted, annihi'lated, and disappropriated, that it can altogether 'run into it's GOD without any reserve. Then is 'made that admirable Mixture of the Creature 'with it's Creator, which reduces them to Unity. '- - - - - - - - If any Saints, or any Authors, have 'established this Divine Marriage in a less advan'ced State than this which I describe, it is because 'they took the betrothing for the Marriage, and 'the Marriage for the Consummation (43).' The Absurdity of this Doctrine as to Metaphysics is monstrous; for if there is any thing certain in the clearest Ideas, it is absolutely impossible that a real Change should be made either of GOD into a Creature, or of a Creature into GOD. Ovid, and the other Pagan Poets, were not so senseless as to mention such a Metamorphosis. What might not one say against this Cant of the Quietists, 'That a Soul is no more in itself, nor by itself; 'that (42) Madame Guyon, explicat. du Cant. des Cant. pag. 3, & apud eund. Dialvii, pag. 239.

(43) Ibid. pag. 145, &c. cited by La Bruyere, Dial. vii, on Quietism, pag. 239.

than those of this present time, and that they lived many Ages without any Sickness (l); and that our Earth shall be destroyed one day by Fire, and that another will come out of its Ashes, in which there shall be no Sea, nor any change of Seasons, but an eternal Spring (m). The Brachmans of the Country of Coromandel say, there are all at once several Worlds in different parts of the Universe, and that the same World is destroyed and renewed in certain periods of Time; that our Earth begun with the Golden Age, and will be destroyed by Fire (n).

(l) Tachard Voiage de Siam, pag. 390, apud T. Burnetium, ubi supra.

(m) Burnet, ibid.

(n) Id. ibid.

'that it is relapsed and swallowed up in GOD by 'a fundamental and central Presence (44),' that it 'admires GOD 'in his abyssal and supereminent Bottom (45).' Can any body forgive them, that 'State of Deification, wherein all is GOD without 'knowing that it is so (46), ------ that State 'of essential Union wherein the Soul becomes 'immutable, and has lost means ---- that Union 'not only essential but immediate and without 'means, more substantial than the hypostatic Union '------ that central Union with GOD,' that has no need of JESUS CHRIST for a Mediator (47). This kind of Eutychianism multipliable in infinitum would appear horrible to Eutyches himself. But if one would excuse all these things, can any body forgive them the obscene Images they make use of, which are so proper to expose Religion, and outdo in a manner all the Licence of the ancient Heathen Poets? Can any one forgive them what they assert, that, in order to lead a Soul to the State of Death, which is a Preparation to Deification, 'GOD permits that the Senses should 'extrovert, that is to say, debauch themselves, 'which appears a great Impurity to the Soul. 'And yet the thing is seasonable, and to do otherwise is to purify ones self in another manner than 'GOD commands, and to sully ones self (48).' Some faults are 'committed in that Extroversion, but 'the Confusion, which the Soul receives by it, 'and the Care of making use of it, make the Muck, 'wherein it rots the sooner, and hastens it's Death '(49).' Can any thing be more dangerous to good Manners? It is likely I shall have some occasion to shew that the pretended essential Union of those Persons may very well be called Seneca's Paradice.

(44) La Bruyere, Dial. 7, pag. 261.

(45) The Abbot d'Estival, confer. mystic. apud eund. Dial. ii. pag. 35.

(46) Madame Guyon, in the Book of Torrente, apud eund. Dial. vii, pag. 258.

(47) La Bruyere, Dial. vi, pag. 222, 223.

(48) Id. Dial. vii, pag. 285.

(49) Ibid. pag. 286.

[L] A Spider serves them for an Emblem to explain that Opinion.] See here how Dr Burnet expresses it: 'Hoc autem more Cabalistico vel Mythologico exprimunt. Fingunt enim immensam 'quandam Aranearn esse primam rerum causam: 'Quæ, materia è suis visceribus educta, hujusce universi telam contexuit, & mira arte ordinavit. Sedet illa interea in arce sui operis, & cujusque 'partis motum sentit, regit, & moderatur. Tandem cum satis lusit in sua tela adornanda & contemplanda, retrahit, quæ evolverat, sibi, atque 'ita omnia reciorbet in seipsam, totaque rerum 'creatarum natura in nihilum evanescit. Hoc modo 'Mundi ortum, ordinem, & interitum, repræsentant hodierni Brachmanes (50). ------ *But this 'they express in a Cabalistic and Mythological 'Manner. For they pretend that a certain immense 'Spider was the first Cause of Things: which 'wrought the Webb of this Universe of Matter 'drawn out of her own Bowels, and disposed it 'with wonderful Art. That she from the Summit 'of her Work continually observes, orders, and regulates the Motion of every Part. At last, when 'she has satisfied herself with the Pleasure of 'adorning and contemplating her Web, she gathers 'up the Thread she had spun, and so absorbs all 'again into herself, and the whole Nature of created Things vanishes. Thus the modern Brachmans 'represent the beginning, order, and end of the 'World.' This Comparison of the Author of the World to a Spider, who having diverted herself with making her Web, draws in, and devours the same Threads that came out of her own Bowels, plainly represents the Doctrine of the Stoics (51). The Extravagancy of that Idea cannot be sufficiently wondered at. Physics, Metaphysics, and Morals, afford us an hundred solid Arguments to confute it: Doubtless I shall have some Occasion to touch upon this Matter. I shall only observe, here, that a Man is very excusible, when the Consideration of the Follies, which the Eastern Nations have believed for so many Ages about the Original of the World, moves him to ascribe them to the Wrath of Heaven, and raises his Astonishment at the Duration and Greatness of it. 'Miseret me quidem Terrarum Orientalium, primæ 'sapientum sedis, florentissimæ olim bonarum litterarum Emporii, à multis retro sæculis in fœdam 'barbariem conversarum.

(50) T. Burnetius, in appendice Archæol. Philos. pag. 472.

(51) See T. Burnet, Archæol. lib. i, cap. vii, pag. 326, 327. Edit. Amstal. 1694.

Tantæne animis cœlestibus iræ?

'Faxit Deus, ut eâdem non subeamus vices, neque retrahat FRATUS id luminis quo gaudemus 'in Occidente (52). ------ Indeed I pity the 'Eastern Countries, the first Seat of wise Men, 'once the most flourishing Men of Learning, for 'many Ages past fallen into abominable Barbarity.

(52) Id. ibid. pag. ultima.

Can Heaven such strong Resentment show?

'GOD grant it may not come to our turn to do 'the like, and that he in his WRATH do not 'withdraw that Light which we are blessed with 'in the West.'

BRANDOLINUS (AURELIUS), born at Florence in the XVth Century, was surnamed Lippus, from a Defluxion of Humours that ran down from his Eyes (a). That Distemper, so much an Enemy to Men of Letters, did not hinder him from becoming a very learned Man. He was a great Orator, a great Musician, and a good Poet. His Reputation being spread every where, he was invited to Hungary by King Matthias Corvinus, to teach the Art of Oratory, which he did many Years at Buda, and in Strigonia, with great Success. After his return to Florence he took the religious Habit of St Augustin, and some time after was made a Priest. He applied himself to preaching, and had every where the applause of a great crowd of Auditors. He died of the Plague at Rome in the Year 1498. He was Author of some Books which are esteemed (b) [A]. Moreri's Faults are not so considerable as his Omissions [B].

(a) Gesner Biblioth. fol. 483, does not rank his Name right; for he places him under Lippus Brandolinus Aurelius.

(b) Taken from Michael Poccianti de Scriptor. Florent. pag. 83. See also Ghilini, Tom. II, pag. 32, 33, who only paraphrases Poccianthus.

[A] He was Author of some Books which are esteemed.] He put the Histories contained in the Old and New Testament into Heroic Verse. He wrote a Commentary on St Paul's Epistles; a Treatise de Lege; two Books of Christian Pardoxes; a Dialogue de humanæ vitæ conditione & tollenda corporum ægritudine ad Matthiam Corvinum Regem; three Books de ratione scribendi. This last Work was very much praised by Sebastian Corradus. 'Quamvis penè cœcus, certè lippus, ex ea (Rhetorica) 'præcepta collegit, & à ratione dicendi ad rationem scribendi tam docte transtulit, & tam diligenter accommodavit, ut verissime de eo scripserit 'Seb. Corradus, nihil neque majorum suorum memoria, neque sua, doctius aut elegantius in ea 'scriptum videri (1). ------ Though he was almost blind, at least sore eyed, he gathered Precepts from that (Rhetoric) and transferred them 'so learnedly from the manner of speaking to the 'manner of writing, and adapted them so carefully, 'that Sebastian Corradus said very truly of him, 'that there was nothing writ more learnedly or 'elegantly in the Memory either of his Ancestors 'himself. Konig, from whom I have these Words

(1) Konig. Biblioth. vet. & nova, pag. 138.

Words, had not done amiss if he had told us where Corradus spake so: for one would never conjecture that those Words are prefixed to Brandolinus's three Books de ratione scribendi, reprinted at Basil in the Year 1565, since Mr Konig speaks of that Edition immediately after, without saying any thing to shew that Sebastian Corradus was concerned in it. I shall therefore add a Passage which will serve for a Supplement to the other. 'Hoc pacto 'fere Lippus Brandolinus, vir suæ ætatis doctissi- 'mus, si non cæcus certe insigniter lippus, libros 'de ratione scribendi concinnaverat, Rhetoricen à 'clarissimo Hungarorum Rege Matthia Corvino 'evocatus, in Pannonia professus, teste Sebastiano 'Corrado (2), præstantis eruditionis viro. - - - - - - 'In like manner Lippus Brandolinus, the most learned Man of his Time, if not blind, yet certainly extreamly sore eyed, writ his Books de ratione scribendi, when he was Professor of Rhetoric in Pannonia, whither he was invited by Matthias Corvinus, the most serene King of Hungary, as Sebastianus Corradus, a Man of extraordinary Learning, testifies.' I take this from a Piece wherein mention is made of several learned blind Men: It is intituled, Dissertatiuncula de cæcis sapientia ac eruditione claris, mirisque cæcorum quorundam actionibus. You will see the Author's Name, and the Year of the Impression, in the Margin (3).

(2) Epistola ad S. P. Q. Rhegiensem tribus Brandolini libris ab Operino excusis præmissa.

(3) Georgius Trinkhusius Obrdruf Thuring. Gymn. Rectoris Gerani Commilito, in dissertatiuncula de cæcis sapientia ac eruditione claris, &c. fol. B 2. It was printed at Gera, in the Year 1694, in 4to.

[B] Moreri's Faults are not so considerable as his Omissions.] I find but two in the Edition of Lyons 1688, the one is that Lipus is put instead of Lippus: the other is that descript. Aug. is put for de Scriptor. Augustinianis. Those two Faults are worse in the Dutch Editions; for instead of Lipus they have put Lupus, and instead of Aug. they have put Angl. This last mistake may persuade the Readers that Elssius and Pamphilius have composed some Books concerning the English Writers. I very much suspect two other Faults of Moreri. I believe he is mistaken when he says after Miræus, that the Treatises de humana conditione, de ratione scribendi, and de paradoxis Christianis, were dedicated to Matthias Corvinus, King of Hungary, and printed since at Basil in the Year 1498. The first of those two facts seems to me to be false as to the two last Treatises. Neither do I believe that the Paradoxes were printed at Basil in the Year 1498, for I see in Gesner's Bibliotheque that the first Impression is of the Year 1543. Paradoxa Christiana nunc primum excusa 1543. in 8vo. Basileæ apud Rob. Winter (4).

(4) Gesner, Biblioth. fol. 483.

BRASAVOLUS (Antonius Musa), Physician and Professor at Ferrara, flourished before the middle of the XVIth Century; he taught Logic eight Years, and Natural Philosophy nine Years, in the University of Ferrara; after which he applied himself to the Explication of the Theory of Physic (a). The Commentaries which he wrote on the Aphorisms of Hippocrates (b) were well esteemed. He wrote several other Books on the Nature of Medicines, and the Method of preparing them [A]. He used the Form of a Dialogue between himself and an old Apothecary. His Stile is clear and simple, and without any affectation of Ornament (c). He was very impertinently introduced by Laurence Joubert, in the Story of a Buffoon [B]. His Work on the Pox was judged very contemptible by John de Renou, a French Physician [C]. Jerom Brasavolus his Son was a Physician, and published something [D].

(a) See the Preface to his Commentary upon the Aphorisms of Hippocrates in Gesner Biblioth. fol. 62.

(b) Gesner takes notice of the Basil Edition, in Folio, of 1542. See his Biblioth. fol. 62.

(c) Gesner, ibid.

[A] He wrote several other Books on Medicines, and the Method of preparing them.] His Examen omnium Simplicium quorum usus est in Publicis Officinis was printed at Rome in the Year 1536, in Folio; and at Lyons in 1544, 8vo. You will find in Lindenius Renovatus (1) the different Editions of the Examen omnium Syruporum, Linctuum, Pulverum, Electuariorum, Confectionum Catharticarum, Catapotiorum, vel Pilularum, Throchiscorum, Unguentorum, &c. The Epitome of the Bibliotheque of Gesner gives the Titles of several other Works of Brasavolus, whether they had been printed, or not printed at that time (2). I have mentioned one in the Remark [D] of the Article GONZAGUE (Lucretia).

(1) In pag. 78.

(2) See Simler's Epitome Biblioth. Gesneri, p. 63, Edit. Tigurinæ An. 1583, in Folio.

[B] He is very impertinently introduced by Laurence Joubert in the Story of a Buffoon.] Joubert says, that Alphonsus Duke of Ferrara having asked of what Trade there were most People; Gonella his Buffoon laid a Wager with him that there were more Physicians than other sort of People (3). He feigned the next day that he had got the Tooth-ach, and set down in his Table-book every one that told him a Remedy: the Duke was put in the List, for he had said to Gonella, I know a thing that will put thee immediately out of pain though the Tooth be decayed; Mr Antonio Musa Brasavolo, my Physician, never uses a better. Do so and so and you will be immediately well (4). I omit the rest; you may find it in the Collections of Jests; I only say that Joubert was not well acquainted with the date of the Fact: it was before the time of Brasavolus, and of Alphonsus Duke of Ferrara. This Gonella was Buffoon to Nicolas d' Est, Marquis of Ferrara, and we read all the Story in a Writer of the XVth Century (5). But that is the Fate of this kind of Stories; they are carried from Age to Age, and from Country to Country; but an exact Author ought to keep to the Source.

(3) Joubert Erreurs populaires, liv. i, chap. ix, pag. 39.

(4) Id. ibid. pag. 40.

(5) In Jovianus Pontanus, lib. vi, de Sermone, cap. ii, pag. 1727.

[C] His Work on the Pox was judged very contemptible by John de Renou, a French Physician.] I beg leave to recite the very Words of his Translator: they have not the Politeness of the present time, but every Age has it's manner. I do by no means approve that this Author should out of spite forget Modesty, spite I say to see that the Italians call the Pox the French Disease. 'It is a Distem- 'per, says he (6), which 'till the Year 1493 was 'intirely unknown in Europe; the Italian Compa- 'nions and Servants of Christopher Columbus 'brought it from the Indies about that time, and 'communicated it presently to the Women of Italy, who prostituting themselves to our French du- 'ring the Siege of Naples, they infected imme- 'diately all that had to do with them: whence it 'followed that the French, after they had taken 'the City of Naples, returning home in confusion 'gave this Distemper also to a great number of 'other Italian Women, which they lay with here 'and there in diverse places of Italy, who also 'communicated it to their Husbands, being willing 'to acquit themselves of their matrimonial Duty. '- - - - At which the Italians, being extreamly in- 'raged at the French Nation, have, out of spite, 'and to revenge themselves for the Affront, called 'the Disease of Naples the French Disease. So 'that the Titles of the Books, which they have 'since wrote on that Subject, carry in them the 'Vengeance of their Courage, and the disorderly 'Life of their Wives, which makes me believe 'also that Brasavolus finding himself touched, as it 'were by Tradition, with the Injury of his sup- 'posed Predecessors, (I say supposed because possi- 'bly from the Spawn of some Frenchman) has 'wrote a certain little Book on the French Disease, 'in which he makes Two hundred and thirty four 'sorts of it; but I believe that the good Man 'doted when he writ the Book, or else he was 'willing that Posterity should know, that at the 'first Bout which our Frenchmen had with his Re- 'lations and Neighbours, there were Two hundred 'and thirty four of them done over; and for as 'much as they never were so well matched as 'then, he though it was his Duty to leave us 'these eternal Memorials to raise our Frenchmen's 'Appetites to return thither again, and when they 'were there, to do the like Favour to all the 'Women they could meet with.' How flat and ridiculous this!

(6) Jean de Renou Antidotaire, liv. ii, cap. xxi, pag. 602, in Lenis de Serres's French Translation, printed at Lyons, in 1637, in Folio.

[D] JEROM BRASAVOLUS, his Son - - - - - published something.] An Exposition on the first Book of Hippocrates's Aphorisms, printed at Ferrara, Ferrara, in 1595, in 4to, and a Treatise De Officiis Medici, printed at the same Place, in the Year 1590 (7), and in the Year 1599, in 4to. I find in Lindenius Renovatus (8). A Commentary on the first Aphorism of Hippocrates, printed at Ferrara in 1594, and attributed to Antonius Musa Brasavolus. I rather think it is a Treatise of Jerom Brasavolus, as it is said to be in the Catalogue of the Bodleian Library.

(7) See Lindenius Renovatus, pag. 113.

(8) Pag. 78.

BRAUN (GEORGE), in Latin Braunius (a), Archdeacon of Dortmund, and Dean of our Lady in Gradibus at Cologn, lived 'till the beginning of the XVIIth Century. He published a Latin Oration against the Priests that kept Concubines, in the Year 1566. He wrote also the Life of Jesus Christ, and that of the Holy Virgin, and a Treatise of Controversy against the Protestants [A], which was printed at Cologn in the Year 1605 in 8vo; but his principal Work is the Theatrum Urbium, in several Volumes in Folio (b). He was at Antwerp at the time of the Insurrection of the People, on the thirteenth of March 1567, and relates how the Lutherans joined with the Catholics to resist the Calvinists (c). All the Accounts of that dreadful Action agree as to that Union. I shall extract from his Work of Controversy some Facts, which relate to the establishment of Lutheranism in the City of Dortmund [B], and to the Variations of the Confession of Augsburg [C].

(a) He is called Bruinius in the Epitome of the Bibliotheque of Gesner, pag. 265, and Brunus in the Athenæ Belgicæ of Swertius, pag. 269. Note, the Bodleian Catalogue makes of this Author, George Braun and George Brunius.

(b) Swertii Athenæ Belgicæ, pag. 269.

(c) Braunius in Catholicorum Tremonensium Defensione, fol. 218, verso.

[A] He wrote a Treatise of Controversy against the Protestants.] This is the Title, Catholicorum Tremonensium adversus Lutheranicæ ibidem factionis Prædicantes Defensio: in qua legitimæ rationes & causæ explicantur ob quas Catholicæ Ecclesiæ in quâ nati, Christo initiati & educati, confessione deserta, Augustanam assumere & profiteri negucant. The Occasion which determined George Braun to publish this Work was, that the Magistrates of Dortmund (Tremonia in Latin), an Imperial City of the Circle of Westphalia, and the Diocese of Cologn, made a Decree the seventh of October 1603, that all the Inhabitants, who would not subscribe to the Confession of Augsburg, should be deprived of Liberty of Conscience. Braun urged ten reasons against this Decree. I shall touch a little of the first, because they are historical Points, of which the Readers, whatever dislike they may have to Controversy, may be glad to be informed.

[B] I shall extract from his Book of Controversy some facts, which relate to the Establishment of Lutheranism in the City of Dortmund.] The Author represents to the Lutheran Ministers, that they ought to remember the first Step which their Ancestors took to introduce their Faith into the the City of Dortmund. It was to present a Petition to the Magistrate, by which they humbly desired Liberty of Conscience, the Communion in both kinds, and a particular Chapel in the Parish Church, without pretending to give the least Disturbance in the World to the Catholic Religion, the public Exercise whereof was established in all the Churches of the City. And promising further, to live in submission to their Superiors, both Civil and Ecclesiastical, who were then of the Roman Communion. A Chapel was allowed them, where they might communicate in both kinds. Some time after they obtained one of the Parish Churches, and the Liberty of singing in German. The Preacher who officiated there banished the Mass. He had been a Monk, he drew a great Number of Auditors, and succeeded so well that he established Lutheranism in all the other Parishes except that of St Nicolas; but that also fell some time after into the Power of a Lutheran Minister (1) who preached violently against the Priests. The Author observes that at the time of the Treaty of Passau (2), and a little after the Peace of the Religion had been concluded (3), there was no other than the Romish Religion prevailed in the City and County of Dortmund, but that it was suppressed there, and Lutheranism established by public Authority in the Year 1582, when the principal Magistrates and Patricians were absent on account of the Contagion, those who would oppose the Novelty proving to be the weaker Side. When the Confession of Augsburg was thus publickly authorized, it was not hard for the Ministers to fix it, and make it triumph throughout the whole City, till they had obtained the Decree I have mentioned (4). The Author compares the Conduct of the Lutherans in this Affair to a Wedge, the thinest Part of which being once entered into a piece of Wood serves by little and little to introduce the thickest parts till the Wood be quite split. 'Talem procedendi modum amplexi 'estis, quem cuneo, cum Stanislao Hosio, compa-'ravero. Is primâ parte tenuis, ità ut in lignum 'impactus magnam ligni disruptionem non videa-'tur esse facturus; & tamen primâ hac suâ te-'nuitate aditum facit sequenti crassitiei, adeò ut 'cum prima pars illa admissa & recepta fuerit, sen-'sim ac paulatim sequentia crassiora admittantur, 'donec solidum lignum penitus decussum disrup-'tumque fuerit. Hujus cunei primam ac tenuio-'rem partem, apud vos Tremonenses, primam 'supplicationem ac petitionem vestram dixero, quâ 'Calicem separatim in unicum tantum sacellum in-'troduxistis. Is receptus, altera pars cunei crassior, 'cantum Germanicum & unius Parochiæ occupa-'tionem extorsit, ex quâ novus novi verbi Mi-'nister ac Prædicans legitimum Evangelicæ Legis 'ac Catholicæ sacerdotium ac juge sacrificium 'sustulit, pedetentim, juxta Lutheri varicinium, 'progrediendo (5). ------ You have taken such 'a Method of proceeding, as I, with Stanislaus Ho-'sius, will compare to a Wedge, that is thin at the 'first end, so that when it is driven into a Piece 'of Wood it does not seem as if it would make 'any great Rupture, and yet by it's thinness at first it 'makes way for the following thickness, so that when 'the first part is admitted and received, the fol-'lowing thick parts are insensibly, and by little and 'little, admitted, till the whole Timber is intirely 'rent and torn in pieces. The first and thin part of 'this Wedge, amongst you of* Dortmund, I call your 'first Supplication and Petition, by which you intro-'duced the Cup, separately, into one Chappel only: 'that received, the other thicker part of the Wedge 'extorted singing in German, and the Possession of 'one Parish, from which the new Minister and 'Preacher of the new Word took away the lawful 'Priesthood, and pure Sacrifice of the Evangelical 'and Catholic Law, proceeding, step by step, accord-'ing to the Prediction of Luther.'

(5) Braunius, ibid. pag. 4.

It is certain, that one of the Pretexts of those who oppose new Religions, is to say that we must not trust the Humility which appears in the respectful Demands which they make at first to be barely tolerated: That it is the Language of a Man who will enter like a Fox, and reign like a Lion, and that they have a Zeal which has an extraordinary Resemblance to Ambition. A private Man, who is ambitious, will be content at first to be advanced five or six steps, soon after he will desire as much more. And then he would be equal to his Principals, and afterwards surpass them. A new Sect seem as if they would think themselves very happy if they obtain only Liberty of Conscience, but after a few Months that will not suffice them, they desire to be admitted to some Offices, and afterwards to share half the Government; and lastly, to be Masters, and will not allow the rest what they obtained of them by favour (6). Those who take literally the Command of JESUS CHRIST Compelle intrare, Compel them to come in, imagin that nothing is more justifiable than that Conduct; but it has been shewn that they are grosly mistaken, and that they expose Christianity to the just Detestation of all the World (7).

Most of the other Reasons of George Braun are taken either from the Divisions, which prevailed among the Sectaries, or from the Confession, which several

(1) Named Herman Embsinghoff.

(2) In 1552.

(3) In 1555.

(4) Ex Georgii Braunii Causâ primâ, pag. 3, &c.

(6) I have recited, in Remark [C], of the Article A BAS, the Words of Charles IX.

(7) See the Philosophical Commentary upon Compel them to come in, Part I, chap. v.

several Ministers had made, that the new Reformation had augmented the Disorders of Mankind; he cites a great deal: I know not whether he cites faithfully, but what he cites has been a thousand and a thousand times objected by the Roman Catholics: and Answers have not been wanting.

[C] —— And to the Variations of the Confession of Augsburg.] It is the Subject of the fourth reason of George Braun. He says, I. That the Original German, and the Original Latin of the Confession of Augsburg, presented to the Emperor, and to the Diet of the Empire, in the Year 1530, differ both as to the Words and Sense in almost every Article (8). II. That Melanchthon printed it in Latin and German, at Wittemberg, in the beginning of the Year 1531, but that he varied from the Original, especially with regard to the tenth Article, which relates to the Holy Supper. III. That in the same Year, in the same City, and in the same Printing-House, Luther and Melanchthon got two Editions printed in Latin, one in 4to, the other in 8vo, which were extreamly unlike both as to the Terms and the things. IV. That the Edition in Quarto admits Transubstantiation, and proves it by the Canon of the Greek Mass, and by Theophylact, but that the Edition in 8vo contains nothing of that, and that for that reason Hesshusius, Pappus, and other Lutheran Preachers reject the Edition in 4to, and condemn it as Popish. V. That the German Editions, made under the Direction of Melanchthon at Wittemberg in the Year 1531, and at Nuremberg in the Year 1532, differ from the Original, and from the two first Latin Editions, in several Points. VI. That every time the Confession was put to the Press, Alterations were made in it. VII. That he was blamed for it by the rigid Lutherans, as appears by the Conference of Altenburg, where they enquired which was the true Confession of Augsburg, and which was spurious, where the Partisans of Melanchthon acknowledged that, with the Consent of Luther, in 1530, in 1540, and in 1541, he had altered, corrected, and augmented the Confession, and the Apology for the Confession. VIII. That after the Death of these two Heads of the Party, they continued making Alterations in the Confession of Augsburg till the Year 1580, and that the Lutherans knew nothing of any Edition conformable to the original German, and the original Latin. IX. That they begun to open their Eyes, and not being able to find the true Original in the Cabinets of their Ministers, they desired of the Archbishop of Mayence the original German, which had been presented to the Diet of the Empire, in the Year 1530, and was kept in the Chancery of the Empire, and that having obtained it they at last published in the German Tongue, for the first time, the true and genuine Confession of Augsburg in the Year 1580. 'Germanicum ejus originale, 'quod Moguntiæ in Cancellariâ Imperii inter acta 'comitiorum Augustanorum ab anno 1530, usque 'ad eum ipsum annum 1580, delitescens cum blat-'tis & tineis rixabatur, ab Achiepiscopo & Electore 'Moguntino emendiatum, ac tum primum ge-'nuinam Germanicam Confessionem integra fide 'excusam publicarunt (9).' X. That the Latin Apology, according to the Original, was not published till 1587, as we learn from David Chytraus, who had the Care of it. XI. That the Latin Confession, and the German Apology, as they were presented to the Emperor, with the German Confession in the Year 1530, at the Diet of Augsburg were never yet printed (10). I shall make a small Remark on the tenth Fact. David Chytreus has inserted in the Work cited by Braun, that is to say, in the History of the Confession of Augsburg, the true and unsuspicious Apology, according to the first Impression by George Rhau at Wittemberg in the Year 1531. Now this Work of David Chytreus was printed before the Year 1587; for I have the French Version of it, printed at Antwerp in the Year 1582. I know not whether David Chytreus, after he had published the Original of that Version, published a second Edition in the Year 1587, in which he inserted the Apology according to the first Manuscript of Melanchthon; if so, there is nothing to be said against George Braun.

Observe, that Luke le Cop, who translated that Work of Chytreus into French, and was Member of the Lutheran Church at Antwerp, observes in his Epistle Dedicatory, that the Confession of Augsburg as it was translated into French, and afterwards printed some where in the Year 1560, is so disguised that it ought not to be acknowledged for what the Title imports. Observe also, that the Bishop of Meaux has taken a great deal of Pains to set forth the Alterations of the Lutheran Confession, and the Apology (11); but I do not believe that he advances all the Facts which Braunius has recited. Hospinian, who has given a very large detail of that Matter (12), was the Bishop of Meaux's Original.

(8) Braunius Defens Catholicorum Tremonensium, pag. 55, 56.

(9) Id. ibid. pag. 91.

(10) Taken from the Defensio Catholicorum Tremonensium of Braunius, pag. 55, &c.

(11) See Tom. I. of his Histoire des Variations in the Places referred to in the Table of matters under the Word Augsburg.

(12) See Tom. II. of his Historia Sacramentaria.

(a) And not Francis, as in Konig.

BRAUNBOM (FREDERIC) (a), a Protestant Author, and a German, published in 1613, with great Ostentation, a Book, which he thought full of new Discoveries, on the Explication of the Prophecies of the Old and New Testament [A]. He determined all the Periods of the Reign of Antichrist; his Birth, his Youth, the highest pitch of his Strength, the beginning of his Decline, his decrepit Age, and his Death. By his account Antichrist was born in the Year 86, and he was in the state of Adolescency in the Year 376, at the Age of Manhood in 636, in the highest Prosperity in the Year 711; he begun to decline in 1086, his Decay, and the Adolescency of the Reformed Church, fell in the Year 1376; the decrepit State of the former, and the full Strength of the latter, was to happen in the Year 1636. Antichrist was to die in the Year 1640, and the end of the World

[A] He published - - - a Book which he thought full of new Discoveries on the Explication of the Prophecies of the old and new Testament.] The Title of this Book is Florum Flaminiorum Romanensium, Bapalium sive Papalium Decas una, inter quas inspersæ Notæ Anaschevasticæ in disputationem Martini Becani Antiesuidæ Moguntini de Antichristo reformato, una cum Chronologiâ totius sacræ Scripturæ nova, absoluta, &c. Hanoviæ 1613 (1), in 4to. 'I dare affirm, says he, that I clear up certain 'Things which were not known before, that I 'prove the Truth of Propositions which others had 'advanced; that I correct Falsities, that I settle 'what was before uncertain (2); the first Reformers, continues he, understood not the Revelation. Neither Daniel himself, nor the Angel which 'instructed him, nor the Soul of JESUS CHRIST, 'understood the Numbers of this Prophet. Liber Apocalypsis non est intellectus initio reformationis aut parum prò evangelico habitus, & sinistra illa veterum suspitio de hoc sacro volumine antiquata est & sublata per Ecclesiam. Verum id quidem, sed primitiis nostris suspecta erat Ecclesia, nec injuria, licet hoc non in loco (3). - - - - - - Non Daniel ipse, non Angelus Danielis instructor, non anima Salvatoris plena Sapientiæ, numeros Danielicos intellexit, quia non curavit, quidam enim tempus, nec ideo Apostolis curandi (4). — 'The Book of Revela-'tions was not understood in the beginning of the 'Reformation, or hardly taken for Canonical, and 'the Suspicion of the Ancients in prejudice of this 'sacred Volume is removed by the Church. That 'is true indeed, but the Church was suspected by 'our first Leaders, and not without cause, though 'in this place. - - - - - Daniel himself, nor the 'Angel who instructed him, nor the Soul of our 'Saviour, who had the Fulness of Wisdom, under-'stood Daniel's Numbers, because he did not take 'notice of them, for it was not yet time for him, 'and therefore not for the Apostles to take notice 'of it.' This nevertheless is what our Author boasts he has explained clearly and with all the Success in the World (5).

(1) The Bibliotheque of Draudius observes, pag. 166, of the Edition of Hanau, apud Hæredes Aubrianos, 1615, in 4to, and pag. 459, Edit. of Francfort, apud Weckelianos, 1618, in 4to. Observe, that that of 1613 is printed at Hanau.

(2) Braunbom, pag. 9, apud Contzen in Tractatu cui Titulus de Hæreseon Incremento.

(3) Id. ibid. pag. 22, apud eundem, pag. 55.

(4) Id. pag. 27, 28, apud eundem pag. 558.

(5) Nec sine perperrimo successu, pag. 5, apud eundem, pag. 543.

[B] Here

World should be in the Year 1711. We shall see below some other Particulars of that Work [B]. It is not necessary to observe that Braunbom applies to the Papacy, whatever he found in the Scripture concerning Antichrist and the great Whore: I shall [B] Here are some other Particulars of that Work.] We find there a new beginning of the Christian Æra; the Author was so pleased with the Invention that he exhorts all Christians to bless God for it: Gaudete mecum & laudate Deum quotquot estis Christiani; inveni Annum Nativitatis Christi qui perierat (6). This fine Discovery consists in placing the Nativity of our Saviour ten Years sooner than it is commonly placed, and by this he is obliged to say that JESUS CHRIST was baptized in the fifth Year of Tiberius, notwithstanding St Luke places it in the fifteenth Year of that Emperor (7). He remedies this by supposing, that St Luke reckons from the time that Tiberius was made Colleague of the Emperor; he founds his new Chronology on five Arguments; I shall not recite them, nor the Answers that have been made to them (8).

(6) Id. apud eumdem, pag. 558.

(7) Luke iii. 1.

(8) The Jesuit Contzen refuted him in a Book quoted above, Cit. (2).

The Title of his fifth Chapter of the tenth Book is Mandatum divinum de Pontifice evertendo. - - - A Commandment from GOD to ruin the Papacy. He affirms in this Chapter that every Protestant has received a public Order, like that which Ehud (9) received in private: Ubi publicum præceptum habere omnes Calvinistas asserit quale Ehud habuit privatum & ne desit concitandæ seditioni verba Apoc. xviii. 4, 5, 6, 7, Germanicè recitat. Omnia igitur supplicia irrogare jubet, exurere, carnes edere, nullum supplicium nimium putare (10). 'Where he asserts that all the Calvinists have a public Command, 'such as Ehud had a private one, and that he may 'not want Words to stir up Sedition, he recites in 'German the xviiith of Revelations, 4th, 5th, 6th, 'and 7th, Verses. Therefore he commands them to 'exercise all Punishments, to burn them, to eat 'their Flesh, and think no Torture too great.' I leave you to judge whether the Jesuit who answered him spared him on these sanguinary Notions. See below Remark [C] towards the end. He made an Objection to his Hypothesis that Popery should perish in 1641. 'The Protestant Princes 'may then, says he, spare their Preparations for 'War, since the Pope is not to perish 'till 1641, 'and then he will necessarily perish: It is then a 'foolish piece of Work in Mr du Plessis to exhort 'the King of England to equip a Fleet to go and 'destroy Rome.' 'Hoc monere amicè possum & 'debeo, periculo, sumptu, labore bellandi posse 'supersedere Principes adversæ Religionis; non 'enim nisi anno 1641 morietur Pontifex & certè 'tum morietur. Militari itaque stoliditate Plessæus 'Sereniss. Magnæ Britanniæ Monarcham hortatur, classem instruat, naviget Italiam, Romam 'exurat, Pontificem mactet, carnes edat: præmatura 'sunt vetuli militis consilia, nam ut vita in Annum '1641 suppetat Regi sereniss. & Plessæo, 37 annorum bellum in Italiâ sustinere tres Insulæ queant, 'meritu dubitare posse videntur Proceres Britanni (11). - - - This I may and ought to advise them, friendly, that the Princes of the contrary Religion may spare the Danger, Expence, and Trouble of making War, for the Pope will not die 'till the Year 1641, and then he will certainly die; therefore it is a piece of military Folly in du Plessis to exhort the most serene King of Great Britain to fit out a Fleet, sail to Italy, burn Rome, kill the Pope, and eat his Flesh; the Counsel of the old Soldier is a little too hasty; for suppose the most serene King and du Plessis should live to the Year 1641, yet there is some Reason for the British Lords to doubt whether the three Islands can bear a Thirty seven Years War in Italy.' This Objection is of no Force; for, I. In the first place, neither the Princes who were preparing for War, nor Monsieur du Plessis Mornai, who animated them to it, did rely on the Visions of our Braunbom. II. In the second place, there could be nothing more likely to persuade them to make Preparations for War, than the Opinion that Popery should come to an end in the Year 1641. There is nothing animates Persons more than an Assurance that an Enterprize will succeed. No body imagined that Popery would fall by it's own Crazinesse, without some external Force to give it a hard Shock; they imagined on the contrary, that in order to execute the Predictions with more Expedition, they ought to employ all human means, and commonly it is the end and design of those who ballot the Numbers of the Apocalypse, and at last fix the time for Revolutions, to encourage Princes to undertake War. Some give no Credit to the Explications which they themselves publish; they print them only to serve for a Spur to ambitious Princes. Others believe them, but in such a manner, that they become thereby more ardent and active to move all the Springs of the human Passions, and all the Machines necessary for the Execution of great Designs; few People trust Providence less than they, who boast that they have fathomed the depth of his Decrees, and the Riddles of the Prophets.

(9) He that is mentioned in the Book of Judges, chap. iii, who killed the King of Moab.

(10) Contzen, de Hæreseon, incremento, pag. 556.

(11) Id. ibid. pag. 381.

I believe that many Persons, who made no great Account of Braunbom's Prophesies when they first appeared, changed their Opinion when Gustavus Adolphus had subdued so many Towns in Germany. They thought it very probable that Popery would be in it's decrepit Estate in the Year 1636, and that it would fall intirely in the Year 1641. And thus they conceived a particular Esteem for the Writer; but that vanished in two or three Years after. They had begun to think that Gustavus would be another Alaric, and another Totila, who would destroy Rome, and execute upon the Pope the Menaces of so many Commentators on the Apocalypse. His Death in 1632, and the Victory gained by the Imperialists at Nortlingen, in the Year 1634, dissipated all these fine Imaginations. If Braunbom had chosen the Year 1632, instead of the Year 1636, he would not have been so far beside his Mark; for not only in Germany, but also in the Spanish Netherlands, the Protestants became Masters of several Cities in the Year 1632; but that still was not a Reduction of Popery to a decrepit State. The Protestants took Cities, but made no Converts. The number of Roman Catholics diminished but little; a Controvertist took notice of this to Mr du Moulin, who had wrote to Balzac during the Conquests of Gustavus, that the Reformed Religion made very great Progress in the Netherlands and Germany. 'De Belgio equidem suadeo, 'ne Molinæus plus nimio glorietur; nam etsi postea sint Batavi non ita pridem Sylva Ducis, Ruremundi, Trajecto, & Limburgo, attamen plurimi '& præcipui avitæ Religionis sunt retinentissimi, '& dummodo excipiantur advenæ & milites, Apparent rari nantes in gurgite vasto,

'dum hæretica fit Concio. Leodii propinquâ urbe 'habito, neque rem incognitam scribo. Item ea 'pars Germaniæ, quam Sueci & principes cum iis 'fœderati ad Rhenum & ad Moenum occupaverunt, 'Hæresim verius dixerim patitur quam profitetur (12). - - - - - - As to the Low Countries, I advised du Moulin not brag too fast; for though the Dutch have lately got Boilleduc, Ruermund, Maestricht, and Limburg, yet most, and the better sort, of the People stick very close to their old Religion, and, except only the Strangers and Soldiers, (12) Silvester, à Petra Sancta, in Notis in Epist. Molinæi ad Balzacum, pag. 73a Edit. Antwerp. An. 1634.

They here and there are floating seen

'in the heretical Assemblies. I dwell at Liege, a Town just by, and so do not write a thing that I am not acquainted with; likewise that part of Germany, which the Swedes, and the Princes in Alliance with them, have conquered on the Rhine and the Maine, may rather be said to suffer than to profess Heresy.' Besides, Braunbom did not believe that That Ruin of Antichrist was to happen without the Assistance of a powerful Confederacy. These four Verses he used to sing upon the Subject:

Dalmata

I ſhall obſerve that he publiſhed his Work the ſame Year that, according to other Divines, the World was to be at an end [C]. This furniſhes me with a Digreſſion againſt

Dalmata & Englandus, Francus, Germanus, & Iſter,
Hi venient Romam dilaniare ſuam.
Quid facient Italus, Luſitanus? quid, niſi plangent
Emptricem mercis diſperiiſſe ſuæ (13).

(13) Braunbom, apud Contzen de Hæreſeon Incremento, pag. 610.

From England, Iſtria, Germany, and France,
And from Dalmatia ſhall the People flock,
And each Man raiſe his Share of baſed Rome,
Whilſt Italy and Portugal bewail
The Fall of her who purchas'd all their Wares.

I know not whether he lived long enough to be witneſs of the Falſity of his Prediction in relation to the Death of Antichriſt, but I believe, that if he was alive in the Year 1637, he continued as bold as ever; for it is very common for thoſe, who are raſh enough to take too ſhort a Term, to make it up with Aſſurance, and ſome frivolous Subterfuge, when they find themſelves contradicted by the Event. He was wiſer as to the end of the World; he put that off to a time he knew very well he ſhould not live to (14).

(14) Compare this with what Mr de Bauval ſays in his Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Sçavans, June 1702, pag. 252.

[C] He publiſhed his Work the ſame Year, in which, according to other Divines, the World was to be at an end.] They thought that becauſe all the Letters of the word Judicium are numeral, and make 1613, that the laſt Judgment would be in the Year 1613. 'Noſtro hoc ſeculo ex voculâ 'Judicium, in quo omnes literæ ſunt numerales, 'non pauci collegerunt anno 1613 judicium ulti- 'mum & univerſale futurum, eoque videtur D. 'Menzerus etiam Theologus Gieſſenſis celeberri- 'mus, & ab omni quidem Fanaticiſmo prorſus 'alienus, collimaſſe in Dedicatione Exegeſeos Au- 'guſtanæ Confeſſionis quam hiſce voluit claudere 'verbis: Anno a nato Chriſto milleſimo ſexcenteſimo 'decimo tertio quem enumerat vox jam olim omi- 'noſa Judicium (15). —— In our time from the 'word Judicium, in which all the Letters are 'numeral, ſeveral have concluded that the laſt 'univerſal Judgment ſhould come in the Year 1613; 'and D. Menzerus, a noted Divine of Gieſſen, and 'intirely free from any Fanaticiſm, ſeems to have 'alluded to that in his Dedication of the Expoſition 'of the Confeſſion of Ausburg, which he hath cloſed 'with theſe words: In the Year of Christ, One 'thouſand ſix hundred and thirteen, which is the 'Number contained in the ominous word Judi- 'cium.' A fine Reaſon indeed! thoſe who built upon it deſerved at leaſt to live till 1614, on condition that they would humble themſelves at the Sight of their Error.

(15) Andr. Carolus Memoir. Eccleſiaſt. Seculi xvii, lib. ii, cap. xi, pag. 321.

What is ſurprizing is, that the ill Succeſs of an infinite Number of Commentators on the Apocalypſe, does not hinder others from falling into the ſame Temerity (16). We ſee that it is a Den like that of the ſick Lion; a great many go there, but no body comes back, that is, with the Treaſure they went to ſeek: ought not they to have remembred the Fox in Æſop.

(16) See the Article STIPHELIUS.

Olim quod Vulpes ægroto cauta leoni
Reſpondit referam: quia me veſtigia terrent
Omnia te adverſum ſpectantia, nulla retrorſum (17).

(17) Horat. Epiſt. i, lib. i, ver. 73.

My Anſwer muſt be what ſly Reynard ſaid
To the old ſickly Lion, I'm afraid
Great King of Beaſts, for all the Treads, I ſee,
Are to thy Den, none back, that frightens me.
Creech.

Ought not one to take good care not to come into that Cavern, where ſo many have been, and returned without the Sybilline Branch, without the Information expected? Notwithſtanding, the Voyage is as often undertaken as ever, and no regard paid to thoſe, who repreſent that there is no Return from thence; that it is like the Grave, and cry with all their Might, you are going

------ per iter tenebricoſum,
Illuc, unde negant
Redire quenquam (18).

(18) Catul. Epigram. iii.

A dark and gloomy way unto the Place,
From whence no Traveller returns.

They embark every Day on this Sea, as if it were not noted for thouſands of Shipwrecks.

Prophetical Calculations of Monſ. Jurieu refuted.

A Miniſter of Rotterdam publiſhed in 1686, An Accompliſhment of the Propheſies, in which he gave out, among other things, that what Joſeph Mede ſaid, that the Duration of the corrupt ſhould be 1260 Years, and that the Duration of the pure Church was to be 360, ſeemed to him inſpired (19). Joſeph Mede adds, that we may begin theſe 360 Years, I. Either from the Birth of Jesus Christ; II. Or from the Time of his Paſſion; III. Or from the Time of the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem; IV. or laſtly, From the Time that St John propheſied (20). Which ever Account we take, the Miniſter of Rotterdam owns, that the Buſineſs anſwers very well as to the Epoche of Antichriſtianiſm (21); but nevertheleſs, the firſt Calculation and the ſecond have proved falſe; for Antichriſtianiſm, which, according to the firſt Calculation, was to have ended in the Year 1620, and according to the ſecond in 1653 or 1654, was ſtill in being in 1686 (22). And ſince it ſubſiſts at the time when I write this in the Year 1702, the third Calculation, by which it was to end in 1690, was no better than the two firſt. The Miniſter ſuſpected it. 'It does not appear, ſays he (23), that 'things are ripe, at this Day, for ſo great an Event; 'we muſt not imagine that the Empire of Anti- 'chriſt and Idolatry will fall ſo eaſily, and be 'deſtroyed in four or five Years.' He fixes upon the fourth Calculation, and gives it for true; from whence he concludes, that the Reign of Antichriſt will end in the Year 1710, or in ſome of the Years following to the Year 1714 (24); ſo he expreſſes himſelf in Page 22; and theſe are his Words in Page 28. 'We will place the approaching 'Fall of the Empire of Antichriſt in the beginning 'of the XVIIIth Century. I believe it would be 'difficult to pitch upon the preciſe Year; for God 'in his Propheſies is not ſo exact, a few Years un- 'der or over make no difference; yet we may ſay 'that it ought to happen between the Year 1710, 'and the Year 1715 (25). This Empire, ſays he 'in Page 33, was born about the Year 450; it 'will die about the Year 1710, juſt 1260 Years 'after it's Birth. This may happen ſooner; for the 'Roman Empire under Valentinian, whom I reckon 'the laſt of the Roman Emperors, was already very 'much diſmembered; but I do not ſee that it can 'go any farther, unleſs perhaps to the year 1714, 'to reckon the 1260 Years from the Death of 'Valentinian; this I own ſeems to me ſomething 'more than bare conjecture (26).'

(19) Jurieu Accompl. des Propheties, Tom. II, cap. ii, pag. 20, of Edit. i.

(20) Id. ibid.

(21) Id pag. 21.

(22) Id. pag. 22.

(23) Id. pag. 25.

(24) Id. pag. 28.

(25) Id. pag. 28.

(26) Id. pag. 33, 34.

A Man who had been wiſe enough to have profited by the Errors of another, would have abandoned Joſeph Mede as to his fourth Calculation, as well as to the three firſt; for is there any thing more ſcandalous than to ſay on one hand, that the pure Church ſhould continue 360 Years, and on the other, that theſe 360 Years ſhould begin in the Year 94 of the Chriſtian Æra. The Church then had not been pure till that time, ſince it's Purity began only in the Year 94; what can be imagined more abſurd? It is certain therefore, if Joſeph Mede deſerves any Credit, that the Duration of the pure Church muſt have ended in the Year 360, or in the Year 393, and conſequently that the Empire of Antichriſt would have ended either in the Year 1620, or in the Year 1653. Now it is as flouriſhing, or rather more ſo, in the beginning of the XVIIIth Century, as in the Year 1653. Joſeph Mede therefore has laid down nothing but Reſveries, which ought to have prevented the Miniſter of Rotterdam from tumbling into the Mire.

The

againſt thoſe who have ſo often foretold the approaching Fall of Popery, without taking warning by the Diſgrace of their Companions; they ought to be ſent to the School of a Pagan Poet, who would not ſuffer to conſult the Babylonian Numbers,

Tu ne quæſieris ſcire (nefas) quem mihi quem tibi
Finem Dii dederint, Leuconoë: nec Babylonios
Tentâris numeros: —— (b)

(b) Horat. Od. xi, lib. i.

Ah do not ſtrive too much to know
My dear Luconoë,
What the kind Gods deſign to do
With thee and me.
Ah do not you conſult the Stars,
Contented bear thy Doom, &c.

and

The Example of this Man ought to be a warning to new Calculators, and yet they continue to foretel. What appearance is there that his fourth Calculation will ſucceed better than the three firſt? Let us reflect a little upon this Paſſage; we ſhall ſee at what time Popery ſhould have began to be cut down. 'If you account theſe 180 years from 'the year 1517, the time that Luther began to 'preach againſt Popery, that brings us to the year '1697; if you count them from the year 1520, 'the Date of the Bull of Leo X, that brings us to '1700; take away ten years, becauſe ſeven times 'fifty make but 350, and the prophetic year is of '360 Days, or 360 Years; this falls exactly in 1690, 'and that is the time which I think ought to 'be the beginning of the Vintage; now the Wit-'neſſes ſhall riſe at that time, after which France 'ſhall break with the Pope, as I judge, before 'the end of the Century; and in the beginning 'of the next, the reſt of the Empire of Anti-'chriſt ſhall be totally aboliſhed; ſo that all comes 'to my Calculation, which is that we cannot be 'far from the end of the Empire of Popery (27).' We muſt not forget one of the reaſons which made him believe, that the Rupture between the King of France and the Pope would have ſo ſpeedy, and ſo happy, Conſequences. It is, ſays he (28), that the Biſhops of France have lately declared, that it is not lawful at any time to diſobey the King on pretence of Religion. I look upon, continues he, what has happened in England, as another Preparative to this Event. A King of a Religion contrary to that of the State is ſuffered to reign there peaceably. Providence will accuſtom the People to ſubmit to Princes who are Enemies to the prevailing Religion. How happy was this Man at Conjectures; he did not know that in two Years time England would drive out her Popiſh King, which would be a Proof that Providence did not intend to accuſtom People to ſubmit to a Prince, who was not of their Religion, but rather diſpoſe the French Nation, by a freſh and neighbouring Example, to diſobey their King, in caſe he made any Alteration in Religion. Obſerve, that this Writer has reckoned ſeveral Miracles among the Cauſes which drove James II out of the Throne (29). He had made therefore an ill Judgment of the Deſign of Providence; but let us leave that and ſhew him more directly the Falſhood of his Prophecy.

(27) Id. chap. ix, pag. 143, 144. See chap. xii, pag. 222.

(28) Ibid. chap. xi, pag. 208.

(29) See Lettre Paſtorale of Feb. 25, 1689.

France has been ſo far from breaking with the Pope between the year 1690 and the year 1701, that, on the contrary, they are become more Popiſh. We know the Advantage which Innocent XII obtained, by cauſing things to be placed on the old foot, in the Year 1693 (30). We know the Complaints which have been publiſhed, on the Subject of the Pope's Brief againſt the Archbiſhop of Cambray, in 1699. The Miniſter of Rotterdam himſelf has maintained, that it is a Bull which abſolutely deſtroys the Liberty of the Gallican Church (31). 'This is, ſays he (32), the moſt terrible Blow that 'could have been given to the Liberties of the 'Gallican Church; there they are all deſtroyed by 'one ſingle Thunderbolt. Gerſon, and his Apolo-'giſt Richer, the Jeſuit Maimbourg himſelf, Gerbais, 'Father Queſnel, Ellis du Pin, and all the reſt, 'to whom the Quarrel between Innocent XII and 'King Lewis XIV, had given Courage to lift up 'their Heads againſt the Uſurpations of the Court 'of Rome, are overthrown, as well as the great 'number of Arrêts made by the Court of Parlia-'ment for the Preſervation of the Liberties of the 'Gallican Church. So many Regulations, Deci-'ſions, and Declarations made by the Clergy of 'France tending to the ſame end, all is come to 'nothing.' If that Author had ſaid all that he thought, he would have added, this is alſo the moſt terrible Blow that could have been given to my Prophecies. I am ſure that the Vexation, which he ſhews at the Clergy of France (33), is occaſioned partly becauſe his Predictions have been ſo ill ſeconded by Lewis XIV, and his Prelates. I omit the other Succeſſes which have happened to Popery, between the year 1690 and 1700; the Edict of the Emperor of China in 1692; the IVth Article of the Peace of Ryſwic, in 1697; the Ceſſion which the Turk has made of ſo many Places, by the Treaty of Carlowitz, in 1698. I omit alſo the Complaints which a Miniſter of Groningen has given out in a Piece publiſhed in 1701 (34), which ſhew that the Church of Rome has not been weakened in the laſt ten Years of the XVIIth Century, and that on the contrary ſhe has oppreſſed the Proteſtants in ſeveral places (35).

(30) See the Remark [B] of the Article OTTOBONI; and Mr Jurieu, pag. 316, of his Traité Hiſt. ſur la Theolog. Myſt.

(31) Jurieu, Traité Hiſtor. ſur la Theolog. Myſtique Art. xvii, pag 304.

(32) Id. ibid. pag. 305, 306.

(33) Id. pag. 373.

(34) Mr du Vel. in the Epiſtle dedicatory of his Book, intituled L'Egliſe Romaine pleinement convaincu d'Anti-chriſtianiſme. The Roman Church plainly convicted of Anti-chriſtianiſm. He ſpeaks there of the Oppreſſion the Proteſtants ſuffer in the Palatinate, in Mombeliard, and in Hungary.

(35) It was written in 1702.

The beginning of the XVIIIth Century has produced nothing prejudicial to the Empire of Popery; the Pope was never ſo much taken notice of as he is at this Day by the Catholic Princes. The Emperor, the King of France, and the King of Spain, ſtrive who ſhall make their Court to him beſt. It is true that the moſt powerful Proteſtant States have made a Confederacy, but they think on nothing leſs than haraſſing the Court of Rome; they have Affairs to manage which they think more preſſing, and if they act againſt one Catholic Prince, it is only in favour of another Catholic Prince; and in caſe France ſhould turn her Arms againſt Rome, they would be the firſt to ſend the Pope Succours: ſo that we do not ſee that the fourth Calculation is likely to have better Succeſs than the other three. And yet there is Mr Allix, after the ill Succeſs of Mr Jurieu, has entered the Field to declare to the Public, that Antichriſt ſhall periſh either in the year 1716, or in the year 1720, or at leaſt in the year 1736 (36). Mr Gurtler, Profeſſor of Divinity at Deventer, does not expreſs himſelf ſo exactly; he fixes upon no Year, but he believes that the Apocalyptical Babylon ſhall fall intirely in the Courſe of the XVIIIth Century (37). I will obſerve by the by, that one of Mr Jurieu's Proofs is very weak: 'It is certain, ſays he (38), 'that ſince the year 1620, Images and Saints 'have loſt their Credit prodigiouſly, and we ſhall 'find, ſince that time, more People, who, even in 'Popiſh Countries, diſbelieve theſe falſe Worſhips, 'than were to be found in all Ages before. In 'like manner the Tyranny of the Pope has been 'ever ſince that time manifeſtly declining. In the 'laſt Century the Popes were pretty well reco-'vered of the Blow which the Council of Conſtance 'had given them - - - - - but ſince the year 1620 '- - - - - - the Power of the Pope has been con-'ſtantly diminiſhing, and is at this day in ſuch a de-'cayed State, that it will never recover from it any 'more (39).' I ſhall not trouble myſelf to ask how this

(36) See l'Hiſtoire Myſtique des Ouvrages des Sçavans, April 1701, pag. 234, 236.

(37) Nicol Gurtlerus in Syſtem. Theol. Prophet. cap. xxxiii, pag. 563. Edit. Amſterdam, 1702.

(38) Jurieu Accompl. des Prophe. Tom. II, pag. 30, 31.

(39) Ibid. pag. 33.

and who thought that GOD had very wisely covered in thick Darkness the time that is to come:

Prudens futuri temporis exitum
Caliginosâ nocte premit Deus:
Ridetque, si mortalis ultra
Fas trepidat. —— (c)

(c) Horat. Od. xxiv. lib. iii.

Future Events wise Providence
Hath hid in Night from human Sense,
To narrow Bounds our Search confin'd,
And laughs to see proud Mortals try
To fathom deep Eternity,
With the short Line and Plummet of their Mind.

Observe

this Minister will reconcile those things with what he has said in other Books (40). I confine myself to this single Consideration: The Bounds set to false Worship, and to the Pretensions of Popes over the Temporals of Kings, are rather a Pledge of the future Duration of Popery, than a Mark of it's approaching Ruin. The nearer an Evil approaches to it's Height, the nearer it approaches to it's End; it cannot stand long at it's highest Pitch; the enormity of Abuses favoured Luther, who probably would have effected nothing against ordinary Evils. If Mr Jurieu will not believe me in that, he ought at least to remember what he has said, 'that the 'prodigious Advancement of the Papal Authority, 'which in effect brought Antichristianism to it's 'Perfection, was nevertheless one step to it's Ruin. 'If the Popes had kept themselves within the 'Bounds, which they had kept in the preceding 'Centuries; if they had not meddled with the 'Affairs of the World, to dispose of them abso-'lutely, perhaps we should never have known that 'the See of Rome is Antichrist: but then that 'Truth became so obvious, that every body per-'ceived it (41).' One would wonder for several reasons, that the Chagrin he was in, when he composed this Work (42), had not presented to him the black and frightful Ideas, which presented themselves to most of the Commentators on the Apocalypse; he has not taken in a literal Sense, those Images of devouring Fire, Blood, and Slaughter, which the Holy Ghost presents in the eighteenth Chapter of the Apocalypse (43): Certainly, says he (44), these are not the ways which GOD makes 'use of to establish his Empire. We ought not 'to take in a literal Sense the Terms of War, 'and Destruction, which are here used; for Ex-'ample, that JESUS CHRIST shall tread 'the Wine-press of the Wrath of GOD; and that 'he shall give the Flesh of Kings, of Captains, of 'mighty Men, of Horses, and them that sit on them, 'both bond and free, to the Fowls of the Air, &c. These 'are Images borrowed from War, and we ought 'to understand them agreeably to the Nature of 'that spiritual War, which the Lord JESUS CHRIST 'shall make against Idolatry, Superstition, Heresy, 'and Tyranny; it is against them that he will 'fight, and not against Men (45): therefore I am 'afraid that they are deceived, who hope to ren-'der to Babylon what we have received from her, 'and to fill to her double in the Cup, in which 'she hath filled to us, i. e. to return her Blood 'for Blood, Torment for Torment; that is not the 'Spirit of the Church (46).' But notwithstanding, he is of opinion there shall be a great deal of Blood shed; he only qualifies the thing, and that is very commendable. 'I am of opinion, says he (47), 'that he will suffer the Destruction of Rome, as 'he did that of Jerusalem. I believe also, that 'this great change of Religion shall be brought a-'bout without Effusion of Blood, as it happened 'in the last Century; but as the City in this 'Chapter, and generally in the Apocalypse, com-'prehends the whole Empire of Babylon, we must 'not imagine that all that great Extent of Coun-'try shall be brought to Desolation.'

Our Braunbom was not so pacific; he would have the Sword to be the principal Instrument of the Destruction of Antichrist. He that answered him took it ill that these barbarous Maxims were founded on a Book so obscure, that there had not been two Protestant Commentators that had understood it alike. 'Omnia igitur supplicia irrogare 'jubet (Braunbomus) exurere, carnes edere, nullum 'supplicium nimium putare. Verum quænam est 'ista barbaries eorum qui hæc præcipiunt, cum non 'intelligant quid Liber obscurissimus velit? Cum 'contradictionem implicuerint hoc postremum & 'sanguinatis & latrocinantibus Theologis, rogo ob-'testorque ut ex tot suorum Scriptoribus duos non 'sibi mutuo, non sibi ipsis contradicentes in hoc 'judicio, exhibeant; & deinde quâ datâ portâ ruant 'in nostrum sanguinem? Addo unum præstent, qui 'non omnibus aliis contradicat, & ecce jugulum 'præbemus, non jure nec merito; ad unius enim 'homuncionis pronunciatum meliorem orbis partem 'exurere, devorare, nec ipsa iniquitatis æquum 'esse censeret; sed fiducia causæ iniquo judicio ex-'periri placet (48). —— Therefore He (Braunbom) commands them to inflict all kinds of Punishment; 'to burn, eat the Flesh, to think no kind of Tor-'ment too great; but what Barbarity is this of 'theirs who teach these things, not understanding 'the meaning of that most obscure Book, since they 'always contradict themselves? Lastly, I desire and 'beseech these bloody and plundering Divines, out 'of so many of their Writers, to produce me two 'that do not contradict each other, and even them-'selves in this Point, and then rush upon our 'Destruction by what means they can; nay let them 'produce one who does not contradict all the rest, 'and we will yield them our Throats, though with-'out just reason; for even Iniquity herself would 'not judge it right to burn and destroy the greater 'part of the World at the Word of a single little 'Fellow; though in confidence of our Cause we are 'willing to be tried by this unequal Judgment. The same Author, as we have seen above (49), abused Mr du Plessis for having exhorted the King of England to attack the Pope. It must be allowed, that this great Man forgot himself very much on that Occasion, and that his Zeal took a Flight, which made him lose sight of what his Age and Prudence might have suggested to him; he was rallied and insulted cruelly (50), and was not well defended by Mr Rivet, his Apologist. If you desire to know what that great Man's Exhortation was, read these Words: 'The thing (51) is easy, because she is ripe; the 'Day invites to it, Nature herself aids the Birth, 'the Destinies open the way, God favouring the 'Enterprize, of which he is the Author, and as-'sisting and pushing it forward; let there but ap-'pear any one who will set about it, who is bold 'and resolute enough, it will not be in vain, since 'after so many Poisonings and Patricides, nothing 'is wanting of the full Measure of her Cruelty; 'there wants nothing to bring her Impiety to 'the Height: let us therefore, O King, throw 'away the Pen; satisfied I here lay down mine; 'this Generation requires other Conduct; hence-'forward other Arms are necessary. From Great 'Britain may there come forth another Constan-'tine to overthrow this Maxentius, this other 'Pharaoh, and ruin him intirely; may he confirm 'the Princes and People who are irresolute, unite 'those that are divided, and compose those that 'are in disorder. And further, may the Alps car-'ry him on their Necks, the Po dividing of it's 'own accord, the Apennine making way for him, 'many running to the Signal of Liberty, others 'waiting the Event; may he conduct his Troops

'strait

(40) In his Preservative, and in his Jansiniste convaincu de Vaine Sophistiquerie, where he has endeavoured to prove, that the invocation of Saints is still exercise at this day; and we have seen that he complains, in his Traité de la Theol. Myst. that the Authority of the Pope has been refused to it's first Splendor in France.

(41) Jurieu Accompl. des Prophet. Tom. II. cap. v. pag. 86, 87.

(42) Id. in his Avis a tous les Chrestiens, prefixed to the first Volume, pag. 5.

(43) Id. Tom. II. cap. xii. pag. 224.

(44) Ibid.

(45) Id. pag. 217.

(46) Id. pag. 228.

(47) Id. pag. 214, 215.

(48) Contren de Hæreseon Incremento, pag. 556.

(49) In the Remark [B], Citat. (11).

Reflexions on an Epistle Dedicatory of Mr du Plessis.

(50) See the Remark [E], of the Article SCIOPIUS.

(51) That is to say, the Destruction of Popery.

Observe that I know nothing of Braunbom's Book, but by the Extract of it, given by Adam Contzen, a Jesuit, who refuted it (d).

(d) In a work intituled de Hæresm incremento.

'strait to Rome, never attacked in vain. Who 'doubts but at the sound of the Trumpets her 'Hills will lower, her Walls fall, even the Cattle 'of St. Angelo itself? May this severe Executor of 'the Judgments of God go on, and tearing the 'Thunder from Jupiter in the Capitol, cast him 'out of his Seat without Hopes of ever returning 'again; may he sink Babylon like a Mill-stone, that 'she appear no more; may the Tyber overflow 'her, and Hell itself be let loose upon her. Let 'it not come to pass, O mighty King, that you 'should suffer this Praise to be taken from you, 'or desire that it should be kept for another, but 'may you rather chuse to purchase it with the 'Price of your Blood, of your Life, or of what 'is yet more dear to you; but Thou, O Eternal 'God, for whose Interest and Glory this Busi-'ness is, without whose Aid our Desires, our Sighs, 'and our Attempts are vain, awake, arise, cloath 'thyself with Might and Justice, as with a Coat 'of Mail; call thy Servant by his Name; take 'thine Anointed by the Hand, and walk before 'his Face. May the Hills be made plain, the Moun-'tains laid low, and the Rivers dry up; may the 'Gates open, and the Bars be broken; may the 'People tremble, and this Jerico fall by the Breath 'of his Mouth and his Presence. And I, though 'already above sixty years of Age, may I keep close 'by his side: may I put off my old Age in the 'narrow Passes and Rocks of the Alps; may I be 'found one of the first in the Attack; that in the 'Triumph, when the Angel sings before us, I 'may redouble these Words, SHE IS FALLEN! 'and may I, when totally swallowed up in this 'holy Gladness, on the brink of Eternity, in Rap-'ture finish my Days. Now, most Serene King, 'may the Good and Great God, who hath set 'you apart for this Enterprize of so ho-'ly a War, preserve you to his Church, your 'Kingdom, and all the Faithful, in Health, and 'Safety from all your Enemies. Amen (52).'

(52) Du Plessis Epist. Dedicatoire of the Latin Edition of his Mystere d'Iniquite. I use the French Edition of this Passage, made by Rivet, pag. 94, &c. of Defence of his Epistles, and the Preface to this Book of Mr du Plessis.

Andrew Rivet, who was then Minister of Thouars, published (53) A Defence of the two Epistles and Preface of Mr du Plessis's Book - - - - against the Cavils and Calumnies of Pelletier and du Bray. 'You need not ask whether he was obliged to at-'tempt to apologize for the Passage I have just re-'cited; every body will imagine that this was one 'of the Places which afforded the Adversaries of Mr du Plessis the finest Field for Declamation. They 'were answered (54), that St John having prophe-'sied that the same Princes, who had given their 'Power to the Beast, should devour and burn her, 'he ought not to think it strange, that the Pro-'testants exhorted them to the Execution of that 'Prophecy, that they address themselves to Princes 'whose Hearts God had already touched, to the 'end that, by their Example, they might draw others 'to the Execution of this Judgment of God a-'gainst the Whore: and if they cry, after the Voice 'of Heaven, reward her even as she hath rewarded 'you, render unto her double, according to her Works, 'and in the Cup, which she hath filled, fill to her 'double *; Rivet adds, that 'the Epistle to the King 'of Great Britain tends to this end, and only 'sets before his Eyes this Prophecy, the Accom-'plishment whereof now is coming (55).' The Advocate and the Client were in the same Illusion; they believed that the Hour of the Accomplishment of the Prophesies was at hand, that the Fruit was ripe and ready to be gathered; they wished for it, and that was the reason they believed it.

(53) At Saumur in 1612, in 8vo.

(54) Rivet. Defense de la Preface, &c. du Mystere d'Iniquite, cap. v, pag. 93.

* Rev. xviii, 6.

(55) Rivet, Defence, of the Preface, &c. pag. 94.

Credimus? an qui amant ipsi sibi somnia fingunt (56).

(56) Virgilii Eclog. viii, v. 108.

- - - - May Lovers what they wish believe,
Or dream their Wishes, and those Dreams deceive!
DRYDEN.

The Advocate was more inexcusable, because he had an opportunity of reading some Reflexions which the Client had not seen; he knew very well that the Adversaries of Mr du Plessis considered his Epistles dedicatory to King James as the Action of an Incendiary, who had a mind to draw into France a foreign Army, who breathed nothing but Fire, and Blood, and universal Confusion; who would not spare the Blood of the Infant, nor the innocent Mother that suckled it (57). And that they had boasted, that they were an hundred for one who were obliged to maintain the Authority of the Pope, at the hazard of their Lives; that they had spoken of the Keenness of their Sword; and put them in mind of the Croisade of Simon de Montford, and the Sieur de Beaumont; and promised the Crown of Martyrdom to those who died in that Contest (58). And that they had declared that whoever attacks the Pope attacks the Catholics, and whoever is his Enemy is theirs (59). This was more than sufficient to disabuse Mr Rivet, in the Opinion that he had of the near approach of the Fall of Popery. The Expedition proposed to King James would have served for nothing but to set all Europe in a Flame, and cause a Deluge of Blood to be shed. All the Catholic Princes would have united for the Defence of their Religion; and there was no appearance that the Success of that furious War should be more fatal to them, than to their Enemies: the general Desolation of all the States in Europe, the most execrable Horrors of a War for Religion, were the only things that could appear certain. Now who can deny, that a Man, who makes himself the Instigator of such a Croisade, deserves the Reproaches of Inhumanity and Barbarity, which were made to Mr du Plessis. His Apologist has not brought him off in this Particular: all his Answers are rambling and illusory.

(57) Rivet. Defence of the Preface, &c. p. 96.

(58) Id. pag. 97.

(59) Id. pag. 190.

One can never lawfully exhort the Princes who are not Catholics to make War upon the Pope, 'till such time as his Followers are reduced to so small a Number, that there will be reason to believe, that, without Effusion of Blood, he may be constrained either to renounce the Papacy, or to retire, with a Passport, to some corner of Africa; but so long as the Catholics, and those of a contrary Persuasion in Europe, remain in the Condition they were in when Mr du Plessis published his Book, and are now at the beginning of the XVIIIth Century, it is endeavouring to introduce Slaughter and Massacre every where, to talk of accomplishing Prophecies. The Books on these Oracles of St John are Oil to the Fire; they serve only to invite an Enemy who is already but too much provoked, and to furnish him with this Excuse for his Persecutions, that, in order to prevent his own Ruin, he is obliged to endeavour that of the Protestants, who are perpetually foretelling that he shall, in a little time, be exterminated by the Sword of the same Princes who formerly adored the Beast (60). If any thing can enervate such an Excuse, it is, that they, who have the Sovereign Authority among the Protestants, do not measure their Conduct by the Predictions or Exhortations of their Writers.

(60) Compare with this what is in the Journal du Trevoux, July and August 1701, pag. 60, Edit. Amst.

BREAUTÉ (CHARLES de), a Gentleman of the Country of Caux in Normandy, made himself famous by a Duel, wherein he died. He was extremely brave, and after the Peace of Vervins, finding no occasion in France to shew his Valour, he went into Holland with some French Troopers, where he obtained a Troop of Horse (a). His Lieutenant had the misfortune to suffer himself to be beat by a Party of the Garrison of Boisleduc, which was inferior in Number to that which he commanded. He was taken and conducted to Boisleduc, from whence he wrote to his Captain to desire him to procure him his Liberty; but his Captain sent him for answer that he would not acknowledge such Persons for his Troopers, as suffered themselves themſelves to be defeated by a leſſer number of Flemings, inſtead of beating them, though they had been twenty to forty, as he offered to do in any Rencounter [A]. This Letter being read by the Governor of the Place (b), according to Cuſtom, before it was delivered to the Priſoner, appeared ſo ſhocking, that the Commander of the Party of Boiſleduc wrote immediately to Breauté, to offer to fight him with an equal Number. His Propoſal was very acceptable; but the Superiors on both ſides could hardly be perſwaded to conſent to it [B]. Nevertheleſs at laſt they appointed the Day, and the Place, and agreed upon other Conditions. It was reſolved that they ſhould fight on Horſe-back, Twenty two againſt Twenty two [C], on the fifth of February, 1600. Breauté would have had the Governor of Boiſleduc to put himſelf at the head of his Flemings; but the Archduke Albert would not ſuffer it. Their Chief was the Lieutenant of the Governor's Troop, the ſame Gerard Abraham who had beat the Party. He ſent word by a Trumpeter that his Men had ſwore not to give any Quarter, for as much as they undertook that Combat much more to defend their Prince's Cauſe, and that of the Catholic Religion, than for their own Honour [D]. He and his Brother and four more began the Fight with Breauté and five more; the reſt engaged each his Man. Breauté killed Gerard; the Brother of the latter, and two others, were alſo killed: The fifth was ſo wounded that he died ſome Days after of his Wounds. But this was all the loſs of the Flemings; that of the other Party was much more diſmal; for Breauté's Valour (c) could not hinder his Men from being beaten with the utmoſt Shame [E]. Fourteen of them were killed on the ſpot,

(a) Thuan. lib. cxxiv, pag. 900.

(b) His Name was Antony Schetz, Lord of Grobbendonc.

(c) He had two or three Horſes killed under him.

[A] He offered in a Letter to beat the Flemings twenty to forty in any Rencounter.] Thuanus ſays, that the Writers on the Dutch Side do not aſcribe the Cauſe of the Quarrel to Breauté's Letter, written to his Lieutenant, but to ſome falſe Reports: They will have it that it was Grobbendonc himſelf who offered the Combat, having heard, by thoſe falſe Reports, that Breauté reviled the Flemiſh Troops (1). Several French Writers (2) ſay, that Breauté did not ſend a Challenge till he heard ſome ſlighting Words ſpoken by Lekerbitkem, both of himſelf and of his Nation (3). Lekerbitkem was he who had defeated his Lieutenant.

(1) Thuan. lib. cxxiv, pag. 900.

(2) D'Audiguier, uſage du duël, cap. xx, pag. 343. Boterelus, or Bouterouë, lib. vii, pag. 519. Cayet, Chronol. Septen. fol. 129. See below the Paſſage of d'Aubigné, in the Remark [I].

(3) D'Audiguier ibid.

[B] Combat was offered him with an equal Number —— the Superiors would hardly conſent to it.] According to Thuanus, Prince Maurice diſſuaded Breauté from that Duel as much as he could: He repreſented to him, that it was an unbecoming thing for a Gentleman of his Quality, who might ſignalize himſelf on more glorious Occaſions, to expoſe himſelf with common Soldiers (4), or perhaps with ſome perfidious Men, who had been the Authors of betraying Gertrudenberg. He meant Gerard Abraham, and his Brother Antony (5); but Prince Maurice had done better to have interpoſed his Authority, and not his Remonſtrances. The Archduke Albert was very much to be commended for not ſuffering Grobbendonc to play the Gladiator, on that Occaſion.

(4) Ignobilibus ac gregariis militibus. Thuan. lib. cxxiv, pag. 900. Leckerbeetken was a Soldier of fortune; but he was at that time Lieutenant of a Troop of Horſe.

(5) Gerrardus & Antonius Abrahami fratres Lekerbitkenſi vulgo dicti. Id. ibid. Leckerbeetken, i. e. dainty bit, or as Grotius expreſſes it, Cupediarius, was a Nick-name of that Abraham.

[C] They agreed on a Combat, Twenty two againſt Twenty two.] I have followed Father Gallucci, tho' I have read no Author that makes the Number of the Combatants to be above twenty. We find in a Hiſtory of the Archduke Albert, printed at Cologn in 1693 (6), the Names of thoſe that went out of Boiſleduc againſt Breauté; they are but twenty. The Author informs us, that he ſaw thoſe Names in a Picture of that Fight. This ſhould be an authentic Proof, and yet he contradicts himſelf, for he ſays, Page 334, 'that when Breauté's 'Trumpeter came to tell the Belgians at Boiſleduc 'that his Maſter ſtaid for them with twenty more; 'Grobendonc commanded one l'Epine, a reduced 'Officer, to take a Horſe out of his Stable, and 'to join the other twenty that were ready to get 'on Horſeback.' So that here are one and twenty Men. He had ſaid, Page 331, 'that it was agreed 'to fight nineteen againſt nineteen; but that the 'Frenchmen on the Dutch ſide broke the Agreement, 'and came into the Field of Battle to the number 'of twenty; that Grobendonc's Lieutenant being 'in preſence with his eighteen Champions com'plained of that Trick,' and that after the excuſes made for it, he ſent to l'Epine to come and join him; that l'Epine came, and that it was he who took Breauté. Here they are but twenty. That Author is not very exact, for he declares, Page 128, that 'it was concluded to fight nineteen againſt 'nineteen, and that Breauté at the Head of nine-'teen Troopers —— met Grobendonc's Lieutenant 'at the Head of nineteen Belgians.' What I am going to mention is yet leſs exact. He ſays, Page 126, That the Joy the Dutch had for the taking of Fort St Andrew, the eleventh of May 1600 —— was abated by an Adventure which deſerves to be mentioned in the beginning of the XVIth Century, viz. by the Combat of Breauté, the fifth of February 1600. I do not queſtion but he took the year 1600 for the firſt of the XVIth Century, and ſo he committed two Faults: For, 1. The year 1600 was the laſt, and not the firſt of the Century. 2. If it was the firſt, it would be the firſt of the XVIIth Century.

(6) Pag. 331, 332.

[D] The Flemings - - - - - - - - declared, that they fought more for - - - - - - - - the Catholic Religion, than for their own Honour.] Thus Religion comes in every where. What had it to do with the Fits or Rodomontades of a private Man? it was in truth a Quarrel of Duelliſts for a vain Reputation of Bravery; and yet they had the Dexterity at Boiſleduc to intereſt the Church in it. Breauté was metamorphoſed there into a new Goliah, who inſulted the People of GOD; thoſe that ſhould conquer him were to be accounted, like David, the anointed of the LORD. Care was taken to ſupply them with the Bread of the Strong (7). They were not ſent to the Field of Battle before they had confeſſed their Sins and communicated: The Dominicans made uſe of all their Devices to increaſe their Courage. The Archduke's Council of Conſcience approved that his Highneſs ſhould conſent to the Duel (8). But who would not admire the reaſon, that made the Champions of Boiſleduc engage themſelves by Oath not to give any Quarter? It was becauſe they pretended to fight for Religion; but that very thing ſhould have left ſome Remains of Humanity.

(7) Hiſt. de l'Archiduc Albert, pag. 330, 331.

(8) Ib. pag. 331.

[E] All Breauté's Valour could not hinder his Party from being moſt ſhamefully beaten.] I ſhall ſet down the Words of an Author, who has wrote concerning the uſe of Duelling: 'The two Chiefs 'had diſtinguiſhed themſelves to know each other: 'Breauté put on a large white Feather, and Le'kerbitkem a red one. Breauté advances to en'counter his Enemy, fires a Piſtol at him, kills 'him, and breaks through his Men with ſuch 'Fury that five of them were killed on the Spot, 'whereof Lekerbitkem's Brother was one. But 'Breauté was ill ſeconded. For in the firſt place, 'two of the five, who were killed at the firſt 'onſet, died by his own Hand; which ſhews, 'that if his Friends had done like him, the Ene'my had not been half a Match for them. 'Secondly, moſt of them fled at the ſecond on'ſet, and left him with three more in the midſt of 'fifteen, who beſides the Advantage of number had 'alſo that of Weapons (9).' We ſhall ſee the Sequel of this Paſſage in the Remark [I].

(9) D'Audiguier, Uſage du Duel, cap. xx, pag. 345, 346. Boterelus relates the thing much in the ſame manner.

[F] Three

ſpot, and, of the eight that fled, three died of their Wounds [F]. Breauté and one of his Relations, being mortally wounded [G], in vain begged their Lives with a promiſe of a good Ranſom; but no regard was given to it [H]. His Body, wounded in Thirty ſix places, was carried to Dort, and drawn to the life, to have that Picture ſent into his Country. It exaſperated the Friends and Relations of the deceaſed to ſuch a degree, that one of them (d) went immediately into the Netherlands to revenge his Death. For that purpoſe he challenged the Governor of Boiſleduc to fight a Duel with him; but the ſame reaſon, which hindered that Governor from being in the firſt Fight, excuſed him again from this. The Victors, to the number of eighteen, among whom four were wounded, were received in Boiſleduc, with the Acclamations of the whole Town. Thus the thing is related by the Hiſtorians of the Spaniſh Party, among whom the Author, whom I cite, ought to be reckoned; but all the parts of their Narration are not allowed to be true [I]. This has always been the Fate of ſuch Duels; their Succeſs and Circumſtances are always related ſeveral ways. Breauté had married the Daughter of Nicolas de Harlai-Sancy, by whom he left a Son. She was a Woman equally beautiful and virtuous, and not above twenty Years of Age. Though ſhe was courted by ſeveral People, yet ſhe renounced the Pleaſures of the World, and made herſelf a Nun of St Thereſa (e), which Order was but newly ſettled in Paris. It is ſaid (f), that their Son, intending to revenge his Father's Death, ſent a Challenge to the new Lieutenant of the Governor of Boiſleduc during the Siege of Breda, and that he was killed in that Duel (g). I cannot tell whether a Marquis de Breauté, who was killed at the Siege of Arras, in the Year 1640, was deſcended from the Duelliſt.

(d) Gallucci calls him Hocvincurtius. It is probably a fault of the Impreſſion, for Hocquincurtius; Hocquincourt is a Family celebrated for Bravery.

(e) Ex Angelo Galluccio de bello Belg. lib. xxi, pag. 567, & ſeq. Edit Norimberg.

(f) Ex Thuano, lib. cxxiv, pag. 500.

(g) Hiſtoire de l'Archiduc Albert, printed at Cologne, 1693, pag. 334.

[F] Three of his Party died of their Wounds.] The anonymous Author, who publiſhed an Hiſtory of the Archduke Albert, ſays, that all the French were killed except three, who fled, and were hanged in Holland (10). What Variations! The anonymous Author of the Memoirs of L. C. D. R. printed at the Hague in the year 1687, multiplies Lies and Confuſion (11).

(10) Pag. 334.

(11) Memoires de Mr L. C. D. R. pag. 164.

[G] He and one of his Relations were mortally wounded.] This confutes the ſilly Story which was publiſhed by that anonymous Author, 'that Swords 'could not hurt Breauté, becauſe he had a Charm. 'Which was the reaſon why they knocked him on 'the Head with the Stocks of their Piſtols on the 'Draw-bridge of the Gate of Boiſleduc (12).' That Author contradicts himſelf; for he ſays, Page 129, that Breauté was burnt in the Head before he ſet his Foot in the Town (13).

(12) Hiſt. de l'Archid. Albert, pag. 332.

(13) That is, he was ſhot in the Head by a Piſtol. See the ſame Phraſe, pag. 196.

[H] He begged his Life with a Promiſe of Ranſom; but no regard was given to it.] Moſt Hiſtorians, who are not in the Spaniſh Intereſt, ſay, that the Ranſom which Breauté offered was accepted, and that he was brought alive to Boiſleduc; but that the Governor, vexed at the Death of the two Brothers, reprimanded their Comrades ſo ſeverely, becauſe they had not revenged their Death by that of the Priſoner, that they killed him immediately in his Preſence. Thus, as Thuanus tells us, the Writers of the Dutch Party related the thing. D'Audiguier and Cayet go yet further; they ſay that Grobendonc had no ſooner cenſured them, but they ſtabbed Breauté and his Couſin. Bouterouë goes farther ſtill; he ſays the Governor ordered expreſly, that the four Priſoners that were brought, whereof Breauté was one, ſhould be killed in cold Blood. Grotius ſays only, as a certain thing, that Breauté had already gone a good way, when ſome Men from Boiſleduc killed him with thirty Wounds. 'Pepigiſſe 'vitam Galli aſſeverant, contra Brabanti prædictum 'ne victi aliud quam mortem expectarent. Certè 'jam multum captivus proceſſerat, cum miſſi ex 'urbe orantem ut ſaltem armato & tanquam viro 'occumbere liceret, triginta vulneribus conficiunt, 'digno probroſis hominibus facinore (14). - - - - - 'The French *aſſert, that his Life was granted him 'contrary to the Declaration of the Brabanter, that 'the conquered ſhould expect nothing but Death. It 'is certain, he was gone a good way, as a Priſoner, 'when he was ſtabbed in thirty Places, by Perſons 'ſent from the City; notwithſtanding he prayed 'that, at leaſt, he might die armed, and like a 'Man; an Action worthy the baſeſt of Mankind.' Which irrefragably confutes what is ſaid by ſome, that he was killed by Leckerbeetken's Seconds, who had engaged to do it by an Oath. See the Remark [D].

(14) Grot. Annal. lib. 9.

[I] All the Parts of the Narration of the Spaniſh Hiſtorians are not allowed to be true.] This appears by the foregoing Remark. But here is an Omiſſion for which they cannot be excuſed, and which would very much alter the Nature of the Succeſs, if it were true that they were guilty of that Fault. In this Caſe there would remain but little Honour to the Victors. It is pretended, that the Fight was not with equal Arms, ſince the French came only with Swords and Piſtols, and the other Party brought their Carabines beſides. Here is the Sequel of the Paſſage of d'Audiguier. 'Beſides the Advantage of Number, they had more-'over that of Weapons, and that was it that 'deceived the French, who had no other of-'fenſive Arms but Piſtols and Swords, when they 'ſaw the Enemies with great Carabines, which 'they fired at a conſiderable Diſtance at the be-'ginning of the Fight, and then advanced with 'their long Piſtols againſt People who had nothing 'left but their Swords (15).' He had ſaid before, that 'they charged each other, Breauté and his 'Men with long Piſtols, and his Enemies with 'long Piſtols and Carabines.' There might be more imprudence in that Caſe on the French ſide, than fraud on the other. Perhaps they had only ſaid in their Agreement, that each Party ſhould come armed as uſual; and therefore if it had been the Cuſtom of the Flemings to wear Swords, Piſtols, and Carabines; and if it had been the Cuſtom of the French to wear only Piſtols and Swords; the Flemings would not have acted knaviſhly: the French only would have been to blame, for being ſo heedleſs as not to ſpecify the Number and Quality of the Weapons which were to be uſed. But ſuppoſe the Honeſty of the Flemings was untainted, it would at leaſt be certain that their Victory would be no ways glorious. However, let us ſee how d'Aubigné, a much more credible Writer than d'Audiguier, ſpeaks of this Duel. 'When 'that Siege was over (16), there happened a Duel 'between Breauté and nineteen more, with the 'Lieutenant of Grobbendonck, called Lekerbitken, 'on account of ſome injurious Words and Chal-'lenges ſent by ſome Priſoners. Being agreed on 'the Time and Place, Breauté, not finding his 'Enemies, went to look for them very near Boiſle-'duc, and there the two Chiefs, diſtinguiſhed with 'white and red Feathers, made choice of each other 'before their Troops. Breauté killed his Enemy 'at the firſt Charge, as alſo his Brother, who, hav-'ing diſpatched his Adverſary, came to his Aſſiſtance; 'but all the Wallons, having other fire Arms beſides 'Piſtols, made a ſecond diſcharge, at which the 'French, having only their Swords, were overthrown; 'and Breauté, being forſaken by part of his Men, 'was taken Priſoner, and Grobbendonck, hearing of 'the Death of the two Brothers, cauſed him to be 'killed in cold Blood. The Death of that Gentle-'man was lamented by Prince Maurice, who had 'uſed his Endeavour to diſſuade him from that 'Combat by reaſon of the Inequality (17).' Grotius

(15) D'Audiguier de l'Uſage du Duel. pag. 346. See alſo Cayet. Chronol Septen. fol. 191.

(16) He ſpeaks of the Siege of St Andrew's Fort in the Iſle of Bomel; but he is miſtaken as to the time. He owns that this Siege was undertaken in May; but the Duel was fought the fifth of February. Bouterouë has committed the ſame fault; he places the Duel after the taking of St Andrew's Fort.

(17) D'Aubigné, Tom. III, pag. 722.

tius gives the Advantage of the Arms to the Flemings, and that of the Place to the others; Grobbendoncani armis validioribus, Brœutæus loco potior (18). But how shall we reconcile this Advantage of the Place with what d'Aubigné, Bouterouë, Cayet, d'Audiguier, &c. say, that Breauté, not finding the Enemies in the place agreed upon, went farther till he met them half a League from Boisleduc (19)? And how shall we reconcile this with Father Gallucci, who says, that Lakerbeetken coming to the Place of Battle, and not finding his Enemy there, sent a Trumpeter to tell him that he staid for him; and that Breauté dispatched another to let him know that he was come within a Quarter of a League of the Place, and that he would either die or overcome there (20). An Historian, who is very partial for the Spanish Netherlands (21), owns, that Breauté's martial Heat, which made him advance farther than he should have done, was the reason why the Duel was not fought in the place designed for it; They kept, says he, to that Field of Battle where they happened to meet. That Author is far from acknowledging that the Flemings had more fire Arms than the others; for he says of the latter, that they had all their Pistols in their Hands, and that the Belgians had only their Swords in their Hands. He adds one thing that ought not to be omitted: 'The 'Belgians had the forecast to fasten little Chains behind the Bridles of their Horses, for fear, if the 'Enemies should happen to cut them, they should 'not be able to govern their Horses. The French 'on the Dutch side had not that forecast, which 'contributed much to their Defeat (22).' We may infer from hence that the Flemings fought cunningly; they fell first upon their Enemies Horses; the Bridles being cut it was not easy for the Troopers to save their Horses from being killed. Father Gallucci observes, that at the first onset there were above Twenty six Horses killed. Thuanus informs us, that almost all the Horses of the French were lost there (23). We find the reason of it in the New History of the Archduke. I cannot pass over in silence the Confusion of Father Gallucci: After he has described the whole Issue of the Fight, he adds, that a little Boy, who had looked on at a Distance, having seen the whole Event (24), got upon a Horse, that he found without a Master, and galloped to carry the News of the Victory to Boisleduc. Presently a Citizen fired two great Guns on the Ramparts. That noise made both Parties fear an Ambush, and obliged the French to run away. How could they have staid till then before they fled, since the Boy did not ride away till after he had seen the whole Event of the Fight? To mend the Narration, it should be said that the two Guns were fired before the Victory had been fully declared for the the Flemings. Now the latter being so near home, almost in sight of Boisleduc (25), it is no wonder, if the Cannon of that Town alarmed the French, who were still defending themselves. I find but one fault in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary (26) viz. that the Fight was in the Sight of both Armies.

(18) Grotius Annal. lib. ix.

(19) Those things might be reconciled, by saying that the place, where Breauté met the Enemies, proved advantageous to him by chance. Grotius might have made this Observation without swerving from his Laconic Stile.

(20) Gallucius de Bello Belg. Part I, lib. xii, pag. 560.

(21) Hist. de l'Archid. Albert. pag. 300.

(22) Ib. pag. 332.

(23) Dispar fociorum cum Belgis congressus fuit in quo plures Galli occidere, equis fere occisis. Thuan. lib. cxxiv, pag. 900.

(24) Hoc exitu animadverso.

(25) Hist. d'Albert, pag. 330.

(26) At the Word Abrahami.

BRENZIUS (SAMUEL FREDERIC), a German Jew, was converted to the Christian Religion in the Year 1614. He immediately published a Book (a) concerning the Motives of his Conversion, and forgot nothing that might render his first Religion odious. It is not known whether any private Discontent directed his Pen, or whether the hopes of persuading the World that his Conversion was sincere, inspired him with the Animosity which he shewed in his Book; but it is well known that he strained things [A]. He gave a horrid Description of the Malice of the Jews, of their Frauds, Crimes, Impiety and Blasphemies against JESUS CHRIST, and against the Holy Virgin; he exhorted every body to have a care of them, and to look upon them as sworn Enemies to the Christian Name, whose only design is to hate, dishonour, and destroy, the Followers of the Gospel. Salman Zebi, who was a pretty learned Jew, took upon him speedily to refute him in a Book, which he intituled Judaical Treacle. He fell into another Extreme, I mean that he extenuated too much the Faults of his Party. This is a faithful Representation of most Controvertists [B]. The Work of the Proselyte, and the Jew's Answer, were translated out of the German Tongue into Latin, in the Year 1681, as shall be shewn here-under (b).

(a) At Nuremberg.

(b) Taken from the Acta Eruditorum, July 1682, pag. 305.

[A] He wrote against the Jews - - - - - and strained things.] A Christian Author owns it, viz. Mr John Wulfer. See the Notes which he added to the Latin Translation of the two Books I speak of; for he did not barely translate the Book of Brenzius, and that of Salman Zebi, into Latin, but has also interposed his Judgment about the Accusation of the one, and the Defence of the other. He finds that Brenzius is a meer Calumniator in some things. See the following Remark. His Translation and Notes were printed at Nuremberg in the Year 1681. He added a little Book to them which Isaac Viva had formerly published at Amsterdam, with this Title, Vindex sanguinis, hoc est, vindiciæ secundum veritatem quibus Judæi ab infanticidiis & vilissima humana contra Jacobum Gensium (1) vindicantur. The Apology of Salman Zebi was printed at Hanaw, and the Jews animated with envy against the Author, suppressed it with so much care, that no Copies of it were to be found (2).

(1) That James Genssius, a Divine and a Physician of Friesland, published at Groningen, in 1675, a Book intituled Vilissima humanæ.

(2) Taken from the Acta Eruditor. July 1682, pag. 205, 206.

[B] The Jew, who refuted him, extenuated the Faults of his Party too much. This is a faithful Representation of most Controvertists.] I shall first recite a Passage of the Acta Eruditorum. 'Cæterum ut Judæis multa sola criminandi libidine 'falso objicit Brenzius, ita vicissim multa negat, 'vel certe emollit, aut aliter interpretatur Zebi, 'quorum tamen Judæi jure optimo postulantur: 'Uterque interdum commode locutus, aliquando '& mentitus est, quod in animadversionibus suis 'diligentur excussit Jo. Wulferus (3). - - - - But as Brenzius charges several things falsly on the Jews, merely from a Desire to blacken them; so, on the other hand, Zebi denies, or, at least, softens, or gives another sense to, several things, with which the Jews are nevertheless justly chargeable. Both of them have sometimes spoke to the Purpose, and sometimes told lies; as Jo. Wulferus has carefully observed in his Animadversions.' This Behaviour of Brenzius may make one suspect his Conversion. It seems to signify that he forsook Judaism, only to revenge himself for some Injury he had received. They who forsake their Religion from such Motives are in great numbers, and commonly publish a hundred Lies against the Party they forsake. The personal Resentment of some Affront, or of an enormous Injustice, animates them to Revenge, and they find no better way to revenge themselves than Calumny. All new Converts in general are almost forced to speak ill of their old Religion (4); for if they did not, they would give occasion to believe that they love it still. Besides, the Stories which they tell, or publish, concerning the domestic Disorders of the Party, which they forsake, please the new Brethren, and dispose them to give the Proselyte a better Reception. Thus you see how contagious the Imperfections of the Heart are: many Persons are obliged to be dishonest, because their Honesty would be taken wrong, and would give offence. But let us make an end of our Commentary. Most Controvertists aggravate the Evil of the other Party as much as they can, and extenuate the Evil of their own Cause as well as they can. When they attack, they excuse nothing; they take nothing in a favourable

(3) Ibid. p. 206.

(4) That is, with respect to Morals, Cabals, and such like things, different from the Confession of Faith.

a favourable Senſe; they give a malicious turn to every thing; they aſcribe the Irregularities of ſome particular Perſons to the whole Communion. But when they make Apologies, they put a favourable Conſtruction upon every thing, they ſet aſide what is moſt odious, and ſhew only their fair Side, and they think it very ſtrange that their Adverſary ſhould be ſo unjuſt as to obſerve their weak Side, and take advantage of the Faults of ſome Authors. We find this double Artifice of Rhetoric ſometimes in the ſame Book. If the firſt Part of a Book is deſigned for an Accuſation, and if the ſecond is deſigned for an Apology; in the firſt you ſee all the Cunning of a Plaintiff Advocate, and in the ſecond that of a Defendant. The Principles upon which the Author builds in the firſt are refuted in the ſecond; as for example; if in the firſt he gives an odious turn to a thing that might be favourably conſtrued; he gives in the ſecond a favourable turn, to a thing that is ſuſceptible of an ill Conſtruction. This ſhews that Honeſty is not the Soul of thoſe Diſputes; it is ſacrificed to the Deſire of getting the Victory. Sometimes certain Authors are aſked, why have you ſaid ſuch a thing? They anſwer, becauſe it is true: But, replies the Querift, you ſhould have known that it was not fit to be made public. Do not thoſe, who ſpeak in this manner, create juſt Suſpicions, that a zealous Hiſtorian ſuppreſſes whatever may be prejudicial? How then can one truſt an Hiſtoriographer, who, out of zeal for his Religion, acts continually the Part of an Apologiſt, or of an Accuſer, and who, properly ſpeaking, turns an Hiſtory into a Book of Controverſy of a new Method?

BREZÉ (PETER de), Lord de la Varenne, and Great Seneſchal of Normandy, was in great Favour in the Reign of Charles VII. This made him leſs acceptable to Lewis XI, the Son and Succeſſor of Charles VII. Therefore it was believed that Lewis XI, ſoon after he came to the Crown, made choice of him to command the Succours which he granted to Margaret of Anjou, Queen of England, only to be rid of him, becauſe that Succour was ſo very inconſiderable [A]. Brezé was fortunate in the beginning, and made a conſiderable Progreſs againſt the contrary Party; but it came to nothing; the French were beſieged in the Towns they had taken, and obtained no other Capitulation than their Lives, on condition that they ſhould return into France (a). An Hiſtorian ſays, that their Commander and the Queen fell among a Company of Highwaymen [B]. It does not appear that this Expedition of England did any Prejudice to the Fortune of the Seneſchal of Normandy; for in the Year 1465 he made a very fine Figure at the Court of France. The War for the public Good, ſupported by the Count de Charolois, who advanced into the very heart of the Kingdom, was a very troubleſome buſineſs for Lewis XI. He adviſed, among others, with Peter de Brezé, what he was to do: He ſuſpected him of keeping Intelligence with the Enemy; and having a mind to be ſatisfied in it, he aſked him himſelf whether it was ſo or no? Brezé, who turned every thing into Pleaſantry, came off by an Anſwer in that Strain [C]. He had the command of the Vanguard at the Battle of Montleheri (b), which had been the Subject of the Deliberation; and, whether he was exaſperated by ſome Reproach, or becauſe he was naturally brave, he charged the Enemy with ſo little Caution, that he was one of the firſt that was killed [D]. He left a Son, who proved more faithful to the King,

(a) Belcarius, lib. i, n. 4, ad Ann. 1462.

(b) The 27th of July, 1465, according to Comines.

[A] He commanded the Succours ſent to the Queen of England, which was very inconſiderable.] It conſiſted only of Two thouſand Men, and ſome Hiſtorians make it much leſs. 'Ludovicus Margaretæ 'Andegavenſi - - - - auxiliarem militem duce Petro 'Brezeo (Varennium nonnulli à Varennio fundo 'appellarunt) Normaniæ Seneſchallo miſit. Hunc 'Carolo patri in primis charum ac magnis munera'ribus publicis donatum certis periculis objectare 'viſus eſt, ſiquidem equites pediteſque eidem bis 'mille duntaxat attribuit (1). —— Lewis ſent ſome 'auxiliary Forces to Margaret of Anjou, under the 'Command of Peter Brezé (de la Varenne ſome 'call him from Varenne his Eſtate) Seneſchal of 'Normandy, with deſign, as it was thought, to 'expoſe the Man to unavoidable Hazards, who had 'been a great Favourite of his Father Charles, and 'preferred to ſeveral great Poſts; for he gave him 'no more than Two thouſand Horſe and Foot.' Father d'Orleans ſays, that the Queen of England obtained only about Five hundred Men of Arms under the Conduct of Brezé (2).

(1) Belcarius, lib. i, n. 4, ad Ann. 1462.

(2) Revolut. of Eng. lib. vi, pag. 291.

[B] He and the Queen fell into the Hands of a Company of Highwaymen.] Monſtrelet ſays, 'That 'Queen Margaret, her Son, and la Varenne met 'ſome Highwaymen; that ſhe fled into a Wood, 'and ſaid to a Robber that ſhe met, Friend, ſave 'thy King's Son; and that ſhe went to Sluys, and 'from thence to Bruges, and the Duke of Bur'gundy had her conducted to her Father (3).' This Adventure of the Queen is very well deſcribed by Father d'Orleans (4).

(3) Monſtrelet, cited by Pierre Matthieu, Hiſt. of France XI, lib. ii, pag. 96.

(4) Revolut. of Eng. lib. vi, pag. 294.

[C] Brezé, who turned every thing into Pleaſantry, finding himſelf ſuſpected - - - - by Lewis XI, came off by an Anſwer in that ſtrain.] We learn this from Philip. de Comines, who had it from Lewis I. Let us ſee that great Hiſtorian's Words: 'The King conſulted the ſaid Count du Maine, 'the Great Seneſchal of Normandy, whoſe Name 'was de Brezé, the Admiral of France, who was 'of the Houſe of Montauban, and ſome others. —— 'He ſuſpected the Great Seneſchal of Normandy, 'and deſired him to tell him whether he had 'given his Seal to the Princes that were againſt 'him, or not? The ſaid Great Seneſchal anſwered 'he had, and that it ſhould remain with them, 'but his Perſon ſhould be the King's. This he 'ſaid in a merry way, according to his Cuſtom. 'The King was ſatisfied, and gave him the Com'mand of his Vanguard and the Guides, becauſe 'he was willing to avoid the Battle, as has been 'ſaid. The Great Seneſchal, having got his De'ſire, then ſaid to one of his moſt truſty Friends, 'I will put them to day ſo near together, that 'it will be a hard matter to part them again. 'And ſo he did, and the firſt who loſt their Lives 'there were he, and his Men. The King him'ſelf told me this, for I was then with the Count 'de Charolois (5).' I remember a good Jeſt of this Great Seneſchal: Lewis XI did every thing of his own Head; Brezé upbraided him with it in a pleaſant manner one day as they were hunting. The King was mounted on a little Pad: Sir, ſaid he to him, I think there cannot be a ſtronger Horſe than that Pad. How ſo? ſaid the King. Becauſe, replied the Seneſchal, he carries your Majeſty and all your Council.

(5) Comin. lib. i, cap. iii, p. 27.

[D] Whether he was exaſperated by ſome Reproach, or otherwiſe - - - - - he expoſed himſelf ſo, that he was killed one of the firſt.] Some ſay that the King was at laſt of the opinion of thoſe who would have him give Battle. Nay, ſome ſay that he reſolved upon it firſt of all, and that he called the Great Seneſchal a Coward for being of another Opinion. That Reproach was ſo nettling, that it made Peter de Brezé deſperate. 'Cæteri 'Regem

King than his Mother [E], and is the fame James de BREZE, Count de Maulevrier, Great Seneſchal of Normandy (c), who married one of the Natural Daughters of Charles VII, by Agnes Sorel [F], and cauſed her to be killed at Romiers, near Dourdan, the Night between Saturday and Sunday, the fourteenth of June, in the Year - - - - He paid dear for it [G]. From that Marriage came Lewis de BREZE, Count de Maulevrier, Great Seneſchal of Normandy (d), who married the famous Diana of Poitiers, Miſtreſs of Francis I, and afterwards of Henry II.

(c) See Father Anſelm's Hiſt. Genealog. de la Maiſon de France. pag. 123. He quotes Joh. Chartier, and Monſtrelet.

(d) Father Anſelme, ibid.

This Lewis de Brezé died the Twenty third of July, 1531. His Widow cauſed a ſtately Monument to be erected for him in the Church of our Lady at Rouen; but ſhe cauſed a Prediction to be inſerted in the Epitaph which has proved falſe [H]. Note, that Father Anſelme did not know the year wherein the great Seneſchal James de Brezé cauſed his Wife to be killed: If he had conſulted the Chronique Scandaleuſe of Lewis XI, he would have found there that it was done in the Year 1476. That Adventure deſerves to be related in the very Words of that Chronicle [I]. Therefore you have it below with ſome Corrections of Mr Baudrand.

' Regem quoque in priorem de pugna ineunda ſententiam conceſſiſſe, immo vero ejus authorem fuiſſe, & Brizeum quod in contraria ſententia eſſet timiditatis arguiſſe traduut. Hinc accenſum ira Brizeum ſe inconſultius in medias hoſtium acies præcipitaſſe, & quadam veluti deſperatione in mortem irruiſſe (6).' This way of ridding himſelf of the Great Seneſchal, was yet more ſure than the firſt; I mean than that which this Prince made uſe of, when he ſent him to the Aſſiſtance of the Queen of England with a handful of Men: For what will not a brave Man do after ſuch Reproaches? I am apt to believe that Varillas has a little too much embelliſhed the Paraphraſe that he made (7) upon Belcarius's Words, which we have ſeen in the Remark [A]: But he might very well ſay, that Brezé was a famous Commander. Oliver de la Marche, though he was in the Party of Burgundy, ſpoke notwithſtanding in praiſe of that Lord. ' My Lord de Chaverlois, ſays he (8), kept that ' Day the Field of Battle (anciently called the ' Field of Pleurs). The next Day he encamped ' at Montleheri, where James de Montmartin and ' myſelf had been ſent to view the Ground, and ' there we found the dead Body of the Seneſchal ' de la Varenne laid on Straw, (which was great ' pity) and alſo the Bodies of ſeveral other French ' Noblemen.

(6) Belcarius, lib. I, n. 20.

(7) Hiſtory of Lewis XI, lib. II, towards the end.

(8) Memoires, lib. I, chap. 55, pag. 316.

[E] He left a Son who proved more faithful to the King than his Mother.] Whilſt they were endeavouring to end the War for the public Good, by way of Negotiation, the confederated Princes made themſelves Maſters of Rouen. The moſt conſiderable of the Inhabitants were more willing to live under a Duke of Normandy, than under a King of France; for which reaſon they perſuaded the Widow of Peter de Brezé to receive the Duke of Bourbon into the Caſtle, and moſt of them took an Oath of Fidelity to the Duke of Berry. ' Hi ' Brizei pugna Letherica nuper cæſi perſuaſa uxore ' vidua, quæ veluti urbi præerat cuique Rex plurimum confidebat, Joannem Borbonium in arcem ' admiſerunt, & paucis exceptis in Biturigis verba ' jurarunt. Quo comperto Brizei filius non ſecus ' ac pater Normaniæ Seneſchallus ſacramento ſe ' Biturigi obligare recuſavit, & protinus invita matre ad Regem ſe contulit.' The Son of that Lady, Great Seneſchal of Normandy, would not imitate them, and in ſpight of his Mother went to King Lewis XI (9).

(9) Belcarius, lib. I. n. 37. ad Ann. 1465.

[F] - - - - And is the ſame James de BREZE' - - - - - - who married a Natural Daughter of Charles VII. and Agnes Sorel.] A modern Author calls him Lewis. ' Agnes Sorel, ſays he (10), had ' two Daughters by the King; Charlote, married ' to Lewis de Brezé, Seneſchal of Normandy, who, ' having ſurprized her in Adultery, ſtabbed her in ' ſeveral places with a Dagger; and Mary, who ' married Oliver de Coitini (11), Lord of Rochefort.' James de Brezé, Son-in-law of Agnes Sorel, and Son of Peter de Brezé, who is the Subject of this Article, puniſhed the unfaithfulneſs of his Wife too cruelly, and out of a Niceneſs ſo much the more blamable, becauſe he ſhould have been prepared to ſee her a Sportſwoman by Deſcent. We ſhall ſee that his Revenge brought him into Trouble, and coſt him dear.

(10) Galanteries of the Kings of France, Tom. I. pag. 219.

(11) He ought to have ſaid Coitivi.

[G] And that he cauſed her to be killed at Romiers. - - - - He paid dear for it.] He cauſed her to be ſtrangled for Adultery. Lewis XI took it very ill, and deſigned to bring him to a Trial for it. The Great Seneſchal redeemed himſelf for a Fine of an Hundred thouſand Crowns, for which he gave, among other Lands, the County of Maulevrier. He had alſo cauſed the Lover of his Wife to be put to death, who was a Gentleman of Picardy, called Lavergne. Lewis de Brezé, his Son, marrying Diana of Poitiers for his third Wife, recovered the Lands that had been given for the Fine. The King granted him that Favour in conſideration of that Marriage (12). Meſſieurs de Ste Marthe do not agree to this, in all the Circumſtances. They ſay, that by Letters of the Month of October, 1481, King Lewis XI gave to Lewis de Brezé, eldeſt Son of James and of Charlote de Valois, his Natural Siſter, the County of Maulevrier, the Lordſhips of Beccrepin, of Maulni - - - - and other Lands in Perigord and Querci. It was in Favour of the Marriage of that Lewis de Brezé with Jolande de la Haye, Daughter of Lewis de la Haye, and of Mary of Orleans (13). The Letters of King Lewis XI import, I. That thoſe Lands had been made over to the King, by James de Brezé, for an Hundred thouſand Crowns Fine, wherein he had been condemned for having cauſed his Wife to be put to death. II. That if Lewis died without Sons, thoſe Lands ſhould come to his Brother John de Brezé, and after him to Gaſton de Brezé, his other Brother (14). Note, That Meſſieurs de Ste Marthe having ſaid this, pag. 525, ſay, pag. 600, that thoſe Letters of Lewis XI were of the Month of October, 1491.

(12) This is taken from a Memorial which a Lady of great Merit procured me.

(13) She was Daughter of the famous Baſtard of Orleans Count de Dunois.

(14) Ste. Marthe Geneaſog. of the Houſe of France, Tom. I. lib. VIII, pag. 525.

[H] The Widow of Lewis de Brezé cauſed a Prediction to be inſerted in the Epitaph which proved falſe.] The Epitaph contains theſe four Verſes:

Hoc Lodoice tibi poſuit Breſæe ſepulcrum
Pictonis amiſſo mœſta Diana viro.
Indiviſa tibi quondam & fidiſſima conjux
Ut fuit in thalamo, ſic erit in tumulo (15).

Diana, mournful for her Husband dead,
This Monument, Brezé, has rais'd to thee;
Faithful to thee as in the Nuptial Bed,
So in the Grave inſep'rable ſhe'll be.

(15) You will find them in the ſecond Volume of an Hiſtory of the City of Rouen, printed in the Year 1668.

It promiſes that Diana ſhall be buried in our Lady's Church at Rouen; which did not come to paſs, for her Tomb is at Anet.

[I] The Adventure of James de Brezé deſerves to be related in the very Words of the Chronique Scandaleuſe.] Theſe are the Words of John de Troyes; for ſo the Author of the Chronique Scandaleuſe was called, if we believe Naudé (16). ' Upon ' a Saturday, the thirteenth of June, 1476, the ' Count de Maulevrier, Seneſchal of Normandy, Son ' to Meſſire Peter de Brezé, who was killed at ' the Fight of Montleheri, being a hunting near ' a Village called Romiers les Dourdan, which be- ' longed to him, and having with him Madam ' Charlote of France his Wife, and Natural Daughter to the late King Charles, and Mrs Agnes ' Sorel; it happened unluckily, after hunting, that ' they returned to ſup and lie at Romiers; and ' there the ſaid Seneſchal went alone into a Cham- ' ber to take his Reſt that Night, and his ſaid Wife

(16) Naudé Addit. to the Hiſtory of Lewis XI, pag. 29.

'went likewiſe alone into another. She, as her 'ſaid Husband reported, full of diſorderly Luſt, 'carried in with her a Gentleman of Poitou, cal-'led Peter de la Vergne, who was Huntſman to 'the ſaid Seneſchal, and made him lie with her; 'which was told the Seneſchal by one Peter l'Apo-'ticaire, his Servant and Steward; the Seneſchal 'immediately took his Sword, and broke open the 'Door of the Chamber where the ſaid Lady and 'Huntſman were; the Huntſman he found in his 'Shirt, and ſtruck him with his Sword, and thruſt 'it into his Body, ſo that he killed him: and 'then he went into a Chamber, where he found 'his ſaid Wife hid under a Bed wherein his Chil-'dren were, and took her by the Arm and threw 'her down; and as he threw her down, he 'ſtruck her with the ſaid Sword over the Shoul-'ders, and ſhe being down and on her Knees, he 'thruſt the ſaid Sword into her Paps and Sto-'mach, and ſent her into the other World, and 'had her buried with the Service of the Church 'in the Abbey of Coulons. As for the Huntſman, 'he had him buried in a Garden joining to the 'Houſe where he had killed him (17).' In the time of the Romans ſuch a Puniſhment would have been permitted; but our Laws do not ſuffer a Husband to revenge the Unfaithfulneſs of his Wife in that manner. Nevertheleſs it is done ſometimes, and thoſe few Examples are but ſeldom uſeful.

(17) Chronique Scandaleuſe of Lewis XI, pag. 329, 330. See alſo Rob. Gaguin, Annal. lib. x, fol. 276.

Here is what I find in ſome Manuſcript Notes which were ſent me by Mr Baudrand: 'It is not 'true that this was tranſacted at Romiers near 'Dourdan; Lewis de Brezé ſtabbed his Wife in 'the Village of Rouvres, on a little River called 'Vegre, two Leagues from Houdan, and half a 'League from Anet. It was in his Houſe, joining 'to the Parſonage, where there are yet ſome marks 'of her Blood, together with her Buſto, as I have 'ſeen it ſeveral times, it being in a Seat that be-'longs to me: And afterwards he cauſed that Wo-'man to be buried in the Abbey of Coulons, near 'Nogent le Roy.'

BREZÉ (the Mareſchal de), acquired great Glory in the XVIIth Century. His Name was URBAN DE MAILLE BREZE: He was of a very ancient Nobility [A], but it is likely that neither this, nor his Courage, did ſo much contribute to his Fortune, as his Marriage with Nicole du Pleſſis, Cardinal Richelieu's Siſter. That Match, which would have been made more advantageous to him, if he had been leſs haughty to his Brother-in-law, procured him nevertheleſs ſome noble

[A] He was of a very ancient Nobility.] Certainly Mr le Laboureur has not very fairly cleared that Genealogy, ſince Father Anſelme, who epitomized him, could hardly make any thing of it; and yet that good Father applied himſelf very much to that Study. I confeſs ingenuouſly, that I have been obliged to read that place of Mr le Labourer more than once to apprehend it well; and it is true, generally ſpeaking, that Figures are not much more neceſſary in matters of Geometry than in matters of Genealogy. This is the Idea I have of the Extraction of the Mareſchal de Brezé, after after having read, with great Attention, what Mr le Labourer ſays of it (1).

(1) Additions to the Memoirs of Caſtelnau, Tom. II, pag. 298, &c.

This Mareſchal deſcended from the Houſe of Maillé, which poſſeſſed the Lordſhip of Maillé in Touraine (2), and was ſo ancient, that there are twenty Degrees of Deſcent to be found in it. A Lord of that Family, whoſe Name was Pean de Maillé, who lived about three hundred Years ago (3), married Joan, Heireſs of the eldeſt Branch of the Houſe of Brezé in Anjou. By that Marriage the Seat of Brezé came into one of the Branches of the Houſe of Maillé, viz. into the Branch whereof Pean de Maillé was the Head. It remained there 'till the Death of the Mareſchal de Brezé, deſcended from that Pean de Maillé in the tenth Degree. LEWIS DE BREZE', Count de Maulevrier, Great Seneſchal of Normandy, Huſband of Diana of Poitiers, Ducheſs of Valentinois, ſo well known by the Amours of Henry II, deſcended from a younger Branch of the Houſe of Brezé; ſo that he was only related to the Anceſtors of the Mareſchal by the Mother's ſide. We muſt conjecture this in reading Mr le Labourer, for he does not ſay ſo in expreſs Words, but rather inſpires another Thought. 'Pean de Maillé, 'ſays he (4), married Joan, Heireſs of the eldeſt 'Branch of the Houſe of Brezé in Anjou, the 'Name whereof continued 'till Lewis de Brezé '- - - Great Seneſchal of Normandy, who had 'but two Daughters by Diana of Poitiers, Ducheſs 'of Valentinois.' The firſt ſenſe, and the moſt natural, that preſents itſelf to any one that reads theſe Words, is, That the Seneſchal of Normandy deſcended from that Pean de Maillé: yet it is not what the Author means; his meaning is (if I can apprehend any thing of it) that though the eldeſt Branch of the Houſe of Brezé ended by Marriage in the Houſe of Maillé, nevertheleſs the Houſe of Brezé continued, from Male to Male, 'till the Great Seneſchal of Normandy ſprung from the younger Branch of the Houſe of Brezé. We ſhall ſee in a little time (5), that a famous Hiſtorian could not diſintangle himſelf out of this Chaos. I have ſaid that Pean de Maillé, who married the Heireſs of the Seat of Brezé, was not of the eldeſt Branch of his Houſe: I muſt ſay now, that the eldeſt Branch ended with Francis de Maillé, who left but two Daughters, whereof one was married to Gilles de Laval, Sieur de Loüé; and the other to Francis de Batarnai, Sieur de Bouchage (6). The Mother of thoſe two Daughters was Margaret de Rhoan. Mr le Labourer informs us, though in an indirect manner, that the Father of thoſe two Daughters was the Son of Hardoüin de Maillé and Antoinette of Chauvigni, and that this Hardoüin was the Son of another Hardoüin, and Petronelle d'Amboiſe, and Brother of Jubez de Maillé, who married Iſabella de Chateaubrient. 'Hardoüin de Maillé, ſays he (7), younger 'Brother of Francis (he had juſt before ſpoken of 'that Francis de Maillé, who left but two Daugh-'ters, and with whom the eldeſt Branch ended) Son 'of Hardoüin de Maillé, and of Antoinette de Chau-'vigni, Lady of Chateauroux, Viſcounteſs of Broſſe, '&c. married Frances, Heireſs of la Tour-landri, 'upon condition that he and his Poſterity ſhould 'bear that Name and Arms; and from him is deſ-'cended the Marquis de la Tour-landri and Jaloſues, 'who is the Head of it, and whoſe younger Bro-'thers are the Marquiſſes de Carmen in Bretagne, and 'the Sieurs de Chedruë, de la Gueritaude, and du 'Flotti, deſcended from the Marriage of Jubez de 'Maillé, Sieur de Ville Romain, with Iſabelle de 'Chaſtaubriant; which Jubez was Son of Har-'doüin Sieur de Maillé, the Husband of Perronelle 'd'Amboiſe, whoſe Brother was the before mention-'ed Hardouin, married to Antoinette de Chauvigni.' To bring this within the Comprehenſion of leſs attentive Readers, we muſt ſay, I. That Hardoüin de Maillé, the Husband of Perronelle d'Amboiſe, had two Sons, Hardoüin and Jubez. II. That the eldeſt of thoſe two Sons married Antoinette de Chauvigni, and had two Sons by her; Francis, who left but two Daughters, and Hardoüin, who married the Heireſs of la Tour-landri. III. That Jubez de Maillé married Iſabella de Chateaubriant. IV. That the eldeſt Branch of the Houſe of Maillé ſubſiſts at preſent in the Family of la Tour-landri; and that the Deſcendants of Jubez, Uncle of this ſame Hardoüin, from whom the Marquis de la Tour-landri is deſcended, are the younger Branch of the Houſe of Maillé. As to the Branch of Maillé-Brezé, it was divided into ſome others: there remained no Male in the eldeſt Branch after the Death of Mareſchal de Brezé; but there are yet ſome in the Branch of the Lords of Benehart and Fleuri (8).

(2) At preſent erected into a Dutchy and Peerage by the Name of Lunes. Le Labourer, ibid.

(3) Mr Le Labourer ſaid this in 1660; it is the Date of his Book.

(4) Pag. 299.

(5) See the Remark [E], of the Article BREZE' (CLARA-CLEMENTIA).

(6) Mary de Batarnai, Granddaughter to this, was the Wife of William Viſcount de Joieuſe, Mareſchal of France; and ſo Mademoiſelle de Montpenſier, the Duke of Guiſe, of Joieuſe, &c. are deſcended from her. Le Labourer's Additions to Caſtelnau, Tom. II, p. 299.

(7) Ibid. p. 298.

Father Anſelme is much leſs intelligible than Mr le Labourer whom he epitomizes (9). He ſpeaks of two Hardoüins de Maillé, whereof one was the Father of the other; the Father married Antoinette de Chauvigni, the Son married the Heireſs of la Tour-landri. A little after he obſerves, that the Deſcendants of Jubez de Maillé, the Husband of Iſabelle

(8) See Le Labourer, p. 300.

(9) Of the Original and Progreſs of the Families of France, pag. 987.

noble Imployments. The Cardinal had ſome Reaſons for revenging himſelf but imperfectly of the bluntneſs of the Mareſchal de Brezé [B], and he was ſo far from puniſhing the Father's Inſults upon the Children, that his reſentment moved him to take ſpecial care of them. He cauſed the Mareſchal's only Son to be made Admiral of France, and to have the Dignity of Duke of Fronſac; and he married the ſaid Mareſchal's Daughter to a Prince of the Blood, to that Duke of Enguien, who has made himſelf famous under that Name, and more ſtill under that of Prince of Condé. We ſhall ſee the Fate of that Son, and of that Daughter of the Mareſchal de Brezé, in the following Articles. As for himſelf, he received the Mareſchal's Staff, with the Government of Calais, the Twenty eighth of October, 1632, a little after he had ſignalized himſelf in the Battle of Caſtelnaudari (a). He was Captain of the Life-Guards, and the Year following he was made a Knight of the Holy Ghoſt. He commanded an Army in Germany in the Year 1634, and relieved Heidelberg (b). The next Year, which was that of the Rupture between France and Spain, he had the Command of the Army of the Netherlands jointly with the Mareſchal de Chatillon. The firſt Exploit of that War, which was great and glorious to the utmoſt, I mean the Battle of Avein, which they won the twentieth of May, and which might have been attended with great Conſequences, if a good uſe had been made of it, proved almoſt inſignificant, either becauſe of the great Miſunderſtandings that aroſe between the two Chiefs (c), or for other Reaſons which it would be hard to give. Some French Writers lay the fault upon the Prince of Orange, who, ſay they, was vexed that thoſe, who were deſigned to ſerve under him, ſhould have obtained ſuch a ſignal Victory without his Participation (d). They ſo wholly let ſlip one of the faireſt Opportunities to ruin the Spaniſh Affairs in the Netherlands, that the next Year the Spainards came and ravaged Picardy, inſomuch that the Mareſchal de Brezé was not able to hinder them from forcing the Paſſages of the Somme before his face (e). Notwithſtanding this Misfortune, he obtained the Government of Anjou, and that of the Caſtle of Angers that ſame Year. He was made Viceroy of Catalonia in the Year 1642, and died in his Caſtle of Milly near Saumur (f), the thirteenth of February, 1650. It was the Fifty third Year of his age (g). He was twice Embaſſador; firſt to Guſtavus [C], and afterwards in Holland (h). They were Embaſſies of Honour, and not of Negotiation, though they were not altogether without ſome Buſineſs.

(a) Father Anſelme's Hiſt. of the great Officers, pag. 256.

(b) Id. Ibid.

(c) Aubert's Life of Cardinal Richelieu, lib. vi, cap. lxvii, Tom. II, pag. 262.

(d) See the Memoirs of the Sieur de Pontis; and the Remark [L], of the Article LEWIS XII.

(e) Aubert, ibid. lib. v, cap. xxxvii, Tom. I, pag. 548.

(f) He was Governor of Saumur. See Rem. [K], of the Article AMYRAULT.

(g) Father Anſelme, ubi ſupra.

(h) The Year where, in the quality of Embaſſador Extraordinary, Anſel. Ibid.

Iſabella de Chateaubriant, are the younger Brothers of the Marquis de la Tour-landri. 'Jubez de Maillé, continues he, younger Brother of Hardoüin, was married to Joan, Heireſs of the elder Branch of the Houſe of Brezé in Anjou, whoſe Name continued till Lewis de Brezé, great Seneſchal of Normandy, who married Diana of Poitiers, Ducheſs of Valentinois. Pean de Maillé, Lord of Brezé, contracted Marriage with Joan, Heireſs of Brezé, who brought that Seat into the Houſe of Maillé, wherein it continued till the Death of the Mareſchal de Brezé' What Negligence! what a Chaos! Is not Jubez de Maille, younger Brother of Hardoüin, a true individuum vagum? Is this the way to diſtinguiſh Perſons? Father Anſelme had mentioned two Hardoüins; ought he not therefore to have obſerved of which of the two that Jubez was the younger Brother? It is not true that this Jubez married the Heireſs of Brezé; and he is the ſame Jubez, of whom Father Anſelme had ſaid that he was married to Iſabella of Chateaubriant. What deceived him is, that, in theſe words of Mr le Laboureur, He married Joan, Heireſs of the eldeſt Branch of the Houſe of Brezé, he believed that by He he ought to underſtand preſently Jubez de Maillé; but it is certain, that he ſhould have underſtood it of another Perſon. Mr le Laboureur is ſomewhat the Cauſe of this Miſtake; for, according to the Rules of Grammar, his He ought rather to relate to Jubez de Maillé than to any other. Jubez prevails in all the foregoing Period; the other Perſons are only inſerted in that Period as Dependencies and Acceſſories of Jubez: but this Confuſion, in the words of Mr le Laboureur, does not excuſe Father Anſelme; a Man muſt uſe his Reaſon when Grammar does not remove Ambiguity. Now if this good Father had made uſe of his Reaſon, would he have given us Jubez de Maillé and Pean de Maillé, both married to Joan, Heireſs of the Houſe of Brezé? would he have underſtood by He two different Perſons? would he not have fixed on Jubez, underſtanding his Author wrong, or on Pean, underſtanding him right? One can ſcarce believe how obſcure the French Language is, when an Author does not place his Words right, and when his il, his le, and his que, have not their Relation well marked. The Genealogiſts are commonly very careleſs of that Part of our Grammar. We ſhall preſently ſee (10) whether there was any reaſon to ſay, that the Prince of Condé under matched his Son by marrying him to Mareſchal de Brezé's Daughter.

(10) In the Article BREZÉ (CLARA CLEMENTIA de), Remark [B].

[B] The Cardinal de Richelieu revenged himſelf, but imperfectly, of the bluntneſs of Mareſchal de Brezé.] Mr le Laboureur relates, that the Mareſchal 'had 'not always that regard, which the Authority, and 'haughty Humour of his Brother-in law, Cardinal 'de Richelieu, required from thoſe that belonged to 'him; and that his want of Complaiſance went 'ſo far as to tell him to his Face that he had mar'ried his Siſter only for her Beauty; and that be'ing vexed to ſee himſelf upbraided with the Go'vernment of Calais, he reſigned it, and it was 'given to the Count de Charrots. Nevertheleſs, adds 'the Author, he (11) gave him other Employ'ments; but he (12) always acquitted himſelf of 'them in ſuch an independant manner, that the 'Cardinal made it his chief Buſineſs to raiſe his '(13) only Son Armand de Maillé, whom he made 'Duke of Fronſac, and Admiral of France, and 'Clara Clementia de Maillé, his Daughter, whom 'he married to Lewis de Bourbon, at that time 'Duke of Enguien, now Prince of Condé (14).'

(11) This he is very wrong, according to the Rules of our Grammarians; for it doth not relate to the Perſon which is the Nominative of the whole Period, but to another Perſon.

(12) Here is another Grammatical Fault; this ſecond he relates to a perſon different from that to which the firſt relates.

[C] He was ſent Embaſſador to Guſtavus.] In the beginning of the Year 1632, when the Affairs of the Swedes were in great Proſperity, ſeveral Catholic Princes of Germany ſent Deputies to Lewis XIII, to recommend to him the Intereſts of their Religion, and to deſire him not to favour the Proteſtant Religion, which was become ſo formidable. Lewis XIII exhorted them to forſake the Emperor's Party, and promiſed them, that on that Condition he would reconcile them with the King of Sweden: but to ſhew them his religious Zeal, he ſent the Marquis de Brezé, Embaſſador Extraordinary to the King of Sweden, and charged him to mediate ſome Accommodation favourable to the Princes of the Catholic League. Guſtavus was then at Mentz, where he received the Embaſſador honourably. The Marquis's Propoſals and Inſtances, and the King's Replies, took up almoſt a whole Afternoon. The King acquainted him with the Artifices of the confederate

(13) Another Grammatical Fault; this his does not relate to the Cardinal, but to another Perſon.

(14) Le Laboureur Addit. aux memoires de Caſtelnau, Tom. II, pag. 298, & ſeq.

confederate Princes; yet upon certain Conditions he granted him a Truce for fifteen Days, on the Assurances that the Embassador gave him, that the King his Master would dispose the Duke of Bavaria, and the other States of the Confederacy, to a reasonable Accommodation; and that, in default thereof, he would not concern himself any more with their Affairs (15). If Brezé negotiated with that great Conqueror, he played also wanton Pranks with him. I have read in a French Writer, what I am going to relate: the Reader may abate of it what he pleases, he has my Consent. 'The great Gustavus spent all 'his Life in storming Towns, and winning Battles; 'yet, to divert himself, he played every Evening 'at Blindman's Buff with his Colonels and Captains; and Mareschal de Brezé said often, that 'he had played several Farces with him, and that 'commonly, laying aside all his Majesty, he acted 'the Part of a Cheat, or a Pickpocket, who was 'surprized, and beaten at the end of the Play (16).'

(15) Taken from a Book of Frederic Spanheim, entituled, The Swedish Soldier, pag. 200, & seq.

(16) Costar's Defence of Voiture's Works, pag. 67.

BREZÉ (ARMAND DE MAILLÉ), only Son of the Mareschal of that Name, was born in the Year 1619. He was raised early to great Employments, for he commanded the Naval Forces of France on the Ocean, in the Year 1640 [A]. He obtained a signal Victory over the Spainards near Cadiz [B]. He was called at that time Marquis de Brezé: Some time after he took upon him the Title of Duke of Fronsac. I do not relate the Particulars of his Actions; they may be seen in Moreri, who took them word for word out of Father Anselme (a). It is pity that young Lord died so soon; for he was but little above Twenty six Years of Age when he was killed by a Canon-ball on board his Ship near Orbitello, in the Year 1646. Father le Moine, a Jesuit, who had been his Preceptor, made some Verses on his Death (b), in which he said, among other things, that his Spring and Autumn passed together. Several other Poets signalized themselves on the same Subject. Balzac admired the Latin Verses that the Sieur de Peyrarede made upon it (c).

(a) History of great Officers of the Crown, pag. 326.

(b) They are inserted in the Peintures morales of that Jesuit.

(c) See his Choice Letters, Book III, Let. 37. And the Article PEYRARÈDE, Rem. [C].

[A] He commanded the Naval Force of France, in the Year 1640.] Father Anselme, whom Moreri follows, affirms, that the Marquis de Brezé commanded the Gallies of France in the Year 1639. I believe he is mistaken; for he says himself elsewhere, that the Marquis de Pont-de-Courlai was General of the Gallies from the Year 1635, to the Year 1643.

[B] He obtained a signal Victory over the Spaniards near Cadiz.] Here is what Aubery says of it: The Naval Forces of the Western Ocean, 'commanded 'by the Marquis de Brezé, attacked and defeated 'the Spanish Fleet, bound for the Indies, near Cadiz; 'so that the General, who was the Marquis de Castignosa, was forced to return again into the Harbour with more speed and fewer Galleons than he 'went out with: which disabled the Spaniards from 'sending to the West-Indies that Year, and consequently from drawing any Assistance of Money 'from thence, as they had promised themselves (1).' When we consider the Naval Victories that the French obtained over the Spaniards in the time of Philip IV, and the Fleets immensly rich, which the Dutch did often take from the Spaniards, one cannot but be surprized at two things: one is, how that Nation could lose so much; the other is, that the French, who are now stronger beyond Comparison, than they were in those times, either in number of Ships, or in Maritime Experience, have not hitherto (2) been able to undertake or execute an thing considerable against that Nation by Sea, during this last War. Philip II must needs have put his Kingdom into a very powerful Condition, since it subsists still after the great and innumerable Losses it has sustained for the Space near of a hundred Years.

(1) In the Life of Cardinal Richelieu, Book VI, cap. XXXVI, Tom. II, pag. 438.

(2) This Remark is written in the Month of May, 1694.

BREZÉ (CLARA-CLEMENTIA DE MAILLÉ), Daughter of the Mareschal of that Name, was married in the Year 1641, to Lewis de Bourbon, Duke of Enguien, and afterwards Prince of Condé. It was thought strange that a Prince of the Blood consented to that Marriage; but the Duke of Enguien was not so much blamed for it, as his Father the Prince of Condé [A]. Many excused him by reason of the trouble he might have brought upon himself by offending Cardinal Richelieu, Uncle of Mademoiselle de Brezé. The Truth is, that the hatred People had for that Cardinal was the chief cause of the Murmurs; for several Marriages have been made between Princes of the Blood and French Ladies, where the under-matching was at least as sensible as in this (a), and yet it does not appear that those Marriages have been criticized. The Prince of Condé made a diligent enquiry into the Nobility of the House of Maillé-Brezé, and found it very illustrious and very ancient [A]. A modern Satirist does not know what he says, when he

(a) See the Remark [B].

[A] The Duke of Enguien was not so much blamed for his Marriage with the Lady de Brezé, as his Father the Prince of Condé.] A History of the Prince of Condé was printed at Amsterdam in the Year 1693 (1), wherein it is said, that the Father of the Duke of Enguien being at Cardinal Richelieu's, some Days after he had somewhat coldly hearkned to the Proposals of the Marriage, fancied that there was a design to arrest him; and that, to prevent that Disgrace, he shewed himself disposed to give his Consent. The Author adds, Every body blamed the Prince of Condé (2), because it was found out by the great Advantages that he obtained, on account of that Match, that he had acted more out of Interest than out of Fear (3).

(1) The Title says at Cologne for F. That Work is curious, and well wrote. It was reprinted in the Year 1695, revised, corrected, and augmented, by the Author.

(2) That is, the Father.

(3) Histoire de Prince de Conde, pag. 15.

[B] The Prince of Condé —— found the House of Maillé-Brezé very illustrious and ancient.] 'The late Prince had not so much regard to the Power 'of the Uncle, as not to desire to be informed 'of the Nobility of the Niece, before he made 'that Match; and he was well pleased to hear, since 'he was necessitated to secure himself against a 'Man, whose resentment was very much to be 'dreaded, that the House of Maillé had all the 'Qualifications that he could desire, to defend himself against the Censure of the Vulgar, who generally judge rashly of the Conduct of Princes, and who, either out of Ignorance or Malice, would 'have it, that there was a Disproportion between this 'Marriage and those of the other Princes of the Blood. 'This is what I thought fit to refute here; and 'because I should not be allowed to make a long 'Digression in order to give twenty Degrees of 'Generation, I will content myself with a very 'singular Observation, of which no Example is to 'be found, I do not say in any House of France, 'but of all Europe; which shall serve to shew the 'Antiquity and hereditary Valour of the House of 'Maillé (4).' This singular Observation will be seen in the Remark [D]. Mr le Laboureur gives a short Account of the Genealogy of that Family, and then concludes with these Words; 'Thus have I 'shewn he relates the thing otherwiſe [C]. We find an extraordinary Paſſage concerning a Knight of that Family [D]. Some very able Hiſtorians have confounded it with ſhewn, in a few Words, the Condition of the House of Maillé, and now I ſhall not ſcruple to ſay, that it is not inferior to that of Beauvau, which was the Houſe of the fifth Grandmother of our King, Iſabella de Beauvau, Wife of John de Bourbon, Count de Vendome; and that it is, without any Compariſon, more illuſtrious than that of Monteſpedon, which was the Houſe of Philippa de Monteſpedon, Wife of Charles de Bourbon, Prince of la Roche-ſur-Yon, a very proud Princeſs, though deſcended from one Waſt de Monteſpedon, a Fleming, Valet de Chambre of John of France, Duke of Berry; and than many others, which it would be needleſs to name (5).'

(4) Le Laboureur's Additions to the Memoirs of Castelnau, Tom. II, p. 898.

(5) Ibid. p. 300.

[C] ----- A modern Satiriſt does not know what he ſays, when he relates the thing otherwiſe.] I mean the anonymous Author, who publiſhed ſome Memoirs in the Year 1687 (6). 'The Duke of Anguien, ſays he (7), eldeſt Son of the Prince of Condé, had married Mademoiſelle de Brezé, the Cardinal's Niece, and his Father had been obliged to agree to that Marriage to ſecure his Life, or at leaſt his Liberty. His Son, who knew the Violence that was done him, looked upon his Marriage as Fetters that were put upon him, and, taking occaſion from thence to ſlight his Wife, he had already upbraided her with a thouſand Faults, which were but too manifeſt. She was of a noble Birth, and doubtleſs ſhe was of an ancient Family; but the Duke of Anguien having ſent for a Man, skilled in Genealogies, to know the Origin of it; this Man found himſelf turned ſo many ways, that, whether it was true or not, he told him that the Houſe of Maillé, of which ſhe was, came from a Baſtard of an Archbiſhop of Tours. This was enough for the Duke not only to inſult his Wife, but alſo to make poinant Jeſts upon the Cardinal; and as nothing paſſed but he was told of it; he was ſo vexed at it, that he waited only for an Occaſion to ſhew his Reſentment. An Occaſion ſoon preſented itſelf: Boutteville having fought a Duel, contrary to the Ordinances, and even to the particular Prohibitions that were made him, was ſo cloſely purſued, that he was arreſted before he could eſcape into Lorrain. The Count Des-Chapelles, his Couſin, who had been his Second, and who fled with him, was likewiſe taken; and as it was a Spight to the Houſe of Condé, to put them to death by the Hands of the common Executioner, the Cardinal did it under pretence of Juſtice, but in reality to revenge himſelf for a private Quarrel.' I have already ſaid ſeveral times, and I may perhaps have a hundred Occaſions to repeat it, that the Boldneſs of theſe Libel-makers cannot be ſufficiently wondered at; they aſſert the falſeſt things in the World for Truth, though a great many Perſons may convict them of Ignorance. It is notorious, that Boutteville and the Count Des-Chapelles were beheaded in the Month of June 1627, and that the Duke of Anguien did not marry Clara Clementia de Maillé 'till the Year 1641. And yet they dare ſuppoſe that the Cardinal cauſed thoſe Duellers to be put to death to be revenged for the Injuries the Duke of Anguien did to his Wife.

(6) Memoirs of Mr L. C. D. R.

(7) Pag. 74.

[D] We find an extraordinary Paſſage concerning a Knight of that Family.] Here is what I promiſed in the Remark [B]. 'Above four hundred Years ago (8), in a Combat between Girard de Bidefort, Grand Maſter of the Templars, and the Saracens (9), a young Knight of that Order, Jakelin de Maillé, a Native of Touraine, (they are his own Words (10), in white Armour, performed ſo many Wonders at the Head of a Troop, which he commanded, that thoſe Infidels believing there was ſomething divine in his Valour, took him for St George, honoured by the Chriſtians, and were touched with ſo much Reſpect, as to deſire him to ſurrender, promiſing to ſend him back again; but though he alone was left of all his Troop, and could not long reſiſt the Fatigue of ſo long a Fight in the midſt of ſo many dead Bodies, that lay every where round about him, it was impoſſible for them to daunt his Courage; ſo that the ſame Hiſtorian ſays, that after he had trod to duſt the ſpot of Ground which he maintained, which was in a ſtubble Field, where the Corn had newly been cut, he was at laſt over-powered by the Multitude that fell upon him, whom the Admiration of his Valour made ſo ſuperſtitious, that they gathered the Duſt that was ſprinkled with his Blood, to rub their Bodies with, thinking by that means to get ſome part of his Valour. Laſtly, there was one among the reſt, who, through a great deſire of having an Heir of that Merit, cut off that part wherewith he might raiſe one in his Wife. This cannot be explained more modeſtly; but on the other hand I could not forget ſuch a ſtrange Teſtimony of Eſteem.'

(8) They are the Words of Mr Le Laboureur, ubi ſupra, pag. 298. He ſays he has this Story from a contemporary Author, printed in the Book entituled, Geſta Dei per Francos.

(9) He ſhould have ſaid Turks

(10) That is the Author quoted by Mr Le Laboureur, and printed in Geſta Dei per Francos.

When one conſiders that the Geſta Dei per Francos is a Compilation of ſeveral Authors in two Volumes in Folio, the firſt of which contains 1206 Pages, and the ſecond 361, without any Table of the Matters contained in it, one cannot ſufficiently wonder at the Negligence of a Writer, who, under a general Quotation of the Title of the Book, alledges out of it one of the moſt ſurprizing things in the World. Ought he not to ſuppoſe that all the Readers would be deſirous to ſatisfy themſelves by conſulting the Original? He ſhould therefore have made that Enquiry eaſy to them. Muſt a Reader be obliged to turn over every Page of two great Volumes? Is not this like looking for a Needle in a Bottle of Hay? I will not be guilty of Mr le Laboureur's Careleſſneſs; the more I have felt the ill Effects of it, the more I find myſelf diſpoſed to ſpare my Readers the ſame Trouble; and I ſhall not only quote the Page of Geſta Dei per Francos, but alſo ſet down many Words of the Original. 'Saladinus ----- Paleſtinam violenter aggreſſus Admiralium Edeſſæ Manaſaradinum cum ſeptem millibus Turcorum qui Terram Sacram depopulabantur, præmiſit. Hic autem, cum in partes Tyberiadis proceſſiſſet [ceſus] ſibi obvios magiſtrum Militiæ Templi Gerardum de Bideffordia, & magiſtrum Hoſpitalis Rogerum de Molendinis, illum quidem fugatum, iſtum vero interfectum inopino Marte confecit. In quo conflictu, cum noſtrorum pauciſſimi ab immenſo concluderentur exercitu, inſigne quiddam & memoria dignum contigit: nam quidam Templarius, Officio Miles, Natione Turonius, Nomine Jakelinus de Mailliaco, quadam virtutis in ſe omnium provocabat inſultus: cæteris autem commilitonibus ſuis, qui quingenti æſtimabantur, vel captis, vel interfectis, belli totius impetum ſolus ſuſtinuit: & pro lege DEI ſui athleta glorioſus effulſit. ----- Et quia in equo nitido & armis albicantibus tunc caſu pugnator inceſſerat, Gentiles qui Sanctum Georgium in hujuſmodi habitu militare noverant, ſe militem nitentis armaturæ, Chriſtianorum propugnatorem, interfeciſſe jactabant. Erant in loco, ubi pugnabat, ſtipulæ, quas meſſor, poſt grana paulo ante decuſſa, reliquerat inconvulſas. Turcorum autem multitudo tanta irruerat, & vix unus contra tot acies tam diu conflixit, ut campus in quo ſtabant totus reſolveretur in pulverem, nec ulla prorſus meſſis veſtigia comparerent. Fuêre, ut dicebatur, nonnulli qui corpus viri jam examinum pulvere ſuperjecto conſperſerunt; & ipſum pulverem ſuis imponentes verticibus, virtutem ex contactu hauſiſſe credebant. Quidam vero, ut fama ferebat, ardentius cæteris movebatur; & abſciſſis viri genitalibus, ea tunquam in uſum gignendi reſervare diſpoſuit, ut vel mortua membra, ſi fieri poſſet, virtutis tantæ ſuſcitarent hæredem (11). ------ Saladine ----- attacking Paleſtine with great Fury, ſent before the Admiral of Edeſſa, Manaſaradin, with Seven thouſand Turks, to waſte the Holy Land. He being come as far as Tiberias, and meeting, by chance, with Gerard de Biddeford, Maſter of the Knights Templars, and Roger de Molendin, Maſter of the Hoſpital, he attacked them unexpectedly, and beat them, putting the firſt to flight, and killing the other. In which Conflict a very ſmall Number (11) Hiſtoria Hieroſolomytana auctoris incerti, in pag. 1151. Operis cui titulus Geſta Dei per Francos.

with that of Brezé [E]. But laying aſide all thoſe things, I ſhall only ſay, that the Hero, who married the Lady Brezé, uſed her well enough [F]. She on her ſide took part in her Huſband's Misfortunes. Whilſt he was in Priſon, ſhe fled with the little Duke their Son to Bourdeaux, whither the Duke of Boüillon brought her ſafe (b). After ſhe had left that City, ſhe was brought to the Court by the Mareſchal da la Meilleraye, and earneſtly begged her Huſband's Liberty (c). Her Conduct on that occaſion was praiſed by an Hiſtorian who is no Flatterer [G]. That Princeſs obtained nothing; ſhe was only permitted to go where ſhe pleaſed, and ſhe retired to Montrund (d), as ſhe had done before ſhe went to Bourdeaux. She returned to that City, when ſhe heard that the Prince of Condé was there, and ſtaid there 'till the Inhabitants ſubmitted, and the Prince retired into the Spaniſh Netherlands (e). She went to him thither, and took the Duke of Enguien with her (f), and did not return into France till ſhe came with him after the Peace of the Pyrenees. She died in the Month of April, 1694, at Chateau-Roux in Berry, whither ſhe had retired after a very ſtrange Accident that happened to her, about the (b) Priolus, lib. v, cap. xiv.

(c) Id. ibid. See al's the end of the Remark [G], Citation (20).

(d) It coast a Forteresse in the Bourbonnais, which has been dismantled.

(e) Priolus, lib. vi, cap. xxxvi.

(f) Condæa cum Enguiano in Belgium ad maritum, Mecœnia Manſio fuit fœminæ principi. Id. lib. ix, cap. vii.

' of our Men being beſet by a large Army, a very ' notable and memorable thing happened: a certain ' Templar from Tourain, named Jaqueline de ' Maillé, by his peculiar Valour provoked the At- ' tacks of every one againſt himſelf: and when all ' the reſt of his Companions, who were about five ' hundred, were either taken or killed, he alone ' ſuſtained the brunt of the whole Fight; and approved ' himſelf a glorious Champion for the Law of his ' GOD. - - - - And becauſe the Warrior by chance ' at that time fought on a white Horſe, and in white ' Armour, the Infidels, who knew that St George ' uſed to fight in that manner, boaſted that they ' had killed the Knight of the white Armour, the ' Champion of the Chriſtians. There was, in the ' Place where they fought, Stubble, which, the Corn ' being but newly reaped, was laſt ungathered. ' And ſo great a Multitude of Turks fell upon ' him, and he alone fought ſo long againſt ſo great ' an Army, that all the Field where they ſtood was ' trod to duſt, and not the leaſt appearance of the ' Stubble remained. There were ſome as it was ' ſaid, who ſprinkled the dead Body with Duſt, and ' afterwards put the ſame Duſt on their Heads, ' imagining they had received ſome Virtue by touch- ' ing him. But one, as it was reported, was ' more earneſt than the reſt; and cuting off the ' Man's Genitals kept them as it were for Pro- ' creation, that the very dead Members, if poſſible, ' might raiſe him an Heir of ſo great Valour.' This happened in the year 1177.

[E] Some able Hiſtorians have confounded the Houſe of Maillé Brezé with that of Brezé.] When Varillas ſpeaks of the Cardinal of Lorrain's Deſign to marry his elder Brother to one of the Daughters of the Ducheſs of Valentinois, he adds this Reflexion: ' That Match was only unequal ' ſuppoſing the Cuſtom of the Princes of Lorrain, ' who married none but Princeſſes; for the Houſe ' of Maillé, whereof that of Brezé was a Branch, ' was accounted, without any Contradiction, one ' of the nobleſt and moſt ancient Houſes of ' France; and it was well known, that beſides ' the famous Jaqueline de Maillé, ſo much cele- ' brated in the Hiſtory of the Levant; it had af- ' forded ſome Governors of Provinces from the ' time of St Lewis (12).' The Author of the Life of Admiral de Coligni (13) has taken notice of that Fault. ' Mademoiſelle de Brezé, ſays ' he (14), was the Daughter of Mr de Brezé Mau- ' levrier, Seneſchal of Normandy, and of Diana ' of Poitiers. She was of an illuſtrious Family ' among the Nobility; and though ſhe was not of ' that which Mr de Varillas mentions, yet ſhe had ' ſome Perſons among her Anceſtors who had been ' Governors of Provinces for above three hundred ' Years. Her Coat of Arms was alſo very diffe- ' rent from that of the other Brezés, whoſe Sir- ' name is Maillé, whereas her's was Brezé. But ' what deceived Mr de Varillas is, that there is ' none left of that Family; and he thought, as ' well as Mezerai, who ſays the ſame thing, that ' it was the ſame as that of the Maillé Brezés.' Varillas made a public Confeſſion of his Fault, wherein he has committed three or four other Miſtakes. Theſe are his Words: ' I ingenuouſly con- ' feſs, that I believed, on the Credit of a Genealogy ' which I ſaw thirty Years ago in the Houſe of ' Garmen, that Peter de Brezé, Great Seneſchal ' of Normandy, came from the Houſe of Maillé; ' but I have found out ſince, that this Brezé, ' Husband of Diana of Poitiers, who was after- ' wards Ducheſs of Valentinois, was of the ancient ' Houſe of Brezé in Normandy, and that it was ' only for want of Male Iſſue from him, that the ' Heireſs of that Family of Brezé brought the ' Name of it into the ſecond Houſe of Brezé, a ' younger Branch of that of Maillé, which ſub- ' ſiſts no more but in the Perſon of the Princeſs ' Dowager of Condé (15).' I. The Husband of Diana of Poitiers was called Lewis de Brezé, and not Peter de Brezé. II. The Houſe of Brezé was not of Normandy, but of Anjou. III. It was not for want of Male Iſſue from the Husband of Diana of Poitiers, that the Heireſs of that Houſe brought the Name of it into the ſecond Houſe of Brezé, a younger Branch of that of Maillé. Mr le Laboureur ſays, That Pean de Maillé, who lived above three hundred Years ago, married the Heireſs of the eldeſt Branch of the Houſe of Brezé in Anjou (16). Mr Varillas himſelf tells us (17), that the whole Succeſſion of the Wife of the Seneſchal of Normandy was ſhared between her two Sons in-law, who were the Duke of Bouillon and the Duke of Aumale. IV. Laſtly, The Branch of Maillé Brezé was not reduced to the only Dowager of Condé; for Mr le Laboureur ſpeaks (18) of the Marquis de Benehart, who had two Brothers and two Siſters, and who deſcended from that Branch.

(15) Varillas, in the Preface to The Hiſtory of Hen. II.

(16) Le Laboureur's Additions to Gaſtelnau, Tom. II, pag. 299.

(17) Hiſt. de Hen. II, lib. I, pag. 37.

(18) Pag 300.

[F] Her Husband uſed her well enough.] I have read a thing in Morigni's Letters that may do Honour to the Prince of Condé's Memory. The Title of that Letter is, A New-Years-Gift to the Duke of Enguien; it was written from Franefort, in 1658. Morigni relates, That in a dangerous fit of Sickneſs, which the Prince of Condé had lately had, ' he had expreſſed his Zeal for Religion, his Sub- ' miſſion to Providence, and his Satisfaction to ' have the Internuncio for a Witneſs of his Reſpect ' for the Head of the Church, and of the Hu- ' mility wherewith he adored the Myſteries of it; ' and that he had given ſincere Marks of Co- ' JUGAL Love, of fatherly Tenderneſs, of ' Cordiality for his Friends, and of Kindneſs to all ' his Servants and Domeſtics; which were ſo many ' Chriſtian and Moral Battles, wherein he had tri- ' umphed over the blackeſt Calumny of his Enemies.'

[G] Her Conduct - - - - - was praiſed by an Hiſtorian who is no Flatterer.] Theſe are Priolo's Words: ' Condæana ad Regis & Reginæ conſpe- ' ctum admiſſa ſine ulla vultatis ſuſpicione inno- ' centiam ſuam tacita exprobratione ingeſſit. nullius ' tamen demiſſionis verba protulit, ſed ſuppliciter ' triſtis tanta modeſtia ſermonem commendavit, & ' tam concinne mœrens viſa, ut in eoſdem cum ' illa affectus ſentirent ſe omnes mutari (19). - - - - ' The Princeſs of Condé, admitted into the Preſence ' of the King and Queen, without the leaſt Token ' of Meanneſs, tacitly upbraided them with her In- ' nocence; but uttered not one Word below her Cha- ' racter, but, ſupplicantly ſorrowful, ſhe managed ' her Diſcourſe with ſuch Modeſty, and ſo handſome- ' ly bemoaned what ſhe had ſeen, that ſhe infuſed ' the ſame Affection into all the by-Standers. ' Nihil promiſſum de viri liberatione quam tam ar- ' denter genibus advoluta Regis & Reginæ poſtu- ' lavit, ſed data copia eundi quo vellet & rece- ' dendi. Repente, relicta aula, per Andegavenſes & ' Turones

(19) Priolus, lib. v, cap. 27.

(12) Hiſtoire de Hen. II. Book i, pag. 45. Edit. Holl.

(13) Printed at the Hague, in 1686.

(14) Pag. 86.

the latter end of the Year 1670. One of her Domeſtics was ſo mad as to draw his Sword upon her, and to give her a thruſt with it. He made his eſcape, but was taken up a little while after. It is ſaid, that That Princeſs, ſo far from deſiring that he ſhould be put to death, begged his Life, out of a ſenſe of Humanity and Meekneſs. This Adventure occaſioned many Reflexions [H], which was unavoidable in a City ſo full of Noveliſts as Paris is; I mean your Political Praters, and who pretend to gueſs right.

' Turones Montem-Rotundum petiit ubi mariti in ' libertatem aſſerti inculpata vitæ norma mandata ex- ' pectavit (20). - - - - - - Nothing was promiſed her ' concerning the Releaſe of her Husband, which ſhe ' ſo earneſtly begged on her Knees, at the Feet of ' the King and Queen; but leave was given her ' to go and retire wherever ſhe would. Immediate- ' ly ſhe left the Court, and going through Anjou ' and Touraine, retired to Montrond, where ſhe ' waited the Commands of her Husband, when ' he ſhould be ſet at Liberty, leading a blameleſs ' Life.'

(20) Id. lib. v, cap. 14.

[H] One of her Domeſtics - - - - did ſtrike her with his Sword - - - - this Adventure occaſioned many Reflexions. I have juſt now read ſome Circumſtances of that Action, and of it's Conſequences, in Mr Patin. ' Three Weeks ago, ſays he (21), ' a Man, who had been one of the Prince's Foot- ' men, came into the Place of Condé, and drew ' his Sword upon the Princeſs, whom he found ' at Advantage, and run it into her Body, but ' the Wound is not mortal. It is thought he had ' a mind to rob her, but he fled, and is not taken. ' All the Devils are not in Hell, nor all the Mad- ' men in Bedlam; many People are weary of their ' Life. At laſt he is taken, and his Name is du ' Val; he asked her for ſome Money which he ' pretended was due to him. He is going to be ' tried. This matter is variouſly whiſpered. - - - - ' The Footman du Val, who wounded the Prin- ' ceſs, is condemned to the Gallies, and chained ' with the reſt; but they are not yet gone, for he ' is ſtill at Paris. As for her, it is ſaid ſhe will ' ſoon be carried to Chateau roux in Berri, by ' the King's Command, and her Husband's Order. ' The Secret of it is not known (22).' The Prince of Condé a little while before he died ' wrote a ' whole Page with his own Hand, and having ' cauſed the Ducheſs of Enguien and Gourville to ' read it, he ordered it to be ſealed, and given ' to the Duke his Son after his Death. The Prince ' ſpoke in that Writing of his Wife the Princeſs ' of Condé, and even deſired the King to take ' care of that Princeſs, and to preſcribe her the ' manner how ſhe ought to behave herſelf (23).'

(21) Patin's Letter is dated January 14, 1671. It is the 531*ſt.*

(22) Patin, ibid. Letter 532, page 585.

(23) Hiſtoire du Prince de Condé, liv. v, pag. 575.

BRISEÏS, a Concubine of Achilles, was accidentally the cauſe of a thouſand Diſorders in the Grecian Army at the Siege of Troy [A]. Her right Name was Hippodamia (a); that of Briſeïs is one of thoſe Names which the Grammarians call Patronymical (b). She fell into the Hands of Achilles when that Hero had taken Lyrneſſus, and killed her Huſband Mynes, who was King of that Place. This is Homer's Opinion, which ſome Authors do not follow [B]. Achilles had that Prince's Widow for his ſhare of the Booty, and loved her very tenderly (c). She hoped he would take her with him into Theſſaly to marry her [C]. When Agamemnon and Achilles were reconciled, the firſt made many Preſents to the other, and returned him

(a) Euſtathius & Scholiaſtes Homeri in Iliad. lib. i. Dict. Cretenſ. lib. ii.

(b) That is, formed out of the Father's Name. Briſeïs's Father is called Briſeus by Homer, Il. lib. i, ver. 392, lib. ix, ver. 132, 276, and Briſes by Dictys Cretenſis, lib. ii.

(c) See the Remarks [E], and [F].

[A] She was accidentally the Cauſe of a thouſand Diſorders in the Grecian Army at the Siege of Troy.] This is the Chain of all thoſe Events. In a Council of War Achilles was of opinion that Chryſeïs, the Concubine of Agamemnon, ſhould be returned to her Father: After a great deal of abuſive Language on both ſides, Agamemnon was forced to yield to that Advice; but to make himſelf amends he, ſeized on Briſeïs (1). Achilles being provoked with this Affront, laid down, his Arms, and from that time the Trojans obtained ſeveral Advantages, which put the Army of the Greeks in an ill Condition (2).

(1) Hom. Il. i. d.

(2) Id. tota fere Iliade.

[B] She fell into the Hands of Achilles —— at the taking of Lyrneſſus. This is Homer's Opinion, which ſome Authors do not follow.] He ſays in the ſecond and nineteenth Book of the Iliad, that Achilles took Briſeïs in the City of Lyrneſſus; and it is eaſy to conclude from thoſe two Paſſages, that Mynes, who reigned, and was killed there, was Briſeïs's Huſband. The Scholiaſt upon Homer (3) and Euſtathius ſays ſo in expreſs Words. Dictys Cretenſis is of another Opinion; he ſays that Eetion (4) was King of Lyrneſſus, and Huſband of Aſtynome, the Daughter of Chryſes, when Achilles took that Town (5). He adds, that, after that Conqueſt, Achilles went ſpeedily to attack Pedaſus, a Town of the Leleges, where reigned Briſes, whoſe Daughter, Hippodamia, was taken. Cedrenus follows the Opinion of Dictys Cretenſis (6). We muſt remember, that Briſeïs and Hippodamia are one and the ſame Perſon here. However it be, Moreri is greatly miſtaken in ſaying, that Briſeïs was a Trojan Lady.

(3) In Iliad. II, ver. 199.

(4) Meziriac on Ovid's Epiſtles, pag. 255, conjectures that it ought to be read Eetion.

(5) Dict. Cret. lib. 2, pag. 172.

(6) See how Meziriac, ibid. pag. 256, corrects Cedrenus's Text.

[C] She hoped Achilles would take her with him —— to marry her.] It was Patroclus who inſpired her with ſuch hopes, and perhaps he did it only to ſoften her Grief for the Death of her Husband and of her Brothers, and for the Ruin of her Country. However it be, the Remembrance of thoſe hopes melted Briſeïs into Tears, when, at her Return to Achilles, ſhe ſaw the dead Body of Patroclus.

Οὐδέ μὲν οὐδ' ἐμὲ ἔασκες, ἐτ' ὤφρ' ἐμὸν ἀκὺς Ἀχιλλεὺς
Ἕκτορι δῖον ἄκοιτιν ἐπὶ πτόλιν ἠΰκομόων
Κλείσειν, ἀλλ' ἐμ' ἔφασκες Ἀχιλλῆϊ θείοιο,
Κνημίδων ἄλοχον ἠδὲ, ἐξέμεν τ' ἐπὶ νηυσὶν
Ἐς Φθίην, δαῖσαι δὲ γάμον μετὰ Μυρμιδόνεσσι.
Τῷ σ' ἐλεεῖον κλαίω τειθηπέα μείλιχον αἰεί.

Minime tamen, minime ſinebas me, cum vicem velox Achilles
Interfecit, evertitque urbem divini Mynetis,
Flere, ſed me dicebas Achillis divini
Charam uxorem te futuram eſſe, ductumque in navibus
Ad Phthiam, celebraturumque nuptias inter Myrmidones,
Ideo te infatiabiliter deſideo mortuum, ſuavem ſemper (7).

(7) Homer, Iliad. lib. ix, ver. 295.

Thy friendly hand uprear'd me from the Plain,
And dry'd my Sorrows for a Husband ſlain.
Achilles' Care you promiſed I ſhould prove,
The firſt, the deareſt, Part'ner of his Love:
That Rites Divine ſhould ratify the Band,
And make me Empreſs in his Native Land;
Accept theſe grateful Tears, for thee they flow,
For thee, that ever felt another's Woe.

POPE.

[D] When

him Breſeïs, and ſwore ſolemnly that he had not touched her [D]. If it be not falſe that he foreſwore himſelf, it is at leaſt very likely. I do not know what became of that Woman after Achilles was killed. Horace argued wrong, when he alledged Achilles's Example, to prove that a Man ought not to be aſhamed of loving his Servant-Maid. Mr Menage's Criticiſm upon this is very well grounded [E].

Dares

[D] When Agamemnon —— reſtored her to Achilles, he ſwore ſolemnly, that he had not touched her.] I ſwear, ſaid he, by the great God Jupiter, by the Earth, by the Sun, and by the Infernal Furies, who puniſh Perjuries, that I never laid my Hands on her, either to enjoy her, or on any other Account.

Μὴ μὲν ἐγὼ κούρῃ Βρισηΐδι χεῖρ' ἐπανεῖκα
Εὐνῆς οὐνεκα πρόφασιν κεχρημένος ὅτι τευ ἄλλα,
Ἀλλ' ἔμεν, ἀπρολίμας ἐνὶ κλισίῃσιν ἐμῇσιν.

Me non puellæ Briſeïdi manum intuliſſe,
Neque concubitus cauſa egentem, neque alicujus alterius rei,
Sed manſiſſe intactam in tentoriis meis (8).

The black ey'd Maid inviolate removes,
Pure and unconſcious of my manly Loves.

POPE.

(8) Id. ibid. ver. 261.

Ovid brings in Briſeïs ſwearing, that ſhe lived like a chaſt Widow in Agamemnon's Tent, whilſt Achilles comforted himſelf in the Arms of another Miſtreſs for the loſs of Briſeïs.

Nulla Mycenæum ſociaſſe cubilia mecum
Juro: fallentem deſeruiſſe velis.
Si tibi nunc dicam; Fortiſſime, tu quoque jura
Nulla tibi ſine me gaudia facta, neges (9).

(9) Ovidius in Epiſt. Briſ. ad Achill. ver. 109.

. . . . . I ſwear,
And laſt of all, by thine own Head, and mine,
Whom Love, tho' parted now, did ſometimes join,
That I preſerve my Faith intire and chaſt;
That I no foreign Love or Pleaſure Taſte:
That no Aſperſion can my Honour touch:
O that Achilles too could ſay as much!

CARYL.

Ovid did not believe that Oath of Briſeïs; for he alledges Agamemnon as an Example of one of his Remedies for Love. That Remedy conſiſts in driving away one Paſſion by another, in applying one's ſelf to Briſeïs, as Agamemnon did, in order to forget Chryſeïs. What would it avail me to be a King, if I did not lie with this Woman? I had as good yield my Royalty to the vileſt Fellow.

Nam ſi rex ego ſum, nec mecum dormiet illa,
In mea Theſſales regna licebit eat.
Dixit, & hanc habuit ſolatia magna prioris.
Et prior eſt curâ cura repulſa novâ (10).

(10) Ovid. de remed. Amor. ver. 43.

This is what Ovid makes Agamemnon ſay; after which he affirms, that Briſeïs ſucceeded with that Prince in the Function of Chryſeïs. Agamemnon's Temper renders the thing very likely. He was a very laſcivious Man; for, whilſt the Fleet lay at Anchor for a fair Wind, 'He ran all over Bœotia after 'a pretty Youth whoſe Name was Argynnus, whom 'he purſued diſhoneſtly; till at laſt, not being able to 'prevail, he bathed himſelf in the Lake Copais 'to extinguiſh his Heat (11).' With what Suddenneſs and Fury did he fall in Love with Caſſandra, the Daughter of Priamus, in the Temple of Minerva (12)? His Oath did not perſuade Achilles. See one of Libanius's Speeches, wherein Achilles ſays to Ulyſſes, 'He ſwears that he has not touched Briſeïs; be it ſo. But will any Body believe it? 'The Shame of it will therefore ſtick to me in 'every Body's Opinion; and to tell you in one 'word what I think, I give no Credit to Agamemnon's Oath. Καὶ τῶν ὁμεῖται μὲν Ἀγαμέμνων. δεδόσθω δὲ ὡς ἀληθῶς. πείσει δὲ ἄρα. μένει δὲ τὸ τῆς αἰσχύνης. ὅλως δὲ, ἐδαμόθεν ἡ πίστις αὖς ὁμνύει.

(11) Vigenere on Philoſtratus, in the Picture of Ajax the Locrian. Ex Plutarcho, de ratiocinio beſtiarum.

(12) Id. ibid.

[E] Horace —— alledged Achilles's Love to Briſeïs —— to prove —— that a Man might love his Servant. Mr Menage's Criticiſm upon this is very well grounded.] Theſe are his Words; 'I had 'deſigned to make an Ode on William Colletet's 'loving Servant-Maids, in Imitation of Horace, who 'made one upon one of his Friends, who had the 'ſame Paſſion; but I have not done it. Examining 'that of Horace, I found it was all wrong. He 'praiſes his Friend for imitating the Ancients, who 'had alſo loved and married their Servant-Maids. 'He quotes Achilles for an Example, who mar-'ried Briſeïs; but Briſeïs was no Servant, ſhe 'was a Slave who was a Queen, and had been 'taken by the Right of Arms (13).' This Thought of Horace is very odd, and contains a pitiful Argument (14). Achilles was not aſhamed to love a Queen, whom the Chance of Arms put into his Hands; Agamemnon did not bluſh in the midſt of his Triumph to love the Daughter of King Priamus; therefore you need not bluſh to love a Slave you have bought. I own that he endeavours to mend the Matter a little, by ſuppoſing it was likely his Friend's Maid might be of a good Family, conſidering the good Qualities wherewith ſhe was endowed; but this does not repair the Fault. We ſhould now-a-days call a Man fool and extravagant, if he encouraged his Friend to love a Servant-Maid, under pretence that ſome Generals of Armies, who had taken a Count, or a Prince of the Empire, Priſoner, with his Wife and Daughters, would make no difficulty to entertain their ſhe Priſoners with amorous Addreſſes, and to marry them. I know very well, that Men do not judge of the ſame Things alike in all Ages, and that I ought not to inſiſt upon my Parallel without any Reſtriction; but Horace's Argument will never be juſtified, and at the worſt it will appear, that, in Homer's Time, the Ideas of Reaſon were ſtill very much confuſed, ſince Achilles expreſſes himſelf thus in the Iliad: I loved Briſeïs with all my Heart, though the Force of Arms made her fall into my Hands.

(13) Menagiana, pag. 258, of the firſt Edition of Holland.

. . . . . ὃς καὶ ἐγὼ τὸν.
Ἐκ θυμῷ φίλον ἀεργυπλήν περ ἐοῦσαν.

. . . . . ut & ego hanc
Ex animo amabam, armis captam licet exiſtentem (15).

(14) Horat. lib. ix, ver. 342, 343.

Slave as ſhe was my Soul ador'd the Dame.

POPE.

If Alexander had argued thus in Relation to Darius's Wife and Daughters, would it not have been ſaid, that he did not know what he ſaid? Perhaps I venture a little too much, ſince we read, in Quintius Curtius, that this Conqueror juſtified his Marriage with Roxana, by this Reaſon, that Achilles did not ſcorn to lie with a Priſoner. Achillem quoque quo genus ipſe deduceret cum captiva coiſſe (16). Ovid makes uſe of the ſame Argument as Horace, to juſtify the Trade he drove with the Maid of his Corinna. He was not contented with the Miſtreſs's Favours; he went as heartily to work with the Chamber-Maid, proteſting, nevertheleſs, when Corinna complained to him about it, that a Man muſt have loſt his Judgment, to mind Servant-Maids.

(15) Homer Iliad. ix, ver. 342, 343.

(16) Q. Curtius lib viii, cap iv, n. 25.

Quid quod in ancilla ſi quis delinquere poſſet,
Illum ego contendi mente carere bona?
Theſſalus ancillæ facie Briſeïdos arſit:
Serva Mycenæo Phœbas amata duci.
Non ego Tantalide major, nec major Achille:
Quod decuit reges cur mihi turpe putem (17)?

(17) Ovid. Amor. lib. ii, Eleg. viii, ver. 9.

What

Dares Phrygius represented Briſeïs as a charming Woman [F]. He ſays her Eyebrows joined each other, which would not paſs in our Age for a Beauty. Du Soubait, in his Tranſlation of the Iliad (d), very ridiculouſly calls Briſeïs a Virgin [G], when ſhe was taken from Achilles's Tent, and brought to that of Agamemnon.

(d) Printed at Paris in 1620, in 8vo.

What though I call it a diſgrace to prove Stoln Sweets, or make a Chamber-Maid my Love;
Achilles wanton'd in Briſeïs Arms,
Atrides bow'd to fair Caſſandra's Charms:
Since I am loſt than theſe, then what can bring Diſgrace to me, that ſo became a King?
CREECH.

Pheroras, Herod's Brother, was ſo paſſionately in love with a Servant-Maid, that he choſe rather to perſiſt in that mean Amour, than to marry Herod's Daughter. Pheroras impuros ancillæ complexus Herodis filiæ impollato cubili prætulit (18). If ever any Body makes the Catalogue mentioned by Mr Menage (19), he will do well to enlarge it with thoſe who have imitated Pheroras.

(18) Joſeph. Antiq. ſud lib. xvi, cap. xi, pag. 564. apud Drelincourt. Indic. Achill. pag. 62. Edit. 2.

I muſt ſay ſomething, by the by, of Mr Dacier's Remark on theſe Words of Horace, (19) Menagiana, pag. 253, of Edit. 1. of Holl.

Hunc amor, ira quidem communiter urit utrumque (20).

(20) Horat. Epiſt. ii. lib. i. ver. 13.

One robb'd of what he eagerly deſir'd,
Was rais'd by Love; but both by Fury fir'd:

Here is a Judgment of Horace that is very remarkable, ſays Mr Dacier (21). Speaking of Achilles and Agamemnon, he ſays, 'that Love burns the latter, 'and that both are equally inflamed with Anger, 'Achilles is not therefore in Love; which is true. 'Homer, who was thoroughly acquainted with the 'Paſſions, did very well ſee that Love could not [illegible] cites two Paſſages of Homer, which make him conclude, 'That Achilles is only ſenſible of the 'Affront put upon him, by taking a Prize from 'him, wherewith his Valour had been honoured; 'Love has no ſhare in his Complaints. It is not 'ſo with Agamemnon; he loved Briſeïs: he expreſſes his Paſſion thus.' Mr Dacier quotes here ſome Verſes of the Iliad which concern Chryſeis, and not Briſeïs, and then he adds. 'It was very im'portant to diſtinguiſh thoſe two Characters of 'Achilles and Agamemnon: For many have been 'miſtaken about it, thinking that Homer had made 'Achilles in love with Briſeïs. Horace took care 'not to commit that Fault.' It would be difficult to reconcile this with the Verſes of the ninth Book of the Iliad, which I have quoted above (22). See alſo Plutarch, who affirms, that Achilles was in love with Briſeïs (23), and therefore it muſt be ſaid, that when Propertius obſerved that Achilles ſuffered many Things for the Love of the fair Briſeïs, Omnia formoſam propter Briſeïda paſſus (24), he did not make uſe of the Privilege of Poems of Gallantry, wherein Love is brought in as the Cauſe of all; he went upon the Notion of Homer, who grounds Achilles's Anger on taking away from him an Object that was dear to him (25). All the other Poets went upon the ſame Notion: ſee the Index Achilleus, Article 184, 185.

(21) In the 8th Vol. of his Remarks on Horace, pag. 147. Edit. Holl.

(22) Citat. 15.

(23) Ὅτι τῆς Βρισηΐδος ἐρᾶν. Plut. de audend. Poetis, pag. 33.

[F] Dares Phrygius repreſents Briſeïs as a charming Woman.] He ſays, ſhe was very handſome, fair, of a middle Size, and of a ſtrait Shape; that ſhe had fine Eyes, the Eyebrows joined, a ſweet, modeſt, and mild (26) Humour, without any Art: Briſeïdam formoſam, nec alta ſtatura, candidam, capillo flavo & molli, ſuperciliis junctis (27), oculis venuſtis, corpore æquali, blandam, verecundam, animo ſimplici, & piam. All the Authors, who have ſpoke of her, make her very handſome: ſee the Index Achilleus, Article 305.

(24) Propert. lib. ii. Eleg. viii.

(25) Iliad, lib. ix. ver. 342.

(26) The Latin Word may ſignify devout.

(27) See concerning thoſe kind of Eye brows, the Authors quoted in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, Novemb. 1684. Artic. viii.

[G] Du Souhait —— very ridiculouſly calls Briſeïs a Virgin.] He renders theſe Words of the firſt Book of the Iliad. Πατρόκλῳ ἄξαγε κούρην (28), thus, Patroclus brings him the Virgin. See alſo his Tranſlation of the 345th and 346th Verſes of the ſame Book. Patroclus, ſays he, in Obedience to his Friend delivered the Virgin. He repeats the ſame Word in other Places. This is altogether impertinent: There is no Conſequence to be drawn from one Language to other Languages; and therefore under pretence that the Greeks might give a Woman the Name of κόρη, which was chiefly deſigned to ſignify a Maid; it does not follow, that in French thoſe that have been married, or Concubines, may be called, pucelles, filles, vierges, (Maids or Virgins). That a Tranſlator could not be ignorant, that Briſeïs had loſt her Husband at the taking of Lyrneſſus (29), and that ſhe had lain a long time with Achilles. The Latins were as free as the Greeks in the uſe of the ſame Words to ſignify a Maid, and a Woman; they called thoſe Puellas & Virgines who had had Children, or who had a Husband. Dr Drelincourt has produced a great many Examples of the Greeks and Romans in the 370th Article of the ſecond Edition of his Index Achilleus (30). He has acquainted me with the Miſtake of the Sieur du Soubait. He does not mention it in his Book, as he mentions that of Dauſquejus. 'Quam (Briſeïda) Dauſquejus oſcitanter cum Chry'ſeïde confundit, Not. ad Sil. Ital. lib. xv. pag. 656. (31). —— Whom (Briſeïs) Dauſquejus care'leſly confounds with Chryſeïs.' Theſe are Dauſquejus's Words, 'Agamemnon in Achillem fuit in'jurius abrepta Chryſeïde ejus captiva. —— Aga'memnon did wrong to Achilles in taking away his 'Priſoner Chryſeïs.

(28) Homer, Iliad. lib. i. ver. 337.

(29) Homer ſays ſo in expreſs words, Iliad. lib. xix. ver. 291.

(30) See concerning the firſt Edition of that Work, Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Savans, Janv. 1693, pag. 511, and the Dutch Journal intitled Boekzaal van Europe, September 1693, pag. 286; concerning the ſecond ſee the Journal of Mr Chauvin, intitled Nouveau Journal des Sçavans dreſſé a Rotterdam par les Sieur C°°°, July and Auguſt, 1694, pag. 438; and concerning the third, the Journal des Sçavans of Jan. 6. 1698, pag. 8.

(31) Drelincourt. in Indice Achilleo. n. 184. pag. 63. Edit. 2.

BRISSOT (PETER), one of the moſt able Phyſicians of the XVIth Century, was the Son of an Advocate of great Repute, and was born at Fontenai-le-Comte, in Poitou, in the Year 1478. About the Year 1495, he was ſent to Paris, where he went through a Courſe of Philoſophy under Villemor, one of the moſt famous Profeſſors of thoſe times. It was by the Advice of that Profeſſor that he reſolved to be a Phyſician: He ſtudied Phyſic there four Years, and then began to teach Philoſophy in the Univerſity of Paris (a). After he had done it for the ſpace of ten Years, he left it off to prepare himſelf for the Examinations, which he was to undergo at Paris, before he could be admitted Doctor of Phyſic. He began to prepare himſelf for it in 1512, and took his Doctor's Degree the Twenty ſeventh of May, 1514. Being one of thoſe Men, that are not contented with Cuſtom and Tradition, but will examine Matters carefully, he made an exact Compariſon between the Practice of thoſe Times, and the Doctrine of Hippocrates and Galen; and he found that the Arabians had introduced many things into the Practice of Phyſic, that were contrary to the ancient and true Method of curing Diſeaſes, and to the Doctrine of thoſe two great Maſters, as alſo to the Knowledge that Reaſon and Experience might furniſh. He therefore went about to reform Phyſic, I mean to re-eſtabliſh the Precepts of Hippocrates and Galen, and to explode the Doctrines of the Arabians. It was almoſt impoſſible, at that time, to imagine another Reformation. Firſt of all, he undertook publickly to explain

(a) In 1502.

Galen's

Galen's Books, instead of those of Avicenna, Rhasis, and Mesuë, that were commonly explained in the Schools of Physic. He caused one of Galen's Works to be printed at his own Charge (b), according to the Edition and Translation of Leonicenes, and explained it so learnedly, that he made it appear, that the Arabian Physicians understood nothing of it. Then he proceeded to the Explication of another Piece of Galen (c), and to that of John Mesuë (d). He mistrusted this last Explication, either because he was ignorant of Botanics, or by reason of that Physician's Obscurity. He resolved therefore to travel, in order to acquire the knowledge of Plants, and put himself in a capacity of reforming Pharmacy. But, before he left the City of Paris, he made the Public sensible of an inveterate Error. The constant Practice of Physicians, in the Pleurisy, was to bleed, not on the side where the Distemper was, but on the opposite Side; I mean, that, if the Pleurisy was on the left Side, they let Blood in the right Arm, and vice versa. Brissot had a Disputation about it in the Schools of Physic, confuted that Practice, and shewed that it was falsely pretended to be consonant to the Doctrine of Hippocrates, and Galen. Moreover, he made use of a quite contrary Practice, the Success whereof proved wonderful, and by that means he suppressed that Abuse. Brissot being fully resolved to travel, even as far as the new World, if there was occasion, left Paris in the Year 1518, and went into Portugal. He stopped there in the City of Ebora, where he practised Physic. His new way of bleeding in the Pleurisy did not please every body; but he justified it by a learned Apology, which he wrote in answer to a long and disobliging Letter he had received from a Physician (e). He would have published that Apology, if Death had not prevented it, in the Year 1522 [A]. His Friend Antony Luceus (f) caused it to be printed three Years after at Paris. It was re-printed at Basil in the Year 1529. Renatus Moreau published a new Edition of it at Paris, in the Year 1622, with a Treatise of his own, De missione sanguinis in Pleuritide, and the Life of Brissot, out of which I have taken this Article. The Endeavours that were used to suppress the Practice, which this French Physician endeavoured to introduce in Portugal, deserve a Reflexion [B]. Brissot composed some other Books, but the Manuscripts were lost. He would never marry, being of opinion, that Marriage did not well agree with the Muses (g). He cared so little for Gain, that it is said, that, when he was called to any sick Person, he looked into his Purse, and, if he found but two Testoons in it, he refused the Practice. He loved his study so well, that it was difficult to take him from it (b).

(b) Opus θεραπείας ad Glauconem.

(c) Viz. περὶ τῆς τέχνης ἰατρικῆς.

(d) He explained it in private, [privatim], to the Apothecaries.

(e) His Name was Denys, and he was Physician to the King of Portugal.

(f) A Native of Ebora.

(g) Cœlebs vixit connubii tædia vitans, quocum & Musis perpetuum dissidium interesse dictitabat. Ren. Moreau in ejus vita.

(b) Laboris tam patiens, studii tam avidus, ut libris tanquam suis Polypus adhæreret. Id. ibid.

[A] His Death prevented it in the Year 1522.] Merklinus is therefore in the wrong, to say that he flourished under Clement VII (1); for that Pope was not elected before 1523. The Author, whom I censure here, has forgot the first Edition of Brissot's Apology. It is that of Paris, printed for Simon Colinet, in 1525, instead of which he mentions one in the Year 1538, printed for the same, and at the same Place, and altogether unknown to the curious Renatus Moreau; which might in some manner make it suspected of Falsity.

(1) Merklinus in Linden. renov. ex Justo in Chronol. Medicorum.

(2) Moreau says, that Town belonged to the Portuguese at that time. He is mistaken, and I believe that University was pitched upon only for it's great Reputation, there being yet no University in Portugal. Mr Baudrand informs me, that this Fault of Moreau is very gross, and that Salamanca never belonged to the Kings of Portugal, having been always of the Kingdom of Leon, ever since the expulsion of the Moors from those parts.

[B] The Endeavours that were used to suppress his Method in Portugal deserve a Reflexion.] The Dispute between Denys and Brissot raised a kind of Civil-War among the Portuguese Physicians. The Business was brought before the Tribunal of the University of Salamanca (2), where it was thoroughly discussed by the Faculty of Physic; but whilst they were examining the Reasons pro and con, the Partizans of Denys had recourse to an Expedient which seldom fails those who are the strongest: they bore down the others by the Authority of the Secular Power, and obtained a Decree forbidding Physicians to bleed in the same side in which the Pleurisy was. At last the University of Salamanca gave their Judgment, importing that the Opinion ascribed to Brissot was the true Doctrine of Hippocrates and Galen. The Followers of Denys appealed to Cæsar about the Years 1529. They thought themselves superior both in Authority and Number, so that the matter was brought before Charles V. They were not contented to call the Doctrine of their Adversaries false, but they said moreover that it was impious and mortal, and as pernicious to the Body as Luther's Schism to the Soul. They did not only blacken their Adversary's Reputation by private Arts, but also openly accused them of Ignorance and Rashness, of attempting on Religion, and of being downright Lutherans in Physic. It fell out unluckily for them that Charles III, Duke of Savoy, happened to die of a Pleurisy, after he had been bled according to the Practice which Brissot had opposed. Had it not been for this, the Emperor, as it is thought, would have granted every thing that Brissot's Antagonists desired of him. But though that Accident should have made the good Cause triumph, no other Good resulted from it, but that the thing remained undecided. It is true that from that time several Books were published all over Europe on that Question, wherein the Practice of the Arabians was highly condemned (3). Renatus Moreau, in the Work which I have cited, gives a very curious List of those Books, and of those wherein that Practice was approved. But who would not admire, on the one side, the Infatuation of Men, in favour of the Opinions commonly received, though they be ever so ill grounded; and on the other side the Readiness of Magistrates to declare for or against certain Remedies: for since it happens but too often that they condemn some, which in time are generally approved, for very good Reasons grounded upon Experience, it may be said that they judged without Knowledge, being led away by the most noisy and violent Cabal? Antimony is a Proof of what I say. See Furetiere's Dictionary (4).

An Instance of the ill Custom of interesting Religion into the Disputes of the Learned, to alarm the People and the Magistrates.

(3) Ex vita Brissoti per Renatum Moreau.

(4) At the Word Antimoine.

BRITANNICUS (John), an Italian, was one of the best Scholars of the XVth Century. He was born at Palazzolo, near Brescia. He published Notes on some Classical Authors, on Persius, Terence, Statius, Ovid, and Juvenal; some Rules of Grammar, several little Tracts, and Letters, and a Panegyric upon Bartholomew Cajetan, a brave and learned Man (a). Britannicus taught with great Application: He did it long enough at Brescia, to acquire the Method and Practice of teaching a Form. He died in that City in the Year 1510 [A]. When he dedicated his Commentary on Juvenal to the Senate and City of Brescia, he gave a reason for it, which was, that the Commentaries, he had already dedicated to them, had procured him a considerable Present [B]. Was not this asking for another? Those who have said that he was the first who commented upon that Poet are very much mistaken [C]. He took the Name of Britannicus because his Ancestors were of Great Britain (b).

(a) Leonardo Cozzando, della Libraria Bresciana, pag. 155.

(b) Ghilini, Teatr. d'Huom. Illustri, Parte I, pag. 78.

[A] He died ----- in the Year 1510.] Who would believe this, when he reads in a Work printed in the Year 1545, Joannes Britannicus claret in civitate Brixiana, & varia composit opuscula (1). ----- Joannes Britannicus flourishes in the City of Brescia, and writes several Works. 'Honcit 'Gesner. [will some say] had found these Words in 'some Book wherein they were true, and, without thinking that the time was altered, transcribed them Word for Word. It were better to 'write fewer Books, and to take the Pains to accommodate to the present time what our Predecessors said.' I answer that he had this from Trithemius, and that his Preface may hinder any body from being deceived in it. Ghilini's Mistake is more gross; he believed that Paul Manutius flourished at the same time as Britannicus did. 'Non li fu difficil cosa non solo d'aggugliare il 'valore di Paolo Manucci ----- ma di superarlo 'ancora (2). ----- It was not hard for him not 'only to equal the Merit of Paulus Manutius ---- 'but even to exceed it.'

(1) Bibliot. Oseri, fol. 393.

(2) Ghilini, Teatr. Parte I, pag. 78.

[B] His Dedications had procured him a considerable Present.] These are his Words: 'Quod 'autem lucubrationes meas vobis amplissimi Patres dicandas esse censuerim, illud me maxime impulit quod memineram superioribus annis quum in 'Achilleida Statii, & Satyras Persii commentarios 'edidissem, vobisque nuncupassem alteros, ita placitos fuisse, ut me non mediocris solum laus & 'gratulatio vestra secuta sit, sed insuper AMPLISSIMUM MIHI MUNUS publico totius Senatus-consulto decretum fuerit (3). ---- But what moved 'me, Most Noble Fathers, to dedicate my Lucubrations to you was this, that I remember some Years 'ago, when I published Notes on the Achilleid of Statius 'and the Satires of Persius, and dedicated the latter 'to you, you were so pleased that I not only had 'great Commendation and Thanks from you, but 'further, a very handsome Present was decreed 'me by a public Act of the Senate.'

(3) Britann. Epistol Dedicat. Juvenal.

[C] Those who have said that he was the first who commented upon Juvenal, are very much mistaken.] Cælius Secundus Curio published some Notes on that Poet in the Year 1551. He declares that he found it a very laborious Piece of work, because none but Britannicus had yet explained that Author. 'Unum modo Joannem Britannicum habuit 'explicatorem, qui quamvis illa ætate eruditissimus 'fuerit, non tamen Poëtæ sensum est assecutus: 'neque mirum, fuit primus, neminem habuit quem 'sequeretur (4). ---- He has had only one Ex- 'positor, who though he was a very learned Man 'at that time, yet did he not hit the Sense of the 'Poet; and no wonder, for he was the first, and 'had no body to follow.' It is a greater Fault than is commonly believed, not to read the Prefaces and the Epistles Dedicatory. But especially those that write Books are very much in the wrong not to read them: if Curio had read the Epistle Dedicatory of Britannicus, he would not have given out such an inexcusable Falsity. Britannicus acknowledges that some learned Interpreters had commented upon Juvenal before him: 'Juvenalis Satyras 'etsi temporibus nostris à nonnullis aliis egregie litera'tis commentatoribus vel cum magna ipsorum laude 'enarratæ fuerant, aggressi sumus, quod omnino 'animadverteremus in toto opere multa ab iis sive 'incuria quadam, sive consulta opera prætermitti 'esse (5). ----- I have attempted the Satires of 'Juvenal, notwithstanding they have been explained in 'our time by some other learned Commentators, with 'great Reputation, because I have observed through 'the whole Work that they have omitted many 'things either through Negligence or Design.'

(4) C. Sec Curio in Epistola nuncupatoria.

(5) Britann. In Epist. Dedicator. Juvenal.

BROCARDUS (JAMES), an Apocalyptical Author, and one of the honest Visionaries of the XVIth Century, was a Venetian (a). He embraced the Protestant Religion, and expressed a great Zeal against Popery. He published several Books in Holland [A], wherein he maintained that the particular Events of the XVIth Century had been foretold by the Prophets. After he had applied the Oracles of the Scripture according to his Fancy to things already happened, he took the liberty to apply them to future Events, and, by virtue of such and such Passages, he foretold that such and such a thing would happen to the Prince of Orange, Philip II, Queen Elizabeth, the Emperor, &c. The Synods of the United Provinces were afraid, not without reason, that People would think they approved those extravagant Notions, if they were wholly silent about them. Wherefore the National Synod of Middleburg condemned, in 1581, that Method of explaining the Scripture, and enjoined Lambert Daneau, Professor of Divinity at Leyden, and Martin Lydius, Minister of the Church of Amsterdam (b), to speak to Brocard about his Visions. The Author, from whom I have this, thinks he remembers that Brocard, not being able to answer the Objections raised against his System, promised to leave off meddling with such Prophecies (c). That Visionary had inveigled a French Gentleman, who was a good Protestant [B], so as to persuade him by I know not how many

(a) Vignier, in the Theatre de l'Antechrist, Partie I, cap. 20. Where he lets him Salva pinus; and Spondan a, Pedemontanus.

(b) He was afterwards Professor at Franeker.

(c) Voetius, Disput. Theologic. Tom. II, p. 1075, who quotes the Preface of Lambert Daneau's Commentary on the Minor Prophets.

[A] He published several Books in Holland.] His Commentary on St John's Revelations, and his Mystical and Prophetical Explication of Leviticus, came out at Leyden, in the Year 1580. Two other Books, Liber ad Christianos de Prophetia quæ nunc completur in his quæ sunt secundi adventus Domini; liber ad Hebræos de prima & secundo ejusdem adventu, were printed at Leyden about the same time (a). We shall see hereafter (b) at whose Charges those Books came out of the Press. If the Author had not wrote in Latin, it might be thought strange, that no Bookseller would venture to be at the charge of printing them: for such Works in the Vulgar Tongue sell well enough in troublesome Times, or when great Changes are desired. His Treatise De Antibaptismo jurantium in Papam & in Ecclesiam Romanam, deque earum idolo zeli, was printed at Leyden, in the Year 1580, and contains Seventy seven Pages in 8vo. I shall speak hereafter of his Commentary on Genesis. See the Titles of some other Treatises in the Remark [C].

(a) Vide Voetium Disput. Tom. II, pag. 1075.

(b) In the Remark [B].

[B] He had inveigled a French Gentleman, a good Protestant.] His Name was Segur-Pardaillan. 'Jacobus Segurius Pardallanius, è præcipua Aquitaniæ nobilitate, homo Calvinisticæ factioni addictus (3). ----- Jacobus Segurius Pardallianus 'one of the principal Nobility in Guienne, a Man 'of the Calvinistic Faction.' It is a very Illustrious Family in Guienne. Thuanus speaks of him thus: 'Segurius

(3) Thuan. lib. lxxix. ad Ann. 1583. pag. 500.

many Paſſages of the Scripture, which he explained in his way, that a Proteſtant Prince would quickly overthrow the Pope's Throne, and make himſelf the Head of all the United Chriſtians. That Gentleman, who was a faithful Servant to the King of Navarre, thought Heaven deſigned the King his Maſter for ſuch a glorious Enterprize, and, big with theſe hopes, propoſed to him to ſend an Embaſſy to the Proteſtant Princes, offering to be his Embaſſador. There being nothing in his Propoſal but what ſuited with the Neceſſities of the Time, it was approved of, and he was actually deputed to thoſe Princes (d). He was a little ridiculed when it came to be known by what Motive he was influenced, and for what reaſon he had been at the Charge of printing the Books of his Prophet (e). Here is an Inſtance of what ſuch People can do; they will occaſion the attempting of a thouſand things, which no body would think of; they are perfect Incendiaries. Doubtleſs many of them are no Impoſtors; they are infatuated with their Notions; they believe what they foretel: but ſome of them deſign only to cauſe Wars and Inſurrections; they have more Wit than Honeſty, and are the plague of Mankind. I do not think that Brocard was a Man of that Stamp. The Catholic Writers abuſe him at a ſtrange rate [C]; the Proteſtants are tender of his Reputation [D]: but the National Synod of Rochelle, in 1581, gave him no quarter [E]. I find (d) In the Year 1583.

(e) See the Remark [B].

' Segurius homo probo & vivaci nec inerudito ingenio, ceterum credulo, ante aliquot annos, dum ' in Belgio eſſet, arctam familiaritatem cum Jacobo Brocardo Subalpino coluerat, vaticinationum ' argutias ad inſaniam ſectante, cujus & ſcripta ' hujuſmodi vanitatis plena ille poſtea ſumptibus ' ſuis publicanda curavit. Ab eo cum accepiſſet, ' locis ſcripturæ, ut dictis fidem faceret, ad id detortis, fore, ut non ita multos poſt annos Pontifex à principe Proteſtante de ſede deturbaretur, ' iſque princeps caput concordiæ Chriſtianæ futurus eſſet, eum principem inſito erga herum ſuum ' affectu protinus Navarrum fore ſibi perſuaſerat, ' eoque majore ſtudio & ardore pro auctoritate, ' qua in aula Navarri pollebat, legationem eam, ' cui & obeundæ ſe obtulit, promovit, quæ alioqui abſque hoc ſecreto ridiculo, quod tandem ' emanavit, & ab adverſariis poſtea in Germania ' illi improperatum eſt, tanquam in ſpeciem utilis ' & neceſſaria multis probatur (4). —— Segurius, ' a Man of a good and lively Genius, not unlearned but credulous, ſome Years ago, when he was in the Netherlands, cultivated a cloſe Familiarity with James Brocard, a Subalpine, a Man fond of the Secrets of Prophecy even to Maduſs, whoſe Books, ſtuffed with theſe kind of Vanities, he afterwards publiſhed at his own Expence. Having learned from him by ſundry Places of Scripture wreſted to that Purpoſe, in order to gain Credit, that the Pope was in a few Years to be overthrown by a Proteſtant Prince: and that That Prince ſhould become head of all Chriſtianity united; he, out of hearty Affection to his Maſter, immediately judged that That Prince ſhould be the King of Navarre; and he more zealouſly and induſtriouſly uſed all the Intereſt he had therefore in the Court of Navarre to promote that Embaſſy, which he offered himſelf to undertake, which, if it had not been for this ridiculous Secret, which was at laſt diſcovered, by the oppoſite Party, who upbraided him with it in Germany, is thought by many to have been otherwiſe uſeful and neceſſary to amuſe his Enemies.' Surely, ſays David, Men of low degree are Vanity, and Men of high degree are a Lie (5).

(4) Id. ibid.

(5) Pſal. lxii, 9.

[C] The Catholic Writers abuſe him at a ſtrange rate.] Martin del Rio maintained, That James Brocard was the Devil's Inſtrument, and that his Revelations were diabolical. ' Quid quæſo aliud eſt ' liber ille manuſcriptus Jacobi Brocardi Calviniſtæ ' revelationum ad Elizabetham Angliæ Reginam, ' & Præfatio in Geneſim, aliaque nonnulla ejuſdem ' opuſcula, niſi farrago quædam dæmoniacarum revelationum, quarum præcipuam de anno 1580, ' jam tempus mendacii convicit (6)? —— What elſe I pray is that Manuſcript of Revelation to Queen Elizabeth, by James Brocard, the Calviniſt, and his Preface to Geneſis, and ſome other Works of his of that kind, but a heap of deviliſh Revelations; the principal of which, concerning the Year 1510, Time has already proved to be falſe.' We learn from this Paſſage, that ſome Manuſcript Copies of the Revelations, which this Man inſcribed to Queen Elizabeth, were handed about, and that his chief Prediction concerned the Year 1580, and proved falſe: I would fain know what it was. We have ſeen that Thuanus does not ſpare that Myſtical Commentator. Spondanus, who gives the ſubſtance of what Thuanus ſays concerning Pardaillan's Embaſſy, is no leſs ſatirical: ' Qui (Segurius) cum ante aliquot annos in Belgio ' à Jacobo Brocardo Pedemontano inepto & fatuo ' hariolo (cujus & ſcripta inanium vaticinationum ' plena edita fuere) accepiſſet ſore non ita multos ' poſt annos ut Romanus Pontifex à principe quodam Calviniſtarum de ſede deturbaretur, iſque ' Caput concordiæ Chriſtianæ futurus eſſet, &c (7): ' —— Who (Segurius) having learned ſome Years before in Holland, from James Brocard, a Piedmontois, a ſilly fooliſh Predictor, (who was alſo Author of ſome Pieces full of empty Predictions, which have been publiſhed) that in a few Years the Pope ſhould be pulled down from his See by a Calviniſt Prince, who ſhould become Head of the Chriſtian League, &c.' He laughs at Pardaillan's Credulity, and ſays, that a Piece was publiſhed at Ingolſtadt againſt his Deputation, entitled Incendium Calvinianum (8). He is ſo ingenuous as to confeſs that there are ſome Fanatics in his Communion, who put upon great Deſigns, and fill with vain Hopes, thoſe that truſt to their Promiſes, and he gives a freſh Inſtance of it. He names no body; but if I am not very much miſtaken, he means Charles Emanuel, Duke of Savoy. All this is to be found in a long Parentheſis; for long Parentheſes are but too common with him. ' Id etiam ' teſtimoniis Sacræ Scripturæ firmans, he ſpeaks of James Brocard, (quales fuerunt ſingulis ſæculis ' qui ejuſmodi ſua deliria apertiſſimis ſibi, ut ſingunt, ſed occultiſſimis aliis ſcripturæ auctoritatibus falciare non dubitarunt: & fuit non ita pridem ' vir apud nos probæ ac religioſæ vitæ magnique ' apud eos qui ejus opera utebantur habitus, qui ' ſimilibus fanaticis perſuaſionibus, ex Joannis Apocalypſi ſomniatis, nobilem principem in grandes ' impenſas vana ſpe cujuſdam imperii conjecit, qui ' tamen nec parvum ſuum ſtatum defendere potuit, ' & fere omnium rerum inops mortuus eſt) (9). - - - ' Confirming this alſo by Teſtimonies of Holy Writ, (ſuch there have been in all Ages who do not ſtick to build ſuch like Whimſies of their own on certain Scripture Authorities, which as they pretend are plain to them, but moſt obſcure to every body elſe: there was lately in our Country, a Man of a good and religious Life, and a very uſeful Man to thoſe who ſtood in need of his Aſſiſtance, who having formed the like fanatical Dreams out of St John's Revelation, cauſed a noble Prince to put himſelf to great Charge in vain hopes of a certain Empire, who could not ſo much as defend his own little State, and died in want of almoſt every thing). Florimond de Remond inſults poor James Brocard very rudely. See the following Remark

(6) Mart. del Rio, Diſquiſ. Magicar. lib. iv cap. 3 queſt. iii. ſect. vi. pag. 197, 198.

(7) Spondan Annal. Eccleſ. ad Ann. 1583. n. 9.

(8) The Jeſuits, ſays Thuanus, lib. lxxix. pag. 503, were the Authors of that Piece. They ſuppoſed ex omnia Navarro ab Artuſionenſi infinuata hujus teliæ textore, quo cladem quam rebus ſuis pertimeſcebat, excitato in Gallia & Germania motu, à ſe averteret.

(9) Spond. Annal. Eccleſ. ad An. 1583. n. 9.

[D] The Proteſtants are tender of his Reputation.] Voëtius rejects the Opinion of Brocard, who believed that the HOLY GHOST denotes all ſorts of Events by one ſole literal Senſe, which may be a thouſand

I find in Bongar's Letters, that our James Brocard retired to Nuremberg, where he met with some charitable Patrons, who did him very good Offices [F]. He had not yet received, in 1593, the Three hundred Crowns which Segur left him by his Will (f). He was still living in 1594. The Writers of the League took advantage of his Predictions; but they committed two Faults, of which Mr du Plessis Mornai quickly informed the Public [G].

(f) See the Remark [F].

We have already seen, in general (g), that Florimond de Remond treated him ill; but in this new Edition I shall insert his own Words [H].

(g) In the Remarks [C] and [D].

thousand times mystically applied to particular Occurrences; but he adds, that he was otherwise a good Man, very orthodox and pious. 'Fuit hic 'Brocardus cætera vir probus, orthodoxiæ ac pietatis studiosus, uti videre est ex libello ipsius, tit. 'De Antibaptismo jurantium in Papam & Ecclesiam 'Romanam, deque eorum idolo zeli (10). —— This 'Brocard was otherwise an honest Man, a Lover of Orthodoxy and Piety, as appears from his Book, intituled, De Antibaptismo, &c.' Nicolas Vignier goes farther, for he grants, That in some things he had the real Gift of Prophecy. These are his Words: 'I must say something of James Brocard, a Vene'tian, who is very much abused by Remond. It 'were to be wished, that this Man, who was no 'Ecclesiastic, had not been so forward to publish 'his Thoughts upon the Holy Scripture. For tho' 'he does not depart from the Purity of the Gospel 'Doctrine, and the Analogy of Faith, yet he too 'frequently lays aside the true meaning of the 'Words, and the literal Sense, to run into mystical 'Interpretations. Nevertheless, forasmuch as GOD's 'Power is infinite, and he imparts his Gifts to whom 'he pleases, those who have been familiarly ac'quainted with the said Brocard, witness that he 'had wonderful Revelations of particular things, the 'Truth whereof was confirmed by the Event, as 'the Venetians, among others, experienced by the 'loss of Cyprus, and of their Arsenal, as he had 'foretold them (11).'

(10) Voetius disput. Theol. Tom. II, pag. 1075.

(11) Vignier, Theatre de l'Architect, Partie I. cap. xxii. p. 339.

[E] The National Synod of Rochelle, in 1581, gave him no quarter.] That Assembly drew up an Act importing, That having seen and examined a Latin Book upon Genesis, written by James Brocard, a Piedmontese, and printed at Rochelle, they have declared, and do declare, that it is full of Impiety and horrid Profanations of the Holy Scripture, and pernicious Errors, especially about Revelations and Prophecies: And that therefore they exhort all the Faithful to beware of being deceived by such a Book (12). Here is a Synod much more vigorous than that which was held at Middleburg in the same Year. What might be the Reason of this Difference? Are the French less moderate than the Dutch? This Reason cannot be alledged; for I could instance some Synods, wherein the French Spirit prevailed, that shewed a greater Moderation than that of Middleburg. Perhaps some will say, that Brocard was in Holland, when these two Synods condemned him; which was the Reason why he had some Friends at Middleburg, and none at Rochelle: but I would advise no body to rest satisfied with such a Solution.

(12) See Mr Quick's Synodicon in Gallia Reformata.

[F] He retired to Nuremberg, where he met with charitable Patrons, who did him very good Offices.] Bongars praises their Charity, and the Person to whom they were so kind. 'I hear, says he in a 'Letter to Camerarius (13), that your Republic has 'kindly received the good old Man J. Brocard, 'who in his Youth appeared among the most polite 'and learned Men. I have been lately well pleased 'to see him in your Town, and am obliged to Mr 'Bongar for it. By this means you heap up for 'yourselves a Treasure in Heaven.' This he wrote the third of February 1591. He expresses the same Affection for Brocard, in a Letter of the sixteenth of November 1594. 'Non possum quin & tibi gra'tias agam ob miserum, bonum tamen, senem Bro'cardum tam benigne & liberaliter habitum (14). —— I cannot but even thank you for your kind 'and generous Treatment of the poor, but good, old Brocard.' 'I am mightily pleased (says he in another Letter dated from Francfort the Twenty 'fourth of July 1593 (15), with the great Affection 'you express for M. Brocard. He does certainly 'deserve that some Persons, of such a Probity as 'your's is, should take care of him. As for me, I 'am hardly in a Capacity to oblige him. I leave no 'Stone unturned to procure him the Payment of 'Three hundred Gold Crowns, which Mr Segur 'left him by his Will.'

(13) Bongars Letter vi, to Camerar. pag. 129. Tom. I. printed at the Hague, 1695.

(14) Id. Epist. lxxxiii. Tom. II. pag. 335.

(15) Id. Epist. lxix. pag. 302.

[G] The Writers of the League ----- committed two Faults, of which Mr du Plessis Mornai informed the Public.] They mentioned Segur's Embassy among the Expedients which the King of Navarre made use of after the Death of the Duke of Anjou, to secure his Succession to the Crown of France. 'He has sent, said he (16), Segur Par'daillan, one of his Gentlemen, into Germany, 'Sweden, Denmark, and England, to renew the 'ancient Confederacies he has contracted with all 'the Heretics, and to make new ones, and set all 'his Friends against you, that being assisted with 'their Forces he may usurp a Crown, from which 'he is excluded by Reason. To this he has been 'instigated by the Minister Brocard, a Trumpet 'of Satan, who, being out of his Wits, is fully 'persuaded, and has made him believe, that he is 'spoken of in the Revelations, and that he is to 'be King of France, and to expel the Pope from 'his See.' Mr du Plessis Mornai answered, that Segur was sent Embassador a Year before the Duke of Anjou died, and that his Highness was then in very good Health. ----- Note, adds he (17), that Brocard is an old Italian, who neither is, nor ever was, a Minister, who was condemned by their Synods, who never saw the King of Navarre, nor ever set his Foot in France. He does not deny Segur's Credulity, nor Brocard's prophetical Fancies; he answers nothing upon that Head. One may conclude from his Silence, and from a Passage of d'Aubigné, that those things were real Matter of Fact. D'Aubigné's Words are these: 'Some body proposed 'the Opinion of the late Segur, who said, That 'Madmen are accounted Prophets in Turkey, and 'that every thing went on prosperously in that 'Country; so that France would be in a happy 'State, if Brocard's Prophecies were more credi'ted (18).'

(16) Avertissement des Catholiques Anglois aux François Catholiques, p. 33.

(17) Du Plessis Memoires, Tom. I. pag. 631.

(18) Baron de Fœneste, Book III. chap. xxii. pag. 179.

[H] I shall here insert the Words of Florimond de Remond.] 'They are Persons, who --- have had, 'as they say, Inspirations from Heaven, like this 'new Prophet, James Brocard, of whom a Gen'tleman of our Guienne (19) has formerly told me 'several strange things. He revered him as a 'second St Paul, and had such Confidence in him, 'that he reckoned the ruin of the Church already 'certain; this poor Man built on that the hopes of 'his Fortune, when I told him that these were 'Rêveries: these Rêveries, says he, are no less 'than the best digested Thoughts of the greatest 'Man that has been these several Centuries. Not 'long ago one of my Friends, who cannot yet shake 'off that Opinion, entertained me pleasantly with 'the Sallies and Whimsies of that Spirit which had 'filled their Heads with a Notion of a great Battle, 'which was to be fought on the Rhine, where the 'Catholic Name was to be entirely extinguished. 'On the Descent of that great and terrible Army 'of so many thousand Pistoleer Reisters, Suiss, and Lansquenets, who came to fall upon us; they ex'pected to see the Accomplishment of their Pro'phecy, on the Banks, not of the Rhine, but of the 'Loire, where GOD stopped their Progress. These 'are nothing but Rêveries and Nonsense like those 'of the Protestants in the Year 1546, which Are'tius himself laughed at, as our pretended Reformed 'do at what Brocard foretold should happen in the 'Year 1580, which was promised, as he said, by 'Jeremiah. In order to see what this Brocard was 'of whom they made so great Account, I took the 'Pains, or rather I put myself on the Rack, to read 'his Works; for what greater Torture is there, than 'to see Books from which, after a great deal of 'Pains and Sweat, you can learn nothing, nor gain 'any thing but the Trouble? ------ Such is this 'Brocard ------ after I had carefully read him 'over

(19) Segur Pardaillan. See Remarks [B] and [C].

'over and over, and not found a single Page in 'which he does not mention Antichrist; I could at 'last learn nothing unless it be this, that some Phren-'sy seized him at Venice, in the Year 1583, which 'he calls a Vision, or Revelation of the HOLY 'GHOST, when, coming from a Debauch, he set 'himself to read to the Bible. Whereupon he tells 'a thousand Whimsies of the Spirit that appeared 'to him, and how he was carried to the Inquisi-'tion, which is nothing else, says he, but the Abo-'mination of Desolation foretold by Daniel and 'St Paul. He does not say how he got out, or 'whether he promised to be wiser for the time to 'come. Scarce all the Hellebore, that Anticyra ever 'produced, would have sufficed to cure this distem-'pered Brain, which has formed a Notion of a second 'coming of the Son of GOD, in this Century, and 'a thousand other Rêveries, which were revealed 'to him by an Angel that GOD sent to him, as 'he has said both in his Notes on Genesis, and in 'a Discourse dedicated to the Queen of England, 'which I have seen in Manuscript (20).'

(20) Florim. de Remond. de l'Antichrist, cap. ix, n. 5, fol. 53.

BRODEAU (JOHN), in Latin Brodæus, born at Tours, was a learned Critic. He flourished in the XVIth Century. His chief Works are, a Commentary upon the Anthologia, ten Books of Miscellanies, Notes upon Oppian, Euripides, &c. Consult Moreri's Dictionary; but observe the Faults he has committed, which I shall take notice of [A]. Lipsius falsely believed that Brodæus was a young Man [B]: He had more reason to be sorry that he was not celebrated in proportion to his Merit. I must observe, that, if he was Sixty three Years of age when he died in 1563, as Sammarthanus affirms, Sigismund Gelenius had been wrong informed concerning his Age, for he makes him but Twenty nine Years old in 1594, and makes this a ground for greater Commendations [C]. I am now prepared to give a Supplement touching the Nobleness of his Extraction [D]. If I did not observe it before, nor the Merit of some of his Relations, it was because I referred to Moreri, who has made ample mention of them, and I could add nothing to what he has said.

[A] Observe the Faults of Moreri, which I shall take notice of.] I. If Brodæus died in 1563, being Sixty three Years of Age, as Moreri affirms, after Scævola Sammarthanus, he did not live in the XVth Century; and yet Moreri says he did. II. He did not well understand the Latin Words of Sammarthanus concerning the learned Men with whom Brodæus contracted a Friendship in Italy. Brodæus went twice into that Country with the French Embassadors: He went to Venice in the Retinue of George de Selve, and to Rome in that of George d'Armagnac, and, during those two Journies, he contracted Acquaintance, and particular Friendship, with Sadolet, Egnatius, Bembus, Flaminius, and other Men eminent for their Learning. Hos Brodæus omnes PARTIM Venetiis PARTIM Romæ - - - - & vidit familiariter, & propter studiorum conjunctionem facile sibi conciliavit (1). Mr Moreri, instead of mentioning Brodæus's Stay at Venice and at Rome, as Sammarthanus does, ascribes all to his Stay at Rome. It was in the Capital City of the Christian World, says he, that Brodæus got the Friendship of Sadolet and Bembo, both Cardinals, and of Baptist Egnatius, and many learned Men. Those who know that Egnatius was Professor at Venice, and did not stir out of his House at that time, must needs own, that it had been better for Moreri to translate Sammarthanus faithfully. III. It was not by the Advice of those Illustrious Friends, that he applied himself to the Study of the Mathematics, and the Hebrew and Chaldaic Languages. What was Moreri dreaming of, when he found that pretended Advice in the Words of Sammarthanus, which signify only that Brodæus exceeded those Gentlemen, in that, besides polite Learning, which he cultivated as well as they; he understood also Mathematics, Hebrew and Chaldaic: 'Hoc 'etiam aliquanto superior, quod ad eas quibus 'pariter incumbebant elegantiores literas, ille & 'Mathematicas artes & Hebræam Chaldæamque 'linguam insuper adhiberet (2).' IV. Moreri should not have said, that he died in the beginning of the Civil Wars of Religion, but about the end of the first Civil Wars of that kind. Sub exitum primi civilis ob religionem belli cæpit levi tentari fabricula, sed ad extremum exitiali. These are Sammarthanus's Words, which, however easy, were not understood by Moreri. V. He grew old at Tours in St Martin's, which he called a College. So have been translated these Words of Thuanus, Apud B. Martinum cui Collegii nomen dederat - - - - - consenuit (3). It is certain, if a School-boy did not translate better, he would be laughed at by his Schoolfellows, and would well deserve Correction. This Blunder was not committed by Moreri, but by the good du Rier of the French Academy. Moreri only copied it from Mr Teissier (4). Thuanus means, that Brodæus grew old in St Martin's Church, where he was a Canon.

(1) Sammarthanus, Elog. lib. ii, pag. 125.

(2) Ibid.

(3) Thuan. lib. xxxv, pag. 785. ad Ann. 1563.

(4) Elog. tirez de Mr de Thou, Tom. I, p. 227.

[B] Lipsius falsly believed, that Brodæus was a young Man.] Colomesius made this Observation before me. Nescivit Lipsius Brodæum obiisse sexagenario majorem. Juvenis etiam vocatur a Claverio in Claud. 1602, pag. 9 (5). Lipsius did not know that Brodæus died above sixty Years of Age. He is also called a young Man by Claverius. These are Lipsius's Words: 'Joh. Brodæus hæc de Ulyssis 'errore in Miscellaneis scite coarguit: Brodæus, vir, 'sive adolescens potius, acris ingenii, probi judicii, 'lectionis diffusæ, quem non magis in ore famæ 'esse miror, imo indignor (6). - - - - - Brodæus, 'in his Miscellanies, has very well refuted all this 'concerning the wandering of* Ulysses: Brodæus is 'a Man, or rather a Youth, of an acute Genius, 'good Judgment, extensive reading: I wonder, nay 'am grieved, that he is not more famous.' The most learned Critics, Scaliger, Grotius, and many others, bestowed great Encomiums upon Brodæus (7); nevertheless it may be said, That some Writers, inferior to him in Learning, have been much more talked of; which, it may be, proceeded from his great Modesty, which hindered him from putting himself forward. See how Baptist Sapin Counsellor to the King praises him for his Modesty (8).

(5) Colomes. Gall. Orient. page 32.

(6) Lipf. in Germaniam Taciti.

(7) Colomés Gallie Orient. pag. 32, & 267; Sir Thomas Pope Blount censur. Author. p. 464, have collected them.

[C] Gelenius makes him but twenty nine Years of Age, in 1549, and makes this a Ground for greater Commendations.] It is in the Epistle dedicatory to Brodæus's Notes on the Epigrams in the Anthologia: this Epistle dedicatory is dated from Basil, the first of September, 1549; these are Gelenius's Words: 'Commentariorum Autor est juvenis mul-'tijugæ lectionis, idemque μνημονικώτατος. Joannes Brodæus, Turonensis, ut mirum sit in ejus 'ætatem tam variam exactamque omnis generis 'Librorum cognitionem cadere. Aiunt enim vix-'dum undetrigesimum annum ingressum. - - - - - 'The Author of these Commentaries is* John Brodæus of Tours, a young Man of great Variety 'of Reading, and an extraordinary Memory, that it 'is a Wonder so various and exact a Knowledge of 'Books of all kinds could be got at his Age; for 'they say he is scarce yet entered into his Twenty 'ninth Year.' 'I am almost twice his Age, adds 'he, and yet he has cited Authors of which I 'did not so much as know their Names.' The other Commendations which he bestows upon him are very exquisite.

(8) Præfat. in Brodæi notas ad Euripidem 1561, apud Colomesium, Gallie Orient. pag. 30.

[D] I am now prepared to give a Supplement touching the Nobleness of his Extraction.] JOHN BRODEAU, Marquis of Chattes and Candé, formerly a Justice in Eyre of the Woods and Forests in France, is the eldest of the Family. He retains the original Titles of the House, which first became Illustrious in Victor Brodæus, who was ennobled by Philip Auguſtus, in the Field before Aerſt, in Egypt, for his Father's and his own Glorious Actions (9). Peter Julian Brodeau, Lord of Marcheville, is the eldeſt of another Branch, who has been twelve or thirteen times at Sea in the King's Service in Quality of Commiſſary; he has been in ſeveral different Actions, and has been wounded in ſome of them, particularly at the Battle which the Mareſchal de Tourville gave to Papachin, Vice-Admiral of Spain (10). ------ He has for ſome Years quitted the Sea Service, and addicted himſelf to Letters (11); he publiſhed a new Syſtem of the Univerſe, in the Year 1702. You will find the Analyſis of it with great Commendations in the Mercure Galant, and alſo an Account of other Works which he intends to publiſh (12). You will find him there Author of a Work, intituled, Jeux d'Eſprit & de Memoire, of which above Six thouſand Copies have been printed in France (13); and alſo of another Book printed at Tours, in the Year 1703, and intituled, Moralitez curieuſes ſur les ſix premiers Jours de la Creation du Monde (14). ---- Curious moral Reflexions on the ſix firſt Days of the Creation of the World. JULIAN SIMON BRODEAU, his Brother, Lord of Oiſeville, heretofore Counſellor in the Parliament of Metz, is now Lieutenant-General at Tours (15); they are Sons of Julian Brodeau, who died Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris, the Twenty ſixth of March, 1702 (16); who was the Son of Julian Brodeau, that famous Advocate of Parliament, who, always preferring his Function before the moſt exalted ones of the Robe, choſe to die in it (17). He has publiſhed, among other Books, the Life of Charles du Moulin, and Notes on the Decrees of Loüet, which makes Bouleau ſay in his firſt Satire, Et feuilletant Loüet allegué par Brodeau, ---- And peruſing Loüet, prolonged by Brodeau. The Father of this Advocate was called Charles Brodeau, and was Advocate-General to Henry the Great, at that time King of Navarre, and Son of Francis Brodeau, Counſellor of State, and Maſter of Requeſts to Antony of Bourbon, King of Navarre (18).

(9) Mercure Gallant of the Month of May, 1702, pag. 164, 165.

(10) Idem. May, 1702, pag. 135.

(11) Idem. 186.

(12) Idem. 171.

(13) Id. Feb. 1703, p. 70, 72.

(14) Id. pag. 69.

(15) Idem. May 1702, pag. 91.

(16) Id. p. 163.

(17) Id. ibid.

(18) Id. p. 164.

BROSSE (JAMES de la), a great Warrior in the XVIth Century, was born in the Bourbonnois [A]. It is ſaid that he was thirty Years of Age, when he began to bear Arms (a). He quickly got a great ſkill in the Art of War, and acquired the Eſteem of Francis de Lorrain, Duke of Guiſe, whoſe Lieutenant-Colonel he afterwards was. He was made Governor of a Duke of Longueville (b), and then he was appointed, together with Sanſac, to watch over the Conduct of Francis II, and teach him good Maxims (c). Brantome ſays, that he was the mildeſt, and the moſt courteous Soldier that ever was ſeen, and that he gave his Advice in ſuch gentle and obliging Words, that every body eſteemed him for it; whereas Sanſac (d) was on the contrary a bectoring and churliſh Man, both in War and at Hunting (e). La Broſſe being entirely devoted to Meſſieurs de Guiſe, he was choſen to command Two thouſand Men, which were ſent into Scotland to the Queen-Regent their Siſter, in 1559 (f). He departed from his Character, which was Mildneſs and Clemency, and complied with the Humour of Cardinal de Lorrain [B], or rather he was obliged to act as he was directed by him. That proved very prejudicial to France, becauſe the Scotch, in concert with the Engliſh, made it their Buſineſs to get themſelves rid of his Troops. The French were beſieged in little Leith, and ſhewed as much Courage and Conduct as could be expected from Troops conſummate in the Art of (a) Brantome, apud le Laboureur's Additions to the Memoirs of Caſtelnau, Tom. II, pag. 96.

(b) Id. ibid.

(c) Id. Tom. II, pag. 97.

(d) Concerning the Difference of thoſe two Perſons, ſee Belcarius's Words in the Rem. [A].

(e) Brantome, cited by le Laboureur, Tom. II, pag. 97.

(f) Buchanan. rerum Scotic. lib. xvi, pag. 583.

[A] He was born in the Bourbonnois.] Le Laboureur, who knew ſo many Families, and Genealogies, owns (1), 'That he knows nothing of the 'Birth of this Mr de la Broſſe, becauſe there is 'nothing extant about it, and becauſe his Family was 'extinct by the Death of himſelf and his Son at the 'Battle of Dreux.' I have found by chance, in Belcarius's Hiſtory, what Province he was of. 'Franciſcus Rex præclaram indolis, cujus adoleſcentiæ moderandæ Jacobus Broſſianus Boius ac Sanſacus attributi erant, ille vir prudentiſſimus & rerum bellicarum peritiſſimus, iſte ingenio turbido, ſed non malo, id (2) non permiſiſſet, nam ſupra ætatem ſapere jam cœperat, ut mihi idem Broſſianus ſæpius confirmavit, eramus enim VICINI ac perfamiliares (3). ---- Francis, who was a King of 'an extraordinary Genius, whoſe Governors in his 'Youth were James de la Broſſe, of the BOURBONNOIS, and Sanſac, the former a very prudent 'Man, and well ſkilled in Military Affairs; the 'latter of a turbulent, but not evil, Diſpoſition, 'would never have ſuffered it; for he began then to 'have Underſtanding above his Age, as the ſaid la 'Broſſe has often told me, for we were NEIGHBOURS, and very intimate.' Mezeray was not ignorant that la Broſſe was a Native of that Country. 'The Earl of Lenox, ſays he (4), brought 'ſome Troops of Francis I into Scotland, in the 'Year 1543, but that young Man, having loſt their 'Muſter-Money at play, went into the Service of 'the King of England, who married him to his 'Niece. La Boſſe (5), a Gentleman of Bourbonnois was 'ſent in his Room, and then Lorges Earl of Montgo- 'mery.' Thus he ſpeaks under the Year 1545. He ſays under the Year 1559, That a Succour of three thouſand Men was ſent to the Queen Regent of Scotland, Commanded by la Broſſe, a Bourbonnois. I think he is in the wrong to believe, that this Gentleman was ſent thither before the Year 1545.

(1) Additions to Caſtelnau's Memoirs, Tom. II, pag. 96.

(2) To wit, that Catherine de Medicis ſhould govern the Kingdom.

(3) Belcar. lib. xxviii, n. 37, 52.

(4) Mezeral, Abr. Chron. Tom. IV, pag. 632.

(5) It is ſo ſpelt in the Dutch Edition; It ſhould be Broſſe.

[B] He complied with the Humour of the Cardinal of Lorrain.] Hear Mr le Laboureur: 'Henry Clutin, 'Lord of Ville-Pariſis, commonly called d'Orſel, who 'was ſent to her as her Lieutenant, and afterwards 'la Broſſe, though he was naturally inclined to 'Mildneſs, and Nicolas de Pelvé, Biſhop of Amiens, 'who were likewiſe ſent thither, exaſperated the 'People by their Maxims and bold Undertakings, being not ſufficiently ſupported by France, 'from whence they received more Counſels and 'Orders, than Money and Troops, but particularly from the Cardinal of Lorrain; who 'is accuſed of an Intention to carry things to 'the laſt Extremity with the ſame Boldneſs 'and Confidence he ſhewed in the Adminiſtration 'of Affairs in France (6).' One of la Broſſe's Maxims was, 'That in order to ſecure Scotland, 'it was neceſſary to ſettle in it a Colony of a 'thouſand French Gentlemen, who ſhould be put 'in Poſſeſſion of the Eſtates of thoſe, who were 'to be out-lawed on Account of Religion (7).' The Scotch, being informed that he had given ſuch Advice, conceived a great Averſion for the French. They diſcovered it by ſome intercepted Letters, if we may believe Buchanan. 'Labroſſius equeſtri 'loco natus, ſed (8) qui magnum in militari uſum 'habebat ---- cenſebat, omnem, ſine diſcrimine, 'Scotorum Nobilitatem eſſe extinguendam: in eorum autem prædiis mille Catafractos equites, Gallos, collocari poſſe: reliquam multitudinem ſervorum loco habendam. Id conſilium, literis ejus 'ad Gallum interceptis, divulgatum, mirum, quantum Gallorum odium, jam aliis de cauſis natum, auxit (9). ---- La Broſſe, who was Son of a Knight, but had great Experience in Military Affairs ---- was of opinion, that all the Nobility of Scotland ought to be cut off without Diſtinction: and a thouſand Frenchmen at Arms be placed on their Eſtates; *and that all the reſt ſhould be counted Slaves. This Advice being diſcovered by intercept-*ing

(6) Le Laboureur's Additions to Caſtelnau, Tom. I, p. 436.

(7) Mezeral, Vie de François II, pag. 26, Tom. III, of the Folio Edit.

(8) This ſed, [but] does not ſeem worthy of Buchanan; for Men of a noble Extraction do commonly apply themſelves to the Art of War.

(9) Buchan. rerum Scotic. lib. xvi, ſub fin.

of War (g); but at last they were obliged to capitulate, and to leave that Country for ever. La Brosse performed his Duty very well during the Siege, notwithstanding he was Seventy five Years old [C]. He was killed at the Battle of Dreux, with his Son, in the Year 1562 (b). He was Knight of the Order; and, if he had not been killed in that Battle, he would certainly have been made Marshal of France [D]; for he received the Pension of a Marshal from the time that he and Sanfac were appointed to attend King Francis II (i). None but he and Sanfac took care of the King's burial.

(g) See Brantome in his Encomium upon the Vicount de Martigues, who commanded in the place.

(b) See some curious Circumstances in the Remark [D].

(i) Brantome, in his Encomium upon the Marshal de Vieille-Ville.

' ing his Letters to France, most strangely encreased the Hatred which had been conceived against ' the French on other Accounts.' Belcarius does not deny that Pellevé and la Brosse advised to confiscate the Estates of the Calvinists Gentlemen, and to give them to a thousand French Gentlemen, and to lay a Tax, as in France, upon all other Families (10).

(10) Belcarius, lib. xxviii, n. 51.

[C] La Brosse performed his Duty very well during that Siege, notwithstanding he was Seventy five Years of Age.] The General for the King, in ' the Town, was that venerable old Man, and great ' Captain, the good Mr. le Brosse, Seventy five ' Years of Age, an old Register of War, whose ' Valour, wise Conduct, and Intrepidity were of ' great Use in the Siege (11). If he was then Seventy five Years old, he could not be eighty when he was killed at the Battle of Dreux; for there are but two or three Years between this Siege and that Battle. However, I will not be too critical upon Brantome; for he uses a Restriction: That old Man, says he, died at the Age of eighty Years or very near.

(11) Brantome, in his Encomium upon Mr de Martigues, pag. 246.

[D] If he had not been killed at the Battle of Dreux —— he would certainly have been made Marshal of France.] At that time this Dignity was bestowed only on a Vacancy: There was one after the Battle of Dreux, where the Marshal de St André lost his Life. Brantome says, that the Duke of Guise would have procured that Dignity to M. de la Brosse, ' for he had a great Affection and Esteem for ' him; and he deserved it, having been a Man of ' Honour, and without blemish. And though the ' Duke of Guise was a very great Captain, he always consulted that good and honourable old Man, ' who, both in my Opinion and that of other People, was very well skilled in the Art of War (12). ' I remember (continues Brantome) that very early ' in the Morning on the Day that the Battle of ' Dreux was fought, in being very mild Weather, ' as they were drawing up the Army in Order of ' Battle, that good Man passed by M. Beaulieu, ' Captain of the Guards, and me. We put off ' our Hats to him very respectfully; he did the same ' to us, and said, How, Gentlemen, do you pull off ' your Hats this cold Weather? We answered him, ' Sir, who deserves it better than you, who are one ' of the most honourable and ancient Captains of this ' Army? Gentlemen, replied he, I am one of the ' most inconsiderable; and then he added, I do not ' know what will be the Success of this Battle, but ' I fancy I shall be killed. And indeed I have lived too long, and it is a shame for me to bear a ' Lance, and imbrue it in Blood, when I should ' be at Home begging of God, that he would ' forgive me the Sins of my Youth: And thus he ' left us, because the Duke of Guise sent for him, ' being always desirous to consult him.'

(12) In his Encomium upon the Marshal de Vieille-Ville apud la Laboureur, Tome II, pag. 976.

BROSSIER (MARTHA), a Woman who pretended to be possessed by the Devil, was like to have occasioned great Disorders in France, towards the latter end of the XVIth Century. Her Father, who was a Weaver at Romorantin, found it more convenient to ramble about with his three Daughters, one of which had the Art of making a thousand Distortions, than to stay at home and mind his Trade. He therefore went up and down through the neighbouring Towns, showing his Daughter Martha as a Woman possessed by the Devil, who stood in great need of the Exorcism of the Church. A prodigious multitude of People resorted to that Spectacle. The Cheat was found out at Orleans, and for that reason, in the Year 1598, all the Priests of the Diocese were forbid to proceed to Exorcisms on pain of Excommunication. Nor was the Bishop of Angers (a) more easy to be imposed upon [A]. He quickly smelt out the Cheat; for, having invited Martha to Dinner, he caused some Holy Water to be brought her instead of common Water, and common Water instead of Holy Water [B]. Martha was catched; she was not at all affected

(a) His Name was Charles Miron.

[A] Martha's Cheat was found out at Orleans —— Neither was the Bishop of Angers more easy to be imposed upon.] The thing is related by Thuanus in this Order: I do not know whether he narrowly considered the Matter; for the other Historians tell us, That the Cheat was found out first at Angers, and then at Orleans; nay, they say, that the Theologal of Orleans promoted this Imposture by his too great Credulity, before Martha had been examined by the Bishop of Angers (1). ' This Trick being found ' out, that Prelate was contented with having deceived the Devil, who had a mind to deceive the ' World †, and sent her away, threatning to punish ' her, if she returned into his Diocese. She was ' carried to Orleans, where two cunning Devices ' were thought of, in order to try her. I. They ' presented to her Despauterius's Grammar in an ' old binding. Martha, looking upon it as the ' Scourge of the Devil, trembles at the bare Sight ' of the Cover, and the two Copper-clasps. They ' opened that Book, and bid her read in it. She ' lights by chance upon some Verses made up of ' hard Words without any Signification ‡, which ' she takes to be the most violent Exorcisms, and, ' having imperfectly pronounced them, throws her- ' self upon the Ground making a thousand Motions. ' II. As it is said, That the Devils are pleased with ' Perfumes, and grow fat with Vapours ‡, they ' presented to her a Perfume, composed of Drugs ' and Herbs, so stinking, that as soon as the Va- ' pour came near her Nose, as she was let tied to a ' Chair, and struggling with her Feet, being over- ' come with the Fire, and the horrible stink, she ' cried out, Gentlemen, forgive me, I am choaked, he is gone. By that means the Official of Orleans ' discovered the Imposture, and forbad the Clergy ' of his Diocese to exorcise her upon pain of being ' suspended (2).'

(1) Cayet, Chronol. Septenaire, Book ii, fol. 89, verso. Matthieu, Hist. de la paix, lib. ii, narrat. iii, pag. 335.

† Imposturam fecit & passus est. D. Gallieni. Trebell. Pollio.

‡ Martha lights upon these Words of Despauterius Nexo xui, xum velit Texo xui, indéque textum.

‡ Mali dæmones gaudent libarilae & nidore quibus eorum corpuscula hum pinguescit, vivit enim id vaporibus, & roboratur nidoribus. Porphyr. de Abstinentia.

(2) Matthieu, ibid. pag. 337. See also Cayet, ubi supra, fol. 90.

[B] The Bishop of Angers —— caused some common Water to be brought to her for holy Water.] I do not know what to think of a Story of d'Aubigné concerning that same Prelate (3). ' The Bishop ' ordered the Demoniac to be brought to him, and ' made a very strict Enquiry about her: He desired to know what were the most violent Signs ' that gave occasion to believe that she was stuffed ' with Devils. One of the Protocoles answered him, ' That the Violence of her Torments appeared by ' two things; one was, when her Skin was touched ' by a Cross wherein there was a piece of the true ' Cross; the other Proof was manifest, by her roaring and contortions, when some Text of the Gospel was read to her. The Bishop had about his ' Neck one of those Crosses, whereof I shall speak

(3) Confess. Cath. de Sancy, lib. i, cap. vi, pag. 358.

fected when she drank the Holy Water, but she made a thousand Contorsions when the common Water was presented to her. Thereupon the Prelate calls for the Book of Exorcisms, and reads the beginning of the Æneid. Martha was trapped a second time; for thinking those Latin Verses of Virgil were the beginning of the Exorcism, she put herself into violent Postures as if she had been tormented by the Devil. This was sufficient to convince the Bishop of Angers that she was an Impostor: however he only reproved her Father in private. The Knave did not care to go back to Romorantin with his Daughter, as the Prelate had advised him; but, on the contrary, he carried her to the great Stage of the Kingdom, I mean to Paris, where he hoped to be supported by credulous and ill-affected People, and by those whom the Edict of Nantes had lately exasperated against the King. He pitched upon St Genevieve's Church to act his Farce. The Capuchins, who immediately took up the Business, lost no time, and quickly exorcised the wicked Spirit of Martha, without a previous Enquiry, as it is ordered by the Church, into the Life and Health of that Woman. The Postures she made, whilst the Exorcists performed their Function, easily made the common People believe that she was a Demoniac, and the thing was quickly noised about all over the Town. The Bishop (b) being willing to proceed orderly in the matter, appointed five of the most famous Physicians in Paris to examine the thing: They unanimously reported, that since it did not appear that Martha had any Skill in Greek or Latin [C], The Devil had no hand in the matter, but that there was a great deal of Imposture, and some Distemper in it (c). Two Days after, two of those Physicians seemed to waver, and, before they answered the Bishop, desired the three others might be sent for, and time granted them till the next Day. Thus on the first of April, 1599, a critical Day for the Cause, Father Seraphin, on the one side, renewed his Exorcisms, and Martha re-iterated her Convulsions on the other: She rolled her Eyes, lolled out her Tongue, quaked all over her Body

(b) Henri de Gondi.

(c) Unanimi ab illa consensu, Episcopo rogante, responsum est, nihil à spiritu, multa fictu, pauca à morbo esse. Thuanus, lib. cxiii, pag. 880.

' in the Chapter concerning Relics; for his Father, ' who informed me of the most secret Passages of ' the late King's Life, had received the same Jewels ' with others, and cleverly cured them of their ' Cancers; (this by the by). The Leader of the ' Demoniac, who saw that Cross about the Bishop's ' Neck, turned up her Petticoats, as she lay on the ' Ground, to her Knees, and made a Sign to the ' Prelate to touch her with the Cross subtilly. But ' that wicked Man pulled the Cross from his Neck, ' and with his other Hand cunningly took a Key out ' of his Pocket, and the Jade no sooner felt the ' cold Key upon her Thigh, but she frighted the ' Assistants with her Gambols. In order to a second ' Tryal, the Gospel was to be read in her Pre- ' sence. The Bishop took a Petronius out of his ' Pocket, which he carried instead of a Breviary, and ' began to read, Matrona quædam Ephesi, &c. Then ' she fretted and fumed, and when the Bishop came ' to these Words, placitone etiam pugnabis amori, she ' fell into a Swoon. That Prelate, who is half ' Lutheran, says he cannot countenance those Im- ' postures. —— He has been severely reprimanded ' for it, and therefore he proved more favourable to ' the second Demoniac called Martha, who was late- ' ly brought to him by a Capuchin who had instructed ' her. She has two Devils, the one called Belzebub, and the other Astaroth, &c.'

EXAMINATION of a Story related by D'Aubigné.

I must needs say, that I suspect the Truth of this Story; and when I compare what Thuanus says of that Bishop's Conduct towards Martha with d'Aubigné's Narrative of his Conduct to a former Demoniac, I find nothing in it but what puts me in mind of the Custom and Method of satirical Writers. One would think, that the Rules of their Art impose upon them the Necessity of altering such Circumstances as are not diverting enough, or so disadvantageous as they would have them, and to put, in the Room of them, some that are more ridiculous, or more disobliging. To say that a Prelate recited a Verse out of Virgil, instead of the Formulary used in Exorcisms, is not a satirical Stroke; but to say that he took a Petronius out of his Pocket, which he carried about him instead of a Breviary, and that he pitched upon the Story of the Ephesian Matron, is a cruel Raillery upon a Prelate. The unhappy Rules of Satire required therefore, that, instead of keeping to Thuanus's Account, Petronius should be put in the Room of Virgil, &c (5). But because it was well known that Petronius had not been made use of upon Martha Brossier, there was a necessity to mention another Woman possessed by the Devil instead of her. And because Thuanus observes, that this Passage of the Exorcism, An homo fatuus est, struck the greatest Blow, there was a necessity to suppose a like Circumstance in the pretended Exorcism of Petronius, and, in order to it, to pitch upon these Words, Platitone etiam pugnabis amori? A satirical Writer ought to be mistrusted; for he does not relate things as they are, but as he wishes they were, that he might be a Slanderer, without being a Liar. They are generally his own Ideas; he gives us not Realities. The Liberty d'Aubigné took, contrary to the Accounts of all Historians, can never be excused, if it be seriously considered. He charges the Bishop of Angers with a fraudulent Conduct towards Martha; This may give occasion to draw Conclusions; and it is to be feared some Consequences will be drawn from it, against his other Stories, and that, when this is observed, People will say,

> Accipe nunc Danaum insidias, & crimine ab uno
> Disce omnes (6).

(6) Virgil. Æn. lib. ii, ver. 65.

> Now see how well the Greeks their Will digu'st'd,
> In this our Crime, behold the rest compriz'd.

[C] She seemed not to have any Skill in Greek or Latin.] See the Remark [B] of the Article GRANDIER.

Observe, that the People had been made to believe, that Martha Brossier understood and spoke many learned Languages. Being at Clery, she was asked how the Devil got into her Body (7)? and she answered, That it was for the Glory of God. This was a wrong Answer. Being asked the Manner how the Thing was done; She answered, why it was done (8). ' Nevertheless from that very time it was ' said, that she understood and spoke Greek; and ' because upon such Occasions a common Report ' increases daily, it was further said, that she spoke ' Hebrew, Arabic, and Chaldaic; so that it was ' impossible to bring off the People from their Be- ' lief that Martha was truly possessed by the Devil ' (9).' This is a remarkable Instance, how easily the Bulk of Mankind suffer themselves to be imposed upon, and what a vast Difference there is between the Judgment of the Vulgar, and that of the Learned, who examine Things with an unprejudiced Mind. The latter found that the pretended Demoniac understood neither Greek nor Latin, and alledged this Ignorance as a Proof of the Cheat; but the greatest Part of the People believed, that Martha Brossier spoke High-Dutch, English, Latin, Hebrew, and all sorts of Languages (10).

(7) Πῶς ἦλθες εἰς τὸ σῶμα. Matthieu, ibid. pag. 335.

(8) Id. pag. 336.

(9) Id. pag. 335, 336.

(10) Cayet. Chronol. Septenar. fol. 90.

(5) In the Baron de Faneste, chap. v, of the second Book, pag. 60. D'Aubigné supposes that the Bishop read an Epigram of Martial.

[D] She

Body; and when the Father came to these Words, & homo factus est, she fell down, and skipped and capered from the Altar to the Door of the Chapel. Whereupon the Exorcist cried out, that if any one persisted still in his Incredulity, he needed only sight that Devil, and try to conquer him, if he durst venture his Life. Marescot, one of the five Physicians, answered, that he accepted the Challenge, and immediately took Martha by the Throat, and bid her stop. She obeyed, and alledged, for her Excuse, that the evil Spirit had left her, which was confirmed by Father Seraphin. Marescot inferred from thence, that it was he that had frighted the Devil away. The Bishop ordered, that the Exorcisms should be carried on: At first Martha was not moved with them; only when she saw that Marescot was ready to struggle with her, she said, that he, Riolan and Hautin, would do better to mind their Physic: But when she knew they were gone, she threw herself upon the Ground, and began again her mad Tricks. They returned, and quickly made her quiet, and maintained to Father Seraphin that there was nothing supernatural in the Case, exhorted the Maid to deceive the People no longer, and threatned her with the Rack. They consulted again about it, and laying great stress on Martha's confessing, when asked several Questions in Greek and Latin, that she was ignorant of those two Languages, they all concluded, except one, that she was not possessed by the Devil (d). It is true, there was another (e), who notwithstanding the Signs of Imposture, which he acknowledged, gave his Opinion, that she should be observed three Months longer. Two Days after some other Physicians were sent for, the first being dismissed. Father Seraphin attended by one of his Fraternity, who was an Englishman, repeated his Exorcisms; and then Martha, besides her usual Postures, answered some Questions that were asked her in Greek and English (f) [D]. Whereupon, the Physicians asserted, that she was truly possessed by the Devil: Marescot confuted all the Arguments they alledged for it. People being divided in their Opinions about it, and there being reason to fear that some Answers might be suggested to that Maid, which might raise a Sedition, under pretence of the Edict granted to the Protestants; Henry IV was advised not to neglect the matter. He was sensible of the Importance of it, and enjoined the Parliament of Paris to use their Authority in the Affair. The Parliament ordered Martha to be put into the Hands of the Lieutenant-Criminal, and the King's Attorney in the Chatelet. They kept her forty Days, during which time they shewed her to the best Physicians, who asserted, that they observed nothing in her that was beyond Nature. In the mean time the Preachers gave themselves a prodigious Liberty (g) [E]: They cried out, that the Privileges of the Church were incroached upon, and that such Proceeding was suggested by the Heretics. Andrew du Val, a Doctor of the Sorbonne, and Archangel Du-Puy, a Capuchin, were the most furious among those seditious Declaimers. The Parliament had much ado to silence the latter; but at last they made him sensible of their Power, and on the Twenty fourth of May, 1599, the Provost was ordered to carry James Brossier and his three Daughters to Romorantin, and the Father forbid to let his Daughter Martha go abroad without leave from the Judge, on pain of corporal Punishment (h). Thus the Devil was condemned by an Arrêt (i). We shall see, in another place (k), what became of her.

(d) His Name was Duret.

(e) Called Hautin, Alunus. The Author of the Notes upon the Confession Catholique de Sancy, pag. 486, of the Edition of 1693, calls him Aubin, and ascribes to him a Book against the Judgment of the Monks. He says he follows Thuanus, but I find no such thing in that Historian.

(f) Observe, that she always answered in French.

(g) Non propterea plebis jam commotæ fremitus aut concionatorum ex ambone licentiosæ voces cessarunt, libertatem ecclesiasticam à magistratu regio erepti quiritantium. Thuan. lib. cxxiii, pag. 882.

(h) Taken from the 123*d Book of* Thuanus's History.

(i) Du Chesne, Antiq. des Villes de France, pag. 269.

(k) In the Text of the Article ROCHEFOUCAUD (ALEXANDER DE LA).

[D] She answered some Questions that were asked her in Greek and English.] Marescot was in the right to say (11), I. That it was not certain that Martha had answered the Questions put to her in Greek and English. II. That if she had answered them, it was a meer Trick, she being taught to give a certain Answer to some Greek and English Words, that had been agreed upon: For, said he, if she understands Greek, why did she say, that she understood not Latin, when she was asked some Questions in that Language, which is so common among us? And why, being afterwards interrogated in Greek, did she make no answer? What Montagne says somewhere, was never better practised than upon this Occasion. The Exorcists, perceiving that Martha's Ignorance of the learned Languages was objected to them as a great Difficulty, helped the Matter as well as they could, by suggesting to Martha an Answer to some Questions in Greek; and having an English Monk at their Disposal, it was an easy thing to add the English-Tongue to the Greek. But let us hear Montagne: 'I have 'seen, says he (12), the Rise of several Miracles 'in my time; and though they are stifled in the 'Birth, yet one may see what course they would 'have taken, if they had lived their full time; 'for it is but finding the end of the Thread, 'and you may wind off as much as you please; 'and there is a greater Distance from nothing to 'the least thing in the World, than from the 'least to the greatest. The first Persons, who are 'well seasoned with the beginning of a Miracle, 'when they come to publish their Story perceive 'by the Opposition that is made where the Difficulty of gaining belief of it lies, and patch up 'that Place with some false Piece.'

(11) In the Confutation of the Writing of the Physicians who declared that Martha was possessed by the Devil. Apud Thuan. lib. cxxiii.

(12) Essais, lib. iii, cap. xi, pag. 438.

[E] The Preachers took a prodigious Liberty.] When I think that the wretched Daughter of a Weaver, carried from Town to Town like a Bear, and at last engrossed by two or three Monks, who pretended that she was a Demoniac, made Henry IV, the Parliament of Paris, and all honest Frenchmen, very uneasy; when I think that such a Creature gave occasion to fear that a large Kingdom would fall again into a Combustion, which was but just quenched; when I think that, upon the News of her going to Rome, the Agents of the French Court were ordered to omit nothing with the Pope in order to ward off that Blow (13): I say, when I consider all these things, I cannot but pity the Fate of Sovereigns, and their unavoidable Dependance upon the Clergy. Whether they be devout or not, they will be always obliged to have a regard for them, and to fear them; they are a true Imperium in imperio. It is true, the Kingdom of JESUS CHRIST is not of this World; he says so himself (14): but those, who pretend to represent him, are frequently Masters of the Kings of the Earth, and will give, or take away Crowns. And those, who talk so much of the Church Militant, are more in the right than they think. This Title of her's cannot be called into question; she is too much concerned in (13) See the Text of the Article ROCHEFOUCAUD (ALEXANDER DE LA).

(14) John xviii 36.

Wars, her Arms are too formidable, to contend with her about it. It is true, she pretends to be unarmed; but what does this signify to those who are afraid of her, since she has a thousand ways of arming the World, and shewing the Falsity of the Maxim, Nemo dat quod non habet. - - - - - No body gives what he has not. How many Men has she, of each of whom one may say what the Poet says of Misenus?

- - - - - - - - quo non præstantior alter
Ære ciere viros, martemque accendere cantu (15).

(15) Virgil, Æn. lib. vi, ver. 164.

BROUGHTON (Hugh), an English Divine, who died in the Year 1612, was very learned, and published a great Number of Books. He was so laborious, that, unless some considerable Affair hindered, he studied twelve or fourteen, or often sixteen Hours a Day (a). His Commentaries on the Apocalypse, and on the Prophet Daniel [A] are very poor, and he himself is a furious and abusive Writer, if we may believe the Scaligerana (b). He was extraordinarily attached to the Discipline of the Church of England, and rigorously condemned that of the Presbyterians. The Oration he addressed to the Inhabitants of Geneva (c) [B], shews it in a very lively manner; he aimed particularly at Theodore Beza, and it is he who reproached him with what we have seen elsewhere [C]. He wrote him very rough Letters, and communicated the Copies of them to the Jesuit Serarius, with full Permission to publish them [D].

(a) Samuel Clark's Observation. selectæ ad Rem. Literariam Spectant. Tom. III, pag. 198.

(b) Broughton scribit in Apocalypsim profecto magnas nugas, ut fecit in Danielem: est furiosus & maledicus. Scaligerana secunda, pag. 38.

(c) See the Title of it below, in the Remark [B].

[A] He wrote a Commentary on the Prophet Daniel.] What he writ in English on this Prophet was translated into Latin, and published at Basil in the Year 1599, by a young Man, who was afterwards Pensionary of the Province of Zeland, named Adam Borsel (1).

(1) Vossius Polit. Eccles. Tom. III, pag. 778.

[B] He addressed an Oration to the Inhabitants of Geneva.] It was printed in Greek, at Mentz, apud Joannem Albinum, in the Year 1601 in 8vo, under this Title. Λόγος πρὸς τοὺς Γενευσίους περὶ τῆς καθόδου εἰς ᾅδου, τί δέλει τὸ ῥηθὲν. Oratio ad Genevenses de descensu ad inferos, quid locutio velit. An Oration to the Inhabitants of Geneva concerning the Signification of the Expression of descending into Hell. It contains Ninty three Pages in 8vo, and is a very learned Piece. 'Præclara est '& rebus scitu dignissimis referta. Facilè trecenti 'auctorum textus ut plurimum sine auctorum nomine '& librorum allegatione recitantur in opusculo illo. 'Desuscatum est ejus de Beza, Bilsono, Barlæo '(2), ac aliis judicium, & nemini non placere potest '(3). - - - - - It is excellent, and full of things worthy to be known; there are at least three hundred Authors cited in that little Work, generally without the Authors names, or Titles of their Books; his Judgment concerning Beza, Bilson, Barlow, and others is clear, and must please every Body.'

(2) It should rather have been Barlow, for it is De Barlow that he abuses.

(3) Observat. Select. ad Rem. Literariam Spectant. Tom. III, pag. 190, Edit. Hale Magdeb. Ann. 1702.

He complains, that he had heard it said at Geneva that a certain English Lord was an Apostate from the Faith, because he believed that the Discipline of Geneva was not Apostolical. 'Quæ Broughtonus se 'cum Genum essat, audivisse refert de imputata Domino suo Apostasiâ ex hoc Capite quod non crederet Genuenses τὴν ἀποστολικὴν πρασσεῖν πολίτειαν. Verba ejus adscribere non pigrabimur; ità verò illa habent: Παρ' ὑμῖν ἂν ἀκήκοα, τὸν ἐμὸν κύριον ἀποστῆναι τῆς πίστεως, ὅτι οὐ πείθεται ὑμᾶς τὴν ἀποστολικὴν κρατεῖν πολίτειαν. Quinam ille fit Dominus quodam modo ex sequentibus colligere pronum est; nam paulo post, ut Broughtonum Latinè loqui non nemo fecit, Genuenses ita compellat: Diligentium prætered adhibete ut tandem Beneficia adfictatis eis, qui vobis succurrerant in extremâ paupertate vestra ollo chiliadibus coronatorum, quibus mei Dominus, Henricus Comes Vindocinensis & Franciscus Walsingamus & Gualterus Mildemaus, &c. vobis intulerunt (4). - - - - - What Broughton says, when he was at Geneva, concerning the Imputation of Apostacy to his Lord, on this Account, because he did not believe that they of Geneva held the Apostolic Discipline. I have transcribed his Words, which are these: When I was amongst you I heard that my Lord had apostatized from the Faith, because he does not believe that you hold the Apostolical Discipline. Who that Lord is may in some measure be gathered from what follows: for a little lower, Broughton, as some body has translated him, speaks thus to the People of Geneva: Furthermore, take care at length to requite those who assisted you in your extream Necessity with eight thousand Crowns, with which my Masters, Henry Earl of Winchester, Francis Walsingham, and Walter Mildmay, &c. assisted you.' A Physician of Vratislaw has a Greek and Latin Copy of that Oration, accompanied with Notes; and he designs to depose it in some public Library, or impart it to the first Person that comes, who has a Mind to print it (5).

(4) Ibid. p. 198.

(5) Ibid. p. 200.

[C] It was he who reproached Theodore Beza with what we have seen elsewhere (6).] That is to say, the continual Alterations of his Notes on the New Testament in every new Edition. Mr Colomies believed that the Letter wherein this Charge is found was Drusius's (7); but he is mistaken, and probably only followed the Error of the Jesuit Rosweide. We will go to the Source; the Jesuit Serarius having said that Casaubon had observed some Faults committed by Beza on the New Testament, adds, that another Author, not a Catholic, promised to point out a greater Number of them. Presently he repeats the reproachful Terms used by this other Author in accusing Theodore Beza of Ignorance, and cites Oratio πρὸς τοὺς Γενευσίους (8); some Pages after he recites the Passage in question, and observes that he takes it from a Letter written to Theodore Beza by an Innovator, whom he had cited before (9): it is certain he means the Author of the Oratio πρὸς τοὺς Γενευσίους; and yet the Jesuit Rosweide was of Opinion, that Drusius was the Author of that Letter; for in copying the Passage mentioned by Serarius, he puts in the Margin Jo. Drus. epist. ad Bezam (10). But Sixtinus Amama shewed him that Drusius was not the Author of that Letter, and that Serarius pretended to attribute it to Hugh Broughton, a Man who had had great Differences with Theodore Beza and Liveleius. 'Novit universa Anglia, omnis Germa'nia, quam acris contentionis ferrum (nec enim est 'quod hoc dissimulemus, nec est quod Papistæ eo 'nomine nobis insultent; Trojanos intra muros peccatur & extra)

'cum Beza & Liveleio reciprocaverit. Norunt 'hoc optime Moguntini Jesuitæ qui à se oleum in 'hunc ignem contra Legis præscripta injectum non 'sibunt inficias. Drusii itaque non est. Nota, Hy'lus, & libri ejus repugnant. Norunt omnes qui 'ipsum, tesles sunt libri ejus quam de Liveleio 'præclare senserit. Culpam ergo agnoscat Ros'weidus aut alia prodat documenta (11). - - - All England and Germany are acquainted what a warm Contest he had with Beza and Liveleius (for we have no occasion to dissemble it, nor had the Papists room to insult us in that Account;

That Crime's committed both in Camp and Town),

'The Jesuits of Mentz know it very well, nor will 'they deny that they poured Oil into that Flame 'contrary to the Direction of the Laws; therefore 'it is not Drusius's: the Character, Stile, and his 'Books, shew the contrary. All who knew him 'know, and his Books testify, how good an Opinion 'he had of Liveleius; therefore let Rosweide ac'knowledge his Fault, or bring other Proofs.'

(6) In the Rem. [E], of the Article BEZA.

(7) See the same Remark.

(8) Serarii Mi-nerval, lib. ii, cap. vi, pag. 39. See also lib. iv, cap. lii, pag. 89.

(9) Id. ibid. lib. ii, cap. x, p. 47.

(10) Rosweyd. in Anti Casaubono, pag. 32.

(11) See the Letter which Sixtinus Amama wrote to Sibrandus Siccama, prefixed to the second Edition of the Treatise of Drusius de Hasidæis, &c. fol. †††3, verso.

[D] He communicated to the Jesuit Serarius Copies of his Letters to Beza, with full Liberty to publish them.] A Canon of Cologne soon discovered this Game; for he inserted in a Book, which he published published in the Year 1602, a Letter communicated to him by this Jesuit, which Broughton had wrote to Theodore Beza a little before. It is very proper to shew the Animosity of this English Doctor.

'Idem iste Brochtonus in Epistolâ Græcâ ad Bezam * tria crimina gravissima illi exprobrat, quam Epistolam Græcam fideliter Latine translatam, ut ab omnibus melius intelligatur, ad eorum aperienda & publicanda dissidia, subjicio. Multa habeo adversus te, ô Theodore, de quibus me accusasti: quare te omnino injuriarum postulare cogor. Primum crimen est, quod duo testes Magnates Angliæ contra testificari perhibentur, quæ jam typis excuduntur. Posteaquam eorum gratiâ quæ de rebus Bizantiorum ad te scripsi, me, sicuti nunc omnibus palam feci, vanum hominem cognominasti: Nisi ostendas hos testes non loquepletes, ac fide dignos esse, tuam stoliditatem promulgabo. Volui etiam Genevæ typis mandare nuncupationem, ac illam Hebræi Epistolam illustre encomium Heroinæ Angliæ continentem. Ac permittente Synhodo & Syndico tu obstitisti, pari modo admonitus, quam inconsiderate & absurde, & cum fidei periculo, interpretemini illud, descendere ad inferos, obduratus es, neque cedis. Tertium est illud quod mendaciter contra Senatum vestrum locutus es: quasi mihi ut homini turbulento, & in Angliæ Reginam maledico, necem allaturus esset. Hæc enim ad Primatem Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ scripsisti. Expecto quid sis ad ista solide responsurus. Literas tuas celebri medico tradas, Domino novæ turris, hospiti meo: Ipse dabit operam ut ad me perferantur. Quod si nihil respondebis, polliceor tibi rem omnibus Ecclesiis me patefacturum, etiam exhausta jam prope tibi vita. Opinor autem & mihi ipsi adhuc paululum vitæ superesse, ideoque conabor offensionis expers videri. Vale, Francofurti decima Aprilis 1601.

Tuus BROCHTONUS.

* Hanc Epistolam Brochtonus Francofurto Moguntiam misit ad Doctissimum virum Nicholaum Serrarium qui mihi communicavit. Auctor ut Serrario publicaret permisit. - - - - - - Broughton sent this Epistle from Francfort to Mentz, to the most learned Nicolas Serrarius. The Author gave Serrarius leave to publish it.

'Inscriptio Epistolæ erat,

'Theodoro Bezæ, multi nominis Viro, Genevæ (12). —— This same Broughton, in a Greek Letter to Beza, upbraids him with three heinous Crimes. The Greek Letter I subjoin, faithfully translated into Latin, that it may be understood by every body, in order to discover their Contests, and make them public. I have many things against thee, O Theodore, of which thou hast accused me, wherefore I am absolutely obliged to charge you with having done me wrong. The first Fault is what is disproved by the Testimonies of two English Peers, which are already in the Press, in as much as you have called me a vain Man, on account of what I writ concerning the Affairs of Constantinople, as I have now published to the World; unless you shew that these Witnesses are not substantial and credible, I will proclaim your Folly. I had a mind also to print a Discourse at Geneva, and that Epistle of the Hebrew, containing a notable Encomium on the Heroin of England, and when the Synod and Syndic had given me leave, you opposed it. In like manner, when you were admonished how inconsiderately, absurdly, and to the hazzard of the Faith, you interpret that of descending into Hell, you hardened yourself and would not yield. The third is what you falsely have said against your Senate, as if they were about to put me to Death, as a turbulent Person, for speaking ill of the Queen of England; for so you wrote to the Primate of the Church of England. I want to know what solid Answer you will give to these things. You may deliver your Letter to a noted Physician where I lodged; he will take care to convey it to me; but if you make me no Answer, I promise you I will lay the matter before all the Churches, even though your Life be almost at an end; for I think I have yet a little time before me, wherein I will endeavour to approve myself void of Offence. Farewel,

Yours BROUGHTON.

'Francfort 10 April 1601.

The Letter was directed,

'To the celebrated Theodore Beza, at Geneva.

(12) Ex Corneill Schultingii, Epist Dedicator. Tom IV, Biblioth. Catholicæ & Orthodoxæ, fol. 3.

The same Author had just before cited several things taken from a Letter, which Broughton wrote to Serarius, which was prodigiously violent against Theodore Beza. 'Pacificus, ut apparet, Calvinista Hugo Broughton in Epistola manuscripta ad doctissimum virum D. Nicolaum Serrarium docentem Moguntiæ in Collegio Societatis Jesu, ait Genevensem rabiem prorumpere in Cyclopicam immanitatem, nullam fovere lenitatem, neque placide differere, unde fiat, ut Pacifici cum seditiosis in unam mentem coalescere non possent (13). . . . . In eâdem epistolâ scribit se de Bezæ mendaciis conquestum fuisse ad summates Angliæ, ad Senatum Genevensem, ad Tigurinos, Morgissanos, Basilienses, & complures alios. Nam cum scriberet de usu Sadaiæ Arabici ad Mosen & Persici commentarii; & scriberet Græcè de multiplici Rabbinorum varietate, Beza non destitit ipsum vexare maledictis omnino nolens credere talia studia sibi nota vel utilia fuisse. Rabiem autem Bezæ inde ortam fuisse conjicit, quod fando aliquid pervenerit ad illius aures spretum suum studium ad Novum Testamentum: quod cum LXX postulent 2000 vocabula sic exponi ut apud se ex altera parte respondeant linguæ Judaicæ, & plurima sint à 8. Apostolis divinitus accommodata ad Prophetas, & ferè totum Novum Testamentum conflatum ex stylo piorum Rabbinorum, ut etiamnum hodie existent vestigia sparsim in eorum libris, & minima pars sit merè graiugena oratio usu ex ethnico, hoc ultimum attulit secum Beza, inops abs reliquis, uti sese sæpè affirmâsse contestatur. Detestatur idem hoc etiam in Beza quod testimonia veteris Testamenti citata ab Apostolis directè ad suam caulam, ut etiam Judæi antiquissimi assentiuntur, secus Beza cum Calvino interpretatur, ut cabalistica vis tantum concedatur Apostolis; quod & recentes Judæi libenter jam annos 500 ut Aben-Ezra in Præfatione ad Mosen abjectare conspiciuntur. Hæc in Beza, inquit, reprehendi sæpius, & hinc illius persequutio & maledicta adversum me (14). - - - Hugh Broughton, a peaceable Calvinist, as it should seem, in a manuscript Letter to the learned Dr Nicolas Serrarius, a Tutor in the College of the Jesuits at Mentz, says, that the Rage of those of Geneva broke out into monstrous Cruelty, exercises no Lenity, nor can dispute patiently, whence it comes that the pacific cannot join in one Mind with the seditious. . . . . In the same Letter he writes, that he had complained of Beza's Life to the chief Men in England, the Senate of Geneva, of Zurich, of Morges, of Basil, and several other places; for when he wrote of the use of the Arabian Sada on Moses, and of the Persian Commentary, and wrote in Greek concerning the great Variety of the Rabbins, Beza was continually speaking ill of him, nor would by any means believe, that he was acquainted with those Studies; or that they were of any use; and he conjectures that Beza's Rage rose from this, that he had by some means or other heard that he had spoke slightly of his Commentary on the New Testament. For whereas the LXX requires Two thousand Words to be so explained, that they may exactly correspond to the Hebrew Tongue, and a great many things are by the Apostles divinely accommodated to the Prophets, and almost the whole New Testament composed in the Stile of the pious Rabbins, of which there remains some Footsteps to this day in their Books, and very little of it is meerly Helenistical according to the Heathen use: Beza has at last introduced this, being unprovided with any thing else, as he himself has often affirmed. He likewise detests this in Beza, that he interprets the Testimony of the old Testament, cited by the Apostles, directly to their purpose, as the most ancient Jews allow, differently from Calvin, leaving to the Apostles nothing more than the force of the Cabala, which the later Jews have generally laid aside for these 500 Years, as Aben Ezra in his Preface to Moses: This, says he, I have often blamed in Beza; and hence comes his Persecution and Railing against me.'

(13) Ibid. fol. 2, verso.

(14) Idem.

BRUYN (JOHN de), Professor of Natural Philosophy and Mathematics at Utrecht, was born at Gorcum, the Twenty fifth of August 1620. He went through a Course of Philosophy at Leyden, under the Professor Heerboord, and then pursued his Studies at Bois-le-duc, where he was very much esteemed by Samuel Maresius, who taught there Philosophy and Divinity. From thence he removed to Utrecht, and applied himself diligently to the Mathematics, under the Professor Ravensberg, who had a particular Affection for him. He went afterwards to Leyden, where he obtained leave to teach Mathematics. Ravensberg, finding himself declining, so earnestly recommended him to the Magistrates and Curates of the University, as a very fit Man to fill up his Place, that they made him Professor of Natural Philosophy and Mathematics; and because the Professors of Philosophy had agreed among themselves, that every one of them might teach at home such a part of Philosophy as he should think fit, de Bruyn, not contented to teach what his public Professorship required, made also Dissections, and explained Grotius's Book De Jure Belli & Pacis. He had great skill in dissecting Animals; he was a great lover of Experiments; and made also Astronomical Observations. The Dissertations he published, De vi altrice; de corporum gravitate & levitate; de cognitione Dei naturali; de lucis caussis & origine, &c [A], are manifest Proofs of his Worth. In the Year 1652, he married the Daughter of a Merchant of Utrecht, Sister to the Wife of Daniel Elzevir, the famous Bookseller of Amsterdam, by whom he had two Children, who lived but few Days. He departed this Life the Twenty first of October, 1675, after he had been a Professor for the space of Twenty three Years (a).

(a) Taken from his Funeral Oration pronounced by M. Gravius, Novem. 5, 1675.

[A] He wrote a Treatise De lucis caussis & origine.] He had a Dispute upon this Subject with Isaac Vossius, to whom he wrote a Letter of Sixty eight Pages in 4to, printed at Amsterdam in 1663, wherein he critizes Vossius's Book, De natura & proprietate lucis, and strenuously maintains the Hypothesis of Cartes. He wrote also an Apology for the Cartesian Philosophy against a Divine, named Vogelsang.

BRUN (ANTONY le), Embassador of Spain, at the Conferences held at Munster, was an excellent Negotiator. He was a Native of Franche Comté, and discharged the Office of Attorney-General in the Parliament of Dole, when he was sent Embassador to Munster. All the Plenipotentiaries of Spain took Place of him; but he exceeded them all in Capacity: He knew better than they the Affairs of the Low-Countries, and being a Man 'of a more complying Humour [A], 'and of a more pleasant Conversation, he was better qualified for a Negotiation. 'The King of Spain was particularly beholden to him for the Peace which the 'Dutch made at Munster, exclusively of France. As a Reward for that Service, 'he was appointed Embassador to the States of the United Provinces, and then a 'considerable Office was bestowed upon him in the Finances at Brussels. —— He 'was very well beloved at the Hague, where he would have been very useful to 'his Master, had not his Employment ended with his Life, when he began to 'be well known, and esteemed on account of his Merit (a).' He left behind him four Sons (b), I do not know what was their Fate. He was an intriguing Man, and made himself dreaded by the French Embassadors [B], not without Reason, since he overcome the Difficulties which kept back the Treaty of Peace between Spain and the United Provinces [C]. He received an Affront for concerning himself

(a) Wicquefort, de l'Ambassadeur, Tom II, pag. 422, 423.

(b) James Richard, King of Arms of the King of Spain, and his Consul at Amsterdam, De scription of Franche Comté in Blaew's Atlas.

['A] He was of a complying Humour.] Others say, that he was a very popular Man, and consequently very fit to impose upon the Multitude. Ingenio popolari aptissimum face plebi faciundo (1); and that Servien, who affected Statelineſs in every thing, was not for that very reason so well qualified to succeed in Holland as le Brun, who had a Citizen-like Behaviour. 'Huic (Servieno) omnia nobilia, magnifica, excelsa fuere: Bruno vero vulgaris & popularis omnis ratio: eo factum ut quo similior his cum quibus agebat, ita & apud ipsos validior fuerit (2). —— He (Servian) was in every thing noble, magnificent, and lofty: but le Brun's manner was altogether low and popular; wherefore as he was more like those with whom had to do, so he had more Prevalency with them.'

(1) Labardæus de rebus Gallicis, lib. v, pag. 258.

(2) Id. pag. 259.

['B] He made himself dreaded by the French Embassadors.] That was the Reason why Mr Servien would not consent that Mr le Brun should be permitted to go to the Hague in his Return from the Low-Countries to the Conferences of Munster. 'When 'the seventy Articles had been signed, the eighth 'of January, 1647, between the Plenipotentiaries 'of Spain, and those of the United Provinces, 'Antony le Brun, one of the Plenipotentiaries of 'Spain, set out from Munster the very next Day, 'to carry the News of it to Brussels. Whilst he 'was there, he sent to the States desiring a Pass-port to go to the Hague. His Design was to ob'serve and thwart Servien's Negotiation, who was 'about a Treaty of Guarantee; but Servien oppo'sed the granting the Passport, and so contrived 'the Matter, that the States having consulted the 'Prince of Orange, refused Mr le Brun (3).' Mr de la Barde expresses with greater force Mr Servien's Uneasiness upon hearing that Mr le Brun was to come to the Hague. Mr Servien declared, says he (4), that if the Passport was granted, he would immediately retire. He adds, That the Princess of Orange favoured le Brun upon that Occasion; but the Prince was of Opinion, that Servien should be satisfied, and so le Brun was obliged to negotiate by way of Letters. He wrote to the States Servien answered his Letter (5); le Brun made a Reply (6). Mr de la Barde observes, that there was a personal Hatred between those two Embassadors.

(3) Wicquefort, de l'Ambassadeur, Tom. I, pag. 413, 414.

(4) Labardæus, lib. v, pag. 252.

(5) Id. pag. 253.

(6) Id. pag. 259.

['C] He overcame the Difficulties which kept back the Treaty of Peace between Spain and the United Provinces.] The Difficulties were Foreign and Domestic. The former were started by the French Embassadors, and were the least considerable. If Mr le Brun had not been warmly and dexterously seconded by Mr Pauw and Mr Knuit, the Dutch Plenipotentiaries, and had nevertheless concluded the Treaty of Peace, he would much more deserve to be praised for it than he does; for it must be confessed, self with the domestic Differences that arose in Holland, in the Year 1650 [D]. But, because he was not easily discouraged, he countenanced those who desired, that the Dignity of Stadtholder should be suppressed [E]. He made use not only of Libels [F], but also of false Suppositions [G], for the Service of his Master. The French Writers took delight in reflecting upon him [H].

This

confessed, That those two Plenipotentiaries did very much clear and smooth the Difficulties for him. Every thing was made use of, even Contradictions, to oppose those who were for continuing the War. The Misery and Power of France were both alledged to that end (7). Sometimes she was represented so exhausted that she could no longer support her Allies; and sometimes so powerful, that it was to be feared the Continuation of the War would make her formidable to her Neighbours. Mr Servien one Day so strangely inveighed against Mr Pauw and Mr Knuit in the Assembly of the States-General, that he made bold to say, That they were the Pudenda of the Republic. Le Brun turned the thing to their Advantage; he called them the virile Parts of the State, which Servien designed to cut off, that the Republic might lose that manly Vigor, without which it could not maintain itself. 'Quandoque dicendi studio cum apud 'Fœderatos Ordines de republicâ differeret, elatus 'eò evasit, ut ambos pudenda reipublicæ appella'ret, quod est ab Bruno haud illepidè correctum, 'ubi Serviani Scripto postea respondit, eosdem rei 'Sociarum Civitatum publicæ virilia appellando, 'quæ Servianus exsecare vellet, ut huic minus 'masculæ virtutis inesset, quo tutari se aut adver'sum hostes possent, aut adversum socios æque 'prope damnosos, qui videlicet omnem societatis 'fructum sibi habere studerent, de eosdem rei 'modis nihil solliciti (8). - - - - One time, in a Speech 'which he made before the States-General, in the 'Heat of his Discourse, he launched out so far as 'to call them two the Pudenda of the Common'wealth, which was wittily enough corrected and 'turned to their Advantage by le Brun, in his 'Answer to Servien's Memorial, by calling them 'the virile Parts of the Commonwealth, which Ser'vien had a Mind to cut off, that the Common'wealth might have less manly Virtue, to defend 'themselves against their Enemies, and against their 'Allies, who are almost as hurtful to them, in 'that they sought to reap all the Benefit of the 'Alliance themselves, taking no care of the Interest 'of their Allies.' But if what Mr de la Barde says were true, there would be less reason to wonder, that the Intrigues of two Dutch Embassadors, seconded by le Brun, should have overcome the Obstacles to the Peace. He will have it that the Princess of Orange, being offended that Cardinal Mazarin had not paid her all the Honour she expected, endeavoured to make a separate Peace during the Sickness of her Consort. 'Hic (Knutius) Zelandiæ 'publice Legatus, privatim Araussi cliens erat, qui'tum ob perditam valetudinem, sicuti ferme ho'mines tali suo tempore, in uxoris Solmiæ fuit 'potestate: quæ quoniam ab Mazarino haud satis 'se cultam arbitrabatur, eo nobis infesta erat, at'que omni ope nitebatur, uti pax Hispanos inter, '& Socias Civitates, post-habito fœdere nostro, sanci'retur, de qua re Knutium continuo, sicuti & Batavo'rum Civitas Pavium, fatigabat (9). - - - - - - He 'was in his public Character Embassador of Zeland, privately a Creature of the Prince of Orange, who, by reason of his ill State of Health, 'was then, as Men commonly are at such times, 'intirely led by his Wife Solmia, who, because she 'did not think she had sufficient regard paid her 'by Mazarine, was therefore our Enemy, and used 'her utmost Endeavour to settle a Peace between 'the Spaniards and United Provinces, exclusive of 'our Alliance, about which she was continually tei'zing Knuit, as the State did Pauw.'

(7) See a piece printed in 1648, intitled la Confession de l'Imprimeur.

(8) Labardæus, pag. 259.

(9) Id. pag. 247.

[D] He met with an Affront for concerning himself with the domestic Differences of the Low-Countries in 1650.] M. de Wicquefort gives the following Account of it: 'In the Year 1650, there arose some 'Differences between the Prince of Orange and the 'States of Holland. Some of their Deputies were 'confined to the Castle of Loevestein, and the Prince 'brought the Troops of the State before the City 'of Amsterdam. Antony le Brun, Embassador of Spain, otherwise a dexterous and very wise Mi'nister, thinking to please the Prince, offered him 'the Forces of the King his Master to reduce that 'Town; but the Prince answered him, That the 'King of Spain needed not concern himself with the 'domestic Affairs of his Country, and that nei'ther he nor the States wanted his Assistance: That 'if the King should cause his Troops to advance, 'those small Differences would be quickly laid a'side, and all the Forces of the States would im'mediately be re-united to oppose the Foreign 'Troops. And indeed, those differences were quick'ly over; and the same Embassador, thinking to 'mend his first Fault, committed a second, by ask'ing Audience of the States, to compliment them 'about the Reconciliation. It was granted him; but, 'when they came to know the Subject of it, they 'sent him word, tho' he was already at the Foot 'of the Stairs where their Deputies were to re'ceive him, That they were obliged to desire him 'not to take it ill, that he should be put off till 'another time: So that he went home with a kind 'of an Affront, for having had a mind to speak 'of a domestic Affair, which he should have taken 'no notice of (10).

(10) Wicquefort de l'Ambassadeur, Tom. II, pag. 93, 94.

[E] He countenanced those, who desired that the Dignity of Stadtholder should be suppressed.] M. de la Barde gives us the substance of M. le Brun's Speech both to the States-General, and the States of the Province of Holland. What he said was very obliging to the most Serene House of Orange: he spoke not in that manner till after he had been at Brussels, to confer with the Ministers of his Catholic Majesty. On the contrary, the Court of France sent an Embassador Extraordinary to the States in favour of that House (11).

(11) Labardæus de Rebus Gallicis, lib. ix, pag. 623.

[F] He made use not only of Libels.] He published several during the Conferences of Munster, wherein he abused France. Those Pieces were written in a pleasant Stile, and with a great deal of sprightliness; but his Satires were too comical, and too much like Burlusque, if we believe the Author I have quoted. 'Hic (Brunus) fori rerum in qui'bus ætatem egit prudens, neque aliarum ignarus 'est, cæterùm ingenio populari, aptissimoque suco 'plebi faciundo. Eâ gratiâ libellos sæpiùs apud Mo'nasterium Vestfalorum edebat, haud illepidos hos 'quidem, sed qui saperent Atellanum, & quibus 'plebejâ planè lascivit ipsi ab natura insita male'dicta in Legatos, cæterosque Gallos jaceret, om'nemque eorum tam in bello gerendo, quàm in 'pacis negotio rationem vituperaret (12). - - - - - -

(12) Id. lib. v, pag. 250.

This le Brun is very well acquainted with all 'the business of the Bar, in which he has spent his 'time, and has a good knowledge of other Things; 'but is of a popular Disposition and well cut out 'to impose on the multitude. For that purpose he fre'quently published Books at Munster, which were 'not unpleasant, but smelled of the Buffoon, wherein, 'with more mobbish wantonness, natural to him, he 'cast his reproaches on the Embassadors, and on the 'French in general, blaming all their Conduct 'both in managing War and Peace.

[G] - - - - but also of false Suppositions.] M. de Wicquefort, speaking of some Embassadors, who spread false News, does not forget to say, That some 'do no scruple to publish Letters, pretending they 'have been intercepted, to cry down the Affairs 'and Conduct of those, whose Prosperity makes them 'uneasy. He says, That during the War of the 'Barberini, the Spanish Embassador dispersed a Let'ter at Venice, wherein Cardinal Mazarin exhorted 'Cardinal Bichi - - - - to do nothing too hastily 'etc. That those Letters were sent to all the Courts 'of Europe, but that the Cheat was quickly found 'out. Le Brun (continues he), Embassador of Spain 'at Munster, went more cunningly about it, but 'with no better success. He knew the Plenipo'tentiaries of France were not well pleased with 'those of Sweden, and that they would express their 'Discontent in their first Dispatches to the Court; 'wherefore

This Article had been printed ſome Months, when I received a Memorial, which enables me to give a clearer and more certain Account of Mr le Brun. Meſſire Antony le Brun, born at Dole, in the Year 1600, was a conſiderable Man, not only for his Parts and Imployments, but alſo for his noble Extraction, and his Father's Merit [I]. He was Attorney-General in the Parliament of Dole, and diſcharged the Duties of that Office with great Ability, during which time he was imployed in all the State Negotiations which concerned the Province. See the Hiſtory of the Siege of Dole, written by Preſident Boivin. He was ſent afterwards by Philip IV to the Diet of Ratiſbon, and from thence to the Court of the Emperor Ferdinand III. He was then made Counſellor of the Council of State for the Affairs of Flanders and Burgundy. I have ſaid before, that he was one of the Plenipotentiaries of his Catholic Majeſty, at the Conferences of Munſter, that he continued there alone, intruſted with that important Negotiation for a conſiderable time, and that after he had concluded the Treaty of Peace between Spain and the United Provinces, he was ſent Embaſſador to the Hague. The Services he did there to Philip IV, were ſo acceptable to That Prince, that he made him Counſellor in the Supreme Council, and in the Council of State, and then the Head of his Finances in the Low-Countries. This laſt Office was always filled up by Perſons of Quality, and often by Knights of the Golden Fleece. The Count d'Iſemburg, aſſociated to Mr de Brun in that Office, was one of thoſe Knights. Mr de Brun was honoured at that time with the Dignity of Baron, for him and his Male Iſſue (c). He died at the Hague, during his Embaſſy, and was buried in the Church

(c) You will find among his other Titles, that of Baron d'Aſpremont in Blaeu's Atlas, in the Map of Franche Comté, dedicated to him.

' wherefore he found means to get a Letter, ' wherein the Humour and the Proceedings of Oxenſtern, and his Father the Chancellor, were ſharply reflected upon. Le Brun, who thought it neceſſary to go beyond the Letter, altered ſome Paſſages in it in ſuch a manner, as was not only very offenſive to thoſe two Miniſters, but might have occaſioned a Rupture between the two Confederated Crowns. He went too far in the Matter, and thereby gave an advantage to the French, who being able to diſcover the falſity, found it no difficult thing to render every thing elſe ſuſpicious, and to cauſe a belief that it was all a Cheat (13).'

(13) Wicquef. de l'Ambaſſadeur, Tom. II, p. 138, 139.

One may argue, upon this Occaſion, quite contrary to Virgil If Servants, ſaid he, are ſo bold, what will not Maſters do?

(14) Virgil, Eclog. III, v. 26.

Quid dominî faciant audent cum talia fures (14)?

What Nonſenſe would the Fool, thy Maſter, prate,
When thou, his Knave, can'ſt talk at ſuch a Rate:

DRYDEN.

But we may ſay, if the Embaſſadors of the greateſt Kings do not ſcruple to divulge falſe News, and Calumnies forged by themſelves, what may not one expect from thoſe Men, who without a Name, and without being owned, take upon themſelves to write about the preſent Affairs for a Livelihood, and to ſatisfy their detracting Humour. Is it any Wonder, that ſuch People ſhould venture to publiſh the moſt abſurd Fictions, and give out, as Matter of Fact, the Falſities which they invent to indulge their Paſſions, and comply with the public Diſtemper? They meet with ſome Caſuiſts, who flatter that Paſſion; for I make no doubt, that there are ſeveral Eſcobar's and Baunî's, who abſolve private and public Perſons, that forge Calumnies for the Good of their Country; and I know that a Proteſtant Miniſter, the ſame who by ſo many Paſtoral Letters ſet up, as it were, for an Oecumenical Paſtor, or an Univerſal Biſhop, has declared, That every thing is lawful and fair againſt an open Enemy (15). Wicquefort, who was a Statesman, and not a Divine, had a better Senſe of Morality, as it appears from the following Words: Having ſaid, that a Miniſter of the Court of Vienna (16) forged a very ſcandalous Piece in the Year 1672, as if it had been a Diſcourſe made by the Commander de Gremonville, a Miniſter of France, to the Emperor's Council againſt the United Provinces, he adds: ' A Public ' Miniſter ought to abhor thoſe Impoſtures and ' wicked Contrivances; he ought to be above thoſe ' mean Tricks, which are only the Productions of ' a weak and perverſe Mind (17).

(15) He only excepts Aſſaſſination in another place. See the Entretiens ſur la Cabale Chimerique, pag. 86, & ſeq.

(16) Probably the Baron Liſola.

(17) Wicquef. ibid. pag. 140, 141.

[H] The French Writers took delight in abuſing him.] The following Paſſage is in a Book written by Naudé (18). His Deſign is to ſhew, That the Spaniards prevented the Concluſion of the Peace at Munſter, and he uſes theſe Words. ' The particular ' Agreement of the Dutch was no ſooner concluded; ' but Pegneranda made it his whole Buſineſs to break ' with us, and to raiſe Difficulties, not only about ' the Articles, not yet agreed upon, but alſo about ' thoſe wherein there was no longer any difficulty; ' inſomuch that he went away from Munſter, where ' he only left le Brun without any Power; which ' the whole Aſſembly was the more offended at, be' cauſe tho' he had been provided with a full Power, ' no body could believe that the King of Spain would ' truſt his moſt important Intereſts to a Burgundian, ' or have that great Work concluded . . . . . by a ' Man of ſo inconſiderable Quality, at the very ſame ' time when he recalled his chief Plenipotentiary, ' whom le Brun was uſed to obey, as a Servant obeys ' his Maſter (19). Every body will perceive, that Naudé knew not how great a Truſt the Court of Spain repoſed in M. le Brun. Another French Writer, who could not deny it, and who acknowledges the Credit of that Miniſter, finds fault with him only about the Meanneſs of his Equipage. ' Ab Hiſpa' niæ rege comes Penneranda cui additus Antonius ' Brunus à Sequanis, qui duobus ſervulis, ſciſſili veſte, ' & rheda ſemilacera, plus ponderis rebus addidit, ' quam dimidia pars totius cœtus (20). ..... On the ' part of the King of Spain was Count Penneranda, ' with whom was joined Antony de Brun, a Burgun' dian, who, with two Servants, a ragged Coat, and ' a worn out Chariot, was of more weight in the Af' fairs, than half the whole Aſſembly.

(18) Intitulé, Jugement de tout ce qui a été imprimé contre le Cardinal Mazarin, depuis le 6. Janvier juſques à la declaration du 1 Avril, 1649.

(19) Pag. 587.

(20) Priolus de rebus Gallicis, lib. x. n. 3. pag. 344.

[I] He was conſiderable for his noble Extraction, and his Father's Merit.] It has been a Noble Family ever ſince the time of Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy. It appears by ſome public Acts, regiſtred in the Chamber of Accounts at Dole, that John Brun was an Eſquire, and poſſeſſed ſome Lands and Lordſhips in Fief, which he held of that Duke, and for which he paid him Homage in the Year 1447. The Act of that Homage is ſigned by the ſame Duke. The Arms of that Family (21) are, Or, three Grapes purple, ſupported by two Lyons Or, armed, and languid, Gules. The Father of our Antony de Brun, was Charles Brun: He was Counſellor in the Parliament of Dole in the Year 1595. The King of Spain ſent him twice to the Court of France, when Marſhal de Biron, Governor of the Duchy of Burgundy, occaſioned ſome Troubles, and when the Neutrality of the two Burgundies was renewed. He was likewiſe ſent to the Duke of Savoy, the Duke of Lorrain, and the Duke of Wirtemberg, for ſome important Affairs of the Houſe of Auſtria. He was alſo deputed by his Parliament, and his Province, to pay the Homage of Fidelity to the Archduke Albert, and the Infanta Iſabella Clara Eugenia, when the King of Spain yeilded to them Franche Comté and the Low Countries. He acquitted himſelf of thoſe Imployments to the Satisfaction of the Public and

(21) They may be ſeen in the Map of the County of Burgundy, in Blaeu's Atlas.

Church of the Carmelites at Mechlen (d). I ſhall ſpeak of his Children [K]. Theſe Words of Balſac ought not to be forgotten: 'I refer it to the French and Burgundians, to M. Brun, the Demoſthenes of Dole; and to M. le Maiſtre, the Cicero of Paris (e).'

(d) Taken from a Manuſcript Memorial.

(e) Balzac, Diſcourſe 2, to Cardinal Bentivoglio, printed with the Socrate Chretien, pag. 472.

and of his Prince. His other Son, JOHN BRUN, was Counſellor in the Parliament of Dole (22).

(22) Taken from a MSS. Memorial.

[K] I ſhall ſpeak of his Children.] He married Donna Magdalena de Acoſta, a noble and ancient Family of Spain, by whom he had many Children of both Sexes. Don LORENZO de BRUN, one of them, Baron d'Aſpremont, &c. was Captain of Cuiraſſiers in the Service of the King of Spain againſt the Portugueſe, when he was killed at the Battle of Villaviciosa. Two of his Brothers died in the ſame Service, without being married. There remains a fourth, who married in Languedoc, and has a Family. He reſides in Burgundy (23), and is Knight of Honour in the Parliament of that Province. A Seat of his has been erected into a Marquiſate (24).

(23) I think Franche Comté is meant by it.

(24) Taken from the ſame MSS.

BRUN (CHARLES la), Chief Painter to the French King, Director of the Manufactures, &c [A], was one of the greateſt Men that ever France produced for Painting. His being elected Prince of the Academy of Painters at Rome, where they pretend to have exceeded, for ſo many Ages, all other Nations in the Knowledge of the Liberal Arts, is a ſufficient Proof of his Ability. He was born in the Year 1618, with ſo many Diſpoſitions to become a great Painter, that, at three Years of Age, he took Coals out of the Fire, and ſketch'd upon the Hearth, and againſt the Chimney, having no Light but that of the Fire. When fourteen Years old, he drew the Picture of his Father (a), who was a Sculptor, and performed it ſo well, that the Picture is ſtill accounted a very good Piece. At that time there was no Painter in France more eſteemed than Mr Vouët [B]. Mr le Brun, who lived in his Houſe, and diſtinguiſhed himſelf from his other Scholars, got the Affection and Eſteem of Chancellor Seguier, who gave him a good Penſion, and afterwards ſent him to Rome, where he maintained him for ſome Years. His eaſy way of drawing, and the Correctneſs of his Works, ſurprized the moſt famous Painters, and the beſt Sculptors of Italy. He ſaw there the fineſt Pieces that could be ſeen, both Ancient and Modern, and perfected his good Taſte, which has been ſo much admired ſince. He always preſerved a deep ſenſe of Gratitude for Chancellor Seguier, and gave an admirable Inſtance of it after the Death of his Patron, by the divine Service that was performed for him in the Church of the Fathers of the Oratory, and by a Mauſoleum erected there according to the Draught he had made of it, and under his Direction. At his return from Rome he very much diſtinguiſhed himſelf from the beſt Painters of Paris; and the firſt Preſident de Bellievre proved a new Patron to him. He painted Madam du Pleſſis Belliere, Mother to Marſhal de Crequi's Lady, ſo well, that her Picture was, and is ſtill, accounted a Maſter-piece. Cardinal Mazarin came to know him by ſome other Pictures which he drew for the ſame Lady; and, as he was a good Judge of Painting, he expreſſed a great Eſteem for Mr le Brun's Pencil, and made him famous every where. After the Peace of the Pyrenees, the King, being reſolved to make the Liberal Arts flouriſh, found no body better qualified than Mr le Brun to preſide at the Gobelins with the ſeveral Employments he beſtowed upon him; which put him in a capacity of diſcovering the whole Extent of his noble Talents. He was not only an excellent Painter, but alſo a Man of a vaſt and inventive Genus, and fit for every thing. He knew the Hiſtory and Manners of all Nations. In an Hour's time he cut out Work enough for many different Artiſts. He ſupplied the King's Sculptors and Goldſmiths with Deſigns, and gave many of them to paint whole Apartments, and to make Cabinets and Hangings. When he was about the large Picture of Darius's Family, from which one of the five Pieces of Tapeſtry of Alexander's Hiſtory was made, and which is now in the King's great Apartment at Verſailles, His Majeſty ſpent near two Hours every Day at Fontainbleau to ſee him paint, and ſome time after ſent him his Picture, and then a Patent of Nobility (b), and a Coat of Arms (c). The Great Duke of Tuſcany conceived ſo great an Eſteem for him, that he did him the Honour to aſk him for his Picture, and to inform him that he would willingly keep Correſpondence with him. The great Eſteem he was in at the French Court appeared during the Sickneſs of which he died on the twelfth of February, 1690 [C]. He

(a) Mr Borrault, in his Hommes Illuſtres, pag. 216, ſays that le Brun, being but ten or twelve Years of Age, drew the Picture of his Grandfather, who was a Sculptor at Paris.

(b) Dated December, 1662.

(c) Which are a Son in a Field Argent, and a Flower de-luce Azure, with a Creſt Felle.

[A] Director of the Manufactures, &c.] To fill up this & cætera, I obſerve, That Mr le Brun was Director of the Royal Manufactures of the Houſehold Goods of the Crown; Director, Chancellor, and Rector, of the Royal Academy of Painting and Sculpture, and Prince of St Luke's Academy at Rome.

[B] At fourteen Years of Age he drew his Father's Picture - - - - There was not at that time any Painter in France more eſteemed than Mr Vouët.] I mean Simon Vouët, who had two Brothers Painters alſo. See the Book entitled Noms des Peintres les plus celebres, or, Names of the moſt famous Painters, printed at Paris, Anno 1679, pag. 48.

He had a Penſion from the King, and lodged in the Galleries of the Louvre. It was he, who painted the Vault of the Chapel of St Germain en Laye, and the moſt excellent Painters in France as Mignard, Bourdon, Tetelin, and le Sueur, were his Scholars. He was a Native of Paris, and died in the Year 1649.

[C] The great Eſteem he was in at the French Court appeared in his laſt Illneſs.] The King and the greateſt Lords often ſent to know how he did. Mr de Louvois ſent him the moſt famous Phyſicians. He was viſited by the Prince of Condé, and many Lords of the firſt Rank.

He was buried in the Chappel he had built for himself, in the Church of St Nicolas du Chardonneret, his Parish, where he founded two Masses to be said every Day for ever. He also left a Fund to marry three poor Maids every Year. He died without Issue, and therefore Mr le Brun, his Nephew, Auditor of the Accompts, will be his only Heir after his Wife's decease (d).

(d) The Text and Remarks of this Article are but an Abridgment of what is to be found concerning Mr le Brun in the Mercure Galant, for the Month of - - - - - 1690.

Since the first Edition of this Dictionary, we have seen an Encomium upon Mr le Brun, written by Mr Perrault, in his Hommes Illustres. I could take many Particulars out of that Book, but I rather chuse to refer the Reader to it. The Widow of that excellent Painter died in the Year 1699.

BRUNUS (LEONARD). Look for ARETIN (LEONARD).

BRUNUS (JORDANUS), a Native of Nola, in the Kingdom of Naples, was a Man of great Parts, but he made an ill use of his Knowledge; for he wrote not only against Aristotle's Philosophy [A], at a time when such a thing could not be done without occasioning great Disorders, and exposing one's self to many Persecutions, but also against the most important Truths of Religion [B]. Being expelled from Italy he retired into a Country less dangerous for such Philosophers as he was (a). He run over Germany, France, &c. and it had been well for him if he had gone on, for, when he returned into Italy, he was burnt there, say some, as an impious Man, in the Year 1600. I shall set down the Titles of some of his Works [C], and mention some things relating to four or five of his other Books [D]. He

(a) See the second Letter of Acidalius: it was written in 1592, to Baron Forgats, who was then at Padua. Acidalius asks him whether it was true, according to common Report, that Jordanus Brunus taught at Padua.

[A] He wrote against Aristotle's Philosophy.] See the Book intituled, Jordani Bruni Nolani Camœracensis Acrotismus, seu rationes articulorum Physicorum adversus Peripateticos Parisiis propositorum, &c. It was printed at Wittemberg in the Year 1588, in 8vo. You will find in it a Letter which Brunus wrote to Henry III, one that he wrote to the Rector of the University of Paris, and one he wrote to the Friends of the true Philosophy. Parisiensibus & aliis ? generosiss. Galliarum regno philosophiæ simulatricis philosophiæ dogmatum amicis & defensoribus. You will find in it, Excubitor, seu Jo Hennequini Apologetica declamatio habita in auditorio regio Parisiensis Academiæ in festo Pentecostes anno 1586, pro Nolani articulis; and at the end of the Articles are these Words: 'Articuli de Natura & Mundo à Nolano in Principibus Europæ Academus propositi: quos Jo Hennequinus nobilis Parisiensis sub ejusdem felicibus auspiciis contra vulgaris & cujuscunque adversariæ Philosophiæ Professores triduo Pentecostes in Universitate Parisiorum defendendos evulgavit: brevibus adjectis ratiocinibus (1). — — Theses concerning Nature and the World, proposed by Nolanus in the principal Universities of Europe, which John Hennequin, a Noble Parisian, put up to defend in the University of Paris, the third Day after Pentecost, against the Professors of the common or any contrary Philosophy; with short Reasons added thereto.' It appears from these Words, that Brunus acted the part of a Knight Errant in point of Philosophy, being always ready to engage any one that was willing to enter the Lists with him, &c.

(1) Taken from Nicodemo, Addizioni alla Bibliot. Napolet. p. 90. That Book was printed at Naples, in the Year 1683.

[B] And the most important Truths of Religion.] It is said that he wrote some Books, wherein he maintained, that there are a great many Worlds, all eternal; that the Jews only descended from Adam and Eve, and that all other Men were sprung from a Race created by GOD long before; that all the Miracles of Moses were an Effect of Magic, and exceeded the Wonders performed by the other Magicians only because he had made a greater Progress in Magic; that he himself forged the Laws he delivered to the Israelites; that the holy Scripture is a meer Fiction, &c. John Henry Ursinus, who informs me of this, adds, that Brunus was burnt at Rome, in the Field of Flora, for those impious Doctrines, on the ninth of February, 1600 (2). He mentions all these things upon the Credit of Scioppius, who had given a full Account of them in a Letter. Nicodemus, in his Additions to the Bibliotheca Napoletana, says, that it is not certainly known whether every thing related by Ursinus be true. It is somewhat strange that one should not know at eighty Years end whether a Dominican (3), was burnt at Rome in a public Place for his Blasphemies. When Facts of this nature are uncertain, they are very like to be false.

(2) Joh. Henr. Ursinus in Præfatione Tractatus de Zoroastre.

(3) Ursinus says that Brunus was professione Dominicanus.

[C] I shall set down the Titles of some of his Works.] He fell into Raymund Lullius's Notions, and refined them, and invented several Methods of Artificial Memory; all this, say they, discovers a great Genius; but there is so much Obscurity in them, that they can be of no use. See Morhofius's Polyhistor (4). However it be, here are the Titles De specierum scrutinio & Lampade combinatoria Raymundi Lullii, Prague, 1588, in 8vo. That Book was put in the Index of the Inquisition (5). It has been reprinted several times with a Tract of the same Author, de progressu logicæ venationis, among Lullius's Works. 'Jordanus Brunus de monade, numero & figura: item de innumerabili, immenso, &c. Francfort, 1591, in 8vo. 'Jordani Bruni Nolani de imaginum, signorum, & idearum compositione, ad omnia inventionum, dispositionum, & memoriæ genera libri tres (6). Francfort, 1591, in 8vo. De umbris idearum, Paris. 1582. Cantus Circæus ad memoriæ praxim ordinatus quam ipse judiciariam appellat, Paris. 1583. De compendiosa Architectura & complemento artis Lullii, ibid 1580 (7). Artificium perorandi.' Alstedius published it at Francfort in 1612 (8). Vossius, page 510 of the first Volume of his Theological Disputations, quotes Jordanus Brunus de Hæreticis; but he should have said Conradus Brunus.

(4) Pag. 365, & seq.

(5) Toppi Bibliotheca Napoletana, pag. 152.

(6) Nicodemo, ubi supra.

(7) Du Verdier in Supplem Bibl. Gesn. pag. 33.

(8) Morhof. Polyh. pag. 355.

[D] - - - - - - and some things relating to four or five of his other Books.] I have seen none of Brunus's Books mentioned in the foregoing Remarks; but I have seen some others which are not to be found in the Catalogues I have consulted (9). I have seen the Book intituled Giordano Bruno Nolano, De causa, principio, & Uno. It was printed at Venice in the Year 1584, in 12mo, and dedicated by the Author to Michael de Castelnau, Seigneur de Mauvissiere, Embassador of France to Queen Elizabeth. I find in the Epistle Dedicatory, that this Lord protected Giordano Bruno against the Malice of his Enemies. Mi riduco à mente come - - - - - mi fiete sussistente & salde difensore ne gl' injusti oltraggi ch' io patisco.——Brings to my Mind how effectual and solid a Protector you have been to me against the unjust Outrages which I suffer. The Author pretends that his heroical Firmness prevented his falling into Despair; for his ill Fortune was attended with a thousand Disgraces: nothing was wanting to complete it but the malicious disdain of a Mistress. 'Wherefore I had need to have been of a truly heroic 'Spirit, not to submit, despair, or yield to such a 'rapid Torrent of criminal impostures; whereby 'they have with all their Might drawn upon me 'the Envy of the Ignorant, the Presumption of Sophists, the Detraction of the Malevolent, the Murmurs of Slaves, the Whispers of Mercenaries, the 'Contradiction of Domestics, the Suspicions of the 'Stupid, the Scruples of Tale-bearers, the Zeal of 'Hypocrites,

(9) I speak thus as far as I can remember, and I even except la cena de' Cineri; for it is a Book, the Title of which is to be found in du Verdier, ubi supra.

He wrote some that were not Philosophical; for in the Year 1582 he published an Italian Comedy at Paris, intituled Candelaio (b). He gave himself the Title there of Academico

(b) Du Verdier in Supplem. Bibl. Gesn. pag. 33.

' Hypocrites, the Hatred of the Barbarous, the Fury ' of the Vulgar, the Madness of the Popular, the La- ' mentations of the Abandoned, the Cries of the Chas- ' tised; certainly there wanted nothing, but the ' unkind foolish and malicious Disdain of a Woman, ' whose false Tears alone are more powerful than ' the most swelling Waves, and rigid Tempests of ' Presumption, Envy, Detraction, Murmurs, Trea- ' chery, Disdain, Hatred, and Madness.' Deue bisognava che fusse un animo veramente heroico per non dismetter le braccia, disperarsi, & darsi vinto à si rapido torrente di criminali imposture, con quali à tutta possa m'haue fatto empeto l'invidia d'ignoranti, la presuntion di sophisti, la detrattion di malevoli, la murmuration di servitori, gli susurri di mercenarii, le contradittioni di domestici, le suspitioni di stupidi, gli scrupoli di riportatori, gli zeli d'hypocriti, gl' odii di barbari, le furie di plebei, furori di popolari, lamenti di riprocssi, & voci di castigati. Oue altro non manchava ch' un discortese, pazzo, & malitioso sdegno feminile, di cui le false lachrime soglon esser piu potenti, che quantosivoglia tumide onde, & rigide tempeste di presuntioni, invidie, detrattioni, mormorii, tradimenti, ire, sdegne, odii, & furori. The same Epistle Dedicatory contains the Substance of the five Dialogues of which that Work consists. The first is an Apology for la Cena de le Cineri, which is the Title of a Book I shall speak of hereafter. The second treats of the first Cause or Principle, and shews how the efficient and formal Cause are reunited in one Subject, which is the Soul of the World; and how the formal general Cause, which is but one, differs from the formal particular Cause, which is infinitely multiplied. The Author declares, among other things, that his System removes the fear of Hell, which, says he, spoils the sweetest Pleasures of Life (10). He shews in the third Dialogue, that David of Dinant was in the right to look upon Matter as a Divine Thing. He maintains that the substantial Form is never destroyed, and that Matter and Form differ only as Power and Act: from whence he concludes, that the whole Universe is but one Being. He shews in the following Dialogue, that the Matter of Bodies is not different from that of Spirits; and lastly, he concludes in the fifth Dialogue, that the Being which really exists is One, Infinite, Immoveable, and Indivisible. Senza differenza di tutto & parte, principio & principiato. - - Without distinction of Whole and Part, Cause and Effect: That an infinite Extension is necessarily reduced to an Individuum, as an infinite Number is reduced to Unity. This is a general Notion of what he expresses more particularly in his Summaries, and more at large in his Dialogues; from whence it appears, that his Hypothesis is in the main altogether like Spinozism. There is at the end of the first Dialogue a Digression in Praise of Queen Elizabeth.

(10) Spento à fatto il terror vano & puerile de la morte, si conosco una parte de la felicità che apporta la nostra contemplatione, secondo i fondamenti de la nostra philosophia: atteso che lei toglie il fosco velo del pazzo, sentimento circa l'Orco & avaro Caronte, onde il piu dolce de la nostra vita ne si rape & avelena.

Here follows another Book, which he dedicated to the same Mr de Castelnau. Giordano Bruno Nolano. De l'infinito Universo & Mondi. Stampato in Venetia. Anno M.D. LXXXIV. in 12mo. It consists of five Dialogues, wherein he alledges many Reasons to shew that the Universe is infinite, and that there is an infinite number of Worlds. He declares for Copernicus's Opinion concerning the Motion of the Earth round the Sun. I have also seen his Spaccio de la bestia trionfante, proposto da Giove. Effettuato dal consiglio, Revelato da Mercurio, Recitato da Sophia, Udito da Sauline, Registrato dal Nolano. Divisio in tre Dialogi, subdivise in tre parti - - - Stampato in Parigi M.D.XCIV. in 12mo. He dedicated it to Sir Philip Sidney, who had done him many good Services in England. 'Tis a Moral Treatise, oddly composed; for the Author represents the Nature of Vices and Virtues under the Emblems of the Celestial Constellations turned out of the Sky to make room for new Asterisms, which represent Truth, Goodness, &c. Du Verdier Vau-privas reckons, among the Works of our Jordano, la Cena de le Cineri descritta in cinque dialogbi, per quattro interlocutori contra considerationc circa dei Segetti. Stampata nell' anno 1580 (11). The Copy I have seen is in 12mo, and was printed in 1584. That Book was dedicated by the Author to Mr de Castelnau, unico refugio de le Muse, during his Embassy in England. The reason of the Title is, that those Conversations are supposed to have been a Table-talk the first day in Lent. The Opinion of Copernicus is maintained among other things in that Work; and it is added, that there is an infinite number of Worlds like this, and that they are all intellectual Animals, which have Vegetative and Rational Individuums as there are upon Earth. The contrary Opinion is called childish. ' La quarta afferma ' esser conformi in materia quelto mondo nostro ' ch' è detto globo della terra, con gli mondi che ' son gli corpi de gl' altri astri, & che è cosa da ' fanciulli haver creduto & credere altrimente. Et ' che quei son tanti animali intellettuali: & che ' non meno inquelli vegetano & intendono molti ' & innumerabili individui semplici, & composti, che ' veggiamo vivere & vegetar nel dorso di questo (12). ' - - The fourth affirms, that this World of ours, which ' is called the Globe of the Earth, is composed of ' like matter with the Worlds which are the Bodies ' of the other Stars; and that it is childish to be- ' lieve otherwise. And that they are so many intel- ' lectual Animals, and that there are in them in- ' numerable, vegetable, and intelligent Individuals, ' simple and compound, as well as we see here on ' the Surface of this Globe.' Lastly, I have seen li Heroici Furori of that Writer. They contain two Parts, each of which is divided into five Dialogues. The Author wrote them during his stay in England, and dedicated them to Sir Philip Sidney. There are many Italian Verses in that Work, and many Cabalistical Notions; for, under certain Figures, which seem to represent the Transports and Disorders of Love, he pretends to raise the Soul to the contemplation of the most sublime Truths, and cure it of it's Imperfections. There are some Poems at the end, wherein he celebrates the Beauty of the London Women.

(11) Du Verdier, Supplem. Bibl. Gesn. pag. 33.

(12) Giordano Bruno, Epist. Dedicat. della Cena de le Cineri.

Two general Observations may be made upon the Notions of this Author: One is, That his chief Doctrines are a thousand times more obscure, than the most incomprehensible things that have been advanced by the Followers of Thomas Aquinas, or John Scotus (13). For can any thing be more contrary to the Notions of our Minds, than to maintain that an Infinite Extension is wholly in each point of Space, and that an Infinite Number does not differ from Unity? ' L' uno, l'infinito, lo ente & ' quello che è in tutto, è per tutto anzi è l'istezzo ' UBIQUE. Et che cossi la infinita dimenzione ' per non essere magnitudine coincide con l'indi- ' viduo, come la infinita moltitudine, per non es- ' ser numero coincide con la unita (14).' The other Observation is, That he ridiculously fancies, that whatever he says is repugnant to the System of the Peripatetics, which is the Sophism called Ignoratio Elenchi. There is nothing but a Dispute about Words between Him and Them, as to what concerns the Immutability or Destructibility of Things. They never pretended that Matter, as it is a Substance, and the common Subject of Generation and Corruption, is capable of any change. But they maintain, that the Production and Destruction of Forms supposes, that the Subject, which acquires and loses them successively, is not immutable and unalterable. Brunus cannot deny it, but by taking the Words in a particular sense; and therefore it is only a misunderstanding and an equivocation. It appears from the following passage, that he acknowledges a Mutability in his one Being: ' Per il ' che, says he (15), non vi sonorà mal nel orecchio la ' sentenza di Heraclito, che disse tutte le cose ' essere uno, il quale per la MUTABILITA' ' hà in se tutte le cose; & perche tutte le forme ' sono in esso, conseguentemente tutte le diffini- ' tioni gli convegnono; & per tanto le contradditto- ' rie enunciatione son vere. Et quello che fà la ' moltitudine ne le cose non è lo ente, non è la ' cosa: ma quel che appare, che si rapresenta al ' senso & è nella superficie della cosa. - - - - Ahere- ' sors

(13) That is, Followers as to Philosophy.

(14) Giordano Bruno, Epist. Dedicat. del tratto de la causa, Principio & Uno.

(15) Id. Dialogo quinto del medesimo trattato, pag. 127.

Academico di nulla Academia, detto il Faſtidito. Some ingenious Perſons pretend that Mr Des Cartes has borrowed ſome of his Notions from him [E].

'fore the Opinion, Heraclites, will not ſound ill in 'your Ears, which ſays that all things are one, be-'cauſe MUTABILITY contains all things, and 'becauſe all Forms are in it, conſequently all Defi-'nitions agree to it; and thus contradictory Propo-'ſitions are true, and the cauſe of the multitude of 'Things is not the Being, not the Subſtance, but thoſe 'things that appear are only repreſented to the ſenſes, 'and are the ſuperficies of the Subſtance of the thing.' A Peripatetic would grant him the greateſt part of what he ſays here, if the Equivocations were once removed. Pray take notice of this Abſurdity: He tells us, that Being is not the Cauſe of the Exiſtence of many Things; but that this Multitude conſiſts in what appears on the Surface of the Subſtance. In anſwer to which, I ask, Whether thoſe Appearances, which ſtrike our Senſes, exiſt or do not exiſt? If they exiſt, they are Beings: and therefore Beings are the Cauſe of the Multitude of Things. If they do not exiſt, it will follow that Non-Entity acts upon us, and becomes ſenſible; which is abſurd and impoſſible. There is no getting out of this Difficulty, but by the Help of an Ambiguity. Spinoziſm is liable to the ſame Inconveniencies.

Sorel mentions and confutes ſome of our Bruno's Opinions, and even endeavours to excuſe him; but he does not go the right way about it. Read what follows. 'Though Jordanus Brunus, ſays (16) he, might be in an Error as well as ſome others; yet we ought to conſider the Nature of his Work, which is a Poem, and that ſince Authors have been allowed at all times to make uſe of Fables and Fictions in ſuch Books, it is no wonder he did it. His Performance ſeems to be the more diverting, becauſe he has ingeniouſly deſcribed an Infinity of Worlds, and informs us, how Metrodorus, Leucippus, Epicurus, and ſome other Philoſophers, underſtood it. — He always affirms, that GOD is every where, and fills up all Things, aſcribing to the ſupream Eſſence whatever is due to it; and as he does not meddle with any Articles of the Chriſtian Faith, he might have come off, notwithſtanding ſome few Words in his Commentaries, that ſeem to thoſe who underſtand them to be a little too free, by giving out all thoſe things as meer Hypotheſes and Suppoſitions, which he did not approve, and had wrote in Germany, where he had been for ſome time, and where thoſe Opinions were acceptable, and there was more Liberty than in Italy (17).' It may be anſwered, I. That ſince Sorel acknowledges (18), as he has done, and was obliged to do, that Bruno's Poem is like that of Lucretius, he ſhould not have ſaid, that the Author might very well inſert ſeveral Fictions in it; for there is a great difference between that ſort of Poems, and thoſe of Taſſo and Arioſto; thoſe are dogmatical Books, but theſe are full of Fictions. A Man is no leſs anſwerable for an impious Thing which he dogmatically advances in a Syſtem written in Verſe, than when he teaches it in a Syſtem written in Proſe. II. It ought to be known, that Bruno wrote ſome Books in Proſe, wherein he advances the ſame Opinions as in his Poems. Sorel was not altogether ignorant of it (19). III. God's Immenſity, &c. are not Doctrines leſs impious in Jordanus Brunus than in Spinoza: Thoſe two Writers are extravagant Unitarians; they acknowledge but one Subſtance in Nature. Sorel cannot be excuſed for not knowing this. IV. It is not true, that the Opinions concerning an infinite World, and innumerable Earths and Suns, were acceptable to the Germans at that time. It is a ſad thing (thus he concludes (20) that a Man who wrote very fine Books, ſhould meet with ſuch an unfortunate Death. Theſe Words depend upon what he had been ſaying in the foregoing Page: 'Father Merſenne mentions ſome of Bruno's Opinions in his Book againſt the Deiſts, wherein he repreſents that Author as an Atheiſt and a Teacher of Impiety, who was burnt at Rome by a Sentence of the Inquiſition. Perhaps it was for ſomething elſe than what is contained in his Books de Minimo, and de Immenſo (21).'

We are told of one Brunus, who wrote a Panegyric upon the Devil (22). I do not doubt but that it is the ſame Brunus of Nola, who is the Subject of this Article.

[E] Some ingenious Perſons pretend, that Mr Des Cartes borrowed ſome of his Notions from him.] Mr Leibnitz cites a learned Mathematician, who obſerves, that Mr Des Cartes ſuppreſſes the Names of the Authors whom he pirates, and that he is indebted to Jordanus Brunus, and to Kepler for his Vortices. See the Journal of Leipſic 1682, pag. 187. The learned Mr Huet, Biſhop of Auranches, gave a long Liſt of the Hints that this Brunus might have furniſhed Des Cartes. 'Extitit inter novitios Philoſophos Jordanus quidam Brunus Nolanus, quem Carteſianæ doctrinæ anteſignanum jure dicas: adeò accurate omnem propemodum ejus compoſitionem præſignavit in eo libro quem de immenſo & innumerabilibus inſcripſit (23). —— 'There was, among the new Set of Philoſophers, one Jordanus Brunus of Nola, who may juſtly be called the Founder of the Carteſian Philoſophy: he has ſo exactly pointed out almoſt his whole Compoſition, in his Book concerning Immenſity and Innumerables.'

(16) Sorel, ubi Infra, pag. 238, & ſeq.

(17) Sorel de la perfection de l'homme, p. 241.

(18) Ibid. p. 242.

(19) Brunus Nolanus - - - - compoſed ſome Poems, on which he himſelf wrote a Commentary in Proſe, —— The firſt Poem is de Minimo —— then comes his Poem de Menſura & Figura —— to make way for his Poem de Immenſo & innumerabilibus ſeu de Univerſo & Mundis. Id. ibid. pag. 238.

(20) Id. ibid p. 242.

(21) Sorel de la Perfection de l'homme, pag. 241.

(22) Joannes Bruno Italus laudavit diabolum Wittembergæ publice, Krekm. Syſt. Rhet. ſpeciali. lib. in fine Vide pag. 1647, Tom. II. Oper. Edit. Genev. 1614, in Fol. If I am not miſtaken, the Word Johannes crept in inſtead of Jordanus.

(23) Huetii Cenſura Philoſophiæ Carteſianæ, cap. viii, pag. 215. Edit. Paris 1698.

BRUSCHIUS (GASPAR), was born at Egra, in Bohemia, the nineteenth of Auguſt, 1518 (a). He had a great Inclination, and a great Facility, to make Verſes. He could make a very great Number extempore, which were not bad (b). Nothing was more fluent, nor of a more eaſy and natural Strain, than his Latin Verſes. He began early to publiſh ſome of them on ſeveral Subjects. He got a Reputation by them, and attained to the poetical Crown, to the Dignity of Poet Laureat, and of Count Palatin: He received that Honour at Vienna from Ferdinand of Auſtria, King of the Romans, in the Year 1552 (c). His buſineſs thither was to preſent a Work to Maximilian, King of Hungary, which he had dedicated to him (d). It was the firſt Century of the German Monaſteries. In his return from Vienna, he ſtopped at Paſſau, where he found a Protector and Benefactor in the Perſon of Wolfgang of Salms, Biſhop of that Place. He reſolved to ſettle there, and to remove his Library and Family thither (e), and hoped he might go on there conveniently with a great Work that he had undertaken. It was The Hiſtory of all the Biſhoprics and Biſhops of Germany. He had travelled much (f), and looked well whether this new Settlement continued long; for I find that Bruſchius was at Baſil in the Month of June, 1553 (g), and had got the Cittadel of Oporin, Arcem Opo-rinianam, ſo they called that famous Printer's Houſe (h), which ſtood on a riſing Ground (i). There it was that he publiſhed ſome Writings he had finiſhed at Paſſau, ſome in Proſe, and others in Verſe. He ſpake very freely in them of the Corruption of Manners that he had obſerved in Vienna, and of the Ravages which the Troops of Maurice, Elector of Saxony, that were ſent to the Aſſiſtance of Hun-

(a) Bruſchius in Prolmatio, pag. 336.

(b) Melch. Adam in vitis Philoſ. pag. 183.

(c) Bruſch. ubi ſupra, pag. 320, ult.

(d) Id. ib. p. 324.

(e) Id. ibid. pag. 338, 366.

(f) Ib. pag. 328.

(g) Ibid. p. 326.

(h) Ibid. 325.

(i) Melch. Adami Vitæ Philoſoph. pag. 183.

gary

gary againſt the Turks, had committed on the very Lands of the Romans [A]. He was married (k), but had no Children, when, in the Month of January 1553, he recommended his Nephew Gaſpar Bruſchius to the Principal of the College of Paſſau (l). He was far from being rich, and would have had much ado to maintain himſelf, if he had not been aſſiſted by thoſe for whom he made Verſes. He received Preſents alſo from the Abbots and Abbeſſes, whoſe Monaſteries he deſcribed. He was very well received by the Abbeſs of the Convent of the Caczi (m); he ſupped and danced with her, and obtained ſome Preſents from her, a Gold Crown, and a Handkerchief, &c (n). The Liberalities of ſome Abbots, while he was with Oporin at Baſil, enabled him to buy a new ſuit of Clothes: But when he found that appearing well dreſſed in the Streets, procured him many marks of Reſpect from the Vulgar, he tore his new Finery to Pieces, as a Slave which had uſurped his Maſter's Honours [B]. Some ſay, that his Treatiſes

(k) Bruſch. in Poemat. p. 366.

(l) Id. ibid. pag. 381.

(m) Melch. Adam in Vitis Philoſoph. pag. 113.

(n) Deſcriptis illius Cœnobii Cæcilienſis) antiquitatibus, diſceſſuro ἡ χρηστὴ ἀββατοισα dono dedit coronatam aurum, ſudarium, cornua ibicis, & alia plurima. - - - - - When he had deſcribed the Antiquities of that Convent, and was about to depart, the good Abbeſs made him a preſent of a Gold Crown, a Handkerchief, a Roebuck's horns, and ſeveral other things. Id. ibid.

[A] He ſpoke freely of the Corruption of Manners which he had obſerved in Vienna, and of the Ravages which the Elector of Saxony's Troops committed on the Lands of the King of the Romans.] I ſhall tranſcribe ſome of his Verſes: they will ſerve two Purpoſes, to comment on my Text, and to give a Specimen of that Author's Muſe.

Luxuriat tanquam tuta omni parte Vienna,
Luxuriat miris Auſtria tota modis.
Et cum copia nunc ſit Bacchi, ita vivitur illic
Ac ſi Turca ferox nullus in orbe foret:
Aut procul ad Tanaim à noſtris diſſitus oris
Non noſtras raperet barbarus hoſtis opes.
Tantum indulgetur genio, meeantur at omnes
Auſtriaci recte hoc nomen agreſte viri:
Quo Paſchaleri populo dicuntur ab omni
Quim latè nomen Rhenus, & Iſter habent;
Paſchata dum ſemper celebrant, jejunia nunquam,
Dum ſemper Baccho, dum Cereique vacant.
Nullus ibi aut rarus timor eſt Dominique Deique,
Rarus honos legum, rara pudicitia.
Et quia vulgus ibi variis ex partibus orbis
Collectum eſt diſcors nil niſi colluvies.
Nunc Hiſpanorum ſuccumbunt enſe Croatæ:
Nunc Germani etiam Pannoniique viri.
Vidi Germano ſtillantes ſanguine ſævos
Hiſpanorum enſes non equidem ipſe ſemel:
Imo impunè etiam fieri hoc, nec rurſus ad ullum
Supplicium hæc adeo noxia monſtra rapi (1).

(1) Bruſchius in Poematiis cum Tractatu de Lauſatico & Patavio Germanico impreſſis, pag. 338.

Vienna lies in Luxury and Eaſe,
All Auſtria revels in ſurpriſing ſort:
Diſſolv'd in flowing Wine they live ſecure,
As tho' no Danger threaten'd, no furious Turk
Were in the World, nor any barb'rous Hoſt
Come from the diſtant Banks of Tanais,
Plunder'd our miſerable Countries Store.
So pamper'd are their Lives, they merit well
The Nick-name Paſchalers, by which they're known
Far as the Rhine and Danube take their Courſe.
With them the Eaſter o'er: no Lent they know,
To Wine and Feaſting they devote each Day.
Rev'rence of Deity, Regard for humane Laws,
Or Chaſtity, with them, are Virtues rare:
And as the People are a lawleſs Mob
Gather'd from various Climes: Croatians now,
Now Germans, and in turn Pannonians, fall
A Sacrifice to Spaniſh Cruelty:
Reeking with German Gore I've often ſeen
The Spaniards Swords, and yet no Juſtice dare
Free and unpuniſh'd the dire Monſters ſlay.

Thus much for what Concerns the Corruption of Manners at Vienna, and the Impunity that the Audacioufneſs of the Spaniards found there. Here follows the Deſcription of the good Diſcipline of the Auxiliary Troops:

Deſcendit nuper dux auxiliaribus armis
Saxonicus, ſecum millia multa trahens:
Ingentes equidem peditumque equitumque cohortes
Inſtructos animis militiaque viros:
Sed quos abſimiles Turciſque Getiſque profecto
Si recte inſpicias, dixeris eſſe parum.
Qui quamvis Chriſto ſint per baptiſma renati
Infertique Deo, & turba profeſſa Deum
Quem ſcelerum ultorem norunt, quem ſumere pœnas
A raptoribus, à furibus atque ſciunt,
Per fas perque nefas nihilominus obvia quæque
Sunt auſi hoſtili diripuiſſe manu.
Vidi egomet, quantam furtis cladem atque rapinis
Intulerint Boiis Auſtriaciſque caſis.
Imo caſis non tantum & haris: ſed & omnibus aris
Divorum templis, munoribuſque ſacris.
Nil fuit intra etiam divum penetralia tutum,
Nec puerile genus, nec muliebre genus.
An tales homines evertent Turcica regna?
Barbarico qui ipſi ſunt magis hoſte mali?
Si corvus corvum, lupus aut laniabit avaro
Dente lupum, noſtro milite Turca cadet (2).

(2) Id. ibid. pag. 365.

The Saxon Duke came lately to our Aid,
With many thouſand Troops, a mighty Force,
Of Men well ſkill'd in Arms, of Brav'ry try'd,
Both Horſe and Foot, but mark them well you'll find
'Twixt them and Turks the Diff'rence is but ſmall:
Who notwithſtanding they're to GOD united
By Baptiſm, and to CHRIST regenerate;
Profeſſing Worſhip of a righteous GOD
Avenger of all Crimes, and whom they know
Of Theft and Rapine Puniſher ſevere,
Yet impious dare with hoſtile Hand to ſpoil
Whate'er they meet with. I myſelf have ſeen
How deſolate their Plunderings have made
The Dwelling of the poor Inhabitants
Of Auſtria and Bohemia: nor content
With plundering theſe they ravag'd Altars too,
Devoted Off'rings, Temples, could not 'ſcape,
Nor ought to be moſt ſacred Cloyſters ſafe.
Nor Sex, nor Age would their fell Rapine ſpare.
Shall theſe Men then deſtroy the Turkiſh Pow'r,
Themſelves than our Barbarian Foes far worſe.
When Vulture Vulture kills, or ravenous Wolf
With greedy Jaws his fellow Wolf purſues,
Then ſhall theſe Raveners the Turk deſtroy.

One of the Calamities of War is, that the Soldiers deſigned to repulſe the Enemy are almoſt as much to be feared by the poor People, as the Enemy himſelf.

[B] Seeing that a new Suit of Cloaths gained him Reſpect - - - - he tore it to pieces as if it - - - uſurped it's Maſter's Honours.] Let us recite the Relation of Melchior Adam in this Place. 'Baſi-
'leæ in arce Oporinianæ (ſic enim domum Oporini
'ob ſitum excelſum vocabant) tenui re familiari
'vivens, à vicinis Abbatibus ſtipe corrogata, novis
'veſtibus ornatus in publicum aliquando prodiit.
'Illi plebecula ſplendorem veſtitus more ſuo admi-
'rata, exurgendo caputque aperiendo honorem ho-
'minis exhibuit. Tunc ille honorem non ſibi,
'ſed veſtibus deferri animadvertens, demum rever-

Treatiſes of the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of Germany favour too much of Lutheraniſm, with which he was already tainted [C]. This will be ſeen in one of my Remarks (o), and ſomething alſo concerning his Writings [D]. He was killed in a Wood, (o) In the Remark [C].

' titur, & veſtimenta partim concidit, partim deturpat: tanquam improba mancipia ſui domini ' gloriam præripientia accuſans (3). —— When he lived at Baſil, in Oporin's Tower (for ſo Oporin's Houſe was called from it's Situation on an Eminence), on a ſmall Income, Collection being made for him by the neighbouring Abbots, he happened to go abroad, dreſſed in a new Suit of Cloaths. The People, according to their Cuſtom, admiring the fineneſs of his Dreſs, paid their Reſpects to him by riſing up and uncovering their Heads. He perceiving that the Reſpect was not paid to him, but to his Cloaths, returned Home, and cut his Cloaths in ſome places, and dawbed them in others, accuſing them as wicked Slaves that robbed their Maſter of his Glory."

(3) Melch. Adam. in vitis Philoſoph. pag. 283.

[C] Some ſay that his Treatiſes of the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of Germany favour too much of Lutheraniſm, with which he was already tainted.] Let us cite Gewoldus: ' Leviſſimam quamque occaſionem arripit perquam avide, ſays he (4), Romæ
' & Romano Pontifici obloquendi: ſed jam tum
' in Lutheri hæreſin, Cereris Bacchique mancipium, Bruſchius totus propendebat. —— Bruſchius takes every, the moſt ſlight, Occaſion of ſpeaking ill of Rome and the Pope: but he, a Slave of Gluttony and Drink, was then ſtrongly inclined to Luther's Hereſy.' He acknowledges however that the Work which that Writer compoſed on the Monaſteries of Germany is not deſpicable (5). The Jeſuit Gretſer ſhall be my ſecond Witneſs. ' Bonam operam navavit Gaſpar Bruſchius Ægranus, tametſi jam quinti Evangelii genio affiatus, cum Catalogos Epiſcopatuum, & qui
' eos adminiſtrarunt Epiſcoporum, &c. collegit,
' quam veſtigia vix poſtea cernas, accuratiora quædam diœceſeon, & præſulum indices texuerunt (6).
' —— Gaſpar Bruſchius of Ægra did a good Work, notwithſtanding he was already tainted with the Spirit of the fifth Goſpel, in collecting Catalogues of the Biſhoprics and the Biſhops that held them; others have followed his Example, and compoſed more accurate Indexes of ſome Dioceſes and Biſhops.' Note, that Nicolas Serrarius, and Chriſtopher Brower, have ſpoken of our Author with much Contempt, the firſt in his Hiſtory of Mentz, and the laſt in his Antiquities of Fulda. See Zeillerus at the Place I have cited. It will appear in the following Remark, by the Title only of ſome of Bruſchius's Books, that he reliſhed Luther's Opinions pretty early.

(4) Chriſtoph. Gewoldus, Tom. I, Metropol. Saliſburg. fol. 436. apud Zeiller. de Hiſtor. Parte II, pag. 26.

(5) Id. Tom. II, Metrop. fol. 595. apud Zeill. ibid.

(6) Gretſ. Hiſtor. Catal. omnium Epiſcop. Eyſtett. Init. præfat. apud Zeill. ibid.

[D] Here is ſomething concerning his Writings.] The Catalogue of them is to be ſeen at the end of a Book of the Abbot Engelbert (7), which he himſelf publiſhed: as alſo in the Epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheque, to which I refer my Reader: Nevertheleſs, I ſhall ſet down ſome Titles. In 1537 Bruſchius publiſhed, at Tubingen, Tabula Philoſophiæ partitionem continens. So that he was an Author at the Age of nineteen Years. The Title of one of his Books is, Capita doctrinæ Chriſtianæ verſu elegiaco comprehenſa: another is intituled, Narratio tumultus cujuſdam Magdeburgi à Monacho quodam Carmelita excitati, heroico carmine ſcripta. He tranſlated Melanchthon's Catechiſm and his Poſtilles into German, as alſo a Letter of his to the Count de Weda, and the Treatiſe of George Major de Authoritate Verbi Dei. He tranſlated a German Book into Latin, wherein Luther had explained the Dominicals, and his Treatiſe of Conſolation; and wrote a Preface to ſome Canticles of the ſame Luther. Theſe Labours are Proofs of Lutheraniſm. Here are other Titles: De omnibus totius Germaniæ epiſcopatibus epitomes tomus primus, Archiepiſcopatum Moguntinum cum aliis 12 epiſcopatibus qui Moguntino ſubſunt comprehendens, at Nuremberg 1549. Monaſtericorum Germaniæ præcipuorum ac maxime illuſtrium centuria prima, at Ingolſtadt, 1551. Theſe two Books are not in Verſe, as is affirmed in the Supplement to Moreri. Our Bruſchius laboured much on the Deſcription of the Fichtelberg, and on that of the four Rivers which have their Source in that Mountain (8). He made a Map of it, with a Treatiſe wherein he gave a very large Deſcription of the City of Egra, and the adjacent Countries. That Treatiſe was inſerted in the Coſmography of Munſter, and was reprinted at Wittemberg, in 1540, in 4to (9). His Treatiſe de Laureaco, veteri admodumque celebri olim in Norico civitate, & de Patavio Germanico, ac utriuſque loci Archiepiſcopis ac Epiſcopis omnibus, was printed at Baſil by Oporin, in 1553, in 8vo, with a Collection of the Latin Poems he made in Bavaria. The City which he calls Laureacum (a), was formerly an Archbiſhop's See. It was ſituated at the Place where the River Ens diſcharges itſelf into the Danube, three Miles below Lintz (10). As for the Patavium Germanicum, it is the City now called Paſſau. He declares in the Epiſtle Dedicatory of this Treatiſe, That if he relates things contrary to the common Tradition, and if he ſpeaks diſadvantageouſly of ſome Prelates, it muſt be imputed to the Obligation he was under of following the Laws of Hiſtory.

(7) Engelbertus Abbas Admontenſis.

(8) Mœnus, Egra, Naba, Sala.

(9) See the Bibl. German. of Michael Hertzius, n. 90.

(a) It is yet a Town called Lorch, in the Map of the Danube, by N. de Fer. REM. CRIT.

(10) Bruſchius de Laureaco, p. 20.

- - - - - multa hic ſcripta legentur
Dicta videbuntur quæ nec clementer in ipſos
Pontifices quoſdam Latios, neque ſat reverenter
De ſummis aliquot veſtræ Paſtoribus urbis.
Invenietis & hic non pauca inſerta, quibus cum Pugnabunt veſtri Annales fortaſſis. Ad iſta,
Quod res eſt, breviter reſpondeo: plurima ſummis
Eſſe à præſulibus Romanæ facta cathedræ,
Quæ laudare bonus (niſi quis vel tartara cœlum, Cuncta vel atra velit candentem dicere lucem)
Nemo poteſt; quæ qui laudaverit haud bonus ille
Eſſe poteſt: veluti qui non reprenderit; idem
Nec bonus eſſe poteſt, verum ex Acheronte profectus
Eſt Dæmon. Sive eſt igitur de Patribus urbis
Romuleæ, ſeu de veſtris Primatibus iſtic
Dictum aliquid durum: ſic dictum credite vero
Ut ſervandus honos fuerit ſuus & mihi leges:
Hiſtoriæ quoque non violandæ, aut tranſgrediundæ (11).

(11) Id. ib. Epiſtle Dedicat.

- - - - - - many things
Will here be found, which on ſome Popes perhaps,
May ſeem to bear too hard, and not to ſhew
Sufficient Reverence to your City Primates;
And ſome things, poſſibly, may not agree
Exactly with your Annals. Briefly thus
I anſwer: 'Tis the Truth, that many Facts
Have by the Heads o'th' Roman See been done
Which no good Man can praiſe; none who'd not fain
Hell Heaven, or Darkneſs Light: for who commends
Or ſpares to blame 'em, is a Devil ſent from Th' infernal Regions. And if therefore ought,
Or of the Popes, or City Primates ſaid,
Has too ſevere a Look, judge it to be Spoke from a ſtrict regard to Truth, and to
The Laws of Hiſtory, which to violate
I dare not.

The Principles, he ſets forth in theſe Verſes, are the jeſteſt in the World, and it is very ſtrange, that an Hiſtorian, who follows them religiouſly, ſhould be reputed a Satiriſt. The Corruption of Manners has been ſo great, as well among thoſe who have lived in the World, as among thoſe who have lived out of it (12), that the more a Perſon endeavours to give faithful and true Relations, the more he runs the hazard of compoſing only diffamatory Libels. Doubtleſs there is a great Difference between Hiſtory and Satire, but a ſmall matter ſuffices to metamorphoſe the one into the other. If (12) That is to ſay Churchmen.

on

Wood, in the Year 1559. Thuanus relates this, where he mentions a Prophecy that Bruſchius had publiſhed [E].

on the one hand, you take from Satire that Spirit of Sharpneſs, that Air of Anger, which diſcovers that Paſſion has a greater ſhare in the Scandals reported, than a love of Virtue; and if you add the Obligation, one is under, of relating indifferently the good and the bad, it is no longer reputed Satire, but Hiſtory. Let a Hiſtorian, on the other hand, faithfully relate all the Crimes, Weakneſſes, and Diſorders of Mankind, his Work ſhall be reputed rather a Satire, than a Hiſtory, if he diſcover but ever ſo little Emotion in himſelf at the thoughts of ſo many condemnable Facts which he expoſes to public View. I do not believe that That Coolneſs of Temper, with which a Judge ought to pronounce Sentence againſt Robbers and Murderers, is always to be exacted from a Hiſtorian. Some pointed Reflexions do not become him ill.

[E] He was killed in a Wood, in the Year 1559. Thuanus relates this in mentioning a Prophecy which Bruſchius had publiſhed] He ſays, I. That Regiomontanus, the ableſt Aſtronomer ſince Ptolomy, had predicted, that the Year 1588 ſhould be memorable for great Revolutions. II. That that Prophecy, contained in four German Verſes, was publiſhed in the Year 1553. III. That Gaſpar Bruſchius, who inſerted it in a ſmall Book of the Abbot Engelbert (13), de ortu & fine Romani Imperii, put it into Latin, and altered the Senſe of it, though he underſtood the German Tongue very well. IV. That his bad Tranſlation was a new Prophecy more ſurprizing than that of Regiomontanus; for he noted that thoſe great things ſhould happen under one Sextus. Thuanus adds, That he had often admired that Conduct of Bruſchius, and thereupon obſerves, that he was killed in the Year 1559, a long time before Sixtus V, who was Pope in 1588, attained to the Papacy. Here are his Words: ‘ Joannes - - - - Regiomonta‘ nus - - - - - diu ante id prænonuerat, quatuor verſibus ſeu rhythmis vernacula lingua exaratis, qui
‘ in Caſtellenſi ſuperioris Norici cœnobio hodie le-
‘ guntur, ante XXXV annos à Gaſpare Bruſchio
‘ Egrano, cum Engelberti Abbatis Admontenſis,
‘ qui ſub Rodulfo Habſpurgio floruit, libello de ‘ ortu & fine R. Imperii publicati, quos cum ille ‘ interpretaretur, quod mihi mirari ſæpius ſubiit,
‘ quanquam minime linguæ ſuæ ignarus, tamen
‘ dum verba Germanica aliter, quam ſcripta erant,
‘ latine reddit, vaticinium Regiomontani longe alio
‘ majore cumulavit. Si quidem id, quod ab illo
‘ prædictum erat, ſub Sexto quodam eventurum
‘ tradit; atqui diu eſt, ex quo Bruſchius fatis con-
‘ ceſſit; anno videlicet hujus ſeculi LIX à ſicariis
‘ juxta Rotenburgum ad Duberam interfectus, multo
‘ antequam Sixtus V ſummum magiſtratum in ec-
‘ cleſia iniret, & Regiomontani verba, ſicuti dixi,
‘ id minime ſignificant (14). —— Johannes Re‘ giomontanus had foretold that long before, in four ‘ Verſes written in the German Tongue, which ‘ are ſtill to be found in the Convent of Caſſel, in ‘ Upper Auſtria, and were publiſhed about Thirty
‘ five Years ago, by Gaſpar Bruſchius of Ægra, ‘ with a Book concerning the beginning and end of ‘ the Roman Empire, written by Engelbert, Abbot
‘ of Admont, who flouriſhed under Rodolphus of ‘ Habſpurg. In tranſlating theſe Verſes, [though he ‘ was very well ſkilled in that Tongue, yet by ‘ reading the German Words in Latin, otherwiſe
‘ than they were written, he has encreaſed the Pro- ‘ phecy of Regiomontanus with another much greater,
‘ which I much wonder at. For he ſays, that what ‘ Regiomontanus had foretold, was to happen under
‘ one Sixtus; but it is long ſince Bruſchius died,
‘ for he was murdered in the LIXth Year of this ‘ Century, near Rottenburg, upon the Tauber, long
‘ before Sixtus V came to the Papacy, and Regio-‘ montanus's Words, as I have ſaid before, have no
‘ ſuch Signification.’ Note, That it was believed, that ſome Gentlemen, againſt whom Bruſchius was about to write ſomething, cauſed him to be aſſaſſinated. He was murdered in the Foreſt of Scalingenbach, between Rottemberg, on the Tauber, and Winſhiem. See Cruſius in his Annals of Swabia (15). If the ſame Advice had been given our Poet, which Horace received, to forbear ſlandering, or elſe expect to loſe his Life (16), it would at leaſt have been as prophetical as the four Verſes mentioned by Thuanus.

(13) He lived under Rodolphus of Habſburg.

(14) Thuan. lib. xc, init. pag. 176.

(15) Parte III, lib. x, cap. vii, apud Zeiller de Hiſtor. pag. 270.

(16) O puer ut ſis vitalis metuo, & majorum ne quis amicus
Frigore te feriat. Horat. Sat. I, lib. ii, v. 60.

BRUTUS (Lucius Junius), Son of one of Tarquin's Siſters (a), was obliged to feign himſelf ſtupid, that he might not be thought capable of revenging the Death of his Father and Brother; for if Tarquin, who ordered them to be put to Death, had found him a Man of Parts and Courage, he would not have let him live (b). This feigned Stupidity got him the Sirname of Brutus (c). Under this falſe appearance of Brutiſhneſs, he impatiently waited for an Opportunity to expel Tarquin. He found it, when Lucretia killed herſelf after the Injury ſhe received from the Tyrant's eldeſt Son; and he made ſo good uſe of it, that in a little time the City of Rome was changed from a Monarchy to a Commonwealth. This Revolution happened in the Two hundred and forty fifth Year of Rome. The Dignity of Conſul was inſtituted to be enjoyed by two Perſons for one Year. He and Collatinus, the Huſband of Lucretia, were the firſt on whom it was conferred. He did not long ſurvive his Work, I mean the eſtabliſhing of Liberty; for before the Year of his Conſulſhip was expired, he was killed in a Battle [A], having engaged in ſo ſharp a Combat, hand to hand, with one of Tarquin's Sons [B], that they

(a) See Remark [D].

(b) Dionyſ. Halicarnaſſ. lib. iv.

(c) Id. Ibid. Livius, lib. i, Plut. in Valerio Public.

[A] Before the Year of his Conſulſhip was expired he was killed in Battle.] Livy and Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus ſay it expreſsly. Florus committed a great Fault then, which I do not find cenſured in the Variorum of Holland. He pretends that the Death of Brutus followed the Peace which Proſenna made with Rome. ‘ Et rex quidem tot ‘ tantiſque virtutum monſtris valere liberoſ-
‘ que eſſe juſſit. Tarquinii tamdiu dimicaverunt
‘ donec Aruntem filium regis manu ſua Brutus oc-
‘ cidit, ſuperque ipſum mutuo vulnere expiravit,
‘ plane quaſi adulterum ad inferos uſque ſequere-‘ tur (1). —— The King, terrified with ſo many
‘ and ſo great Prodigies of Valour, left them to ‘ enjoy their Liberty. The Tarquins fought ſo long ‘ until Brutus killed Aruns, the King's Son, with ‘ his own Hand, and expired upon him of a Wound
‘ he had received from him, as if he purſued the ‘ Adulterer to the Shades.’

(1) Florus, lib. i, cap. x.

[B] Having engaged in - - - - - Combat hand to hand againſt one of the Sons of Tarquin] The Paſſage of Florus, which we have juſt now cited, might induce us to take theſe Words literally: yet it is better not to take them ſo; for it is certain that Brutus and Aruns (2) fought on Horſeback, and that they run at each other with their Lances. Thus Livy and Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus relate it. Notwithſtanding all the Violence which animated Brutus againſt the Tarquins, yet it was not he that was the Challenger, but Aruns, who, having ſingled out Brutus, run towards him, inſulted, reviled, and provoked him to a ſingle Fight. But Brutus, who accepted the Challenge, met the Aggreſſor with equal Fury. Each thought only on killing his Enemy, without defending himſelf: ‘ Adeo infeſtis ani-
‘ mis concurrerunt, neuter dum hoſtem vulneraret
‘ ſui protegendi corporis memor, ut contrario ictu
‘ per parmam uterque tranſfixus duabus hærentes
‘ haſtis

(2) That was Tarquin's Son's Name.

they died on the ſpot. He lived long enough to ſhew, by a vigorous Action, that he preferred the Safety of his Country to that of his own Sons (d) [C]. The Roman Ladies mourned for him a whole Year, becauſe he had ſo well revenged violated Chaſtity (e). I cenſure but one Paſſage in Moreri [D].

(d) Dionyſ. Halicarn. lib. iv, v. Livius, lib. i, ii. Plut. ubi ſupra.

(e) Matronæ annum ut parentem eum luxerunt, quod tam acer ultor violatæ pudicitiæ fuiſſet, Livius, lib. ii, p. 41.

Among all the Attempts that ever have been formed to change the Civil Government, and dethrone Kings, there is hardly any ſo reaſonable as this; for in ſhort, this King of Rome, whom our Brutus endeavoured with ſo much Succeſs to expel, was doubly a Tyrant [E]; his Reign was unjuſt and violent, and he had uſurped the Sovereign Power: He had dethroned his Father-in-law who was the rightful Poſſeſſor, he cauſed him to be murdered, and in this he acted againſt the People's Intention; nor did he ever get his Uſurpation approved by Law, but maintained himſelf in it by all kinds of Violence. It was happy for Rome that ſhe had never had a Tyrant King before, or a Citizen ſo great a Lover of Liberty as Brutus; for had it been reduced to a Democracy under the preceeding Reigns, before it had been brought to a due Conſiſtence, it could never have ſubſiſted, but

(3) Livius, lib. ii. See alſo Dionyſ. Halycarn lib. v. & Plutarque in Valer. pag. 101.

'haſtis moribundi ex equis lapſi ſint (3). —— They 'engaged with ſuch Fury, that neither of them, ſo 'he could but wound his Enemy, took any care to 'defend himſelf; ſo they were both of them run 'through their Shields, and fell dead from their 'Horſes, ſtuck on the two Spears.'

[C] He ſhewed that he preferred the Safety of his Country, before that of his own Sons.] He had married a Wife of the Vitellian Family (4), by whom he had two Sons, who had not yet attained to Man's Eſtate (5). They ſuffered themſelves to be engaged by two of their Uncles on the Mother's ſide, and by ſome others, who loved the Kingly Government better than a Common-wealth, in a Plot to recal Tarquin. The Conſpiracy was diſcovered, and Brutus himſelf condemned his Children to death, and had them executed in his Preſence. 'Conſules in ſedem proceſſere ſuam: miſſi 'quos lictores ad ſumendum ſupplicium audacis 'virgis cædunt, ſecurique feriunt: cum inter omne 'tempus pater, vultuſque & os ejus, ſpectaculo eſſet, 'eminente animo patrio inter publicæ pœnæ miniſterium (6). —— The Conſuls took their Seats, and 'the Lictors, who were ordered to do the Execution, 'ſtripped them, and ſcourged them, and then cut 'off their Heads. The Father's Countenance and 'Aſpect was all the while the Object of every one's 'Obſervation, the Love of his Country eminently 'appearing during the Execution of public Juſtice.'

(4) Livius, lib. ii. Plut. in Val. Public. pag 98.

(5) Dion. Halic. lib. v.

(6) Livius, lib. ii. Vide quoque Dionyſ. Halicarn. lib. v. & Plutarch. in Valer. Public. pag 99.

[D] I cenſure only one Paſſage in Moreri.] He ſays that Brutus was Son of a Daughter of Tarquinius Priſcus, King of Rome. I own this is the Opinion of Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus. Brutus, ſays he (7), was the Son of Marcus Junius, deſcended from one of Æneas's Companions, and his Mother was Tarquinia, Daughter to the firſt Tarquin. This does not hinder my ſaying that Mr Moreri aſſerts a Falſity, and that he ought to ſay, with Livy (8), That Tarquinia, the Mother of Brutus, was Siſter of the laſt Tarquin. My Reaſon is this. It is certain Brutus was very young when his Father was killed (9); he was much about the Age of Tarquin's Sons, and was educated with them: It is true, it was rather to ſerve them for a Buffoon, than for any thing elſe (10). It is moreover certain, than his Father was not put to death, 'till after Tarquin's Uſurpation (11); it may therefore reaſonably be ſuppoſed, that Brutus was not above fifteen Years of Age when Tarquin uſurped the Crown. His Mother muſt needs then have been very old when ſhe was brought to bed of him, if ſhe had been the Daughter of Tarquinius Priſcus. She muſt have been the Daughter of Tanaquil, for Tarquinius Priſcus had no other Wife but Tanaquil. That Tarquinius came to Rome by the Advice of his Wife, in the Reign of Ancus Martius. He had attempted in vain to have a Share in the Government of his own Country. Conſidering the manner in which ſhe argued with her Husband, to engage him in that Journey to Rome (12), ſhe could not be a Girl of fifteen or twenty; ſhe muſt be at leaſt about Twenty five Years of Age; her Ability in explaining Auguries confirms my Suppoſition. They muſt have been married a conſiderable time, ſince they hoped for nothing in their own Country. One is not diſheartened 'till after divers Attempts. They lived ſeveral Years at Rome, and made themſelves ſo conſiderable there, that Tarquin, being choſen Tutor to the King's Children, ſecured to himſelf the Succeſſion of Ancus Martius. It is not too much to allow ten Years to an Abode which had Conſequences ſo very important. Say then, that they came to Rome ten Years before Ancus Martius died. By this means Tanaquil muſt have been Thirty five Years of Age when her Husband became King of Rome. Nor can her laſt lying-in be later than the fifteenth of her Husband's Reign. Let us ſuppoſe then that the pretended Mother of Brutus, the Daughter of Tarquinius Priſcus, was born in the fifteenth Year of her Father's Reign. Thus ſhe muſt have been Twenty three Years of Age when her Father died (13); to which if we add the Forty four Years that Servius Tullius reigned, we ſhall find that ſhe was Sixty ſeven Years of Age when Tarquin the Proud ſeized on the Throne. Now we ſuppoſe that Brutus was then fifteen Years of Age, he muſt then be born when his Mother was Fifty two Years old. If that be not impoſſible, it is at leaſt very improbable. Now a judicious Hiſtorian never puzzles himſelf, but in the utmoſt neceſſity, with Chronological Accounts, which claſh with Appearances It is dragging, as we may ſay, the Devil by the Tail, to be obliged to place the Marriage of Daughters at twelve or fifteen, to adjuſt his Account, and make them fruitful 'till fifty. See Laurentius Valla, who reckons, That if the Mother of Brutus had been the Daughter of Tanaquil, it ought to be concluded that ſhe was the Mother of a young Man at above ninety Years of Age (14).

(7) Lib. iv.

(8) Livius, lib. i, pag. 43.

(9) Id. ib Dionyſ. Halicarn. lib. iv.

(10) Id. ib.

(11) Dion. Halicarn. ibid.

(12) Livius, lib. i, pag. 23.

(13) The Reign of Tarquinius Priſcus laſted 38 Years.

[E] The King whom Brutus - - - - - - - - - expelled from the Throne was doubly a Tyrant.] We muſt not therefore alledge this Conduct of the Romans, as an Example of the Rights of the People exerciſed againſt a lawful Sovereign who abuſes his Power. Tarquin the Proud was not only a Tyrant in his Adminiſtration, but was alſo a Tyrant by Uſurpation. Read theſe Words of Livy: 'Conſcius deinde male quærendi regni ab ſe ipſo ad'verſus ſe exemplum capi poſſe, armatis corpus 'circumſepſit. Neque enim ad jus regni quic'quam præter vim habebat; ut qui neque populi 'juſſu, neque authoribus patribus regnaret. Eo ac'cedebat, ut in charitate civium nihil ſpei repo'nenti metu regnum tutandum eſſet: quem ut 'pluribus incuteret, cognitiones capitalium rerum 'ſine conſiliis per ſe ſolus exercebat, perque eam 'cauſam occidere, in exilium agere, bonis mulcta're poterat, non ſuſpectos modo aut inviſos, 'ſed unde nihil aliud quam prædam ſperare poſ'ſet. Ita patrum præcipue numero imminuto, 'ſtatuit nullos in patres legere, quo contemptior 'paucitate ipſa ordo eſſet, minuſque per ſe nihil 'agi indignarentur. Hic enim regum primus tra'ditum à prioribus morem de omnibus Senatum 'conſulendi ſolvit; domeſticis conſiliis Republi'cam adminiſtravit; bellum, pacem, fœdera, ſocie'tates per ſe ipſe cum quibus voluit, injuſſu populi ac 'Senatus, fecit, diremitque (15). —— Beſides being 'conſcious that Example might be taken againſt 'him, from himſelf, of ſeizing the Kingdom by ill 'means, he ſet Guards about his Perſon; for he 'had no other Right to the Crown than Force, as 'reigning neither by Conſent of the People, nor the 'Authority of the Senate; to this may be added, 'that as he repoſed no Confidence in the Love of 'the (14) See his Diſſertation againſt Titus Livius, on the Queſtion, If Tarquinius Superbus was the Son of Tarquinius Priſcus.

(15) Titus Livius, Dec. I, lib. i, pag. 30, 31.

but must have been destroyed by the Factions and Discords which the Tribunes of the People raised at every turn, under the specious Pretence of Liberty [F]. Nothing is finer in all the Romances that have appeared under the Name of Mr de Scuderi, than what concerns Brutus in the Romance of Clelia.

However austere and stern his Virtue was, nevertheless he mitigated an Article of Religion so remarkably, that instead of human Sacrifices, it cost only the Heads of Poppies [G].

' the People, his Government was to be secured by ' Fear; which that he might spread the more, he ' himself took Cognizance of all capital Causes, ' without any Counsel, and by that means could put ' to death, banish, or fine, not only whom he sus- ' pected, or hated, but others, for no other reason ' but to plunder them; by this means, having les- ' sened the number of the Senators, chiefly he re- ' solved to chuse none into the Senate, that the Or- ' der of it might become contemptible by the small- ' ness of their Number, and not take it so much ' amiss, that all things were done without them; ' for he was the first King who changed the Custom, ' practised by his Predecessors, of consulting the Se- ' nate in every thing. He administred the Govern- ' ment by private Counsels; he, of his own Head, ' went to War, made Peace, Treaties, or Alliances ' with whom he pleased, or broke them again, with- ' out consulting either the People or Senate.' This is a very elegant Description of Tyranny.

[F] If Rome had had a Tyrannical King, or such a Citizen as Brutus, sooner - - - - she must have been destroyed by the Factions - - - - - which the Tribunes of the People raised on pretence of Liberty.] This Reflexion is not mine; it is Livy's, and serves to shew that Author's Judgment and good Sense. ' Neque ambigitur, says he (16), quin ' Brutus idem, qui tantum gloriæ Superbo exacto ' rege meruit, pessimo publico id facturus fuerit, ' si libertatis immaturæ cupidine priorum regum ' alicui regnum extorsisset. Quid enim futurum ' fuit, si illa pastorum convenarumque plebs trans- ' fuga ex suis populis, sub tutela inviolati templi ' aut libertatem aut certe impunitatem adepta, so- ' luta regio metu, agitari cœpta esset tribunitiis ' procellis? & in aliena urbe cum patribus serere ' certamina, priusquam pignora conjugum ac libe- ' rorum, charitasque ipsius soli, cui longo tempore ' assuescitur, animos eorum consociasset? dissipatæ ' res nondum adultæ discordia forent; quas fovit ' tranquilla moderatio imperii, eoque nutriendo ' perduxit, ut bonam frugem libertatis maturis jam ' viribus ferre possent. - - - - - - - There is no doubt but even Brutus, who merited so much Glory for expelling Tarquin the Proud, would have done the Public a great Prejudice, if out of too hasty desire of Liberty he had wrested the Kingdom from any of the former Kings; for what would have been the Case, if that Multitude of Shep- ' herds and Strangers, who had fled from their ' own People, had obtained either Liberty, or Im- ' punity, by the Privilege of an inviolable Sanctua- ' ry, and being freed from the Fear of a King, ' had began to be agitated by the Commotions of ' the Tribunes, and to enter into Contests with ' the Nobility in a strange City, before the Pledges ' of Wives and Children, and Love of the Place ' itself, to which they had been long accustomed, had ' cemented their Minds? their State, not yet come to ' Perfection, would have been destroyed by Discord, ' which was cherished by an undisturbed and mo- ' derate Monarchical Government, and nursed up to ' it's full Strength, when it was able to bear the ' good Fruit of Liberty.' The first Inhabitants of Rome had need of a Monarch. Their new City would soon have sunk, if it had been exposed in it's Infancy to the continual Contests of the Patricians and Plebeians. It is next to a Miracle that they suffered it to maintain and aggrandize itself.

(16) Ibid. Dec. I, lib. ii,

[G] He mitigated an Article of Religion so remarkably, that instead of Human Sacrifices they only offered the Heads of Poppies.] Tarquin the Proud, having re established, according to the Order of Apollo, the Compital Games in honour of the Dii Penates, and the Goddess Mania, they thought themselves obliged to sacrifice Children to Mania, the Mother of the Lares, for the common Good of their Families; for the Oracle had told them, they must offer Heads if they would preserve Heads. This Custom continued some time; but Brutus, after the Expulsion of Tarquin, interpreted the Words of the Oracle favourably, and ordered them to offer the Heads of Garlic and Poppies, and by that means abolished the Cruelty of the Sacrifice. This we learn from Macrobius: ' Qualem nunc permutatio- ' nem sacrificii - - - - - - memoratî invenio postea ' Compitalibus celebratam, cum ludi per urbem in ' compitibus agitabantur, refituti scilicet à Tarquinio ' superbo Laribus ac Maniæ ex responso Apollin's: ' quo præceptum est, ut pro capitibus, capitibus ' supplicaretur; idque aliquandiu observatum, ut ' pro familiarium sospitate pueri mactarentur Maniæ ' Deæ matri Larum: quod sacrificii genus Junius ' Brutus Consul, pulso Tarquinio, aliter constituit ' celebrandum; nam capitibus allii & papaveris ' supplicari jussit, ut responso Apollinis satisfieret de ' nomine capitum, remoto scilicet scelere infaustæ ' sacrificationis (17). - - - - - Such an Alteration of a ' Sacrifice - - - - - as you have now mentioned, I ' find afterwards practised in the Compitalia, which ' Games were celebrated throughout the City in the ' open Streets, being restored by Tarquin the Proud, ' to the Lares and Mania, by the Direction of the ' Oracle of Apollo: whereby it was ordered that ' they should sacrifice Heads for Heads, which ' was observed for some time, and Children were ' offered to Mania, the Mother of the Lares, for ' the Safety of Families: which kinds of Sacrifice ' Junius Brutus, after he had expelled Tarquin, ' ordered to be celebrated otherwise; for he com- ' manded them to offer only Heads of Garlic and ' Popies, to satisfy the Oracle, as to the Names ' of Heads, and remove the Wickedness of the abo- ' minable Sacrifice.' This Author adds, that they hung up the Effigy of Mania at the Doors of the Houses, to avert the Dangers, with which the Family might be threatened. That Effigy doubtless was very hideous; for ugly Masks, such as fright Children, were called Maniæ (18). I wish Macrobius had attempted to resolve a Question proposed by Plutarch, Why they prayed to the Goddess Geneta Mana, (the same with Mania, she who presided at Births) that nothing that was born in that House might become good (19)? Plutarch's Answers are not very satisfactory to nice Minds. He says, in the first place, I. That perhaps this was only understood of Dogs, a domestic Animal, which one would wish to be bad, and apt to create Terror: but what appearance is there that the Ancients should use a general Expression (20), if they understood no more than one Species. In the second place he conjectured, II. They wished that nothing might die, and cites an Authority to prove that the Expression make good sometimes signified to kill. This is straining things with a Witness. A French Writer (21), has conjectured that Goodness was used then for that dull Simplicity which we understand, when we say a Man is a good natured Fellow. Boxhornius had used this Explication of Berault, but he owns it is more subtile than true (22).

(17) Macrob. Saturnal. lib i, cap. vii, pag. 154, Lond. Edition, 1694, in 8vo.

(18) Scholiastes Persii in Sat. vi, ver. 56.

(19) Plutarch. in Quæst. Romanis, pag. 277, Edit. Francof. Anno 1620, where there is twice ἄχαρις instead of χάριτος.

(20) Κατεύχονται μηδένα χρηστὸν ἀποθάνειν τῶν οἰκογενῶν: Voto petunt nequis domi natorum bonus fiat. Id. ibi.

(21) John Berault in his Notes on Barclay's Euphormion, says, in his Epistle Dedicatory, that he has seldom found any body who has not, had the misfortune to have, at his Birth, the assistance of the Goddess Genita Mana, to whom the Antients made Vows, that nothing good might be born in their Family; Nequis masculorum domi probus. It may be doubted whether the Word probus, which does not signify soft and simple, as Plutarch's Word χάριτος does sometimes, be here properly used.

(22) Boxhornius in Plutarchum de Quæst. Roman. pag. 124.

BRUTUS (MARCUS JUNIUS), the Son of Marcus Junius Brutus, and of Servilia, the Sister of Cato, was one of the Murtherers of Julius Cæsar. He was the greateſt Republican that ever was known. He did not believe that any body was obliged to keep Faith, or the ſacredeſt Oaths, to thoſe who uſurped a tyrannical Power in Rome [A]. He was ſo full of the great and noble Ideas of Liberty, and that Love of his Country, which the Greek and Roman Authors have deſcribed ſo pompouſly: I ſay he was ſo bewitched to theſe, that neither the Obligations he had to Julius Cæſar, nor the certain Proſpect he had of aggrandizing himſelf as much as he pleaſed under that new Maſter of Rome, could balance the Ambition he had of reſtoring things to their firſt State by the Murther of the Tyrant. He conſpired againſt him with ſeveral others, and their Plot was ſo well concerted and carried on, that Julius Cæſar was ſtabbed in the Senate, the fifteenth of March, 709. The People applauded that Action at firſt, but all on a ſudden, like a Sea agitated by contrary Winds, they grew exaſperated againſt the Murtherers. Theſe were forced to ſeek their Safety by flight. Brutus and Caſſius were not diſcouraged; they endeavoured to ſupport their Party in the Provinces abroad; they made a ſtand in Macedonia, at the head of ſome very good Troops; but Fortune declared for the Oppreſſors of Liberty. Theſe two grand Republicans, who were called the laſt of the Romans [B], were defeated by Octavius and Marc Antony, and reduced to the neceſſity of killing themſelves, in the Year of Rome 711. Brutus is condemned for having employed his laſt dying Words in decrying Virtue (a) [C]: he was not ſo much in the wrong as is imagined [D]. It is (a) See Plutarch in the Life of Brutus.

[A] He did not believe that any one was obliged to keep Faith - - - - - with thoſe that uſurped a tyrannical Power in Rome.] In one of his Speeches to the Roman People, in the Capitol, he told them, Οὐδὲν πρὸς ἐμὲ Ῥωμαίοις πρὸς τυράννους, ὦ ἄνδρες: Cum tyranno Romanis nulla fides, nulla juris jurandi religio (1). —— The Romans are obliged to no Faith with a Tyrant, nor to keep any Oath. This Maxim ſeemed unreaſonable to Grotius: See how he has refuted it in the ſixteenth Paragraph of the thirteenth Chapter of the ſecond Book De Jure Belli & Pacis. Boëclerus approves this Refutation in his Notes on the Fifty ſixth Chapter of the ſecond Book of Velleius Paterculus. However, this Maxim of Pagan Rome is more excuſable, than that which Chriſtian Rome is ſaid to have eſtabliſhed in the Council of Conſtance, That Faith is not to be kept with Heretics.

(1) Applan. de bellis Civil. lib. ii, pag. 283.

[B] He and Caſſius are called the laſt of the Romans.] Cremutius Cordus, according to Tacitus, ſaid this of Caſſius only: 'Poſtulatur - - - - - quod 'editis Annalibus laudatoque M Bruto C. Caſſium 'Romanorum ultimum dixiſſet (2). —— He was 'arraigned - - - - - for that in the Annals which 'he had publiſhed he had commended M. Brutus, 'and called C. Caſſius the laſt of the Romans.' But Suetonius affirms, he ſaid it of both. 'Ob- 'jectum & Hiſtorico quod Brutum Caſſiumque ul- 'timos Romanorum dixiſſet (3) - - - - - It is ob- 'jected to that Hiſtorian, that he had called 'Brutus and Caſſius the laſt of the Romans.' That Hiſtorian, whom Suetonius does not name, is undoubtedly Cremutius Cordus. The Elogy he gives theſe two Republicans was given to Caſſius by his Companion Brutus, when the News of his Death was brought him (4).

(2) Tacit. Annal. lib. iv, c xxxiv.

(3) Sueton. in Tiber. cap. lxi.

(4) Plut. in Brut. pag. 1005.

[C] He employed his laſt dying Words in decrying Virtue.] Unhappy Virtue, cried he, how have I been deceived in thy Service! I believed thee wert a real Being, and devoted myſelf to thee on that Account; but thou art only a vain Name, a Phantom, the Prey and Slave of Fortune. He was not the firſt that made uſe of theſe Words. A Greek Poet had put them in Hercules's Mouth (5). I do not believe that it is known who that Poet was, ſince a learned Man was contented to give him the indefinite Title of a Tragic Poet. It is in a Tranſlation of one of Plutarch's ſmall Pieces, that theſe Words are to be found: Though all is not ſeen in it that Dion makes Brutus ſay, yet in recompence ſomething is to be ſeen in it, that Brutus never did ſay, but which is a Conſequence natural enough from what he ſaid. According to Plutarch, he, who made theſe Complaints for having followed Virtue as a real Being, added, that he had forſaken Injuſtice, the fruitful Source of Riches; and Intemperance, the plentiful Diſpenſer of all kind of Pleaſures. Ἄρα σε τὴν πολυπόνου δόξαν, καὶ τὴν γόνιμον ἀνάγκης ἄδοξος ἀκολασίαν. Omiſſa divitias largiente injuſtitia, & omnis voluptatis ferax intemperantia (6). I cannot tell why the Tranſlator, of whom I ſpeak (7), has given quite another Senſe to the Original. That which he ſubſtitutes does not countervail what he has omitted, and does not ſo well repreſent the Indignation of a Perſon who repented for having followed the Ways of Virtue, and who reckons it an ingrateful and barren Soil. Note, That Florus has given his Approbation of this Complaint of Brutus. 'Sed quamvis efferveſcit eſt fortuna, ſays 'he (8), quam virtus! & quam verum eſt quod mo- 'riens efflavit, non in re ſed in verbo tantum eſſe 'virtutem! victoriam illi prælio errore dedit. —— 'But how much ſtronger is Fortune than Virtue! and 'how true is that which he uttered when he was 'dying; that Virtue was not a Thing but a Name; 'the Victory in that Battle was owing only to a 'Miſtake.'

(5) Ἀνεβόησας τῷτε δὴ τὸ Ἡράκλειον, ὦ τλῆμον, ἐρεπτόμενος ἄρ' ἦθος. Ἐγὼ δέ σε ὡς ἔργων ὄντως οὐ δ' ὡς οὐδένειαν τύχης Altaque voce recitato Herculis ifto dicto, O infelix virtus itane quam nihil quam nomen eſſe ego te tanquam rem aliquam exercui, quum tu fortunæ ſervieris. Dio, lib. xlvii, ſub fin. See Plutarch, de ſuperſtit. init.

(6) Plut. de Superſtit. pag. 165.

(7) Mr le Fevre of Saumur.

(8) Florus, lib. iv, cap. vii. circa fin. pag. 216.

I and is a pity he sullied, by the Murther of his Benefactor, a Combination of the greatest Qualities that a Man can possess [E]. His Action was condemned by several Romans of those Times (b), and it can hardly be denied that it was at least ill suited to Circumstances, I mean that it was unseasonably committed. You will find the Proof of this in Dio Cassius [F]. He followed the Sect of the Stoics: He loved and Innocency might be placed in the Number of those things, on which Solomon pronounces his definitive Decree, Vanity of Vanities, all is Vanity. To trust to one's Innocency, would be to trust to a broken Reed, which peirces the Hand of him that leans upon it. God, as being the Disposer of Events, and the Distributer of good and bad Success on Earth, has submitted Virtue and Innocency to general Laws, no less than Health and Riches. One of the most considerable States of Europe lost and gained by turns, as long as it made only unjust Wars; nay, it gained more than it lost. Ever since it has been engaged only in just Wars, it does nothing but lose. How happens this? It was powerful at that time, and now is not so. To conclude, whoever shall go upon Brutus's System, and look upon Virtue as the Fountain of good temporal Successes, may happen one Day to complain, as he did, of having taken that for a Reality which is only a Name.

(b) See, in Remark [F], Citation (13), the Words of Tacitus.

A Computation of those who pretend that Injustice is a means of Prosperity.

But let us beware of the heady Reflexions of those extravagant Spirits, who pretend, that to have an ill Cause is the readiest way to carry it. Say we on the contrary, that, all things being in other Respects equal, Reason and Justice on one's Side is a good Step towards the Victory. How great soever the Disorders of human kind are, they are not yet come to such a Height, that it can with truth be said, that Right averts or retards the Victory. I was not long ago (9) in Company where the Discourse turned upon two Princes, who had been named for a very high Dignity: Opinions were not much divided; almost all agreed, that such an one would baffle the Pretensions of his Competitor (10). They grounded themselves on several Reasons which were particularized, as the Interest of all Europe to favour one of the two Pretenders, the Situation of the Countries from whence each was to expect Assistance, the overgrown Power of the Promoter of him whose ill Success was foretold, and an hundred other Considerations besides (11). 'And now you think you 'have said all, said a Frenchman suddenly, who had not spoken a Word before, but it is a Mistake, I 'will give you one Reason stronger than all. Such 'an one has Right of his side; his Election is regular, and therefore he must sink: The Election 'of the other has all possible Defects; it is contrary to the most essential Formalities, and to 'the fundamental Laws of the Nation; that alone 'were enough to secure him the Superiority and 'the Triumph.' This Argument was laughed at; but some, who were by, were willing to give themselves the Trouble of examining it in cold Blood, and these alledged, That Injustice, in itself, is fitter to prejudice a Cause than to forward it, and that it is only by accident that Justice is an Obstacle to good Success on several Occasions. It happens very often that they who are concerned for a good Cause, are less active than their Adversaries. They flatter themselves, like Brutus, that Heaven will declare for them; they imagine, that Right needs less Support than Injustice; hereupon they slacken their Vigilance, and sometimes they are such honest People, that they would not make use of ill means to support the good Cause. But they, who are engaged in bad Causes, scruple not to add Iniquity to Iniquity; and if they doubt the Success, they have recourse, with an extream Activity, to all imaginable Expedients; they forget nothing that may either forward their own Work, or retard the Progress of the Enemy (12). It may also be supposed in the Hypothesis of good and bad Angels, that, from the same Principles, the latter are much more active. However it be, there is no arguing from the Justice, or the Injustice of a Cause, to it's good or ill Success; and except in Cases where God works by Miracle, which happen but seldom, the Fate of a Business depends on the Circumstances, and the Concurrence of the means that are used; whereby it sometimes happens that Injustice miscarries, and that one may say, tandem bona causa triumphat, — The good Cause triumphs at last.

(9) This was written in 1698.

(10) That really happened.

(11) See above, Citat. (82), of the Article Bellarmin.

[E] He sullied, by the Murther of his Benefactor, a Combination of the greatest Qualities that a Man can possess.] The most extravagant Flatterers of the Descendants of Cæsar found only that one Exception to Brutus. 'Hunc exitum M. Bruti partium septimum & trigesimum annum agentis fortuna esse voluit: corrupto animo ejus in diem quæ illi omnes 'virtutes unius temeritate facti abstulit (13). —— Fortune had decreed this for the last Scene of the 'Life of M. Brutus, who was in his Thirty seventh 'Year: his Mind being disordered from the Day, 'when he tarnished all his Virtues by one rash 'Action.' I confess, he, whom he killed, deserved Death; an hundred thousand Lives, if he had had them, would not have sufficed for the Expiation of his Crime; but it was not the Business of three or four private Persons to undertake to punish him. Let us then apply the Maxim Pessimè justa alio injustissima. — The Punishment is just, the Action most unjust. Besides, the Attempt was against the Interest of the Country; the Event shewed it, and it was not hard to foresee it. See Seneca, who proves solidly that, as things then stood, they were not to hope for a Return of the Republican Government. The Manners of the Romans were altered; the Prize of Ambition was too great; the Post, from whence they would make the Conqueror of Great Pompey fall, was so coveted, that it was easy to foresee that, as they thrust one Person out of it, several others would present to fill it up. 'Cum vir magnus fuerit (M. Brutus) in aliis, in hac re videtur 'vehementer erasse; ibi speravit libertatem futuram, ubi tam magnum præmium erat & imperandi, & serviendi; aut existimavit civitatem in priorem formam posse revocari, amissis priscinis moribus; futuramque ibi æqualitatem civilis juris, & 'staturas suo loco leges, ubi viderat tot millia hominum pugnanti, non ut servirent; sed utri. Quanta vero illum aut rerum natura, aut urbis suæ tenuit oblivio, qui uno interempto, desuturum credidit alium, qui idem vellet, cum Tarquinius esset 'inventus post tot reges ferro ac fulminibus occisos(14)?' —— Marcus Brutus, though a great Man in other 'Respects, seems to have been very much mistaken in 'this Affair: in that he hoped that Liberty could be 'there where there was so great a Prize, both for 'commanding and obeying; and judged that the City 'might be reduced to it's former State, when their 'ancient Manners were lost. That there could be an 'Equality of civil Right, or the Laws maintain 'their Ground, where he saw so many Thousands 'of Men contending, not whether they should be 'Slaves, but to whom. How intirely had he for'got either the Nature of Things, or his own City, 'who believed that when one was killed there would 'be never another to attempt the same thing, when 'Tarquin arose after so many Kings had been killed 'with the Sword and Thunder?'

(12) Note, that for some Occasions they miscarry, because they dare not be wicked enough.

(13) Paterculus, lib. ii, cap. lxxii.

(14) Seneca de Benef. lib. ii, cap. xx.

[F] That Action was ---- unseasonably committed. You will find the Proof of this in Dio Cassius.] That Historian observes two things. I. That a wicked Fury seized some who envied Julius Cæsar, and hurried them on to kill him unjustly. II. That though they alledged the fair Pretence of re-establishing Liberty, yet their Action was really impious, and threw back the State into Seditions, when it began to taste the Advantages of a good Administration. He afterwards declares, that Monarchy is to be preferred before Democratical Government, and that both Greek and Roman History shew, that Cities and private Persons have enjoyed greater Blessings, and felt less Adversity under the Authority of a single Person, than under a popular Government; that if there have been States which have flourished under such a Government, it lasted no longer than till they had attained a certain Point of Greatness and loved Books, and had wrote some [G]: He was a good Orator; and as he had for his own part always made choice of a concise and grave Stile (c), no wonder if he thought Cicero's Eloquence wanted Nerves [H]. He had an excellent Panegyrist in the Person of that Orator, by whom he had been infinitely esteemed from his Youth (d). He was older than Paterculus supposes [I]. No one ought to affirm that he was descended from that Brutus who expelled Tarquin [K], or that he had been

(c) Gravitatem Bruti. Quintil. lib. xii, cap. x, pag. 680.

(d) See Cicero in Bruto, in Philippicis & alibi.

Power, beyond which nothing but Discord had been seen, the Fruits of Envy and Ambition; and therefore since the City of Rome saw itself at that time Mistress of a great many Nations, and glutted with Riches and Glory, it was impossible but the Inhabitants should give a loose to their Passions in the midst of the Republican Liberty; and yet more impossible, that, while none of them restrained their Desires, they should agree among themselves. Ἀδύνατον μὲν ἐν δημοκρατίᾳ σωφρονῆσαι, ἀδυνατώτερον δὲ μὴ σωφρονῆσαι ἅπαντας. In popular republican state impossible that wise minds should moderate; that continuance should not concorde permanent; id adhuc minus fieri poterat (15). That if Brutus and Cassius had well considered these things, they would never have killed the Head of the Republic, nor thereby plunged themselves and the whole Roman Empire into endless Calamities (16). Note, that Xiphilin has disapproved Dio Cassius in this (17); but I do not believe any Person can reasonably deny, that at that Point of Greatness to which the Romans had attained, which had accustomed them to Luxury and Ambition, they could have enjoyed any Tranquillity, either in the Provinces or Capital City, under a Democratical Government. Rome had already been a pretty long time a Republic only in Name. The Alteration of Government will always be inevitable in popular States which amuse themselves with Conquests. If they intend to preserve their Liberty, they must avoid all offensive Wars as the Plague, and the ultimate wish of their Interest of Land; they must aggrandize and fortify themselves intensively, and not extensively, if I may be permitted to make use of the School Distinction.

(15) Dio Cassius, lib. xliv, p. 273.

(16) Taken from Dio Cassius, lib. xliv, Init.

(17) Xiphil. Epit. Dio, lib. xliv, Init. pag. 25.

I have said in the Body of this Article, that several Romans disapproved Brutus's Action. I am to produce a Witness. 'Die funeris (Augusti) militem velut præsidio fletere, multum inridentibus qui ipsi viderant, quique à parentibus acceperant diem illum crudi adhuc servitii, & libertatis imprope repetitæ, cum occisus Dictator Cæsar alia pessimum alia pulcherrimum facinus videretur' (18). —— On the Day of Augustus's Funeral the Soldiers stood upon Guard, which was very ridiculous in the Eyes of those that had seen or heard from their Fathers of that Day, when Slavery was yet new, and the Renewal of Liberty unsuccessfully attempted, when the killing of the Dictator Cæsar seemed to some A VERY WICKED, and to others a very laudable Action.' Consult Fortunatus on this Passage of Tacitus, and Bochartus on the Fifty sixth Chapter of the second Book of Paterculus.

(18) Tacit. Annal. lib. i, c. viii.

[G] He loved Books, and he had wrote some.] Plutarch relates, that, in the greatest Heat of the Civil Wars, Brutus employed some part of the Night in Study (19). He abridged the Roman History of Fannius (20), and that of Antipater (21). He wrote a Book de Officiis, cited by Charisius and by Priscian. Doubtless it is that which Seneca calls περὶ καθήκοντος (22). Cicero (23) and Seneca (24) speak of that de Virtute. Diomedes makes mention of that de Patientia. There are still extant some of Brutus's Letters, either in Greek that were printed apart, or in Latin among those of Cicero. He had made an Elogy on Cato, and Cæsar found that Piece not very well written. Bruti Catone lecto se sibi visum disertum (25). — When he had read Brutus's Cato he imagined himself learned. The Oration he made in the Capitol upon the Murther of Cæsar, pleased Cicero very well, though they had not the same Taste in Oratory. See the first Letter of the fifteenth Book to Atticus. I cannot tell whether he finished the Abridgment of the History of Polybius, on which he was at work in Pompey's Camp, the very Night that preceeded the Battle of Pharsalia (26).

(19) Plut. in Bruto, pag. 1000. E.

(20) Cicero, ad Attic. lib. xii, Epist. v.

(21) Id. ibid. lib. xiii, Ep. viii.

(22) Seneca, Epist. xciv.

(23) Cicero Tusc. i, & de fin.

(24) Seneca Consol. ad Helviam, cap. ix.

(25) Apud. Cicer. Epist. xlvi, ad Attic. lib. xii.

(26) Plut. in Brute, p. 985. E.

[H] He thought Cicero's Eloquence wanted Nerves.] The Author of the Dialogue de causis corruptæ eloquentiæ informs us of this: 'Ciceronem, says he, malè audiviſſe à Bruto, ut ipſius verbis utar, tanquam fractum atque elumbem. —— Cicero was blamed by Brutus, to use his own Words, as feeble and weak.' Cicero was even with him: he thought Brutus's Stile negligent and loose: Ciceroni visum Brutum otiosum atque disjunctum (27). Brutus's Stile has another Defect, which is that it was full of Verses; Versus bi fere excidunt, quos Brutus ipse componendi ductus studio sæpissime facit (28). Cicero confesses, that Brutus found fault freely enough with his Taste, in point of Eloquence. See the twentieth Letter of the fourteenth Book to Atticus.

(27) Dial. de Causis corr. eloq.

(28) Quintil. lib. ix, cap. iv. pag. 448.

[I] He was older than Paterculus supposes.] He was born ten Years after Hortensius began to plead (29), which was under the Consulship of Lucius Crassus, and Quintus Scævola (30). That Consulship falls in with the Year of Rome 658 (31). Brutus then must have been born in the Year 668. So that having died in the Year 711, he lived Forty three Years. Paterculus must therefore be in the wrong, to give him but Thirty seven Years of Age (32).

(29) Cicero in Bruto, pag. 447.

(30) Id. ibid. pag. 343.

(31) Sigonius in Fastis.

(32) Patercul. lib. ii, cap. lxxiii.

[K] It should not be affirmed that he was descended from that Brutus who expelled Tarquin.] Dionysius Halicarnassæus maintains, that our Marcus Brutus was not descended from him (33). He says it is the Opinion of the Historians who had examined this Matter with the greatest exactness (34), whereof they bring divers proofs, and among others this following: The Junius's and the Brutus's of later times were Plebeians, Tribunes of the People which they had held. Now it is certain that the Junius's of Tarquin's Time were of a Patrician Family. The Historian, I have cited, thinks this a very strong Reason Τεκμήριον δυσεπιλύτον. Signum tui facile contradici non possit. Dio plainly declares, that the first Brutus caused the two only Children he had to be put to Death, who were yet but Youths (35). This, without doubt, is of greater weight than Plutarch's Authority, who says, that Brutus had several Children. Ἀδελφὴν γὰρ εὐῆν ὁ Βροῦτος ἔσχε καὶ παῖδας ἐξ αὐτῆς πλείονας. Sororem eorum (Vitellionum) habebat Brutus in matrimonio, & ex ea numerosam prolem (36). —— Brutus had married their Sister (the Vitellii) and had by her a numerous Offspring. Cicero having spoken in his Philippics as an Orator, and not as an Historian, is not very fit to weaken the Testimony of Dionysius Halicarnassæus and of Dio: However, he is a good Authority to shew that the Brutus's of his Time pretended they were issued from him, who delivered Rome from the Tyranny of Tarquin; and Dio does not deny but they made use of the Conformity of Names, at Rome, to incite Brutus to conspire against Cæsar, as the ancient Brutus, of whom he was descended, say they, had conspired against Tarquin the Proud (37). Some may be pleased to find Cicero's Words here. 'Fuerit ille L. Brutus qui & ipse regio dominatu Rempublicam liberavit, & ad similem virtutem & simile factum stirpem jam prope in quingentesimum annum propagavit (38). Si auctores ad liberandam patriam desiderarentur illis auctoribus, Brutos ego impellerem, quorum uterque L. Bruti imaginem quotidie videret, alter etiam Ahalæ. Hi igitur his majoribus ab alienis potius consilium peterent quàm à suis, & foris potius quam domi (39). —— Lucius Brutus, who both freed the Common-wealth from Kingly Government; and left Posterity, of like Virtue, to perform a like Action, almost five hundred Years after. If we wanted Leaders to deliver our Country, when these Men have lead the Way, I would stir up the Brutus's, who both every Day see the Image of Lucius Brutus, and one of them that of Ahala too. Shall these Men therefore, descended from such Ancestors, ask counsel Abroad, rather than at Home?' No great stress is to be laid on these Words, because an Orator

(33) Dionyſ. Halic. lib. v.

(34) Ὡς οἱ τῶν Ῥωμαίων ἀφ' ἑστίας ἐκτετακότες γράφειν ἱστορίαν, ut qui tragœdias Romanas investigarunt, scripto tradiderunt.

(35) Dio, lib. xliv.

(36) Plut. in Valerio, pag. 98. D.

(37) Dio, ubi supra.

(38) Cicero, Philipp. x.

(39) Id. Philipp. 2.

been adopted by Julius Cæsar [L]. Yet Moreri says it positively. I say nothing of his Faults of Omission.

I cannot pass over in Silence the Proof, that our Brutus gave of his Love of Justice in the beginning of the War between Cæsar and Pompey. He was the Son of a Man whom Pompey had ordered to be put to death, so that he had the greatest Reason in the World to hate Pompey: he had not dissembled his hatred; he never vouchsafed to salute or speak to him; this caused a Belief that he would take Julius Cæsar's part; nevertheless he embarked in Pompey's Cause, which he took to be the best, and justest [M], and most for the Interest of his Country, which he judged ought to be preferred before any personal Considerations (e). I shall not mention the Tenderness Cæsar expressed for him before the Battle of Pharsalia, by the Orders he gave his Commanders to give him good Quarter, or even to let him escape if they could not prevail with him to yield (f): Nor will I mention the kind Reception he gave him after the Battle: but I shall say a Word or two of the private Conversation he had with him concerning the Rout that Pompey might have taken. Brutus spoke his Opinion after such a manner, as made Cæsar judge that Pompey had bent his Course towards Egypt (g), and in that he was right. Some pretend that Brutus was much to blame in giving such a hint to the Conqueror [N].

(e) Plut. in Bruto, pag. 987. See him also in Pompeio, p. 653.

(f) Id. in Bruto, ibid.

(g) Id. ibid. pag. 986.

is not so much concerned whether such Facts be true or no; he is satisfied if only a part of the People believe them (40). But here is an Historian, who appears of Cicero's Side, and alledges Proofs. Plutarch affirms, that Marcus Brutus was descended from him who expelled Tarquin, and that none but Julius Cæsar's Friends, in hatred to the Murderer, maintained, that the first Brutus left no Posterity, and that the other Brutus's were descended from the Steward of the first (41). He adds, that the Philosopher Posidonius affirmed in one of his Books, that Lucius Brutus had three Sons, the last of whom was the Stock of the Family of the other Brutus, and that there were illustrious Men of that Family in his own time, whose countenance resembled the Statue of Lucius Brutus. Add to this, that the reason, which seems so strong to Dionysius Halicarnassus, is not unanswerable, seeing there are examples of Patrician Families which became Plebians (42). A learned Man sets forth, that, according to Plutarch, the Enemies which Brutus had made himself, by the Murther of Julius Cæsar, maintained, that this had happened to the Family Junia. 'Sed & fieri potuisse ut Junia gens 'à patriciis ad plebem transiverit, & scribit Plu- 'tarchus id ab iis qui ob Cæsaris necem Brutis erant 'infensi fuisse jactatum (43).' Had Plutarch said this, he must have clashed directly with common Sense. What is to be done in this Conflict of Arguments and Witnesses? Quite the contrary to what Mr Moreri has done: that is, we must remain neuter; but if one would be decisive, he ought to prefer the Authority of Dionysius Halicarnassus, and Dio, to that of Cicero and Plutarch.

(40) See what will be said in the Article CASSIUS, a Family, Remark [B].

(41) Plut. in vita Brut. init. pag. 984.

(42) Suetonius, in the second Chapter of the Life of Augustus, gives the Octavian Family as an Example.

(43) Abram. in Cicer. Philippicam I, pag. 488.

[L] Or that he was adopted by Julius Cæsar.] I do not think any credible Author ever said this. It should have been said, that Cæsar called him his Son (44), and that he even believed himself to be his Father, because of his Galantries with Servilia the Mother of Brutus. See that Lady's Article, Remark [B].

(44) Thus he called him, when he saw him among the Number of the Conspirators. Sueton. in Julio, cap. lxxxii.

[M] He engaged in Pompey's Party because he took it to be the best, and the justest.] He was not one of those who hate the Tyrant, but not the Tyranny; or of those that love not Liberty, but the Person of him who declares for it. He hated Pompey, and yet he sided with him: he had all the reason in the World to love Cæsar, and yet he conspired against him; it was because he believed that Pompey maintained the Cause of the Country, and that Cæsar was become a Tyrant. That Integrity of Heart in him was never contested; People judged otherwise of his Colleague Cassius; and most were perswaded that he laboured more for his private Interest, than for the Advantage of Rome. Ἡνίδε μᾶλλον ἄνδρα πολεμεῖν, καὶ πολανᾶσθαι καὶ κινδυνεύειν, δυοῖν τινα δυνασείαν καλασκευαζόμενον, ἢ ἐλευθερίαν τοῖς πολίταις. Omnino arbitrabantur (Cassium) bellum gerere & circumcursitare, & discrimina subire potius ad quærendam sibi potentiam, quam civibus libertatem (45). —— They were intirely of Opinion, that Cassius waged War, and encountred Dangers, rather to seek Power for himself, than Liberty for the City. This may be confirmed by another Place of Plutarch. Ἀλλὰ Κάσσιος, ἀγὴς θυμοειδὴς, καὶ μᾶλλον ἰδίᾳ μισοκαίσαρ ἢ κοινῇ μισοτύραννος. ἐξεκαυσέν καὶ καλέπαιξεν· λέγεται δὲ Βρούτου μὲν τὴν ἀρχὴν βαρύνεσθαι, Κασσίου δὲ τὸ ἄρχεσθαι μισεῖν. Verum ferocis vir animi Cassius, magisque privatim Cæsari, quam publicè tyranno infestus, incendit & stimulavit Brutum. Dicitur Brutus regnum non tulisse, Cassius odisse regem (46). - - - - - - But Cassius, a Man of a furious Spirit, and rather a private Enemy to Cæsar, than a public one to the Tyrant, provoked and excited Brutus. Brutus, it is said, could not bear a Monarchy. Cassius hated the Monarch. It was thought that Pompey would not have made a good use of a Victory in case he had obtained it, but that he would have maintained himself in an absolute Power under the Title of perpetual Dictator or Consul, or some other less invidious Name: Cinna, Marius, and Carbo, took up Arms only to become Tyrants: the Conquest of their Country was the Prize they proposed to themselves (47): but People had quite another thought of our Brutus: his very Enemies acquitted him in this Point. Several had heard Marc Antony say, that he was the only Man among the Conspirators, who was carried away by the seeming Beauty of that Action. Plutarch's Words have much force. Βρούτου δὲ λέγεσθαι μηδὲ τῆς ἐπιβουλῆς πρόσωπον μεῖναι, ἀλλὰ Ἀντωνίου γε καὶ πολλοὺς ἀκοῦσαι λέγοντος, ὡς μόνον ἐκεῖνο Βροῦτον ἐπιβῆναι Καίσαρι, πρὸς ἄλλα δίκαια τὴν λαμπρότητα καὶ τὸ φαινόμενον καλὸν τῆς πράξεως, τοὺς δὲ ἄλλους ἐπὶ τὸν ἄνδρα συνῆναι, μισοῦντας καὶ φθονοῦντας. At Bruto perhibent ne hostes quidem eam objectasse varietatem: imò ex Antonio etiam multos audivisse, quum diceret solum se putare Brutum adortum Cæsarem facti splendore & opinato bono adductum, alios in illum conspirasse odio provectos & invidia (48). - - - - - But they say, that even Brutus's Enemies never charged him with such Dissimulation: nay, that several People had heard Antony say, that he believed, that Brutus was the only Person, who was induced to attack Cæsar from the Glory, and supposed Good, of the Action; that the rest had conspired against him out of Hatred and Envy. This probably was the thing which obliged Marc Antony to do so much honour to the dead Body of Brutus (49), and Octavius to leave the Statue of that illustrious Conspirator intire at Milan (50).

(45) Plut. in Bruto, p. 997. D.

(46) Id. ibid. pag. 987.

(47) Id. ibid. pag. 997. D.

(48) Id. ibid. D.

(49) Id. ibid. pag. 1009. C.

(50) Id. ibid. pag. 1011. D.

[N] He conversed with Cæsar concerning the Rout which Pompey had taken - - - he is blamed for giving such a Hint to the Conqueror.] I cannot approve the Apology which Don Francisco de Quevedo endeavours to make for that Action. He pretends, that, as things then stood, Brutus was permitted to revenge his Father's Death, by discovering to Cæsar the Road by which he was to pursue the conquered. If there were no better Thoughts than this, in that Spantard's Book (51), it never would have been so much esteemed as it justly is. I should rather alledge in Brutus's Justification, I. That he was not entrusted with Pompey's Secret concerning the Choice of a Place of Retreat. II. That he did not see how, by communicating his Conjectures to Cæsar, he could make the unhappy Fate of the Fugitive worse; for perhaps he imagined, that Egypt regnabat

(51) It is a Commentary on a part of the Life of Brutus, by Plutarch. It has been translated out of Spanish into Latin, by Graswinckle. That Latin Translation was printed at the Hague, Anno 1661, in 4to, but does not come up to the O-

Egypt would be thought so good a Retreat, that they would not think fit to attack the Great Pompey there. However it be, we may here admire the Sagacity of his Judgment: he guessed very right what Way the conquered Chief had chosen. He was no worse a Prophet in another Conjuncture, which was, when he condemned Marc Antony's Imprudence, who, having had it in his Power to be named among the Brutus's, the Cassius's, and the Cato's, had joined himself as a Second to Octavius. If they [Marc Antony and Octavius] are not beaten together, said he, they will soon be seen in Arms against each other (52).

(52) Plut. in Bruto, pag. 997.

BRUTUS (John Michael), a learned Man in the XVIth Century, was a Native of Venice; and there happened something, I know not what, which obliged him to leave it [A], and might make him be looked on as an Exile. He studied at Padua, and applied himself chiefly to hear the Discourses and Lectures of Lazarus Bonamicus (a). He travelled much [B]; but that ambulatory Life did not hinder his becoming a learned Man and an Author. He wrote politely; though he condemned the Scruples of the Ciceronian Sect (b), and he may pass for a very good Humanist. His Notes on Horace, Cæsar, Cicero, &c. are very good Proofs of it. We shall see what he answered to those who accused him of Plagiarism [C]. He was (a) John. Mich. Brutus, Epist. pag. 596, Edit. 1698.

(b) Ibid. p. 588.

[A] He was a native of Venice, and there happened something, I know not what, which obliged him to leave it.] The Words that I am going to copy, which are taken from the One thousand and sixty seventh Page of the new Edition of his Letters, testify that he did not leave his Country willingly, and that, nevertheless, he left it without any blemish to his Honour. 'Nam 'quod illa (patria) hoc tempore careo, neque ul- 'la illius culpa hoc, neque dedecore ullo meo accidit, 'sed fortunæ injuria. Ejus enim mihi iniquitate 'ereptus est inter meos locus quem Majores per 'CCC annos retinuerunt honestissimum. —— For 'that I am now deprived of it (my Country) is 'owing neither to any Fault of my Country, nor 'any Disgrace of mine, but to the Iniquity of For- 'tune, For by her Frowns I was robbed of that 'Place amongst my Countrymen, which my An- 'cestors had held with the greatest Honour for Three 'hundred Years.' This, you will say, does not prove that he was of Venice; but you will not doubt it if you consult the Sequel of that Passage: 'Quo 'quidem, continues he, speaking to a Venetian, 'who exhorted him to write the History of the 'Republic of Venice, cum adsum, non possum æquo 'animo carere, fore ut aliquando eundem cum pri- 'stina fortuna recuperem, tua gratia fretus non 'despero. Sed ne hæc nos cura magnopere angat, 'quot patria nostra habet (1), qui has illi partes 'possunt egregie præstare? Neque enim etsi est 'Petrus Bembus jam, & Andreas Navagerius mor- 'tuus, summi homines, & quorum est apud posteros 'merito futurum semper illustre nomen, simul etiam 'cum iis est lumen eloquentiæ in civitate extinctum. '------ Without which, If I return, I cannot 'live to my Satisfaction; but relying on your Fa- 'vour I do not despair, but that I shall one Day 'recover it together with my former Fortune. But 'least this Thought disturb us too much; how many 'are there in our Country who could perform this 'excellently? For though we have lost* Peter Bembus 'and Andreas Navagerius, *both very great Men, 'whose Names will be deservedly famous to all 'Posterity, yet is not the Spirit of Eloquence ex- 'tinguished in the City.'

(1) He says, at pag. 1071. As ne cui tamen videar esse oblitus hanc mihi patriam esse.

(4) Jo. Mich. Brutus Epistol. pag. 1064. See also pag 432.

[B] He travelled much.] He passed part of his Life in Spain, England (2), France, Germany, Transilvania, and in Poland. He says, he had suffered several Hardships in his Travels in Spain (3), but that he had seen most of the other Courts of Europe quietly, and thereby had acquired Experience enough to write the History of it. 'Magna 'quædam res est historiam scribere: qua quidem 'ego in re ita sum per multos annos versatus, ut 'me longa jam exercitatio doceat, quam prudenter 'ea sit & cunctanter attingenda. Qua autem ego 're confisus & scribere jam instituerim, & nunc 'quidem ------ scribendi studio infiammam, dicerem, 'si id mihi per meam modestiam liceret: certe ut 'non me destituat spes eo perveniendi, quo con- 'tendo, non ingenio confido magis, cujus haud me 'pœnitet tamen, quam diligentia & studio, usu 'quidem rerum tanto, quantum esse in eo homine 'æquum est, qui magnam Europæ partem, aulas 'fere Regum omnium maximorum, per summum 'otium lustravit. Itaque si quæ mihi incommoda '(id quod necesse fuit) tot terras obeunti obtige- 'runt, sit quidem fructu, quem ex his caplo, maxi- 'mo quidem ac uberrimo, eorum etiam ut mihi 'sit jucunda recordatio (4). ------ It is a great 'Work to write a History: in which I have been 'so conversant for several Years, that long Practice 'has taught me how cautiously and deliberately it 'is to be undertaken. What emboldened me first 'to undertake to write, and now to continue writing, 'I would say if my Modesty would give me leave: 'it is certain I am not without Hopes of attain- 'ing what I aim at, not so much out of an Opi- 'nion of my Genius (tho' with that I am not dis- 'satisfied) as Diligence and Care, and such a know- 'ledge of Affairs, as might be expected of a Man 'who has seen great part of* Europe, *and the 'most considerable Courts in it, at full Leisure. 'Wherefore, if I have met with any Inconvenien- 'cies (as of course I must) in travelling through 'so many Countries, the great and valuable Ad- 'vantages I reap from them make the Remembrance 'of them pleasant.' He is right in maintaining, that the Knowledge which is acquired by travelling is very useful to those who compose a History. They ought all to deserve, that what was said of Ulysses might be applied to them:

Qui mores hominum multorum vidit & urbes (5).

(5) Horat. de Arte Poët. vers. 142.

[C] We have his Notes on Horace, Cæsar, Cicero. ------ We shall see what he answered to those who accused him of Plagiarism.] His Observations on the four Books of the Odes of Horace, and on the Epodes, were printed at Venice, by Paulus Manutius, with those of Lambinus, in the Year 1566, in 4to. His Scholia on Julius Cæsar were printed by the same Manutius in the Year 1564, in 8vo. They are inserted in the Edition of Jungerman at Francfort, in the Year 1606, as the Journalists of Utrecht (6) observe, who observe also that he caused the Works of Cicero, with Notes, to be printed in duodecimo, by Anthony Gryphius, in the Year 1572. They tell us, what I have to say on the other Point of my Text. He had been accused of having made use of Lambinus's Observations on Cicero; he wrote to Lambinus, That he might go to the Fountain-head as well as he, and when he made use of another Writer's Thoughts, he cited him punctually; whereby he secured himself from all Reproach of Plagiarism; for this was borrowing and not stealing: 'Falsam hanc opinio- 'nem Lambino eripere conatur, his inter alia ver- 'bis utens: Quisquis is est, qui me in his, quæ 'scripta edidi, surripuisse ab ullo affirmet, quæ 'transferrem in mea; is neque plane me novit, & 'facit ipse ut se prodat, tacente etiam me: Ut enim 'qui aqua indigent, ubi facultas sit, è fonte sume- 're, quam è rivo, malunt; egentes, divitum adire, 'quam infimorum, domus: Ita, mi Lambine, ut bene 'sis à literis & ab ingenio paratus, cum mihi 'iidem fontes pateant, è quibus tu hausisti, (nondum 'enim exaruerunt) æque pateant eorum penetralia, '&c. stulte faciam, si de tuo surripiam, non minus 'quam tu, si inducas animum surripere de meo (7). 'Postea addit, se sumpsisse quidem ab aliis, non 'vero surripuisse. Sumere enim eum, qui, à quo 'mutuetur, indicet: & laudet, quem auctorem ha- 'beat: Surripere vero qui taceat, qui ex alterius

(6) In July and August, 1698, pag. 566.

(7) Brutus, pag. 599. Epistol. Edit. 1698, cited ibid.

(2) See p. 1109, of his Letters, Edit. of Berlin, 1698.

(3) Ibid. pag. 1065.

'industria

was not content with only writing Books, but he took pains also to search for Manuscripts, and publish them [D]. He passed some Years at Lyons, from whence he went in all likelihood to Basil. He there received great Civilities from the learned Theodore Zuinger, Author of the Theatrum vitæ humanæ (c). He was in Transylvania from the beginning of the Year 1574 (d). He was invited thither by Prince Stephen Battori, in order to compose a History of that Country (e) [E], and values himself mightily on the Reception he met with there (f). One of his Letters, dated from Crasow, the Twenty third of November, 1577, informs us, that he had followed that Prince, then King of Poland, to the Expedition of Prussia (g). He had a convenient Apartment assigned him in the Castle of Cracow (h), that he might apply himself more conveniently to his Function of Historiographer [F]. He left Poland after the Death of that Monarch (i), and lived with William of St Clement, Embassador from the King of Spain to the Imperial Court. He was honoured with the Title of his Imperial Majesty's Historiographer (k). He was at Prague on the first of January, 1590, which is the Date of that Book which he dedicated to the Spanish Embassador whom I have mentioned (l). He must have been at that time Seventy three Years of Age, since, in a Letter, dated the nineteenth of August, 1582, he takes notice that he had attained to his Sixty fifth Year (m). He makes mention of his Daughter's Marriage, in a Letter dated from Clausemburgh, the Twenty third of January, 1574 (n). He had a great share in the Friendship of Duditbius, and Crato. The latter had persuaded the Emperor Maximilian to retain him in his Service (o). I cannot tell what became of John Michael Brutus, after the Year 1590, nor where, or when, he died. His Writings, which were become very scarce, were so earnestly sought after by the best Judges, that there was great Joy in the Republic of Letters, on hearing that Mr Cramer (p) had undertaken to (c) Id. ibid. pag. 590, item. p. 09.

(d) Id. ibid. pag. 525.
(e) Id. ibid. pag. 571. See also pag 293.
(f) Id. ibid. pag. 330.
(g) Id. ibid. pag. 328, 329.
(h) Ibid. pag. 898.
(i) Ibid. pag. 900.
(k) Ibid. pag. 355.
(l) Ibid. pag. 510.
(m) Ibid. pag. 283.
(n) I speak of him towards the end of the Remark [C]. of the Article GRETSERUS He had been Preceptor to the Prince Electoral of Brandenbourg.
(o) Idem. ibid. pag. 366.

(8) Journal of Utrecht, July and August, 1698, pag. 565, 566.

' industria fructum quærat; quod quidem à se omnino alienum esse dicit (8). - - - - - He endeavours to convince Lambinus of his Mistake, using these Words among others: Whoever he be that affirms, that, in any Writing which I have published, I have stolen any thing from any Author's Work to insert in my own; he is, in short, both unacquainted with me, and betrays himself, though I were silent: For as they, who want Water, would rather, when they have Opportunity, take it from the Fountain than from the Stream; and the Poor go rather to the Houses of the Rich than of the meaner sort; so, my Lambinus, tho' you are well furnished with Learning, and a good Genius, as the same Fountains from whence you drew are open to me (for they are not yet dry), and their inmost Recesses are as open, &c. I should act as foolishly in stealing any thing of your's, as you would if you should take it in your Head to steal from me. He afterwards adds, that he has borrowed from others, but not stolen: for that he is a Borrower, who tells from whom he borrows, and gives the Author the Honour: But he steals, who says nothing, who seeks to reap the Benefit of another's Industry; which he says he utterly abhors.' These Gentlemen cannot tell us, whether his Book de Instauratione Italiæ was ever published: Neither do I know any thing of it. He mentions it in the Six hundred and twentieth, One thousand and seventh, One thousand and Seventy first, Pages of his Epistles, and cites Fragments of it. By the way, what he composed on Cæsar did not consist wholly in Scholia and in Variæ Lectiones. He gives a more advantageous Idea of it in the Passage I am going to transcribe: ' Habeo in manibus Cæsaris Commentarios, multis à me animadversionibus emendatos, quibus justum volumen accedet, in quo, certo ordine, politissimi scriptoris voces phrasesque omnes, tum, quod permagni faciendum est, rerum omnium descriptiones, in locos communes redactæ habentur; ut si cui sit scribenda historia & lauta supellex, & loculenta ex tanti scriptoris monumentis, ad ea ornanda atque illustranda quæ velit, suppeditentur. Eum librum Basileæ excusum animus est inscribere Transylvaniæ principi (9). - - - - I have in hand Cæsar's Commentaries which I have improved with a great many Animadversions; to which will be added an entire Volume, in which all the Words and Phrases of that most polite Writer, and, what is most valuable, all his Descriptions of things reduced to common places in proper Order. So that any Writer of History may here be furnished, from the Monuments of so great a Writer, with a smooth, elegant, and beautiful Stock, to adorn and illustrate whatever he has a mind. This Book I think to print at Basil, and dedicate it to the Prince of Transylvania.'

(9) Brutus Epist. pag. 220.

[D] He took pains to search for Manuscripts and to print them.] He was the first that published the ten Books of Bartholomew Facius, de rebus ab Alphonso I. rege Neapolitano gestis. He got them printed at Lyons, by Gryphius, in the Year 1560, in 4to. Two Years after he published, in the same place, Francisci Contareni libros tres de rebus in Hetruria à Senensibus gestis; a Work that was reprinted at Venice in the Year 1623, in 4to. In the Year 1582, he published in Poland the three Books of Callimachus Experiens de rebus gestis Uladislai Ungarorum & Polonorum Regis (10).

(10) Idem. ibid. pag. 366.

[E] He was in Transylvania - - - - - invited thither by Prince Stephen Battori, to write a History of that Country.] Simon Forgats, who had a Design to write a History of Hungary, desired to have John Michael Brutus with him, to be assisted in that Labour (11), and to that end proposed to him such honourable and advantageous Conditions, as he thought might draw him into Transylvania. Brutus was then at Venice, and did not seem very fond of that Journey (12); for nothing was concluded eight Years after (13); at last the Business was brought about; he sent word by a Letter, dated from Basil, the first of June 1572, that he would speedily set forward (14), and yet he took a Journey into France before he began the other. I find that he wrote a Letter to the Prince of Transylvania, dated from Lyons the first of June 1573 (15), and that he departed from Lyons, the seventeenth of October of the same Year (16). He arrived at Vienna in Austria the twenty fourth of November following (17).

(11) Ibid. p. 222.
(12) Ibid. p. 225.
(13) Ibid.
(14) Ibid. p. 226.
(15) Ibid. p. 86.
(16) Ibid. p. 222.
(17) Ibid.

[F] He applied himself - - - - - to his Function of Historiographer.] He was to begin where Bonfinius had ended, and to carry on the History of that Country to his own time (18). It appears by a Letter he wrote to the King of Poland, the first of December 1579, that he applied himself diligently to that Function, and that of the twelve Books, into which the Work was to be divided (19), four, which reached to the Year 1542, were finished. He owns that he makes use of Paulus Jovius's History; but that he rectifies it in several Places, where that Author is mistaken, or wanted ample and exact Instructions. He proposed, after he had finished these twelve Books, to write the History of Stephen Battori in particular (20). A Letter, which he wrote the fifteenth of January 1578, testifies the extream Passion he had to perform all the Duties of an Historian well; for he desired very earnestly that he might be permitted to consult the Records, and to send for the Library which he had left in Transylvania (21). He observes,

(18) Ibid. p. 294.
(19) Ibid. p. 74, 75.
(20) Ibid. p. 80.
(21) Ibid. p. 296, 297.

to publish a new Edition of them. The first part of that design is already accomplished [G], and the rest is promised in a little time. It is said, that the History of Florence, composed by our Brutus, and printed at Lyons, in 1562, is not favourable to the House of Medicis (q), and that it displeased the Duke of Florence very much. Among the Letters of this Author, I have not found that which he had promised to add to them, wherein he designed to treat of an ill Custom introduced a long time ago, of giving the same lofty Titles to Persons whom we write to in Latin, as are given in the Vulgar Tongue [H]. Ancient Rome had no such Usage in the time of it's greatest Glory, and of it's most accomplished Politeness. Brutus would not conform to the new Stile, not even in writing to some Polish Lords [I]. Let us not forget that he endured much Vexation in Poland; he had Enemies observes, that it was not large, but consisted of choice Books, and of the best Editions; at numero non ita copiosa est, at libris optimis, atque ex elegantissimis editionibus est instructa (22). He had put the Charges of the Carriage of his Books in the Articles of Agreement, and he declared that he could not live without his Library. Præmissis, cum aliis impedimentis, bibliotheca, qua quidem carere, ut dixi, nisi ut vita simul mihi carendum sit, haud facile possum (23). He observes also that the Booksellers of Basil were enquiring already for his History of Hungary (24). He informs us in a Letter written from Cracow, the seventh of February 1580, that as to the Bulk, his Labours equalled the three first Books of Cæsar (25), and reached to the taking of Lippa: He adds, that he had made very good use of the Work of Ascanius Centorius (26), and that they who would examine after what manner he wrote, would not think it strange that his Book was so small. 'Multum inquis? imo 'tum videbitur multum, ubi leges non quantum 'scripserim solum, sed quid & quemadmodum id 'adeo scripserim (27). —— Much do you say? you will think it a great deal when you read not only how much I wrote, but what, and how it is done.'

(q) This does not agree with what has been written by Francis Lut*sius to the Author.* Ibid. pag. 2145.

(22) Ibid. p. 207.

(23) Ibid. p. 219.

(24) Ibid. p. 206.

(25) Ibid. p. 230.

(26) Ibid. p. 228.

(27) Ibid. p. 230.

[G] Mr Cramer undertook a new Edition of his Works, the first part of which Design is already accomplished.] See the Book intituled, Joh. Michaelis Bruti opera varia selecta, nimirum epistolarum libri V. de historiæ laudibus, sive de ratione legendi scriptores historicos liber: præceptorum conjugalium liber, epistolis & orationibus compluribus editione Cracoviensi auctiora. It was printed at Berlin in the Year 1698, in 8vo, and contains Eleven hundred and Fifty five Pages. That second Edition is more ample the first, which is that of Cracow 1582; for two Letters are added to it, which Mr Grævius had obtained from the Library of Breslaw, and the Letters of our Brutus, which were inserted in the Collection Epistolarum Clarorum Virorum, which he had caused to be printed at Lyons, in the Year 1561.

[H] He designed to speak of an ill Custom ... of giving the same lofty Titles in Latin, that are given in common Languages.] This I found in a Letter which he wrote to Crato in the Year 1582. 'Credo te miraturum, cum mihi summi homines 'multi, in his sint maximi reges appellandi, parcum 'me esse his, titulis honestandis, cum nullo meo in'commodo liceat in hoc genere officii effuso esse. 'De quibus titulis adeo mihi parum opportunis 'animus est epistolam scribere, quam aliis attexam '(28). ..... I believe you will wonder, as I am to mention in this Work several Men of the first Rank, and great Kings, that I am so sparing in giving them Titles, of which I might, without any Inconvenience to myself, be profuse. Concerning these Titles, which are very disagreeable to me, I purpose to write a Letter, which I will join to the rest.' He afterwards exclaims against the reigning Vanity among the meanest private Persons, of expecting, in the Addresses of Letters, and in public Acts, the Title of magnifici, clarissimi, atque amplissimi, and the necessity of having recourse to the Substantives, Majesty, Highness, &c. in speaking to Kings and Princes. He adds, That on pretence that the Title of Excellency was abased by having been bestowed on Physicians and Lawyers, the Lord of a small State had used so many Arguments and Intreaties with the Pope, that at last he had granted him the Title of Highness. See here his Words at length: 'Tanta autem hominum 'levitas in hac nescio qua gloriolæ titillatione, ut 'nullus sit hoc tempore in Europa regulus, quin 'se Altum, Sublimem, Excelsum appellari velit: 'nullus tam tenuis census privatus, quin sibi cla'met insignem fieri injuriam, nisi illi magnifici, 'clarissimi, atque amplissimi nomen in literarum 'inscriptionibus, publicis actis, regum diplomatis 'extet, quasi titoli viros pariant, non titulos viri. 'Quid? quod cum est nobis cum regibus & viris 'principibus loquendum, cogimur ab iis recedentes 'per abstracta nomina, quibus vulgo utuntur in Philosophorum scholis, cum eorum majestatibus loqui, altitudines affari, & quas vos Germani 'inexistis celsitudines, nostris Sublimitates invidentes. Nihil verius est quam tenuis ditionis 'principem hoc tempore, cum Excellentia con'tempta, quasi obsoleviset inter medicos & legulejos, ac minorum gentium regulos, majora ambiret, diu egisse apud pontificem maximum, ut 'se altitudinis titulo honestaret; cum minus illo 'æquo uteretur, non prius orare, fatigare precibus, 'contendere desiisse, quam exoratum in sententiam 'traduxerit. Quod frustra contendisse N. civitas 'dicitur, cum Serenitatis titulum Venetorum princi'pi, propter civitatis amplitudinem concessum, 'pontifex negaret se passurum vilescere per minores 'potestates evulgatum (29). ..... The Vanity of Men is so great in this unaccountable Itch after a little Glory, that there is not at this time a petty King in Europe, but requires the Titles of High, Sublime, Mighty. No private Man, of ever so low Condition, but thinks he is highly affronted, if he has not the Titles of Magnificent, Famous, Great, in the Addresses of Letters, public Acts, and Kings Patents, as if Titles made Men, and not Men Titles. Why, when we are to speak to Kings or Princes, are we obliged to take no notice of them, but speak in abstract Terms, such as are commonly used in the Schools of Philosophers, to their Majesties, or address their Highnesses or Celsitudes, which you Germans have introduced to match the Italian Titles, Sublimities? It is certain that a Prince of a small State, not satisfied with Excellency, as if the Title were debased among Physicians, Lawyers, and petty Princes, lately desired a greater, and treated a long while with the Pope to obtain of him the Title of Highness; the Pope making some difficulty of it, he never ceased praying, soliciting, and pressing him, 'till he had obtained his Purpose. A certain State, as it is said, solicited the like in vain, the Pope alledging that he would not suffer the Title of Serenity, given to the Duke of Venice, on account of the largeness of that State, to be debased among smaller Powers.' The last part of this Passage informs us, that the Pope was inexorable with regard to a small Republic which desired the Title of Serenity. Things are strangely altered for the worse, since the Death of John Michael Brutus. Such a Title, as would have satisfied the most excessive Vanity in the Year 1582, is at present an intolerable Burden, of which People endeavour to be delivered by the Acquisition of some more pompous and sublime Expression. I shall doubtless have a favourable Occasion of giving Collections on this Subject.

(28) Id. Epist. lib. iii, pag. 357, 358.

(29) Id. ibid.

[I] Brutus would not conform to the new Stile, not even in writing to some Polish Lords.] There are but few Countries in which they are more nice in this Point than in Poland, and yet our Brutus dispensed with all Ceremonies that might make him deviate from the Purity of the ancient Language of Rome. This was his only Motive: Pride had no part in his Conduct; he considered no other Interests than those of a good Latin Writer. 'Hæ meæ sunt 'literæ ad te primas, (says he, in a Letter to John Enemies there, who did him several ill Offices, and blasted his Reputation (r): his Salary was so ill paid, that he was afraid he should be obliged to contract new Debts (s), and that Fear could not but be most uneasy to a Man like him, who had more than once felt the Rigour of Creditors. He had reduced himself for a long time to a small Expence, the better to maintain his Credit, without troubling any body [K], and by that Frugality had laid up something out of his first Year's Salary, which served to pay the most pressing Debts. He proposed to save as much out of his second Year's Salary, and still with the same good Design (t).

(r) Brutus, Epist. pag 312, & alibi.

(s) Ibid. pag. 320.

(t) Ibid. pag. 302.

' Ponetowski) quas ut soleo ad regem etiam, Ro-
' mano more. Alia possum à me omnia impetrare,
' te colere, observare, ferre in oculis, id quod mea
' sponte, tuo merito maximo faciam: cum Latine
' quid ad te scribendum, patere me nulla tua cum
' offensione ex usu Latini sermonis scribere: non
' enim ad amplitudines nescio qua tuas, & magnifi-
' centias, cum nullæ sub orbe lunæ sint, sed ad te (30) Brutus Epist. lib. iv, pag 443-430. See also pag. 556.
' cum scribendum mihi esse intelligo (30). - - - -
' This is my first Letter to thee, which I write
' in the Roman Manner, as I use to do even to ' the King. I can bring myself to every thing else,
' can love you, obey you, and always regard you,
' which I shall do very willingly, as you highly
' deserve; when I have any thing to write to ' you in Latin, permit me, without any Offence,
' to write according to the use of the Latin Tongue;
' for when I write I do not understand that I am
' writing to your Greatnesses, your Magnificences,
' which exist no where on this Side the Moon. I
' write to you.' See the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres (31).

(31) For the Month of September, 1684, Art. 4, pag. 688, 689, Edit. 1686.

[K] He had reduced himself to a small Expence, the better to maintain himself without incommoding any Body.] See how he expresses himself: ' Ut
' mihi liceret nullo cujusquam incommodo tueri
' meam fidem, hoc à me impetravi jam pridem, ut
' victu frugi uterer, mensa tenui, parvo lare, uno
' aut altero puero, LX annos nata muliercula quæ
' domestica ministeria obiret (32). This was declaring that he bid farewel to all good Cheer, that he was content with one Servant or two, and that he got a Woman of sixty Years of Age to keep his House. Doubtless he made choice of one of that Age to avoid all Suspicions, to which those expose themselves, who have neither the Prudence, nor it may be the Virtue requisite to make a good Choice of the Governess of a Family. What would not his Enemies have said, if they had seen the House of an Italian Widower governed by a young Maid?

(32) Brutus, ibid. pag 302.

BRUTUS (STEPHEN JUNIUS), a disguised Author of a Book of Politics, intituled, Vindiciæ contra Tyrannos. See LANGUET.

BUCER (MARTIN), a Protestant Divine, born at Schelestadt (a), in 1491, and who died at Cambridge, in 1551 (b). He was one of the ablest Ministers of that Century. He not only preached and composed Books and Lectures, but was also very fit to manage Business; and there were but few Ecclesiastical Negociations in which he was not employed. He laboured with great Zeal, and with much Dexterity, to pacify the Differences between the Lutherans and the Zuinglians, but could not compass it. He wished that both Parties had been less rigid; and if all the Heads had been Persons of a reconciling Temper like him, that great Affair might have succeeded happily. He did not throw away his time, in England, in running down the Hierarchy; he did nothing less than follow Calvin's Opinion in this Point [A]. The Bishop of Meaux endeavours to make him pass for a Dissembler,

(a) Melch. Adam. in vit. Theolog. pag 211. Correct then Prateolus in Elencho Hæretic. pag. 106; Father Gaultier, In Tabulis Chronol. pag. 756, and several others who make him a Native of Strasbourg.

(b) Melch. Adam. ibid. pag. 220.

[A] He did not throw away his Time, in England, in condemning the Hierarchy; he did nothing less than follow Calvin's Opinion in this Point. I have read in one of Vossius's Letters, that Calvin's Friends accused Bucer of introducing a new kind of Popery, which they called Bucerism, in opposition to Calvinism. This Bucerism consisted principally in his approving of Episcopacy. ' Traducebant Calvini amici Bucerum quasi novum Papismum eri-
' gere. - - - - - Bucerum negat à se hoc nomine
' accusari Calvinus, sed optare tamen ut ne ansam
' præbeat calumniæ dum hic mediam - - - - insistit
' viam. Quod cum ex cunctis ejus pateat scriptis,
' tum præcipuè à forma reformationis, præscripta
' Hermanno Archiepiscopo Colonienſi, & illis quæ
' Anglicanæ Reformationis ergò scripsit. Cum vero
' Bucerus propius ad Romanam Ecclesiam accede-
' ret, quam Lutherus; Calvinus longius ab ea abi-
' ret, quam idem Lutherus; extra Lutheranismum,
' duæ ortæ Appellationes, Bucerismi, & Calvinismi:
' & fatebatur Calvinus, Bucerismum esse magis to-
' lerabilem, quam Clavinismum, si non ad obrussam
' Scripturæ rem exigi oporteret. Nunc Bucerum
' paci nimium dare, se omnia metiri veritate. Sed
' Calvini verba audiamus. Frustra mihi excusas,
' novo Papismo erigendo - - - - - te non studere; sed
' vellem aliis omnibus sit exploratam esse puritatem
' tuam, ut ne suspicionis locum relinqueres. Frustra
' etiam id te dare operam, ne quid Calvinismi ad-
' misceatur. Si à scripturâ semel desciscendum sit,
' non ignoro, quam sit tolerabilior Bucerismus, quam
' Calvinismus, &c (1). - - - - - Calvin's Friends
(1) Vossius, Epist. ccclvii, p. 403, col. 1.
' traduced Bucer, as if he was setting up a new ' Kind of Popery. - - - - Calvin denies that he ever
' laid this to Bucer's Charge, but wishes that he do
' not give a handle for Calumny, while he thus fol-
' lows the middle way, which is manifest from all
' his Writings, but especially from the Form of Re-
' formation, prescribed to Herman, Archbishop of ' Cologn, and what he wrote for the Reformation
' of England. Now as Bucer came nearer the ' Church of Rome than Luther; Calvin departed
' further from it than the same Luther; so
' that there arose two Denominations besides Lu-
' theranism, viz. Bucerism and Calvinism: and
' Calvin confessed that Bucerism was more tolerable
' than Calvinism, if the matter were not to be tried
' by the Scriptures, and that Bucer studied Peace too
' much: but he himself measured all things by
' Truth. But let us hear Calvin's Words. You have ' no occasion to make any excuse to me, that you ' are not erecting a new Popery; but I would ' have your Integrity so well known to all the ' World, that no room might be left for Suspicion.
' It is also needless for you to endeavour not to take
' in any thing of Calvinism: if we might vary
' from Scripture, I know very well how much
' more tolerable Bucerism is than Calvinism, &c.'
Here is another Passage in which Calvin exhorts Bucer to order matters so, that the Reformation of England may be well purged of all Remains of Popery. He lets him know that if he does not take pains, he will never be able to wipe out the ill Suspicions which several had conceived of his inclining to both sides. ' Dominum Protectorem, ut
' volebas, conatus sum hortari, ut flagitabat præsens
' rerum status: tuum quoque erit modis omnibus
' instare, si modo detur audientia (quod te facere
' sum persuasus) præsertim vero, ut ritus, qui su-
' perstitionis aliquid redolent, tollantur è medio.
' Hoc tibi nominatim commendo, ut te invidia li-
' beres, qua te falso gravari apud multos non igne-
' ras: nam mediis consiliis vel auctorem, vel appro-
' batorem semper inscribunt. Scio hanc quorundam
' animis

(c) See his first Volume of his Histoire des Variations.

sembler, and alledges the Testimony of Calvin for it (c) [B]; but it is better to believe that for the sake of Unity, and out of an ardent and sincere Desire of Peace, Bucer invented Expressions that were likely to please both Parties. It is very probable that he always believed good Works meritorious [C]. There has been animis suspicionem altius infixam esse, quam ut eam revellere facile sit, etiam si nihil omittas. Et sunt qui te maligne nullo errore inducti calumnientur. Denique fatale quodammodo hoc tibi malum est, quod fugere vix possis. Cavendum tamen ne imperitis detur male suspicandi occasio, improbi vero obloquendi prætextum arripiant (z). - - - - - I shall endeavour according to your Desire to advise the Lord Protector, as the present State of Affairs require; it will be your Business to press him every way if you can but gain Audience (as I am perswaded you do), but chiefly that all Ceremonies may be abolished, which any way favour of Superstition. This particularly I recommend to you, that you free yourself from the Envy, which you know you labour under, without cause, among several Persons; for they always call you the Author, or Approver of indifferent Counsels. I know that this Suspicion is so deeply rooted in some People's Mind, that you will scarce be able to remove it, though you omit nothing: and some there are who slander you, not out of Mistake, but meer Malice. In short this Evil is as it were destined for you, and you will hardly be able to escape it, but you must take care not to give occasion to the Ignorant to think ill of you, or a handle to the Wicked to reproach you.' It does not appear that Bucer took any notice of these Admonitions. Yet Calvin testifies that he expected great things from him, if Death had not taken him away too soon. Dum mecum reputo, quantam in unius hominis morte jacturam fecerit Dei Ecclesia, fieri non potest quin novo subinde mœrore excrucier. Angliæ multum profuisset. Plus aliquanto in posterum sperabam ex ejus scriptis, quam hactenus præstiterat (3). - - - - - When I consider with myself, what a Loss the Church of GOD has suffered, by the Death of this one Man, I cannot but every now and then renew my Grief; he would have done great Service to England. I hoped for something greater from his Writings hereafter, than he had hitherto performed.'

(z) Calvinus, Epist. ad Bucerum. It is the 93d in my Edition, which is that of Herow, 1597, pag. 199.

(3) Ibid. Epist. cxxiii, pag. 246.

[B] The Bishop of Meaux calls him Dissembler, and alledges the Testimony of Calvin.] These are Mr de Meaux's Words (4): 'Now whether Bucer had a formal Design to trifle with the World by affected Equivocations, or whether any confused Idea of Reality made him believe that he might sincerely subscribe to Expressions so evidently contrary to the figurative Sense, I leave to the Judgment of the Protestants. What is certain is, that Calvin, his Friend, and in some measure his Disciple, when he would express a blameable Obscurity, in a Profession of Faith, said that There was nothing so perplexed, so obscure, so ambiguous, so winding in Bucer himself.' These are Calvin's own Words: 'Tu Buceri obscuritatem vituperas & morbo. At nihil est in Bucero adeo perplexum, obscurum, flexiloquum, atque, ut sic loquar, tortuosum (5).' I do not rely on the disadvantageous Judgment that a Divine of Saxony made of Bucer, after the Conferences of Marpourg, in the Year 1529. 'In Zuinglio, says he, agreste quoddam est & arrogantulum: in Oecolampadio mira bonitas naturæ & clementia: in Hedione non minor humanitas ac liberalitas ingenii: in BUCERO calliditas vulpina, perverse imitata acumen & prudentiam (6). —— There is in Zuinglius something rustic and a little arrogant: in Oecolampadius a wonderful good Nature and Clemency: in Hedion no less Humanity and good Nature: in BUCER a Fox-like cunning, wretchedly imitating Sagacity and Prudence.'

(4) Histoire des variations, liv. iv, n. xxv pag. 167, Edit. Holl.

• Ep. Calvin. pag. 50.

(5) Calvin, Epist. xliv, pag. 94.

(6) Justus Jonas in relatione de conventu Marpurgensi apud Seckendorf. Histor. Lutheran. lib. ii, pag. 140.

[C] It is very probable that he always believed good Works meritorious.] 'While we are on this Subject, it will not be useless to consider what this Doctor thought of it, who was one of the Heads of the second Party of the new Reformation, in a solemn Conference where he spoke in these Terms: Seeing GOD will judge every one according to his Works, it must not be denied, that good Works performed through the Grace of JESUS CHRIST, and which he operates himself in his Servants, DO MERIT eternal Life; not indeed by their own Dignity, but by the Acceptance, and the Promise of GOD, and through the Covenant made with him: For if it is to such Works the Scripture promises the Reward of eternal Life, which therefore is not less a Grace in another Respect, forasmuch as those good Works, to which so great a Reward is given, are themselves the Gifts of GOD †.' This is what Bucer writes in 1539, in the Dispute of Leipsic, that it might not be thought that these were things written in the beginning of the Reformation, and before People had time to look about them. Upon the same Principle, the same Bucer decides in another Place, that it must not be denied that one may be justified by Works, as St James says, seeing GOD will render to every one according to his Works ‡. And, continues he, the Question is not concerning THEIR MERITS: We do not reject them in any wise, and we acknowledge that eternal Life is MERITED according to that Word of our Lord: He who forsakes all for my Sake, shall receive an hundred Fold, and inherit everlasting Life. One cannot possibly acknowledge more clearly the Merits which every one may treasure up for himself, even with regard to Life eternal. But Bucer goes yet farther: And as the Church was accused of ascribing Merits to the Saints, not only for themselves, but also for others, he justifies it in these Words: As for what concerns the Public Prayers of the Church, which are called Collects, wherein mention is made of Prayers, and of the Merits of the Saints; seeing that, in those same Prayers, whatever is asked of that kind, is asked of GOD, and not of the Saints, and also that it is asked through JESUS CHRIST; it follows, that all they who offer up that Prayer, acknowledge that all the Merits of the Saints are Gifts of GOD freely granted. And a little after: For we confess also, and preach with Joy, that GOD does not only reward the good Works of his Servants in themselves, but also in those for whom they pray, seeing he has promised that he will do good to those who love him unto a thousand Generations. Thus Bucer disputed for the Catholic Church in 1546, in the Conference at Ratisbon (7).' To these Passages may be added that which Vossius mentions in the Letter I have cited: 'Non possum non sanius judicium optare quibusdam, qui hoc nostro sæculo plurimos admodum turbarunt hoc paradoxo; sola nos fide servari. Cum viderent tamen hoc eo rapi, ac si justitiam sola animi existimatione finirent, & bona opera secluderent. Quæ jam illa Charitas, quæ huic malo uno verbulo mederi dedignatur, ut dicerent, fide formata justificamur, aut per fidem bonorum operum voluntatem ac ita justitiam consequimur, aut fides fundamentum & radix est justæ vitæ, ut Augustinus dixit. Neque veris enim quisquam est offendendus, &c (8). - - - - I cannot but wish a more sound Judgment to some Persons, who have disturbed many in this our Age with this Paradox; that we are saved by Faith only. Though they saw that the thing was carried so far as to confine Righteousness only to the Opinion of the Mind, and excluding good Works. Where is their Charity, who refuse to cure this Evil by one Word or two? it is only to say, that when Faith is formed we are justified, and that through Faith we obtain a Disposition to good Works, and consequently a righteousness: or that Faith is the Foundation and Root of a righteous Life, as Augustin said. For no Man is to be offended with Truth, &c.' Vossius observes, that these Words are taken from the Edition of Strasburg 1529, and that they have been corrupted in the Edition of Geneva 1554. He observes in general, that, to know that Minister's Moderation, his Writings must be consulted as printed in Germany, and not the Editions of Geneva. 'Consulendæ sunt editiones illæ quas nobis Germania produxit, † Disp. Lipsi. an. 1539.

‡ Resp. ad Abrinc.

(7) Bossuet, Bishop of Meaux, Histoire des variations, liv. iii, n. 42, 43, pag. 124, 125.

(8) Bucerus commentur. in Psalm. ii, apud Vossium Epist. ecclvii, pag. 403, col. 2. Note, that I have corrected the Faults that are crept into this Passage of Vossius.

been much Talk of a Letter which he wrote to Calvin [D]. He had several Children.

non quæ ex ſententia Calvini caſtratæ prodierunt Genevæ. —— Cum vero omnia fere Buceri ſint moderatiſſima, tum imprimis præfatio in commentarios ſuper quatuor Evangeliſtas in editione Argentoratenſi anni CIↃ IↃ XXX. quæ & ipſa præterita in editione Rob. Stephani CIↃ IↃ LIII (9). - - - - We muſt conſult theſe Editions which we have from Germany, and not thoſe which were caſtrated at Calvin's Pleaſure at Geneva. - - - - - Now as all Bucer's Works were very moderate, ſo particularly was his Preface to his Commentary on the Evangeliſts, in the Edition of Strasburg, in the Year 1530, which was intirely omitted in Robert Stephens's Edition in the Year 1553.'

(9) Voſſius, ibid.

Voſſius is miſtaken when he ſays, that the Preface to Bucer's Commentary on the four Evangeliſts was ſuppreſſed in the Edition of Geneva, printed by Robert Stephens, in the Year 1554 (10). Grotius, to whom he wrote this, makes this Remark in his Votum pro Pace: but he gave no good Anſwer to Andrew Rivet, who affirmed to him, that this Preface is contained in Robert Stephens's Edition (11). The Integrity of that Printer was much better juſtified in this Article, than in reſpect to his Depravation of a Paſſage in the Commentary on the ſecond Pſalm. Rivet endeavours to perſuade, that the Difference which is between the Edition of 1539, and that of 1554, is owing to the Author's correcting himſelf, and retracting from time to time. The Paſſage which I am about to cite, being very proper to ſhew the Genius of this Author, may ſeem in a manner neceſſary. 'Solitum - - - - - fuiſſe Bucerum, quod pleriſque doctis accidit, quam diu vivunt Lucubrationes ſuas recenſere, addere vel demere quædam, nonnulla etiam retractare. Id de ſe profitetur Bucerus in præfat. in Enarrationem Evang. quam neſcio cur dicat D. Grotius omiſſum fuiſſe in Stephanica editione. In meo enim exemplari eam reperio totam integris ſex foliis conſtantem, in qua hæc lego. Perturbat poſtremo & hoc nonnullos quod non dubitant pleroſque offenſum iri, quod videmur jam ipſi parum nobis conſtare. Et poſt pauca: Quia Dominus donavit ut quædam loca nunc ſolidius intelligam quam aliquando intellexi, id quod cum mihi tam benigne largitus eſt, cur non impartirem liberaliter fratribus & domini benignitatem ingenue prædicarem? Quid inconſtantiæ ſit proficere in cauſa ſalutis? & quis in hoc ſæculo vel ſuperiora Scripturas tractavit qui non expertus ſit hoc quoque in ſtudio priorum dierum diſcipulum eſſe poſteriorum? Poſtea exemplum Auguſtini profert in retractationibus: optatque ut hac tempeſtate plures edi retractationum libros videremus. Si Bucerus profitetur ipſe quod multa retractavit ex prioribus ſuis meditationibus, qua conſequentia, vel etiam conſcientiâ, poſteriores ejus editiones corruptas eſſe probabit aliquis, ſi in illis non omnia totidem verbis reperiuntur in nonnullis locis expreſſa (12). —— Bucer uſed, as often happens with learned Men as long as they live, to reviſe his Lucubrations, to add or take away ſome things, and even to retract ſome. Bucer declares this concerning himſelf in his Preface to his Commentaries on the Goſpels, which Grotius affirms to have been omitted in Stephens's Edition. For what reaſon I know not; for I have it intire in my Copy, conſiſting of ſix whole leaves; in which I have theſe Words. Laſtly, this alſo diſturbs ſome, becauſe they make no doubt but many will be offended that I now ſeem not very conſiſtent with myſelf. And a little after: Becauſe the Lord has given me to underſtand ſome Places more fully than I formerly did, which as it is ſo bountifully given to me, why ſhould I not impart it liberally to my Brethren, and ingenuouſly declare the Goodneſs of the Lord? what inconſtancy is there in profiting in the Work of Salvation? and who in this Age, or the laſt, has treated of the Scripture, and has not experienced, that even in this Study the former Day is the Scholar of the latter. Afterwards he produces the Example of Auguſtin in his Retractations, and wiſhes that we had more Books of Retractations publiſhed at this Day. If Bucer himſelf declares that he retracted many things of his former Meditations, by what conſequence, or even with what conſcience, can any Body aſſert, that the later Editions of his Works are corrupted, if in ſome Places of them every thing be not found expreſſed in the very ſame Words?' I ſhall obſerve, by the by, that David Paræus made a Confeſſion like this of our Bucer (13), and that he was inſulted on that Account by a Jeſuit of Mentz (14).

(10) Thus it ought to be read, as Voſſius had ſaid a little before, and not 1553.

(11) See Apologeticus pro vera pace Eccleſiaſtica, by Rivet, Tom. III, pag. 1071, the Grotianæ diſcuſſiones Ibid. pag. 1140, and the End of the Remark [K].

(12) Rivetus in Apologetico pro vera Pace Eccleſ. Operum, Tom. III, pag. 1071.

[D] There has been much Talk of a Letter he wrote to Calvin.] It is ſaid he writ to him, You judge according as you love, or according as you hate; or you love and hate from meer Fancy. Voſſius, who was a good Arminian in his Heart, takes this up a little too ſmartly, and tells us (15) what Calvin anſwered to ſo injurious a Reproach. 'Calvinus 'ſic à magno viro increpitus reſpondere: hæc (16) 'eſſe genii potius ſui, quam judicii; & (ut Calvini 'ipſius verba ad Bucerum retineam) ſic ſcribere, Ut 'verum fatear, nulla mihi cum maximis, & plu'rimis vitiis meis, difficillor eſt luſta, quam cum 'iſta impatientia; neque certe nihil proficio, ſed 'nondum id ſum conſecutus, ut bellum plane do'muerim. Hæc ſane ſatis modeſte, ſi id poſtea conſecutus. Illud vero concoquere non potuit, quod idem Bucerus, qui eum vel norat, vel noſſe putabat, non veritus eſſet ſcribere; Judicas prout 'amas, vel odiſti; amas autem, vel odiſti, prout 'lubet. Quod cum legiſſet, literas ſcripſit, quarum hoc initium. Cum literæ tuæ mihi ſub 'cœnam allatæ eſſent, tanto gaudio perfuſus ſui, 'ut non meminerim tribus totis menſibus lætiorem mihi horam affulſiſſe. At cum eas ſuper cœnam, utcumque percurriſſem, lectione ipſa ſic fui 'flagellatus, ut proxima nocte irrequietus ſemper 'æſtuarim, nec toto poſt triduo fuerim apud meip'ſum, &c. - - - - - Calvin, when thus rebuked by this great Man, anſwered, that That was the Fault of his Temper rather than of his Judgment, and (to keep to Calvin's own Words to Bucer) writes thus; To tell the Truth, I have a harder Struggle with this Impatience than with all my other great and numerous Vices; and I do profit a little, but have not yet prevailed ſo far, as intirely to have conquered that Paſſion. This is modeſt enough if he had afterwards attained a Victory. But he could not digeſt what the ſame Bucer, who either knew him or thought he knew him, ventured to write. You judge as you love or hate, and you love or hate juſt as you pleaſe; on reading of which he wrote this Letter, which begins thus: When I received your Letter, juſt before Supper, I was ſo rejoiced, that I do not remember that I have been ſo well pleaſed this three Months; but when I had curſorily run it over, at Supper, I was ſo nettled with the reading of it, that I could not reſt all Night, nor was I myſelf again for three Days, &c.' In all probability we ſhould never have known of this Letter, if Francis Baudouin, who lodged with Calvin, had not been ſo diſhoneſt as to reveal the Secret. He did it by degrees: Firſt, he only ſaid, that, in Bucer's Judgment, Calvin kept no meaſure either in his Love or Hatred, or that he either raiſed People above the Heavens, or ſunk them down to Hell. Calvin proteſted with an Oath, that Bucer had never cenſured him ſo: 'Quin etiam Buceri judicium recitat (Balduinus) quod ab ipſo improbiſſime confictum eſſe Deum & Angelos ejus teſtor. Bucerus, inquit, aliquando tibi dixit, 'nullum te ſervare odii vel amoris modum, ſed 'ea te eſſe vehementia, ut vel ſupra cœlos attol'leres, vel ad inferos uſque dejiceres. Ita vero 'mihi propitius ſit Deus, ſi quid unquam tale audierim. Quin potius vir ille, quem loco patris 'reverebar, tanta comitate viciſſim fraternam mecum amicitiam coluit, ut ægerrime paſſus ſit Argentina me avelli. Certe ad extremum uſque contendit, quibuſcunque fieret modis me retinendum. 'Extant etiam ejus ad Senatum noſtrum literæ, quibus conqueritur cum maxima Eccleſiæ totius jactura me hoc retrahi: ac demum eo uſque provehitur, ut dicat me inter ſanæ doctrinæ miniſtros

(13) In his Prolegomena on the Prophet Hoſea.

(14) See the Jeſuit Malhuſinus, in Chap. II. of the Auctarium primum Speculi miſcellarum Davidis Parei.

(15) Epiſt. 457. pag. 403, col. 2.

(16) That is to ſay, to be tranſported againſt thoſe who are not of his Opinion.

dren [E], but I cannot well tell what became of them. What several Writers affirm, (17) Calvinus in Responſ ad Balduinum, pag. 367, col. 2. Tractatuum Theologicorum.

' niſtros nemini eſſe ſecundum, paucos vero habere
' pares (17). ---- He [Baudouin] recites the Judg-
' ment of Bucer, which I call God and his An-
' gels to witneſs is a wicked Fiction of his own.
' Bucer ſays he told you once that you kept no mea-
' ſure in your Hatred or Love, but were a Man
' of ſuch Vehemence, that you either extol a Man
' above the Skies, or debaſe him to Hell. But ' may God ſo proſper me as I never heard any
' ſuch thing; on the other hand, that Man, whom
' I revere as a Father, cultivated a mutual brother-
' ly Friendſhip with me, with ſo much Affection, that
' it grieved him very much that I left Strasburg.
' It is certain he ſtrove to the utmoſt to retain
' me by any means whatſoever. There is extant
' alſo a Letter of his to our Senate, wherein he
' complains that I was recalled hither to the great
' Loſs of the whole Church, and in ſhort goes ſo
' far that he ſays, that I am inferior to none of
' the Miniſters of ſound Doctrine, and have but ' few Equals.' Baudouin confeſſes, in his Anſwer, that he had not ſeen what Bucer had wrote to Calvin, but he brags he had Calvin's Anſwer to Bucer. He ſays that Anſwer was of Calvin's own Hand, and that he ſhewed it to ſeveral, who knew the Author's Hand-writing, and he maintains, that That Letter teſtifies that Bucer had taxed Calvin with judging according to his Paſſion, judicas prout amas, amas autem prout libet (18). It appears by that Work of Baudouin, that his Adverſary had complained that what Bucer had ſaid in general, and without excluding himſelf, was applied to him perſonally judicamus prout amamus, &c (19). But Baudouin maintains, that Calvin had made the Application of it to himſelf. The only thing that ſticks in this Proceſs, is Calvin's Oath; yet it is eaſy to ward that Blow, by maintaining that Baudouin had expreſſed himſelf in ſuch a manner as to make People judge, that Bucer had made uſe of that hard Cenſure in Converſation. Now it is certain, that Calvin had never received this Reproach in ſuch a manner; ſo that he might ſafely ſwear what he did. Read what follows: it is the Apology that Beza made for him in this Point: ' At enim, inquis, imprecatus eſt ſibi Calvinus ſi
' quid unquam tale ex Bucero audiſſet. Verum
' cur tu omittis quod ad rem maxime facit, ſycophanta? Nam hæc ſunt Calvini verba, Bucerum
' inquit Balduinus aliquando mihi dixiſſe, nullam
' me ſervare odii vel amoris modum: ſed ta me eſſe
' vehementia, ut vel ſupra cælos attollerem, vel ad
' inferos uſque dejicerem. Ita vero mihi propitius ſit
' Deus, ſi quid unquam tale audierim. Video, manifeſte, ſycophanta, etiamſi iracundia & odio cæcus nihil videas, quæ de Buceri objurgatione obſcure ſcripſerus, Calvinum ut de quopiam colloquio accepiſſe, ac proinde memorem ejus ſuaviſſimæ, & nunquam interruptæ conjunctionis, quæ inter ſe & Bucerum fuiſſet, non temere in vocem illam erupiſſe. Nihil hoc igitur ad literas, quas ipſas etiam corrumpis. Neque enim ſcripſerat Bucerus, cujus ἀνθρωπαρεσκον habemus, Ita judicat ut amat, ſed, Ita judicamus ut amamus: ſic nimirum ut ſeſe in hoc etiam numero comprehenderet, & commune hominum vitium deploraret (20). ---- But you ſay, Calvin curſed himſelf if he ever heard any ſuch thing from Bucer; but why, Sycophant, do you omit what is moſt to the purpoſe? for theſe are Calvin's Words: Baudouin ſays, that Bucer once told me, that I kept no meaſure in my Hatred or Love; but was a Man of that Vehemence, that I either extolled a Man above the Skies, or debaſed him to Hell. But may God ſo proſper me as I never heard any ſuch thing. You ſee manifeſtly, Sycophant, though you are ſo blind with Rage or Hatred that you can ſee nothing, that what you wrote obſcurely of Bucer's Rebuke, Calvin underſtood as of ſome Converſation, and there- fore, remembring the ſweet and uninterrupted Friendſhip that had been between him and Bucer, did not raſhly break out into that Expreſſion;
therefore this is nothing at all to the Letter, which you have corrupted too; for Bucer, whoſe
Letter I have in his own Hand-writing, did not write You judge as You love, But We judge as We love: ſo that he comprehended himſelf in the Number, and deplored a common Fault of Mankind.' Beza remarks among other things, that thoſe two great Men ſoon altered their Stile in writing to each other, and that there are Letters of Bucer to Calvin of a later date, and full of Mildneſs.

(18) Franciſcus Balduinus in Reſponſione altera ad Jo. Calvinum, pag. 56. Edit. Colonienſis apud Jo. Bathenium, 1562.

(19) See Theodore Beza, reſponſ. ad Franciſcum Balduinum pag. 221.

(20) Beza, ubi ſupra, pag. 222.

[E] He had ſeveral Children.] Herman de Wida, Archbiſhop of Cologne, having a mind to ſettle the Reformation in his Dioceſe, ſent for Martin Bucer in the Year 1542 (21); moſt of the Canons oppoſed the Enterprize, and publiſhed a Work wherein they mixed a great many Invectives againſt Bucer. They taxed him, among other things, with Bigamy. Melanchthon, in confuting that Piece, did not forget this Article: He maintained, that the Nun, whom Bucer had married for his firſt Wife, did well in forſaking the Church of Rome, after ſhe had diſcovered the Idolatry of it's Worſhip. He added, that ſhe had led a very exemplary Life, by her Chaſtity, Modeſty, and Piety, that ſhe had been brought to Bed thirteen times, and that ſhe died of the Plague, which ſhe might have eſcaped if ſhe would have left her Husband. ' In matrimo' nio tredecies puerpera, pietate, pudicitia, & in ' omni actione modeſtia multis bono exemplo fuerit.
' —— Tandem peſte quam, niſi marito ex ſtatione
' ſuæ non recedenti adeſſe maluiſſet, effugere po-
' tuerit, obierit (22).' It would have been pity ſo fruitful a Girl ſhould have remained in a Nunnery. And as there may be many others, as fit to people the World, who are hindered by Monaſteries, one may eaſily judge what a prejudice theſe Monaſtical Vows do to the temporal Good of the State. Bucer married a ſecond time to a Widow, which gave the Canons of Cologne occaſion to reproach him with another Irregularity; becauſe, according to St Paul, a Biſhop ought to be the Husband of one Wife only, that is, as they pretended, that he ought not to marry a ſecond time, nor to marry a Widow. ' Verbum Dei docet adſciſcendum
' Miniſterio, oportere eſſe virum unius uxoris,
' 1 Tim. iii. & Tit. i. quod Canones Apoſto-
' lorum, & Apoſtolici patres in hoc uſque tem-
' pus ſic intellexerunt, ut ſecundis nuptiis copula-
' tus, aut qui viduam accepit, non poſſit eſſe ex nu-
' mero eorum qui miniſterio ſacro deſerviunt (23).
' —— The Word of GOD directs, that who is called to the Miniſtry ſhould be the Husband of one Wife, 1 Tim. iii. and Titus i. which the Ca- nons of the Apoſtles, and the Apoſtolical Fathers have ever to this Day underſtood in this Senſe, that he who enters into a ſecond Marriage, or marries a Widow, cannot be one of thoſe that ſerve in the holy Miniſtry.' Melanchthon confutes this Objection eaſily. Mr de Meaux ſays, that Bucer married a third time; he ſays (24), ' That Bucer was a Man
' pretty well learned, of a flexible Spirit, and
' more fertile in Diſtinctions than the moſt refined
' Scholaſtics, a fine Preacher, ſomewhat heavy in ' his Stile; but was reſpected for his Stature, and
' the ſound of his Voice. He had been a Jacobin, and married as others did, and, as one may
' ſay, more than others; for, his Wife dying, he ' married a ſecond and a third time. The holy
' Fathers did not receive thoſe into the Prieſthood,
' who had been twice married while Laymen. This ' Man, being a Prieſt and a Monk, married three ' times during his new Miniſtry, without ſcruple.
' It was a Recommendation among the Party, and ' by thoſe bold Examples they affected to confound
' the ſuperſtitious Obſervances of the ancient Church.'
What Mr de Meaux obſerves, that in thoſe Times Marriage was a Recommendation in the Party, is not altogether falſe: for it is certain, that if a converted Clergyman did not marry, he cauſed a Suſpicion that he had not renounced the Doctrine of Celibacy. I believe Bucer inſinuated this Reaſon to Calvin when he preſſed him to marry (25). Sanders reports, that the Viſitors, who were appointed in England under Edward VI, exhorted the Clergy to marriage, as a certain Token that they had abjured Popery. ' They made ſtrict enquiry about ' the Continency of the Paſtors; and had the Impu-
' dence to aſk them publickly, How, being in ' health

(21) See the Remark [C], of the Article WIDA.

(22) Melanchthon, Parte II, oper. apud Seckendorf. Hiſt. Lutheran. lib. iii, pag. 440, littera u.

(23) Sententia delectorum per venerabile Capitulum Eccleſiæ Colonienſis de vocatione Matthæi Bucceri, fol. 161.

(24) Hiſtoire des variations, liv. iii. n. 3, pag. 89, 90.

(25) See the Critique Generale de l'Hiſtoire du Calviniſme de Maimbourg, Lettre 9, pag. 155, of Edit. 3.

firm, that he died a Jew, and what Sanders reports of a certain Converſation, ought to be looked upon as notorious Calumnies [F]. You find in Mr Teiſſier the Elogies which the learned Hiſtorian of the Reformation of England has given this Miniſter (d). Moreri's Dictionary hath touched upon the chief Actions of his Life, which is the reaſon why I do not give all the extent that I might have done to this Article. I ſhall take notice of Mr Moreri's Miſtakes [G], which will give (d) Teiſſier, Addit aux Eloges, Tom. I. p. 30.

' Health and Youth, they they could poſſible live
' chaſte? Whether they had the Gift of Chaſtity,
' and what aſſurance they had that it ſhould be always ' vouchſafed to them? They adviſed them therefore ' to marry rather than burn, or fall into ſuch
' Sins, the very thought of which gives a Deteſtation.
' Laſtly, they told them plainly, that they took all
' thoſe for Papiſts, and the King's Enemies, who ' preferred a dangerous Celibacy before a chaſte and ' honeſt Marriage; eſpecially, having before their ' Eyes the holy Examples of two famous Archbi-
' ſhops, who had made no ſcruple of marrying (26).

(26) Sanderus de ſchiſme d'Angleterre, liv. II, pag. 253. I follow the Tranſlation of Maucroix.

[F] It is a Calumny to ſay, that he died a Jew, and alſo what Sanders reports of a certain Converſation.] The Jeſuit Poſſevin, ſpeaking of Bucer, made uſe of the following Parentheſis: ' At vero
' Bucerus (quem morientem ſcribunt eſſe profeſſum
' nondum natum eſſe Meſſiam) Sectariis latiorem ' viam ſtravit (27). — But Bucer (of whom it is written, that at the Point of Death he denied that the Meſſiah was come) opened a broader way for the Sectaries.' In another Part of the ſame Book, he relates this as certain Fact: ' Bucerus
' cum animam ageret faſſus eſt verum Meſſiam ad-
' huc non veniſſe, venturum tamen (28). — ' Bucer when he was expiring confeſſed, that the true Meſſiah was not come, but that he would come.' Obſerve, that, according to this Jeſuit, this was Bucer's Confeſſion of Faith on his Death-Bed. But to refute this Fable, we only need alledge Sanders, who accuſes this Divine of no more than a private Inclination towards Judaiſm, and of making one who had no Religion his Confident in a Point of Libertiniſm. Theſe are his Words: you will find that Bucer died in the Profeſſion of Lutheraniſm; ' As for Bucer, he was inclined to Judaiſm; and he was alſo deſcended from a Jewiſh Family. It is certain, that, ſome time after his Death, and in the Reign of Queen Mary, the Baron Paget, Counſellor to the Catholic King, did ſay, that he had ſerved him one Day for an Interpreter to Dudley, Duke of Northumberland; and that that Duke having aſked him, What he thought of the Real Preſence of the Body of JESUS CHRIST in the Holy Sacrament? He anſwered, That unleſs the Truth of the Goſpels was queſtioned, none could doubt of the Real Preſence; but, added he, I do not believe all that the New Teſtament tells us of JESUS CHRIST and of his Actions; although hitherto I have not been permitted to deny it (29). He ſpoke in this manner before a Man, who he knew had not much Religion. However, in his Diſcourſes and Writings, he always, to his Death, made Profeſſion of Lutheraniſm, accommodated to the new Opinions of England (30).' They, who know this Author, need not to be told, that he may be relied on in things which ſerve for the Juſtification of Proteſtants; but is unworthy of all Credit in matters to their Diſadvantage. But let us not forget to note, that Poſſevin is only the Copier of Lindanus, a very bad Author. This Lindanus, having mentioned ſeveral Variations in belief, of which he accuſes Bucer, concludes thus: ' Sane ut in ' Chriſtianiſmo fuit inconſtantiſſimus, ſta in paterno
' Judaiſmo conſtantiſſimus. Præter uſuras enim de-
' fenſas licitas, etiam Chriſti adventum ſub mor-
' tem narrant occulati teſtes revocaſſe in dubium
' (31). — Indeed as he was very unſteady in Chriſtianity, ſo he was always ſteady in the Judaiſm of his Father. For, beſides that he defended the Lawfulneſs of Uſury, it is alſo related by Eye Witneſſes, that juſt before his Death he queſtioned the coming of CHRIST. Some Pages after, he repeats the ſame thing: ' Alii, ſays he, Chri-
' ſtum noſtrum negant verum illum promiſſum
' fuiſſe, ſed alium cum Judæis expectandum, uti
' Bucerum moribundum teſtatum reliquiſſe narrant
' fide digni, adeoque quidam clariſſimi viri, ſe ab
' ejus diſcipulis in Anglia accepiſſe (32).

(27) Ant. Poſſevinus de Atheiſmis hæreticorum, cap. VIII, pag. 23.

(28) Poſſevin. Ibid. cap. ult. pag. 84.

(29) I have not the Latin of Sanders; but I have the French Verſion, printed in the Year 1587, where this Paſſage ſtands thus. I would not believe all that is written in the New Teſtament, concerning the Actions and Life of Jeſus Chriſt, neither would I, on the other hand, openly deny it.

(30) Sanderus Hiſtoire du ſchiſme d'Angleterre, liv. II, pag. 237, according to the Tranſlation of Mr Maucroix. Edit. of Holl.

(31) Lindanus in Dialogo 2. Dubitantii, pag. 146.

' Others ſay, that our CHRIST is not the true CHRIST promiſed, but that we muſt expect with the Jews another; as ſome credible Wit-neſſes affirm, that Bucer declared at the Point of Death: and ſeveral very eminent Men have heard the ſame from his Diſciples in England.' Prateolus, and divers others, have not failed to copy this (33). But they have not copied what Surius reports, and what he dares not affirm, which is, That that Miniſter cauſed his Son to be circumciſed. The Reaſon why Surius does affirm it, is, becauſe the grave and moſt learned Perſon, from whom he had it, knew it only by hear-ſay. ' Au-divi ego, ſays he, ex quodam gravi longeque do-
' ctiſſimo viro, fuiſſe eum Judæum, & cùm quan-
' doquè puerum quendam neſcio ex qua fœmina
' ſuſtuliſſet, eum circumcidiſſe. Utrùm autem hæc
' prorſus certa ſint, non poſſum affirmare, præſer-
' tim quòd ille quoquè, qui hæc referebat, ſe ab
' aliis accepiſſe diceret. (34). — ' I have heard a grave and very learned Man ſay, that he was a Jew, and that he circumciſed a Son, which he had by I know not what Woman. But whether thoſe things be certain I cannot affirm, becauſe he who told me them ſaid he had only heard them from others.'

(32) Id. Ibid. pag. 185.

(33) Prateolus in elencho hæreſi. pag. 107.

(34) Surius, Commentar. rerum in orbe geſtarum ad Ann. 1551, pag. 583.

It is an ancient Saying, that every Romance has it's Foundation in Hiſtory. I cannot tell whether that Fable, concerning Martin Bucer's pretended Judaiſm, has not taken it's Original from ſome Diſcourſes, in which he might have declared, that the Meſſias is not yet come, but that he will come under the chief Characters which the Prophets attribute to him, and under which the Jews expect him. I mean, in a triumphant State, and as a Conqueror, who ſhall eſtabliſh Piety and Peace every where. If Mr Jurieu has been ſuſpected of favouring Judaiſm, becauſe he publiſhed ſuch an Opinion, and if it has been ſuppoſed, that the Synagogue of Amſterdam wrote him a very thankful Letter upon it (35), the Controverſiſts might very well, in Bucer's Time, have built that ſilly Romance on a like Doctrine, in caſe Bucer had maintained it. It is certain, that in thoſe Times the Spirit of Lying, and the boldneſs of groſsly exaggerating Calumnies, were at the Height. Had Mr Jurieu lived in the XVIth Century, he would have found himſelf accuſed of Judaiſm by many a Writer, and of receiving a yearly Penſion from the Synagogue.

(35) See a Pamphlet intituled, Lettre des Rabbins des deux Synagogues d' Amſterdam à Mr Jurieu, traduite de l'Eſpagnol ſuivant la copie imprimée à Amſterdam chez Joſeph Athias. A Bruxelles 5446.

[G] I ſhall take notice of Mr Moreri's Miſtakes.] I. Bucer's pretended Apoſtacy is wrong placed in the Year 1530; for he was thoroughly confirmed in Luther's Opinions after the Conferences he had with him at Worms in the Year 1521, and ever after made open Profeſſion of it. ' Paulo poſt,
' anno milleſimo quingenteſimo viceſimo primo, cum
' ad comitia Wormatiam Vangionum Lutherus evo-
' catus eſſet: Bucerus eodem venit, cumque Luthe-
' ro compluſculos dies familiariter tranſmiſit: ſen-
' tentiamque ejus amplexus, apertè eandem poſtea
' eſt profeſſus (36). — ' A little after, in the Year 1521, when Luther was called before the Diet of Worms: Bucer came thither alſo, and paſſed ſeveral Days with Luther in familiar Con-verſation: and, embracing his Opinion, profeſſed it openly from that time.' Two Years after, he was admitted into the Number of the Reformed Preachers in Strasburg, and he ſubſcribed a Book with them, which they publiſhed in the Year 1524, ſetting forth the Reaſons which had induced them to renounce Popery. He aſſiſted, in 1529, as Deputy of the Church of Stras urg, in the Conferences of Marpourg, where they endeavoured to pacify the Diſſentions between the Lutherans and the Zuinglians (37). II. It is falſe, that he begun by being a Sacramentarian. He followed Luther as his Converter from the beginning. III. It is falſe, (36) Melch. Adam. in vita Bucer. pag. 212.

(37) Taken from Melchior Adam, ubi ſupra. See Seckendorf. Hiſtor. Luther. lib. I, pag. 240, n. c, where he ſays that Bucer paſſed for a Lutheran, Ann. 1522.

give me occasion to speak of some Facts. But I ought not to forget that our Bucer, in some Cases, shewed that he did not disapprove pious Frauds [H].

When

false, that he made a separate Sect. He continued always united with one of the Protestant Communions, though the stricter sort of each Party did not approve his Remissness. IV. There is nothing more absurd, than to impute to him as particular Errors, 'That the Body of JESUS CHRIST 'is present in the Eucharist, only in the Act of 'Receiving; That Baptism does not procure Sal- 'vation to Children; That there is no Sin by In- 'credulity; That Priests are not obliged to Celibacy '(38).' The first of these four Propositions is the common Doctrine of the Lutherans. The second and the fourth are the common Doctrines of all Protestants. The third is not imputed to Bucer by those who have made the Catalogue of Heresies: On the contrary, Pratcolus imputes to him the maintaining, that Incredulity is the only mortal Sin than can be committed (39): A slanderous Accusation, if ever there were any such. Note, that the Jesuit Gaultier, citing Sanders, says, that Bucer taught, that even Children who have received Baptism are not saved. It is perhaps what Moreri would say, but knew not how to express himself. Hereupon I observe, that, seeing the Protestants teach, that the Children of the Faithful are saved, though they die before Baptism; their Opinion is, that they, who are baptized, do not owe their Salvation to that Sacrament; so that the pretended Error, which Moreri imputes to Bucer, is a general Protestant Doctrine. As to Father Gaultier's Proposition, I am sure that it is falsly imputed to our Bucer, unless it be explained in this Sense, which is, that GOD, not having grounded the Decree of Reprobation upon the actual Sins of the Children of Adam, he may have reprobated Children as well as the Adult; and in this Case it might happen, that some Children, who died after Baptism, would be damned. Let us say, to the Shame of those Makers of Catalogues of Heresies, as Lindanus, Sanders, Pratcolus, Gaultier, &c. that, for the particular Heresies of Bucer, they give us the most general Doctrine of the Protestants. Note, that Pratcolus imputes to him the Doctrine of the unprofitableness of good Works. Compare this with the Author of the History of Variations, and you will be strangely surprized (40). Note also, that Surius says, that, at the Conference of Ratisbon, Malvenda reduced Bucer to such Extremities, that he forced him to say, I. That all Sins are Sins of Incredulity. II. That there are none of Weakness and Ignorance; that they are all maliciously committed, and against the Dictates of Conscience (41). As to the first Proposition, Mr Seckendorf maintains, either that Bucer did not say so, or that it was only said according to the Orthodox Sense that Luther gives it, which amounts to this, That as the Sins of the Faithful never exclude from Paradice, the Sins of Unbelievers alone are damnable (42). As to the second, he believes, that it is falsly imputed to Martin Bucer (43). Let us add, That this Minister, if we believe Surius (44), found himself obliged to assert, That a Man, who sins mortally, ceases from believing the Trinity, the Birth and Death of JESUS CHRIST, &c. Mr Seckendorf seems to own, that this Doctrine was advanced (45), and by the manner in which he says Bucer defended himself, it seems he was in some Confusion. Indeed can any thing be more monstrous than to maintain, That all those, who fall into the Sin of Fornication, look on every thing that is contained in the Gospel as a Fable?

(38) All this is struck out of the Moreri of Holland.

(39) Asserit nullum esse peccatum mortale nisi incredulitatem. Pratcol. ubi supra. Father Gaultier copies this from Pratcolus.

(40) See above, the Remark [C], where it is shewn, that he ought the Merit of Good Works.

(41) Surius, Comment. Rer. in orbe gestarum, ad Ann. 1546, pag. 587.

(42) Seckendorf. Histor. Lutheran. lib. iii, pag. 626. See the same Seckendorf, ibid. pag. 195.

(43) Ibid. pag. 626.

(44) Surius, Comment. Rer. in Orbe gestarum, pag. 195.

(45) Seckendorf. Histor. Lutheran. lib. iii, pag. 626.

[H] He did not disapprove pious Frauds.] He had a great Quarrel with Pomeranus for having caused Martin Luther's Commentary on the Psalms to be printed with Alterations (46). He likewise foisted some things into Luther's Postills, which favoured the Zuinglians, and obliged that Reformer to complain severely that the best of his Works was corrupted. Mr Seckendorf observes, that the Reproaches thrown on him by Luther, on that Account, were suppressed in the Edition of Wittemberg, and that Bucer made some Excuses. 'Of- 'fendent etiam Bucerus Lutherum, quod in editam 'ejus Postillam, quam vocant, ecclesiasticam, quæ- 'dam inforsisset, quæ pro Helvetica sententia de 'cœna facerent, ideo in libello illo de verbis insti- 'tutionis vehementer de Bucero queritur, quod 'librum suum homiliarum, quem optimum ex om- 'nibus, quos unquam scripserit, vocat, quique etiam 'Pontificiis placeat, corruperit. Ista exprobratio 'in editione Tomorum Wittenbergensi expuncta 'fuit, indignante & publica apologia culpam à se 'amoliente Georgio Rorario, ut d. Tom. III. Alt. fol. 740. legi potest. Eandem vero querelam in 'epistola ad Johannem Secerium Basileensem Typo- 'graphum prolixe post repetit; (Id. ext, 13.) Sept. 'hujus anni, vide Epistolar. Lib. II. pag. 348. b. 'Non defuit tamen Bucero excusatio (47). - - - - (47) Id. ibid. 'Bucer had also offended Luther, by inserting some 'things in his Ecclesiastical Postill, as they call it, 'which made for the Helvetic Opinion concerning 'the Holy Supper, and therefore in his Book, de 'Verbis Institutionis, he complains vehemently of 'Bucer, that he had corrupted his Book of Ho- 'milies, which he says was the best of all that 'he had wrote, and which did even please the 'Papists. This Reproof was suppressed in the Wit- 'temberg Edition of his Works, at which George 'Rorarius was very angry and made a public Apo- 'logy to clear himself of that Fault. He after- 'wards repeated the same Complaint at large, in 'a Letter to Johannes Secerius, a Printer at Basil. 'However Bucer was at no loss for an Excuse.' I cannot tell whether he alledged the Maxim which Erasmus attributes to him, That a Deceit, which hurts no Body and is useful to many, is an Action of Piety. Erasmus refutes him in this, on Occasion of a Work which Bucer had dedicated to the Dauphin under a false Title. 'Is ficto titulo scripsit 'librum ad primogenitum Regis Galliæ, admixtis 'aliquot verbis Gallicis, quo videretur à Gallo 'scriptus ad Gallum: Pius, inquit, dolus est, qui 'nocet nemini, prodest multis. Primum, nulli 'nocet hæresis? Hoc protinus audiret ab alio; 'nam hoc de istis pronunciatum est. Non laudatur 'tantus Princeps ac natio religiosissima quæ gra- 'vatur invidiâ? Quod autem simile exemplum ab 'Apostolis, aut probatis Ecclesiæ doctoribus pro- 'fectum est? Si hic fucus nulli nocet, cur Luthe- 'rus tam indigne tulit suos libros per hunc fuisse 'corruptos? Cur Pomeranus de simili temeritate 'illius questus est? Quod ab aliis & ab ipsis adeo 'legibus falsi gravissimo crimine notatur, huic 'lepido Evangelistæ pius dolus est (48). - - - - He 'dedicated a Book, under a feigned Title, to the 'Dauphin of France, intermixing some French 'Words, that it might seem to be wrote from a 'Frenchman to a Frenchman. It is a pious Fraud, 'says he, which hurts no body, and is profitable 'to many. First, Does Heresy hurt no body? This 'would be immediately asked him by another; for 'these Doctrines are called Heresy. Is not so great a 'Prince and a most religious Nation hurt, when 'loaded with Envy? What Example of the like 'Practice do you find among the Apostles or the ap- 'proved Doctors of the Church? If this Cheat 'hurts no body, why did Luther take it so ill that 'his Books were corrupted by this Author? Why 'did Pomeranus complain of the like Temerity of 'his? What is called by others, and even by the 'Laws, a heinous Crime and Cheat, is, by this 'fine Evangelist, called a pious Fraud.' I do not mention the false Name he gave himself in the Title Page of one of his Books; for it is a very innocent thing, and was the Cause that his Book was read by Adversaries, who would not have dared to touch it had they known the Author. Read these Words of Naudæus: 'Martinus 'Bucerus, cum suos in librum Psalmorum Com- 'mentarios à Catholicis legi vehementer cuperet, 'eosdem sub Aretii, quæ Græca vox est Martino 'respondens, & Felini quod verbum Germanicum 'Buceri significationem Latinè repræsentat, publici 'juris fieri voluit, ne si proprium suum nomen il- 'lis affixisset, quod pridem antea cucullati sacer- 'dotes diris devoverant, statim eorundem lectione 'catholicis

(46) Id. lib. ii. pag. 82. n. 3. ad Ann. 1529.

(48) Erasmus Epist. lix, lib. xxxi. pag. 2110.

When I said (c), that, in order to procure a good Understanding between the Lutherans and Zuinglians, he chose general and ambiguous Expressions, I might have added, that he acted in the same manner, in order to calm the Disquiet of his Conscience, by a Formulary which did not clearly contain the Opinion either of Luther or Zuinglius; he was embarrassed between these two Opinions; one appeared to him too strong, the other too weak [I]. Probably one might observe the same on

(c) See above, after Cites. (c).

(49) Gabr. Naudæus in Judicio de Augustino Nipho, pag. 19. Compare this with Remark [D], of the Article ERASMUS, in the first Paragraph.

'catholicis omnibus interdiceretur (49). —— Martin 'Bucer, being very desirous to have his Commentaries on the Psalms read by the Catholics, published them under the Name of Aretius, which is the Greek Word answering to Martin, and Felinus, a German Word expressing the Signification of Bucer in Latin, fearing, that if he had put his true Name to them, which was cursed long before by the Monks, the Catholics would immediately be forbid the reading of them.' The Inquisition of Spain supposes, that Bucer's Book, Adversus merita bonorum operum, was published as a Work of the Bishop of Rochester, De misericordia Dei.

[I] He was embarrassed between the Opinions of Luther and Zuinglius concerning the Eucharist; one appeared to him too strong, the other too weak.] The Doctrine of the Lutherans seemed to him to attribute too much Reality to the Presence of JESUS CHRIST in the Sacrament of the Eucharist: he could not digest the Consequences of it; but he thought also, that the Opinion of the Zuinglians was too narrow, and did not come up to the Ideas which the Scripture, and ancient Tradition, imprint on our Minds. This gave him a deal of uneasiness. See what a Minister of Breda tells us on this Subject. 'Legatur Vita Martyris & quæ ibi 'de fluctuatione Buceri dicuntur. Videatur quoque in Centuria prima Epist. select. à Belgis vel 'ad Belgas Ep. 5. quæ est Buceri ad Joannem à Lasco, Curatorem Ecclesiarum Frisiæ Orientalis, 'ubi tam sollicite explorat, an etiam agnoscet à Lasco 'præter vim obsignandi, vim exhibendi ipsum 'Christum & Dominum, eamque corporis & sanguinis ejus communionem dari ac percipi, qua 'sumus membra ejus ex parte, & caro de carne 'ejus, & os de ossibus ejus, qua manemus in ipso, '& ipse in nobis, & dari eam atque percipi dum Dominus ipse est in suo ministerio efficax, verba & 'symbola uti Domini, & ut ab ipso Domino dispensatione libera per ministrum accipiuntur, quam vocant unionem, non sensualem, non localem, non naturalem, sed Sacramentalem & pactis, propter illas 'scripturæ phrases, quæ loquuntur de Mysterio incorporationis Ecclesiæ, & de communione & manducatione & potatione carnis & sanguinis Christi. Et paulo post dicit Luthero satisfieri, si tantum non 'inania signa CHRISTI absentis in Cœna sentiamus '& explicetur, etiam hic dari & percipi ipsum 'Dominum, modo quo ipse novit. Et ibidem, pag. 33, hæc Buceri conquerentis verba ad animum revocentur: Cruciat me, inquit, merito, nos quibus Dominus cætera regni sui mysteria tam benigne revelavit, non potuisse jam intra totos 34 annos convenire de hoc sacratissimo, & omnino populari mysterio, quod non minus intelligere quam usurpare omnes debent (50). —— Read the Life of Peter Martyr, and what is said there of Bucer's Fluctuation; see also the first Century of Epistles from Dutchmen or to Dutchmen, Ep. 5, which is from Bucer to John de Lasco, Overseer of the Churches of East-Friesland, where he so earnestly enquires, whether de Lasco, besides a Power of signifying, acknowledges a Power of exhibiting CHRIST himself; and that the Lord, and the Communion of his Body and Blood, is given and perceived; whereby we are Members of him in part, and Flesh of his Flesh, and Bone of his Bone; whereby we abide in him, and he in us, and that it is given and perceived, when the Lord himself operates in his Ministry, and when the Words and Symbols are received as the Lord's, and as it were from the Lord himself, by free Dispensation through his Minister, which they call an Union, not sensual, not local, not natural, but sacramental, and of the Covenant on Account of those Texts of Scripture, which speak of the Mystery of the Incorporation of the Church, and of the Communion, and eating and drinking of the Flesh and Blood of CHRIST. And a little after he says, that Luther is satisfied, if we own in the holy Supper any thing more than bare Signs of CHRIST absent, and it be explained that the Lord himself is given and perceived here also, in the manner which he knows; and, ibid. pag. 33, remember these Words of Bucer complaining: I am grieved, says he, and 'not without Reason, that we, to whom the 'Lord hath so bountifully revealed the other 'Mysteries of his Kingdom, have not been able 'now in Thirty four Years to agree concerning 'this most sacred and most general Mystery, which 'all Christians ought to understand, as well as use.' You see, in these last Words, the Pangs which Bucer felt, on consideration that the Ministers, Reformers of the Church, had not been able to agree concerning the Sacrament of the Holy Supper, after Thirty four Years Labour. It has been observed, that his irresolution did not continue to his Death, and that he died in the Calvinistical Faith. The Author of this Remark is a Lutheran Doctor, who accuses him of acting with so much Fraud and Inconstancy, that it was impossible to discover his real Sentiments: 'Buceri nomen nunquam red-'ditum fuisset celebrius, nisi instar Protei alicujus 'in omnes formas sese transmutasset, & jam a 'nostris, jam a Zuinglianorum partibus stetisset, 'omniaque sua consilia, dicta, facta, sic insidiose & 'veteratorie inflexisset, ut cuinam Parti ex animo 'faveret, satis perspectum cognitumque esse haud 'posset. Quamquam in fide Calviniana tandem 'spiritum exhalasse, ex postremo ipsius scripto, non 'tamen ad finem perducto, satis evidenter colligitur (51). —— Bucer's Name would never have been famous, had not he, Proteus like, transformed himself into all Shapes, and lived, one while on our side, another on that of the Zuinglians, and so craftily and disingenuously turned all his Counsels, Words, and Actions, that it could never be perfectly discovered which Party he favoured in his Heart, though it is manifest, from the last Piece which he wrote, but did not entirely finish, that he died in the Calvinistical Faith.' But, least this Lutheran should be suspected of decrying him in this manner from Party Interest, he cites two Calvinistical Writers, who have painted the Genius of Bucer in the very same Colours: 'Hoc pulchellum elogium ne à Lutheranis ex præ-'postero quopiam affectu confictum videri possit, 'produco Lavaterum Scriptorem alioqui Sacramentarium, Buceri genium & ingenium his floscul is depingentem: Bucerus ambiguis & obscuris loquendi formulis sententiam suam proposuit, ut in utram partem magis propenderet, colligi plane non potuerit. Toto certaminis hujus tempore ejusmodi phrasibus ipsum studuisse, Josias Simlerus, Scholæ Tigurinæ Professor, in Oratione de Vita & obitu Petri Martyris testatur, quem & ipsum persuadere aliquando conatus fuit suum ut exemplum secutus, talibus loquendi modis, ex quibus nihil certi concludi posset, ut ita utrique parti inserviens, ambiguis illis & flexiloquis loquendi formulis difficilium hoc paulatim sopiret atque tolleret. Hasce infidiosas ac subdolas molitiones Tigurini animadvertentes minime probarunt, & libere atque aperte professi sunt, non velle se concordiam fucatam atque infidiosam, quæ juxta Buceri declarationem, cothurni instar, utrique parti accommodari posset (52). - - - - That it may not be thought, that this fine Elogium is feigned by the Lutherans out of Prejudice, I produce Lavaterus, a Calvinist Writer, who paints Bucer's Genius and Temper in these Colours: Bucer offered his Opinion in ambiguous and obscure Phrases, so that it was absolutely impossible to gather from them to which side he inclined most. Josias Simler, Professor at Zurich, in an Oration on the Life and Death of Peter Martyr, testifies that Bucer

(50) Ludovic. Gerardus à Renesse, Notis in Apologet. Reformat. in Belgio Eccles. Epist. p. 102, 103.

(51) Leon. Hutterus in Irenico vero Christiano, sive de Synodo & Unione Evangelicorum non facta concilianda; Tract. Theolog. adversus D. Paræi Irenicum pag. 130. Edit. Wittemb. apud Paul. Helwigium An. 1628, in Folio.

(52) Ib. Ibid.

on his Opinion concerning the Merit of good Works [K]. He ſpoke more ſtrongly of them than the other Miniſters, and, if he varied from himſelf in that Point, it ought to be imputed to the Difficulties he met with in the Matter, or to the Improvement he made as he grew old. He gave this laſt Reaſon in excuſe of himſelf, when he found that ſome People were offended that he was not ſufficiently uniform in his Works (f). However learned and ſolid his Lectures were, three Defects were obſerved in them. I. The Abundance of his Learning ſometimes led him too far from his Subject. II. He did not always remember the Number of Heads into which he had, at firſt, divided his Matter. III. There was a certain Obſcurity in his Stile, as he himſelf owned; ſo that his Hearers, if they were not very attentive, could not underſtand him (g).

(f) See above, Addit. to Remark [C].

(g) Joſias Simlerus in vita Petri Martyris, apud Melch. Adam. vit. ext. Theologorum, pag. 37.

'Bucer ſtudied ſuch Expreſſions throughout the 'whole Conteſt, and was endeavoured to perſuade 'Peter Martyr to follow his Example, and uſe 'ſuch Expreſſions, as nothing certain could be con- 'cluded from, that ſo, pleaſing both Parties, by 'theſe ambiguous and equivocal ways of ſpeaking, he 'might by degrees compoſe and end the Difference. 'The Zurichians, obſerving theſe inſidious and crafty 'Contrivances, diſliked them, and freely and open- 'ly profeſſed, that they would not have a patched 'and inſnaring Agreement, which, according to 'Bucer's Declaration, like a Buskin, ſerve either 'ſide.' I do not find the laſt Lines of this Paſſage in the Life of Peter Martyr, extracted by Melchior Adam, from the Book which this Lutheran Doctor cites (53); but I find there, that Martyr conformed himſelf for ſome time to Bucer's Language, and afterwards left it, when he ſaw the dangerous Conſequences of it, which were, that, on the one hand, it did not fully ſatisfy the Lutherans, and on the other gave Offence to the weak and perplexed, and embarraſſed them in ſuch a manner, that they could not tell what to believe on that Point (54). Martyr and Bucer nevertheleſs were good Friends, and fully perſuaded of each other's Orthodoxy (55). Obſerve, that Bucer, during his Reſidence in England, was exhorted to ſpeak more fully and clearly concerning the Eucharift (56).

(53) Oratio Joſiæ Simleri de vitâ & obitu Petri Martyris.

(54) Melch. Adam. in vitâ Petri Martyris, pag. 38.

(55) Ib. pag. 39.

(56) Id. in vitâ Calvini, pag. 80.

[K] ---- one may apply ---- this Obſervation to his Opinion concerning the Merit of Works.] The Lutheran Doctor, whom I cite, accuſes Bucer of having uſed a Stile accommodated to the Romiſh Opinions, concerning Juſtification, in the Formulary of Faith, preſented by four Imperial Cities (57), to the Diet of the Empire in the Year 1530: theſe are the Doctor's Words: 'Articulo IV Confeſſionis Civitatum explicandum erat, Quomodo fidei juſtificatio adſcribatur; ſed Bucerus ſtylum, ne pontificios offenderet, ad ipſorum ſorum ſic attemperavit: Quod Concionatores noſtri Fidei tantum tribuunt, non eo ſit ſenſu, quaſi ſalus & pietas noſtra conſiſtat in otioſis cogitationibus, vel in fide quæ ſit charitatis expers, quam fidem informem ſive informatam nominare conſueverunt: ſed ideo hoc ſit, quia fateri cogimur, neminem vere pium eſſe aut ſalvari poſſe, qui Deum non ſumme diligat, & conformis ipſi fieri ſummo ſtudio aemitatur. Et poſt pauca: Fides, per quam regeneratur, eo eſt fides quæ per charitatem eſt efficax. Hæc Bucerus. Quid vero hoc eſt aliud, quam ſenſu Pontificio docere nos juſtificari coram DEO FIDE FORMATA (58)? —— In the IVth Article of the Confeſſion of the Cities, they were to have explained, how Juſtification is aſcribed to Faith; but Bucer, that he might not offend the Papiſts, accommodated his Stile to their manner of ſpeaking, thus: Whereas our Preachers attribute ſo much to Faith, it is not done in this Senſe, as if our Salvation and Godlineſs conſiſted in idle Thoughts, or in Faith, which is void of Love, which they uſed to call Faith without Form, or unformed; but it is done, becauſe we are obliged to confeſs, that no Man is truly godly, who does not love GOD above all things, and endeavours with all his Might to be conformable to him. And a little after: The Faith, by which we are regenerated, is a Faith which worketh by Love. Thus far Bucer. But what is this elſe than in the Senſe of the Papiſts to ſay, that we are juſtified before GOD BY FAITH FORMED.' He had juſt before ſaid, that Bucer retracted ſome time after; and confeſſed that he had granted certain things in Favour of the Catholics, which he would no longer allow (59). You need not ask whether he was not loaded with many Reproaches on that Account. You will preſently be ſatisfied: 'Quia verſipellis iſte Bucerus fuit Autor Confeſſionis Tetrapolitanæ, fatente ipſo quoque Paræo, facile judicari poteſt, quo candore & ſpiritu in ea concinnanda uſus fuerit: eo nimirum quiſquiſpiam ſibi conſtat, ſed tamquam Vertumnus aliquis, nec calidus nec frigidus eſt. Cujus rei Argumento eſſe poteſt, quod ipſe Bucerus paulo poſt bene multa Confeſſionis hujus ſuæ capita publice tractavit, & faſſus eſt ſe in gratiam 'Pontificiorum multa tum conceſſiſſe, quæ jam 'concedere amplius nolit (60). —— As that Turn- 'coat, Bucer, was Author of the Confeſſion of the 'four Cities, as even Paræus himſelf allows, it is 'eaſy to judge what Candour and Spirit he uſed in 'compoſing it; even this, that he is no where con-'ſiſtent with himſelf, but*, Vertumnus like, is 'neither hot nor cold. A Proof of which is this, 'that Bucer himſelf, a little after, publickly retracted 'ſeveral Articles of this his Confeſſion, and owned, 'that he had then granted ſeveral things for the 'ſake of the Papiſts, which now he would no longer grant.' It is obſerved, that, in all the fourth Article, which is deſigned for the Doctrine of the Juſtification of a Sinner, there is not one Word concerning the Merit of JESUS CHRIST, the chief and ſole Foundation of our Salvation (61); and that Bucer, acknowledging his foul Play, rectified the thing ſome time after: 'Agnovit hanc κυβείαν & aleatoriam verſutiam Bucerus ipſe, qui hunc ipſum Articulum retractavit poſtea, ſic ſcribens [a]: Verbum (efficax) tolli debet, aut ita declarari, ut intelligatur de fiducia apprehendente miſericordiam propter Chriſtum promiſſam & erigente perterrefactas mentes (62). ----- Bucer himſelf acknowledged this Game and Craft, and retracted that Article afterwards, writing thus: The Word (efficacious) ought to be left out, or explained ſo that it might be underſtood of an Aſſurance expecting Mercy, promiſed for the ſake of CHRIST, and raiſing deſponding Souls.' To convince him of the like unfair Practice on the Article of good Works; theſe Words of the Confeſſion are urged: 'Renovatio & reſtitutio hominis, quæ fit & conſiſtit per fidem, declaratur PERFECTAQUE fit operibus charitatis: ---- Tantum vero abeſt ut bona opera rejiciamus, ut libere fateamur Hominem 'numquam PERFECTE beatum effici poſſe, niſi per 'Chriſti Spiritum eo perducatur, ut NULLUM penitus ei deſit opus bonum omnium eorum ad 'quæ à DEO eſt conditus (63). ---- The Regeneration and Reſtoration of Man, which is cauſed by, and ſubſiſts in, Faith, is declared and made PERFECT by Works of Charity ---- but we are ſo far from rejecting good Works, that we freely confeſs, that a Man can never become perfectly happy, unleſs he be guided by the Spirit of CHRIST, ſo that NO good Work is wanting in him, for which he was created by GOD.' I think Reaſon and Charity require us to believe, that he acted in all this according to his own Perſuaſion, and not out of Policy. We have ſeen above (64), what he wrote conſtantly on the Head of good Works. The Paſſage, which I have cited from his Commentary on Pſalm ii (65), is ſufficient, in the Opinion of Grotius, to ſhew, that the Proteſtants and Catholics would eaſily agree on that matter, provided they would but baniſh ſcholaſtic Chicanery and Party Animoſity (66). Grotius pretends, that this Paſſage ought to be read according to the Edition of Strasburg, and not according to that of Robert Stephens, which is wholly corrupted (67). He

(57) Strasburg, Conſtance, Memmingen, and Lindau.

(58) Hotterus de Synodo Evangelicor. &c. pag. 130, 131.

(59) Id. ibid. pag. 130.

(60) Id. ibid.

(61) Id. ibid. pag. 131.

[a] Vid. Librum, Actorum Ratiſpon. pag. 85.

(62) Hotterus de Synodo Evangelicor. &c. p. 132.

(63) Id. ibid.

(64) In the Remark [C].

(65) In the ſame Remark, Citation (8).

(66) Grotius in Voto pro Pace Eccleſ. ad Art. iv, apud Rivetum, Operum Tom. III, pag. 1042.

(67) See the Remark [C], Citation (11).

He refers us also to the Preface of Bucer's Commentary on the four Evangelists, which, says he, was also omitted in Robert Stephens's Edition. Andrew Rivet's Answer to Grotius is remarkable; he declared to him (68); I. That the Passage in Bucer's Commentary on the IId Psalm, as Grotius has related it, contains nothing but what the Calvinists admit, when rightly understood. II. That Robert Stephens's Edition wants nothing as to the Sense of those Words, which Grotius recites from the Edition of Strasburg. III. That if the Words are not the same in Robert Stephens's Edition, and in that of Strasburg, Grotius ought to remember that this Work of Bucer's was first printed under the Name of Aretius Felinus, in the Year 1529; a second time under the Name of Martin Bucer, in the Year 1532; and a third time, at Geneva, by Robert Stephens, in the Year 1554: And that the Author owns, that in revising his Works he left out, he added, and even retracted, certain things (69): therefore it cannot be pretended that the last Editions of his Works were corrupted by the Booksellers. May not the Difference between the latter and the former proceed from the Author's Retractations; besides, Bucer's Confession is in his Preface to his Commentary on the Gospels, and Rivet assures us that it was not suppressed by Robert Stephens, as Grotius had given out (70). After this Rivet cites several Passages of Bucer, which prove his Orthodoxy, as to the Doctrine of Justification. Grotius made very little answer; he only says, that if a Man has a Mind to be believed when he affirms, that the Difference of the Editions of Bucer comes from the Author, he ought to give some Proof of it, and that there are some Editions of Geneva, in which the Preface to the Commentary on the Gospels is not inserted (71). He is condemned by his Silence as to Robert Stephens's Edition, from whence it appears that he and Vossius had spoken of it without having seen it (72); an inexcusable Fault!

(68) Rivetus in Apologet pro versâ p.ce Eccles. Operum, Tom. III, pag. 1-71.

(69) See above, the Addition to the Remark [C].

(70) See in the same Addition, Citation (12), the Latin Words of Rivetus.

(71) Grotius in Discuss. Apologet. ict Rivetiani, pag. 47. See Rivetus's Works, Tom. III, pag. 1140.

(72) See Remark [C], Citation (9), (10), and (11).

BUCHANAN (George), was a very able Man, and one of the greatest Latin Poets of the XVIth Century. He was born in a Village in Scotland, in the Year 1506. His Family, which was far from rich, had like to have fallen into extreme Poverty by the Death of his Father, and the breaking of his Grandfather. His Mother, who was left a Widow with eight Children, educated them as well as she could; but she had a Brother that took some care of this. Having found him fit enough for Learning, he sent him to Paris. The young Man lived there two Years, and afterwards was obliged to return to Scotland, by reason of his Poverty, and want of Health. When he found himself recovered, he would try his Fortune in the War, among the French Troops which were landed in his Country; but he soon fell sick again. After his recovery he went to St Andrews, where he studied Logic under the good old Man John Major. He followed him into France that same Year, and after he had passed two Years at Paris, struggling with his ill Fortune, he was called to teach Grammar in the College of St Barbara. This he did for three Years. He was brought back into Scotland by a young Count (a), who had kept him five Years with him in Paris. He would have returned into France again, but the King of Scotland stopped his Journey, by making him Preceptor to his Bastard Son. He had wrote a Poem which displeased the Franciscans. These good Fathers, instead of putting on that Spirit of Patience which so well becomes Churchmen, were incensed at it, and to revenge themselves the more artfully, they cried out, that Buchanan was an impious Man, and an Heretic. These Clamours were the occasion of his inclining to Lutheranism, a little more than he did before (b). About this time the King returned from France (c), and made the Churchmen uneasy; for they were afraid, that Queen Magdalen, whom he brought along with him, had imbibed the new Opinions from her Aunt, the Queen of Navarre. The Death of Queen Magdalen soon dispelled their Fears. Some time after a Plot was discovered against the King, in which this Prince believed, that the Franciscans had not discharged their Duty to him. He commanded Buchanan to write some Verses against them. The Poet obeyed without any Reluctance, but kept within Bounds, and made use of Expressions which might be taken in a double Sense. The King, not thoroughly satisfied with those Verses, commanded him to write sharper, and was obeyed according to his Desire. Buchanan presented him the famous Sylva, which is called Franciscanus. Some time after he was informed, that Cardinal Beton was plotting his Ruin; whereupon he fled into England [A]; but Matters being in such Confusion there, that in (a) Gilbertus Kennedus Cassilisiæ Comes. — Gilbert Kennedy, Earl of Cassil. Buchanano in Vita propria Poëmatiis præfixa.

(b) Dum impotentiæ suæ indulgent illum ipsum sua Sacerdotum licentiæ insensum acrius incendunt, & Lutheranæ causæ minus infquum reddunt. Id. ibid.

(c) That is to say, in 1537. Buchanan, in his Life, very seldom puts down the Years.

[A] He fled into England.] I cannot tell why he suppresses his being put in Prison; for it is suppressing it, to say only in an indefinite Manner, that he deceived his Guards. 'Brevi post per amicos 'ex aula certior factus se peti, & Cardinalem Be'tonium à Rege pecunia vitam ejus mercari ELU'SIS CUSTODIBUS in Angliam contendit. — A 'little after, being informed by his Friends at Court 'that there was a Design against him, and that Car'dinal Beton offered the King Money for his Life, 'he deceived his Keepers, and fled into England.' He was Preceptor to the King's Bastard: and therefore it may reasonably be supposed, that the Guards whom he deceived were not Jailors of public Prisons, but only certain Men who had orders to observe him, as a suspected Person. So that he has not explained himself clearly enough. The History of the Reformation of England is more particular in the matter: we there find the very time that he was imprisoned, a Circumstance, which Buchanan ought at least to have set down in the Margin, if he was afraid that the Date of the Years would make his Periods less smooth. We have it then from Dr Burnet, that in the Year 1539. 'The Clergy, being incensed by the Satires 'that Buchanan had written against them, caused 'him to be imprisoned, and as the King left all 'things to them, that great Man would doubtless 'have been condemned to death, if he had not 'had the Ingenuity to make his Escape out of 'Prison (1).' I have said that Buchanan was Preceptor to the King's Natural Son; and I have reason to suppose it: for, as he himself has said that the King bestowed that place upon him, it is to be presumed he would have it believed that he was invested with it, since he neither expressly, nor by any incompatible Fact, notes that he had it not. Now this he has not done: I may therefore suppose that he enjoyed it. But to dissemble nothing in this matter, I must own he makes use of an Expression, from whence it might be concluded that he had not that Employ. He says, that, being by chance at Court,

(1) History of the Reformation of England, Part I, lib. iii, pag. 725. Note, that Buchanan, in his History of Scotland, lib. xiv, pag. 509, says, that he escaped by a Window in his Chamber, while the Guards slept.

in one and the same Day Lutherans were burnt on one side, and Papists on the other, he passed again into France: And for fear Cardinal Beton (d) should play him a Trick there, he retired privately from Paris, and went to Bourdeaux, whither Andrew Goveanus, a learned Portuguese, invited him. He taught three Years in this Place [B], but not without some dread of the Franciscans, and of Cardinal Beton (e), whose Threats he was informed of. After this he followed Andrew Goveanus into Portugal, I say Goveanus, who had Orders from the King his Master, to bring him a certain number of Persons fit to teach Philosophy, and Literature, in the University he had newly founded at Coimbra. All went well as long as Goveanus lived, but after his Death, which happened not long after, the learned Men who followed him, and particularly Buchanan, were vexed all manner of ways. They reproached him with his Poem against the Franciscans; they found fault with his eating Meat in Lent, wherein he only conformed to the Custom of the Country (f). It was pretended, that in his Discourse he had discovered some Indifference to the Catholic Church. They teazed him for above a Year together, and after all, for fear of discovering, that they had unjustly harassed a Man of Reputation, they condemned him to remain some Months in a Monastery, in order to be better instructed. It was there he undertook his Paraphrase of the Psalms, an excellent Work, notwithstanding all the Criticisms of Lewis de la Croix (g). Having obtained his Liberty, he passed into England, but made no stay there. He chose to return into France. He arrived there at the time of the raising of the Siege of Metz (h). Some Years after he entered into the Service of the Mareschal de Brissac, and was made Preceptor to his Son. That Mareschal commanded then in Piedmont. Buchanan continued five Years in that Employ, sometimes in Italy, and sometimes in France. He quitted it in 1560. Returning into Scotland, after the Troubles, which Messieurs de Guise caused there, had been suppressed, he went over openly to the Communion of the Reformed Church. He was made Preceptor to James VI, King of Scotland, in the Year 1565. This is all that he has thought fit to inform us of concerning his Life (i). I cannot tell why he hath affected to say nothing of his great Prosperity. That Silence might appear mysterious to those who are inclined to give things a wrong turn. Such Persons might be capable of believing that Buchanan, full of Confusion and Remorse in his old Age, for having given himself up to the Faction which forced Queen Mary out of her Kingdom, from whom he had received so many Benefits, and whom he praised so highly, durst not shew what he had done in those Times, nor awaken in (d) He was Embassador of Scotland in France.

(e) This Cardinal wrote to the Archbishop of Bourdeaux, to get Buchanan taken up, but he gave the Letter to some intimate Friends of Buchanan Buchanan in vitâ propriâ.

(f) Crimini dabatur carnium esus in quadragesimâ, à qua nemo in tota Hispaniâ est qui abstineat. Ibid.

(g) A Portuguese Jesuit, Author of a Version of the Psalms in Latin Verse. In the Preface to which he censures Buchanan.

(h) That is to say, 1552.

(i) Taken from his Life, written by himself, in 1580. It is printed before his Poems.

Court, he was sent for by the Prince. Rex Buchananum FORTE tum in aula agentem ad se advocat. Has not the Preceptor of a King's Natural Son his ordinary Residence at Court? Is it ever said of such a one, that he was by chance at Court at such a time? I answer, I. That it is at least very possible that he is not there sometimes; that suffices me. II. That it is not the part of a good Writer to relate matters so, that recourse must be had to conjectures to know that things are altered (z). This is the chief aim of my Criticism. Buchanan wrote his History politely; says much in few words, but skips over things that he ought not to forget. It is more difficult than is commonly thought, not to fall into this Defect. Consider my marginal Note.

(z) There are some Abridgments of History, in which you will find (for Example) that the Spaniards took a Town such a Year, and retook it the Year following, the Author never observing that they had lost it again; I have met with some Persons who maintain that this is no fault: A Reader, say they, will easily enough conclude, that the Spaniards had lost it, since they were obliged to retake it. I insist that it is a Fault, but it is a Fault common to most Abridgments.

[B] He returned —— to Bourdeaux, and taught three Years there.] Here I shall place the impertinent Story that I have read in the fiftieth Page of The Doctrine Curieuse of Father Garasse. 'It is said, that George Buchanan, Regent of the first Class in the College of Guyenne in Bourdeaux, having taken a little more Wine than he ought, went, when the Class Bell rung, and took a turn as far as England in his Morning-Gown and Slippers, having opportunely found a Ship just weighing Anchor in the Harbour of the Carthusians. A fine walk, continues the same Author, to be taken in a drunken Fit.' This Lie is too ridiculous to be confuted. Buchanan left France at that time to go into Portugal. I shall occasionally examine a place of the Anti-Baillet that does not seem to me very exact. 'Moreri has wrote in his Dictionary, these are the Words of Mr Menage (3), that Turnebus, Buchanan, and Muret, taught at the same time in the College of Cardinal le Moine, Turnebus the first, Buchanan the second, and Muret the third Class. I have heard Father Bourbon, who very well knew things of this kind, say the same. —— If Buchanan taught in the College of Cardinal le Moine at the same time that Muret taught there, as I am in some manner perfuaded he did, because Father Bourbon says so, it must have been between 1544. (which is the Date of his Elogy to Tassæus and Turnus) and 1545, for he taught before in the College of Guyenne in Bourdeaux, where he passed three Years as he himself tells us in his Life: and in 1539, the first of December, he made a Speech there to the Emperor Charles V, as he was going from Spain to Flanders. And if Muret had taught before that time in the College of Cardinal le Moine with Buchanan, he must at least have taught there in 1538, and at that time he was but fourteen Years of Age.' My Observations on this long Passage are these. I. It does not appear by Buchanan's Life that he taught in any College of Paris after his Return thither upon having escaped out of the Prisons of Scotland in 1539. So that the time when he taught in Paris, if we believe his Life, precedes the Voyage that he made into Scotland with the Scotch Earl. Now after that Voyage he had a Mind to return to Paris: but was hindered by the King his Master, who made him Tutor to his Natural Son. That Prince returned from France with Queen Magdalen, whom he had married in the beginning of 1537. It is plain then that Buchanan must have left Paris to return into Scotland in the Year 1536 at latest, and consequently is is false that he taught at time with Muret in a College of Paris; for in that case Muret must have been a Schoolmaster before ten Years of Age (4). II. Mr Menage ought not to have laid it down as possible, that Muret and Buchanan taught at Paris in the Year 1538, seeing it is certain, that Buchanan was then in Scotland. III. Since he has placed the Birth of Muret in 1526, he ought not, as he does in the same Page, to make him fourteen Years of Age, in the Year 1538. IV. He ought to have said expressly that Buchanan was at Paris in the Year 1544. This is plain from his Elegy to Tassæus and Turnus mentioned by Mr Menage. V. He ought to have said that Buchanan spake of Gelida in that Elegy as of a Colleague (5), and to have drawn a Proof from thence that Buchanan taught at that time COLLEGES where Buchanan taught, and at what Time.

(3) Menage, Anti-Baillet, chap. lxxxiii. He does not cite the place in Moreri; it is in the Article MURET.

(4) Menage, Anti-Baillet, chap. lxxxiii, says, that Muret was born in 1526.

(5) Cæteraque ut cessent, Gelidæ piâ cura sodalis. Et patris & patriæ sustinet usque vicem. Mr Menage, pag. 332, rightly corrects gelide for Gelidæ.

in the Mind of his Readers, the remembrance of some Books he had written to the taste of those who were then in Power [C]. These Books have rendered him so odious to the Roman Catholics, that to this the horrible Slanders, published by them against him, may justly be imputed. He has been defamed as the most prophane and impious Drunkard that ever lived [D], and as a Traitor, a Conspirator, time in the College of Cardinal le Moine; for it is certain, that Gelida taught in that College. VI. If, notwithstanding Buchanan's Life, I was to say, that he taught at Paris in the Year 1539, I would rather take Mr Menage's Year (6), than the time which elapsed between his Return to Paris at the raising the Siege of Metz, and that of his being made Tutor to Timoleon de Cossé, the Marshal de Brissac's Son. That Interval comprehends three Years; for he was Preceptor during five Years (7), and he quitted that Employ in the Year 1560 (8).

[C] He wrote Books —— to the Taste of those who were then in Power.] We shall speak hereafter of his Dialogue concerning the Right of Kings. He wrote two other Books, which were still more agreeable to the Interests of his Faction than that. The one is the History of Scotland, in which he says many ill things of the Queen's Manners and Conduct; the other is that which he intituled Eclaircissement (9). See how Mr Varillas speaks of it. 'I ought to advertise the Curious, says he (10), 'that Buchanan's History of Scotland is not the 'worst of his Works against that Princess, and that 'there is another to which he durst not set his 'Name, more satirical, beyond all Comparison, than 'the other. It was not to be found in the King's 'Library in my time; but Mr Clément, Counsellor 'in the Court of Aids, lent it me out of his own 'Study. It is written in French, and printed at 'Rochel in the Year 1572. For filth and foul 'Language no Book I ever saw comes near it; 'and the single Passage of the pretended Lewd-'ness of Queen Mary Stuart, countenanced and 'imitated by her Maid of Honour, Mademoiselle de 'Rets, falls little short of those of the Ancient 'and Modern Authors, who have taken the greatest 'Liberty in defiling their Reader's Imagination.' It is needless to say, that nothing could be more agreeable to the Interests of that Queen's Enemies than Buchanan's Satires; for one of these two must have been the Case, either that they who forced her out of her Kingdom were the greatest Villains in Nature, or that she was the most infamous of Women. These are two Scales of a Balance equally poized; you cannot load the one without lightening the other precisely to the same degree: just so whatever serves to acquit the Queen, aggravates her Enemies Guilt in the same Proportion, and whatever serves to load the Queen extenuates their Crimes in a like degree. It is certain then, that Buchanan's Satires were an Apology for his Faction, and the bitterer they were, the more they justified those who had turned out Mary Stuart. To judge of it from common prejudice, one would be apt to suspect, that a Satire of such important and necessary use, is a Fiction invented for the Interest of the Cause. But as there are real Tyrannies and Infamies which make Subjects revolt, it is not always true that the Manifesto's of those who do rebel are meer Calumnies: and therefore, without listening to our prejudices, we ought impartially to examine Buchanan's Cause. Note, that in order to make the Comparison of the Scales, in equilibrio, just, we must enter into that Writer's Principles, and suppose, like him, that the King of Scotland, and they who represent the Nation, are two collateral Powers; for the Comparison would not be just in a Monarch properly so called; the Injustice of the Sovereign does not justify Revolts.

[D] He has been defamed as the most profane and impious Drunkard that ever lived.] I have already cited an Author who reproaches him with a ridiculous Voyage in a drunken Fit (11); but here is a much worse Story; he reproaches him with having had the Glass and Death between his Lips at the same instant, and with scoffing at the Ministers who exhorted him to pray to God. I shan't cut off a tittle of the Story. It is useful to let the Readers see, by sensible examples, how far the Boldness of public lying may go, when once the Impudence grows so great as to get all the Stories printed that run about the Streets. See then what Father Garasse says: 'I will tell our new Atheists the wretched end of a 'Man of their Belief and Humour, as to eating 'and drinking. It was George Buchanan, a perfect 'Epicure during his Life, and a perfect Atheist at 'his Death. This Libertine, having spent his Youth 'in Debauchery at Paris, and at Bourdeaux, more 'sollicitous after the Ivy of an Alehouse, and the 'Bush of a Tavern, than after the Laurels of Par-'nassus, and being called back to Scotland towards 'the latter part of his Days, to instruct the young 'Prince, who is at present the Most Serene King 'of Great Britain, continuing his gluttonous 'Courses, fell into a Dropsy by drinking, tho' it 'was said of him by way of banter, that his Di-'stemper was, vino intercute, not aqua intertile. 'How sick so ever he was, he abstained no more 'from drinking Bumpers, than when he was in 'Health, and drank his Wine as pure as he for-'merly did at Bourdeaux. The Physicians, who 'visited him by Order of the King their Master, 'seeing their Patient's Excess, told him plainly 'and angrily, that he did what he could to de-'stroy himself, and that, in his way of living, he 'could not hold out above fourteen Days or three 'Weeks at longest. He desired them to call a Con-'sultation to know how long he might live, in 'case he abstained from Wine; they did so, and 'the result was, that he might live five or six 'Years longer, if he could command himself so 'long; upon which he made an Answer agree-'able to his humour. Get you gone, said he, with 'your Prescriptions, and your Course of Diet, and 'know, that I would rather live three Weeks and 'be drunk every Day, than six Years without drink-'ing Wine; and immediately discharging his Phy-'sicians, like a desperate Man, he ordered a Hogs-'head of Graves Wine to be set at his Bed's-head, 'resolving to see the bottom of it before he died, 'and behaved himself so valiantly, that he emptied 'it to the Lees, literally fulfilling the Contents 'of that pretty Epigram of Epigenus concerning a 'Frog, which, being fallen into a Hogshead of 'Wine cried out,

Αὐ τίτες ὕδωρ
Πίνετε, μαῖνα σώφρονα μαινόμενοι.

Alas! some drink Water, being sober mad.

'When he had Death and the Glass between his Lips, 'the Ministers made him a Visit to settle his Mind, 'and prepare him to die with some Sentiments of 'Religion: One of them exhorted him to repeat 'the Lord's-Prayer; and he opening his Eyes, and 'looking fiercly at the Minister, What is that, 'said he, that you call the Lord's-Prayer? The 'Standers by answered, That it was the Pater-'noster; and that if he could not say that Prayer, 'they desired him at least to say some other Chri-'stian Prayer, that he might go out of the World 'like a good Man: As for me, said he, in his un-'disturbed and perfect Senses, I never knew any 'other Prayer than this:

Cinthia prima suis miserum me cepit ocellis
Contactum nullis ante cupidinibus.

I who to Love a Stranger ever had been,
By Cinthia's sparkling Eyes was first enslav'd.

'And scarce had he repeated ten or twelve Verses 'of that Elegy of Propertius, when he expired a-'mong the Glasses and Pints; so that it may truly 'be said of him, purpureum vomit ille animam; 'and such is commonly the End of all Epicures (12). We find the same Story in the Grammaticus profa-'nus of the Jesuit Stradæ (13), who brings (14) no other

(6) That is, from 1544, to 1545.

(7) And not ten, as Varillas affirms, Hist. de l'Heresie, lib. xxvii, pag. 143.

(8) See the Life of Buchanan.

(9) Varillas, Histoire de l'Heresie, lib. xxvii, pag. 170.

(10) Preface to the fifth Tome of the Histoire de l'Heresie.

(11) Garasse, Doctrine curieuse, pag. 50.

(12) Id. ibid. pag. 748.

(13) In the first Tome, pag. 164.

(14) Ibid. pag. 181.

rator, a Slave of Impurity and Satire, and a Falsifier of History [E]. He died at Edinburgh, the eighth of September, 1582 (k). His Dialogue De jure Regni apud Scotos, with which the Protestants have so often been reproached, was the reason why some of them mention him as a Man of no Name or Consequence [F]. There is ground to doubt the Repentance, which the Annalist of Queen Elizabeth attributes to him [G]. Be that how it will, we cannot refuse him the Praise of a fine

(k) Thuan. lib. lxxvi. pag. 445. Father L'Enfant is out, in placing this Death to the 25th of April.

other Authority, than a Work, which appeared in the Year 1615, under the Title of Elixir Calvinisticum, &c. A Piece attributed to Father Garasse, as we shall see hereafter (15).

(15) In the Remark [S]. of the Article SCIOPPIUS.

[E] And as a Traytor, a Conspirator - - - - - and a Falsifier of History.] These are the Slanders which his Countryman Barclay made use of to paint him out. 'Ac Buchananum quidem non solùm depravatis desperatisque moribus ex libero Liberi Veneris que manicipium factum sciunt omnes, quotquot eum probè noverunt; sed & hæreticum insignem, & mendacem historicum sacra juxta ac profana audaci conatu temerantem ostendit illud ejus opus, cui, Rerum Scoticarum historia, titulum dedit - - - - - - Quod cùm ita sit, ecqui mirum videri possit, in egregium nequitiæ artificem evasisse eum, qui in primis juventæ annis, sceleri omnium maximo flagitiosæ vitæ rudimentum posuit? Jam vero historiam reliquam ea fide scripsit, quam in meo me pudet populari reperire: probissimos quosque lancinat maledictis, pios per calumniam opprimit: quò autem quisque sceleratior, & promptior ad malum manu, eò pluribus ille laudibus celebratur. Quid multis? in illa ejus historia, quæ ultra Boethii nobilis historiographi epitomen se profert, tot mihi mendacia occurrunt, ut cùm vera videam, vix vera esse, nisi cunctanter, credam. Id ipsum & alii mecum queruntur gnari temporum, quæ res gestas posteritas ab eo libris mandatas continet *. Sed erit spero veri, patriæque amantior aliquis, qui venenatum ejus stylo mucronem retundet, & fraudem fide solida patefaciens incorruptos eorum temporum annales evulgabit. Hoc igitur homine relicto, qui ut viri adhuc viventes clarissimi norunt, ventri & veneri obediens, multarum in principes conjurationum fautor, quarundam etiam author, hæreticos quà domi, quà foris, quà privatim, quà publicè pertinax propugnator extitit: ad Stephanum Junium Brutum venio (16). —— And indeed it is not only notorious to all that know Buchanan, that, by his depraved and abandoned Life, he was become a mean Slave to Wine and Venery; but also his Book, intituled, The History of the Affairs of Scotland, shews him to have been both an egregious Heretic, and a lying Historian, audaciously corrupting sacred things as well as prophane. — This being the Case, can it seem strange that he became an extraordinary Artist in Mischief, who by his flagitious Life, in his early Youth, laid a Foundation for the most consummate Wickedness? He has writ all the rest of the History with so little Fidelity, as I am ashamed to find in one of my Countrymen: the best Men he wounds with Slanders, and loads the pious with Calumny: and the more wicked and ready to mischief any one is, the more he commends him. In short, in that History of his, which is continued after the Epitome of the noble Historiographer Boethius, I find so many Lies, that when I meet with any thing that is true I am very slow in believing it to be so. The same Complaint is likewise made by others, who remembred the time when the things mentioned in this latter part of the History were transacted. But I hope there will be found some better Friend to Truth and his Country, who will blunt his poisoned Pen, expose his Frauds with solid Truth, and publish impartial Annals of those times. Leaving therefore this Man, who, as is well known to eminent Men still living, was a Slave to his Belly and Lust, an Abettor of several Conspiracies against Princes, and Author of some, an obstinate Defender of Heresy both at home and abroad, both in public and private: I come to Stephen Junius Brutus.'

* Nempe septum posteritatis quos de industria in materiis & filii Regum necem & ignominiam malitia mala compensit. — He the seven last Books which he maliciously composed on purpose for the shame and destruction of the Queen Mother, and the King.

(16) Colli. Barclaius, adversus Monarchomach. lib. iii, cap. i, pag. 370.

[F] The Protestants —— have sometimes spoke of him as a Man of no Name or Consequence.] See here the Words of Mr Daillon: a French Minister, Refugee in England: 'Let them not do us the Injustice to reckon among our Doctors a Scotch Poet without any Character, who diverted himself with setting forth his Dreams on Politics (17).' Another French Minister did not speak of Buchanan with that Disdain; yet he condemned him, and thought it very unjust, That That Author's Republican Maxims should be imputed to those of the Protestant Religion. 'These Maxims of Buchanan, 'says he (18), and of Paræus, are not our Maxims; 'we have renounced them over and over, nor are 'they to be found in any of our authentic Writings. '—— They are assuredly false in the extent which 'these Authors give them (19).' For a Man who had set up for a Prophet, he had but a very short Prospect of Futurity, as to his own Fate;

(17) Daillon, Examen de l'oppression des Reformez, pag. 11.

(18) Jurieu, Reponse à l'Histoire du Calvinisme de Maimbourg, Tom. II, pag. 287. Edit in 4to.

(19) Ibid. pag. 288.

Nescia mens hominum fati sortisque futuræ,
Et servare modum rebus sublata secundis (20).

(20) Virgil Æneid. x. ver. 501.

Poor mortals, blind to Fate, do never know,
To bear high Fortune, or endure the Low.

Little did he imagine, that five Years should not come about before he himself would write Pastoral Letters, filled with the Maxims of these two Authors. However it be, that Dialogue of Buchanan made a great Noise. One Adam Blackwood, of the same Country with Buchanan, and Counsellor in the Presidial Court of Poitiers, refuted his Countryman as well as he could. A German, named Minianus Vinzetus did the same. Barclay, another Scot, and much an abler Man than they, came to the Charge, and had the Malice to say, that Boucher, a Doctor of Sorbonne, had borrowed his Weapons of Buchanan, and some other Heretics (21). The Protestants of Scotland made a much more decisive Answer; for the Parliament of the Kingdom condemned that Dialogue of Buchanan, his History, and his Detectio, and forbad the Sale of them. See in the Remark [G], the Citations from Camden.

(21) Colli. Barclaius, adversus Monarchomachas, init.

[G] There is room to doubt the Repentance, which Camden attributes to him.] Let us first set down this famous Historian's Words: 'Quid Georgius 'Buchananus hac de re cum in historia, tum in libello, cui Detectio titulum fecit, prodidit, ex libris impressis nemo non novit. Cum autem ille partium studio & Moravii munificentia abreptus ita scripsit, ut libri isti falsitatis damnati sint ab ordinibus Regni Scotiæ, quorum fidei plus tribuendum: & ipse ingemiscens coram Rege, cui fuit Pædagogus, subinde se reprehenderit (ut accepi) quod tam virulentum calamum in Reginam benè meritam strinxisset, moriensque optaverit ut tantisper supersesset, donec maculas, quas maledicentia falso aspersisset, revocatâ veritate, vel sanguine eluisset; nisi (quod ipse dixit) hoc vanum esset, cùm præ ætate delirare videretur (22). —— It is well known to every Body, from the Books themselves, what George Buchanan said of this Affair, both in his History, and in his Detection. But as he was led by Zeal for a Party, and the Munificence of the Earl of Murray, to write in such a manner that his Books were condemned for Falsity by the Parliament of Scotland, who are more to be credited: and he has often blamed himself with Sighs (as I have heard) in the Presence of the King, whose Preceptor he was, that he had drawn so virulent a Pen against so deserving a Queen, and wished when he was dying, that he might have a little time left to wipe off the Stains which his Slanders had thrown upon her, by witnessing the Truth even with his Blood; but that (as he said) it would be to no purpose, because his Age would make People think that he doted.' The same Author, under the Year 1584, speaks thus: 'Probrosa 'in Regem, ejus matrem, & Consiliarios scripta, 'nominatim vero Georgii Buchanani Historia, & de jure regni apud Scotos Dialogus, interdicta ut quæ multa culpanda & delenda continerent (23). —— Libels

(22) Cambd. in Annal. Elizabethæ ad Ann. 1567. init.

(23) Idem. ad Ann. 1584, pag. 410.

fine Genius, and a fine Writer [H]. He has ſucceeded wonderfully in all kinds of Latin Verſe, and has wrote very well in Proſe. I cannot tell whether we ought to believe that he had been a Monk [I]. He himſelf ſays nothing of it; others affirm it; and his Silence is not a deciſive Proof againſt them. But one may be

' bels on the King, his Mother, and his Counſellors, were prohibited, and particularly George Buchanan's Hiſtory, and Dialogue de jure Regni apud Scotos, as containing many things which ought to be ſuppreſſed.' The ſame Hiſtorian elſewhere aſſures us, than Buchanan had no regard to the Deſires of thoſe who would have had him a little before his Death to write for the Rebels Cauſe, and that he ſeemed troubled at having formerly devoted his Pen to them. ' Buchananum tamen inducere non poterant ut hoc eorum factum vel ſcripto libello, vel perſuaſione per nuntium approbaret, qui ſe factioſorum cauſam contra principes jam antea ſuſcepiſſe, dolenter ingemuit, & paulo poſt obiit (24).' Who would not look upon this Teſtimony of Camden as ſolid? Yet great abatements muſt be made, for two Reaſons; one is, that it is reported, his Manuſcript was corrected to King James's Mind and Fancy, as we ſhall ſay in a proper place. The other is taken from a Marginal Note which Mr Varillas had read. Let us hear him ſpeak: ' There are in the King's Library the five Volumes of the Preſident Thuanus's Hiſtory, in the Margins whereof the youngeſt of Meſſieurs du Puy had written with his own Hand the moſt curious Facts that his Brother and he had judged fit to be retrenched from it when it was printed. I have read in the Additions to the fourth Volume, that when Buchanan was ready to expire, James VI, King of Scotland, whoſe Preceptor he had been, made him a Viſit, and adviſed him, for the Diſcharge of his Conſcience, to retract what he had wrote to the Diſadvantage of his Mother, Queen Mary Stuart, and that Buchanan plainly refuſed it (25).' Thus Mr Varillas ſpeaks in his Preface. He touches the ſame Fact in the Body of the Book, but reports it otherwiſe: ' In the Original, ſays he (26), of Thuanus's Hiſtory, in the place where the Death of Buchanan is ſpoken of, there is written with that illuſtrious Preſident's own Hand, that James VI, King of Scotland, whoſe Preceptor Buchanan had been, honoured him with a Viſit when he was at the Extremity, and preſſed him to retract what he had ſaid againſt the Queen his Mother. That Buchanan anſwered, that his Conſcience did not reproach him on that Head, and that he had written the Truth.' Between ſuch contradicting Teſtimonies, as that of Camden, and that in Thuanus's Margins, can any one have a reaſonable Certainty of Buchanan's laſt Diſpoſitions? Not in the leaſt: Each of theſe Teſtimonies weakens the other; but we muſt allow that the firſt is without Compariſon ſtronger than the laſt; that is printed; the other is but a Manuſcript: The laſt, according to the Preface of Mr Varillas, is only in a Copy of Thuanus, but, according to the Body of the Book, it is in the Original of Thuanus: according to the Preface, it is of Mr du Puy the Younger's Hand; according to the Body of the Book, it is of Thuanus's own Hand. Theſe Variations, and theſe Shufflings, maintain the Preference that Camden deſerves. Add to this, that if Thuanus approved that Meſſieurs du Puy ſhould retrench that Part of his Hiſtory, it is a Sign that he gave no full Credit to it; for his Zeal for the Memory of Mary Stuart did not hinder his letting a hundred Things be printed which he had copied from Buchanan (27). King James reproached Thuanus's Son ſo ſharply for it, that he threw him into a Fit of Sickneſs of three Months (28). I have heard a Scotch Lord ſay, that when Buchanan was asked on his Death-bed, Whether he did not repent of what he had written againſt the Authority of Kings, and in particular againſt the Honour of Mary Queen of Scots; he anſwered, I am going to a Place where there are not many Kings.

(24) Id. Ibid. ad Ann. 1582, pag. 374.

(25) Varillas's Preface of the 5th Volume of his Hiſtoire de l'Hereſie.

(26) Id. liv. xxviii, pag. 171.

(27) See Father Orleans's Revolutions d'Angleterre, Tom. II, pag. 490, 491.

(28) Varillas, Reponſe à la Critique de Burnet, pag. 77, 78. Edit Holl. Doctor Burnet, Defenſe de la Critique, pag 62, owns the Reproach.

[H] We cannot refuſe him the Praiſe of a fine Genius, and a fine Writer.] The way that Thuanus has taken to praiſe George Buchanan is admirable: Nothing could better give a great Idea of the Scotchman's Parts. ' His Hiſtory of Scotland, ſays he, ' does not ſeem to be the Work of a Man who ' taught a School, but that of a Perſon employed all his Life-time in the moſt important Affairs of ' State. The Meanneſs of his Condition and Fortune did not hinder Buchanan from judging well of the greateſt matters, and writing of them with much Prudence. He was one of thoſe extraordinary Men, who have the Happineſs not to become ' Pedants among the Drudgeries of the School.' The Latin of Thuanus expreſſes this more nobly and amply; therefore I ſet it down. ' In ſenili otio patriam Hiſtoriam ſcribere aggreſſus eſt. Quam tantâ puritate, prudentia, & acumine ſcripſit (quamvis interdum libertate genti innatâ contra Regium faſtigium acerbior) ut ea ſcriptio non hominem in pulvere literario verſatum, ſed in media hominum luce & in tractandis Reipublicæ negotiis totâ vitâ exercitatum redoleat. Adeo ingenii felicitas & animi magnitudo omnia obſcuræ & humilis fortunæ impedimenta ab eo removerant, ut propterea non minus rectè de maximis rebus judicare & ſcribere prudenter poſſet. Et ſanè memini P. Ronſardum virum acerrimi judicii (qui licet in diſpari fortunâ conſtitutus, totâ vitâ ſcholaſtico otio oblectatus fuerat) cum de Buchanano, Hadr. Turnebo, Ant. Goveano, M. Ant. Muretо (quibuſcum arctâ amicitia conjunctus fuerat) verba faceret, dicere ſolitum, illos Homines nihil Pædagogicæ præter togam & pileum habuiſſe, & tamen de vulgo Pædagogorum ſic cenſere, nunquam incorrigibilis ineptiæ ex Pædagogicâ contractæ characterem vel longiſſimi ævi curriculo deleri poſſe (29). —— In his retirement in his old age, he undertook to write the Hiſtory of his Country, which he wrote with ſuch Purity, Judgment, and Spirit, (tho' ſometimes, according to the Freedom natural to his Country, a little too ſharp againſt the Prerogative of the King) that That Piece does not ſhew a Man converſant in the Duſt of Schools, but in full view of mankind, and employed all his Life in tranſacting Affairs of State. The happineſs of his Genius, and greatneſs of his Mind, had ſo removed all impediments of his low and mean Fortune, that he was not on that Account leſs capable of judging and writing skillfully of the greateſt matters; and indeed I remember Ronſard, a Man of great Penetration, who, though in different Circumſtances, had been delighted all his Life in Scholaſtic Amuſements, when he ſpoke of George Buchanan, Hadrian Turnebus, Antony Govean, M. Ant. Muret, with whom he was intimately acquainted, uſed to ſay, that thoſe Men had nothing of the Pedagogue about them beſides the Gown and Cap; and yet, as to the Generality of Pedagogues, he was of Opinion, that the marks of incorrigible Pedantry, contracted from that Profeſſion, could never be aboliſhed in the Courſe of the longeſt Life.'

(29) Thuan. Hiſtor. lib. lxxvi. pag. 445, 446. See alſo Burnet's Hiſtory of the Reformation of England, Part I, lib. iii.

[I] I cannot tell whether we ought to believe that he had been a Monk.] Mr le Laboureur affirms it in ſo poſitive a manner, that, to queſtion it, a Man muſt be habituated to follow the Carteſian Maxim: Never to ſubſcribe to any thing without an exact Examination. ' George Buchanan, ſays he (30), ' a Scotchman, firſt a Franciſcan in France, afterwards Preceptor of the Count de Briſſac, and a zealous Huguenot, as well known for his Vices, as eſteemed for his fine Wit, if he had not devoted it to Libertiniſm, and for his Learning if he had not abuſed it, was the moſt cruel Enemy of the Perſon and Reputation of that Princeſs, who had ſcreened him in that Kingdom from the Rigour of the Edicts, and ſnatched him, as it were, out of the Fire, and the Hands of the Executioner. He was upon the point of being condemned as an Heretic and Renegado Fryar, and ſhe ſaved him.' Brantome ſays indeed, that ſhe ſaved his Life (31), but not as a Renegado Fryar. I much queſtion Mr le Laboureur's Relation: For the firſt piece of Poetry, by which Buchanan provoked the Franciſcans, is a Dream, wherein he ſuppoſes that St Francis appeared to him to exhort

(30) Additions aux Memoirs de Caſtelnau, Tome I, pag. 546.

(31) They are Impoſtors who have ſaid or writ it; and among the reſt, Buchanan, in which he but ill requited the kindneſs the Queen had done him in France, and in Scotland, for the Favour of his Life, and diſcharge from his Sentence. Brantome, Eloge de Marie Stuart.

be very well assured, that he did not die an Atheist, in the manner that Mr Moreri represents [K]. This is not the only Falsity in his Dictionary concerning Buchanan [L]. Mr Varillas was not altogether so exact as is necessary in speaking of this able Man [M].

Thuanus

exhort him to take the Habit of his Order (32). Durst he have feigned that he made Answer, I will not, if he had actually been a Franciscan? The Persecutions, which that first Satire drew upon him from the Franciscans, did not blunt his Pen as to them, and chiefly when his Master the King of Scotland ordered him to lash them. How comes it that they did not claim him as a Deserter, when they saw him Preceptor to the King's natural Son? How happens it that they accused him only of Lutheranism? How comes it that they could only threaten him, while he taught at Bourdeaux in the Sight, and to the Knowledge of all France? Could a Renegado Fryar, and one suspected of Lutheranism, escape in France in those times from Franciscans stung with Satire. How comes it, if he was a Franciscan in France, that he durst live in Paris, and teach in the College of St Barbara? But lastly, how comes it that Buchanan, in the Hands of Portuguese Inquisitors, who used their utmost Endeavour, for above a Year together, to convict him of Heresy, did not discover that he was charged with having wickedly violated his Vows, and basely deserted the Religion of St Francis? If such a thing had been true, it could not have been kept secret, nor been difficult to prove. How comes it once again, that he came safe and sound out of the Hands of these barbarous Inquisitors? When these Demands are satisfied, I may believe he was a Franciscan. Neither can I apprehend how the Queen of Scotland could have preserved him in France from the Rigour of the Edicts. Did he not live with the Mareschal de Brissac till the Year 1560? Did he not dissemble his Sentiments on the Head of Religion? Did he not forbear discovering them openly till he came into Scotland? What is most probable is, that That Queen annulled the Sentence that had been passed upon him in the Year 1539, after he had escaped out of Prison. This was certainly the only Favour that Brantome meant.

(32) Buchanan, in Vitâ sua. That Poem is in the Collection of Pieces, entitled, Fratres Fraterrimi.

Mr Varillas says (33), that Buchanan was a Franciscan in 1539, when he was imprisoned upon Account of Heresy; that, coming very young into France, he took the Habit of St Francis there; that from thence he went to Portugal, and there discovered the first Signs of his being a Lutheran; that he was eighteen Months in Prison there, and got off by abjuring Lutheranism; that he returned into his own Country; that upon his Relapse he was put into the King's Prison; that he would have been condemned to be burnt, if he had not had the Ingenuity to make his Escape out at a Window, and that he relates the Particulars pleasantly (34). This is a continual Series of Lies. It was almost ten Years, before he escaped out of the Prisons of Scotland, that he went to Portugal. I leave the Care of correcting the other Faults to the Reader.

(33) Histoire de l'Heresie, lib. xxvii, pag. 788.

(34) He says but few Words, upon it, and that without any kind of Merriment.

[K] He did not die an Atheist in the manner that Mr Moreri relates.] This is what he says; 'The 'King sent his Physicians to him, whom he re-'fused to see; and he treated a Minister no better, 'who found him busy reading Pliny's Natural His-'tory. The Minister would have given him the 'Bible, but Buchanan, rejecting it with great Indig-'nation, Go, said he, shewing him Pliny's Histo-'ry, I find more Truth in this Book than in all 'your Scriptures. Thus that Atheist ended his 'Days, and all Scotland has witnessed this Fact.' Some Lies cannot be read without Indignation; but as for this, it is more fit to excite Laughter than Anger. All Scotland has witnessed this Fact. Can any Man cite so much as one grave Author supported by any tolerable Proofs? I should not think I risked very much, if I defyed all Mr Moreri's Friends to do this. And indeed, if that fine Story had the least Ground, Spondanus, who is not himself when he speaks of Buchanan, would not have failed to have adopted it. I find something like it in the Calendar of Father l'Enfant, a Jacobin Fryar (35), who quotes the Chronological Treasure of Peter of St Romuald; but he does not say, That all Scotland has testified that Fact, but that all Scotland can attest it (36). This last Expression is more tolerable than the former.

(35) This I call what the Author entitles, Histoire generale de tous les siecles de la nouvelle loi. This Work is in 6 Tomes in 12mo, printed at Paris, 1683.

(36) Under the 25th of April, pag. 347.

[L] It is not the only Falsity in his Dictionary concerning Buchanan.] Mr Moreri affirms, I. That Buchanan took the Habit of St Francis: I do not believe any thing of it (37). II. That he was convicted of a Design to eat the Paschal Lamb, after the manner of the Jews, and condemned to be burnt. Spondanus reports the same thing, but in stronger Terms; for he affirms that Buchanan was taken in the Fact, eating the Paschal Lamb, after the manner of the Jews, with some others in the time of Lent: Quod cum aliis quibusdam agnum Paschalem more & ritu Judaico tempore Quadragesimæ comedere repertus fuisset (38). If this had been true, they would not have let him live three Years in Bourdeaux, nor come out of the Prisons of the Inquisition in Portugal. III. That, having escaped the Punishment of Fire by Flight, he came into France, where he taught a considerable time at Paris, in the College of Cardinal le Moine, and elsewhere. It is certain, that, when he had escaped out of the Prisons of Scotland, he durst not stay in Paris, for fear of Cardinal Beton, and that he went to Bourdeaux. 'Ut Lutetiam venit Cardinalem 'Betonium pessime erga se animatum ibi legatione 'fungi comperit. Itaque ejus iræ se subtraxit, 'Bur-'degalam invitante Andrea Govæano profectus (39). '—WHEN he came to Paris he found Cardinal 'Beton, his inveterate Enemy, on an Embassy there. 'Therefore he withdrew himself from his Anger, 'and went to Bourdeaux, at the Invitation of 'Andrew Govæanus." See the Remark [B]; you will there find, that if he ever taught in the College of Cardinal le Moine, it was not 'till after he had taught three Years at Bourdeaux; and thus Moreri's Narrative is defective.

(37) See my Reasons in the Remark [I].

(38) Spondan. Annal. Eccles. ad Ann. 1539, n. 7. He cites David Camerar. de Scot. lib. iv, cap. ii. Lang in vit. Calvin. cap. i.

(39) Buchan. in vita sua.

[M] Mr Varillas was not altogether so exact as is necessary in speaking of this able Man (40).] If he had been so on such a Subject as this, we should have had great Reason to wonder at it. 'We had seen Authors before him, says he (41), 'who wrote Satires against crowned Heads, and 'caused them to be printed in their Life-time, or 'gave them to their Friends to publish them after 'their Death, but we had not 'till then seen any, 'who, after having declared himself against his So-'vereign Lady, so far as to go into England to 'depose as a Witness against her, in the criminal 'Process then depending, had continued to per-'secute her after she was beheaded; yet this is a 'Crime which they, who are most partial in fa-'vour of Buchanan, must own he was guilty of.' Mr Varillas finds some Singularities in the most ordinary Conduct. Never was any Prince judicially dethroned or beheaded by a People, who have Authors among them, without their having first published a thousand scurrilous things against him. Reason will have it so; for they, who proceed to such Extremities, ought at least to testify to the World, that they desire it may be thought they had Reason to act so: And how could they do this, if they scrupled to publish that Prince's ill Life? So that Buchanan did no more than go on in the beaten Road. He must not be censured for printing the History of Mary after her Death; for if he was in the right in other Respects, that is, if he advanced nothing but the Truth, he would have been very much to blame in suppressing it. This would have been sacrificing living Innocency to a Crime punished with Death (42); it would have been sparing the Memory of a guilty Queen at the Expence of two Nations. Mr Varillas is deceived, then, both as to the Fact and as to the Right. As to the Fact, since he says, that never any Example of Buchanan's Conduct was seen. As to the Right, seeing he condemns a Conduct which in case of

(40) Preface to the Volume of the Histoire de l'Heresie.

(41) Add to this what is said in the Remark [I].

(42) See the Remark [C], at the end.

Fidelity

Thuanus informs us of a Particular, which my Readers will be glad to find in this Place [N].

Fidelity in the Hiſtorian, is entirely agreeable to Order and right Reaſon. But his ſtrangeſt Miſtake of all is, his pretending that Buchanan, who died five Years before the Queen of Scotland was beheaded, continued to perſecute her after ſhe was beheaded, and that this is a Crime, his greateſt Friends dare not deny. No Man in Scotland, ſays he (43), was more devoted to Queen Mary Stuart than he, 'till ſhe ceaſed to be fortunate. To me it ſeems that Mr Varillas ſtretches a little too much, and yet it is true, that Buchanan did at firſt follow that Queen's Party, and praiſed her highly at the Head of his Tranſlation of the Pſalms. Mr Varillas ſays (44), That the Earl of Murray offered him one of the beſt Places in Scotland, which was that of Keeper of the Privy Seal, on Condition he would aſſiſt him to deſtroy Queen Mary Stuart. This I once thought an Hyperbole, as well as the Primacy which others ſay was promiſed Buchanan (45); but I now know that he was Keeper of the Privy Seal, a very conſiderable Place in Scotland. In the Preface of Francis I, Mr Varillas obſerves, That they had horribly calumniated Mary of Lotrain, Queen of Scotland, and that all Authors, who ſpake of her, had let themſelves looſe againſt her, on the bare Depoſition of an ungrateful Perſon (46), to whom ſhe had given his Life. He adds, that he has vindicated the Reputation of that Princeſs. Here are at leaſt two Faults; for it is no where ſaid of that Queen, that ſhe ſaved the Hiſtorian Buchanan's Life; and a Princeſs is not juſtified againſt the Calumnies of an Hiſtorian, when it is declared, that nothing ſhall be ſaid in her Juſtification which that Hiſtorian does not agree to. Now this is what Mr Varillas declares with reference to Buchanan (47).

(47) Hiſt. de François I, liv. xi, pag. 118, 119.

(43) Varillas's Preface to the firſt Tome of the Hiſt. de l'Herese.

(44) Ibid.

[N] Thuanus informs us of a Particular, which my Readers will be glad to find in this Place.] Thuanus relates, That Elias Vinetus received Letters every Year from Buchanan by Scotch Merchants, who came to load Wine at Bourdeaux. Vinetus ſhewed theſe Letters to Thuanus, who obſerved a great deal of Courage in the laſt, tho' it was wrote with a trembling Hand. Buchanan complained there not ſo much of the Inconveniences of Old-age, as of the Wearineſs of his long Life: De ſenectutis incommodis non tam quereba tur, quam de vitæ longioris tædio (48). He ſaid, that he had left the Court, and was retired to Stirling, where he endeavoured only one thing, which was to ſhake off the Company of thoſe who were not like himſelf, with as little Noiſe as poſſible. He meant the Living, and looked upon himſelf as dead. Interea hoc unum ſatago, ut quam minime cum ſtrepitu ex inæqualium morum hoc eſt mortuis à vivorum contuberuio demigrem (49). His greateſt Enemies cannot deny but that he was in his Life, once, at leaſt, a Philoſopher, for ſuch Sentiments as theſe would not be diſowned either by the Stoics or by the Brachmans, unleſs perhaps in regard of ſome ſmall Acceſſories.

(48) Thuan. de Vita ſua, lib. ii, pag. 118. ad Ann. 1582.

(49) Id. ibid.

(45) Spe Induſtus à Moravio ſi hic regno potiretur, ſe in Patriarch am aſſumendum. Strada de bello Belg. Decad. II, lib. viii, ad Ann. 1587, pag. 558. Father Gauſſin ſays the ſame in his Holy Court.

(46) Buchanan.

BUDÆUS (WILLIAM), in French BUDÉ, born at Paris, in the Year 1467, and deſcended from an ancient and illuſtrious Family [A], was one of the moſt learned Men of his Time in France. It may be ſaid that he began to ſtudy ſomewhat late; for although he was ſent early enough to Schools to learn Latin, and afterwards to the Univerſity of Orleans, to ſtudy the Law, yet he hardly knew any thing at his return from Orleans, where he had paſſed three Years. The Barbarouſneſs, which reigned at that time in Colleges, was the cauſe of his going to Orleans without underſtanding the Latin Authors, and the want of underſtanding them hindered his making any Progreſs in the Civil Law [B]. After he returned to his Father's Houſe he loſt much more Time: He ſpent his Days in hunting, and the Pleaſures of Youth, but quitted them after ſome Years, and had ſuch an Inclination for Learning, that the Ardour, wherewith he applied himſelf to Study, is not to be expreſſed. He denied himſelf all kind of Diverſions, and grudged even the neceſſary Hours for his Meals and Sleep. On the very Day of his Wedding, he withdrew from the Company at leaſt three Hours, to ſpend them with [A] Budæus born at Paris in the Year 1467, deſcended from an ancient and illuſtrious Family.] Lewis le Roi, the only Author whom I have followed, does not ſet down the Year of his Birth; but as he ſays, that Budæus died the Twenty third of Auguſt, 1540, in his Seventy third Year, he gives me a Right to place his Birth in the Year 1467. Moreri's Dictionary has a very groſs Fault. There Budæus's Birth is placed in the Year 1476 (1), and his Death on the 26th of Auguſt 1540. Yet he is made to live Seventy three Years.

(1) This Fault is originally a Fault of the Preſs. The Tranſpoſition of a ſingle Figure has changed 1467 into 1476.

What we find concerning his Genealogy, in the Work of Mr Guichenon is this: 'John Budé, Eſq; 'Lord of Verace, who ſignalized himſelf at the 'Battle of Pontcharra, where he was Lieutenant of a 'Company of Gendarmes, belonging to the Lord 'of Briquemaut, in the Year 1591 - - - - was Iſſue of 'that ancient Family of the Budés, Lords of Ierre, 'of Villiers on the Marne, Marly, Troiſſi, la Motte, 'of St Loup, and other Places, which takes Place 'among the beſt Families of the Iſle of France, 'and of Paris; for he was the Son of another 'John Budé, Eſq; Lord of Verace, and of Mary 'de Jouan, Daughter of Regerin de Jouan, Eſq; 'Lord of Jomvilliers in Beauſſe: The ſaid John 'Budé was Son of William Budé, Knight, Lord 'of Marly and Villeneufve, Counſellor and Maſter 'of the Requeſts to the great King Francis, and 'of Roberta le Lyeur, Daughter of Roger le Lyeur 'Lord of Bois-benard, and Malemains, and Iſabella 'de Lailly. - - - - - This William - - - - - was Son 'of John Budé, Lord of Ierre, of Villiers on the 'Marne, and of Marly, and of Catherine le Picart, Daughter of John le Picart, Lord of 'Platteville, Sivrey, and la Boiſſeliere, and of 'Catherine de Poncher, Daughter of Francis de 'Poncher, Knight and Chamberlain to the Kings, 'John, Charles V, and Charles VI, Bailiff of 'Touraine, and of Margaret de Dormans: And the 'ſaid John Budé, Lord of Ierre, was Son of 'Dreux Budé, Lord of the ſame Places; and the 'ſaid Dreux Budé, Son of another Dreux Budé, 'Lord of Villiers on the Marne, and of Ierre, 'and this Dreux Budé was Son of John Budé, 'who lived under Charles V (2).

(2) Guichenon Hiſt. de Breſſe, Parte III, pag. 251, 252.

[B] He went to Orleans without underſtanding the Latin Authors, and his Ignorance in them hindered him from making any Progreſs in the Civil Law.] 'Quo in Gymnaſio triennium verſatus operam pene omnem perdidit. Neque enim ignarus Latinæ Linguæ & ab aliis diſciplinis impæratus artem illam reconditam & multiplicem ſubtilemque cui ſeſe dediderat cognitione & ſcientia 'poterat comprehendere (3). - - - - - In which 'Univerſity he ſpent three Years, and loſt moſt of his time. For as he was ignorant of the Latin 'Tongue, and unprovided with any other Literature, he could not learn nor comprehend that abſtruſe, extenſive, and ſubtile Art, to which he had applied himſelf.'

(3) Lud. Regius in Vita Budæi initio.

with his Books. It was in vain to tell him that he would impair his Health [C], and ſlip Opportunities of making his Fortune: Nothing was able to abate his Ardour. The vaſt Learning he acquired by addicting himſelf ſo cloſely to Study, would be leſs matter of Wonder, had he had good Maſters who might at leaſt have ſerved for Guides; or if he had had Companions whoſe Parts had given him, together with a great Emulation, an inſtructive Parallel: But he found none whoſe Diſciple he could be [D], nor any one to keep up with him in that Career. So that it may be ſaid, he ſtudied only under himſelf [E]. One of the things he ſtudied with the greateſt Application, was the Greek Tongue, and he begun it when he had a mind to give public Marks of the Progreſs he had made in Learning: For the firſt Work he publiſhed, is a Tranſlation of ſome Treatiſes of Plutarch. He afterwards publiſhed his Notes on the Pandects [F], and then his Treatiſe de Aſſe, &c. The Glory of being the firſt who cleared the nice Matter concerning the Coins and Meaſures of the Ancients, had been conteſted with him [G], but he ſhewed that they ſhould not eaſily wreſt that Crown from him. How great ſoever

[C] He applied himſelf ſo cloſely to ſtudy - - - - that he was told that he would impair his Health] Some very ingenious Perſons pretend that the Event ſhewed the Vanity of thoſe Threats, and that he preſerved his Health entire (4). But others ſay, that he fell into a long and tedious Sickneſs, and that a Head-ach, which returned every Day, obliged the Phyſicians to order him a kind of Trepanning (5). The Operation was very painful, but very unſucceſsful. 'In gravem & diuturnum morbum eſt prolapſus, quo annos plus viginti ita afflictatus eſt, ut omnis prope hilaritas è fronte, alacritas ex animo, feſtivitas in occurſu, urbanitas & comitas in convictu eximeretur, ingraveſcens quoque indies literarum amor infringeretur, ne veſtigium quidem ejus nec ſimulachrum, ſed quædam effigies ſpirantis mortui appareret (6). - - - - - He fell into a grievous and lingring Diſtemper, with which he was afflicted for above twenty Years; ſo that he loſt all his Chearfulneſs of Countenance, Alacrity of Mind, Pleaſantneſs in Addreſs, Civility and Mildneſs in Converſation, and even his growing Love of Learning was quite overcome; ſo that there remained not the leaſt Sign or Likeneſs of the Man, but a kind of Effigy of a breathing dead Man.' It is no wonder that ſuch long and ſtubborn Indiſpoſitions ſhould make him chagrin, and produce ſo many Alterations in his Body and Mind.

(4) See Enfans celebres par leurs études, Article LXXXVIII, Paragraph 10.

(5) Lud. Regius in vita Budæi, pag. 50, 52.

(6) Id. Ibid.

[D] He found no Body whoſe Diſciple he could be.] Some Limitation muſt be given to theſe general Terms; for it is certain that George Hermonymus, a Native of Lacedæmon, John Laſcaris, and James Faber of Etaples, had taught our William ſomething. As ſoon as he heard that Hermonymus was arrived at Paris, he ſecured him to himſelf by a great Salary: 'Quem Budæus nactus magna mercede conductum ad ſe accerſivit, & antequam dimitteret amplius quingentis nummis aureis donavit (7). - - - - - Whom when Budæus found, he agreed with him for a large Salary, and took him to his Houſe, and before he diſcharged him gave him above Five hundred Pieces of Gold.' Hermonymus read Homer, and other principal Authors to him; but as he did not underſtand them himſelf, ſo he was not able to explain them. 'Huic Græco cum aliquot annos operam dediſſet, & eo prælegente audiviſſet Homerum authoreſque alios inſignes, nihilo doctior eſt factus. Neque enim præceptor ille plura docere quam ſciret poterat (8). - - - - When he had ſtudied ſome Years under this Greek, and had heard him read Homer, and other noted Authors, he was not a whit the better; for the Maſter could not teach him more than he knew.' John Laſcaris came to Paris, a little after. He conceived a great Eſteem for Budæus, ſeeing him inclined to the Greek Tongue; but he gave him only twenty Leſſons in all (9). James Faber taught him the Mathematics; but the Scholar apprehended with ſo much Eaſe all that the Maſter propoſed, that he quickly drained him of all his Knowledge. The latter, though he was largely paid for his Leſſons, was ſooner weary of teaching, than the other of being taught. 'Mathematicas diſciplinas a Jacobo Fabro nobili Philoſopho didicit: ad quas tantum ingenii & alacritatis initio attulit, ut evolare non excurrere videretur. Itaque dum Faber multa proponit, Budæus omnia aſſequitur, eò res venit, ut prius ille docendo defatigaretur, etſi magnam mercedem accipiebat, quam hic diſcendo. Neminem prætera audivit (10).

(7) Ibid. pag. 38.

(8) Ibid.

(9) Ibid. pag. 39. See alſo Budæus's Letter to Tonſtal; it is the 30*th of the* 2*d Book of thoſe of* Eraſmus, pag. 155.

(10) Lud. Reg. in Vita Budæi, pag. 39.

[E] It may be ſaid, that he ſtudied only under himſelf.] He repreſented the two notable Circumſtances of his Studies in Greek Words; the one that he begun them late; the other, that he had no Maſters; I ſay he repreſented them, by the Terms of αὐτομαθὴς τὰ καὶ ὀψιμαθὴς, in a Letter he wrote to Eraſmus, which was ſhewed to Cuthbert Tonſtal (11). He afterwards wrote a Letter to the latter, wherein he made him a pretty long Deſcription of his manner of ſtudying. He owns, that after his Return from the Univerſity of Orleans, he paſſed ſome Years in doing nothing, but what young Folks do who know nothing. 'Domum reverſus ſalutem dixi literis, ſtudiis utique indulgens juventutis illiteratæ, quoad poſt aliquot annos intra paternos parietes clàm ſtudere mecum ipſe inſtitui (12).' He ſays in another place, that beſides thoſe two Things, there was a third which obliged him to apply himſelf extraordinarily to ſtudy; to wit, that he had not much Penetration. 'Omnia majorem in modum facere atque etiam maximum mihi neceſſe erat homini nec ingenio felici prædito, & qui in adoleſcentiæ clauſula non dico diſcipulus, ſed tantum tyrunculus hujus ſtudii eſſe cœpiſſem, & vero gentilis illius Ariſtippi qui Metrodidactus adpellatus eſt: denique qui à memet ipſo omnia mutuarer, ſi quidem nullus erat unde rogare poſſem (13). - - - - I was obliged to labour the harder in every thing, even very hard, not being a Man of a happy Genius; and becoming, I will not ſay a Scholar, but a Beginner in thoſe kind of Studies, not 'till my Youth was almoſt ſpent, and alſo a-kin to Ariſtippus, who was called Metrodidactus; and in ſhort took every thing from myſelf, having no body to enquire of.'

(11) It is the 11*th of the* 1*ſt Book, pag.* 32.

(12) Epiſt. XXX. lib. II. Eraſmi, pag. 155.

(13) Budæus de Philologia, lib. I, Operum Tom. I, pag. 35.

[F] He publiſhed Notes on the Pandects.] That is to ſay, on the Twenty four firſt Books of the Pandects. The Epiſtle dedicatory to the Chancellor of France, Joannes Deganaius, John de Ganay, is dated at Paris, the fourth of November 1508. Badius publiſhed an Edition in 1530, corrected and augmented; he had printed the Sequel of that Work in the Year 1528.

[G] The Glory of being the firſt who cleared - - - - - the Coins and Meaſures of the Ancients was conteſted with him.] An Italian, called Leonardus Portius, pretended to have the only rightful Title to that Glory; as ſoon as Budæus heard of it, he was down-right angry, and declared, he was indebted to no living Perſon for what he had publiſhed on that matter, and that Portius had pirated him. 'Quod cum eſt ad Budæum allatum, graviter exarſit, quod nihil tam præter opinionem accidiſſet, quam ut depelleretur de ejus laudis poſſeſſione, quam caducam & vacuam primus bona fide occupaſſet, & ſine cujuſquam injuria quaſi uſucepiſſet. Igitur vehementiſſima animi, ingenii, virium, contentione jus ſuum defendit, atque hoc ipſum palam teſtatus eſt, à nullo ſe unquam homine duntaxat qui viveret, his de rebus quas tradidiſſet, quicquam didiciſſe vel fando vel legendo: tantumque abeſſe ne quid à Portio acceperit, ut omnia quæ ſub nomine Portii ad eam prodierant, illa uno eodem continuato perpetuoque soever the Services are that he did the Republic of Letters by his Writings, we may affirm that it is not on that account that it is most obliged to him. He behaved himself in such a manner, that his great Learning did not render him odious to the Inquisitors; so that his Reputation remaining sound and entire, was a powerful Protection to Literature, which many endeavoured to stifle in the Birth, as the Mother and Nurse of Opinions which did not please the Court of Rome [H]. He was

' perpetuoque furto essent ex suo Asse translata. Ac
' æmulo illi sempiternam notam ac ignominiam
' inussisset, nisi intercessissent amici (14). —— When
' Budæus heard this he was extreamly angry, for
' nothing could have happened more contrary to his
' Expectation, than that this Honour should be taken
' from him, which he fairly took Possession of when
' it was decayed, and belonged to no body, and had
' obtained as it were by Prescription without Injury
' to any body. And therefore he defended his Right
' with exceeding Warmth and Vigour, and publickly
' declared, that he had not learnt from any Man liv-
' ing, either by Discourse or Reading, any thing at
' all relating to what he had writ, and that he was
' so far from taking any thing from Portius, that
' all that had been printed under the Name of Por-
' tius, on that Subject, was one entire and absolute
' Transcript from his Book de Asse. And he would ' have branded his Rival with a Mark of perpetual
' Infamy, if Friends had not interposed.' John Las- caris, who was a Friend to both, hindered that Quarrel from going any further, and, by dint of Intreaty, obtained that Budæus should not insert in the second Edition the sharp Discourse that he had made against Portius. The Author confessed, when the Heat of his Anger was over, that he had been too passionate; and this made him resolve never to be moved more by the Attacks which might be made on him. He let People say what they pleased, and peaceably suffered Agricola to assume what share he pleased in that Honour (15).

(14) Lud Regius in vitâ Budæi, pag. 61.

(15) Ibid. pag. 64.

At the time that he writ his Book of The Institution of a Prince, he had only received some Applause for his Work de Asse. He gloried in it, but without exceeding the Bounds of Modesty. As he expressed himself in a manner that may serve for a Pattern to other great Persons, I shall make no difficulty to recite his own Words, though his Stile is somewhat harsh. ' A vostre tresdesiré & ' tresheureux advenement à la trosnoble Coronne de ' FRANCE, (he addresses himself to Francis I.) ' qui fut le jour des Calendes de Janvier. —— Je ' parachevay & mis en avant & evidence, le livre des ' poix & mesures, nombres, monoyes, & toute la ' maniere de compter des anciens tant Grecs, que ' Latins, auquel j'ay monstré & estimé les richesses ' des grands Royaulmes, Principaultés, Domina-' tions, & Empires, dont les Histoires font mention. ' Et le tout reduict à la monoye de present. Et ' en ce faisant, ay esclarcy & interpreté grand nom-' bre de lieux & passaiges, sans rien obmettre à mon ' pouvoir & sçavoir tant ès histoires, que ès aultres ' Autheurs Grecs & Latins. Lesquelz au paravant ' estoient mal entenduz, combien que plusieurs gens ' sçavants s'en feussent mis en effect: & pense qu'il ' me sera permis, d'en dire ce petit mot, sans aul-' cune arrogance, puis que aulcuns plus sçavants que ' moy estrangers, & aultres le confessent, ainsy que ' aulcuns de leurs Livres le tesmoignent, qui par ' elux ont esté depuis publiés par impression. Et en ' cela seulement je me vouldroye maintenir avoir ' mieulx faict, ou par adventure mieulx remonstré ' en cest endroict, que les autres. Car j'ay esté tout ' seul opinant de ceste matiere contre tous ceulx, ' qui paravant moy ont escript, & mesmes depuis ' cent ans, ou au moins tout aulrement qu'ilz n'ont ' faict. Qui a esté la cause & le moyen du grand ' labeur, & du temps de quinze moys que j'ai occu-' pé à entendre & escripre ceste matiere, & la me-' ner jusques à resolution finale, & conclusion du ' Livre (16). —— Nul ne s'est encore depuis appa-' ru, qui en ce m'ayt ouvertement contredict. ' Mais y en a (comme dict est) qui l'ont expresse-' ment approué: combien que au reste des choses ' concernentes le faict des bonnes lettres, je me ' repute moindre que les aultres, ainsy que la rai-' son le veult, & ma congnoissance le juge: Et ' mesmement que ceulx mesmes, contre lesquelz ' j'ay esté d'opinion contraire en ceste matiere. Car ' je confesse avoir beaucoup apprins d'eulx en aul-' tres choses, comme de gens de souveraine science ' & industrie. Dont la plus part sont allés de vie, ' à trespas. Mais un homme moyen en intelli-' gence de sçavoir, & moindre que mediocre, com-' me je suis, peult bien surmonter un grand & ' excellent homme en une intention, en laquelle ' il s'est fort addonné, jaçoit ce que en aultres ' choses il ne soit egal à luy (17). - - - - At the ' time of your most desired and happy Accession to ' the most noble Crown of FRANCE (he addres' ses himself to Francis I) which was on the first of
' January. - - - - I finished and published my Book
' on Weights, Measures, Numbers, Coins, and the
' several ways of accounting among the Ancients,
' both Greeks and Latins, in which I have shewn,
' and made an Estimate of, the Riches of the great
' Kingdoms, Principalities, Dominions, and Empires,
' mentioned by Historians, and reduced the whole to
' the Money of the present Time. In the Course of ' the Work I have cleared up and interpreted a great
' many Places and Passages, omitting nothing in my ' Power, either in the Historians, or the other Greek
' and Latin Authors; which before were not well
' understood, though several learned Men had at- ' tempted them; and I believe I shall be allowed to
' say thus much without Arrogance, since both Foreig-
' ners and others, more learned than myself, own it,
' as some of their Books since printed testify. And
' it is in this only that I would insist that I have ' done better, or given clearer Explications in this ' particular, than others. For I was single in my ' Opinion of this Matter, contrary to, or, at least,
' widely differing from all who had writ before me,
' even for a hundred Years. For which reason, it
' has cost me a great deal of Labour, and fifteen
' Months time to understand and write these matters,
' and bring the Work to a Conclusion. - - - - No-
' body has hitherto appeared since, who has openly
' contradicted me; but there are some (as has been
' said) who have expressly given their Approbation
' of it. Notwithstanding, in other things relating to ' Literature, I think myself inferior to many others,
' as in reason I ought, and my own Understanding
' tells me I am, even than some whose Opinions I
' have contradicted in this Matter. For I confess I ' have learned a great deal from them in other
' things, as being Men of superior Learning and ' Industry. The greatest part of them are dead and ' gone. But a Man of moderate Understanding and
' Learning, as I am, and less than ordinary, may
' easily surmount great and excellent Men in a Design
' to which he has applied himself very much, though
' in other respects he be in no wise equal to them.'

(17) Id ibid. pag. 287.

(16) Budæus of The Institution of a Prince, chap. 45. pag. 286.

[H] His Reputation was a powerful Protection to Literature, which many endeavoured to stifle in the Birth, as the Mother and Nurse of Opinions, which did not please the Court of Rome.] It is better, for some Reasons, to explain this in Louis le Roi's Words than my own. ' Cum in maximis, says he (18), ' opinionum procellis & turbulentissimis tempesta-' tibus ingens Græcæ linguæ conflata esset invidia, ' quod harum stirps, & semen malorum omnium ' videretur, cum odii faces undique ab improbis ' præferrentur, cum in perturbatione veteris disci-' plinæ spem haberent inimici ad elegantiam lite-' rarum non dignitatem modo extinguendam (19), ' sed etiam gloriam per principes viros infringen-' dam, cum in his asperitatibus rerum eruditi ple-' rique de religione suspecti haberentur, nec satis ' esset inter impertitorum greges tuti: hic suis ' non modò integra mente, verùm etiam existima-' tione permansit. Nihil in ejus vita aut in oratione ' quisquam potuit invenire, quod jure reprehen-' deret. Quod labenti rei literariæ certissimum ' præsidium attulit. Nisi enim is contigisset orbæ ' politiori doctrinæ quasi legitimus tutor, qui erat ' apud Principem, in senatu, in concionibus exa-' gitatam tueretur, ac tantisper dum invidia consi-' deret,

(18) Lud Regius in Vitæ Budæi, pag. 83.

(19) Compare with this Erasmus's Letter, cited above in the Remark [I] of the Article BORE (CATHERINE DE).

was mightily admired by the Court of France [I], as soon as his Learning was known; but he forbore going to Court as much as possible, till he discovered Francis the First's Inclination for Learning. It was when the Court was at Ardres, at the time of the Interview between that Prince and the King of England, that Francis I ordered our William Budæus first to attend him [K]. From that time forward

'deret, domi septam teneret liberali custodia, atque à sceleratorum hominum impetu prohiberet, haud dubiè nostris finibus coacta esset excedere. '—— *In the greatest Storms, and turbulent Tempests of Opinions, when the Greek Tongue was extremely ill thought of, as seeming to be the Source and Fountain of all these Evils; when wicked Men every where studied to throw an Odium on it; when the Enemies of ancient Learning had hopes in the Confusion, not only to extinguish the Elegance and Dignity of Literature, but also to destroy it's Reputation by help of great Men, and in that uneasy State of Affairs, many learned Men were suspected of Heresy, and were scarce safe among the ignorant Multitude: He alone stood untainted either in Mind or Reputation. No Man could find any thing blame worthy in his Life or Discourse, which proved a powerful Protection to the falling State of Literature. For had not he appeared as a lawful Guardian of abandoned polite Literature, to defend it with the King, in the Senate, and public Assemblies, and generously taken it home and kept it a while there, under cover, from malicious Men till Envy, was quieted, it would certainly have been driven out of our Country.'

[I] He was much admired by the Court of France.] He was known there before the Death of Charles VIII. That Prince, having heard that Budæus was a very learned Man, was desirous to see him, and ordered him to come to Court; but did not live long enough to advance him. He informs us of this himself. 'A Carolo ego commodum in aulam 'accersitus fueram, cum ille repentino casu subtrahor 'est: exierat jam rumusculus quidam studiorum 'meorum qui ad eum permanaverat nihil minus 'me agente (30). —— I had been called to Court by King Charles, when he was suddenly taken off: Some Report had been spread of my Learning, which reached his Ears, while I thought nothing at all of it.' Guy of Rochefort, Chancellor of France, procured that Honour for our Budæus, as is observed in the eighty ninth Page of his Life. Lewis XII, Successor of Charles VIII, employed Budæus twice on Embassies into Italy, and afterwards made him one of his Secretaries. 'De 'maximis rebus legatum in Italiam misit cum ali-'quot proceribus suis: quibus in legationibus sic fi-'dem suam, diligentiam, ingenium regi probavit, 'ut magnam gratiam ab eo ipso iniret, ac paulo 'mox in scribarum regiorum numerum adscribe-'retur (31). —— He sent him, with some of the Nobility, Embassador into Italy on very important Affairs; in which Embassies he gave the King such proofs of his Fidelity, Diligence, and Ability, that he was taken into great Favour, and was soon after made one of the King's Secretaries.' He would have been made Counsellor in the Parliament of Paris, 'had he not chose to husband his 'time for his Studies, rather than engage in an Office 'that would have occasioned too great a Diversion.

[K] It was when the Court was at Ardres, —— that Francis I ordered him to attend him the first time.] I do not think myself in the wrong, in generally following this Rule, That an Author who, writes the Life of a Man, is more to be relied on, than they who only mention him occasionally. Yet this does not hinder me from believing, that, in certain Cases, we ought to prefer what we read in other Books, before that which we find in a written Life: I give an Example of it in this Remark. Lewis le Roi does not only not say, that Francis I sent William Budæus to Rome to negotiate with Pope Leo X, but expressly remarks that Budæus was not sent for to the Court of Francis I, before that Prince was at Ardres to confer with the King of England: 'PRIMUM evocatus Ar-'dem, quem in locum rex quoque Britannorum 'Henricus convenerat, cum tanti conventus splen-'dore excitatus, tum admirabili fama incredibilium 'virtutum sui principis incensus, sanè quam libenter 'regis imperio obtemperavit, atque eò magis quod 'virtutis, & literarum ergo se intelligebat accersiri (22). —— He was first called by the King to Ardres, whither Henry, King of Great Britain, was also come to a Conference; excited by the Splendor of so great an Appearance, and animated with the extraordinary Fame of the incredible Virtue of his Prince, he very gladly obeyed, and the rather because he understood that he was sent for on Account of his Virtue and Learning.' The Interview of Ardres happened in the Year 1520. It would therefore be false, according to Lewis le Roi, that our William negotiated for Francis I, with Leo X, in the Year 1515. Yet I dare not dispute the Embassy which Mr Varillas mentions under the Year 1515. 'Budæus was not unskillful in Negotiations, although he had lived at Paris without any other Conversation but that of his Books. The Academy of Rome, which had never been so polite since the Age of Augustus, as it was at that time, gave him an extraordinary Reception, and he quickly acquired the Familiarity of the Pope, because he excelled chiefly in the Knowledge of the Greek Antiquities, which the Pope himself pretended to (23).' The same Author adds, that the Objections, which the Pope made, supplied Budæus with a Field large enough to shew his profound Learning, and that the Pope who desired nothing more than to prolong the Negotiation, and conclude nothing, took care not to interrupt him, or make him perceive the Digressions in which he engaged himself insensibly. 'But on the contrary, his Holiness created from time to time new Occasions for them.' Add to this, what he says in his Preface; 'Budæus's Example serves admirably to shew that a Person is not the more fit to negotiate nice Affairs, because he is one of the most learned of his Age: And I ought to receive Thanks for having remarked this, if it were only for the Rarity of the Matter:" But how could Mr Varillas say, That Budæus had lived in Paris without any other Conversation than that of his Books, if the two Embassies under Lewis XII be true? Does not he make it plainly appear, that he was not only ignorant of what Lewis le Roi said, but also of what Budæus insinuates? Budæus represents to Cuthbert Tonstal, how he had managed himself in his Studies; he owns he had seen divers learned Persons in Italy, and adds that he had no leisure to be acquainted with them, because he was charged with public Affairs. 'Interim bis Romam adii urbesque insignes 'Italiæ, doctos ubi homines per transennam vidi 'potius quam audivi, & literarum meliorum Pro-'fessores tanquam à limine salutavi, quantum scilicet 'homini licuit Italiam raptim peragranti nec libera 'legatione (24). - - - In the mean time I went twice to Rome, and the most noted Cities of Italy, where I had a slight Glance of the learned Men rather than heard them, paid my Respects to the Professors of Literature at their Doors, as it were, as much as a Man could do, who passed through Italy in a hurry, and confined by an Embassy.' Lastly, I observe, that he was become a Courtier of Francis the First's Court, before that Prince's Interview with Henry VIII. This appears from a Letter of Erasmus, dated in February 1519 (25), wherein he writes to Budæus: 'Quomodo tibi successerit 'expeditio quemadmodum vocas aulica, partim ex 'tuis ad Ludovicum Vivem literis intellexi. - - - 'How your Court Expedition, as you call it, succeeded, I partly learn from your Letter to Ludovicus Vives.' It appears yet more plainly from a Letter of Budæus, wherein he speaks of a Journey he was to take with Stephen Poncher, newly promoted to the Archbishopric of Sens. 'Episcopus Parisiensis jam Senonensis Archiepiscopus factus 'est liberalitate regia, etsi nondum res peracta est. 'Totus jam est mihi, nec nobis licet cum eo loqui.

'Quodam

(30) Budæus de Philologia, lib. 1.

(31) Lud. Regius in Vita Budæi, pag. 88.

(22) Ibid. pag. 90.

(23) Varillas, Histoire de François I, lib. 1, pag. 32. He cites in the Margin, In the Negotiation of Budæus, Master of Requests, and Library-Keeper to the King, with Leo X, in 1515. Sammarthanus in his Elogies, pag. 6, speaks thus. Vir tanta animi contentione bluis operatus à civilibus interim negotiis & Reipubl. curam non abfuit. Nam & à Francisco primo in aulam sæpe accersitus & Romam de belli societate cum Leone summo Pontifice adversus Cæsarem & Helvetios contrahenda unà cum aliquot regni proceribus ab eodem principe legatus est. He says nothing of Embassies under Lewis XII.

(24) Epistol. Erasmi xxx, lib. ii, pag. 556.

(25) The 70th of the 3d Book, pag. 262.

forward he took pleaſure in hearing him diſcourſe; he committed his Library to him, and gave him a Place of Maſter of Requeſts. At the ſame time the Town-Houſe of the City of Paris, elected him Provoſt of the Merchants. He was one of the chief Promoters of the Deſign, which Francis I. afterwards executed, of founding Profeſſorſhips at Paris for the Languages and Sciences. He had a Difference with Anthony du Prat, Chancellor of France, which was the reaſon why he appeared no oftener at Court than his Place required; but the time came when he was ſeldom any where elſe; for his good Friend Poyet was promoted to the Office of Chancellor, and would have Budæus almoſt conſtantly with him. The exceſſive heats of the Year 1540 obliged Francis I. to make a Progreſs to the Coaſts of Normandy, in hopes of finding a cooler Air. Budæus went that Progreſs, and fell into a Fever, which made him earneſtly wiſh himſelf at home: He had his Wiſh, but did not recover; he only had the Satisfaction of dying amidſt his own Family, which was numerous (a) [L]. The Date of his Death has been falſified by ſeveral Writers [M], which is very ſtrange, conſidering the Glory that diſtinguiſhed his Reputation. The manner, in which he deſired to be buried, produced ſome Suſpicions about his Religion [N], which were much increaſed by (a) Taken from his Life, compoſed by Lewis le Roi.

' Quodam tamen die, cum in interiori cubiculo ' Principis eſſet, dixit mihi ſe ad te ſcribere ſta- ' tuiſſe. Iturus eſt propediem in legationem Nar- ' bonem verſus cum aulicorum diſpenſatorum de- ' curione: cum quo etiam ire me Rex juſſit, ut ' numerus ſim potius quam ut aliquam operam ' certam navem in ea provincia: ſic enim inter- ' pretor (26). ---- The Biſhop of Paris is now by ' the King's Bounty made Archbiſhop of Sens, though ' the Buſineſs is not quite finiſhed. He is now ' wholly taken up with the Court, and I cannot ' ſpeak with him. But one Day, in the King's ' Bed-chamber, he told me he deſigned to write to ' you. He will go ſhortly on an Embaſſy to Nar- ' bonne with one of the Crown Officers: the King ' has alſo ordered me to go with him, to fill up the ' Number, rather than to do any particular Buſi- ' neſs, for ſo I underſtand it.' He does not note the Year in the Date of that Letter; but it is plain, he wrote it while the Court was in a Ferment on Occaſion of the Death of the Emperor Maximilian. That Emperor died the twelfth of January, 1519.

(26) Epiſt. Eraſmi lix, lib. iii, pag. 245.

[L] His Family ---- was numerous.] He left ſeven Sons and four Daughters; there is nothing more ſaid of them in his Hiſtory: but I have read in other Books, that, becauſe he had a great Number of Sons and Grandſons, he deſired he might be buried by Night, foreſeeing, that if they buried him by Day, there would have been too much crying of little Children, and of thoſe of his Family. The Author, who informs me of this, notes that Budæus's Wife was ſo far from hindring her Huſband from ſtudying, that ſhe ſerved him for a Helpmate as well in the Cloſet as in the Bed, and looked out the Paſſages and the neceſſary Books for him. I do not tranſlate literally, as will ſoon be perceived, but I think I do not deviate from my Author's Thought. ' Nec Budæum à literis uxor avo- ' cavit, ſed magis in iis confirmavit, quam ſibi in ' Muſarum ſacrario ſemper aſſidentem, & aliquid li- ' brorum in manibus habentem, non tantum vitæ, ' ſed ſtudiorum quoque ſociam & commiſtionem no- ' minabat: nec eundem magnus liberorum nepo- ' tumque numerus in ſtudiis interpellavit, qui qui- ' dem dicitur fuiſſe tantus, ut antequam morere- ' tur, noctu ſuum funus efferri, tumularique man- ' daret, ut aliquo modo compeſceret fletum eju- ' latumque puerorum, quem futurum non obſcure providebat (27). —— Nor did Budæus*'s Wife di-* ' vert him from Literature, but rather confirmed ' him in it; as ſhe was extreamly fitting by him ' in his Study, with ſome Book or other in her ' Hand, he called her his Companion, and Fellow- ' Soldier, not only in Life but in Study: nor did ' the great Number of his Children and Grand Chil- ' dren interrupt him in his Studies, though they are ' ſaid to have been ſo many, that, before he died, he ' ordered that his Corps ſhould be buried privately in ' the Night, to prevent, in ſome Meaſure, the weep- ' ing and crying of Children, which he foreſaw there ' would be.' I have read one of Budæus's Letters (28), wherein he only ſays, that the Careſſes of his Wife were not able to divorce him from his Books: He does not ſay, that he found in her a Help as to his Studies. He repreſents himſelf as married to two Wives; one, who brought him Sons and Daughters, the other Philology, which produced him Books. He had been married twelve Years when he writ that Letter, and he had had ſix Sons and one Daughter (29) by that time. Philology was not ſo fruitful; Budæus had produced fewer Books than Children. He had laboured more with the Body than the Soul, but he hoped that at the long-run he ſhould leave more Books than Children. He ſaid the Fertility of the Soul ſhould have it's turn, it will raiſe itſelf on the Ruins of that of the Body: The prolific Virtue is not given all at once to the natural Organs, and to the Pen. ' Sic enim ſtatue- ' bam mihi eſſe faciendum, ut conjugem quidem ' legitimam haberem liberorum parentem, ex Philo- ' logia autem libros, id eſt, nominis mei æternam ' memoriam, prolemque immortalem gignerem. ' Liberos jam plures aliquanto quam libros genui, ' plus corpori fortaſſe quam animo indulgens. Poſt- ' hæc (ut ſpero) marceſcente corpore, animus in- ' dies vegetior & vividior fiet, utrumque autem ſi- ' mul ex æquo prolificum eſſe nequit, ſed cum ' emeritæ facultates corporis eſſe cœperint, tum de- ' mum viribus animi ſtipendia plenè procedent (30). ' —— For I had come to this Reſolution in myſelf, ' that I would take a lawful Wife by whom I might ' have Children, and of Philology beget Books, that ' is, an eternal Memorial of my Name, and an im- ' mortal Offspring. Now I have got more Children ' than I have brought forth Books, perhaps becauſe I ' indulge my Body more than my Mind. Hereafter ' (I hope) as my Body declines, my Mind will grow ' ſtronger and more lively; both cannot be alike proli- ' fic at once; but when the Faculties of the Body be- ' gin to wear out, then the Powers of the Mind come ' to their full Strength.' We ſhall ſpeak below (31) of the Change of Religion of that Family.

(29) Morery is therefore miſtaken, when he ſays Budæus had four Sons, and two Daughters.

(30) Epiſt. xxx, Eraſmi, lib. ii, pag. 250.

(31) In the Remark [O].

[M] The Date of his Death has been falſified by ſeveral Writers.] La Croix du Maine makes him die the Twenty fifth of Auguſt, 1540; Spondanus the twentieth of Auguſt (32); and Peter de St Romuald the third of Auguſt the ſame Year (33); Father Caraſſe in 1539 (34); Mr de Launoi the firſt of September 1573 (35). The Truth is, that he died the Twenty third of Auguſt, 1540. He who thought to correct Reuſnerus by Mr de Launoi is deceived: ' Launoius ----- dicit Budæum obiiſſe ' A. 1573. Calend. Septembr. ut falli neceſſe ſit ' Nicolaum Reuſnerum qui in Iconibus ejus obitum ' refert ad A. 1540 (36). ---- Launoi ----- ' ſays, that Budæus died in the Year 1573, on the ' firſt of September; therefore Nicolas Reuſnerus ' muſt be miſtaken, who in his Icones places his Death ' in the Year 1540.'

(32) Spondan. ad Ann. 1540, n. 30.

(33) Pet. de St Rom. Journal Chronolog. Tom. II, pag. 137.

(34) Caraſſe Doctrine Curieuſe, pag. 920.

(35) Laun. Hiſt. Gymn. Navarræ, pag. 882.

(36) John Albertus Fabor Decade Decad. fol. v, verſo.

[N] The Manner, in which he deſired to be buried, produced ſome Suſpicions about his Religion.] He declared by his Will a Year before he died, that he would be buried without any Ceremonies. Theſe are his Words: ' I deſire to be carried to the ' Grave by Night, and without Invitation, only ' with one Torch, or two at moſt, nor will I have ' it proclaimed in the Church, or in the City, that ' I am to be buried this or that Day. For I never ' approved mournful Ceremonies and funeral Pomps.

(37) Anonymus in diſſertatione de literati matrimonio, pag. 367. It is printed with Baudii Amores.

(28) It is the 206th of the 2d Book, among thoſe of Eraſmus.

by his Widow's making open Profeſſion of the Proteſtant Religion at Geneva, with ſome of her Children [O]. It is nevertheleſs certain, that in his Writings he ſeems very

' . . . . . I forbid any to be made for me, as ' well for this, as for other things that cannot be ' done without Scandal': Nor will I have any Fu- ' neral Ceremony, or other Repreſentation, about the ' Place where I ſhall be buried, for the Year after ' my Deceaſe, becauſe they ſeem to me Imitations ' of the Cenotaphs, which the Gentiles anciently ' made uſe of (37).' A Jeſuit, who was in other reſpects eaſily provoked, and ſoon ſtartled at the leaſt Innovations, condemned thoſe who did not put a good Conſtruction upon this Conduct. He will have it, that this learned Man acted thus from a Principle of Humility only, and by an Effect of that ſtudious Humour, which had made him live ſo much in private. He ſays (38), 'That good Soul having ' lived among the Dead, that he might live for ' ever among the Living, and having entirely ſepa- ' rated himſelf from all Company, to addict him- ' ſelf to Solitude in his Life-time, retains the ſame ' Humour at his Death: for he ordered by his laſt ' Will, that his Body ſhould be carried by Night, ' without Flambeaux, or Funeral Pomp, from Sainte ' Avoye Street, where he died, to the Celeſtines (39), ' which is a pretty long way: and would be buried ' without Ceremony, without Attendance, and ' without Invitation, or ringing of Bells. It is true, ' that this Novelty gave occaſion to different Diſ- ' courſes, the Preachers of thoſe Times taking the ' matter in the worſt ſenſe, becauſe of the Times ' which began to ſmell of the Faggot, and were al- ' ready imbued with certain ſuſpicious Opinions; ' for it was in the Year M.D.XXXIX (40), when ' Luther had ſet almoſt all Germany on Fire: but ' Budæus's former Life, the Integrity and Innocency ' of his Manners, the public Opinion, and his he- ' roic Actions at Venice and Paris, for the Honour ' of Religion, and the Advancement of Learning, ' were faithful Witneſſes of the contrary; inſomuch, ' that the wiſeſt remained edified by his Humility, ' whereas others were offended at the Novelty: and ' indeed it is true, that Budæus might do what he ' did from a Sentiment of Humility, as we have ' ſeen divers Saints do, who have deſired that their ' Bodies ſhould be denied Chriſtian Burial, or buri- ' ed without Honour.' A little after, he continues thus: ' Melin, of Saint Gelais, knowing that Bu- ' dæus's Intention was good, and agreeable to his ' Humour, which had been always ſolitary, and ' an Enemy to the hurry of Company, wrote an ' excellent Epigram in Honour of the deceaſed, ' whereby he made it appear, that Budæus, in hum- ' bling himſelf, had acquired more Glory than others ' do by the moſt pompous Obſequies.' For he ſaid,

Qui eſt celui que tout le monde ſuit?
Las! c'eſt Budé au cercueil étendu.
Pourquoi n'ont faict les cloches plus grand bruit?
Son nom ſans cloche eſt aſſez eſpandu.
Que n'at-on plus en torches deſpendu,
Suivant la mode accouſtumée & ſaincte?
Afin qu'il fuſt par l'obſcur entendu,
Que des François la lumiere eſt eſteinte.

Who's this that ev'ry one attends on here?
Alas! it is Budæus on the Bier.
Why toll not then the Bells? His Name around
Is ſpread, ſufficiently, without their Sound.
But why have no more Torches been procur'd?
To ſhew the Light of France is now obſcur'd.

The Prior Ogier was not ſo indulgent as Garaſſe: he blames him for having defended the Conduct of Budæus. It may be, he would have blamed his criticiſing him, if Garaſſe had done what one of his own Fraternity did, in ſpeaking of the Chancellor de l'Hopital (41): for they, who turn Critics, commonly eſpouſe the oppoſite Part. Let us ſee the Words of the Cenſurer of the Doctrine Curieuſe: ' Pag. 919, He endeavours to juſtify William Bu- ' dæus againſt the Accuſations of the Doctors and ' Preachers of his Time, who had conceived ſome ' Suſpicions of him after his Death, becauſe of the ' Novelty of his Funeral. They had certainly ſome ' Ground to make a ſiniſter Judgment of him. For, ' beſides the bad Impreſſions which the Novelty of ' his Funeral made, at a time when all our Forces ' ought to have been bent againſt the growing He- ' reſy, and nothing relaxed of the ordinary Ceremo- ' nies of the Church; he was of the Opinion of ' that good Grammarian, of whom Garaſſe ſpeaks ' in the ſeventh Section of the third Book, who ' thought that diſputing on any material Queſtions of ' Divinity, was ſo much time ill employed. See ' how he ſpeaks in one of his Epiſtles to Eraſmus. ' Reddiderat epiſtolam juvenis, is quem mihi com- ' mendaſti, Sorbonæ nunc agentem, Μαλλον δὲ ἐν ' σορβωνικῇ λίμνῃ διαλιβοτομία, ἵτω γάρ σι- ' κύτως ἀποκαλοίμεν τὴν τῶν σοφιστῶν διατρι- ' βήν. —— I had received your Letter from the ' young Man, that you recommended to me, who now ' ſtudies in the Sorbonne, or rather, is floundering in ' the Sorbonnic Mire; for ſo I may very juſtly call ' the Exerciſes of Sophiſts. If Garaſſe had known ' of this Paſſage (42), I believe he eſteemed the ' Sorbonne ſo much, that he would have ſent Budæ- ' us among the Buffoons of Rome, as merrily as he ' packs off that good Grammarian to the Country of ' the Drolls, among the merry Andrews of ' Athens (43).'

[O] His Widow made open Profeſſion of the Pro- teſtant Religion at Geneva, with ſome of her Chil- dren.] The Paſſage of Melanchthon's Letters, which I am going to cite, teſtifies, that the Example of that Woman was of great weight; becauſe it was believed, that her Husband's good Diſcourſes had much aſſiſted her to know the Truth. ' Venit huc ' quiſpiam ex Gallia nobilis vir ac doctus, qui nar- ' rat honeſtiſſimam matronam viduam Budæi, una ' cum filiabus, Lutetia migraſſe ad Calvini Eccleſi- ' am, ut ibi & vocem Evangelii audiat, & longius ' abſit à ſævitia quæ in regno Gallico adverſus Evan- ' gelii ſtudioſos exercetur. Hoc exemplo matronæ ' valde moveri multos homines in Gallia idem affir- ' mat; propterea quod mortui mariti ſui doctiſſimi ' & graviſſimi viri judicio exiſtimatur hanc doctri- ' nam ampleCti, de qua ipſum multa piè diſſeruiſſe ' ante mortem conſtat (44). — There is arrived here ' from France a noble and learned Man, who ſays, ' that the honourable Lady, the Widow of Budæus, ' with her Daughters, are come over from Paris to ' Calvin's Church, both that ſhe might hear the ' Word of the Goſpel, and be farther removed from ' the Cruelty exerciſed in the Kingdom of France, ' againſt the Profeſſors of the Evangelic Faith. He alſo ' affirms, that a great many Perſons in France are ' moved by this Lady's Example; becauſe ſhe is ſuppoſed ' to have embraced this Doctrine from the Judgment of ' her deceaſed Husband, who, it is certain, reaſoned, ' in many things, very pioufly before his Death.' In a Letter from Melanchthon to Camerarius, dated the eleventh of September 1549, at pag. 908, of the London Edition, are theſe Words: ' Hæc narratio ' ſi vera eſt, admirationem magnam res pariet. Budæi ' conjugem anum cum filiabus ſiunt migraſſe Gene- ' vam ad Calvini Eccleſiam, in quâ & alii multi nobiles ' homines in Gallia exulare dicuntur. —— If this Ac- ' count be true, it will be matter of Admiration. They ' ſay, that Budæus's Widow, and her Daughters, ' are gone over to Geneva to Calvin's Church, where ' they alſo ſay many other Noblemen of France ' are in Exile.' The Daughters of the great Budæus were not the only Perſons of the Family that retired to Geneva: LEWIS BUDÆUS, their Brother, went thither alſo, where he was Profeſſor of the Hebrew Tongue. He publiſhed a Latin Tranſlation of the Pſalms with Notes. See the Gallia Orientalis of Colomiés, Pag. fifteen and ſixteen. We have ſpoken before (45) of JOHN BUDÆUS (a), who was one of the three Deputies that were ſent into Germany about the Affairs of the Church. MATTHEW BUDÆUS, their Brother, is praiſed by Henry Stephens as a Man who underſtood the Hebrew Tongue thoroughly (46). The Poſterity of Budæus ſubſiſts ſtill in Geneva, and makes a conſiderable Figure there.

[(a) The

(37) See Mr de Launoi, Hiſt. Colleg. Navarr. pag. 881.

(38) Garaſſe, Doctrine Curieuſe, pag. 920.

(39) According to Lewis le Vasſeur, it was at St Nicholas in the Fields, that he was buried.

(40) He miſtakes; it was in 1540.

(41) Malmbourg. Hiſt. du Calviniſme, pag. 805, upon which ſee the Critique Generale, Lettre xvi, pag. 274, of the third Edit.

(42) Launoi, pag. 877, ſhows that this Paſſage makes nothing againſt Budæus's Catholiciſm.

(43) Ogier Jugement & Cenſure du livre de la Doctrine Curieuſe, pag. 190, 191.

(44) Melancht. Epiſt. pag. 585, Edit. Baſil 1565, apud Colomeſium in Gallia Orient. pag. 16.

(45) In the Remark [G], of the Article BEZA.

(46) Henr. Stephan. in præfat. Diccarchi apud Colomeſium in Gall. Orient. pag. 257.

very oppoſite to the Reformers [P], though he had ſometimes ſpoken very vehemently againſt the Court of Rome, and againſt the Corruptions of the Clergy (b). It is ſaid that he never would ſuffer his Picture to be drawn [Q], and that, going to make a Speech to Charles V, he was at a ſtand [R]. His Stile both in Latin and French was ſomewhat harſh [S]. His Father, as I have already ſaid, was of a conſiderable Family; and yet I have read that it was ennobled on account of our Budæus [T]. This Man, being nettled at ſomething that Eraſmus had done or ſaid, reſented it highly, and never would do him the Favour to quote him, but criticized him ſometimes without naming him [U]. Emulation between two Men of their Rank might eaſily degenerate into Hatred (c). They who have ſaid, that, notwithſtanding their Difference, Budæus brought it ſo about that Eraſmus was ſent for to Paris (d), know nothing of the Matter; for the Quarrel between them was not begun, when Budæus, acquitting himſelf of the Commiſſion that was given him to make Offers to Eraſmus, in the Name of Francis I, adviſed him to accept them (e). An Addition of all his Works were printed at Baſil, in the Year 1557, in four Volumes in Folio, with an ample Preface by Celius Secundus Curio.

(b) See in the 2ceth Book of The Catalogue of the Witneſſes of the Truth, pag. 1034, & ſeq. ſeveral Extracts of the Book de Aſſe. See alſo the Remark [D], of the Article JULIUS II.

(c) See the Remark [U], at the end.

(d) Du Verdier, Proſopogr. pag. 2404.

(e) Epiſt. Eraſmi xv. lib. 4.

No

[(a) The Citizen of Geneva, which calls him Lord of Verace *, obſerves, that he was Diſciple of Duaren; and this Book, printed in 1609, ſpeaks alſo of a Siſter of John Budæus, a Lady of eighty Years of Age, who was alive at that time; beſides one William Budæus, likewiſe Lord of Verace, and Grandſon of the great Budæus; for it is in that ſenſe, the Guilelmi nepos in Thuanus ‡ is to be underſtood, and not in that of Nephew, as Videl has taken it †. This William Budæus, I ſay, Lieutenant of the Gens d' Arms of Briquemaut, commanded the Scouts at the Battle of Pontcharra. REM. CRIT.]

* Pag. 43.

‡ Book cli.

† Hiſtoire du Conneſtable de Leſdiguieres. Book iv, chap. iv.

[P] In his Writings he appears very oppoſite to the Reformers.] See his Work entituled, De Tranſitu Hellenismi ad Chriſtianiſmum, and which he dedicated to Francis I, in the Year 1535, a little after Calvin had dedicated his Chriſtian Inſtitutions to that Monarch. Budæus recommends the ancient Faith to him, and praiſes him for the famous Proceſſion that was made to expiate the wicked Attempt of the Heretics (47); (this was the Language of thoſe Times.) Mr de Launoi cites this Paſſage (48), and adds another to it, which diſcovers our Budæus's Zeal againſt thoſe who were called Innovators.

(47) See the Hiſtory of Lutheraniſm, by Maimbourg, Tom. I, pag. 233, Edit. de Hollande.

(48) Hiſt. Gymnaſii Navarræ, pag. 878, & ſeq.

[Q] It is ſaid that he would never ſuffer his Picture to be drawn.] I can give you no other Proof of this, than theſe four Verſes:

Nec voluit vivus fingi pingive Budæus,
Nec vatum moriens quæſiit elogia.
Hunc qui tanta ſuæ mentis monumenta reliquit
Externa puduit vivere velle manu.

Budæus, in his Life, would ne'er conſent
To have, or Buſt, or Picture, of himſelf,
Nor dying, ſought he Poets Elogies:
By his own Works, he, to himſelf, has rais'd
A Monument of everlaſting Fame,
Aſhamed to owe it to another's Hand.

The Author, whom I quote in the Margin, ſays, that this is Budæus's Epitaph, compoſed by Stephen Paſquier (49).

(49) St Romuald, Journal Chronologique, under the third of Auguſt.

[R] ——— and that going to make a Speech to Charles V, he was at a ſtand.] I have read this no where but in the firſt Volume of Father Abram on Cicero's Orations. ‡ Petrus Meſſius libro iii. variarum lectionum cap. viii. multis magnorum Oratorum exempla corradit, quod initio dicendi perturbatos repentè memoria deſeceit. Ut Demoſthenem coram Philippo, Theophraſtum coram Areopagitis, Herodem Atticum coram M. Antonino, Heraclidem Lycium coram Severo Auguſto, Bartholomæum Socinum coram Alexandro Sexto. Addi potuiſſet & magnus ille Budæus, qui Carolum V. Cæſarem Pariſios venientem oratione excepturus repentè obmutuit (50). ——— Petrus Meſſius, in the Third Book of his various Readings, chap. VIII, collects a great many examples of great Orators, who have been diſcompoſed in the beginning of their Diſcourſe, and on a ſudden their Memories have failed them: As Demoſthenes before Philip, Theophraſtus before the Areopagites, Herodes Atticus before M. Antoninus, Heraclides Lycius before the Emperor Severus, Bartholomew Socinus before Alexander the Sixth. He might alſo have added the great Budæus, who, when he was going to addreſs the Emperor Charles V, on his arrival at Paris, was ſuddenly ſtopped, and could not proceed in his Speech.'

(50) Nicol Abramus in Cicer. Orat. Tom. I, pag. 409.

[S] His ——— French Stile was ſomewhat harſh.] Some have found Fault with his expreſſion in the Book of The Inſtitution of a Prince, addreſſed to Francis I, where, in his Dedication to the King, he calls his manner of writing, Un Style de haute lice & reſplendiſſant. — A Style of a high ſtrain and glittering: Beſides, he was obſcure and unpoliſhed; witneſs theſe Words of the ſame Epiſtle: Je vous requiers de recevoir mon offre avec grand liesſe & alacrité, offre d'exigue eſtimation compare à voſtre hautour (51). ——— I deſire you to receive my Offering with great joy and alacrity, an Offering of exiguous Eſteem compared with your Highneſs.' See what Genebrard and Daniel Augentius ſay of him in du Verdier's Bibliotheque.

(51) St Romuald, Journal Chronol. of Auguſt 3.

Having conſulted the Epiſtle Dedicatory of The Inſtitution of a Prince, I find nothing at all in it of what Saint Romuald aſſerts here. My Edition is that which Meſſiere John de Luxembourg, Abbot of Fory, Rivou, and Salmoiſy, had printed in his Abbey of Rivou, in the Year 1546, in Folio. Note, by the way, a Fault of Mr Joli, who ſays, that That Work was not printed till the Reign of Henry II, in 1547, in Folio and in 8vo (52). It is beſides very evident, from the Epiſtle Dedicatory, and from all the reſt of the Book, that the Author knew himſelf when he owns, That he neither could, nor would praiſe himſelf. ——— for knowing the Purity of the French Diction ------ and that he was very little verſed in the French Stile (53).

(52) Joli Cödicille d'or, p. 36.

(53) Budæus, ubi ſupra, in the Epiſtle Dedicatory.

[T] His Family was ennobled on his Account.] His Heirs were declared Noble, by an Arrêt of the Court of Aids, in the Year 1578, on Account of his Perſonal Merits (54).' I believe the Monk, who relates this, had none of the exacteſt Memoirs. See above, Remark [A]

(54) St Romuald, Journ. Chronol. under Auguſt 3. See the Invent. de l'Hiſt. Journaliere, p. 269.

[U] He would never ——— quote Eraſmus ; and by criticized him without naming him.] They came to defending and proving, which had no very good effect. See the Letters which they wrote to each other, among thoſe of Eraſmus. To me it always ſeemed that Eraſmus was more moderate and civil to Budæus, than he was to Eraſmus. Was it not very unſociable, not to grant the favour of one Citation? ‡ Id parum amicæ voluntatis argumentum crediderunt, quod à Budæo in tot numero libris mentio ullquam facta ſit Eraſmi, quanquam ut fieret multis precibus ab Eraſmo ambiretur. Præterea putant id quoque ad iſta quæ dixi accedere, quod Budæus diſſimulanter Eraſmum in ſuis libris nonnunquam perſtringere videtur, velut in Commentariis, quando videt illos, qui de ſingulorum ingenio, & eloquentiâ ſententiam ferre audent, qui Laurentio inferiores præſcribunt loquendi formulas, qui leviora quædam ſcripta in vulgus edunt, quæ nec ſolem nec ætatem ferant (55).

(55) Lud. Regius in vita Budæi, pag. 77.

It

No Elogy can be finer than that which Ludovicus Vives made on our Budæus (f); for in few Words he represents him as a Prodigy of Learning, and ascribes such moral Virtues to him as deserve the Admiration of all the World. I think it may justly enough be said of this great Man, that he made himself more feared than beloved in the Common-Wealth of Learning, and this does not seem to me a Perfection, but rather a shrewd Sign of Haughtiness and Impatience, and of his arming Cap-apee against those who criticize him. The Concern that a Professor of Venice expressed, when some body had taken notice publickly that he did not follow the Opinion of the learned Budæus, would alone be a sufficient Demonstration that he had made himself very formidable [X].

(f) Ludov. Vives in lib. ii. cap xvii. Augustini de Civitate Dei.

' —— It was looked upon as a mark of a very unfriendly Disposition, that Budæus, in so many Books, had made no mention of Erasmus, notwithstanding Erasmus had frequently desired him to do it. To all this may also be added, as it is thought, that Budæus sometimes seems to reflect underhand on Erasmus in his Writings, as in his Commentaries, when he derides those who presume to judge of the Genius and Eloquence of particular Persons, who, tho' inferior to Laurentius, prescribe Forms of speaking, who publish some trifling Pieces among the Vulgar, which will neither bear the light nor time.' See above (56) the Clamour that was raised against Erasmus because it was pretended, that he compared Budæus to Badius. I shall quote another Passage which shews what are commonly the Consequences of the Emulation of Great Men. ' Et ' difficillimum inter illos nullam intercedere obtrectationem, inter quos tantæ laudis est æmulatio, ' quantum fuit incidere necesse inter Erasmum ' atque Budæum, cum se uterque in literis esse ' principem cuperet. Nam quicquid est ejusmodi, ' in quo excellere præclarum existimant, in eo ' plerumque sit tanta contentio, ut vix possit be- ' nevolentia servari (57). —— It is very hard to avoid all slander between two Men, where there is an emulation of so great Honour, as must needs be between Erasmus and Budæus, when each of them studied to be thought chief in Literature, for whatever is such, that it is thought extraordinary to excel in it, there is generally so great contention about it, that good Will can hardly be preserved.'

(56) In the Remark [K], of the Article BADIUS.

(57) Lud. Regius, ibid. pag. 76.

[X] The Concern that a Professor of Venice expressed, when some body had informed the Public, that he followed not the Opinion of Budæus.] We have seen (58), that there arose a Dispute between William Budæus and Leonard Portius about the Coins and Measures of the Antients. Now it happened that John Baptista Egnatius followed, in some part of his Commentary on Suetonius, the Calculations of Portius; and that Erasmus, adding a Preface to that same Commentary in a new Edition (59), said expressly, that Egnatius was not of Budæus's Opinion. It happened that Egnatius was much vexed at that Remark of Erasmus. He feared the Consequences of it, immediately came upon his Justification, and had recourse to the Intercession of an eminent Man, whom he conjured to pacify Budæus: I say, he conjured him by the most moving Arguments. This will appear more plain from his Latin. ' Cum nudius ' tertius in Tranquillum Cæsaresque meos Basileæ ' nuper excusos annotationes, & in his nescio quid ' ab Erasmo nostro de nummis scriptum legissem, ' ubi dissentire me a Budæo doctus alioqui vir & ' amicissimus asserebat, dum Portium sequor: ani- ' madverti aliquanto altius vulnus descendisse, quam ' ego ab initio suspicatus essem, affecitque me vis ' minime expectata, uti solet, non admirationis so- ' lum, verum etiam molestiæ. Quæ enim mihi ' cum Budæo studiorum dissensio esse potest, ubi ' tanta sit animorum conjunctio? aut quæ testifica- ' tio mea honestior aut amplior esse potuit tum be- ' nevolentiæ erga Budæum meæ, tum judicii, quam ea, quæ à me in eis annotamentis adhibita est? ' Uti facile declararim me tantum in hoc studiorum ' genere Budæo tribuere, quantum mihi ipsi vix op- ' tarem: ut si aliter vel Budæus vel Erasmus sentit, ' næ ambo cum summo animi mei morore id sen- ' tiant. Quare ego te Grolierie per eam animi pro- ' pensionem, quam in doctos præ te fers, oro; per ' humanitatem & divinam istam tuam beneficentiam ' obtestor; per eam pietatem, quam tibi reliquæque ' genti debeo, adjuro, uti hunc Budæo scrupulum ' per literas etiam tuas eximas, meque illi ita conci- ' lies, ut intelligat vir doctissimus, esse in terris ho- ' die neminem, cujus ego doctrinam magis admi- ' rer, de cujus ingenio libentius prædicem, quem- ' que ego pluris faciam (60). —— The other Day, reading my Notes on Suetonius, lately printed at Basil, and in them something writ by our Erasmus, concerning Coins, wherein this learned and otherwise friendly Man asserts, that I dissent from Budæus, and follow Portius; I observe, that the Wound goes deeper than I thought at first, and this unexpected Attack not only raised my Wonder as usual, but gave me some uneasiness. For what difference can I have with Budæus in studies, where there is so near a Conjunction of Minds? or what more honourable or ample Testimony could I have given, either of my Respect to Budæus, or his Judgment, than I have done in these Commentaries? Wherein I have freely declared, that I attribute so much to Budæus, in this kind of Learning, as I could scarce wish for myself: so that if either Budæus or Erasmus be of another Opinion, I am very sorry for it. Wherefore I beseech you, Grolierius, by that respect which you shew to learned Men; I beg of you, by your Humanity and Divine Beneficence; I conjure you, by the Duty which I owe to yourself, and the rest of your Nation, to satisfy Budæus in this Matter, by your Letter, and reconcile me to him, by letting that most learned Man know, that there is no Man this Day upon Earth, whose Learning I more admire, whose Genius I am more ready to commend, or that I have a greater Value for.' He says several other things as strong, which shews his Affection, Veneration, and Admiration, for Budæus, and afterwards turns all his Anger against Erasmus: This place is very insulting. ' Quare non possum non vehe- ' menter admirari, quid tandem Erasmo in mentem ' venerit, ut etiam aliud agens de studiorum dissen- ' sione nostrorum, præsertim falsa, publicandum sibi ' censuerit, cum Budæi vestigia me sequi profite- ' ar, cum doctrinam hominis tantopere laudem, & ' ejus præsertim libros quinque de Asse. Sed homo ' alioqui doctus cum numerorum rationem non pro- ' be calleat, & scriptione multa sese oblectet, & sibi ' plus æquo placeat, dum modo aliquid edat, quid ' tandem dicat non satis pensi habuit. Ita fit, ut dum ' verborum copiæ studet, minus res observet. Quod ' si maturare sibi pateretur diutius ea quæ parturit, ' pareret ille sæpe eos liberos, qui & vitales essent, ' nec vitiosi illi & morbosi sæpe in lucem prodi- ' rent (61). ----- Wherefore I cannot but very much wonder what Erasmus had got in his Head, that, when he was about another Affair, he should think of publishing any thing, especially Falsehoods, concerning the Difference of our Opinions, when I declare that I follow the Footsteps of Budæus, when I so highly commend the Learning of the Man, and especially his five Books de Asse. But this Man, though otherwise learned, not being well skilled in Calculations, and delighted in writing a great deal, and too full of himself, so he do but publish any thing, does not take sufficient care what he says. Hence it is, that while he is studying the Copiousness of Words, he too little observes things: but if he would give himself a little more time to perfect his Productions, he would often bring forth such Children, as would be long lived, and not imperfect, and distempered, as most of his are.'

(58) In the Remark [G].

(59) That of Basil, apud Iohannem Frobenium, 1518, in Folio, in which there are several other Historians besides Suetonius.

(60) Jo. Baptistæ Egnatius Epist. ad Jo. Grolierium; it is dated from Venice, the 5*th of* January, 1518, it is the 35*th of the Century, published by* Goldast.

(61) Id. ibid. pag. 150, 151.

BULGARUS, one of the moſt famous Civilians of the XIIth Century, was ſurnamed Golden-mouth, on account of the graceſulneſs of his Speech (a). He was one of the four Profeſſors (b) whom Frederic Barbaroſſa conſulted in the Year 1158, to know how far the Emperor's Rights ought to extend in Italy (c), and he ſhewed himſelf ſo able a Lawyer in this Conſultation, that the Prince conferred a Judge's Place upon him (d). He behaved himſelf in it with a great deal of Integrity, inſomuch that his Judgments ſerved for a Rule in all the Tribunals of Italy, in Caſes that were doubtful. He perſuaded the Inhabitants of Bologna to ſubmit to that Emperor. He had taught, that, when a married Woman dies before her Father, the Huſband is obliged to reſtore her Dowry. The Caſe happened to himſelf, and he conformed generouſly to his own Doctrine. One of his Scholars did not ſhow himſelf ſo diſintereſted [A]; for being ſummoned to put that Doctrine in Practice, he ſaid he had altered his Opinion. Bulgarus had ſeveral Children who all died before him. He was much afflicted at it, and, to repair the Loſs as much as poſſible, he married a ſecond Wife; but inſtead of marrying a Maid, as he thought, he unhappily made choice of a Wife that paſſed for a Woman. The Day after his wedding he read a Lecture, and explained that Law which begins, We undertake a Buſineſs that is not new. His Auditors applied theſe Words to the Condition in which they ſuppoſed he had found his Wife [B], which ſet them all a laughing. It is not known in what Year he died, nor where he was buried. There is no reaſon to ſay, as ſome have done, that he tranſlated into Latin the Greek Laws that are in the Pandects, for he was abſolutely ignorant of the Greek Tongue. He publiſhed ſome Gloſſes on the Civil Law, and an excellent Commentary in regulas Juris (e).

(a) Panzirol. de clar. legum interpret. lib. ii, cap. xv, p. 127.

(b) In Civil Law, in the Univerſity of Bologna.

(c) Panzir. lib. ii, cap. xiv.

(d) Ob inſignem quam oſtendit doctrinam pro eo (Friderico Ænobarbo) Bononia ad jus dicendum Vicarius creatus fuerit. Id. ibid. cap. xv, pag. 127.

(e) Taken from Panzirolus, ubi ſupra.

[A] He conformed generouſly to his own Doctrine --- One of his Scholars did not ſhew himſelf ſo diſintereſted.] His Colleague, Martin Goſia, had maintained the oppoſite Opinion; and therefore they choſe to aſk his Advice after the Death of Bulgarus's Wife. Her Father would fain know from that Profeſſor, Whether he might legally demand Reſtitution of his Daughter's Dowry? He was anſwered, That his Son-in-law was condemned from his own Mouth, and, if he refuſed Reſtitution, might be ſhamefully convicted of being a bad Interpreter of the Law. Hereupon, the Father-in-law brought his Action, but the Son-in-law did not ſtand it out long. This ſhews he had ſome conflict in his Mind between the Deſire of keeping the Dowry, and the Fear of being reproached with denying his own Doctrine. It is plain, he did not make too much haſte to put in practice what he had taught; for his Father-in-law was forced to commence a Suit againſt him. It is very likely, he repented that he maintained a Doctrine ſo contrary to his Intereſt, and that if he had foreſeen the Prejudice it would do him, he would have dogmatized after another manner. However, let us not refuſe him his due Praiſe. At laſt, he choſe rather to part with his Money, than expoſe himſelf to the Shame of contradicting his own Theory, and ſo ſtopped his Antagoniſt, who was preparing to inſult him. 'Martinus Goſia æquitatis 'ratione ſubnixus eam (dotem) velut matris patri- 'monium †, poſteritate acquiri tenebat, qui ex 'hoc facto à Bulgari Socero conſultus: Si mihi, 'reſpondit, qui contra te ſentio, hic caſus contigiſſet, jure fuiſſem abſolvendus; ſed Gener tuus, qui diverſum docuit, ſua ſe jam ſententia condemnavit, & niſi ut falſus interpres à me turpiter 'reprehendi maluerit, petitam dotem reddere cogetur. Ita dimiſſus cum Generum interpellaſſet, Bulgarus, ne vel ſordidæ avaritiæ, aut falſæ doctrinæ notari poſſet, ad confirmandam, quam tenuerat, opinionem, reſtituta pecunia, Martinum Antiſophiſtam prudenter eluſit ‡, magnaque cum laude conſervata exiſtimatione, patrimonii quam famæ diſpendium pati maluit. Sed Albericus ejus diſcipulus, etſi cum Præceptore ſentiret, cum ſibi idem accidiſſet, ſententiam ſe mutaſſe dixit, nec præclarum Præceptoris exemplum ſecutus eſt (1). ——Martin Goſia, inſiſting on the Equity of the thing, held, that it, (the Dowry) as being the Patrimony of the Mother, became the Husband's Property if there were any Iſſue; he being conſulted on this Affair by Bulgarus's Father-in-law, anſwered: If this Caſe had happened to me, who am of a different Opinion, I might fairly have been excuſed; but your Son-in-law, who has taught otherwiſe, has already condemned himſelf by his own Judgment, and unleſs he has a mind to be ſhamefully reproached by me as a bad Interpreter of the Law, he will be obliged to return the Dowry. Diſmiſſed with this Anſwer he ſued his Son-in-law; and Bulgarus, for fear he ſhould be accuſed either of ſordid Avarice or falſe Doctrine, to confirm the Opinion which he had taught, reſtoring the Money, prudently eluded Martin, the Antiſophiſt, and, by ſo doing, very honorably preſerved his Credit, chooſing rather to ſuffer in his Eſtate than in his Reputation. But Albericus, his Diſciple, though he was of his Maſter's Mind, when the ſame Caſe happened to him, ſaid, he had changed his Opinion, and would not follow the noble Example of his Maſter.'

† In leg. 3. §. ſed utrum ff. de minor.

‡ Odofr. in l. dot à patre C. ſol. matr. & in l. jure. ff. de jur. dot.

(1) Panzirol. de claris legum interpret. lib. ii, cap. xv, p. 128.

[B] His Auditors applied the firſt Words of a Law to the Condition wherein they ſuppoſed he had found his Wife.] They who ſpeak in Public, are expoſed to a thouſand Inconveniences; for they unwarily ſay Things that may be applied to their own Adventures, and this ſometimes expoſes them to Affronts before the whole Audience. They are chiefly to be pitied, when, on the ſide of Matrimony, their Domeſtic Affairs give occaſion for bad Reports, and unlucky Jeſts. Be it how it will: Let us ſhew, that Panzirolus has ſupplied us with the Fact that we have mentioned (2). 'Deficiente ſobole, ad procrean- 'dam prolem uxorem ætate matura, & quæ vulgo 'mulier credebatur, pro virgine duxit, poſtridieque 'cum interpretaturus legem, cujus initium eſt, Rem 'non novam, neque inſolitam aggredimur, dum 'ea verba recitaret, audientibus riſum movet, qui 'hoc ad conjugem, quam corruptam invenerat, 'retulerunt. Itaque univerſi libri, quos tum ſe- 'cum gerebant, plaudentes ſtrepitum excitarunt ‡. '---- Having no Iſſue left, in an advanced Age, he married a Woman for a Maid, who was commonly thought to be otherwiſe; the next Day he interpreted the Law, which begins: We undertake a Buſineſs which is not new nor ſtrange; and when he ſpoke thoſe Words, he raiſed a Laugh in the Audience, who applied this to his Wife, whom he had found debauched. And they all made a loud Clap with the Books they had in their Hands.' A very good Anſwer might have been made in favour of Bulgarus; But what would it have ſignified againſt Scoffers? Nothing could have ſilenced a Company of Scholars, reſolved to divert themſelves at the Expence of that great Civilian. They would only have laughed louder at any one, who had repreſented to them, That the Words of the Law, applied to the Marriage of the Profeſſor, might bear a good Senſe, though it were ſuppoſed, that he found his Wife ſuch as he had wiſhed her to be; for even in that Caſe, he might ſay, that the Buſineſs he undertook was no new thing, and that he was uſed to it. It was his ſecond Marriage, and he had had ſeveral Children by his firſt Wife. But ſome may ſay, he ſpoke in the Plural: We undertake a Buſineſs that has not the Charms of Novelty; we are accustomed to it (3). I reply, That it is permitted in all Languages to speak of one's self in the plural Number; and that therefore it could not be pretended that Bulgarus spoke jointly of himself and his Wife. So that he might have been justified by solid Remarks: But once more, This would not have served his turn; the Laughers would still have laughed on. The Fault was committed, and it was irreparable: He had read Lectures to his Wife, which had taught her nothing that was new to her. This is an inexhaustible Source of jesting.

(2) Panzir. ibid.

‡ Glo. & Odofr. in l. Rem. non novam. C. de judic.

(3) Rem. non novam neque infolitam aggredimur.

Note, That Francis Duarenus supposes, that this Professor did not expose himself to Laughter by marrying a Wife, who had lost her Virginity criminally, but for marrying a Wife who had lost it in an honourable way. He supposes, that Bulgarus had married a Widow, and upon this, he exclaims against those who marry Widows. It is in the Chapter where he shews, That they who marry a second time, are excluded from the Priesthood by the Canons; and that he, who marries a Widow, is reputed as one twice married (4). ' Lege Mosaica præceptum fuit ut pontifex virginem tantum uxorem ducere posset: Levit xxii. ' Adde si lubet quod ridicula vulgo res est, & cavillis hominum obnoxia uxorem viduam ducere, ' quod vel tritum apud juris civilis doctores dicterium Bulgari Jurisconsulti discipulorum in præceptorem satis offendit. gl. rem non novam C. de judic. (5) ----- It is commanded in the ' Mosaic Law, that a Priest should not marry any ' other than a Virgin, Levit. xxi. Add to this, ' that it is a ridiculous thing in the Eyes of the ' World, and obnoxious to Cavils, to marry a Widow, ' as appears from the Scoffs of the Disciples of Bulgarus, the Civilian, against their Master, a trite ' Story among the Doctors of the Civil Law.'

(4) See above, Citation (23), in the Article BUCER.

(5) Franciscus Duarenus de sacris Ecclesiæ ministeriis ac beneficiis, lib. iv, cap viii, pag. 387, Part II, operum, Edit. Genev. 1608.

BULLINGER (HENRY), one of the Reformers of the Church in the XVIth Century, was born at Bremgarten (a), the eighteenth of July, 1504. At twelve Years of Age he was sent to Emmerick, in the Country of Cleves, to study Classical Learning. It was a good School at that time; Mosellanus was one of those who taught there. Bullinger continued there three Years, and maintained himself by what he got in singing from Door to Door. His Father was rich enough to allow him a Pension; but he only gave him a suit of Cloaths when he sent him to Emmerick, and some small matter to pay his travelling Charges; for any thing farther he left him to the Charity of his Neighbours: He put his Son to those Streights, that he might make him one Day more sensible of the Prayers of the needy. Our young Scholar bore this Mortification so patiently, and submitted so freely to the Discipline of the School, which was severe enough, that he even desired to try another kind of Life much more rigid. He would have been a Carthusian Frier, but his elder Brother dissuaded him from it. At fifteen Years of Age he was sent to Cologne. The barbarous manner, in which Philosophy was then taught, served only to make him apply himself the more earnestly to Classical Learning. He even wrote, in the Year 1520, something against the School Divines [A]. He lived at Cologne till 1522, and the Nature of his Studies there disposed him to forsake the Romish Communion as soon as occasion offered. Having passed some Months at his Father's House, he was invited (b) by the Abbot of Cappel (c) to teach in his Convent. He discharged that Duty with much Reputation till 1527. The Reformation of Zuinglius was received in the Abbey of Cappel in the Year 1526, in which Bullinger was the chief Instrument. He heard Zuinglius's Lectures at Zurich, five Months, in the Year 1527. He took to the Study of the Greek Language again, and began that of the Hebrew, and preached publickly by a Mission from the Synod. He accompanied Zuinglius, in the Year 1528, at the famous Dispute that was held at Bern. The Year following he was made Pastor of the Reformed at Bremgarten, and married Anne Adlischwiler. That Marriage produced six Sons, and five Daughters [B], and continued till the Year 1564. His Wife died of the Plague at that time. He never would marry a second, for which he was blamed [C]. He was scarce settled quietly in his Church with regard to

(a) A small Town on the Frontiers of the Canton of Zurich, which is under the eight Swiss Cantons. Simler in vita Bullingeri.

(b) In the beginning of the Year 1523.

(c) An Abbey of the Cistercian Order, near Zurich.

[A] He wrote - - - - - something against the School-Divines.] It consisted of five Dialogues: The two first attack those Divines directly; the two following were an Apology for Reuchlin against Pfeffercorn, a converted Jew; the Title of the fifth was Promonetes. They were never printed (1).

(1) Simlerus in vita Bullingeri, fol. 6.

[B] He had six Sons, and five Daughters.] The two first were Ministers; the third was put into the Service of the Landgrave of Hesse, and died in France in the Troops of the Prince of Orange, in the Year 1569; the three last died Children. Three of his Daughters were married to Ministers of Zurich; to Hulric Zuinglius (2), to Lewis Lavater, and to Josias Simler; they died all three of the Plague; the second in the Year 1564, the other two in the Year 1565 (3).

(2) Son of the Reformer Zuinglius.

(3) Simlerus, ibid. fol. 12.

[C] He never would marry a second time, and was blamed for it.] Care has been taken in the History of his Life to refute those captious Spirits, who censured him for not marrying a second Wife. They tell us first of his Orthodoxy; they declare, that he did not doubt, but GOD permitted the Ministers of the Gospel to marry a second time; and then add, that he answered those who advised him to marry a second Wife, That the first was still living in his Heart, and in the Children she had brought him; and that he had a Daughter that governed his Family very prudently; and after all, the burthen of sixty Years, which he laboured under, stifled all such Thoughts. The Censurers grounded their Exceptions chiefly on Reasons of Health: They believed, if he had married again, that he would not have been troubled, as he was, with a pain in his Reins. That is confuted by this Reason, That married Men are no less subject to this Inconvenience, than they who lead a single Life. ' And besides, continue they, can it be ' thought, that a Man of Bullinger's Age and Prudence could not tell what agreed best with his ' Constitution, or that he should neglect any means ' of Health?' In short, they had recourse to secret Reasons, which might perhaps be the Cause that he continued a Widower, though perhaps to the Prejudice of his Health. As it is probable several Readers may imagine, that what I have said is mostly a Gloss of my own framing, I shall recite the Latin of Simler. ' Post hujus obitum ' quamvis annos fere XI. superstes fuerit, nunquam ' tamen adduci potuit ut aliam uxorem duceret. ' Non quod secundas nuptias Christiano homini at- ' que etiam ecclesiæ Ministris non concessas esse ' crederet, sed primam uxorem in animo suo ad- ' huc vivere dicebat, quæ tot sui charissima pignora ' reliquisset, & quia filiam haberet quæ familiam optime ' administraret, to those of the Romish Communion, when he was engaged in Disputes with the Anabaptists; he disputed publickly against them, and wrote Books in which he confuted their erroneous Opinions. The victory, obtained by the Catholic Cantons over the Reformed in the Year 1531, obliged Bullinger to forsake his Country, together with his Father, Brother, and Colleague. He retired to Zurich, and there filled the Place vacant by the Death of Zuinglius (d). He edified that Church by his Preaching and Writings. He was obliged in the first place to refute the Impertinencies and Boasts of John Faber (e): He shewed him that the Goodness of a Religion was not to be judged of by the good or bad Success of a Battle. From that time he was employed in several Ecclesiastical Negotiations, by which Bucer laboured to reconcile the Zuinglians and the Lutherans. Bullinger behaved himself in such a manner, that the Suspicions which had been entertained of him did not last long: he shewed that the Love of Concord should never bring him to promote a Formulary, that was captious and contrary to sound Words. He wrote Books every Year, which I shall not particularly mention, yet will not omit that which he published against Luther in the Year 1545. The Swiss Churches had kept a long Silence, notwithstanding Luther wrote in a very passionate manner against their Doctrine concerning the Sacrament; at last it was thought fit to answer him in his Life-time, least, if it were deferred till after his Death, Occasion might be given to some disadvantageous Surmises. Besides, it was thought that a very vigorous Answer would make Luther more moderate for the future [D], and prevent his abusing the Respect that was shewn him. Bullinger, who advised Silence, was the Man charged with the Business of answering him, and he acquitted himself worthily. Luther dying a little after, there were, doubtless, some rash Spirits (for there are but too many such in all Communions) who said, among other things, that the Vexation of finding himself uncapable of answering Bullinger's Apology, had broke his Heart. The Landgrave of Hesse, knowing that People complained of the Church of Zurich, on the account of these Insults, advertised our Bullinger of it, who wrote an Apologetic Letter to him in the Name of his Colleagues: In the Year 1549, He and Calvin, who was come to Zurich for that purpose, drew up a Formulary of the Conformity of Faith between the Church of Zurich, and that of Geneva. Calvin undertook that Journey, because he was suspected of an Opinion which favoured that of Luther on the Eucharist. The same Year Bullinger alledged so many Reasons against the renewing the Alliance, to which King Henry II courted the Swiss, that That Proposition was rejected. One of his Reasons

(d) He had been killed in the Battle which the Protestants lost on the 11th of October, 1531.

(e) He had been the principal Antagonist of Zuinglius.

‹ administraret, se hac ætate (erat autem sexagenarius) nolle de nuptiis & conjugio solicitum esse. ‹ Equidem non desunt qui hoc ejus factum & consilium damnant, hoc maxime nomine quod eum melius consulturum fuisse suæ valetudini existmant si alteram uxorem duxisset: homines ridiculi; quasi in conjugio viventes non æque nephritidis & dysuriæ doloribus obnoxii sint atque cœlibes. ‹ An vero existimant cum nullam suæ valetudinis rationem habuisse, & tantæ ætatis atque prudentiæ hominem ignorasse quidnam suæ naturæ conveniens sit? Atque ut maxime vera sit eorum ratio, eas tamen ille forte habuit consilii sui rationes ‹ vulgo incognitas, ut etiam cum damno valetudinis id sibi persequendum statuerit (4). —— He ‹ outlived her near XI Years, but never could be ‹ perswaded to marry another Wife. Not that he ‹ believed second Marriages to be unlawful for a ‹ Christian, or even a Minister of the Church, but ‹ he said his first Wife still lived in his Mind, ‹ who had left so many dear Pledges of herself, and ‹ as he had a Daughter who managed his Family ‹ very well, he would not, at his Years (and he ‹ was sixty), think of Marriage. Indeed there are ‹ some who blame this Action and Resolution of his, ‹ chiefly on this Account, that he would have taken ‹ a better Course to preserve his Health, if he had ‹ married another Wife; ridiculous! as if married ‹ People were not equally subject to nephritic Pains ‹ and the Strangury with single Persons. Or do ‹ they imagine that he had no regard to his Health, ‹ or that a Man of his Age and Prudence did not ‹ know what agreed with his Constitution? And ‹ suppose their Reasons were true, perhaps he had ‹ some private Reasons for his Conduct, which he ‹ resolved to follow, even at the Expence of his ‹ Health.' The best of all this, is, the Seriousness wherewith it is set forth.

(4) Ibid. fol. 22. verso.

[D] He was appointed to answer Luther, it being thought that a very vigorous Answer would make Luther more moderate for the future.] I declare before-hand, that I do not apply what I am going to say to any particular Person, especially, that I by no means glance at Luther in it; but it is certain, that one can hardly tell what course to take with certain fiery and impetuous Tempers. Turn which way you please, you find yourself uneasy with them. Answer them, and you raise their Choler an hundred times higher (5) Do not answer them, and they become tenfold more fierce and insolent: they insult you, and attack all others with much greater Boldness. The Experience of Impunity makes them hope that all will give way to them, and that there is nothing better than hectoring and bouncing. So that there are Difficulties on both sides, whether you do, or do not resist them. However, I do believe, that, according to human Prudence, it is better to resist them by answering in their own way and Stile, than to keep silence. Those violent Spirits are not all equally untractable, some of them may be kept within bounds, if they are put upon the defensive. What I am going to copy deserves to be weighed; the Ministers of Zurich experienced the Importance of it. ‹ Alii vero omnino respondendum ‹ censebant & quidem acriter, quod nec privatim nec ‹ publicè læsus tanta petulantia vivis & defunctis insultaret. Etsi enim Lutherus benè meritus sit de ‹ Ecclesia, non tamen tantum illi tribuendum, ut ‹ unus plus reliquis omnibus posset, & ut ob unius ‹ offensionem cavendam veritas turpi silentio prodatur. Ac fore utilem hujusmodi responsionem cum ‹ quoad ipsum Lutherum, qui dum omnes illi indulgent atque omnia permittunt, magis in illa sua ‹ nimia vehementia confirmatur; quod si fortiter se ‹ illi viri boni & docti opponant, rem diligentius ‹ expensurum, & moderatius acturum; tum ad alios ‹ commovendos ne tyrannidem in renascentem ecclesiam inducant. - - - - In hanc sententiam con‹ cesserunt Tigurini (6). - - - Others were of Opi‹ nion, that he ought, by all means, to be answered, ‹ and that sharply; because, without any manner of ‹ Provocation, either public or private, he so petu‹ lantly insulted both the Living and the Dead. For ‹ notwithstanding Luther deserved well of the ‹ Church,

(5) Bacchæ bacchantî si velis adversariere, ex insana insanior fies. Plaut. in Amphitr. Act. 2, Sc. 2, ver. 79.

(6) Simlerus, ubi supra, fol. 20. verso.

sons was, that it was not lawful for a Man to let himself to hire, to kill those who have done him no wrong (f) [E]. He wrote a Book in the Year 1551, to shew that the Council of Trent had no other Design than to oppress the Truth, and that therefore no regard should be had to the Pope's Behaviour to the Cantons, in inviting them to send Deputies to the Council. That Book never appeared but in Italian: It was translated into that Language, with some Additions, by Paul Vergerius. The Dispute between Bullinger and Brentius, about the Doctrine of Ubiquity, began in the Year 1561. Bullinger published a Book, wherein he shewed, that JESUS CHRIST, as to his Human Nature, is no where but in Heaven, at the right Hand of GOD. Brentius, a zealous Ubiquitarian, answered that Book. Bullinger replied to him (g). Brentius published another Work, against which Bullinger did not fail to draw his Pen (h). Brentius returned to the Charge (i), and so did Bullinger (k). He wrote a Book, in 1571, against the last Will and Testament of Brentius, which William Bidenback, a Divine of Wittemberg, had published, by which Testament Brentius forewarned all States not to allow the Zuinglians a Toleration (l). The National Synod of Rochel, having, in 1571, condemned those who rejected the Words Substance and Substantially, in speaking of the Eucharist: the Ministers of Zurich thought, that That Canon condemned them. They wrote to Beza about it, who answered, that the Synod did not point at them: However Bullinger represented to Beza, that the Expressions of the Decree ought to be so altered, that no body might think there was any Difference of Opinion between the Churches [F]. That Letter of Bullinger was effectual; for, in the Year 1572, the Synod of Nismes gave all the Explications that the Church of Zurich could desire. An Answer was to be made, in 1575, to the Apology for the Testament of Brentius, composed by James Andrews. The Ministers of Zurich took upon them what concerned the Fundamentals of Doctrine, and left Bullinger only the Trouble of answering what related to himself. This was his last Work, and it is observable, that he never exceeded the Bounds of Modesty as he did at this time: He treated his Adversary hardly, he railed at him, and ridiculed him to some purpose. He died like a good Christian, the seventeenth of September, 1575 (m). He is Author of a great many Books; for besides those which have been printed, and which amount to ten Volumes, he wrote several others that are preserved in Manuscript (n). John Stuckius made his Funeral Oration [G]. Most of Mr Moreri's

(f) Decens non esse jus aut fas homini ut se mercede conduct patiatur ad fundendum sanguinem miserorum & plerumque innocentium hominum à quibus nulla ipsi unquam injuria affectus sit. Simler, ibid. fol. 24.

(g) In 1562.

(h) In the beginning of 1563.

(i) In the beginning of 1564.

(k) Ibid.

(l) Classicum quodammodo canens, & omnes exhortans ut nullum locum nobis in Ecclesia Christi relinquant. Simlerus, ibid. fol. 43.

(m) Taken from his Life, written by Josiah Simler.

(n) See Hotting. in Bibl. Tigurin. pag. 75, & seq.

' Church, yet was not so much deference due to him,
' as that he alone should be of more Weight than
' all the rest, and the Truth be betrayed by a shame-
' ful Silence, for fear of offending one single Per- ' son. That such an Answer would be useful both to
' Luther himself, who, while every body gives him his
' Way, and bears with all, will grow more confirm-
' in his Vehemence; but if these good and learned
' Men withstood him bravely, would weigh things more
' carefully, and act with more Moderation; and
' might also prevent others from introducing Tyranny
' into the newly reviving Church. - - - - - Those
' of Zurich came into this Opinion.'

[E] He thought it not lawful for a Man to let himself to hire, to kill those who have done him no wrong.] I do not pretend to set up for a Judge, or a Censurer, of the Swiss Cantons, who sacrifice the Lives of their Subjects in other Peoples Quarrels, and when they can have no doubt but the Quarrel is unjust: for Example: They give at present (7) Troops to France, and likewise to the Enemies of France: and yet one of the two Parties must certainly have an unjust Cause. But be that how it will, I shall not examine whether Bullinger was in the wrong or no, as to the Republic of Switzerland: I shall only say, that I do not see what answer can be made him, as to private Persons, who list themselves voluntarily to kill the Allies of their Country. A private Person may bear Arms against the Enemies of his Country, whether his Sovereign requires him so to do, or whether he leaves every one to his Liberty to list or not: but when a Person has that Liberty, and hires himself to kill those who are Friends and Allies to his Sovereign, I cannot see but he hires himself to commit Murder, and imitates the Gladiators, who to divert the the People of Rome, hired themselves to the first Comer to kill one another. One of our News Writers has made a Remark lately upon this Conduct of the Cantons: I think it is in the Historical Letters of September 1694. You will see in a Work of Hottinger, that Zuinglius, and the other Reformers of that Country, had the same Scruples as our Bullinger (8).

(7) This is wrote in 1694.

(8) Hotting. in Methodo legendi Histor. Helvet. pag. 603. & seq.

[F] He desired of Beza that the Expressions of a Decree of the Synod of Rochelle might be altered, that no body might think there was any Difference of Opinion between the Churches.] It will not be useless to place here the Words that Josiah Simler made use of. ' Videri decretum verbis paulo inconsideratius ' conceptum & pronunciatum esse, Damnamus eos ' qui non recipiunt substantiæ vocabulum. Quis enim ' ignorat nos ex eorum numero esse qui hoc non re- ' cipimus, neque unquam recipere voluimus? Quamobrem consultissimum fore ut cum iterum in ' Synodum coïerint hac de re sermones & decreta ' sua sic temperent, ut omnibus ubique manifestum ' sit neque de nobis, neque de nostri similibus ubi- ' cunque locorum fuerint canonem locutum esse. - - ' Atque ita quidem postea contigit (9). - - - That ' the Decree seemed to be conceived and expressed in ' Terms not well weighed, viz. We damn those who ' do not receive the word Substance. For who ' knows not that we are of those who do not receive ' it, nor ever did? Wherefore, it would be most ad- ' visable, that the Synod, when they meet again, tem- ' per their Expressions and Decrees, concerning this ' Matter, so that it may be evident to every body, ' that the Canon does not concern either us, or any ' of our Persuasion. - - - And so indeed it happened ' afterwards.' The Answer, which Beza made by order of the Synod to the Church of Zurich, is in the Sixty fifth of his Letters, and the Two hundred seventy ninth Pages of the third Tome of his Works.

(9) Simler. ubi supra, fol. 44.

[G] John Stuckius made his Funeral Oration.] Thuanus is not well translated. They will have him say, that Josiah Simler composed the Funeral Oration of Bullinger (10). Whereas, he says no more than that Simler praised Bullinger. ' Senio ' gravis decessit 13 Kalend. Octob. à Josiah Simlero ' - - - - - laudatus, & variis variorum carminibus ' epitaphiis celebratus (11). - - - - He died at a ' great Age, on the seventeenth of September, and ' was commended by Josiah Simler, and celebrated in ' Epitaphs, in different kinds of Verse, by several ' Hands.' This is very true, though it was Stuckius, and not Simler, that made the Funeral Oration; for Simler wrote Bullinger's Life, wherein he praised him highly.

(10) Teissier Elog. taken from Thuanus, Tom. I, pag. 440.

(11) Thuan. lib. lxi, pag. 139.

[H] Mr

reri's Faults are not material [H]. Those of Mr Teissier are likewise inconsiderable, and not so numerous [I].

[H] Mr Moreri's Faults are not material.] I. The River, which runs by Bremgarten, is not called Russ, but Rusi (12). II. It does not appear from Bullinger's Life, though Simler has described it amply and exactly, that he was a Clergyman in the Communion of Rome. It is expressly noted, that he performed no manner of Roman Catholic Function in the Abbey of la Cappel. 'Religio illi manebat 'integra, neque quicquam negotii habebat cum votis monasticis, monachatu, cuculla, cantu, choro, 'ALIISQUE superstitionibus papisticis (13). - - - - 'His Religion was intirely pure, nor had he any 'share in the Monastic Vows, or Order, Habit, Sing-'ing, Choir, or ANY OTHER Popish Superstition.' It is likely, that Mr Moreri was misled by Spondanus, who says, that Henry Bullinger, an Apostate and a married Priest, succeeded Zuinglius. 'Zuinglio porro Tiguri in Cathedra pestilentiæ suffectus est Henricus Bullingerus itidem Helvetius 'ex Presbytero apostata uxoratus (14).' III. It is true, indeed, that John Bullinger, the Brother of Henry, died in the Year 1570 (15); but it is false that he was eighty Years of Age. He was eight Years older than his Brother (16); therefore he was born in the Year 1496; so that he must have been only Seventy four Years of Age when he died. What was Melchior Adam dreaming of, when he made him Eighty six Years old; when he mentions the eight Years difference between the two Brothers, and places the Death of the Eldest in the Year 1570? This John Bullinger had been some time Curate of a Village in the Canton of Uri. He loved War and Hunting, and sometimes followed the Inhabitants of his Canton, when they went to fight. He was stripped and very much wounded in a Battle which they lost. From that time, he renounced the War and the Priesthood: He turned Protestant, betook himself again to his Study, and, being made a Minister, he faithfully discharged the Duties of his Ministry, till he died (17). This Phrase of Moreri, He brought him over afterwards to the Party of the Protestants, and he died in 1573, being fourscore Years old, is so ill put together, that the most knowing Readers may be deceived by it. The first he refers to Henry Bullinger, and the second to John Bullinger. But, according to the Rules of writing well, they ought both to refer to the same Man, and every Reader will understand them so at the first Reading. They have been taken in that Sense, in the Amsterdam Edition, and therefore the Editor thought that the last Member of the Period contained two Falsities. The Period was therefore rectified in this manner: He brought him over afterwards to the Party of the Protestants, and died in 1575, being Seventy one Years old. It is certain that Moreri does not speak of Henry Bullinger's Death in that Place; he only mentions the Death of John. At the end of the Article he mentions that of Henry, and places it on the Twenty fourth of May, 1575. IV. Moreri should have said, not that Bullinger wrote two Dialogues, when he was but twenty Years of Age, against a Jew - - - - - in favour of Capnio; but that he wrote them at fifteen Years of Age (18) against a Jew converted to Christianity. The Reason why he should have added this, is, that the Monks, who persecuted Capnio, alledged for a Pretence, that he opposed the destroying of Jewish Books, and favoured Judaism. It is certain, that the Jews are not his Adversaries. V. It is not true that at twenty Years of Age he had a mind to turn Carthusian (19). VI. The two Attempts mentioned by Moreri, would not have been omitted in Bullinger's Life, if they were true. Moreri says, That the first time That Minister undertook to preach at Bremgarten, he met with such Opposition, that he was obliged to retire into the Country. He confounds the Father with the Son: It was Bullinger's Father who was expelled from his native Country, when he had declared against the Mass; but the Son went thither only once to perform the Functions of Minister in that Place. VII. It is not true that the Calvinists wrote against him. VIII. His Steadiness, in the Dispute he had with Brentius, was not at all an Effect of a Promise he had made to Zuinglius; for their Dispute ran upon the Doctrine of Ubiquity, which was not started till after Zuinglius's Death. Would any one be so unreasonable as to say, that Bullinger made a general Promise to oppose the Lutherans, whatever Doctrine they should invent for the future? I pass by three other small Mistakes which I have rectified in my first Edition.

(12) In Latin Ursa.

(13) Simler, ubi supra, fol. 7.

(14) Spondan. Annal. Eccles. ad Ann. 1531, n. 7.

(15) Simler. ubi supra, fol. 42, verso.

(16) Assiduum hortatorem habebat fratrem ipso 8. annis natu majorem Joannem nomine, qui tum in eadem Schola (Embrica) literis operam dabat, & privatim ejus studia informabat. Id. ibid. fol. 6.

(17) Id. fol. 6. verso, & fol. 42. verso.

[I] Those of Mr Teissier are - - - - not so numerous.] He says, I. That when Bullinger had made an End of his Studies, he resolved to turn Carthusian. II. That he established the Reformation at Cappel, a Town in Switzerland. III. That he retired to Zurich, and, after Zuinglius's Death, was chosen —— to fill his Place. IV. That he exercised the Ministry for the space of Fifty Years (20). Bullinger had a Mind to turn Carthusian, when he was but twelve Years of Age (21); but he had no more such Thoughts at the Age of seventeen (22). Cappel is not a Town, but an Abbey. Bullinger did not go to Zurich till after Zuinglius was killed (23). He was not a Minister for the space of Fifty Years. One may infer from the History of his Life, that he was admitted into the Ministry only in 1527, or 1528. Thuanus is in the right to say, that he exercised his Ministry during Forty three Years; but that Historian should not have said, that he served all that Time the Church of Zurich; he should have taken off three Years.

(20) Teissier, ubi supra, pag. 476.

(21) Quamvis puer adhuc constituerat se Carthusianorum instituto addicere. Simler, ubi supra, fol. 5, ad Ann. 1520.

(22) Propositum de Carthusianorum vita amplectenda prorsus abjecit, Id. fol. 70 ad Ann. 1521.

(23) Tigurum venit anno 1531. 10 XXXI. die XI. Kalend. Decembr. Id. fol. 83. verso. Zuinglius was killed the 11th of Octob. 1531.

BUNEL (WILLIAM), Professor of Physic in the University of Toulouse, towards the Beginning of the XVIth Century. He wrote a Piece not mentioned by Gesner, nor by Vander Linden, nor by their Continuators. Du Verdier Vau-Privas has given us the Title of it, and some Extracts [A].

[A] He wrote a Book —— of which Du Verdier has given the Title, and some Extracts.] This is that Title: 'Œuvre excellente & à chacun desirant de 'peste se préserver tres utile. Contenant les Médicines préservatives & curatives des maladies pestilentieuses & conservatives de la Santé. Composée par Maistre Guillaume Bunel en la faculté de Médecine Docteur Régent de l'Université de 'Tholose, lesquelles par luy sont ordonnées tant en 'Latin qu'en François par rime. Aveq plusieurs 'Epistres à certains excellens personnages en la louange de Justice & de la Chose publique (1). '—— An excellent Work, and very useful to those 'who are desirous to preserve themselves from the 'Plague, containing Remedies to preserve one's self 'from, and to cure pestilential Diseases. Written 'by William Bunel a Physician, Doctor of the Uni-'versity of Toulouse, who has prescribed those Re-'medies both in Latin and French. Verses. With 'several Letters to some eminent Persons in Com-'mendation of Justice, and in Praise of the Com-'mon-wealth.' That Book was printed at Toulouse in the Year 1513, in 4to. I shall set down the first Verses of the Extracts that are to be found in du Verdier:

(1) Du Verdier, Vau Privas Biblioth. Françoise, pag. 472.

En apres il se fault garder
De faire prou ni peu excés.
Dequoy lon se puisse eschauffer,
Car il en vient des maux assés.
Les femmes à part delaissez
Sans toucher aux pas instrumens:
Plusieurs en ont souffert tourmens.
Je ne dis pas qu'en mariage
Afin qu'on puisse avoir du fruict,
Vous ne faciez aucun ouvrage
De tard en tard ainsi que duit:
Mais ce soit apres la minuict.

(24) Simler, and Melchior Adam, say these Dialogues were written in the Year 1520.

(19) See the following Remarks.

Parfaicte la digeſtion	For many thence have ſuffer'd Pain;
Pour faire generacion.	I do not ſay, but married Men
Auſſi grands inconveniens	May do the Office, now and then,
Vienent pour trop manger & boire;	As requiſite for Procreation,
On a veu de grands accidens	But, let them do't with Moderation,
Deſquels devons avoir memoire.	And in the Morning, when, for uſes,
Et pource, ſi me voulez croire,	Digeſtion has prepar'd the Juices;
Mangez peu, net & bon il ſoit:	Too many by Experience learn,
(a) Id. ibid. Fol eſt qui ſoi-meſmes deçoit (a).	(May their Examples others warn!)
	Diſtempers, more than one can think,
The leaſt exceſs of any kind,	Flow from exceſs, in Meat and Drink.
Whether of Body, or of Mind,	Be then content with little Food,
With ſtudious Care be ſure avoid,	And chuſe that little clean and good:
Health by exceſs is oft deſtroy'd;	This, take my Word, 's the ſafeſt Rule;
From Am'rous dalliance abſtain,	He that deceives himſelf 's a Fool.

BUNEL (PETER), a Native of Toulouſe, was one of the politeſt Latin Writers that lived in the XVIth Century [A]. He ſtudied at Paris, in Coqueret College, where he glorioufly diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his noble Genius. Being returned to Toulouſe, and not knowing how to maintain himſelf in his Family, he ſought his Fortune elſewhere. He went to Padua, and was maintained there by Æmilius Perrotus. Afterwards he had a good place procured him in the Houſe of Lazarus de Baif, Embaſſador of Francis I, at Venice, where he ſpent three Years with great Satisfaction and Profit; and was even aſſiſted, in his Study of the Greek Tongue, by the Embaſſador his Maſter. When he had made a conſiderable Progreſs in that Language, he ſtudied the Hebrew Tongue. George de Salve, Biſhop of Lavaur, who was made Embaſſador of Francis I, at Venice, after Lazarus de Baif, took Bunel into his Service. They were ſo pleaſed with one another, that when the Biſhop repaſſed the Alpes, and reſolved to reſide in his Biſhopric, according to the Duty of a good Prelate, he found Bunel altogether diſpoſed to retreat to Lavaur. That learned Man found there what ſuited beſt with his Humour; a great Tranquillity, a great deal of time to ſtudy, and the ſatisfaction of not having before his Eyes the great Examples of the Corruption of the Age. After the Death of his Prelate (a), he returned to Toulouſe, where he would have been in a poor and miſerable Condition [B], if Meſſieurs du Faur, Protectors of Virtue and Learning, had

(a) He died in 1544.

[A] He was one of the politeſt Latin Writers in the XVIth Century.] He ſerved for a Model to Paulus Manutius, which is a great Encomium. Catel could not well forget it. 'Stephen (1) Bunel, 'ſays he (2), who inſtructed the ſaid Sieur de Py- 'brac in polite Literature, and whoſe Latin Epiſtles are extant, which were printed in Italy, and other Places, was the firſt who, in his Time, taught the Romans and Italians to ſpeak Latin with Purity, and in the Ciceronian Stile; whereas before they were miſled by the Stile of Politian, Hermolaus Barbarus, and others, as Paulus Manutius, a very elegant Latiniſt, and a very competent Judge, acknowledges as to himſelf in his Epiſtles.' Henry Stephens had before taken Advantage of Paul Manutius's Acknowledgment. Take a ſhort Account of what he did: Diſcourſing one Day with Henry III, he told him that an Italian had made bold to ſay, in a printed Book, That Italy had produced many Ciceronians, and France had produced none. The King was very much ſurpriſed at it, and deſired to know whether it was true: He was anſwered that it was falſe. Whereupon he deſired that a Parallel ſhould be drawn between the Italian and French Ciceronians (3). In obedience to him, Henry Stephens publiſhed the Letters of our Bunel, and ſome ſelect ones of Longolius, to which he added, in the ſame Volume, the ſelect Letters of Paul Manutius and Sadolet, with ſome of Peter Bembo. He named indeed Peter Bunel to Henry III, but he forgot to tell the King that That Man alone was as good as many: 'Mihi cum 'alios tum Petrum Bunellum ſuggeſſit quidem 'memoria: ſed, vel unum hunc eſſe inſtar multorum poſſe, id vero addere, in mentem non 'venit (4). —— My Memory ſuggeſted to me Peter Bunel among others: but, I forgot, to add, that he alone was as good as many.' He thinks that thoſe, who do not envy the Glory of France, will judge of Peter Bunel as he does: 'Quod apud te 'tacui de Bunello publicè ita dico, ut mihi, quicunque Gallicæ laudi non invidebunt, aſſenſuros, 'perſuaſum propemodum habeam (5). ---- What 'I did not mention to you concerning Bunel, I ſay publickly, in which I am almoſt perſuaded, that 'every one, who does not envy the Honour of France, 'will agree with me.' He not only repreſents him as a Ciceronian, but even as the Maſter of the Italian Ciceronians (6), for which he alledges Manutius's own Confeſſion. 'Is enim quum ſummum 'Ciceronianitatis attigiſſe gradum exiſtimetur, ad 'eam tamen ſe nonniſi ductu & auſpiciis homi'nis Galli perveniſſe fatetur. Ita enim hic in quadam ad Vidum Fabrum epiſtola (quæ eſt libro 'ejus epiſtolarum primo) de noſtro Petro Bunello, Ego ab illo maximum habebam beneficium, quod 'me cum Politianis & Eraſmis neſcio quibus miſere 'errantem, in hanc rectæ ſcribendi viam primus in'duxerat. Sed in poſterioribus Editionibus cum 'Philelphis & Campanis, pro illis cum Politianis & 'Eraſmis, ſcriptum eſt. Utrocunque tamen ſcribatur modo, primum Ciceronianè ſcribendi noſtro 'Bunello laus conſtat: non parva illa quidem, vel ipſius Manutii judicio. Is enim Politianos & Eraſmos (in quorum poſtea locum Philelphi & Campani ſubſtituti fuerunt) quod eam quam ipſi Bunello oſtendit ſcribendi viam non tenuerint, miſere 'erraſſe arbitratur (7) —— For though he is thought 'to have attained to the higheſt Pitch of the Ciceronian Stile, yet, he confeſſes, that he did not attain it, without the Inſtruction and Aſſiſtance of a French Man. For in a Letter to Guy Faber (extant in the firſt Book of his Letters) concerning our Bunel, he ſays thus: I received great Benefit from him, for he firſt brought me into the way of writing well, from whence I had miſerably ſtrayed after Politian and Eraſmus. But in the latter Editions, inſtead of Politian and Eraſmus, is put Philelphus and Campanus. Which way ever we read it, the Praiſe of writing in a Ciceronian Stile remains fixed to our Bunel: no ſmall Commendation even in Manutius's Opinion. For he thought that Politian and Eraſmus (in whoſe ſtead Philelphus and Campanus were afterwards ſubſtituted) were very much in the wrong, that they did not follow that Method of writing, which Bunel ſhewed him.'

[B] He returned to Toulouſe, and would have been in a poor and miſerable Condition.] Here I muſt

(1) He ſhould have ſaid Peter.

(2) Catel's Memoirs for the Hiſtory of Languedoc, pag. 128.

(3) Taken from the Epiſtle Dedicatory of Henry Stephens, to Henry III, perfixed to the Letters of Peter Bunellus, &c. 1581.

(4) Henr. Stephanus, in Epiſt. Dedicat. Epiſt. Bunellii.

(5) Id. ibid.

(6) Id. in Præfatione.

(7) Id. ibid.

had not of their own Accord exerted their Liberality towards him. One of them put his Sons under his Care, to inſtruct them, and go with them into Italy. Bunel did not make an end of his Journey, for he died of a burning Fever at Turin. He lived but Forty ſeven Years. He was a Man more commendable ſtill for his regular Life, than for the Beauty of his Stile (b). He was never ſeen to hunt after Riches and Preferments: being contented with Neceſſaries, he made it his chief Buſineſs to cultivate his Mind [C]: This Conduct is almoſt as rare in the Commonwealth

(b) Taken from Mr Gravetol the Advocate's, Preface to Bunel's Letters in the Toulouſe Edition, 1687.

muſt obſerve, that ſome Perſons exaſperated the Biſhop's Brothers againſt him. They made them believe he had inſpired him with the Deſire of leaving the Court, and minding only the Duties of Epiſcopacy, and even of leading an auſtere and over contemplative Life. They repreſented to them, that That Advice had been attended with fatal Conſequences; ſince that Prelate had not only ſtopped the Courſe of his Fortune, when in a fair way, but alſo loſt his Life in the Flower of his Age, by being a rigid Follower of a ſpiritual Life. Bunel being told, that thoſe Gentlemen gave Credit to ſuch Reports, and were angry with him, durſt not write to them in his own Juſtification: but he wrote to Peter Danes and to du Ferrier upon that Subject. He repreſented to them, that two ſorts of Men did him that ill Office. Some had been diſpleaſed to ſee George de Selve confine himſelf to his Biſhopric; others found him too ſevere againſt their diſorderly Lives: All of them hated Bunel; the former, becauſe they looked on him as the Cauſe of that Retirement, whereby they had been deprived of the Preferments which they expected; and the latter, becauſe they looked on him as the Inſtrument of the Penalties which the Prelate had made uſe of to reſtrain their ill Lives. Bunel in ſome meaſure excuſes the Ambition of the former, and deſpiſes the Reſentment of the latter. He does not think it ſtrange, that Men, infatuated with human Grandeur, who had ſcarce ſeen any Example of a noble Contempt of worldly Things, ſhould be diſpleaſed with the Biſhop's Retreat: But he is ſo charmed with his Reſolution to reſide in his Biſhopric, that he dares not aſcribe to himſelf the Glory of having adviſed him to it. Let us ſee his own Words: 'Duo ſunt hominum genera, quos mihi 'ſuccenſere minime miror, & non ita moleſte fero: 'unum eſt eorum, qui Vauenſem Antiſtitem Vaurum ſecedere moleſte ferebant: quod perinde eſt, 'atque ſi ducem exercitus in caſtra venire, in acie verſari, cum hoſte, ſi res ferat, confligere nunquam patiare. Verum ii, quoniam rerum humanarum ſplendore capti, ſerpunt humi, neque in cœlum ſuſpicere queunt, ferendi ſunt, &, ſi incurſabit aliquando in nos eorum dolor, non ſunt aſperius repellendi. Oppreſſi ſunt opinionibus, magnos ſequuntur duces, ut jam quod exemplo multorum faciant, jure quodammodo facere videantur. Sed interim quid mihi vitio vertant, 'ſatis intelligere non poſſum. Georgius Selva 'Vauenſis Antiſtes religionem Chriſtianam ſuis & 'ſuorum commodis, divina humanis, æterna caducis prætulit.' Quid ad me? ſi hoc mihi tribuunt, 'rerum pulcherrimarum authorem me laudant: 'quod ego neque agnoſco, neque ſane mihi tribui poſtulo - - - - - ſunt nonnulli - - - - - qui ad 'ſecundum diſtributionis meæ genus pertinent, 'quorum ego rationibus cum una vivebamus optime quidem conſultum ſemper volui: ſed quia 'juſſu patroni illorum cupiditatibus adverſabar, 'odiſſe me peſſime nunquam deſiterunt: horum 'ego teſtimonium, quoniam nullius ponderis eſt, 'refellere non conſtitui, neque ſcelera & flagitia 'acerbius inſectari. Ergo & illos priores minime 'miror, & iſtos facile contemno (8). - - - - There 'are two ſorts of Men that I do not wonder are 'angry at me, nor am I ſo much concerned at it: 'one ſort are they who were grieved that the Biſhop 'of Lavaur retired to his Dioceſe; which is juſt 'as if you ſhould not allow a General to come to 'the Camp, to continue with the Army, and Fight 'the Enemy if need be. But as they, being taken 'with the Splendor of human Things, grovel on the 'Earth, and cannot look up to Heaven; they are 'to be born with, and if their Diſpleaſure ſhould 'at any time fall on me, they are not to be repulſed roughly. They are born down by Opinions, 'and follow great Leaders; ſo that in what they do, 'after the Example of many, they imagine they 'are in ſome meaſure in the right. But, in the 'mean time, I cannot ſee what they can blame me 'for. George de Selve, Biſhop of Lavaur, *preferred the Chriſtian Religion to his own and his 'Family's Intereſt, divine to human, and eternal 'to tranſitory Things. What is that to me? if 'they attribute this to me, they commend me as 'Author of a moſt laudable thing: which I neither 'acknowledge, nor deſire to be aſcribed to me - - - - 'there are ſome - - - - who belong to my ſecond Diviſion, to whoſe way of Life I was a thorough 'Well-wiſher, when I lived amongſt them; but, becauſe, by order of my Patron, I was an Enemy 'to their Deſires, they have always hated me: [illegible] 'Teſtimony of theſe Men being of no weight, I 'thought not fit to refute it, nor inveigh too ſharply 'againſt their Crimes and Wickedneſs. [illegible] 'fore the firſt I do not at all wonder at; the latter 'I heartily deſpiſe.' He is ſo far from owning, that he urged his Maſter to an over rigid [illegible] that, on the contrary, he maintains he often exhorted him to uſe Moderation, and to conſider that a Man, by neglecting his Body, may loſe his Health, and even his Life. 'Simulatque eum ad res divinas accerrime contemplandas evolare, neque ſolum divitias & honores contemnere, ſed parum etiam valetudini parcere animadverti: quid prætermiſi, quo eum à nimia illa animi contentione revocarem? Quoties illud uſurpavi, curandum eſſe, ut quæ libenter, ea etiam diutius faceret? Egi interdum liberius, & eam quam nunc video rerum commutationem, & pene genus ipſum mortis prædixi. Cum enim corpus, meo judicio, neque ſatis ali, neque exerceri, animum autem ad cœleſtium rerum cogitationem continenter ſevocari animadverterem, non fuit difficile colligere, hoc diuturnum eſſe non poſſe (9). - - - - As ſoon as I obſerved that he applied himſelf ſo eagerly to the Contemplation of divine things, and not only deſpiſed Riches and Honours, but even neglected his Health; what did I omit whereby I might divert him from that over intenſeneſs of Thought? How often did I urge him to take Care that what he did with Pleaſure he might do long? I ſometimes ſpoke very freely, and foretold that Change which I now ſee, and almoſt the very manner of his Death. For when I ſaw that his Body was not, in my Judgment, either nouriſhed or exerciſed ſufficiently, and his Mind perpetually taken up with the Contemplation of heavenly Things, it was eaſy to judge, that That could not laſt long.'

(9) Id. Epiſt. xlviii, pag. 165, 166. See alſo Epiſt. liii, p. 186.

[C] Being contented with Neceſſaries, he made it his chief Buſineſs to cultivate his Mind.] He wrote to du Ferrier the following Words (10): 'Quanquam poſtulare videbatur fortunarum mearum tenuitas, ut longe mihi in poſterum proſpicerem, tamen ut verum fatear, ego mei diſſimilis eſſe non poſſum. Poſt Deum, in ſtudiis Literarum mihi ſunt omnia, quæ etiam dabo operam ut ad eum ipſum referantur. Dices hominem egeſtate oppreſſum præclari nihil efficere poſſe: Verum id quidem eſt: Sed ego, cum parvo contentus ſim, nunquam exiſtimavi id mihi deeſſe poſſe: quæ ſpes adhuc me non fefellit (11). - - - - For tho' the narrowneſs of my Fortune ſeemed to require, that I ſhould make Proviſion for the time to come, yet to tell the Truth, I cannot differ from myſelf. Next to GOD, my whole Study is in Literature, and that I will endeavour to turn to his Service. You will ſay, that a Man, oppreſſed with Poverty, can do nothing conſiderable: That is true indeed: But I, being content with a little, never thought I could want that, and hitherto my Expectation has not failed.' What he wrote to Reynold Chandon, deſerves to be duly conſidered,

(10) Id. Epiſt. liii, pag. 187, 188.

(11) It is in the Edition of Toulouſe, 1687, me fefellit. It is a Fault of the Preſs, which ſpoils the Senſe.

(8) Petrus Bunellus, Epiſt. liii, pag. 184, 185.

BIRMINGHAM LAW SOCIETY

Commonwealth of Learning as elſewhere. There are ſome Latin Letters of this good confidered. Chandos was a Man, who loved him much, and who had procured him a handſome and very neceſſary Place in the Houſe of the French Embaſſador (12). 'In Italia cum ex magna 'rerum omnium difficultate laborarem, tu princeps 'ſponte tua ad me amandum & tuendum omnes 'conatus meos & impetus contuliſti (13). - - - - In 'Italy, when I laboured under great Difficulty in 'all my Affairs, you, of your own accord, generouſ- 'ly employed your utmoſt Endeavours and Power 'to give me Favour and Protection.' Some Years after he endeavoured to ſerve him, and to put him in the way of making his Fortune. But Bunel made Anſwer, That he had no Ambition, and ſhould not much care to get conſiderable Preferments, tho' Things were well regulated; and that he would have none, knowing they are the Reward of vicious Practices, and that he had not the ill Qualities that are requiſite for a Man to raiſe himſelf in the World. 'Si rempublicam recta ra- 'tione geri viderem, & ad ſummos honores ac- 'quirendos mihi facillima eſſent omnia, aſcendere 'tamen altius non magnopere laborarem. Nunc 'vero cum inſignia iſta dignitatum, non virtuti, 'induſtriæque, ſed improbitati inertiæque tribui vi- 'deam, neque hujuſcemodi præmia, ſi mei ſimilis 'eſſe volo, optare debeo, neque cum ab iis arti- 'bus, quibus hæc parantur, peſſime inſtructus ſim, 'ſperare poſſum (14). - - - - - If I ſaw public Af- 'fairs managed aright, and it were ever ſo eaſy 'for me to attain the greateſt Honours, yet I ſhould 'not greatly labour to riſe high. But now, when 'I ſee Dignities are not given to Virtue and In- 'duſtry, but to Vice and Idleneſs; I ought not, if 'I will be conſiſtent with myſelf, wiſh for ſuch 'Rewards, nor, being ill provided with thoſe Arts 'by which they are obtained, can I hope for 'them.' He adds, that, if his Friends will do ſomething for him that ſuits with his Inclination, they muſt know, that he is only for a quiet Life, and that he has choſen a Cloſet Retirement, as a Harbour wherein he may ſhelter himſelf from the Storms of Ambition and Envy; that Men want things only in Proportion to their Deſires; that as for him, he has confined his Deſires within narrow Bounds, and therefore does not think himſelf poor for not having what he does not wiſh for; that thoſe, who deſpiſe his Reſolution, may run as faſt as they pleaſe, whither their blind Avarice drives them; that he does not care for it, provided they ſuffer him to live a quiet Life in the Boſom of his Chriſtian Philoſophy. 'Ego ani- 'mi tranquillitatem mihi propoſui, ad quam meas 'actiones & cogitationes omnes referri volo: quic- 'quid ab hac abducit, averſor & abominor. - - - - 'Ego ne maximas ambitionis & invidiæ procellas 'ſubire cogerer in portum hunc literarum me ab- 'didi: tu me egredi, & turbulentiſſima tempeſtate 'vela facere jubes: magnum eſt id quidem, quod 'me conſecuturum ſperas, ſed non ſatis ad id 'quod volo accommodatum. Pereximum eſt, mi 'Reynolde, quod mihi deeſt, quoniam in rebus 'humanis tantum cuique opus eſt, quantum quiſ- 'que cupit: cui cupiditati anguſtos cancellos cir- 'cundedi, eiſdem terminis inopiam, quibus deſide- 'rium rerum definio. Hanc ſententiam ſi quis non 'laudat, aut ſi etiam meum hoc conſilium con- 'temnit, nihil me movet, modo ne mihi moleſtus 'ſit: ruat quo cœcæ cupiditates eum conſtrictum 'trahunt, me in hac philoſophia Chriſtiana liberum 'acquieſcere patiatur (15). - - - - What I have in 'view is Tranquillity of Mind; to this I would 'have all my Actions and Thoughts to tend: what- 'ſoever leads another way I ſhun and abominate. 'I - - - - have retired into this Haven of Litera- 'ture, that I might not be obliged to go through 'the Storms of Ambition and Envy; you deſire me 'to come out, and ſail in a moſt violent Tempeſt: it is indeed a great thing that you hope I ſhall 'obtain, but not well ſuited to what I deſire. It is very little, my Reynold, that I want; for in things of this World every Man wants juſt as 'much as he deſires: this Deſire I have circum- 'ſcribed in narrow Bounds, and define Want in the ſame Terms with the Deſire of Things. If 'any one does not like my Opinion, or even deſpiſes 'this Reſolution of mine, that does not affect me, ſo 'he be not troubleſome to me; let him run where 'his blind Deſires carry him Priſoner, and let me 'remain free in this Chriſtian Philoſophy.' There is no doubt, but he gives a faithful Account of his Heart here; he was a good Man then, and ſuch an one as Diogenes looked for: Thus all Men ought indeed to turn their Mind; eſpecially Chriſtians; and yet this is what they will not do, hardly one in Six hundred thouſand. The Reformed have a ſmall Catechiſm, in which the firſt Queſtion is, Wherefore has GOD ſent us into the World? The Catechumen anſwers, To know, and to ſerve Him. This, in general, is the Principle of all Chriſtians; but it is a Principle only in Theory, a meer Speculation: if their Anſwer were to be ſuited to their moral Practice, moſt Chriſtians would anſwer, That GOD ſent them into the World to inrich themſelves, and riſe to high Offices; for this is actually all they aim at; this is their whole Care. Some indeed think at firſt on nothing more than obtaining a competent Maintenance; but as ſoon as they get poſſeſſed of this Competency, they immediately aim at aggrandizing themſelves, and propoſe by degrees to mount to the higheſt Dignities. This Spirit governs a Father, both with regard to himſelf and to his Children, and he communicates it to them, as ſoon as their Age will permit. No one is ſatisfied with the Condition he is born in; but endeavours to make a better Figure than his Father (16). The Son of a mean Artiſt uſes his utmoſt Endeavour to become a rich Citizen. If his covetous and inſatiable Induſtry brings him in great Riches, he ſoon grows prodigal in hopes of attaining to Offices, and getting a ſhare in the Government. No Expences appear too great, provided they are but uſeful towards procuring him the good Offices of the mediate or immediate Diſtributers of Magiſtracy. They, who, by their Character, are moſt obliged to practiſe the Precepts of JESUS CHRIST concerning the deſpiſing of this World, forget this Obligation but too often; and take Opportunities of getting great Eſtates, to advance their Families, and to raiſe their Dependants. This puts me in mind of what a good Man told me one day. He happened to make a Viſit to Mr  where there were nine or ten Perſons more, who diſcourſed on divers Things. At laſt, the Converſation fell on the Qualities of a certain Miniſter. One of thoſe Gentlemen blamed him freely enough for ſome Things: Another anſwered, and, without juſtifying the Miniſter altogether on theſe Points, alledged other Things in his Favour, and inſiſted chiefly on the Article of Friendſhip. 'Never, ſaid he, was a better Friend than 'this Miniſter, nor a Perſon of more Zeal to do 'good to thoſe who eſpouſe his Intereſts. He 'procured Penſions for ſuch and ſuch; by his Re- 'commendation, ſuch and ſuch a one obtained a 'Place of Two thouſand Livres a Year, and are 'in a way to make their Fortune. Others keep 'their Coaches, by means of the private Hints he 'had given them to buy Goods, that would be- 'come ſcarce in a little time. Others, deſiring 'paſſionately to attain to the Magiſtracy, have, by 'his good Offices, overcome the Difficulties which 'lay in their way.' After he had gone through ſeveral Articles, Mr  took up the Diſcourſe, and ſaid, 'I am much ſcandalized at the manner of 'your praiſing a Succeſſor of the Apoſtles. I 'ſhould not think it ſtrange, if you praiſed a Pa- 'gan, or a Layman of our Religion at this rate; 'but I cannot bear your palming theſe things up- 'on us, as very fine Qualities in a Miniſter of 'JESUS CHRIST. Is it his buſineſs to know whether 'ſuch or ſuch Merchandizes will riſe or fall about 'ſuch a time (17)? Does it become him to give 'his Friends notice of it, and to ſmooth them a 'way to Riches and Honours? Is not this pour- 'ing of Oil into the Fire of Covetouſneſs and 'Ambition, a Fire which he is obliged to quench 'in the Soul of all his Flock, as much as poſſi- 'ble? Does he not know, that the Riches and Ho- 'nours of this World are the Nouriſhment of Va- 'nity, (12) Lettres de Paſq.

(13) Bunel, Epiſt. xxi, pag. 80. See alſo Letter xxvii, pag. 104.

(14) Id. ibid. pag. 76, 77. Compare this with the Remark [G], of the Article ATTICUS.

(15) Id. p. 77, 78.

(16) All would act like Horace's Me libertino natum patre & in tenui re Majores pennas nido extendiſſe loquêris. Horat. Epiſt. xx. lib. i, ver. 20.

(17) It is with regard to things of this kind, that one may ſay of an Eccleſiaſtic, nescire quædam magna pars eſt ſapientiæ. — To be ignorant of this, is at leaſt one way to underſtand an obſcure Paſſage of St Paul.

good Man, which are written with the greateſt Purity [D], and contain ſeveral curious Facts [E]. Some (c) think that he was the Son of William Bunel, whom I have (c) Graverol. in Præf. Epiſt. Bun.

' nity, are ſo many Clogs, and Stumbling-blocks ' in the way of Salvation; he would be juſt as ' much to be praiſed if he exhorted his Friends ' to give to the Poor what they expend in en- ' deavouring to advance themſelves, as he is ' to be blamed in favouring their Ambition. If ' he perſuaded a Friend of his to put down his ' Coach, and walk about on Foot, and ſell his ' Equipage to endow Hoſpitals, I ſhould look up- ' on this as a true friendly Office in him: And ' this, Sir, is the Duty of your Hero.'

Theſe are doubtleſs very Chriſtian Thoughts; but in the corrupt State in which we live, they are meer Platonic Ideas. That Contempt of Riches and Dignities, which conſtituted the Character of our Bunel, is ſeldom found at preſent either in the Laity or Clergy; and what ſhews the height of Corruption, is, that there is hardly any one but deſpiſes thoſe who preſerve that Indifference. So true is it, that the Truths of the Goſpel, which are daily read and heard among us, make but little Impreſſion on our Hearts! A learned Man is highly praiſed and admired, who knows how to enrich himſelf, and to climb from Office to Office, and who, to make his Fortune, divides his whole time into two parts, the one for his Books, and the other to court the Favour of great Perſons, and to inſinuate himſelf every where. Such a Perſon, who is really moſt deſpicable, is not deſpiſed. Bunel, and ſuch as he, who are, in reality, moſt worthy of Eſteem, are looked upon with Contempt. What an Allotment of Approbation is here! Bunel is according to Rule, and the others not. I ſay, Bunel, who prefers the quiet of his Studies, before all the Splendor of worldly Honours. ' Recuperata animi tranquillitate mihi in animo eſt, ' in deſertiſſimam ſolitudinem ſecedere, ibique cum ' libris meis, & uno fortaſſe ſtudiorum ſocio, annos ' aliquot ſoluto & vacuo animo Neptunum procul à ' terra ſpectare furentem. Quod meum conſilium ' rei familiaris angustiæ impedire poſſe viderentur, ' niſi Fabri huic malo liberalitate ſua mederi ſe velle ' confirmarent. Quod ſi res ex ſententia ſuccedent, ' equidem neque Regibus potentiam & voluptates, ' neque Ducibus victorias & triumphos, neque fe- ' neratoribus divitias, neque tibi & Montauro noſtro ' Reipub. gerendæ laudem invidebo (18). —— ' When I have recovered my Tranquillity of Mind, ' I think to retire into ſome unfrequented Solitude, ' and there, with my Books, and perhaps, one Com- ' panion in Study, for ſome Years, with a free and ' eaſy Mind, from Land to view the Sea rage at ' a Diſtance. This Purpoſe of mine might ſeem ' likely to be obſtructed, by the Straitneſs of my ' Circumſtances, had not the Fabers aſſured me, that ' they will remedy this Evil by their Bounty. And ' if things ſucceed to my Mind, truly I ſhall nei- ' ther envy Kings their Power and Pleaſures, nor ' Generals their Victories and Triumphs, nor Uſurers ' their Wealth, nor you, and Montaur, the Honour ' of ruling the State.' If he had ſtood fair to attain to the Academical Dignities or Honours, and had not been promoted to them in his Turn, becauſe he was not in the Intereſts of the prevailing Faction, do you think it would have vexed him, or that, to retrieve this pretended Diſgrace, he would have gone over to the more powerful Party? For my part, I do not think he would. He would have been more a Philoſopher than a thouſand others are: The diſappointing theſe of their Reward troubles them: they ſink under the preſſure ſoon or late: I mean, they put themſelves into the Road to Favour. Their Inconſtancy might be excuſed, if Excluſion was a ſign of want of Merit; but as it only proves, that their party is the weaker, it does no prejudice to a Man's true Honour; it may even contribute to render it more ſhining, both for the preſent and the future. What has been ſaid of Martyrs, that it is the Cauſe, and not the ſuffering, that makes them (19), is true both in that Senſe, and the contrary: for it is not the privation of Dignities that diſhonours a Man, but the Cauſe of that privation; they therefore who do not attain to them, becauſe they ſtand firm on the ſide of Juſtice, tho' inferior in Credit, ought to look upon that, not as a Diſhonour, but as a Piece of Honour; thus our Bunel would have done (a).

(18) Bunel, Epiſt. xlvi, pag. 259.

(19) Cauſa, non pœna, facit martyrem.

[(a) Peter Bunel, when young, had taken ſome liking to the Doctrine of the Reformed; and a Letter from Paulus Manutius to Guy du Faur, pag. 23 of Minutius Letters, Edition of Morges, gives room to think, that ſome Catholics believed, that Bunel retained ſome tincture of Proteſtantiſm to his Death. Satis ſcio, ſays that Letter, fuiſſe qui illum (Bunellum) depravatæ Religionis nomine in Crimen vocaverunt. —— I know very well, that ſome Perſons accuſed him of being heretically inclined. But however it was not on the Article of Juſtification. For according to Beza Hiſt. Eccleſ. Tom. 1. pag. 48. ad ann. 1545, Bunel at that time run into the moſt extravagant Pelagianiſm. Calvin, who had at firſt made account of him, in 1550 was very far from regarding him as his Diſciple: ' Paucos —— videas (ſaid he in that ' Year) Sapientiæ ſuæ perſuaſione inflatos, qui non ' ſint obſtinati veritatis hoſtes; Hypocritæ verò ' uſque rabiem infeſti. Et quæ alia cauſa Bunello ' fuit, cur ab Evangelio deficeret; niſi quod homo ' ad oſtentationem natus, & ſibi plus nimio pla- ' cens, in ordinem ſe cogi ægrè ſuſtinebat †? ' ——— You find few who are puffed up with the ' Opinion of their own Wiſdom, but they are obſti- ' nate Enemies to the Truth, and Hypocrites, ſpite- ' ful even to madneſs. And what other reaſon had ' Bunel to fall away from the Goſpel, except that ' he was a Man naturally inclined to Oſtentation, ' and ſo over full of himſelf, that he could hardly ' bear to be brought into Order.' If Paulus Manutius's Letter were dated, we might know very near the time of Bunel's Death. However, as that Letter is addreſſed to Guy du Faur (Pibrac), yet a Youth, who was born about the Year, 1528, I imagine that in the Year 1551, when Charles Stephens publiſhed Bunel's Letters, Bunel was dead but a very little before. Rem. Crit.]

† Calvin. pag. 30, of his Treatiſe De Scan alis, Edit. 1551.

[D] We have ſome of his Latin Letters, written with the utmoſt Purity.] Charles Stephens collected them into one Body, and publiſhed them in the Year 1551 (20). Some of them had appeared before, printed at Toulouſe (21): ſome of them were likewiſe inſerted in the Volume intituled, Epiſtolæ Clarorum Virorum. Charles Stephen's Edition was imitated at Cologn in the Year 1568 (22). Henry Stephens republiſhed Bunel's Letters in the Year 1581: they were reprinted at Toulouſe in the Year 1687: this laſt Edition is preferable to all the reſt, on Account of the Notes added to it, by the late Mr Graverol, Advocate of Nimes, but is inferior to that of Henry Stephens, as to the Faults of the Preſs. Some of theſe Faults intirely ſpoil the Senſe. I have given one example of it (23), and here follows another. Cùm ille in omni genere doctrinæ tibi meritò tantum tribuat, quantum nemini, nec quem abs te commendari audivit, ſuis beneficiis dignum judicat (24): thus we read it in the Edition of Toulouſe, inſtead of ſuis beneficiis indignum judicet, as it is in that of Henry Stephens. Once more: Illud me in eo ſene imprimis delectabat, quod inſtitutum eorum vehementer reprehenderet, qui Philoſophiæ ſtudiis plusquam neceſſe Chriſtianis eſſet, dediti, literas aut nunquam, aut ſero admodum attingerent (25). Thus the Edition of Toulouſe has it: the Word ſacras does not follow literas, as it does in that of Henry Stephens; and that Omiſſion makes a very puzzling Difficulty.

(20) Epitome Biblioth. Geſneri, pag. 668.

(21) Jacobus Graverol, In præfatione Epiſt Bunelli.

(22) Epit. Biblioth. Geſneri, pag. 608.

(23) Above, Citation (12).

(24) Bunellus, Epiſt. lvi, pag. 190.

(25) Id. ibid. pag 197.

[E] ——— which contained ſome curious Facts.] I will give an example. We find there, that a Profeſſor of Padua, in his Lectures, cenſured thoſe who were more attached to the Studies of Philoſophy, than is neceſſary for a Chriſtian, and neglected the the Study of the Scriptures all their Lives, or did not begin to examine them till very late (26). This Profeſſor's Reaſons were ſo ſtrong, that they touched ſome of thoſe who deſerved his Cenſure (27). But a Letter from Sadolet ſlackened their Reſolution: they were beginning to renounce their

(26) Id. ibid.

(27) Nonnullos harum rerum peritos inſolentes ſua Oratione permovere viſus eſt. Bunellus, Epiſt. lvi, pag. 198.

have ſpoken of in the foregoing Article; but it is not probable, ſince we find not the leaſt mention of it, either in his Letters, or in the Authors that ſpeak of him (d). When Sammarthanus obſerves that the Father of Peter Bunel was a Norman (e), would he have forgot ſo honourable a Character as that of Regent Doctor, of a famous Univerſity? The Capitouls of Toulouſe made a Statue of Marble in honour of Peter Bunel, and placed it in the Town-Houſe [F].

(d) Catel, Sammarthanus, Hen. Stephens, &c.

(e) Tholoſæ Normano patre natum. Sammarthanus, Elog. lib. i, pag. 42.

Concubine, that is to ſay, Philoſophy, to apply themſelves to Theology, as to a chaſt Spouſe, when Sadolet's Letter engaged them anew in Concubinage. 'Cujus (Sadoleti) authoritate & elo-'quentia, quoniam nonnullos ita commoveri audio, 'ut in eo quod facere ſtatuerant, non perſeve-'rent: magis autem repudiata Theologia, quam 'paulò antè, veluti caſtiſſimam conjugem ſibi de-'ſponderant, ad veterem pellicem, quam à ſe di-'mittere cogitabant, & ejus blandiſſimas illecebras 'revolvantur: placet in præſentia, &c. — As I (28) Id. ibid. pag. 199. 'underſtand that ſome are ſo moved with his (Sado-'let's) Authority and Eloquence, that they do not 'perſevere in their Reſolution, but have rather put 'away Theology, which they had juſt before eſpouſed 'as a chaſt Wife, and are returned to their old 'Harlot, which they had thought to put away: I 'have a mind at preſent, &c. This Letter was thus occaſioned; Reginald Pole, writing to Sadolet, deſired him to prevail with Lazarus Bonamicus, to apply himſelf to the Holy Scriptures, or at leaſt to abandon his Rhetoric, and ſtudy Philoſophy. Pole was in hopes that That Study would not detain Bonamicus long, and would lead him much further. He thought that Bonamicus would perceive, that the light of Philoſophy cannot lead a Man any further, than to make him at laſt own, that he knows only this, that he knows nothing: That this is the Ne plus ultra of Philoſophy: from whence it muſt neceſſarily be concluded, that the mind of Man has need of ſome other light to diſpel the Darkneſs of it's ignorance. Now where is that Light to be found but in Revelation? 'Petierat Polus, ut, eſt 'religionis amplificandæ cupidiſſimus, à Sadoleto 'per Epiſtolam, ut Lazarum Bonamicum, ſuum 'contubernalem, ad ſtudia literarum ſacrarum im-'pelleret: velle id Antiſtitem non dubitabat: va-'lere plurimum apud Bonamicum authoritatem ejus 'ſciebat. Quod ſi id fieri poſſe deſperaret, ſaltem 'ab eloquentiæ ſtudiis ad graviora illa Philoſophiæ 'moralis præcepta traduceret: ſe ſperare, ut cùm 'eò perventiſſet, non conſiſtendum ſibi in ea 'diſciplina putaret, quæ altius evehere hominem 'certè non poteſt, quàm ut tandem fateatur, ſe hoc 'unum ſcire, quòd nihil ſciat: Majore quâdam 'luce opus eſſe ad tam craſſas ignorantiæ tenebras 'diſcutiendas (29).' Sadolet anſwered, that he thought it ſtrange, that Philoſophy ſhould be thus deſpiſed, ſince, without it, Theology could not ſubſiſt: 'Cui 'reſpondet Sadoletus ſe aliquantum ægre ferre quod 'videre videatur hæc ornamenta ab eo contemni, 'quæ tanta ſunt, ut ſine his illa quæ omnibus 'præſert, conſtare non poſſint (30).' And there-upon he ſets forth at large the Advantages of Philoſophy. Bunel clears this, and ſhews, that Sadolet's true ſentiments are not what they might ſeem to be at firſt ſight in that Letter. But however that be, I think that Pole's Judgment of Philoſophy, is the very beſt that can be formed, and I am very glad, that ſuch an Author furniſhes me with ſomething to confirm what I lay down in ſeveral Places, that our Reaſon ſerves only to confound every thing, and make us doubt of every thing. That it has no ſooner built a Syſtem, but it ſhews you the way to ruin it. It is a true Penelope, which undoes in the Night all her Day's Work. Thus the beſt uſe that can be made of the Study of Philoſophy, is to know, that it is a Path which leads aſtray, and that we ought to ſeek another Guide, which is the light of Revelation.

(29) Bunelſus, Epiſt. lvi, pag. 199, 200.

(30) Id. ibid. pag. 200, 201.

[F] The Capitouls of Toulouſe made a Statue of Marble, in Honour of Peter Bunel, and placed it in the Town Houſe.] 'Nec ſilentio prætereundum eſt Capito-'linos Toloſanos, ne quid gloriæ tam illuſtris viri deeſ-'ſet, marmoream ejus ſtatuam in Capitolio ali-'quot abhinc annis collocaſſe, accurante clariſſimo 'viro D. Germano La Faille, urbis Syndico, ami-'co multis nominibus venerando, de Republicâ 'literariâ bene merito, cujque ſuum poſteritas de-'cus viciſſim reprendet (31). — Nor muſt we paſs (31) Graverol in Præf. Epiſt. Bunelli. 'over in ſilence, that the Capitouls of Toulouſe, 'left any thing ſhould be wanting to the Glory of 'ſo illuſtrious a Man, placed a Marble Statue of him, 'in their Capitol, a few Years ago, by the care of 'the eminent Germanus La Faille, Syndic of the City, 'my Friend, to whom I am obliged on many Ac-'counts, who deſerves well of the Republic of Let-'ters, and to whom Poſterity ſhall repay the like 'Honour.'

BUPALUS was a famous Sculptor, Native of the Iſle of Chio (a), Son, Grandſon, and Great Grandſon, of a Sculptor. He had a Brother named Athenis (b) [A], of the ſame Profeſſion with himſelf; and probably they worked together, ſince Pliny ſpeaks jointly of them, and their Works. They flouriſhed in the LXth Olympiad, at the ſame time with Hipponax, who was a Poet of a contemptible Figure, ugly, and of a very weak Conſtitution. They ſet their Fancies to work upon him, and repreſented him in a ridiculous Form; but they met with their Match: he attacked them with ſo violent a Satire, that, as ſome Authors ſay, they hanged themſelves for Spite and Vexation (c) [B]. Pliny does not allow this:

(a) Plinius, lib. xxxvi, cap. v.

(b) He is called Anthermus in the Edition of Pliny. See the Article ANTHERMUS.

(c) See the Article HIPPONAX, Remarks [C] and [D].

[A] He had a Brother named Athenis.] Mr Moreri has ſaid indeed, that Bupalus lived with Anthermus (it is thus he ſpeaks according to the old Editions of Pliny); but not that they were two Brothers. Now every one ſees that this was a Circumſtance, which ought not to have been omitted, and without it, it is almoſt ridiculous to obſerve, that theſe two Men lived at the ſame time. On the other Hand, he forges one Bubalus, different from our Bupalus, which is nothing but a Chimera: it is certain, that he makes two Perſons of them; for under the word Bubalus, he refers us to Anthermus, where he ſays, that Anthermus and Bubalus were Brothers. I ſay, he refers thither without referring to Bupalus; and in the Article of this laſt, he does not ſay, that Bupalus was Brother to Anthermus; this ſhews, that Bubalus and Bupalus paſs with him for two Men. Beſides, he varies as to the Profeſſion of thoſe Men; they are two Painters in the Article HIPPONAX (1), and two Sculptors, or Statuaries, every where elſe. He is not the firſt who has thus varied and multiplied. Charles Stephens ſays in one place (2), that they who made the Repreſentation of Hipponax were Painters: in another (3), that Bubalus was a Painter, who made a Groteſque Picture of Hipponax: And in another (4), that Anthermus and Bubalus were two famous Sculptors, who made a ridiculous Figure of Hipponax. Meſſieurs Lloyd and Hofman have kept one part of theſe Variations. See the Remark [C] of the Article HIPPONAX. Bupalus is a great Painter in Calepin. Conſult the learned Adrian Junius, in the fixteenth Chapter of the firſt Book of his Obſervations.

DICTIONARIES criticiſed.

(1) He cites in that Article the 26th Book of Pliny, inſtead of the 36th.

(2) In Hipponax.

(3) In Bubalus.

(4) In Anthermus, and in Bupalus.

[B] - - - - Hipponax wrote ſo violent a Satire againſt them - - - that they hanged themſelves for meer Grief and Vexation.] I ſhall ſay ſomething on this Subject in the Article HIPPONAX; here I only obſerve, that our Dictionaries ſophiſticate Pliny's Account. They (5) relate the thing as if ſeveral Painters

(5) Calepinus, Carol. Stephanus, Lloyd, Hofman, in Hipponax.

this: he says, on the contrary, that, when Hipponax had taken his Revenge, they made several fine Statues in divers Places. He mentions a Diana of theirs, which was at Jasus, in Caria, that was not so admirable as the other Diana, which they made at Chio. This last was placed very high, and appeared with a frowning Countenance to those that came in, and a pleasant one to those that went out. There were several Statues at Rome made by them; they wrought only in white Marble of the Isle of Paros. Pausanias indeed mentions Bupalus (d); but he says nothing of Athenis; he observes that Bupalus was both a good Architect, and a good Sculptor. I think it might be gathered from a Passage in Aristophanes, that the Revenge taken on Bupalus, was not altogether in Verse [C], but consisted in some Blows also.

(d) Pausin. lib. iv, pag. 140, & lib. ix, pag. 309.

Painters had had a share in the insult offered to Hipponax, and as if the Vengeance, taken by that Poet, had thrown some of them into Despair; this supposes that some others of them did not die. Now this is not what Pliny says; he speaks only of Bupalus and Athenis. One of these Authors (6) blunders still worse in another place; for having made no mention of any more than these two Statuaries, he nevertheless says, that the Satires of Hipponax had made some of them hang themselves. Aliquos ex iis ad laqueum compulisse.

(6) Carol. Stephanus, in Anthemius.

[C] It might be gathered from a Passage of Aristophanes, that the Revenge ---- did not consist wholly in Verses.] Let us recite the Words of Aristophanes,

Εἰ νὴ Διά τις τὰς γνάθους τύπτων δίς ἢ τρὶς ἔκοψεν
Ὥσπερ Βυπάλῳ, φαυλὴν ἂν δῆτ' εἶχον.

By Jove, if any one had given them two or three good Cuffs, as they did to Bupalus, they would have held their Tongues.

(7) Adrian. Junius Animadv. lib. i, cap. xi.

A learned Critic (7) was of Opinion, that this Poet alludes to a Verse, wherein Hipponax desires his Coat may be taken away, that he may pull Bupalus's Eyes out.

Ἀδέσθω μου θοιμάτιον, κόψω Βυπάλου τὼ ὀφθαλμώ.

Auferte vestem meam, ut Bupali excidam oculos.

But perhaps there were some other Verses of Hipponax, which made mention of blows given to Bupalus, by him, or some body else. The Allusion to these would be much more likely. The same Critic has found a Proverb of Bupalus's Hatred, where it is certain there is no Proverb; it is in an Epigram of the Anthology, which advertises those who pass by, that the Ashes of Hipponax do still throw out Iambics in hatred of Bupalus.

Οὗτος χ' ἁ τέφρα ἰαμβίζει Βυπάλειον εἰς ἔτι νῦν.

Cujus cinis etiamnum in odium Bupali Iambos jacit (8).

(8) Anthol. lib. iii, pag. 366.

This therefore only relates to a personal, and, as I may say, individual Hatred of this Poet, and is no general Epithet for great Hatred. We cannot therefore on the Authority of this Passage compare the odium Vatinianum, with the odium Bupalium: yet if you consult the Adages of Junius, you will find, that Bupali odium is the LIId Adage of the Vth Century, and that because of the Epigram which I have cited (9). You will find another Fault in it; for by Bupalus's Hatred, we understand that, which he bore to Hipponax, whereas the Epigram speaks only of that of Hipponax to Bupalus. The next Adage, Bupalia Pugna, is better founded; being taken from a Letter of Julian the Apostate (10), where, speaking of some Iambics, which he had received from his Brother, he stiles them thus: Οὐ μάχην ἀείδοντας τὴν Βυπάλειον καὶ τὴν Κυμαίειον πομπὴν, ἀλλ' οἷας ἡ καλὴ Σαπφὼ ᾄδεσθαι τοῖς ὑμνοις ἀρμόττοι. —— They do not sing the Quarrel against Bupalus, to use the Expression of Callimachus; they are such as the fair Sappho requires to be proper for Hymns.

(9) Junius describes it to Leonidas. My Anthology says, the Author of it is uncertain.

(10) Ad Alypium Cursorem. Vide Junium Animadvers. lib. i, cap. xvi.

BURANA (JOHN FRANCIS), born at Verona, flourished in the XVIth Century. He was Disciple of Bagdinus, who explained Aristotle's Logic in the University of Bologna, and shewed a great deal of Subtilty in disputing. This was the reason that the Scholars expressed a great Desire that he would read public Lectures on that part of Philosophy: They had that Satisfaction, and, if they understood their new Master well, they were none of the dullest; for he led them through all the Field of the Greek and Arabian Interpreters. He had studied the Hebrew Tongue with great Success; having quitted his Professorship, he applied himself to the Practice of Physic. He also undertook a Translation of some Treatises of Aristotle, and Averroës, with Commentaries on them. Death prevented his putting the last hand to it. He desired, nevertheless, that it might be printed, and enjoined his Heirs to take care of the Publication, after his Manuscript had been corrected by some learned Men. Bagolin had the Manuscript of it (a) [A].

(a) Taken from the Epistle Dedicatory, which Jerome Bagolin prefixed to the Translation of Aristotle's Analytics, &c. composed by Burana.

[A] He enjoined his Heirs to take care of the Publication of his Writings. Bagolin had the Management of them.] See the Epistle Dedicatory, which he prefixed to the Book, intituled: 'Aristotelis priora resolutoria, Latino sermone donata, & commentariis illustrata à Joanne Francisco Burana, adjecta Averrois Expositione in eosdem libros cum Expositione secundi sesti de facultate propositionum, & Averrois in eosdem compendio, eodem Burana interprete, cum annotationibus Hieronymi Bagolini.' This Work was printed at Paris, by Wechel, in the Year 1539, in Folio. It had been printed at Venice before (1).

(1) See the Bibliotheque of Gesner, fol. 417.

BURGUNDY (House of). There were two Houses of that Name: I shall say but little of the first. It begun under Robert, King of France, Son of Hugh Capet. The third Son of this Robert, and Constance of Provence, was called Robert, and was Duke of Burgundy, and died in the Year 1075. His Descendants were in possession of this Dutchy till Philip I, of that Name, who died without Issue, the Twenty first of November, 1345. After that, John, King of France, gave Burgundy to Philip the Bold, his fourth Son (a). This was the beginning of the second House

(a) Taken from Father Labbe, Tab. Genealogiques, pag. 122, & seq.

Houſe of Burgundy, which flouriſhed extremely under four ſucceſſive Princes, of whom I am going to ſpeak.

BURGUNDY (PHILIP, Duke of), fourth Son of John de Valois, King of France, was born at Pontoiſe, the fifteenth of January, 1341 (a) [A]. He was wounded and taken Priſoner in the Battle of Poitiers, in the Year 1356, after he had given a thouſand Proofs of his Courage, in fighting near his Father (b). Some ſay that it was this Action which obtained him the Sirname of THE BOLD [B]. He received the Inveſtiture of the Duchy of Burgundy, in the Year 1363 (c), and married Margaret of Flanders, only Daughter of the Earl of Flanders and Artois, in the Year 1369 (d). He came to that fine Succeſſion by the Death of his Brother-in-Law, in the Year 1384. The Year following he put an end to a Civil War, which had laſted ſeven Years in Flanders (e), in which the People of Ghent, chiefly, had ſhewn their ſeditious Spirit. He, and the Duke of Bourbon, were charged with the Education of Charles VI, King of France, by Charles V, who died in the Year 1380 (f). The Regency was left to Lewis, Duke of Anjou, Elder Brother of our Philip the Bold. A Difference ſoon aroſe between the two Brothers, thro' Jealouſy of State. This Quarrel broke out in a more fatal manner, when Charles VI, having attained the Age of twenty Years, declared he would take the Reins of the Government into his own Hands (g). He kept his Brother, the Duke of Orleans, near him. The Duke of Burgundy, his Uncle, retired diſſatisfied; and this was the Source of a mortal Enmity between the Houſe of Burgundy, and the Houſe of Orleans. Margaret of Flanders, Wife of Philip the Bold, and Valentina of Milan, Wife of the Duke of Orleans, fomented this Diviſion by their Vanity [C]. The King's Diſtemper, which rendered him incapable of acting without a Guardian, gave room for the Diſorders occaſioned by this fatal Emulation. The States of (a) Father Anſelme, Hiſtoire Genealog. de la Maiſon Roiale, pag. 105.

(b) See Remark [B].

(c) Chellur. Memoires de Bourgogne, pag. 538.

(d) Id. pag. 547.

(e) Pontus Heuterus Rerum Burgund. lib. ii, pag. 48.

(f) Mezerai Abrégé Chronol. Tom. iii. pag. 205.

(g) Id. ibid. pag. 237.

[A] He was born - - - - the fifteenth of January 1341.] This date ſeems to me more certain than that of Pontus Heuterus. He places the Birth of Philip the Bold in the Year 1334 (1). It is not a Fault of the Preſs; for he places his Death on the Twenty ſixth of April, 1404, and makes him ſeventy Years of Age (2). He may be refuted by a very good Reaſon. King John was born the Twenty ſixth of April, 1319 (3), and was married to Bonna of Luxemburg, in the Year 1332 (4). Therefore it is impoſſible that Philip the Bold, his fourth Son, ſhould be born in the Year 1334: and ſeeing Charles V, his eldeſt Son, was born - - - the Twenty firſt of January 1337 (5); I judge if Pontus Heuterus was a good Chronologer. His Error was followed by Lewis Gollut (6), and by Mr Fabert (7). This laſt made a particular Fault, which he copied from Mezerai: he has placed the Death of Philip on the Twenty ſeventh of April, 1403. This Error is more pardonable than that which he falls into two Pages after, when he ſays, that the Ducheſs ſurvived her Husband no more than eleven Months; ſhe dying in the Month of Auguſt, 1405. If one did not ſee ſuch things, one would ſcarce believe that any body could be ſo very careleſs. Obſerve, that Pontus Heuterus, without being miſtaken, has been the Cauſe of the Error: 'Undecimo poſt Audacis mortem menſe, 'ſays he (8), Margareta apoplexia Atrebati tacta 'maritum decimo ſexto Cal. Septembris, anno '1405, vitâ excedens ſequitur. - - - - Eleven Months 'after the Death of her Husband, ſhe was ſtruck 'with an Apoplexy, of which ſhe died in the Month 'of Auguſt 1405.' According to Heuterus's Calculation, the Apoplexy muſt have begun in the Month of March, and ſo the Lady ſurvived her Husband near ſixteen Months.

[B] His Valour - - - - obtained him the Sirname of The Bold.] King John, in the Patent of Inveſtiture, gave Teſtimony of the Valour of his Son; 'Ad memoriam reducentes, ſays he (9) gra-'ta & laude digna ſervitia quæ Chariſſimus Phi-'lippus filius noſter quarto genitus, qui ſponte ex-'poſitus mortis periculo, nobiſcum imperterritus '& impavidus ſtetit in Acie prope Pictavos vul-'neratus, captus & detentus in hoſtium poteſtate, 'ibi & poſt liberationem noſtram hactenus exhi-'buit. - - - - - - Calling to mind the grateful and 'laudable Services of our moſt dear Philip, our 'fourth Son, who expoſed himſelf voluntarily to the 'Danger of his Life, and bravely and undauntedly 'ſtood with us in the Battle near Poitiers, and 'was there wounded, taken and kept Priſoner, per-'formed both then and at all times ſince our Re-'leaſe.' It is ſaid, that this young Prince, when he was wounded, would not ceaſe 'to defend himſelf, even after his Father had bid him lay down 'his Arms. This extraordinary Vigour in a young 'Prince aſtoniſhed the Engliſh. A certain Perſon, 'not willing to pluck ſo fine a Roſe in the Bud, 'ſaid to him aloud: Hold, yield, Bold Philip. This 'Expreſſion was applauded by all preſent, and the 'young Warrior retained the Name of The Bold (10).' Other Reaſons are given for that Epithet; for ſome (11) ſay, that he gave a Box on the Ear to one of the greateſt of the Engliſh Lords, who, in ſerving the Kings of France and England, preſented the Service to the latter before the former, '- - - - - adding with the Blow, 'What! dareſt 'thou ſerve the King of England firſt, when the 'King of France is preſent? which Edward, 'King of England (who valued generous Actions 'as much, if not more than any thing in the 'World), magnified extreamly, and ſaid to him 'chearfully, and in a pleaſant Tone; You are Philip the Bold. Which was the Origin of an extraordinary fine Sirname.' Another Reaſon ſtill has been given for this Title, which is, 'That at 'the Inauguration of Charles VI he was (as firſt 'Peer of France) among the Secular Princes; be-'cauſe of his Duchy of Burgundy. For which 'Reaſon, by the Royal Acts, the firſt and higheſt 'Seat belonged to him. But, on the other hand, 'Lewis, Duke of Anjou, his Brother, inſiſting on 'his Seniority, and that he was, as it were, Go-'vernour to the King, was minded to prevent 'him; and, in ſhort, ſat himſelf down next the 'King. Which Duke Philip perceiving, puſhed 'him back with one hand, and with a Jump flung 'himſelf in between the King and the Duke of 'Anjou, taking the higheſt place, which he in-'ſiſted was his Right. At this all preſent were 'amazed, but did not diſ-eſteem him for it, but 'ſirnamed him The Bold, for this Action, done 'in the Preſence of the greateſt King of France.'

[C] Margaret of Flanders, his Wife - - - - and Valentina of Milan - - - - - fomented the Diviſion by their Vanity] 'The frequent Punctillio's diſputed between their Wives ſowred them more than 'their true Intereſts; ſhe of Burgundy being the 'elder, Heireſs of great Dominions, and deſcended 'of very noble Blood, deſpiſed the other, who 'would really have been inferior to her, had ſhe 'not been conſidered as the Wife of the King's 'only Brother (12).' The Partizans of the Houſe of Burgundy reflect very much on Valentina Ducheſs of Orleans. Here are ſome Inſtances: 'In 'this (13) the Ducheſs of Burgundy was very active,

(1) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burgundicar. lib. ii, pag. 18.

(2) Id. ibid. pag. 62.

(3) Anſelme, Hiſt. Genealog. de la Maiſon, Roiale, pag. 107.

(4) Id. pag. 108.

(5) Ibid. pag. 112.

(6) Gollut. Memoir. de Bourgogne, pag. 616.

(7) Fabert, Hiſtoire des Ducs de Bourgogne, pag. 27.

(8) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burgund. lib. ii, pag. 63.

(9) See Gollut. Memoires de Bourg. pag. 537.

(10) Fabert, Hiſt. des Ducs de Burgogne, pag. 6. See alſo Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burg. pag. 19.

(11) Gollut Memoirs de Bourgogn. pag. 616.

(12) Mezerai Abrégé Chronol. Tom. iii, pag. 157, ad Ann. 1401.

(13) That is in preventing a Declaration of War againſt the Duke of Bretagne.

of the Kingdom, which met at Paris, in the Year 1391, put the Regency in the Hands of the Duke of Burgundy, notwithſtanding the Duke of Orleans demanded it, and founded his Pretenſion on his being Brother to the King (b). Theſe two Rivals thruſt one another twice out of that advantageous Poſt (i). The Duke of Orleans had the upper Hand in the Year 1401. But the Duke of Burgundy would not quit; they both aſſembled their Friends; but conſented to a Reconciliation, at leaſt in Appearance. A little while after the Duke of Orleans prevailed with the King, that, during his Majeſty's Indiſpoſition, he ſhould have the the Conduct of the State. The Duke of Burgundy, returning to Court, proved ſtrong enough in the Council, to get the Government reſtored to himſelf. ——— The King, in his next Interval, ordered that they ſhould both govern jointly; but the Council, the Queen, and the other Princes, and Lords, prayed him to deſiſt (k). Philip died at Hall, the Twenty ſixth of April, 1414 (l); he left ſo many Debts, that his Wife was obliged to leave the Creditors unpaid [D]. She was an imperious and revengeful Woman, and had given her Huſband a great deal of Trouble [E]. She brought him three Sons and four Daughters, and died the ſeventeenth of Auguſt, 1405 (m). He (b) Ibid. pag. 141.

(i) Ibid. pag. 157.

(k) Taken from Mezerai Abreg. Chron. Tom. III. p. 157, 158.

(l) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burgund. pag. 62.

(m) Pontus Heuterus Rerum Burgund. See a Fault of the Sieur Fabert, in the Remark [A], towards the end.

' not only in favour of the Duke of Bretagne her ' Couſin, and Son of the Siſter of Lewis de Ma- ' lain, her Father; but alſo out of the great ha- ' tred ſhe bore to the Milaneſe (the Dutcheſs of ' Orleans) with whom ſhe had perpetually ſome ' Quarrel or other: Seeing that Stranger ſo pre- ' ſumptuous, that ſhe would not ſuffer great Prin- ' ceſſes (of higher Rank than herſelf) to walk ' in their Order, nor to keep the Places belonging ' to them. For that Italian Lady was provoked ' that the Dutcheſs of Burgundy had been nominated, ' by the King and States, firſt Lady of Honour to ' Queen Iſabella, and that by that means the Bur- ' gundian had the firſt Poſt, the Hand and Ear ' of the Queen. This Diſdain of the Dutcheſs of Or- ' leans was well withſtood and contemned by the ' Dutcheſs of Burgundy, who was a generous Princeſs, ' and very touchy; who knew her own Riches and ' Eſtate, who knew the Credit, Valour, and Merit of ' her Spouſe; and who moreover perceiving, that That ' Stranger had Deſigns againſt the Children of France, ' the King, and even againſt her Husband, could not ' reſtrain herſelf ſo far as to diſſemble with her: tho' ' ſhe knew, and had been often warned, that this ſame ' Valentina was a dangerous Woman, practiſing a- ' gainſt Peoples Lives by Sorcery and Poiſon, and ' that ſhe ſhould take care of herſelf. But the Du- ' cheſs of Burgundy, either through Indignation, ' or her true French Diſpoſition (which cannot eaſily diſſemble, unleſs Fear be continually in view), ' took little notice of it; only ſhe laboured to con- ' vince Duke Philip, her Husband, of the Truth of ' it, that he might take ſtrict care of his Affairs, his ' Safety, and the Perſon of the King (14).' The ſame Author ſays, that the Dutcheſs of Orleans was ſuſpected of having been the Cauſe of Charles the Sixth's Diſtemper, and that ſhe attempted to poiſon the Dauphin. Let us uſe his Words: ' Others ' laid the King's Illneſs to the Dutcheſs of Orleans, ' who deſired to open a way for her Husband to ' come to the Crown. Which gained the more ' Credit, as the Ambition of that Lady, and her ' Skill in mixing and tempering Poiſons, was ' manifeſt to all the World. So that her Husband ' perceiving it likewiſe, after the Death of his eldeſt ' Son (poiſoned by an Apple, which ſhe had pre- ' pared, hoping that the Dauphin would take it ' in his Hand, and bite it, and ſo die. And with that ' Intent ſhe gave it to her Son, commanding him ' to carry it to the Dauphin of France, which the ' Child did, but, without uſing Ceremony, had ' bit into it, and got his Death), had cauſed her ' to be ſhut up in the Caſtle of Neufchâtel on ' the Loire, forgetting, for a time, the Love he ' bore her for her Beauty, and the largeneſs of ' her Dowry; for ſhe had brought him the Earl- ' dom of Vertu, and Five hundred thouſand ' Crowns, which enabled him to buy the County ' of Blois, in the Year 1392, for Twenty thou- ' ſand Crowns, that of Soiſſons, and the Lordſhip ' of Couſſy (15).' Pontus Heuterus ſays much the ſame (16). If we had the Detail of all the Diſ- courſes and Intrigues of theſe two Ladies, we ſhould have a ſecret Hiſtory not much to the Honour of the Sex, who are commonly the primum mobile of all Civil-Wars, and deſerve the Epithet of Author of Shipwrecks much better than Boreas (17).

(14) Gollut, Memoirs de Bourgogne, pag. 600.

VALENTINA of Milan ſuſpected of poiſoning.

(15) Id. pag. 601.

(16) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burg. lib. ii, pag. 60.

[D] He left ſo many Debts, that his Widow was obliged to leave the Creditors unpaid.] The Monk of St Denys, who wrote a Hiſtory of Charles VI, commends Philip the Bold in ſeveral Places, on Ac- count of his Fidelity to his Wife, that he had edu- cated the King his Nephew well, that he had an excellent Muſical Voice for Divine Service, that he was ſo ſagacious in Politics, ' that nothing hap- ' pened but what he foreſaw long before;' that he was very eloquent; but, adds he (18), ' one ' thing tarniſhed the Glory of his Name, which he ' had raiſed ſo high: That is, he took no Care to ' pay his Debts, and that his Treaſurers and Comp- ' trollers did no Juſtice to his Creditors, not even ' for the Ordinary expence of his Houſe, the pay- ' ment of which could not be refuſed, without ' a Crime. So that his Goods, which were of in- ' eſtimable value, were not ſufficient to diſcharge ' them, and this made his Widow (do what the ' meaneſt Women never do without regret, any ' more than without injuſtice, that is) take the ' Privilege of Renunciation, to eaſe herſelf of the ' vaſt load of his Debts.' She obſerved the ordi- nary Ceremonies in this Renunciation; for ſhe pulled off her Girdle with her Keys, and her Purſe, over her Husband's Coffin (19). Pontus Heuterus tells us, that this Act cuts off Intereſt, and takes away all the Creditor's Right to the real Eſtate, and obliges them to come to Terms. ' Uxor Mar- ' gareta liberique cadaver expectantes inſigni exe- ' quiarum pompâ juſta ſolvunt; cumque rei fami- ' liaris ſtatum magno ære alieno gravatum Mar- ' gareta reperiſſet, ne a creditoribus vexaretur, ma- ' tronales foretro claves, cingulum, marſupiumque ' ſecundum regionis leges impoſuit. Hoc enim ' facto creditoribus præterquam in Supellectilem, ' ac ea quæ bona vocant mobilia, jus non erat, ' uſurarum curſus ſiſtebatur, ac de ſorte debitiſque ' in hoc tempus uſuris certis ſolutionis ex pacto ' conventoque datis terminis convenire cogeban- ' tur (20). It is properly a Bankrupety. The Agreement made with the Creditors, was executed partly by her, and partly by her Children (21).

(17) See Citation (b), of the Article BOREAS.

(18) Hiſt. de Charles VI, tranſlated by La Laboureur, lib. xxiv, cap. ii, pag. 484.

(19) Mezeral, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. ii, p. 159, ad Ann. 1404.

(20) Pontus Heuterus, Rer. Burgund. p. 62, 63.

[E] His Wife was imperious and revengeful, and had given her Husband a great deal of trouble.] The Witneſs I am about to cite is not ſuſpec- ted; for it is Pontus Heuterus. ' Patrem, ſays he ' (22), non minus corporis lineamentis ac humo- ' rum temperamento, quam animi affectibus re- ' ferebat (Margareta). Erat enim in eâ animus ex- ' celſus, ferox, ambitioſus, vindictæ in eum a ' quo ſe læſam exiſtimabat percupidus, ac qui ' numquam ſincerè cum inimico in gratiam redire ' poterat, nullaque ratione ſerens quos dignitatis ' æmulatione ſecum certare exiſtimabat: quas ani- ' mi affectiones Audax in ordinem coacturus, non ' parum ſummâ adhibitâ prudentiâ ſimulationeque ' per omnem vitam laborarat, coactus nonnun- ' quam aliquid de jure ſuo cedere, quod præter am- ' pliſſimarum provinciarum dotem, cum patrem ' ſeptem præſtantiſſimorum liberorum effeciſſet. ——— ' Margaret reſembled her Father as well in the Li- ' neaments, and Temperature of her Body, as in the ' Diſpoſition of her Mind. For ſhe had a haughty, ' proud

(21) Id. Ibid.

(22) Id. Ibid.

He was not addicted either to Wine, or Gaming, or Amours [F]: We do not find that he had either Miſtreſſes or Baſtards; but he was very ingenious in ſqueezing the People, and fomented the Schiſm of the Anti-Popes.

'proud, ambitious Spirit, was eager to be revenged on any Body ſhe thought had injured her, and never could be ſincerely reconciled to an Enemy; ſhe could by no means endure any Body whom ſhe thought to be her Rival in Dignity: Philip found it, all his Life time, no ſmall Difficulty, with the utmoſt Prudence and Diſſimulation, to keep theſe Diſpoſitions of her Mind in Order, and was obliged ſometimes to recede a little from his Right, in conſideration, that, beſides a Dowry of large Provinces, ſhe had made him Father of ſeven fine Children.' See here a Prince, who found ſcarce any thing in the Kingdom not ſubject to his Law, not even the only Brother of his Sovereign, and yet he is not Maſter at home: He is obliged to ſubmit to his proud ſpirited Wife, both for her Fecundity, and for her fine Patrimony. To receive a Benefit is to loſe one's Liberty, ſaid the Ancients (23). This is peculiarly true in reſpect to Dowries (24).

(23) Beneficium accipere libertatem vendere eſt, Publius Syrus.

(24) See above, Cicot. (15), under Artifex AVENTIN.

[F] He was not addicted either to Wine, or Gaming, or Amours — but —— ingenious in ſqueezing the People.] His Chaſtity is juſtly admired by Hiſtorians; for he was of a robuſt Conſtitution, and the affluence of all things, and convenient Opportunities, have a great effect on the Senſes. 'Nec 'aleator, nec mulieroſus, nec ebrioſus fuit, unde 'riſſimè ejus in Aulâ comitatúque, contentiones, 'jurgia, rixæ, pugnæ, commeſſationes, intempeſtivæ vigiliæ, nec ſomnus cernebantur: animus vero in eo perturbatus iracunduſque perrarò. De concubinis, illegitimis liberis, aut ullo incontinentiæ libidiniſque genere nil plane reperio, quæ tamen virtus inter principes valenti corpore præditos perrara eſſe conſuevit, quod libertas, rerumque omnium affluentia, facilè ſenſus vehementiſſimi voluptatis illecebris ac titillatione deceptos inficiant, animum emolliant effeminentque. —— Duas ob cauſas a ſcriptoribus aliquot proſcinditur. Primo quod immenſis continuiſque pecuniarum exactionibus populum exhauſerit, ac in excogitandis novis tributis ingenioſus fuit, inexorabiliſque in exigendo. ----- Altera proſcindendi cauſa eſt, quod univerſo vitæ tempore diſſidium in Chriſtianâ Republicâ duorum ſummorum pontificum creatione ortum omnibus artibus aluerit, fovens partes Antipapæ (25). ----- He was neither given to Gaming, to Women, nor to Drunkenneſs; ſo there was very ſeldom any quarrelling, noiſe, brawling, fighting, revelling, unſeaſonable ſitting up, or ſleeping, in his Palace, or Retinue: he was very ſeldom diſturbed or angry. I find no mention at all of any Concubines, illegitimate Children, or any kind of Luſt, or Incontinence, tho' this is a Virtue very rare among Princes of robuſt Conſtitutions; becauſe liberty and affluence eaſily deceive and draw in the Senſes, with the Allurements and Titillation of that ungovernable Pleaſure; and enervate and effeminate the Mind. ----- He is blamed by ſome Writers for two Things. Firſt, that he drained the People with immenſe and continual exactions of Money, and was ingenious in contriving new Impoſitions, and inexorable in exacting them. ----- The other thing he is blamed for, is, that all his Life he fomented the Diviſion begun in the Chriſtian World, by the election of two Popes, with all the Art he was Maſter of, favouring the party of the Anti-Pope.' As to his exactions, Heuterus excuſes him on Account of the extraordinary expence he was obliged to be at, in maintaining Troops, and fortifying Towns. But why did not he pay his Debts at leaſt? 'Tis ſtrange that Princes make no Conſcience of ruining their Creditors, while they are enriching other Perſons. Read this Paſſage of Mezerai; 'Twas there that Queen Margaret kept her little Court the reſt of her Days, very oddly jumbling together, Pleaſure and Devotion, the Love of Learning and Vanity, Chriſtian Charity and Injuſtice; for as ſhe took a pride in being ſeen often at Church, and in entertaining learned Men, and giving the tenth of her revenues to the Monks; ſo ſhe gloried alſo in having always ſome intrigue, in inventing new Diverſions, and in never paying her Debts (26).'

(20) Pontus Heuterus, Rer. Burg. lib. iii, pag. 64.

(26) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. VI, pag. 316, ad Ann. 1405.

BURGUNDY (JOHN, Duke of), Son of the former, was born at Dijon, the Twenty ninth of May, 1371 (a). He was firſt called Count de Nevers, and gave very early Proofs of his being a warlike Prince, and worthy of the Sirname of THE FEARLESS, which was given him. At twelve Years of Age, he followed his Father in the Expedition into Flanders, againſt the rebellious Subjects of his Grandfather, by the Mother (b). He was married two Years after to Margaret of Bavaria, Daughter of Albert, Count of Holland. He was very earneſt to go into Hungary, in the Year 1396, with the Troops ſent by the King of France to the Emperor Sigiſmond, againſt Bajazet. He was not only Chief of the Volunteers, but alſo commanded the Body of the Army (d). This Expedition was unſucceſsful [A]: All theſe Troops were cut in Pieces in the Action at Nicopolis. He was

(a) Pontus Heuterus, Rerum. Burgund. lib. iii, pag. 63.

(b) Id. ibid.

(c) Id. ibid.

(d) Id. ibid. pag. 69.

[A] The Expedition to Hungary was unſucceſsful.] Mezerai's Account of it will furniſh me with a good Comment. 'They performed at firſt ſeveral Acts 'of incredible Valour: But their Follies and Debauchery rendered them ridiculous to the Turks themſelves. Beſides it was the preſumption of 'their Troops, elevated with a little ſucceſs, that 'engaged the Hungarians in the Siege of Nicopolis, 'and afterwards in the Battle of the twenty 'eighth of September; in which, the Hungarians 'not taking Care to ſecond them, they were all 'killed, or taken Priſoners. Bajazet cauſed above 'Six hundred of them to be hacked in Pieces, in 'Preſence of the Count de Nevers; and having 'put him to as many Deaths, with Terror and 'Grief, he reſerved him and fifteen more of the 'greateſt Lords, for whom he obliged himſelf to 'pay two Hundred thouſand Ducats ranſom. This 'Sum being furniſhed five Months after, they were 'all ſet at Liberty. The Count de Nevers arrived 'in France about the end of the Month of March 'following. It is ſaid that Bajazet was ſo far from 'taking an Oath of him, that he would never 'make War againſt the Turks, that he exhorted 'him to take his Revenge, and aſſured him, he 'ſhould always find him in the Field ready to give 'him Satisfaction (1)' You will find, in Pontus Heuterus, the proud Diſcourſe the Sultan is ſuppoſed to have had with this Count (2). He relates alſo the Diſcourſe of a Phyſiognomiſt: 'Sunt qui 'ſcripſere Joanni Intrepido vitam conceſſam, quod 'Turca quidam, qui ſe ex hominum vultu, corporiſque lineamentis, proſperam adverſamque fortunam, ac fatum prædicere poſſe profiteretur, Bajazetho dixiſſet: Vivat nobilis ille, ejus enim operâ cauſâque plus Chriſtiani ſanguinis] profundetur, crudelioraque inter ſe bella gerent, quam credi aut ſperari poſſet (3). ----- Some have wrote that John the Fearleſs had his Life given him, becauſe a certain Turk, who pretended to foretel good and ill Fortune, and the Decrees of Fate, from Peoples Countenances, and the Lineaments of their Bodies, ſaid to Bajazet: Let that Nobleman live: for by his means, and on his Account, more Chriſtian Blood will be ſhed, and more cruel Wars waged among themſelves, than could be believed or hoped for.' Bajazet would have done an ineſtimable Piece of Service to France, if

(1) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 151.

(2) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burgund. lib. iii, pag. 72.

(3) Id. ibid.

was taken Prisoner there, and some say he would have been killed, had not a Turkish Physiognomist assured Bajazet, that the Life of this Prisoner would be fatal to Christendom (e). The young Prince, having paid his Ransom, returned into France, in the Year 1397. He took Possession, in Form, of the Duchy and Earldom of Burgundy, Artois, and Flanders, in the Month of April, 1405 (f); and from that time bent his chief Study to the Quarrel between his deceased Father, and the Duke of Orleans. He resolved to carry it to the utmost Extremity, and strengthened himself by the Marriage of his Son with Michelle de Valois, Daughter of King Charles VI, and that of Margaret his Daughter with the Dauphin (g). He gained the Affection of the City of Paris, by opposing a Tax which was designed to be laid on them; and improved the Scandal every where raised by the too close Union of the Queen and the Duke of Orleans (b); and the Complaints of the People oppressed, by repeated and violent Extortions, of which they said the Queen sent part into Germany, and spent the rest in all manner of profuseness, while the King and his Children were in poor Equipage. He retired from Court with the Duke of Bretagne. The King, in a lucid Interval, having learnt the Cause of their Retreat, called a Grand Assembly, and summoned the Duke of Burgundy to it, who came so well escorted with armed Men, that the Queen, and the Duke of Orleans, retired to Melun, having left order to have the Dauphin brought after them. The Duke of Burgundy pursued, and took, this young Prince, and brought him back to Paris, by his own Consent. This Rupture, which put Paris in a continual Alarm, was followed by a seeming Reconciliation; after which it was resolved to attack the Towns belonging to the English. The Duke of Burgundy undertook the Conquest of Calais, but had so ill Success in the Enterprize, that he durst not so much as come near the Place (i). He imputed this Disgrace to the Duke of Orleans, and resolved to have him assassinated. The Business was executed in the Night, between the Twenty third and Twenty fourth of November, 1407. At first he put on a good Face, and even assisted at the Funeral of the deceased, but at last he confessed to the Duke of Bourbon, that he had caused this Murder to be committed, and retired into Flanders with the Assassins. It has been thought that it was not meerly Ambition which prompted him to that extreme, but that there was some matrimonial Interest concerned [B]. The Duchess of Orleans, accompanied with her three Sons, demanded Justice of the King: He durst not promise her any thing; he stood too much in awe of the Duke of Burgundy, who promised to come and vindicate himself, provided the Gates of Paris were not guarded (k). He returned to Paris in the Month of February, 1408, and avowed openly that he was Author of the Murder, and got a Franciscan (l) to maintain, that the Action was just. A Pardon was granted him, and he was reconciled, in Appearance, with the Queen (m). He retired into Artois. During his Absence, the Widow renewed her Prosecution: He was declared an Enemy to the State, and Orders given to send for Troops from all Parts to fall upon him (n). But when it was known that he had obtained a signal Victory over the Inhabitants of Liege (o), and was preparing to return to Paris, the Orleans Party did not think themselves safe: The Queen herself fled to Tours with her Husband. He entered Paris with Six thousand Men: They talked of a new Reconciliation, which made the Widow of the Duke of Orleans, a haughty and revengful Princess, die of Grief and Vexation (p). Her Children were obliged to be reconciled to the Murderer of their Father. This was done with great Solemnity in Chartres, about the end of March, 1409. The King returned to Paris, and the Duke into the Low Countries, from whence he returned into France in July, and got entire Possession of the Government. The Duke of Berry and Bourbon, and several others, joined with the House of Orleans (q) against him, and levied Troops, and posted themselves near Paris. He summoned the Militia: They made War on each other; and afterwards found themselves obliged to come to an Accommodation. He quitted the Capital according to agreement; but the other Party would not be quiet: The Duke of Orleans, with Sword in Hand,

(e) See the end of the Remark [A].

(f) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burgund. lib. iii, pag. 72.

(g) Lewis, Duke of Guienne, who died before his Father.

(b) Mezerai Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 163.

(i) Id. pag. 165.

(k) Id. pag. 168.

(l) Named John Petit. See his Article.

(m) Mezerai Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 169.

(n) Id. pag. 170.

(o) They had expelled their Bishop, Brother to the Duke of Burgundy's Wife.

(p) The 4th of Decemb. 1408.

(q) The Year 1410.

if he had not spared the Life of the Count de Nevers. It was for the sins of France, that this barbarous Sultan hearkened to the Counsels of Avarice, rather than those of Cruelty. But if it was true, that a Fortune-teller had determined him to let this Prisoner be ransomed, he acted rather as a cruel, than as a covetous Man. In a Word, the Death of this Count would have been the Life of a prodigious number of Frenchmen: it would have prevented the most horrible Desolation a Kingdom can be reduced to.

[B] It has been thought, that it was not meerly Ambition, which prompted him to cause the Duke of Orleans to be assassinated, but that some Matrimonial Interest was concerned.] I mean, that he did it to be revenged of the Dishonour that had been done to him, by an Intrigue with his Wife. Let Brantome tell the Story. 'Duke Lewis of Orleans — one time boasted publickly at a Banquet, where his Cousin John, Duke of Burgundy, was present, that he had in his Closet the Pictures of the finest Ladies whom he had enjoyed. By chance, one day, Duke John went into that Closet, and the first Picture he saw, which struck his Eye at first glance, was the noble Lady his Spouse, who was at that time reckoned very handsome: her Name was Margaret, Daughter of Albert of Bavaria, Count of Haynalt, Holland, and Zealand. The good Husband was astonished; and we may imagine, he concluded with himself, that his Business had been done; but taking no further Notice of the Flea that stung him, he dissembled the Hand, demanded Juſtice for the Murder of his Father, and ſent a very outrageous Challenge to the Duke of Burgundy, who anſwered it with the like (r) [C]. Thus was the Kingdom divided into two Factions, one of the Burgundians, and the other of the Orleans Party, commonly called Armagnacs (s). Hence proceeded an infinite Number of Murders, Plundering, and Proſcriptions [D]. The Orleans Party blockaded

(r) Mezerai Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 278, of the Year 1411.

(s) Becauſe the Earl of Armagnac was one of the principal Leaders.

' the Matter, and in order to be revenged, quarrelled ' with him about the Regency and Adminiſtration of ' the Kingdom, and making This, not The Affair that ' of his Wife, his Pretence, he cauſed him to be aſſaſ- ' ſinated at the Gate Baudet at Paris, his Wife being ' already dead, as was ſuppoſed, of Poiſon. Being ' thus rid of one Wife, he took for his ſecond the ' Daughter of Lewis III, Duke of Bourbon (4): it ' is doubtful whether he mended his Market; for ' to ſuch People as are ſubject to Horns, let them ' change Beds and Haunts, as oft as they will, ' Horns will come. The Duke did very wiſely in ' that; he revenged himſelf on the Adulterer, with- ' out ſcandalizing himſelf, or his Wife; which was ' very wiſe Diſſimulation on his Part (5). —— For ' theſe Reaſons, Duke John was very wiſe in diſ- ' ſembling and hiding his Horns, and revenging ' himſelf beſides on his Couſin who had diſhonoured ' him: He even laughed at him, and let him ' know it; which Deriſion and Scandal, without ' doubt, went as much to his Heart as his Ambi- ' tion, and made him do this Action like a worldly- ' wiſe and able Politician (6).' Do not imagine that this is one of thoſe Tales that are only learned by Tradition: it has been inſerted in Hiſtorians; you will find it in the Memoirs of Lewis Gollut (7). It is true, this Author ſuppoſes, that Duke John of Burgundy did not believe that his Wife had been unfaithful, but that the Duke of Orleans had boaſted of Favours from her wrongfully. This boaſting was nevertheleſs an Offence, for which he would have Satisfaction. Gollut goes on to tell us, that the Ducheſs of Burgundy had complained that the Duke of Orleans attempted to debauch her. Let us ſee his own Words, which will ſhew that this delicate Affair was debated in the Council of Burgundy, and that it was there reſolved to uſe ſome other pretence to be revenged on the Duke of Orleans. ' Meyerus ſays truly, from the writ- ' ings of ſome good Author (whoſe words he cites ' in Latin) that the Ducheſs had previouſly com- ' plained to the Duke her Husband, that the Duke ' of Orleans had watched to find her alone, and ' had ſolicited her, and attempted force upon her ' Honour, of which ſhe prayed him to take no- ' tice, which the Duke had received in ſuch ' manner, as matters of that kind uſually are taken ' and interpreted, by Husbands who have any Spirit, ' or any regard for their Reputation. Nevertheleſs, ' he would not immediately proceed to Vengeance; ' but only reſolved on the Execution in time, and ' to puniſh the Offence, by the Murder of the Duke ' of Orleans, whatever came of it. He adds, that ' the Duke had called his Council, and demanded ' of the great Men, to whom he communicated ' this Affair, under an Oath, how he ſhould pro- ' ceed to be revenged for ſo great Injury, whether ' he ſhould chaſtize or murder him: letting them ' underſtand that he aſked not whether he ſhould do ' it, but only how and in what manner he might ' execute it with Safety. Whereupon the Coun- ' ſellors, after divers excuſes, and three Days De- ' liberation, anſwered: That it was neceſſary to ' take meaſures that the Duke of Orleans's Actions ' might be cenſured as they deſerved: and to gain ' the Opinion of the Vulgar, and even of the Pari- ' ſians: and that, for that end, it would be good to ' ſet ſome People at Work every where, to rail ' againſt the Conduct of the Duke of Orleans, and ' ſtir up the People againſt him (8).' Theſe laſt Words of Gollut are very remarkable.

(4) Brantome is miſtaken; that Duke of Burgundy had but one Wife, and he died before her. See Father Anſelm, pag. 209. Pontus Heuterus, Rer. Burgund. lib. iii, pag. 103, refutes thoſe who ſay he had two Wives.

(5) Brantome, Dames Galantes, Tom. II, pag. 352.

(6) Id. ibid. pag. 354.

(7) Louis Gollut, Memoirs de Bourgogne, liv. x, chap. iii, pag. 626.

(8) Id. ibid.

[C] The Duke of Orleans ſent him a very outrageous Challenge, which he anſwered with the like.] My Readers will not be diſpleaſed to find here the Tenor of theſe Challenges. That of the Orleans Party was conceived in theſe Terms: ' Charles, ' Duke of Orleans and Valois, Earl of Blois and ' Beaumont, Lord of Conchy; Philip, Earl of Ver- ' tus; and John, Earl of Angouleſme, Brothers: to ' thee, John, who calleſt thyſelf Duke of Burgun- ' dy, for the moſt horrible Murder, by thee ' treacherouſly, maliciouſly, by profeſſed Murderers, ' committed on the Perſon of our dear and dread ' Lord and Father, Louis Duke of Orleans, only ' Brother of Monſeigneur, the King, our Sovereign ' Lord, and thine, notwithſtanding the ſeveral ' Oaths, Alliances, and Engagements, between you ' ſubſiſting, and for the great Treaſons, Acts of ' Diſloyalty, Infamy, and Wickedneſs by thee, ' againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and ' againſt us, in diverſe manners, perpetrated: We ' give thee to underſtand that from this Day for- ' ward we will annoy thee with all our Power, and ' by all ways we can; and againſt thee, of thy ' Treaſon, and Diſloyalty, we call God, and all ' good Men in the World to judge, and aſſiſt us: ' in witneſs of the Truth whereof, we have cauſed ' theſe preſent Letters to be ſealed with the Seal ' of me, Charles, abovenamed. Given at Jarjeau, ' the eighteenth Day of July, in the Year of Grace ' 1411 (9). The following is the Burgundian's An- ' ſwer. ' John Duke of Burgundy, Earl of Artois, ' Flanders, and Burgundy, Palatin, Lord of Sa- ' lines and Malines: To thee Charles, who calleſt ' thyſelf Duke of Orleans; and to thee Philip, who ' calleſt thyſelf Earl of Vertus; and to thee John, ' who calleſt thyſelf Earl of Angouleſme; who have ' lately ſent us your Letters of Defiance; we give ' to underſtand, and be it known to all Men, that ' in order to defeat the moſt horrible Treaſons, ' manifold Wickedneſs, and moſt malicious Plots, ' conſpired, contrived, and acted felonioufly, againſt ' the King, our moſt dread and ſovereign Lord, and ' yours, and againſt his moſt noble Generation, by ' the late Lewis, your Father, a falſe and diſloyal ' Traytor, to attain to the final deteſtable Execution ' of his Purpoſes, which he had contrived againſt ' our ſaid moſt dread Lord and his, and alſo againſt ' his ſaid Generation, and notoriouſly, that no good ' Man ought to ſuffer him to live: and eſpecially ' we who are Couſin-German of our ſaid Lord, Dean ' of the Peers, and twice Peer, and more cloſely ' allied to him, and to his ſaid Generation, than any ' other Perſon of the ſaid Generation, could not ' have ſuffered ſuch a falſe, diſloyal, cruel, and ' felonious Traytor on the Face of the Earth any ' longer, without a great Crime on our Part; we ' have, in order to acquit ourſelves loyally, and do ' our Duty towards our high and ſovereign Lord, ' and his ſaid Generation, killed, as he deſerved, ' the ſaid falſe and diſloyal Traytor, and in ſo doing ' have pleaſed God, and rightly performed loyal ' Service to our ſaid moſt dread and ſovereign Lord. ' And foraſmuch as thou and thy Brothers follow ' the falſe, diſloyal, and felonious Steps of your ſaid ' Father, and do contrive to accompliſh thoſe damn- ' able and diſloyal Facts attempted by him, we are ' not at all concerned at your ſaid Defiance; but as ' to the Contents thereof, thou and thy Brothers have ' lied, and do maliciouſly, falſly, and diſloyally lie ' like Trayors, as you are; for which by the Help ' our Lord, who knows, and is a Witneſs of the ' moſt entire and perfect Loyalty, Love and good ' Will, which we always have, and always ſo long ' as we live ſhall have, towards our ſaid, and his ' ſaid Generation, to the good of his People, and ' of all his Kingdom, we will bring you to ſuch an ' End and Puniſhment, as ſuch falſe and diſloyal ' Traytors, Rebels, and diſobedient Felons, as thou, ' and thy Brothers are, deſerve to come to: In wit- ' neſs whereof we have cauſed theſe Letters to be ' ſealed with our Seal: Given in our City of ' Douay, the fourteenth Day of Auguſt, in the ' Year of Grace, 1411 (10).

(9) Enguerrand de Monſtrelet. Vol. I, cap. lxxii.

(10) Id. cap. lxxiii.

[D] —— From thence proceeded endleſs Murders and Proſcriptions.] This Diviſion may be compared to that of Marius and Sylla, and to the unhappy Triumvirate of Marc Antony, Octavius, and Lepidus. See how a Hiſtorian, a Favourer of the Burgundian Party, expreſſes himſelf. ' While theſe things were ' negotiating blockaded Paris, and were resolved to sack it. The Duke of Burgundy, with some Succours from the English, obliged them to retire, and was received into the City as the Deliverer of France (t). He made them suffer all the Disgrace that can befal a routed Party: He had them excommunicated, set their Goods to sale, and pursued them every where. This constrained them to make an Alliance with the English, on Conditions very pernicious to France. The King hearing it, vowed their Destruction, and went in Person and besieged Bourges, and attacked them, by his Generals, in other Places: But important Reasons compelled him to make a Peace with them. After a thousand Broils in the City of Paris, the Duke of Burgundy, not finnding himself the stronger, retired into the Low Countries, in the Year 1413. His Creatures were deprived of their Offices, and he abhorred as an execrable Murderer (u). He returned with an Army, and appeared before Paris, notwithstanding the King had forbid him to come near it, on pain of High Treason (x). Nothing stirred in his Favour, so he retired in Confusion, after a thundering Declaration against him by Charles VI. That Prince pursued him as an Enemy to the State (y), and would not grant him Peace (z), but on very hard Conditions. The other Party was superior, till, in the Year 1418, the Friends of the Burgundian Faction introduced into Paris, Philip de Villiers l'Isle-Adam (aa). Then it was that Tannegui du Chatel saved the Dauphin, as I have said elsewhere (bb). The Cruelties exercised on the Armagnacs were terrible. The Queen, whom the King had exiled, joined the Duke of Burgundy, and made her Entry into Paris with him. They got the King in their Power, made an ill use of his Name, while the Dauphin was doing all he could against the Duke. Some Persons endeavoured to pacify these Troubles; and the Dauphin and the Duke had a Conference in the open Field, and agreed upon another Rendezvous at Montereau-faut-yonne, to regulate all the Articles of their Treaty. The Duke went to the Place appointed, the tenth of September, 1419, and was there massacred by the Dauphin's Friends (cc). He had one Son, and six Daughters legitimate, and some Bastards [E]. His Death was revenged after another manner than that of the Duke of Orleans, such is the Inequality and Caprice of Men.

(t) Mezeral, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 180, of the Year 1412.

(u) Id. pag. 186.

(x) Id. pag. 189.

(y) Id. pag. 188.

(z) In September, 1414.

(aa) Mezeral, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 201.

(bb) In the Article DU CHATEL.

(cc) Taken from Mezeral, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III. pag. 201, &c.

'negotiating, Mr Peter des Essarts entered privately into Paris, and found means to gain the Butchers 'Players, and such like Mob, whom he knew to 'be Friends to the Duke of Burgundy, and persuaded them to make a search for the Orleanois. In 'consequence of which the poor unfortunate Orleanois were beat, turned out of Doors, massacred, 'prosecuted, and, in short, treated worse than Enemies. This gave the first rise to the dissite, which the King, the Dauphin, the Queen, and 'all good Men, took to the Duke of Burgundy, 'considering his strange Ways, more worthy of some 'Sylla, Marius, Triumvir, or other barbarous 'Heathens, than of Christian Princes, bred up in 'the Church of JESUS CHRIST, the Father of 'Peace and Meekness: and foreseeing that the Orleanois (in their Turn) would be obliged to do 'the like in the City of Paris itself, and other 'Places, where they might find, or catch, any Subject, Servant, or Partizan, of the Faction of Burgundy; where would follow an unheard of, and 'unparallelled, Butchery, in all the Towns in France, 'with the Loss and Death of good and innocent 'People. This is precisely the Condition to which 'that Discord and unhappy Civil War reduced the 'unfortunate People of France, and the Inhabitants 'of every City in it. Thus, the Follies, the Passions, the Dissentions, and the Revenge, of Princes, 'break out to the Ruin of the poor innocent 'People (11).'

(11) Gollut, Memoirs de Bourgogne, lib x, cap xxii, pag. 657, 658.

[E] He had ---- some Bastards] We will use the Expressions of the same Author. He was only once married; but was not satisfied, nor could he contain himself when he was married: for he gave himself a Liberty in other Amours, favouring some Mistresses, of whom the last and greatest Favourite, was the Lady de Giac, who had a Share in the Plot contrived against him; yet he had no Children by her; for the two Bastards, John, Bishop of Cambray, and Guy (who was a valiant Captain), were by another (12). I wonder Gollut says nothing of a natural Daughter of the same Duke. She was called Philippa, and was married to Anthony de Rochebaron, Sieur de Breze le Chastel (13). A modern Historian of the Dukes of Burgundy is also silent as to this Daughter (14): but he observes, that People spoke ill of Duke John, and the Queen of France, who since her deliverance from Tours, had been strongly attached to him, though before she breathed nothing but the Duke of Orleans (15). He takes notice likewise of the Treachery of a second Dalilah, the Lady de Giac (16), ---- who, losing all at the taking of Montereau, the Capitulation excluding the Domestics of the Duke of Bugundy, met with due Punishment for her Lewdness and Unfaithfulness (17). Pontus Heuterus had said the same thing, and particularly what relates to the ill Reports concerning the Queen (18). This Princess was not esteemed for her Chastity: it was believed that she behaved ill with the Duke of Orleans, and afterwards that the Murderer of that Duke behaved ill with her (19). Add to this these Words of Mezeral: 'As they lived with a 'great deal of Liberty in that Princess's Family, 'it was easy for the Constable d'Armagnac to 'raise a Jealousy in the King: so that he caused 'one Bourdon, who was in that Intrigue, to be 'seized and drowned; and afterwards put away 'his Queen, and sent her as Prisoner to Tours. 'She could never resolve to forgive him this Injury; nor even the Dauphin, her Son, because 'it was done with his Consent, though he was 'then but fifteen Years of Age (20).' After the Duke of Burgundy, had set her at Liberty, it was no difficult matter to incline her to Proceedings prejudicial to the Armagnacs, by whom she had been 'injured so many ways, and so basely, because 'they had been so passionate and outrageous as to 'charge her to the King, and the Dauphin, her 'Son, of Unfaithfulness to the Marriage-bed, and 'using a more familiar Conversation, and Privacy, with a certain Gentleman, than was consistent 'with the Honour and Faith of a married Lady, 'and the Grandeur of so illustrious a Princess as 'the Queen and Wife of the King of France. To 'which they had added another Injury, which was to 'strip her of all the Wealth she had scraped together and deposited in some Churches; to serve 'as a last Resort in such times of Civil-War (21).' The English, to whom she was so much obliged, were not silent on the Head of her Lewdness. See what one of our most grave Historians says. The last of September, 1435, died the Queen Mother, Isabel of Bavaria, in the Hostel de St Pol, at Paris, where she lived in poor Condition, after the Death of her Husband, justly hated by the French, and ingratefully despised by the English. Some have wrote that to spare the Charges of her Funeral, they carried the Body to St Dennis in a little Boat accompanied only by four Persons. Some attribute her

(12) Idem. cap. xlix, pag. 701.

(13) See Father Labbe, Tabl. Geneal. p. 257; and Father Anselme, Hist. Geneal. pag. 210.

(14) Fabert, Hist. des ducs de Bourg. pag. 68.

(15) Id. ibid.

(16) Id. pag. 64.

(17) Id. pag. 68.

(18) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burg. lib. III, pag. 90.

THE ill Reputation of the Queen, the Mother of Charles VII.

(19) Mezeral, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 163.

(20) Id. ibid. pag. 198 à l'Ann. 1417.

(21) Gollut. Memoires de Bourgogne, cap. xliii, pag. 690.

Death to Vexation at the outrageous Railleries she suffered; for they took a Pleasure in telling her to her Face, that King Charles was not the Son of her Husband (22).

(22) Mezeral, Abrégé Chronol. Tom III, pag. 253, ad Ann. 1435.

BURGUNDY (PHILIP Duke of, surnamed THE GOOD,) only Son of the foregoing, was born at Dijon, the thirtieth of June, 1396, and was brought up there with his Mother, till the Death of his Grandfather, by the Father's side: then he was brought to Ghent, and passed several Years there; for it was not thought proper to let him engage in the Combustions of the Court of France, where his Father, and the House of Orleans, were disputing the Ground with the utmost Fury (a). He married Michele, Daughter of Charles VI, in the Year 1409, and lost her in the Year 1422, without having had any Children by her (b). He had the Government of Artois and Flanders, in the Year 1415, but under the Direction of some Lords, which his Father placed about him. They would not suffer him to go to the Wars, whom vexed him to that degree, that he cried and lost his Appetite; he was appeased, at last, when he heard the ill success of the Battle of Agincourt, and owned that his Father was in the right to hinder him from being there (c). He continued at Ghent, with his Mother and his Wife, waiting the Issue of the Quarrel between his Father, and the House of Orleans, and to see what Party the Dauphin Charles would take; but as soon as he heard of the tragical Action on the Bridge of Montereau-faut-yonne, he prepared to obtain Satisfaction, and to use all his Power to procure a signal Vengeance (d). He found all the Assistance he could desire. Vast numbers of the French offered him their Service: the Queen, who governed the weak King, was entirely for him, and he engaged the King of England in his Interest. He accompanied him to the Court of France (e), where a Treaty was made, importing that Charles VI should give his Daughter Catharine in Marriage to the King of England, and acknowledge him as Heir to his Crown (f). When the two Kings had made their Entry into Paris, the Duke of Burgundy laid his Complaint before them and their Councils: The Dauphin was summoned to the Marble Table, with the ordinary Formalities; and afterwards, he was declared unworthy of any Inheritance, and particularly that of the Crown of France, and banished the Kingdom for ever [A]. The Dauphin appealed to God and his Sword (g), and caused himself to be proclaimed King after his Father's Death, in (a) Ex Ponto Heutero Rer. Burgund. lib. iv, Init. pag. 97.

(b) Anselme Hist. Genealogique de la Maison Roiale, pag. 811.

(c) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burgund. lib. iv, pag. 97.

(d) Id. ibid. pag. pag. 98.

(e) It was then at Troies.

(f) Mezeral, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III. pag. 209, ad Ann. 1420.

(g) Id. Ibid. Tom. III, pag. 810.

[A] He caused the Dauphin to be declared unworthy . . . . of the Crown of France, and banished the Kingdom for ever.] The King of France, and his Son in law, the King of England, made their Entry into Paris, in the beginning of December, 1420. A few days after, they heard the Complaint of the Duke of Burgundy, touching the Murder of his Father. The two Kings sat on the same Bench. The Chancellor of France, the first President of the Parliament of Paris, and a great many other Lords and Privy-Counsellors, were present at the Assembly. The Duke appeared, accompanied with several Persons of Quality: 'And then 'Mr Nicolas Raulin, appearing on the Behalf of 'the future Complainants, demanded Audience of 'the two Kings, which being obtained, he set 'forth the cruel Murder committed on the Person 'of the late John, Duke of Burgundy, against 'Charles, called Dauphin of Vienne, the Viscount 'of Narbonne, the Lord of Barbasan, Tanneguy du 'Castel, ... concluding, that they should be 'taken, put in Carts, and carried through all the 'public Places of Paris, bare-headed, for three 'Saturdays, or Holidays: and that every one 'should hold a lighted Torch in his Hand, saying 'aloud, that they had wickedly, treacherously, 'damnably, and out of Envy, killed the Duke 'of Burgundy, without any reasonable Cause what-'ever. That afterwards they should be brought to 'the Place where they committed the said Murder, 'and there say and repeat the same Words. And 'further, that, in the Place where they killed him, 'should be erected a Church, with twelve Canons, 'to be maintained at the Expence of the said 'Dauphin, and his Accomplices: and that the Cause 'of building that Church should be cut in large 'Letters, in a Stone over the Door of the same, 'and likewise in each of the Towns following, 'viz. Paris, Rome, Ghent, St James of Compostella, and Jerusalem. This Speech ended, Mr Peter de Marigny, the King's Advocate in Parliament, 'likewise declared the abovesaid Persons Criminals; 'and then Mr John l' Archer, Doctor of Divi-'nity, deputed for that purpose by the Rector of 'the University of Paris, exhorted the two Kings 'to do Justice, and punish such Criminals, lend-'ing a gracious Ear to the Petition of the Com-'plainants, and to their Conclusions (1). Where-'upon Answer was made in Behalf of the King 'of France, by the Mouth of his Chancellor, that 'by the Grace of GOD, and the good Help and 'Advice of the King of England, Regent and 'Heir of France, he would do so exemplary Ju-'stice on the Authors of such a Murder, that 'they should have Reason to be satisfied. Ac-'cording to this Answer, Charles, Duke of Tou-'raine, Dauphin, was called to the Marble Table 'at Paris: where, after all . . . . . Solemnities 'had been observed against him and his . . . . . 'Accomplices, in relation to the Death of the 'Duke of Burgundy, he was by Sentence remo-'ved, banished, and exiled from the Kingdom of 'France, and declared unworthy to succeed to any 'Lordships now or hereafter, and especially the 'Succession and Expectation he had of the Crown 'of France (2).'

I shall say nothing of the Nullity of this Arrêt (3); but only make a Reflexion on the uneven Conduct of Courts and People. John Duke of Burgundy caused the only Brother of the King to be assassinated in the Streets of Paris. The Widow and Children of the deceased demanded Justice, but could obtain none. The Murderer boasted publickly of his Action, and would not, even at the Request of the King, disown it. He compelled the Complainants to consent to a Reconciliation; and was so far from incurring the hatred of the Public, that he became the Idol of the Parisians: he lorded it throughout the Kingdom, and destroyed a vast number of People in Paris, and other Places: he endeavoured to carry off the Dauphin: he joined with the capital Enemies of the Nation. He was at last served in the same manner as he had served the King's only Brother: He was massacred on the Bridge of Montereau. His Son and Widow complained to the King's Council, and obtained all they desired against the Dauphin: they got him condemned to perpetual Exile: their Cause was supported by the People, and particularly by the University of Paris. Can one conceive an Indignation great enough for such Caprice? If you except the Circumstance of the Promise given, and the

(1) John le Feron, Lord of St Remy, observes, in chap. cv, of his History of Charles VI, that John l' Archer spoke also very strenuously before the two Kings, exhorting them, by all means, to do Justice, and to punish the guilty for their Crimes; and said a great deal of the Condation and Dignity of Justice, and that they should hear and attend favourably to the Requests and Prayers of the Duke, to the end that these Requests might be granted.

(2) Continuation de la Chronique de Flandres, extracted from several Authors, by Denis Sauvage, chap. xcvi, pag. 304.

(3) See Du Tillet, in his Collection of Treaties between France and England, in the Chapter of King Charles VI.

in the Year 1422, by the Name of Charles VII. The Duke of Bretagne joined with the Engliſh and Burgundians; ſo that there is more reaſon to wonder that Charles VII did not loſe all his Kingdom, than that he loſt a good part of it. He was obliged to ſend away all thoſe who had a hand in the Death of the Duke of Burgundy (b). The Son of this laſt found ſome Employment in the Low Countries, in oppoſing Jaqueline of Bavaria [B]; which gave ſome reſpite to the King of the Faith of a Treaty going to be concluded, every thing elſe was more odious and wicked in the Murder of the Duke of Orleans, than in that of the Duke of Burgundy. The Duke of Orleans was ſuperior in Dignity to the Duke of Burgundy: he was the King's Brother. The Dauphin was ſuperior to the Duke of Burgundy, the Sovereign Authority being in ſome meaſure devolved to him during the Diſtraction of Charles VI; he had more right to exerciſe the Sword than any other, and it is certain that the Murderer of the Duke of Orleans deſerved Death, not only for that infamous Aſſaſſination, but alſo for numberleſs other Acts of Violence, Murders, Plunderings, and Proſcriptions. Nevertheleſs the Widow of the Duke of Orleans, and her three Sons, obtained no Juſtice: the Aſſaſſin was brought under no Penalty, but on the contrary inſulted and triumphed for twelve Years: at laſt he was maſſacred. The Widow and her Son demand Juſtice, and obtain the moſt thundering Arrêt imaginable againſt the Parties concerned. The ſame Frenchmen, who had ſo patiently ſuffered the Complaints againſt a Murder committed by John, Duke of Burgundy, to be rejected, offer their Service to avenge the Death of the Murderer. The Sons of the Duke of Orleans, inſtead of revenging themſelves, fell under Oppreſſion, which ended not but by the Interpoſition of the Son of him who murdered their Father. By right he ought to have been obliged to recur to their Clemency; but they had need of his Compaſſion. The Fate of the Murderer of this Murderer was very different; he was diſinherited of the Crown, and baniſhed for Life. This unequal Sentence wanted but little of being actually executed; he was beat in a hundred Places, and ſeveral Provinces taken from him. The Son of the Perſon, he had cauſed to be maſſacred, was the principal Cauſe of theſe Misfortunes; and after he had ſatiated his Revenge, conſtrained by his own King to make him a Satisfaction ſo unbecoming Royal Majeſty, as ſhall be ſeen hereafter, that never Fault was expiated in ſuch a manner. What Violence! What Tyranny is it with all Rigour to exact Vengeance for the Death of a Man, who laughed at the Proſecutions of the Widow and Children of the Perſon he had killed! But what Diſorder to ſee, that they ſhould ſucceed ſo well in requiring ſuch a thing! Here we may well cry out:

(b) Id. pag. 235, ad Ann. 1424.

- - - - - - multi
Committunt eadem diverſo crimina fato:
Ille crucem ſceleris pretium tulit, hic diadema (4).

(4) Juvenal. Sat. xiii, Ver. 103.

- - - - - - every Age relates
That equal Crimes have met unequal Fates;
That Sins alike, unlike Rewards have found,
And whilſt This Villain's crucify'd, the Other's crown'd.
DRYDEN.

The weak ſide of Monarchical Government.

We may make one Reflexion more. The Reign of Charles VI ſhews the weak ſide of monarchical Government. Other Forms of Government have every one their weak-ſide; but are not ſubject to Infancy or Madneſs, as Kings are. The monarchical Law, in Hereditary Countries, requires that he, who is in order of Succeſſion, poſſeſs the Throne, though he be an Infant, or by reaſon of his old Age, or ſome Diſtemper, is become a Child a ſecond time. By this means the moſt furious and fatal Diviſions are introduced, as France experienced under Charles VI. It is in vain to ſay, that a mixed Monarchy helps theſe Diſorders; for there never were in France ſo many Aſſemblies of the Great Men, as in this Reign. And to ſay the Truth, it has ſeldom been ſeen, that General Aſſemblies of the States ended Troubles: but that on the contrary they have contributed to foment and increaſe them. This appeared in the Reign of the Children of Henry II. Such then is the Condition of Mankind; there is no choice between good and bad, but between bad and worſe; and it often happens that we chuſe the worſt, when we think we chuſe the leſs Ill. The Dauphin, for Example, and thoſe who governed him, reſolved on the Death of John Duke of Burgundy, as a neceſſary Remedy, which at leaſt would be a means to avoid the greater Evil; but it appeared that they made matters worſe. John's Son cauſed more Confuſion and Miſchief than John had cauſed.

[B] He was employed in the Low-Countries, in oppoſing Jaqueline of Bavaria.] That Lady was only Daughter and Heireſs of William of Bavaria, fourth of that Name, Count of Hainault, Holland, and Zeland, and Lord of Frieſland, and had been married to John of France, Dauphin of Vienne, the Son of Charles VI (5). This Dauphin dying in the Year 1416, She was remarried to John Duke of Brabant, Couſin German to Philip the Good: 'But the young Coquette not being pleaſed with 'her ſecond Husband, a Man of little Virtue, uſed 'means to be divorced, and got herſelf carried off 'by ſome Officers, who took her to England, 'where ſhe married Humphry Duke of Glouceſter, 'Brother to King Henry. That enterprize tend-'ed much to the diſhonour of Philip (6).' Wherefore he vigorouſly oppoſed the Duke of Glouceſter: they provoked one another by Letters, and proceeded even to a Challenge 'to a perſonal Combat, and 'to appoint the Day, the Place, and the Weapons. The Duke of Bedford having aſſembled 'the moſt conſiderable Lords, both French and 'Engliſh, annulled the Challenge, and declared 'that there was no juſt Cauſe of Combat. — 'Yet there continued a hot War in Holland, where 'the Duke of Burgundy, and the Duke of Glouce-'ſter, tried their Strength: But after two Years, 'the Pope having declared the Marriage of Jaque-'line with the Duke of Glouceſter to be of no Force, 'that Prince deſiſted from his purſuit, and mar-'ried a Lady whom he kept (7). During the 'whole Year 1428, the Duke of Burgundy was 'buſy in the Low-Countries, in purſuit of Ja-'queline of Bavaria. He hemmed her in ſo cloſe, 'that, having beſieged her in Ghent, he conſtrain-'ed her to declare him her Heir to all her Lands, 'ſo that he joined to Flanders and Artois, HAY-'NAULT, HOLLAND, ZELAND, and 'FRIESLAND (8).' Hiſtorians repreſent this Jaqueline as a light and amorous Woman, who left her Husband only, becauſe ſhe did not believe him capable of getting her with Child (9). This was Occaſion enough for her to ſatisfy her Inclination and Deſires, at the expence of her Honour and Reputation. She would not be content to remain in the Hands of the Duke of Burgundy, waiting the Pope's Deciſion on the Point of her Marriage; and yet her Mother and her Husband had made that Agreement. The Inhabitants of Mons forced her to agree to it, and delivered her to the Duke, who conducted her to Ghent: But ſhe ſtaid not long there: For, having gained ſome Domeſticks, ſhe diſguiſed herſelf in Mens Cloaths, and eſcaped into Holland (10). There ſhe found ſome Adherents, and, by that means, gave the Duke of Burgundy a great deal of trouble; for ſhe was not diſcouraged by the ill ſucceſs of her Arms: 'The 'Spirit of a Woman, who gives her ſelf a looſe in 'Love, is not to be conquered, but with the ut-'moſt conſtraint; for Reaſon and Argument avail 'nothing with paſſionate Heads (11).' She would not yield, neither when ſhe heard that her Marriage with the Duke of Glouceſter had been declared null by the Pope, and that the Duke had married his Concubine (12), nor when ſhe heard of the Death of the Duke of Brabant, her true Husband. Moſt of her Friends forſook her, when they ſaw the

(5) Anſelme, Hiſt. Geneal. pag. 117.

(6) Mezeral, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 212, ad Ann. 1422.

(7) Id. ibid. pag. 237.

(8) Id. pag. 238.

(9) See Collut, Memoires de Bourgogne, pag. 714.

(10) Id. pag. 728.

(11) Id. pag. 720.

(12) Who was not thought ſo conſtant, but that ſhe had granted ſeveral Favours to others beſides the Duke. Collut, Memoir. Bourgog. p. 728.

of France's Party. He had the honour to be intreated earneſtly by the Pope, and the Council of Baſil, to moderate his juſt Reſentment, and to pity the Misfortunes of his Country. Beſides, he had the Glory to ſee Charles VII ſubmit to Terms of Accommodation ſo rigorous, that he may, without Hyperbole, be ſaid to have made him Amende Honorable [C]. By means of theſe Submiſſions, ſhameful indeed, the Superiority of the Burgundians, and that they beheaded all the Chiefs of the other Party, who fell into their Hands (13). Yet ſhe would not treat with the Duke of Burgundy, till he had beſieged her in Tergou (14). After the Treaty he gave the Government of Holland to Frances de Borſelle, who took it in his Head to make Love to Jaqueline, and married her without the Duke's knowledge in the Year 1432. She was made Priſoner, but as ſhe made a new Ceſſion of all her Rights, ſhe was permitted to ſatiate herſelf in the enjoyment of her new Amour. She died at the Hague without Children the fourth of October 1436 (15).

All this ſhews that our Philip the Good was an able Prince, and that he made no ſcruple to aggradize himſelf at the expence of the involuntary Chaſtity of a Woman: For he oppoſed the Amours of Jaqueline, for no other reaſon, but to hinder her from having Children; and as ſoon as he knew that thoſe ſhe had would not inherit, he permitted her to ſatisfy Nature.

[C] It may be ſaid without Hyperbole; that he made Charles VII, make him Amende honorable.] I have cited in another Place (16), a long Paſſage, in which I have left Chaſm, which contains this: 'Before Lewis XI, King Charles VII, his Father, 'did a thing yet more ſtrange: For in order to 'make Peace with Philip Duke of Burgundy, his 'Vaſſal, nay, even his natural Subject, he ſent 'the Conſtable of France, the Chancellor, a Mareſ-'chal of France, and ſeveral other great Lords, to 'treat of Peace, who, in full Aſſembly, in the Name 'of the King their Maſter, aſked Pardon for the 'Death of John Duke of Burgundy, confeſſing, a-'loud and diſtinctly, that the King has done amiſs 'being young, of little Judgment, and ill ad-'viſed, praying the Duke to lay aſide his juſt re-'ſentment for that fact, which could not now be 'helped: Whereupon the Duke declared, that he 'forgave the King for the Honour of GOD, and 'out of Compaſſion to the People of France, and 'in Obedience to the Council, the Pope, and other 'Chriſtian Princes, who had deſired him to do it. 'A Slave could not have paid more Honorable A-'mende to his Lord, than the King did then to 'his Subject, in order to reſtore the Kingdom to 'it's former Splendor, and to drive out the Engliſh, 'as he did ſoon after, and in proceſs of time re-'duced to Obedience, the Man to whom the Ne-'ceſſity of his Affairs had obliged him thus to ſub-'mit. The Romans would ſooner have loſt all 'their State than thought of doing ſo (17).' As in the Caſe of Satisfaction for Injuries, the leaſt alteration of Terms, is oftentimes of Conſequence, my Readers might not be fully ſatisfied, if I left them to the Authority of This Author. Therefore it is neceſſary to recite the Words of the Treaty Arras itſelf, which relate to the humble Submiſſion of Charles VII. The firſt Article runs thus, 'That 'the King ſhall ſay, or, by notable Perſons ſuffi-'ciently authorized, ſhall cauſe to be ſaid, to Mon-'ſieur of Burgundy, that the Death of the late 'Monſieur the Duke John of Burgundy, his Father, '(whom GOD abſolve) was unjuſtly and wickedly 'cauſed by them, who perpetrated the ſaid Action, 'and by ill Counſel, and has always diſpleaſed him, 'and does now diſpleaſe him from his Heart; and 'that if he had known the ſaid Caſe, and been 'of ſuch Age and Underſtanding as he is of at 'preſent, he would have prevented it to the 'utmoſt of his Power: but he was very young, 'and had at that time but little Knowledge, 'was not ſo well adviſed as to prevent it. And 'ſhall pray my ſaid Lord of Burgundy, that all 'Malice or Hatred which he may have againſt him 'on that Account, he will lay aſide from his 'Heart, and that good Peace and Love ſhall be 'between them; and expreſs mention ſhall be made 'of this in the Inſtrument of the Agreement, and 'Treaty made between them (18).' Let us ſee alſo the three following Articles. 'Item, That all thoſe 'who perpetrated this wicked Fact, or were con-'ſenting thereto, the King ſhall abandon, and 'ſhall do all poſſible Diligence to cauſe them to 'be taken and apprehended, (wherever they ſhall 'be found) to be puniſhed in Body and Goods: 'and if they cannot be taken, ſhall baniſh, and 'cauſe them to be baniſhed for ever, without Grace 'or Revocation, out of the Kingdom, and the 'Dauphiné, with Confiſcation of all their Goods, 'and they ſhall be out of all Treaties. Item, 'The King ſhall not ſuffer them to be received, or 'favoured, in any place under his Obedience and 'Power: and ſhall cauſe it to be proclaimed and 'publiſhed in all Places of the ſaid Kingdom and 'Dauphiné, where Proclamations and Publications 'are wont to be made, that no Perſon do re-'ceive or favour them on Pain of Confiſcation of 'Body and Goods. Item, That Monſieur of Bur-'gundy, ſo ſoon as he can conveniently, after the 'ſaid Agreement paſſed, ſhall nominate thoſe Per-'ſons, of whom he is, or ſhall then be, informed 'by that they perpetrated the ſaid wicked Fact, 'or were conſenting thereto, to the end that they 'may be immediately and diligently proceeded againſt 'on the part of the King as aforeſaid. And further, 'becauſe the ſaid Lord of Burgundy may not yet 'have true Knowledge, nor true Information, of all 'who perpetrated the ſaid wicked Fact, or were 'conſenting thereto, whenſoever he ſhall be duly 'informed of any others, he may name them, and 'by his Letters Patent, or otherwiſe ſufficiently 'ſignify them, to the King, who ſhall in that Caſe 'be bound immediately and diligently to cauſe them 'to be proceeded againſt in manner aboveſaid.' Charles VII was not quit for this Amende honorable: he was moreover condemned in Charges, Damages, and Intereſt. Take the Pains to read, in Olivier de la Marche, the reſt of the Treaty of Arras: you will there ſee in every Article (19), that it coſt France a conſiderable Sum to the Benefit of the Duke of Burgundy. Further, the mortifying Conditions he impoſed on Charles VII were not expreſſed in ſecret Articles: they were both ſettled and publiſhed by the Mediation of two Cardinals; one on the part of the Council, the other on the part of the Pope; and there never appeared ſuch a Guard as that of the Embaſſadors, who managed this Treaty. They had in their Trains above ten thouſand Horſe (20).

The Hiſtorians of the Houſe of Burgundy could not find ſufficient Cauſe of Vanity in the Pacification of Arras: therefore they fought for more magnificent ones in the Preliminaries. They ſay, that the Embaſſadors of Charles VII caſt themſelves on their Knees before the Duke of Burgundy, and, melting in tears, beſought him to pardon their Maſter: but he rejected their Tears and Supplications, and did not yield till a Miracle put him in fear of the Excommunication which the Cardinal Legate threatened him with. Let us recite this fine Story, as Lewis Gollut gives it. 'The Belgic and Holland 'Annals —— ſay —— that the Embaſſadors of 'France (underſtanding that the Duke of Burgundy 'heard Maſs at St Waſt) came to him, and (caſting 'themſelves on both Knees, accompanied by the 'Ducheſs herſelf, who on her Knees, with the reſt, 'joined in the Petition) begged of him Peace, and 'that he would be content with the Revenge he had 'taken for ſeveral Years, for the Death of his Fa-'ther, and pardon the King his Offence, commit-'ted by the ill Advice of thoſe about him, while 'he was yet young, and not above ſixteen Years of 'Age. Adding, that the King, ſince he came to 'Years of Diſcretion, had a thouſand times repented 'of this Murder, and with ſighs (which he could 'not forbear whenever he remembered it) he had com-'plained no leſs affectionately than the Duke of Bur-'gundy himſelf; and that he was ready by all ho-'nourable Means (agreeable to the Royal Dignity of 'a King of France) to make ſatisfaction and amends

'to

(13) Id. ibid.

(14) Otherwiſe Goude. Gollut falſely calls that Town Conde, or Gond. Mezeral, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 239, calls it Gande. See above, Citat. (8).

(15) Gollut, Memoires de Bourgog. pag. 725. See alſo Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burg. lib. III, pag. 150.

(16) In the Remark [G], of the Article LEWIS XI.

(17) Honorat. Mayolet demandes curieuſe & Reponſes libres, pag. 590, 591.

(18) Olivier de la Marche Memoires, liv. I, cap. III, pag. 24, 25.

‡ The Copy has theſe Words in the Margin. Note, that the Duke has named Tanneguy de Chaſtel, Jehan Louvet, Preſident de Provence, Chevrelieu, Pierre Frottier, Eſcuier, Maiſtre Jehan Cadart, Phiſicien.

(19) The Treaty contains Forty one Articles.

(20) Gollut, Memoires de Bourgogne, pag. 782.

¶

indeed, but excusable from the Necessity of the Time [D]. Charles VII detached him from his Alliance with the English. The English, from that time, became great Enemies to the Duke, and committed all manner of Hostilities in his Territories (i). He attempted to revenge himself on them, by taking Calais ——— and besieged it with a numerous Army (k). The Flemings forsook him, and made him miscarry in that Enterprize. He did a very generous Action in the Year 1440; for he procured the Release of the Duke of Orleans, who had been Prisoner in England

(i) Mezeral, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III. pag. 245.

(k) Id. p. 255, ad Ann. 1436.

'to the Duke. Which they spoke with so much 'Affection, that they shed Tears in abundance. 'This caused the Duke (thus taken and attacked unawares) to weep likewise: being moved to see the 'Countenances of these great Lords, and his dear 'Consort among them, and compassionating the Miseries of his Country: and also because he foresaw 'that by this Agreement his Vengeance for the Death 'of his Father would be prevented, and the Murderers suffered to go unpunished. He then, touched 'with Affection (and more inclined to the Preservation of his House, than to the Aggrandization of 'the English), humanly raised all these Lords and 'Ladies, and answered them, that for his Part he 'would not refuse Peace, if he could accept of it: 'but that by his Oath, given to the English, he could 'not treat without their Consent. The same Annals say, that the Duke appeared resolute, and positively refused to come to any Agreement with 'the French, and that the Cardinal de Sainte Croix, being vexed at it, threatned to exercise the Power 'of the Church, against both him and the English. 'And, continue the same Annals, the Cardinal, in order to shew the Duke the Power of the Church, 'called for some white Bread, which (with great 'Assurance) he cursed in the Presence of them all: 'and instantly the Bread became black; and then 'the Cardinal, leaving his Imprecations, gave it 'the Benediction, by which means the Bread recovered it's former whiteness. At which the Duke 'was exceedingly terrified, and promised to be reconciled to the King, contenting himself with the 'Revenge he had taken for the Death of his Father (21).'

(21) Gollut. Memoires de Bourgogne, liv. x, cap. lxvii, pag. 785.

[D] — shameful Submissions — which the Necessity of the time renders excusable.] It is to no purpose to say, that the Romans would rather have lost their States than have thought of that (22). They were a People, of Courage too singular to be drawn into an Example. Neither is it to the purpose to say, that private Gentlemen would rather die, than, in a Quarrel of Honour, offer their Enemy any thing that came near to the Submissions of Charles VII. Sovereigns cannot govern themselves by the strict Laws of Chivalry (23). They are obliged, in favour of their Subjects, and to draw themselves out of an embarrassing War, to do a hundred things which would be base and ignominious, if done by a Gentleman in a private Quarrel. It is not their Business to stand nicely on the Point of Honour. The Interest of the Public requires, that, without Prejudice to their Glory, they may offer Peace to their Enemy, and ask it pressingly several Years running, and not be discouraged by his Haughtiness and Disdain. To shun the greater Evil, they ought to sacrifice their Reputation, and their Frontiers, to the good of Peace. Let a private Person, who goes to Law for an Estate, be as obstinate as he will not to be baffled in his Cause, let him spend every Rag rather than voluntarily quit Possession; that is of no Consequence to the Public: but if a Prince were to stand on such Bravadoes, he would expose his State, and fin against the Maxim, Salus populi suprema lex esto. And since the Obligation even of an Oath, the most sacred and most inviolable thing in the World, is subject to that Law, ought not the worldly Glory of a Prince be likewise subject to it? A Roman General affirms, that, for the Preservation of the State, we may suffer even what is ignominious: 'Ac 'fœda atque ignominiosa deditio est; sed ea Charitas patriæ est ut tam ignominiâ eam quam 'morte nostra si opus sit servemus. Subeatur ergo 'ista quantacunque est indignitas, & pareatur ne'cessitati quam ne Dii quidem superant. (24). - - - - 'That Surrender is base and ignominious; but the 'Love of our Country is such, that we would save 'it as well by our Ignominy as by our Death, if 'need be. Let therefore this Indignity, how great 'soever, be undergone, and let us submit to Necessity, 'which even the Gods cannot overcome.' Olivier de la Marche imagines, that the Peace of Arras was a Work rather Divine than Natural; for the Affairs of Charles VII were in a good Posture, and those of the Duke of Burgundy still better: and yet, notwithstanding, 'they were both Great, and upon their Mettle, Nature (which cannot lye in her 'Judgment) felt herself grieved and wounded by 'both Parties. Wherefore the two noble Princes 'condescended to the Peace above-mentioned: and 'after a close Enquiry, and Calculation of the 'Reasons which moved each Party to seek Peace, 'I find that, on the Part of the King of France, 'he made Conscience of the Case of the Death 'of Duke John. Secondly, He saw no possibility 'of withstanding both the English and Burgundians at once, without great Hazard and Damage to his State. Thirdly, By reason of the 'War he found himself ruled, and under the 'Hands of so many kinds of Gens d'Armes, Foreigners and Natives, that there was not so much 'as a petty Captain in France, to whom they durst 'deny Admittance to the King at any time, whatever Business he had. Fourthly, He was so wise 'and reasonable a King, that he chose rather the 'Good and Benefit of his Kingdom, than obstinately to persevere in a wrong Notion, without 'Safety or Repose. As for the good Duke Philip, 'what made him so readily condescend seems to 'have been a Regard to the Preservation of the 'Kingdom of France, to the noble Blood from 'whence he was descended (working in his Breast, 'and nearest to his Heart) and to the great Benefits he had received, in the Persons of his Predecessors, from the Royal Family, as well of natural Right as Benevolence. These three things, 'working together, made him forget the Offence, 'ill Adventure, Mischief, and Misfortune. Secondly, The small Affinity and Love he had to the 'English; and, thirdly, His own Honour and Virtue, who, always during his whole Life, (however 'offended and provoked he may have been at 'several times, one while by Words, another while 'by Deeds) lent his Hand with all his Might 'and Power, to support, maintain, and guard, the 'Royal Majesty of France (25).' Here you see plainly the Language of a Domestic of the Duke of Burgundy, entirely partial to his Masters; Amplification on one Side, and Diminution on the other. He does but just hint the small Affection of Duke Philip to the English, and conceals the deadly Affronts which had caused a total Rupture, if Charles VII had been wise enough to improve the Opportunity. Besides, he talks with Emphasis of his Master's Affection for the Kingdom of France. Meer Chimera! A Turk would not have been more cruel to Charles VII than Philip was, nor have exacted more disgraceful Satisfaction. If the Duke of Burgundy had felt in his Veins the least Drop of the Royal Blood from which he descended, he never would have made the King of France submit to a Penalty so unworthy of a Monarch. I say again, Charles VII was excusable: He was neither Warrior nor Politician enough to extricate himself out of trouble; if he had had as great Resource of Courage and Genius as some others have had, he would never have prostituted his Honour, as he did by the Peace of Arras: and perhaps if he had let things go on a few Years, he might have seen himself in a Condition to maintain, that he did no more than his Duty in killing Duke John; that, as he could not put him to Death by way of Law, he was necessitated to have recourse to that means, and thereby to remove the greatest Shame of the Reign of Charles VI; for nothing shews so evidently,

(22) Meynier, Demandes curieuses & responses libres, pag. 591.

(23) See the Article CONTAUT (CHARLES), Remark [D]; and the Article POITIERS, Rem. [I].

(24) T. Livius, Lib. ix, pag. 241.

(25) Olivier de la Marche, Memoires, pag. 99.

land for Twenty five Years; and thus these two Princes, by a sincere and cordial Reconciliation, extinguished the mortal Enmity raised by their Fathers (l). The Duke of Burgundy concerned himself but little with the Affairs of the English, after the raising of the Siege of Calais. He had Work enough at Home: His Subjects in the Low Countries, and chiefly the Gantois, found him Employ; but he reduced them to Reason [E]. He gave a retreat to the Dauphin for several Years successively, and accompanied him into France with Four thousand Horse, on News of the Death of Charles VII, in the Year 1461. He lived till the fifteenth of July, 1467 (m). He was a Prince of great Merit, and very much enlarged his Dominions [F]; he gained the Love of his Subjects, and the Esteem of all the Princes in Christendom. He married thrice, and was excessively incontinent [G]: It was he,

(l) Mezeral, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 359. ad Ann. 1440.

(m) Id. ibid. Father Anselme, pag. 211, says June 15. Pontus Heuterus Rer Burgund. pag. 149, says the 16*th of* July.

dently the Misery and Disorder of France under That Prince, as to see the Assassin of the King's only Brother, not only refuse to conceal himself, but continue, for ten Years successively, to disturb the State, and turn every thing topsy-turvy, according to his Fancy. A little Patience might, perhaps, have shewn Charles VII the Rupture between the English, and Duke of Burgundy. This last had more reason to fear the Success of the English than that of France: for if the English had overthrown Charles VII, it would have been easier for them to conquer all the Dominions of the Duke of Burgundy, than it would for France to do it after the Expulsion of the English (26). From this Principle, and out of Resentment for some Affronts, the Duke of Burgundy found it his Interest to forsake them, and he would have done it sooner or later. 'The old Men of our Country 'say, these are the Words of Lewis Gollut of Franche 'Comté (27), that the Duke of Bedford (28) 'once came to so high Words with Duke Philip, 'that he reproached him with the Treaty of Peace 'above-mentioned, and upbraided him with his 'Lavity, for his hearkning to the Promises and Oaths of the French. - - - - The same old Men 'say further, that the Duke of Bedford added, 'in a Passion, that it was in his Power easily to prevent it; and that the Duke of Burgundy would be much surprized if he were sent to drink Beer and Ale in England, more perhaps than for his 'ill. Whereupon the Duke, as they say, (being then but ill attended) made answer: Good Cousin, 'I have done nothing amiss, do not put yourself in 'pain about it. A few Days after, having taken care to have his People about him, he gave charge to the Marshal de Vergy to do what I am about to mention. That the Sieur de Vergy should observe when the Duke went in to the Duke of Bedford, and that then he should draw out three or four hundred Gentlemen of the boldest, who (being well armed privately with their Battle-Axes in readiness) should enter suddenly, and with furious Mien and Aspect, into the Room where the Dukes were: which they did: then addressing themselves to their Prince, and having saluted him on the Knee (without so much as looking at the Duke of Bedford) the Sieur de Vergy said to him, Sir, Here and elsewhere it goes well, but elsewhere much better than here; for there you will be served, honoured, and obeyed. And therefore we beseech you to depart, and leave these haughty People here to reap the Fruit of their Bravadoes and Presumptions. Whereupon the Duke asked: Is that your Resolution? and they all answered, Yes, yes, let us go, let us go, we have no Occasion for these People who stand in need of us. With that the Duke, addressing himself to the Duke of Bedford, said, Good Cousin; You see what my Gentlemen advise me to. I am resolved to believe them. Fare you well; and forthwith departed, no body daring to stir, for Orders had been given every where to fight stoutly if it had been necessary.

(26) Compare what Gollut says Memoir Burgund. pag. 726.

(27) Id. ibid. pag. 723.

(28) Brother of Henry V, King of England, and Regent of France.

[E] His Subjects, and chiefly the Gantois, found him Employ, but he reduced them to Reason.] 'The 'Inhabitants of Bruges, rising in the Year 1437, 'let him enter their Town, as it were to give 'him Satisfaction, and fell upon his People, and 'killed above a hundred of them, and, among the 'rest, the Lord de l'Isle-Adam. He himself was 'in great Danger, and escaped very narrowly, 'by breaking open the Gate of the City with 'Hammers. —— Their Fury abated when they 'learnt,—that the Duke was coming to besiege them 'with a great Army. They petitioned for a Pardon, 'which they obtained, but on very hard Terms. 'It cost them two Hundred thousand Crowns of 'Gold, the loss of a great many of their Privileges, 'and the Lives of a dozen, or fifteen, of the most 'factious. The Gantois gave him a great deal more trouble by their frequent Commotions: the most dangerous was that in the Year 1452, occasioned by the Gabel. He had a mind to establish it in Flanders, and render it certain, imposing Twenty four Gros current on every Sack of Salt. They resolved upon all manner of Extremities, rather than suffer an Impost on Water and the Sun, which are the universal and free Gifts of Nature. They confided in the King's Protection: And indeed he wrote strongly in their Favour to the Duke of Burgundy: But having received a stronger Answer, he did not think proper to engage in a Civil-War, not being yet clear of the Foreign one against the English. 'The loss which the Gantois suffered in five, or six, great Battles, heated their fierce Courage the more: But the Battle of Riplemonde, and afterwards that of Gavres, wherein they lost Twenty thousand Men, brought them so low, that they were obliged to come to a Composition. Two thousand Men, bare headed, and bare-foot, and all the Counsellors, Sheriffs, and Officers, in their Shirts, went a League to meet the Duke and his Son, to beg for mercy. The Gate, at which they went out to fight him at Riplemonde, was stopt up for ever. They were condemned to pay Four hundred thousand Rix-Dollars, to deliver him their Banners, to do with them as he should think fit, and suffer a Change of their Customs and Privileges (29).'

(29) Mezeral, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 277.

All this shews the Happiness, the Valour, and the Ability, of our Philip.

[F] He very much enlarged his Dominions.] Let us observe here, in what manner the House of Burgundy united so many Provinces under it's Dominion. Philip the Bold added to the Provinces, given him by his Father, the Earldoms of Flanders and Artois, by his Marriage with Margaret, Daughter of the Count of Flanders. He left all these States to his eldest Son, and obtained for his second Brabant, and Limbourg, by Will of his Aunt (30). This Duke of Brabant was Father of him who married Jaqueline of Bavaria: We have seen above (31), how this Jaqueline yielded Hainault, Holland, Zeland, and Friesland, to Duke Philip the Good, in 1428. This Duke, the same Year, took Possession of the Counties of Namur and Zutphen, which he had bought of Earl Theodoric (32). He inherited, in 1430, the Duchies of Lothier, Brabant, and Limbourg, the Marquisate of the Holy Empire, and the Lordship of Antwerp, by the Death of Philip of Burgundy his Cousin (33), who succeeded his Brother, the Husband of Jaqueline. He made himself Master of the Country of Luxemburg in the Year 1443 (34).

(30) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burg. l.b. ii. pag. 62.

(31) In the Remark [B].

(32) Mezeral, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 239.

(33) Id. ibid. pag. 240.

(34) See Gollut. Memoires de Bourgogne, pag. 794, 795.

[G] He married thrice, and was excessively incontinent.] Michelle of France, Daughter of Charles VI, whom he married in the Year 1409, and Bona of Artois, whom he married in the Year 1424, and who died the Year following, were his two first Wives. He had no Children by them. He married afterwards Isabella of Portugal, Daughter of John I, King of Portugal, the tenth of January, 1430. He had three Sons by her, of which the two eldest lived not long. As to his natural Children, they were fifteen in Number (35). The following

(35) See Father Labbe, Tabl. Geneal. pag. 257, &c and Father Anselme, Hist. Geneal. p. 221, &c.

he, likewiſe, who inſtituted the Order of the Golden Fleece [H], the Univerſity and the Parliament of Dole (n). It is a very ſtrong Proof of his Merit, that he could keep in Obedience his only Son, who was a little diſcontented, and the moſt proud and raſh Man living [I] (n) About the Year 1423. See Gollut. Memoire de Bourgogne, pag. 155.

following Paſſage is worth reading. I take it from the Memoirs of Olivier de la Marche, in the Chapter where he gives an Account of the Journey, which the Ducheſs of Burgundy took into France, in the Year 1444. 'The King of France, I ſay (36) received 'the ſaid Ducheſs very honourably, and the Queen 'did her much Honour, and was often in private 'with her. For both theſe Princeſſes were grown 'old, and now but little talked of: And I believe 'they both had the ſame Pain and Diſtemper, 'called Jealouſy: and that at thoſe times they 'diſcovered their Paſſions ſecretly to each other, 'which was the Cauſe of their privacy: and in-'deed there was ſome Appearance of Reaſon for 'their Suſpicions. For the King had newly rai-'ſed a poor Gentlewoman, one Agnes du Soret, 'and placed her in ſuch Splendor and Power, 'that her State was equal to that of the greateſt 'Princeſſes of the Kingdom. —— On the other 'Hand, the Duke of Burgundy was the moſt 'ſparkiſh and frolickſome Prince of his time, 'and had Baſtards both Sons and Daughters, a 'very fine Company. Thus the Queen and the 'Ducheſs often met together, to condole one ano-'ther on their Sorrows.'

(36) Olivier de la Marche, liv. i, cap. xiii, p. 159.

I mention, elſewhere (37), Anthony one of his natural Sons. James of Burgundy, Lord of Fallaix, Grandſon, I think, of Baldwin, another natural Son of Duke Philip, became a Proteſtant; but taking Offence at the Diſputes raiſed at Geneva, between Bolſec and Calvin, in the Year 1551, he ſell off, and his Wife alſo, from the Doctrine of the Reformed. He had carried a good Face in their Church ſeveral Years (38). Calvin had dedi-cated to him his Commentary on the firſt Epiſtle of Paul to the Corinthians; but he afterwards took out that Epiſtle Dedicatory, and inſerted another to the Marquis de Vie (39).

(37) In the Remark [A], of the Article BERSALA.

(38) Beze, Pref. du Comment. de Calvin. ſur Joſué, p. 20.

(39) Id. pag. 25.

[H] He inſtituted the Order of the Golden Fleece.] He inſtituted it in Bruges, the tenth of January 1430, which was the Day of his Marriage with Iſabella of Portugal. He deſigned it to conſiſt of Thirty one Knights. The following Fact, more curious than modeſt, is found in the Collections of Mr Colomiés. 'I have heard Mr Voſſius ſay, that 'he remembered he had read in the Flemiſh Chro-'nicle, that Philip, Duke of Burgundy, ſirnamed 'the Good, had inſtituted the Order of the Golden 'Fleece, on Occaſion of his finding a Hair of 'his Miſtreſs, which was of a yellow Colour. 'This I have found confirmed by Andrew Favin, 'in the beginning of the ſecond Volume of his 'Theater of Honour. Others, ſays he, ſay, that 'Philip Duke of Burgundy, converſing, with a great 'deal of intimacy, with a Lady of Bruges of ex-'quiſite Beauty, and entring one Morning into her 'Chamber, found, on her Toilette, ſome of the Fleece 'of her lower REGION. By which this care-'leſs Lady occaſioned Laughter to the Gentlemen 'who followed the Duke, who, to cover the Myſtery, 'made an Oath, that the Man, who had made a jeſt 'of that Fleece, ſhould never have the Honour to 'wear a Collar of the Order of the Fleece, which he 'deſigned to erect for Love of his Lady (40).'

(40) Colomiés Recueil de Pièces curieuſes, p. 126, 127.

[I] He kept in Obedience his only Son, who was a little diſcontented, and the proudeſt, and raſheſt Man living.] That a Son, ſo ambitious and bold as he was, at a diſtance from Court, arrived at an Age for commanding, beloved by a People, prone to Inſurrections, ſpared his Father's old Age, is a Token, that the Father was a great Man. The Son I ſpeak of 'undertook nothing, 'till he was 'about Twenty two Years of Age, —— then he 'begun to quarrel with his Father's Governours; 'the Father took their Part: Wherefore he with-'drew from his Preſence, and went and lived in 'Holland, where he was well received, and held 'intelligence with the People of Ghent, and ſome-'times went thither. He had nothing from his 'Father: But the Country of Holland was very 'rich, and made him large Preſents, as did ſeveral 'great Towns in other Provinces, in hopes to 'win his Favour for the time to come, according 'to general Cuſtom, that we always ſtudy more 'to pleaſe thoſe People, whoſe Power and Autho-'rity is expected to increaſe hereafter, than him 'who is already in ſuch a Station, as that he can 'mount no higher: And they are more beloved, 'eſpecially by the Populace. Wherefore when 'Duke Philip was told, how much the Gantois 'loved his Son, and that he could manage them 'ſo well, made Anſwer, that they always loved 'well their Lord to come: But as ſoon as he 'was their Lord, they hated him (41).

(41) Comines liv. vi, cap. xiii, p. 409.

BURGUNDY (CHARLES Duke of), Son of the former, was born at Dijon, the tenth of November, 1433. He was one of the moſt Warlike Princes in the World. He was known by the Name of Count of Charolois, during the Life of his Father. There was a prodigious Antipathy between him and Lewis XI, which begun during that Monarch's Reſidence, while he was but Dauphin, at the Court of Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy (a). This reciprocal Hatred was a perpe-tual Source of Enterprizes, which occaſioned great Miſchief: Theſe Princes ſtudied nothing but to thwart each other. They went to War ſeveral times; and when they made Peace, it was with no other View than to enſnare one another [A], and each of them continually kept Intelligence with the Enemies of the other. If the Court of Vienna had been as active, as it has been ſince, to take Ad-vantage of favourable Opportunities, it had been a great Happineſs for Lewis XI; but he found them inſenſible [B], and could not perſuade them to do any great matter

(a) See Matthieu, Hiſtoire de Louis XI, liv. i, pag. 56, &c ſeq.

[A] He, and Lewis XI, had no other View than to enſnare one another.] Philip Camerarius ſhall be my Commentator. 'How often, as Hiſtorians re-'late, did King Lewis X, and Charles, Duke of 'Burgundy, confirm their Treaties by ſolemn Oaths? 'And how often did they depart from them, when 'either of them thought that the Advantage of his 'Affairs required it? ſo that one may ſay, they 'gave their Faith, and ſwore to each other, on 'purpoſe that they might break more eaſily what 'they had reciprocally promiſed to obſerve. Accord-'ingly Philip de Comines ſaid, that all their Coun-'ſels tended only to deceive one another, and that 'the Inclinations of theſe two Princes were oppo-'ſite, and directly contrary, all their Lives, except 'once, when they conſpired to take off the Con-'ſtable (1).'

(1) Camerarius Meditat. Hiſtoriques Vol. II, lve. iv, cap. xviii, pag. 330, 331.

[B] Lewis XI found the Court of Vienna inſenſible.] While the Duke of Burgundy was mak-ing War in the County of Cologne, Lewis XI diſ-patched John Tiercelin to the Emperor, to 'adviſe 'him not to come to any Agreement with the 'Duke. ——And beſides, to make him a new Pro-poſal: which was, that they ſhould give aſſurance 'each to the other, that neither ſhould make Peace 'or Truce without conſent of the other: and that 'the Emperor ſhould take all the Dominions which 'the ſaid Duke held of the Empire, and which, 'of right, ought to be held of it, and declare them 'confiſcated to himſelf, and that the King ſhould 'take matter againſt Duke Charles, who was formidable to ſeveral States of the Empire. He found more Vivacity in the Court of the Archduke Sigiſmond, and among the Swiſs, in the Affair of Ferrette (b). He found himſelf greatly embarraſſed, the firſt time he had to do with this terrible Enemy. It was in the Year 1465. The Count of Charolois entered France with a fine Army, to ſupport the Grandees of the Kingdom, in a League they had made againſt the King, which they called the League of the public good. The Battle of Montleheri, between the King's Troops, and the Burgundians, decided nothing; both Parties pretended to have the Advantage. The Earl gave ſignal Proofs of his Bravery, and was wounded there. The Heads of the League joined him ſome time after, and they wanted but little of making themſelves Maſters of Paris. They would, in all appearance, have diſmembered the Monarchy, if they had had as much Prudence as Strength; but, as none of them were capable of conducting the Buſineſs well, and every one might obtain great Advantages by a Treaty, they conſented to a Peace, which was concluded the Twenty nineth of October, 1465 (c). The Count returned very well ſatisfied, and found Employment at home, in the War againſt the People of Liege. He commanded the Duke his Father's Army, before Dinant, in 1466. The Town was taken, and treated with the utmoſt Rigour, as they had on their part acted with exceſſive Inſolence (d) [C]. He continued that War after the Death of his Father (e), and gained a Battle againſt the People of Liege, near St Tron, in the Month of November, 1467 (f). He was Maſter of Peronne, when he received a Viſit there from Lewis XI, in the Year 1468. That Interview had an Iſſue quite different from the King's Expectation; for he found himſelf the Duke of Burgundy's Priſoner, and was conſtrained to follow him to the Siege of Liege, to be Witneſs of the Chaſtiſement to be inflicted on a Town which he had ſtirred up to take Arms a ſecond time (g). It was taken by Aſſault, the thirtieth of October 1468, and treated cruelly [D]. The King was ſuffered to retire four Days

(b) See the Remark [B].

(c) Taken from Mezeral, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III. pag. 294, & ſeq.

(d) Id. ibid. pag. 302.

(e) He died in July, 1467.

(f) Mezeral, ibid. pag. 306.

(g) Id. ibid. pag. 309, &c.

' take all that were held of France: as Flanders, Artois, Burgundy, and ſeveral others. Though that Emperor had been all his Life a Man of very little Courage, yet he was a Man of good Underſtanding, and, having lived to a great Age, had a great deal of Experience (2). He recited an Apologue —— and with that Fable put the King off, without returning any other Anſwer (3). Philip de Comines had ſaid before, that the Emperor had a very narrow mean Spirit, and would put up any thing to ſave Expences (4). To give a better Light into what I have hinted of the Buſineſs of Ferrette, it muſt be obſerved, that Duke Charles, having lent large Sums to Sigiſmund of Auſtria, Count of Tirol, received from him Poſſeſſion of the County of Ferrette, the Landgraviate of Alſace, and four Frontier Towns, in the Year 1469 (5). Five Years after, the King of France, ' having roufed Duke ' Sigiſmond, by giving him 80000 Crowns, for ' which Sum his Countries of Alſace, Suntgou, and ' Ferrette, were engaged, this being paid him at Baſil, the Duke ſummoned Duke Charles to take it, and to ſurrender the Poſſeſſion of the Countries engaged to him. The Duke returned anſwer, that he was content to receive it, provided the Money were paid him at Bezançon in Franche Comté, otherwiſe he ſaid he would not quit (6). Whereupon there was a general Inſurrection: the Troops of the Duke of Burgundy were driven out: Hagenbac, who had been Governour of the County of Ferrette for him, and had been guilty of a great many Oppreſſions, was beheaded, ' and the whole Country ' of Ferrette was put in the Hands of the ſaid Duke ' Sigiſmund of Auſtria: and the Swiſs begun the ' War in Burgundy, and took Blaſmond, which belonged to the Mareſchal of Burgundy, who was of the Houſe of Neufchaſtel: and beſieged the Caſtle of Heycourt, which belonged to the ſame Houſe, whither the Burgundians came to it's Relief, but were defeated before it, though numerous. The Swiſs did abundance of Miſchief to the Country (7).' All this was contrived by Lewis XI, as Philip de Comines owns (8). The Troops, ſent by the Duke of Burgundy into that Country, had ſometimes the Advantge (9).

(2) Philip de Comines, liv. iv, cap. iii, p. 235, 206.

(3) Id. ibid. p. 207.

(4) Id. ibid. p. 195.

(5) See Lewis Collut. Memoires de Bourgogne, cap. xcili, p. 839.

(6) Id. ibid. cap. ci, p. 870, 871.

(7) Id. ibid.

(8) Comines, liv. iv, cap. xi, p. 203, 204. ad Ann. 1474.

(9) Id. ibid. p. 203.

(10) See Collut, Memoires de Bourgog. p. 803.

[C] He treated the Town of Dinant with the utmoſt Rigour: as they on their Part had acted with exceſſive Inſolence] ' The People of Liege and Dinant declared War againſt the Count of Charolois, ' when he was on his March, to come to Paris ' (10).' The Duke his Father ' compelled them in ' a few Days to buy a Peace. But quickly after, ' on a Report which was ſpread that Charolois was ' killed at Montlheri, they took Arms again with ' greater Fury. —— The Inhabitants of Dinant, a ' rich Town, and famous for it's Manufacture of ' Copper, run out into all manner of Outrages againſt ' Charolois, ſuch as to call him Baſtard, and hang ' him in Effigy. The Chaſtiſement followed ſpeedily after their outrageous Inſolence: the Duke laid ' ſiege to Dinant, and his Son commanded the ' Army. The Town was taken by aſſault and burnt; ' Eight hundred of the Inhabitants were drowned ' in the Meuſe, and the reſt drove to extream Miſery (11).' Lewis Collut ſays, ' that the Town ' was demoliſhed, and entirely razed, ſo that no ' ſigns of it appeared. Thus fare they ordinarily, who dare affront or vilify Princes (12).' Theſe laſt Words are but too often true, and yet I do not think it poſſible to cure the Inſolence, with which the People, in free States, are apt to attack the Honour of a Prince, who is their Enemy, by Libels, Prints, and other ſuch ways. The wiſe Heads would never be able to reſtrain the Fury of the Populace, if they ſhould attempt it; and perhaps they may not think it proper to uſe their Authority in the Caſe: they are in hopes that this kind of raillling will nouriſh Hatred, and raiſe their Courage, and make them open their Purſes: all things very proper to facilitate the means of reſiſting. But when they miſcarry, what would they not give that they had followed other Conduct? Obſerve, that a Piece of falſe News, believed for three Days, is as capable of deſtroying a State as of ſaving it. The People of Dinant periſhed only by believing too haſtily the falſe News of the Death of the Count of Charolois.

(11) Mezeral, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, p. 202, ad Ann. 1465.

(12) Collut, Memoires de Bourgogne, cap. lxxxviii, p. 837.

[D] The Town of Liege was taken by aſſault —— and treated cruelly] ' Great Part of the People ' fled over the Meuſe into the Ardennes, where ' above half of them periſhed with hunger and ' cold: the reſt took refuge in Churches, or hid ' themſelves in Houſes (13).' The Duke ' cauſed ' a Thouſand, or Twelve hundred of the poor ' Wretches, who were taken in the Houſes of Liege, ' to be drowned, and the whole City to be burnt, ' except the Churches, and Three hundred Houſes ' about them, which were reſerved to lodge the ' Eccleſiaſtics (14). The Coſmographer Munſter affirms, that the Duke cauſed all the Inhabitants of Liege, that could be found, to be put to Death, without regard to Age or Sex: that the Prieſts had their Throats cut in the Churches, and even during the Celebration of the Maſs: that Twelve thouſand

(13) Mezeral, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, p. 311, ad Ann. 1468.

(14) Id. ibid.

Days after (b). He ſoon broke the Treaty he had made at Perronne, and, in 1470, ſeized ſome Towns in Picardy, belonging to the Duke (i). This War, interrupted by a Truce, became very bloody, after the Death of the Duke of Guienne, Brother to the King (k). The Duke of Burgundy put all to Fire and Sword in Picardy, and the Territories of Caux (l) [E]. He undertook two Sieges, which he was obliged to raiſe, that of Beauvais, and that of Rouen. It is reported that the Women of Beauvais ſignalized themſelves in the Defence of their Town, for which they were recompenſed, by a Privilege very agreeable to the Sex [F]; for they had leave to adorn themſelves as they thought fit. Some time after, a Truce was made, during which the Duke went to conquer the Province of Guelders. This Addition inſpired him with the Thought of having his States erected into a Kingdom by the Emperor [G]; but he could not compaſs his Deſign. It was infinitely more eaſy for him to engage the King of England in a League againſt France: I have ſaid in another place (m), that Lewis XI laid that Storm with great Sums of Money. He made a ſeparate Peace with the Engliſh, in the Year 1475; the

(b) Id. Ibid. pag. 312.

(i) Philip de Commines, liv. ii, cap. i, & ſeq.

(k) In the Month of May, 1472. Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 319.

(l) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom III. pag. 320, ad Ann. 1472.

(m) In the Article of EDWARD IV.

thouſand Women were thrown into the River, and Forty thouſand Men killed in the Town. 'Dux 'obtentâ civitate fecit proditores omnes decollari unà 'cum aliis promiſcuis ex hominibus quos omnes 'interfecit, nullo habito delectu inter fœminas & 'viros, pueros & ſenes. Conſodiebantur etiam ſacerdotes & monachi in templis & in Miſſarum ſolemniis Colligebant mulieres a tergo & projiciebant in ſubjectum Moſæ fluvium. Ultimo exurebant civitatem & diruebant murum. Numerantur quadraginta millia hominum in civitate trucidati, & duodecim millia mulierum quæ in aquas 'projectæ fuerant atque ſubmerſæ (15).' A certain Hiſtorian obſerves, that the Soldiers raviſhed the young Women, before they killed them: 'Neque 'etiam a virginum ſacerdotum cæde ſatis temperatum eſt, quas bene ſtupratas prius, efferus miles jugulare, &c (16).'

(15) Munſter, Coſmograph. lib. ii, p. 134.

(16) Reneras Snoius Rerum Batavicar. lib. xi, p. 159.

[E] He put all to the Sword in Picardy, and the Territories of Caux.] His Inclination to cruelty is apparent from the foregoing Remarks, to which I add this: 'He entered Picardy with a Torch in one 'Hand, and a Sword in the other. Till then 'burning of Towns had not been practiſed between 'the two Parties: but nevertheleſs he made a Bonfire of all the plain Country, and ſacrificed to the 'Manes of his Friend (17) all that fell in his Power. Neſle, taken by aſſault, ſuffered all manner of 'Cruelties, becauſe the Inhabitants had killed a 'Herald, who went to ſummon them, and two 'Men more, during the Ceſſation granted them 'to treat. Reſpect to the Altars did not ſave the 'innocent People, who took refuge in the Church; 'and they who eſcaped the Sword were all hanged, 'or had their Hands cut off (18).' Theſe are the words of another Hiſtorian: The Duke 'marches 'to Neſle in Vermandois —— beſieges, beats, and 'takes it. Of five hundred Archers, commanded 'by one, called the Little Picard, he killed the 'greateſt part: hanged ſeveral, among the reſt the 'Captain: cut off the Hands of the reſt. Several, 'both Soldiers and Inhabitants, who had taken 'refuge in the Churches, were inhumanely maſſacred on the very Altars, and embracing the Images. 'The Duke himſelf went into the Church on Horſe-'back, and ſeeing the dead Bodies. This, ſays he, 'looks well, I have good Butchers. Then he burnt 'and razed the Place (19).'

(17) That is to ſay, the Duke of Guienne, Brother of Lewis XI.

(18) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. p. 320, ad Ann. 1472.

(19) Jean de Serres Invent. de l'Hiſt. de France. Vie de Louis XI, pag 827. See that more at large in Pierre Matthieu Hiſt. de Louis XI, p. 280.

[F] The Women of Beauvais ſignalized themſelves, and were recompenſed with a Privilege very agreeable to the Sex.] 'It is a memorable thing, that 'in a general Aſſault made on Thurſday the ninth 'of July, the Men being on the Point of being 'routed, the Women, conducted by one Jane 'Hachette, did wonders in repulſing the Enemy 'with Stones, wild Fire, and Lead melted in boiling Roſin. There is ſtill an Effigy of that 'Woman in the Town-Houſe with a Sword in her 'Hand; and a Proceſſion is made on the tenth of 'July (the Day the Siege was raiſed) in which the 'Women walk firſt, and the Men after (20).' Mezerai forgets the chief Circumſtance: therefore I ſhall cite another Author, who, in a Chapter, where he lays it down, that the Woman think Finery a Privilege of Right belonging to them, brings two Proofs, one drawn from the Practice of the Jews, and the other from a Decree of Lewis XI. Theſe are his Words: 'The Jews had this Conſideration 'for their Women in the Obſervation of their fooliſh 'Traditions. For they forbad a great many little 'innocent Works, even in the moſt preſſing Neceſſity, on ſolemn Days: but they excepted the Habits and Jewels of their Wives, which they 'thought they might buy on thoſe Days †. It was 'likewiſe a privilege granted by Letters Patent of 'King Lewis XI, in the Year 1473, to the Women and 'Maids of the Town of Beauvais, that they might 'dreſs themſelves on their Wedding Days, and 'when they thought fit, in ſuch Veſtments, Attire, 'Ornaments, and Jewels, as they pleaſed, in conſideration of the Courage they had ſhewn in defending the City againſt the Duke of Burgundy ‡. 'This Privilege is joined to another, which is very 'particular, that is, they may walk in Proceſſion, 'and to the Offering, before the Men, on the Day 'of the Feaſt of St Agadrême, Patroneſs of the 'Town of Beauvais (21). Andrew du Cheſne mentions theſe Privileges granted to the Women of Beauvais by King Lewis XI (22).

(20) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. pag. 321, ad Ann. 1472.

† V. Seb. Munſterum in notis ad Evangelium Hebraic. Matthæi, cap. xiv, pag 97.

‡ Vid Hiſtoire de Beauvaiſis par Ant. Loiſel, p. 234, 351.

(21) Joël Avis Chantelet & Moreau pour l'Inſtitution des Enfans, liv. ii, cap. iv, pag 260

(22) Du Cheſne Antiquité des Villes de France, p. 412.

This puts me in mind of the Prerogatives granted to the Woman of Rome, after the Mother of Coriolanus, accompanied by ſome other Ladies, had obliged him to retire from the City with the Army of the Volſci. The Senate ordered the Magiſtrates to grant the Women all the Marks of Favour and Reſpect which they ſhould aſk. They required nothing but that a Temple ſhould be built to Female Fortune; the Worſhip was to be at the Expence of the Public, but they offered to defray the Charge of the Building themſelves. The City took upon them the whole (23). Plutarch ſtops here (24): he does not not ſay, with Valerius Maximus, that it was decreed by the Senate that the Men ſhould give the Women the upper Hand, and that they might wear Ornaments of Gold and Purple, &c. 'In quarum honorem Senatus matronarum ordinem benigniſſimis decretis adornavit. 'Sanxit namque uti fœminis ſemita viri cederent, 'confeſſus plus ſalutis reipublicæ in ſtolâ quam in armis fuiſſe: vetuſtiſque aurium inſignibus novum 'vitæ diſcrimen adjecit: permiſit quoque his purpureâ veſte & aureis uti ſegmentis (25).' They could not better have ſuited the Reward to natural Inclination (26).

(23) Plutarch. in vita Coriolani, pag. 231.

(24) Id. Ibid.

(25) Valerius Maximus, lib. v, cap. ii, n. 2, p. 436.

[G] He was deſirous to have his Dominions erected into a Kingdom.] At an Interview with the Emperor Frederic III, at Triers, he promiſed to give his Daughter to the Emperor's Son, provided his Imperial Majeſty would 're-erect the Kingdom of Burgundy, held by his Anceſtors, and would crown 'him, and confer on him the Titles and Honours of 'a King (27).' The Emperor conſented, 'and the 'neceſſary Preparations were made for that purpoſe. 'But it was dropt all on a ſudden, for ſome diſpleaſure the Duke had given the Emperor. —— Some 'ſay, that King Lewis hindered the Emperor from 'going any further in giving him the Title 'of a King: by giving him to underſtand that the 'Duke aſpired not only to that, but rather to the 'Empire, in prejudice of Prince Maximilian: The 'Emperor, a ſuſpicious Prince, fearing that, made 'the Refuſal above-mentioned (28).' This happened in the Year 1473. Pontus Heuterus adds, that the Duke offered Money to obtain of the Emperor, and the Empire, a Grant of the four Biſhoprics of the Low Countries (29), and that he demanded the

(26) See the Article PERIANDER, Remark [B]; the Article PRETEXTAT, Remark [B]; and the Article ROSSUS, Rem. [D].

(27) Gollut, Memoir. de Bourgogne, pag. 842.

(28) Id. ib. pag. 843.

(29) Utrecht, Liege, Cambrai, & Tournai.

the Duke of Burgundy was very angry, and remonſtrated to the King of England very haughtily on that Subject [H]. The ill Succeſs of the Siege he had laid to Nuitz, in the Country of Cologne, contributed not a little to the Breach of the League he had made with that Prince, and with the Duke of Bretagne. After ſome Bravadoes, he alſo agreed with Lewis XI on a Truce for nine Years, not without great Spite, which he diſcharged on Lorrain. He ſubdued it entirely: in conſequence of that he built Project upon Project, even ſo far as to think of the Conqueſt of Italy; but he had a mind firſt to oblige the Swiſs to ſubmit to his Laws: He miſcarried in this Deſign. They beat him at Granſon, June 5, 1476, and at Morat the 20th of June the ſame Year. At laſt, he was killed before Nancy, January 5, 1477 [I]. He was a Prince who might have made great Conqueſts, if he had had as much Prudence as Courage, and if he had not had, in Lewis XI, an Adverſary, who, by his Intrigues and his Money, raiſed him abundance of Enemies. His Military Ordinances are admirable (n). He was the firſt who revived the Method of the Romans, of incloſing his Troops in an intrenched Camp (o). The firſt Cauſe of his Wars againſt the Swiſs was a meer trifle [K]: The Booty, which (n) See them in Lewis Gollut, Memoires de Bourg. liv. x, cap. xcvi, xcvii, xcviii.

(o) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III, pag. 308.

the Vicarſhip of the Empire, with a tacit deſire to ſucceed the Emperor Frederic; that the Pomp with which he ſhewed his Riches, and the Finery of his Furniture, which ſoiled that of the Emperor (30), ſtrengthened the Suſpicions raiſed by the King of France; and that thus all the Preparations for the Coronation were over-ſet, in ſuch a manner, that Frederic retired to Cologn, without taking leave of the Duke (31).

(30) See Philip de Comines, liv. ii, cap. v.ii, p. 205.

(31) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burgund. liv. iv, pag. 278, 279.

[H] Lewis XI having made Peace with the Engliſh — he complained haughtily of it to the King of England.] He departed from Luxemburg with ſixteen Horſes to go to ſpeak to him; Edward — ſeeming ‘ to be aſtoniſhed at ſo ſpeedy and ſudden an Arrival, aſked him what brought him there. I come, ſays the Duke, to ſpeak with you. Would you do it, ſaid Edward, in private or in public? With that, the Duke, who could no longer keep in his Anger, and who came to ſay what he had a mind, without conſidering that he might alſo hear what he would not like, aſks the King of England if he had made Peace? No, ſays Edward, but a Truce for nine Years, in which you are included, and alſo the Duke of Bretagne, and I deſire you to agree to it. The Duke replied in the Engliſh Language, which he underſtood and ſpoke, that the Army needed not to have paſſed the Sea for that; that this Treaty ruined the Reputation of the Kings of England, and that it wanted that Lion's Heart again which was buried at Roan. Then he added: I had procured you an Opportunity of doing your Buſineſs, and recovering what belongs to you, which you will never have again. It was not for my Intereſt, for I could have done without you; and to ſhew you that I will have nothing to do with your Truce, by St George I will not treat with the King till you are returned into England, and have been there above three Months. Edward not liking theſe Brunts made no Reply (32).’

(32) Matthieu Hiſt. de Louis XI, liv. vi. cap. xx. p. 321. See alſo Comines, lib. iv, cap. viii. p. 227.

[I] He was killed before Nancy, the fifth of January, 1477.] He laid Siege to that Place with a few Troops; he was baſely betrayed by Campobaſſo, one of his Generals: he was attacked by a very numerous Army. It is therefore no wonder, that he periſhed in the Enterprize, but he was very much to blame not to follow the wiſe Counſel which was given him (33). He fought like a Lion (34). (a) ‘ After the Battle was over they were in ‘ pain to know what was become of him. He ‘ was fought among the living, and afterwards ‘ among the dead. —— He was found in a Ditch, ‘ with his Face all bedawbed with Dirt and Blood, ‘ and the hard Winter having froxen it, he could not ‘ be known (35).’ His Domeſtics knew the Body ‘ by ſeveral Marks, by the want of Teeth in his upper Jaw, which he loſt in his Youth, by a Fall; ‘ by the Scar of the Wound he received in the ‘ Throat in the Battle of Montlheri: by the ſhrivelling of the Skin in his Shoulder occaſioned ‘ by a Carbuncle: by a Fiſtula he had under his ‘ Navel: and by his Nails, which he wore longer ‘ than any Perſon in his Court (36).’ There were three Wounds in the Body; ‘ one with a Halbert, ‘ which cleft his Head, from above the Ear to ‘ the Teeth: a Wound with a Pike in the Thigh, ‘ and another in the Fundament (37).’ He was carried to Nancy, ‘ and after they had waſhed the ‘ Body, and dreſſed it in a plain linnen Cloth, ‘ they laid it on a Table, with a Canopy of black ‘ Velvet over it, in a Room hung with the ſame ‘ (38). The Duke of Lorrain went in a mourning ‘ Habit, and with a golden Beard, after the manner of Champions, to give him holy Water (39); ‘ and, and taking him by the Hand, ſaid to him, ‘ GOD receive your Soul, you have done me ‘ much harm, and given me a deal of Trouble. ‘ He cauſed him to be interred with all manner ‘ of funeral Honours (40).’ He erected a very handſome Monument for him in the Church of ‘ St George at Nancy, with the Effigy as big as the Life (41). Charles V cauſed the Body to be removed to Luxemburg, ‘ from whence it was ‘ again removed to Bruges, where, by command ‘ of Queen Eleanor, it was interred in the Choir ‘ of the Church of our Lady, before the Steps of ‘ the great Altar, in the ſame Vault with Lady ‘ Mary his Daughter (42).’ Obſerve, that ‘ The ‘ People imagined he had eſcaped, and went and ‘ hid himſelf in a Hermitage, from whence he ‘ was to return after ſeven Years. This Report ‘ prevailed ſo, that ſeveral People lent Money to ‘ be paid at his return. His choleric Humour, ‘ and ſome Perſon or other who had been ſeen ‘ in Suabia, that reſembled him very much in ‘ Size, Hair, Voice, and Countenance, occaſioned ‘ this Opinion (43).’

(33) Comines, liv. v. cap. viii. p. 288.

(34) Gollut, Memoires de Bourgogne, pag. 882.

(35) Matthieu, Hiſt. de Louis XI, liv. vii. cap. xxiii. p. 390.

(36) Id. ibid. p. 392.

(37) Id. ibid. p. 390.

(38) Id. ibid. p. 392.

(39) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III. pag. 331, ad Ann. 1477.

(40) Matthieu, Hiſt. de Louis XI, p. 392.

(41) Gollut, Memoires de Bourgogne, pag. 884.

(42) Id. ibid.

(43) Fabert Hiſt. des Ducs de Bourgogne, p. 312. See alſo Reneron Snoius, Rerum Batavicar. lib. xle p. 268.

[§ (a) Mezerai, Tom. II. pag. 171, of his Great Hiſtory Ed. 1646, obſerves, that this Prince was ſirnamed the Lion; ‘tis to this Sirname that That Expreſſion of Gollut alludes; the ſame Sirname likewiſe appears in the following Verſes, which are taken out of a Ballad on the tragical Death of this Prince, and extant in the Forger d'Honneur, &c. fol. 137.

Or eſt le parc orgueilleux deffendu
Le fier Lyon ne l'a pas bien gardé,
Il a trés-mal ſon Latin entendu,
Et à ſon cas ſimplement regardé,
Il a trouvé avoir un peu tardé
An deſloger du pays de Lorraine;
Car a la fin il y eſt demouré
Et les moutons, la toiſon & la layne.

The ſtately Park is now proteſted:
The Lion has it's Guard neglected.
His Buſineſs ill he underſtood,
And ill conſulted his own Good:
He found too long a time he had Retreating from Lorrain delay'd;
For there he loſt, as it fell out,
His Life, Sheep, Skins, and Wool to boot.

REM. CRIT.]

[K] The

which they took at the Battle of Granſon was ineſtimable, and ſome ſingular Adventures are related concerning it [L]. His Grief at this Defeat had almoſt coſt him his Life, and did weaken his Underſtanding [M]. I muſt not forget that, in the [K] The firſt Source of his Wars againſt the Swiſs was a very ſmall matter.] I ſpeak ſo in compliance with the common Opinion; for I am perſuaded that the great Miſchiefs they had done him, both in Alſace and Burgundy, were a powerful Motive for attacking them. Theſe Words of Philip de Comines: 'And for what Quarrel was this War 'begun? it was for a Cart-load of Sheep Skins, 'which the Count de Romont took from a Swiſs 'that was paſſing thro' his Lands. If GOD had 'not forſaken the Duke, it is not likely he would 'have thrown himſelf into Danger for ſuch a 'Trifle (44).' This Paſſage, I ſay, has made an hundred Authors ſay, that a Cart-load of Skins was the Cauſe of a bloody War between the Duke of Burgundy and the Swiſs. That Example is ſcarce ever forgot, in treating the Common-place that very ſmall matters are the Cauſe of great Events (45). But if it had been carefully obſerved, that Philip de Comines contradicts himſelf, ſo much regard would not have been paid to his Obſervation. He had ſaid very clearly, that Charles was reſolved to 'make War on the Swiſs, as well 'for what they had done to him, when he was before 'Nuz, becauſe they aſſiſted in the taking the Earldom of Ferrette from him - - - - - - - and becauſe 'they had taken from the ſaid Count de Romont part of his Territories (46).' However, they were afraid of him, and made him all manner of Submiſſions. Comines is my Author. 'The Swiſs, 'ſays he (47), perceiving him ſo near them, ſent 'an Embaſſy to him; and offered to reſtore what 'they had taken from the ſaid Lord of Romont. - - - - - The Duke entered Burgundy, where the 'Embaſſadors of the Old Leagues of Germany, 'called Swiſs, returned to him, making larger Offers than before; and, beſides Reſtitution, they 'offered to quit all Alliances which were contrary 'to his liking (and eſpecially that with the King) 'and to become his Allies, and ſerve him with 'Six thouſand Men at Arms for ſmall Pay againſt 'the King, when he ſhould require them.' The Duke would hearken to nothing. They remonſtrated to him likewiſe; 'in order to diſſuade him 'from that War, that he could get nothing from 'them; for their Country was barren and poor, 'and they had no good Priſoners for him; and 'that they did not believe but that the Spurs and 'the Bits of the Horſes Bridles in his Army were 'worth more Money than they could pay him 'Taxes, were they taken (48).' This Reaſon was of no weight with a Prince like him, who had the Ambition of the Romans. 'Raptores (Romani) 'orbis, poſtquam cuncta vaſtantibus defuêre terræ, '& mare ſcrutantur: ſi locuples hoſtis eſt avari, 'ſi pauper ambitioſi. - - - - Soli omnium opes atque inopiam pari affectu concupiſcunt (49). - - - - 'Theſe Ravagers of the World (the Romans), when 'Land failed theſe univerſal Deſtroyers, ſtarab the 'Sea too; if the Enemy be rich they are covetous, 'if poor ambitious. - - - They alone do equally covet 'the Wealth and Poverty of all the World.' If he had had their Prudence and Fortune, he might have carried his Conqueſts far; but he was too prone to follow his own Opinion, and by that means ruined the greateſt Power then in Europe (50). Never did Man better than he verify the Maxim 'Vis Conſilii expers mole ruit ſuâ (51). - - - - - 'Strength without Counſel deſtroys itſelf.'

(44) Comines, liv. v. cap. i. p. 260.

(45) See the Coups d'etat de Gabriel Naudé.

(46) Comines, liv. v. cap. i. p. 257.

(47) Id. ibid.

(48) Id. ibid.

(49) Tacit. in vita Agric. cap.

(50) Comines, liv. v. cap. viii. p. 288.

(51) Horat. Od. iv. lib. iii.

[L] The Booty they took - - - - - was ineſtimable, and ſome ſingular Adventures are related concerning it.] The Duke of Burgundy was in great Pomp - - - - - and had all his beſt Jewels, and Plate, and a great many other Ornaments (52). He diſpoſed every thing for the Battel, with the greateſt imprudence; and the Army was ſo ſuddenly put in Confuſion, that 'they all fled; and the Swiſs 'got his Camp, and his Artillery, and all the 'Tents and Pavillions belonging to him, and his 'People (of which there were a great Number), 'and other things without end: for nothing was 'ſaved but their Perſons: All the Duke's great 'Jewels were loſt; but as to Men, he loſt only 'ſeven Men at Arms, at this time; all the reſt fled 'and himſelf too. It may be better ſaid of him, 'that he loſt both his Honour, and his Riches that 'Day, than it was ſaid of John of France, who 'was taken fighting vallantly at the Battle of Poitiers (53). — The Spoils of his Army enriched 'theſe poor Swiſs: Who, at firſt, knew not the 'value of the Goods, they had in their Hands, eſpecially the moſt ignorant of them. One of 'the fineſt and richeſt Pavillions in the World 'was parted into ſeveral pieces: Some of them 'ſold a great Quantity of Silver Diſhes and Porringers, for two great Blancs a-piece, thinking they 'were Pewter. His great Diamond, (which was 'one of the largeſt in Chriſtendom) to which hung 'a great Pearl, was taken up by a Swiſs, and afterwards put in the Caſe again, and thrown under 'a Cart; he came back afterwards to ſeek it, 'and offered it to a Prieſt for a Florin. The 'Prieſt ſent it to their Lords, who gave him 'three Francs for it. They got three great Rubies, called the three Brothers, one other called La Hotte; 'another called La balle de Flandres, (which were 'the largeſt and beſt Stones that could be found) 'and other things without Number, which taught 'them to know the value of Money ever ſince '(54).' I have read ſomewhere, that a Bernois, named Bartholomew May, bought the Duke of Burgundy's Diamond for 5000 Florins; ſome Merchants of Genoa afterwards bought it for ſeven Thouſand Florins of the Rhine. The Duke of Milan gave eleven Thouſand Crowns for it. At laſt Pope Julius II gave Twenty thouſand, and placed it for an Ornament in his Crown (55). Obſerve, that the Duke had treated the Garriſon of Granſon cruelly, which conſiſted of ſeven or eight Hundred choice Men, at the beginning of the Siege. They ſurrendred at Diſcretion, and he put them all to death (56).

(52) Comines, liv. v, cap. i. p. 259.

(53) Id. ibid. p. 260.

(54) Id. ibid. cap. ii. pag. 266.

(55) Mich. Stabelerus Hiſt. Helvet. lib. iv. ad Ann. 1476. apud Hotting. in Meth. legendi Hiſt. Helvetic, p. 432.

(56) Comines, liv. v, cap. i, p. 259.

[M] His Grief, - - - had almoſt coſt him his Life, and did impair his Underſtanding.] I ſhall uſe ſtill the Words of Comines: 'He was thrown into a great 'Illneſs, by Grief and Vexation, at the diſgrace 'he had received. And to ſay the truth, I think 'his Underſtanding was never ſo good afterwards, 'as it had been before this Battle (57).' The Author reſumes the ſame Diſcourſe in another Place, and ſays thus, 'His Grief at the Loſs of the firſt 'Battel of Granſon was ſo great, and diſturbed his 'Spirits ſo much, that he fell into a great Sickneſs, 'of ſuch a Nature, that, tho' his Choler and the 'Heat of his Body naturally was ſo great, that he 'could drink no Wine, but commonly in the 'Morning drank Barley Water, and eat Conſerve 'of Roſes, to cool himſelf, this Vexation cauſed 'ſuch a Change in his Conſtitution, that he was 'obliged to drink ſtrong Wines without Water, 'and to have Cupping-Glaſſes applied to the Region of the Heart, in order to draw the Blood 'from thence. But of this you, Monſeigneur de Vienne, know more than I, as you attended him 'in that Illneſs, and cauſed him to have his 'Beard ſhaved, which he let grow: And in my 'Opinion, he was never after this Illneſs ſo wiſe 'as he had been before, but his Underſtanding 'was very much weakened (58).' I cannot miſs this Remark, without enriching it with a fine Reflexion of this wiſe Hiſtorian, it will confirm what I have ſo often ſaid of the unhappineſs of great Men, and this true Maxim, That there is no Body leſs happy, than thoſe who ſeem to be moſt ſo. After the War of the public Good, 'What Quiet had he? 'He had perpetual Toil, both of Body and Mind, 'without any Pleaſure: For Ambition fired his 'Heart, and ſtirred him up to conquer whatever 'he thought convenient. All Summer long he 'was ever in the Field, in great hazard of his Perſon, and took upon himſelf the Care and Inſpection 'of his Army: and yet never had all things 'done according to his Mind. He roſe firſt, and 'went to Bed laſt, as if he had been the pooreſt 'Man in the Army. When he reſted in Winter, 'he was uſing all diligence to get Money. He 'applied

(57) Comines, cap. iii, pag. 267.

(58) Id. cap. v. p. 274, 275.

the Year 1469, he employed himſelf in Acts of Juſtice (p). He viſited ſeveral Provinces in the Low Countries, and chaſtiſed the Malefactors ſeverely. What he did to a Lord who had ſeduced a very modeſt Woman, is too remarkable not to be mentioned [N]. He ſuſpected Lewis XI to much that he ſlighted the ſincere Advice which he gave him of Campobaſſo's Treachery; if that were true, ſays he, the King would not have given me notice of it (q). One of his greateſt Faults was, that he thought that all the Favours and Honours he had received in the World, were owing to his own good Senſe and Virtue, without attributing them to God, as he ought to have done (r). He was much more regular in his bodily Pleaſures, than any of his three Predeceſſors (s). So we do not find his Houſe filled with Baſtards, nor that he was too fond of his Wives. He married thrice, and left only one Daughter [O].

(p) Pontus Heuterus Rer. Burgund. lib. iv. pag. 265.

(q) Comines, lib. v, cap. vi, pag. 283.

(r) Id. cap. ix, pag. 291.

(s) Gollut, Memoire de Bourgogn. pag. 885.

' applied himſelf every Day from ſix o'Clock in the ' Morning, and took a great deal of Pains, in re- ' ceiving and hearing a great number of Embaſſa- ' dors: and in this Labour and Miſery ended his ' Days: He was killed by the Swiſs before ' Nancy, as has been ſeen before; and may it not ' be ſaid, that he never had one good day, from ' the time he began to endeavour to aggrandize ' himſelf, to the day of his Death. What advan- ' tage did he gain by this Labour? What more ' had he of it? He who was ſo rich, and had ſo ' many fine Cities and Principalities under his ' command, where he might have been eaſy if he (59) ' would (59) ' I make no excuſe for copying this Paſſage: My Readers, who are Judges of what's fine, will admire it, and it were to be wiſhed, that every Prince had it by heart, and would make good uſe of it. They would act better than they do, both for their own Happineſs, and that of their Neighbours. But what, this which we look upon as unhappineſs, is only a leſs evil. They would be yet more miſerable, if they were conſtrained not to torment themſelves, Body and Soul, to embaraſs themſelves in Intrigues and Projects of Revolution. They are deſirous to act great parts on the Stage of this World, and to draw the Eyes of all mankind: and for that end, riſe earlier than an Artiſan, write more than an Attorney, and tire more Clerks than a Regiſter in Chief. To debar them from this trouble, would make them more miſerable.

(59) Id. liv. vi. cap. xlii. p. 409.

[N] What he did to a Lord, who had ſeduced a very modeſt Woman, is worth the mentioning.] This Story is related in an ample manner, not without ſome flouriſhes of Rhetoric, by Pontus Heuterus. The Subſtance of it is thus: A very brave Captain of Duke Philip the Good had obtained, for a Recompenſe of his Services, the Government of a Place There he fell in Love with his Landlady, a Woman of ſingular Beauty and Modeſty. He talked to her of Love, and ſwore to be ſecret and conſtant to her. She anſwered, that her Conſcience would not ſuffer her to violate her conjugal Faith, and that he ought to remember the ſacred Laws of Hoſpitality, and place his Inclinations on ſome other, where he might do it lawfully. ' Eſſe ' variis locis virgines opulentas complures formâ ' ſe multo præſtantiores, eligat unam quæ genio ' reſpondeat è qua liberos ſancto matrimonio procrea- ' tos ſuſcipere poſſit (60). —— There were a great ' many rich Maids to be found, much preferable to ' herſelf for Beauty; he might chuſe one ſuitable to ' his Temper, and marry her, and get Children in ' a legitimate way.' This Anſwer ſerving only to augment his Paſſion; he attacks her on another ſide: He offers her a large Sum of Money, and promiſes to make her go finer than any of her Neighbours and Relations, and to procure her Husband a beneficial and honourable Poſt. ' Auri acervum offert, ' ac in quem velit uſum auferre jubet, promittit ' mundum muliebrem, qui cum vicinarum ac cog- ' natarum ornamentis comparari non poſſit, addens ' ſe marito apud Principem impetraturum, in pa- ' triâ ejus dignitatem, non minus honori quam ' compendio ſerviturum (61).' His promiſes making no impreſſion, he raiſes another Battery: He impriſons the Husband on pretence of Rebellion; and when the Wife applied to him, as to the only means of ſaving the Priſoner's Life, he anſwered that the Crime was manifeſt, and that he could not avoid putting him to death, unleſs the Mercy of the Sovereign interpoſed: I promiſe to obtain it, continues he, provided you will immediately grant me the Favour I have asked of you ſo often. Promitto me apud Principem gratiam marito tuo obtenturum, ſi voluntati meæ obſequi nunc cum ſoli fumus volueris (62). This Propoſal made her bluſh, weep, ſigh, raiſed a combat between conjugal Love and Virtue, and ſtruck her dumb. He takes Advantage of her Irreſolution and ſatisfies his Luſt. Obtentam lachrymantem & alta ſuſpiria ducentem, nec tamen reluctantem, in thorum collocat (63). She from time to time preſſes him to perform his Promiſe: He puts her off with a thouſand lies; and at laſt, cauſed the Priſoner's Head to be cut off privately, and made the Wife believe, ſhe would have him delivered out of Priſon, on preſenting to the Goaler a Paper which he gave her. She runs to the priſon, and there finds that her Husband had loſt his Life, by the Hands of the Executioner. The ſight of ſuch an Object ſtruck her ſpeechleſs, but ſoon after ſhe returned to the Governour, and loaded him with all the reproaches, that a juſt indignation could ſuggeſt. He makes a hundred excuſes, and offers to marry her, and promiſes her a magnificent Fortune. She rejects theſe offers, and relates the whole Adventure to ſome Relations, who adviſe her to wait the Arrival of Duke Charles, and to demand Juſtice of him. That Prince, having had proof of the Governour's Crimes, ordered him to marry the Widow; ſhe had an Averſion to it, which could not be ſurmounted, without a great deal of Sollicitation Victa multorum ac magnorum virorum matronarumque auctoritate mulier in Nuptias fere coacta conſentit (64). The Marriage Contract was drawn, and the Wife was to inherit all the Eſtate of her Huſband, if he died before her without Children: the Ceremony of the Marriage was performed in due form; and then the Duke aſked the Woman if ſhe was content? Yes, ſays ſhe. But I, replies he, am not ſo. He ſends the Governour to Priſon: two Hours after, he cauſes him to be beheaded in the ſame Room, where the firſt Husband had loſt his Head. A Copy of the Sentence of Death was delivered to the Woman, and ſhe was ſent to the Priſon to ſee, that the double Crime of the Seducer did not go unpuniſhed. She fell into a Melancholy, which ended her days a little while after. Non diu poſt, animi mœrore confecta ſupervixit, ingentibus præfecti bonis liberos è priore marito ſuſceptos ditans (65). Lipſius, who relates the ſame Story with all it's Circumſtances, obſerves, that the Scene was in a Town in Zeland (66). See alſo Peter Matthieu in his Hiſtory of Lewis XI (67). Mr Varillas has juſt mentioned it, and has made a blunder; for he pretends, that the Governour was forced to marry that Woman (68). He wanted not to be forced to it, he deſired nothing better. Obſerve, that Snoius tells this Story quite differently: He ſays, that a Burgomaſter of Zeland raviſhed a poor Girl in a Garden; that the Duke ordered him, either to marry her, or give her half his Eſtate; and that he refuſing to do it, the Duke cauſed his Head to be cut off, tho' in that Extremity the Burgomaſter offered to marry the young Woman (69).

(60) Pontus Heuterus. Rer. Burgundicar. lib. v, pag. 265.

(61) Id. ibid.

(62) Id. ibid.

(63) Id. ibid.

(64) Id. ibid. pag. 366.

(65) Id. ibid. pag. 367.

(66) Lipſius Mon & Exempl. Polit lib xi, cap. ix, n 6.

(67) In liv. vii, cap. xxiii, p. 395.

(68) Varillas Hiſt. de Louis XI, liv. i, p. 34.

(69) Snoius Rer. Batav. lib. xi, p. 159.

[O] He married three Wives, and left only one Daughter.] I. Catharine of France, Daughter of Charles VII, in the Year 1439. She died in the Year 1446 without Iſſue. II. Iſabella of Bourbon, Daughter of Charles Duke of Bourbon in the Year 1454. She died the thirteenth of September 1465, leaving a Daughter whom I ſpeak of in the following Article. III. Margaret, Siſter of Edward IV, King of England, in the Year 1468: She had no Children, and died in the Year 1503 (70).

(70) Taken from Father Anſelm, Hiſt. Geneal. de la Maiſon Roiale pag. 214.

BURGUNDY (MARY of), only Daughter and Heireſs of the former, was born at Bruſſels (a), the thirteenth of February, 1457. As ſhe was the greateſt Match then in Europe, ſeveral Princes ſought her in Marriage: but her Father had the Art to promiſe her ſometimes to one, and ſometimes to another, and give her to none [A]. It is very probable ſhe never would have been married while he was alive. As ſoon as he was killed, they begun to talk of marrying her in earneſt; and there were a great many Intrigues about it, which you may ſee in Varillas (b). I have ſpoken elſewhere (c) of the irreparable Fault committed by Lewis XI. It conſiſted in this one thing, that he would not marry his Son to the Heireſs of Burgundy; for he was not to blame, as ſome pretend, in that he would not allow any other Prince of his Blood to marry her [B]. He ſent his Barbet

(a) Anſelme Hiſt. Genealogique de la Maiſon Roiale, pag. 214; others, as Lewis Gollut, ſays in his Memoirs of Burgundy, pag. 892, at Valenciennes.

(b) Varillas Hiſt. de Louis XI, liv. viii.

(c) In the Article of LEWIS XI, Remark [R].

[A] Her Father had the Art to promiſe her, ſometimes to one, and ſometimes to another, and not to give her to any one.] A great Prince, who has but one Daughter, and engages himſelf in great Enterprizes at a Diſtance from his Country, has no great need of a Son-in-law: ſuch an Ally it is to be feared might grow weary of a private Life, and be in too much haſte to command. The Affairs which employ the Father-in-law abroad will not give him leave to prevent domeſtic Cabals. In a word, the preſumptive Heireſs of a State is leſs to be feared when ſhe is to marry, than when ſhe has a Husband. Beſides, while ſhe is ſingle, ſhe may ſerve for a Bait to ſeveral Pretenders; which furniſhes the Father with opportunities of forming and unravelling ſeveral Intrigues. However, the Duke of Burgundy treated concerning the Marriage of his Daughter with every Man that asked her: and I believe, ſays Philip de Comines (1), 'that he never deſired to have a Son, nor would 'have married his Daughter as long as he had lived: 'but would always have kept her to engage People 'to ſerve and aſſiſt him.' He ſays this on occaſion of a Negotiation, which was ſet on foot in the Year 1470, for a Marriage of that Princeſs to the Duke of Guienne, Brother of Lewis XI. This Marriage 'was ſo far advanced, that ſome verbal Promiſes of 'it were made, and alſo ſome mention of it in Letters: but I have ſeen the like done to Nicolas, Duke of Calabria and Lorrain, Son of John Duke 'of Calabria, whom I mentioned before. The 'like was alſo done to Philibert, the late Duke of 'Savoy, and afterwards to Duke Maximilian of Auſtria, now King of the Romans, only Son of the 'Emperor Frederic. This laſt received Letters, 'writ with the young Lady's own Hand, by command of her Father, and a Diamond. All theſe 'Promiſes were made in the compaſs of three Years, 'and yet I am well aſſured that no body would have 'accompliſhed it as long as he had lived, at leaſt 'with his Conſent (2).'

(1) Comines, liv. III, Chap. III. pag. 145.

(2) Id. ibid. cap. viii, pag. 169, 170. Matthieu Hiſt. Louis XI, liv. v, pag. 246, 252.

[B] Lewis XI was not to blame —— in that he would not allow any other Prince of his Blood to marry her.] If he had permitted his Brother to marry her, he would have brought himſelf in danger of an entire Revolution; and there is no probability that the Crown would have deſcended to his Son. He ought not therefore to be blamed for the Care he took to prevent that Marriage. Mr Varillas ſets forth Lewis XI's Motives very well. 'The 'King who, in another Conjuncture, ſhould have deſired the Marriage of his Brother with the Heireſs 'of Burgundy, abhorred it in this; for allowing, 'on one hand, to this propoſed Alliance all the 'Conſideration it deſerved, and making, on the other 'hand, all the Reflexions with which ſubtile Minds 'are wont to perplex themſelves in regard to futurity; he looked upon himſelf to be too far 'advanced in Years to out-live the Minority of 'the Son, which the Midwives gave out that 'the Queen was big with: and that conſequently it 'would be in his Brother's Power to deprive him, 'if he added, to the Riches of the Houſe of Burgundy, the valiant Soldiers which he might raiſe in 'Guienne. Whereas, if the Princeſs of Burgundy 'had any other Husband than the Duke of Berry (3), the Minor, which his Majeſty was like to leave, 'would be the better fixed on the Throne: ſince 'if ſhe married a foreign Prince, he would not 'have it in his Power ſo eaſily to re-kindle the Civil-War in France; and if one were choſen for 'her in France, he would want at leaſt the Authority and Dignities which render the Sons of 'France ſo dangerous, when they are weak enough 'to ſuffer themſelves to be drawn into a Revolt '(4).' Beſides, England was very much alarmed at the Propoſals of the Marriage of Mary of Burgundy with the Brother of Lewis XI. Comines will ſhew it us. 'Edward, King of England, who really 'thought that this Marriage was likely to be concluded on, and was deceived in that, as well as 'the King, laboured hard with the ſaid Duke of 'Burgundy to break it; alledging, that the King had 'no Son, and that, if he died, the ſaid Duke of 'Guienne was in Expectation of the Crown; and 'conſequently, if the Marriage were made, all 'England would be in great danger of being over 'run, when ſo many large Dominions were added 'to the Kingdom; and he took this matter wonderfully to heart, though there was no need for it, and 'ſo did all the Council of England: nor would 'the Engliſh believe any excuſe the Duke could 'make (5).' The following Paſſage will require ſome Reflexion. 'All would have come in a little time 'under the Power of the Crown, if he would 'have taken the Method propoſed to him to marry 'that Princeſs to his Son, or ſome other Prince of 'the Blood. And certainly, if he had given that 'rich Heireſs to Charles of Orleans, Earl of Angouleſme, whom ſhe paſſionately deſired, all the 'Low-Countries would at this Day have been united to France. For that Prince had a Son who 'came to the Crown, that is Francis I. But he 'hated the Houſe of Burgundy to that Degree, that 'he endeavoured entirely to deſtroy it, intending to 'take all his Lands which he held of the Crown, 'and to put the reſt into the Hands of ſome German 'Prince his Ally (6).' We ſee plainly, that Mezerai cenſures Lewis XI for two things: I. That he rejected the Marriage of the Dauphin with the Heireſs of Burgundy. II. That he would not ſuffer the Earl of Angoulême to marry her. The Hiſtorian is in the right as to the firſt Point, but not as to the ſecond; for it was not at all probable that the Earl would become Father of a King of France, and there were ſeveral reaſons to fear that his Marriage with ſo rich an Heireſs might have been fatal to the Crown. So, after the firſt falſe Step, the King acted by the Rules of Prudence, in not permitting a Prince of his Blood to obtain the Succeſſion of Duke Charles. The Anſwer, which he gave to the Miniſters of the Princeſs, on the Propoſition of a Marriage with the Earl of Angoulême, was plain, but at the ſame time ſhewed the able Politician. He told them, 'That nine Years experience had taught 'him but too well, what a Misfortune it was for 'him to have, for a Neighbour, a Prince of his 'Blood, Maſter of the Low-Countries: that as 'God had delivered him from him, he did not 'care to expoſe his old Age again to ſuch fatigues of Body and Mind as had once been on 'the Point of overcoming him, in a more vigorous 'Age: and, in ſhort, that it would be leſs prejudicial to him, if Mary of Burgundy married a Prince 'of any other Sovereign Houſe, which ſhe might 'chuſe among the Chriſtians, than that of France, 'unleſs ſhe and her Subjects choſe to wait till the 'Dauphin was fit to marry (7). Lewis XI had but two good ways to take, one was, to marry the Heireſs of Burgundy to the Dauphin; the other, to deprive her of all her Dominions by right of Arms. He rejected the firſt, and would have choſe the latter; but he wanted either the Skill or Power to execute it; whether it was the fear of oppoſition from England, or the ill State of his Health, that reſtrained him; or that he wanted the Qualifications of a Conqueror. He was very ill fitted for one; he

(3) That was the King's Brother, and the ſame with the Duke of Guienne.

(4) Varillas Hiſt. de Louis XI, liv. v, p. 348.

(5) Comines, liv. III. cap. viii. pag. 171, 172. ad Ann. 1471.

(6) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. Tom. III. pag. 332, ad Ann. 1477.

(7) Varillas Hiſt. de Louis XI, liv. viii. pag. 169.

Barber to her, with Orders to ſpeak with her in private, but this was not permitted [C]. She married a Prince, as to Age, ſuch as her Governeſs could wiſh [D]. It was Maximilian of Auſtria, Son of the Emperor Frederic III. The Nuptials were celebrated the twentieth of Auguſt, 1477. She died of a Fall from a Horſe, in the Month of March, 1483 [E], and left two Children, to wit, Philip of Auſtria, who was Father of Charles V, and Margaret of Auſtria, who was contracted to the Dauphin the ſame Year. This Marriage was never conſummated.

was much more capable of embroiling the Affairs of his Neighbours, and preſerving his Intereſt by Intrigues, than of making Conqueſts. He wanted as much of the Duke of Burgundy's Courage, as the Duke did of his Policy (8). Moſt certainly the Marriage of Maximilian of Auſtria with the Heireſs of Burgundy, was, with reſpect to France, a leſs Evil, than the Marriage of a French Prince with the ſame Heireſs; for Maximilian could not cabal with the Male-Contents, as a Prince of the Blood in his Station might have done; and in all Appearance the Flemings, had they been governed by the Earl of Angoulême, would have diſturbed France a hundred times more under Charles VIII, and Lewis XII, than they did when governed by the Auſtrians. I own, that, under Charles V, the Patrimony of the Dukes of Burgundy was fatal to France; but could Lewis XI foreſee that? Could the moſt acute of Angels have conjectured, that the only Son of Maximilian would inherit Spain, and that the Germans would be weak enough to chuſe themſelves an Emperor ſo powerful as was the Grandſon of Mary of Burgundy?

(8) The Duke of Burgundy had Courage enough to undertake any thing. His Conſtitution was able to bear the fatigue that was neceſſary for his Purpoſe. He was ſtrong enough in Men and Money, but had not Underſtanding and Malice enough to conduct his Enterprizes. Could he but have taken ſome of the Qualities of the King our Maſter, and kept ſome of his own, he had made a perfect Prince. Comines lib. III, cap. III, pag. 665.

To conclude, the Ill, which this Branch of the Royal Houſe did to France, will probably ſerve for a Leſſon for ſeveral Ages, not to ſuffer the great Provinces of the Kingdom to fall to the Diſcretion of Princes of the Blood. It was an ill Cuſtom, That of giving them ſuch Fiefs: by that the Kingdom of France became not ſo much a Monarchy, as a State like the Empire of Germany. Burgundy, Normandy, Bretagne, Guienne, Languedoc, Champagne, Provence, Dauphiné, &c had once their ſeveral Lords, over whom the King had little more Authority, than the Emperor has over the Princes of Germany; and as to ſome of them, he had much leſs. It is no wonder therefore that he was worſted ſometimes in foreign Wars, and that the Civil-Wars found him ſo hard Work. The Réſervation of Homage, Right of Inveſtiture, Reverſion, and Dependance upon the Crown, ſignify little: they will not prevent the Multitude of Maſters in a Kingdom, the Erection of a State within a State, imperium in imperio, nor that Confuſion, which made the Prince of Poets ſay, Οὐκ ἀγαθὸν πολυκοιρανίη· Εἷς κοίρανος ἔστω, Εἷς βασιλεύς (9).

(9) Homer. Iliad. lib. II, ver. 205.

The Dominion of many is not good, let there be one Prince, one King.

[C] He ſent his Barber to her, to ſpeak with her alone; but he was not permitted.] Mr Olivier, being admitted to an Audience of the Princeſs Mary, was ordered to declare his Buſineſs. 'He anſwered 'that he had nothing in charge but to ſpeak to 'her a-part. He was told it was not cuſtomary, and 'eſpecially to that young Lady, who was unmar-'ried: he inſiſted ſtill that he would ſay nothing 'but to herſelf: then he was told he ſhould be 'made to ſpeak, and he was afraid ----- and 'withdrew for that time (10).'

(10) Comines, liv. v. cap. xiv. pag. 307.

[D] She married a Prince, ſuch an one for Age as her Governeſs deſired.] You will underſtand this if you read this curious Paſſage of Philip de Comines: 'First a Council was held on that Affair, 'where came Madam de Halluin, firſt Lady to 'the ſaid Princeſs: who, as I have been told, 'ſaid, that they wanted a Man and not a Child, 'adding that her Miſtreſs was Woman enough 'to bear a Child, and that the Country had need 'of it. This Opinion prevailed. Some blamed 'the ſaid Lady for having ſpoke ſo freely: others 'commended her, and ſaid that ſhe ſpoke only 'of Marriage, and of what was very neceſſary for 'the Country. So there was no more talk but 'of finding the Man (11).' See the Nouvelles de la Republique de Lettres (12).

(11) The fourth Book, chap III, pag. 537.

(12) Month of July, 1685, Art II, pag. 799.

[E] She died of a Fall from a Horſe ---- in 1483.] As ſhe loved hunting very much, ſhe took a Range one day to the Heron hunted. She went out of Bruges 'mounted on a ſprightly Horſe, '----- and ſeeing herſelf on champain Ground, 'ſhe put the Horſe forward ----- the Girts of 'her Saddle breaking, the Ducheſs was violently 'thrown to the Ground -----; but her natural 'Modeſty, and the fear of grieving her Husband, '---- made her conceal her Hurt too long (13). 'Her Ribs were very much hurt, and a continual 'Fever followed ---- ſhe was obliged to take to 'her Bed, where ſhe did not continue long (14).' It is not eaſy to underſtand how natural Modeſty could oblige her not to tell that ſhe had hurt her Ribs. Leaving therefore this Author, who joins two things that have not much to do with each other, let us conſult Mr Varillas, who has expreſſed himſelf more clearly. 'Mary, ſays he (15), was a hunting 'on the moſt gentle Nag, that could be found, 'and yet the Creature, growing unruly of a ſud-'den, flung her on the Root of a Tree, which 'run into a place, which Modeſty requires ſhould 'be nameleſs. The Wound would not have been 'incurable if ſhe would have ſuffered a Surgeon 'to take it in hand, but ſhame reſtrained her ſo 'long, that a Gangrene followed, and put an end 'to her Life, in 1481 (16).' Say as oft as you will, that this is carrying Modeſty to exceſs (17), that Fault is of ſuch a Nature, that they who commit it deſerve our Admiration more than they who do not. It is a kind of Heroiſm: it is dying a Martyr to Modeſty.

(13) For three Weeks. Pubert, Hiſt. des Ducs de Bourgogne, pag. 348.

(14) Id. ibid. pag. 347, 348.

(15) Varillas, Hiſt. de Louis XI, liv. ix, pag. 549.

(16) He ought to have ſaid 1483, beginning the Year at the Month of January.

(17) Stultarum incurata Pudor malus ulcera celat. Horat. Epiſt. xvi, lib. I. 'Tis fooliſh Shame to hide a feſtring Sore.

BURGUNDY, one of the Circles of the Empire, was firſt raiſed to that Rank in 1548. It comprehended Franche Comté, and the ſeventeen Provinces of the Low-Countries. Charles V, who was Maſter of them, cauſed them to be received as Members of the Empire, that Year, at the Diet of Auſburg, independent indeed on the Imperial Chamber of Spire, as to their Laws, but ſubject to the Charges, and to pay Monthly as much as two Electors: viz. 3656 Florins for the common Neceſſities, and as much as three Electors in caſe of War againſt the Turk (a). Some Authors obſerve, that the Tranſaction, which he paſſed, left the Seventeen Provinces only a Shadow of Dependance on the Emperor, and the Empire [A], and that he had a Deſign even to

(a) Heiſs, Hiſt. de l'Empire, Tom. II, pag. 225, Edit. of the Hague, 1685.

[A] It is pretended, that Charles V left the ſeventeen Provinces only a Shadow of Dependance on the Emperor and the Empire.] A Proof of this is, that, during the Troubles, which haraſſed them under the Reign of Philip II, and made part of theſe Provinces ſhake off the Spaniſh Yoke, the Emperor and the Empire never interpoſed their Sovereign Authority, either to oblige the King of Spain to lay down his Arms, or to oblige the States, which formed themſelves into a Republic, to remain ſubjects or Vaſſals to Germany. If ſuch a Civil-War had riſen in any of the other Circles, the to erect them into a Kingdom, and give it the Name of Regnum Leoninum, because of the Lions which are in almost all the Arms of these Provinces (b). They add, that he re-united the Low-Countries to the Empire, only on account of the other States of Germany, being apprehensive of the Wars which might happen there, and to prevent it's being objected to his Son Philip II, (who aspired to the Imperial Crown), that he possessed nothing which belonged to the Empire, without which he could not easily obtain it (c). It is pretended, that, by the Treaty of Munster, the Empire was discharged from taking part in what concerns the Defence of the Circle of Burgundy [B]. Baron Lisola was not of this Opinion [C].

(b) See the Manifesto of the Elector of Bavaria, in the Additions, pag. 115, Edit. 1704.

(c) Id. ibid. pag. 153, 154.

There

the Emperor and the Empire would have acted quite otherwise, and would have put a stop to it by force of Arms. It is remarkable, that there was a Congress at Cologne, in the Year 1579, to make Peace in the Low-Countries, and that the Emperor acted only as Mediator, between the King of Spain, and the revolted Provinces. There passed a thing on that Occasion, which deserves a place here. A Courier of the Emperor, passing thro' the Territories of Limbourg, without a Pass-port, was stopped: the Emperor complained of it, and alledged that, 'there was no need for a Pass-port for a 'Courier, who carried the Arms of the Empire, 'and passed thro' the Provinces where the Empe- 'ror had any Right (1).' The Prince of Parma 'reading this in a Memorial, which had been delivered to the Deputy of Philip the second, at the Imperial Court, 'immediately returned the Memo- 'rial, and said, that he could not accept a thing 'contrary to the Authority of his King, who 'owned no other Lord than himself, especially 'in Limbourg, where the Courier had been detained: That this Right consisted in Fiefs, which the 'King might hold of the Empire, and principally 'the Circle of Burgundy, added by the Emperor 'Charles V to the nine other Circles of Germa- 'ny, by which the Flemish Provinces are excepted 'from the Jurisdiction of the Emperor, in precise 'Terms several times repeated (2).' These are the Words of the Original. 'Scriptum illico re- 'stituit, negans posse ab se id accipi, quod adver- 'saretur authoritate Regis sui, Dominum non ag- 'noscentis in eâ præsertim Limburgensi provinciâ, 'in quâ tabellarios detentos est: Idque constare 'ex dominiis, quæ ab Imperio beneficiaria Rex 'haberet: atque imprimis ex Burgundico circulo, 'postremum a Carolo Quinto ad alios novem Ger- 'maniæ orbes adjecto, in quo diserte, iteratisque 'verbis, ab imperii jurisdictione Belgarum pro- 'vinciæ excipiuntur (3).

(1) Strada de la Guerre de Flandres ad Ann. 1590. I use the Translation of Du Ryer.

(2) Id. ibid.

(3) Strada de Bello Belgico, Decad ii, lib. ii, ad Ann. 1572, pag. 111, Antwerp Edit. 1648, in 8vo.

[B] —— and that by the Treaty of Munster, the Empire is discharged —— of what concerns —— the Circle of Burgundy.] What follows is represented in a Manifesto, printed in Favour of the Elector of Cologne, anno 1704. 'Had his Imperial Majesty examined ever so little the thirteenth and fourteenth Articles of his Capitulation, 'and the third Article of the Peace of Westphalia, 'he would have found that the Empire, having 'considered, that the Circle of Burgundy brought 'no Advantage to the Germannic Body, after the 'Transaction of 1548; and that it was only a 'Charge to them, so long as it belonged to the 'House of Austria, by the continual Wars with 'which it was harassed: His Imperial Majesty 'would have found, I say, that the Empire had 'thought proper to seperate this Circle from the 'Union of it's other Members, as to what regards 'mutual Assistance; to the end, that the Safety 'and Tranquillity of the Circles, whereof it is 'composed, might not be exposed to the Danger 'of being disturbed every Day, by the perpetual 'Wars which ravaged this unhappy Circle, and 'the Places adjacent: which made the Sieur Cu- 'jermans say, when the Peace of Westphalia was 'published; Pacis Monasteriensis legibus omnem 'omnino Germanici subsidii spem Hispanis præclusam 'fuisse (4). —— By the Conditions of the Peace of 'Munster, the Spaniards were deprived of all man- 'ner of hopes of Assistance from Germany.' It is added, that Maximilian II, Rodolphus II, and Matthias, never would concern themselves in the Troubles of the Circle of Burgundy, otherwise than barely by an amicable interposition (5).

(4) The Manifesto of the Elector of Bavaria, in the Addition, pag. 79.

(5) Id. ibid. pag. 80.

[C] Baron Lisola was not of this Opinion.] I prove this by his famous Work, entituled the Buckler of State and Justice. The last Chapter, treats of the Interest of the Princes of Christendom, in the War of 1667, 'and of the absolute Obli- 'gation the States of the Empire were under, to 'defend the Circle of Burgundy. He says, he will 'lightly pass over this last matter, because it is 'already decided, by a solemn Act of the Chancery 'of the Empire, and that he, who wrote on that 'Point at Ratisbon, has in a few Words gone 'thoroughly to the Bottom of this Affair, and 'quite exhausted the Subject, so that there is no 'room left to add any thing to it more, than 'to reply to it (6). In effect, adds he (7), I never 'read any thing more cold and weak, than the 'Answer, lately published on the part of France, 'against this solid Piece: It is stuffed with a heap 'of Words to no purpose, it shuns every where 'the Combat, it rambles from the Question, omits 'the principal Objections, and takes for granted 'the very Point in Question.' Having afterwards alledged some Reasons, he affirms, that the French have nothing to offer against it, but an Article of the Treaty of Munster, ill understood and worse interpreted, De mutuis hostibus non juvandis, by 'which the Empire and France oblige themselves, 'reciprocally, not to give Assistance to the Enemies 'of each other (8).' He answers several things, and ends with saying, that 'this shews clearly, 'that the Obligation not to assist the Enemies of 'France cannot derogate from that, which all the 'Circles of the Empire are under mutually to assist 'one another. All that the French Writer alledges 'against this in his Answer is nothing but whipt 'Cream; and is so effectually refuted in the Reply 'which appeared soon after, that it would be lost 'Labour to attempt to add any further Light to the 'Affair (9).

(6) Lisola Bouclier, d'Etat & de Justice, Art. vi, p. 348, 349.

(7) Id. ibid. pag. 349.

(8) Id. ibid. pag. 352.

(9) Id. ibid. pag. 353, 454.

As I have not read the Pieces mentioned by Monsieur de Lisola, I shall by no means say, that the Contempt, which he expresses for the French Author's Reasons, which he calls whipt Cream, is only a Rhetorical Artifice, and that he has followed the Custom of the Generality of Controvertists, who, after they have used all their Strength against some weak Part of the opposite Cause, leave the strongest unanswered, under pretence that it is not worth notice. They are never more haughty than in these Cases, and imagine that a disdainful Arrogance will be the best Defence of their Cause. However, I dare venture to say, that, if Germany pretended that the Article of the Peace of Munster, de mutuis hostibus non juvandis, left them in full Liberty to assist the King of Spain in the Low-Countries, they played upon the French, and had no intention to finish the War; for it is evident, that, if they had made the War of the Low-Countries their own Affair, and had assisted the Circle of Burgundy as one of their Members, France would still have been at War against the Empire, and might very justly have attacked any other Circle she thought fit, since they must all have sent Succours to that of Burgundy. So that one of the two must be true, either that Germany had no design to make Peace for themselves by the Treaty of Westphalia, or else that they did not intend to have any share in the War of the Low-Countries. Now it is ridiculous to suppose, that they had no design to make Peace at that time but to dupe France, and deceive them basely. We have no way therefore but to conclude, that they designed the French and Spaniards should decide their Wars among themselves, and not to concern themselves with them

There was a great Clamour againſt the Elector of Cologne, in 1701, for introducing ſome French Troops into his Garriſons, under the Name of Troops of the Circle of Burgundy [D].

them any more. Their Conduct ſhewed that this was their Intention; for we do not find, that the Diets of the Empire ever took any meaſures for the Aſſiſtance of the Circle of Burgundy, from the time of the Peace of Munſter, to the Peace of the Pyrenées: and conſequently Germany would have deceived the Spaniards if ſhe had pretended to be engaged to aſſiſt the Spaniards in the Low-Countries, notwithſtanding the Article de mutuis hoſtibus non juvandis.

[D] The Elector of Cologne introduced Troops into his Garriſons, under the Name of Troops of the Circle of Burgundy.] This was one of the Heads of the Accuſation, for which his Imperial Majeſty laid him under the Ban of the Empire. He endeavoured to juſtify himſelf, by alledging that foreign Troops environed his Electorate on every ſide; and that therefore he thought he could ‘ not give his ‘ Subjects a more ſenſible Mark of his paternal Vigi- ‘ lance for their Repoſe and Safety, than to call to ‘ aſſiſtance ſome Troops of the Circle of Burgundy; ‘ with this Precaution, nevertheleſs, that he had ‘ made them take an Oath, before he introduced them ‘ into his Dominions,’ that they ſhould commit no Act of Hoſtility, either againſt the Emperor, or againſt the Empire; that they would follow no other orders but his; and that, whenever his Electoral Highneſs ſhould deſire it, they would go out of his Towns and his Country, without oppoſition or delay (10). He added, that the Empire was not at that time at War either with France, or with the King of Spain, Sovereign of the Circle of Burgundy (11); and that ‘ in the laſt Century Ferdinand ‘ the Second called to his Aſſiſtance the Italians and ‘ Spaniards, under the Name of this ſame Circle of ‘ Burgundy, and that the Chapter of Cologne, at the ‘ time of the Apoſtacy of Gebhard Truchſes, likewiſe ‘ made uſe of Spaniards, under the ſame Name (12). This laſt Argument is ad hominem, and has doubtleſs a great deal of Force. The Elector of Bavaria repeated it in his Manifeſto, in the Year 1704. ‘ The ‘ Houſe of Auſtria, ſays he (13), has given ſeveral ‘ Examples of the ſame Conduct, which my Bro- ‘ ther the Elector of Cologne has kept to. They ‘ cauſed the Troops of the Spaniſh Netherlands, or ‘ of the Circle of Burgundy, under the Command of ‘ the Prince of Parma, to enter the Territories of ‘ the Electorate of Cologne, to diſpoſſeſs Gebhard ‘ Truchſes: and during the Wars of the Palatinate, ‘ the Emperor Ferdinand II brought ſome of the ‘ ſame Troops into the Empire. If there were ſome ‘ French, who are not Subjects of the Empire, among ‘ the Troops which my Brother received into his ‘ Garriſons, were there not Spaniards and Italians, ‘ who are likewiſe ſtrangers to the Empire, among ‘ the Troops which Gonſalvo of Cordoba brought ‘ into the Palatinate in 1622? Was not the Prince ‘ of Parma's Army compoſed of Bodies of theſe ‘ Nations? Theſe two Armies entered the Empire in ‘ an hoſtile Manner, and the Troops called by my ‘ Brother came only to garriſon a few places.

It will not be improper to touch here upon the Anſwer, which was made by the Count d'Aremberg, Commandant of the Troops, which the King of Spain ſent into the Country of Cologne, at the Requeſt of the Chapter, in the time of the War with Gebhard Truchſes. That Archbiſhop ſcattered murmurs every where, that his Chapter had violated the Conſtitutions of the Empire by calling in ſtrangers. The Princes of his Party ſtrenuouſly repreſented to the Emperor, that he ought to ſend order to theſe foreign Troops to depart immediately out of the Confines of Germany: the Emperor diſpatched a Meſſenger to the Duke of Parma, to warn him to take care that the Succours, ſent to the Chapter of Cologne, committed no Hoſtilities in the Empire; for that would be attended with very ill conſequences. Prince Caſimir, Adminiſtrator of the Palatinate, and one of the principal Favourers of Gebhard Truchſes, ſent an Expreſs to the Count d'Aremberg, to ſignify to him that he muſt withdraw his Troops out of the Territories of the Empire; but the Count anſwered, that his Catholic Majeſty's Troops were not included in the Statutes which prohibit the Entrance of foreign Troops into Germany: that the King of Spain was not a foreign Prince; but one of the principal Members of the Empire: that it was lawful for the Chapter of Cologne to deſire Aſſiſtance of the Houſe of Burgundy, as their Neighbours, and Allies for a long time: that the Archbiſhop was rather to blame, who had introduced into the Empire French, Engliſh, Scotch, and other Strangers (14).

This is undeniably a grievous Alternative for a great many Perſons; for if the preſent Elector of Cologne is an Offender againſt the Laws of the Empire, it muſt be owned, that King Philip II, and the Emperor Rodolphus II, were guilty of the ſame Fault: the one in ſending Troops into the Electorate of Cologne, and the other in not condemning the Chapter that had asked and introduced them: but if theſe two Princes did nothing contrary to their Duty, as the Court of Vienna muſt allow they did not, for fear of blemiſhing their Memory, how can they condemn in an Elector of Cologne what they approve in the Canons? And if the ſame neighbouring States, who condemned the Chapter of Cologne at that time, do now approve that the Elector be put under the Ban of the Empire, for having followed the Example of Gebhard Truchſes, do they not expoſe themſelves to the Reproach of judging Actions only by their own Intereſt, and making their Advantage the Rule of Juſtice and Praiſe? This Diſorder is unavoidable in Politics; it is in vain to ſeek any Remedy.

(10) Manifeſt. de Baviere, in the Adda. p. 60.

(11) Id. ibid. pag. 64.

(12) Id. ibid. pag. 67, 68.

(13) Id. ibid. pag. 28.

(14) Taken from Michaelis ab Iſelt Hiſtor. ſui Temporis, ad Ann. 1583, pag. 788.

(a) Valer. Andreas Bibl. Belg. pag. 472.

(b) Duflardus in præfat. ad Logicam Buridani apud Valer. Andream, ibid.

BURIDAN (John), born at Bethune in Artois (a), was one of the moſt renowned Philoſophers of the XIVth Century. He diſcharged a Profeſſor's Place in the Univerſity of Paris with great Reputation, and wrote Commentaries on Ariſtotle's Logic, Ethics, and Metaphyſics, which were much eſteemed. Some ſay that he was Rector of the Univerſity of Paris, in 1320 (b). They add, that he was deputed to the Court of Rome. Robert Gaguin makes him flouriſh under the Reign of Philip de Valois, in the Year 1348, and by that refutes a Story very injurious to the Foundreſs of the College of Navarre [A]. It is a Story very like that

(1) Authors ſpeak but of one Sophiſm invented by Buridan, to wit, that of the Aſs. Now what Relation can there be between this Sophiſm, and the Favours of a Queen? See below, Citation (5).

(2) This Place of Gaguin is not exact, for Philip of Valois was not living in 1357. He died in the Year 1350. But note, that my Edition has 1348. See below, Cita. (6).

[A] Gaguin makes him flouriſh in 1348, and by that refutes a Story very injurious to the Foundreſs of the College of Navarre.] That Foundreſs was Jane, Queen of Navarre, Wife of Philip the Fair King of France. The Act of the Foundation is of the Year 1304. Very impertinent Reports have been ſpread againſt the Honour of this Queen; to wit, That ſhe cauſed young Scholars to be brought to her, to lie with them, and after ſhe had got as much out of them as ſhe deſired, had them thrown out of her Chamber Window into the River Seine, to hide the Diſorders of her Life; that only Buridan was ſpared, and that, in acknowledgment of that Favour, he invented a certain Sophiſm (1). Mr de Launoi confutes this Story by a Paſſage of Robert Gaguin, which contains theſe two Reaſons: firſt, That Buridan lived after that Queen; and next, That this Illuſtrious Princeſs had ſhewn too much Charity towards the Poor, by founding the College of Navarre, to deſerve a Charge of this Nature. Gaguin proves his firſt Reaſon only by ſaying, that That Philoſopher flouriſhed in the Reign of Philip de Valois, when Foulks was Biſhop of Paris, in the Year 1367 (2). The Thing was worth the trouble of being much better cleared; for if Robert that which went current of a certain Queen Dowager, whose Palace was not in being

Gaguin were answered, That it is true Buridan did read Lectures, and wrote Books in the Year 1357, but that he was then very old, there would scarce remain any Strength in the Apology. They, who framed the Story, did not suppose the Queen in the Flower of her Youth, or that she made choice of Scholars advanced in Years. It is likely they supposed, that she was in her declining Years, and that she required very young Scholars. Suppose her to die then (if you please) in the Year 1304, Buridan might have fitted her, though he was still living in the Year 1357. It is only supposing that he was then Seventy five Years of Age: Robert Gaguin says nothing that confutes such a Supposition; therefore he has not defended that Princess's Honour well; the Matter would be much worse, if Credit were to be given to those who say, that Buridan was Rector of the University of Paris, in the Year 1320 (3). Gaguin ought to have proved solidly, that That Professor was but of such or of such an Age, in the Year 1357. His second Reason is of no weight, because it is no rare thing for lascivious Princesses to have otherwise a thousand good Qualities, and make very useful Foundations for the Church, and for the Public. The best way to justify the Queen of Navarre, is by saying, first, That the Story is not supported by any good Proofs, and that therefore it ought to be reckoned a Calumny; since, to avoid the Name of a Calumniator, it is not sufficient that what a Man reports against his Neighbour's Honour be true, but it must moreover be thought so on convincing Reasons. In the second place, That it is against all common Sense, that a Queen of France, desiring to divert herself with the Sports of Venus, should be obliged to send for very young Scholars, or such-like indiscreet Persons, who must be put to death if she would hide her Crime. Are there not Men enough nearer at hand in the Louvre, and more easy to come at than Students can be? However, let us see Robert Gaguin's Words, as quoted by Mr de Launoi (4). ' Fuerunt quoque insignibus fœminis sua fata, nam uxores filiorum Philippi tres adulterii insimulatæ sunt. - - - - Ob hanc impudicitiam infignium mulierum natam fabulam reor, quæ de Joanna Philippi Pulchri uxore à rerum imperitis memorari solet, eam videlicet aliquot Scholasticorum concubitu usam, eosque, ne pateret scelus, protinus extinxisse, & in Sequanam amnem de cubiculi sui senestra abjecisse; sed unum tantum Joannem Buridanum eo periculo forte liberatum, & propterea sophisma (5) ab eo editum esse: Reginam interficere nolite timere bonum est. Fuit siquidem Buridanus Joanpa posterior, quippe qui Philippo Valesio regnum moderante, cum liberalium Artium nominatissimus Professor esset, multa & in rationali & morali Philosophia scripsit, dum Parisinæ Ecclesiæ Fulco præsidebat anno Christianæ resurrectionis MCCCLVII (6). Nec commeruit præclara mulier hujusmodi vitio taxari cujus liberalitate & misericordia erga pauperes, &c. - - - - - Great Women have also had their Fate; for the three Wives of the Sons of Philip were accused of Adultery. - - - - From the Immodesty of those Great Women, as I suppose, arose the Story, which is commonly related, by People unacquainted with those things, of Joan, Wife of Philip the Fair; to wit, that she used to lie with some Scholars, and, least her Crime should be discovered, immediately murdered them, and threw them out at her Chamber-window into the Seine, but that John Buridan alone by chance escaped from that Danger; and therefore he formed this Maxim; Reginam interficere nolite timere bonum est. - - - Do not kill the Queen, to fear I hold it good: for Buridan, who lived after Joan, under the Reign of Philip de Valois, was a Professor of Liberal Arts, of very great Note, and published a great many things, both in Metaphysics and Ethics; while Foulques was Bishop of Paris, in the Year of our Lord 1357. Nor did that eminent Lady deserve to be taxed with such a Vice, by whose Bounty and Compassion to the Poor, &c.'

Let us consider a little Robert Gaguin's Conjecture; he fancies that the Immodesty of the three Princesses, who married the three Sons of Philip the Fair, gave Occasion to the Story we speak of. There are Historians, who attribute to of these three Princes the Infamy, from which Gaguin has endeavoured to justify the Wife of this Monarch. ' Margaret Queen of Navarre, Joan Countess of Poitiers, and Blanche Countess of Marche, ' who married the three Sons of France, - - - - - ' were accused of Adultery, and committed Prisoners to the Castle of Gaillard. - - - - - The first ' died, it is not known in what manner (7). - - - ' It is this Queen of Navarre, who was of such ' an unbridled Temper, that, when she saw a Man ' of a good Mien and Air, she had him brought ' to her Apartment, from whence he never stirred 'till he was thrown headlong into the Seine, ' that he might not publish her disorderly Life. A ' Scholar, whom they had not bound fast, saved ' himself by swimming, and discovered the whole ' Matter (8). Some Authors ascribe this loose ' Life to Joan the Mother of Lewis Hutin (9).' This last was the Foundress of the College of Navarre. The Passage, which we have just now cited, is (in a Gallick Stile) in the History of Spain, wrote by Mayerne (10). He expresses himself very wrong, when he calls the Wife of Lewis Hutin, Margaret Queen of Navarre. This signifies, that she was of the House of Navarre; now it is not true that she was so; for she was Daughter of Robert II Duke of Burgundy (11). There is no Error in calling her Queen of Navarre, since her Husband (Lewis Hutin) was King of it.

[§ (z) It is a general Tradition, that, in John Buridan's Youth, he, who afterwards acquired so great a Reputation, was in the Case of a great many Scholars of the University of Paris, whom a certain Queen of France, after she had them brought to her Bed, caused to be thrown out of her Chamber into the Seine, to hide the Disorders of her Life. The Business is only to know, I. What Queen that was; II. Whether it be true, as so many believe, that young Buridan, more happy than his Companions, escaped the Fate of the other Minions of that Woman, in memory of which, as it is pretended, he invented the Sophism, called in the Schools Buridan's Ass: and, lastly, what that Sophism can be.

As to the first; according to Gaguin, they who take that lascivious Queen for Joan, Queen of Navarre, who founded the College of Navarre, in the Year 1304, seem to contradict the Epocha, in which Buridan shined, fixed by him to the Year 1348. They agree much less with Marsilius ab Ingen (of Inguenhuim) who, though he died not till the Year 1396 †, nevertheless spoke of Buridan as of one who had been his Cotemporary ‡. There is, in my Opinion, a great deal more probability, that, as the Wives of the three Sons of Philip the Fair, Husband of the illustrious Joan of Navarre, were equally noted for their lasciviousness, that it is Mary of Burgundy, Wife of Lewis Hutin, the eldest of the three Brothers that the Accusation relates to, which some would unjustly throw upon her Mother-in-law.

As to the second point, it is so far from being true, that Buridan, while a Scholar was preserved from the Fate of the other Scholars, who were received into the Bed of the Queen in Question, whoever she be, that That terrible Woman commanded him to be thrown into the River: this we learn from the Poet Villon of Paris, in these Verses of his Ballad of the Ladies of old time, wrote in 1461.

Semblablement où est la Royne,
Qui commanda que Buridan
Fut jetté en ung sac en Seine?

Likewise where is the Queen,
Who ordered that Buridan,
Should be thrown, in a Sack, into the Seine.

Now such a command is so far from inclining one to believe that Buridan had lain with the Queen, who gave it, that, on the contrary, the Wise

(3) Duffardus apud Valer. Andream Biblioth. Belg. pag. 471.

(4) Launolus Histor. Navarræ Gymnasii, Parte I, lib. I, cap. II, pag. 15, be cites the seventh Book of Gaguin's History of France.

(5) This Word does not signify here, as it usually does, a captious or fallacious Reasoning; but rather an Axiom or Maxim, which, perhaps, he couched in an Enigma, that he proposed to be solved.

(6) My Edition of Gaguin, which is of Paris, Apud Petrum Vidovæum 1528, in 8vo, fol. 129, verso, says, anno Christianæ Resurrectionis MDCCCXCVIII. This weakens the Apology.

(7) Hist. Chronolog. d'Espagne, by Madam * * *. Tom. II, pag. 177, 178, ad Ann. 1312.

(8) Ibid.

(9) He was the eldest Son of Philip the Fair: and note, that Mezerai is mistaken when he says that Philip the Tall was the eldest Son of Philip the Fair, Abr. Chronolog. Tom. II, pag. 176, ad Ann. 1291.

(10) Mayerne's History of Spain, Tom. I, pag. 559, 560, ad Ann. 1312. Mezerai places this in the Year 1313.

(11) Anselm. Hist. Geneal. p. 95.

† Buchole. Index Chron. under the Year 1387.

‡ Nolite arbitrari Guilhelmum Occam, Buridanum contemporaneum nostrum (quo vix accuratius quispiam in Ethicis scripsit) Gregorium de Arimino: Adam: (Derp) Henricum Oyta: Henricum de Hassia: Matheum de Cracovia: Nicolaum Orem: Robertum HOLCOT. Albertum Saxonem: Petrum de Eliaca: (Alliaco) Joannem Gerson: Nicolaum de Cusa: Stephanum Prolitverium: Gabrielem Bihel Spirensem: & cæteros innumeros (qui in Viennensi *, Erfordensi: Levonensi (Lovaniensi) cæterisque Germaniæ Gymnasiis ab eorum in hunc usque diem exordia (exortis) Eo ruerunt omnium bonarum artium ignaros vacuosque fuisse, propterea quod Nominalium viam & modernorum doctrinam (veluti vos appellatis) enixe ac peculiariter assecuti sunt. Marsil. de Inghen Oratio dictiones, clausulas & elegantiæ

* Aventin, cited by Mr Bayle, makes Buridan Founder of the Universities of Vienna.

being in the Days of Francis I [B]. Aventinus relates, that Buridan was a Diſciple of Ockam, and that, being expelled Paris, by the Power of the Faction of the Realiſts, which was ſuperior to that of the Nominaliſts, of which he was, he went into Germany, where he founded the Univerſity of Vienna (c). Buridan's Aſs has been gantias oratorias diſtinctis caracterum notis ſignatas complectens. Heidelb. in 4to, 1499 — Do not you think that W. Occam, Buridan our Contemporary (than whom ſcarce any one has wrote more accurately in Ethics) Gregory of Eriminum, &c. and innumerable others who flouriſhed in the Schools of Vienna, Erford, and other Places in Germany, from their firſt Foundation, to this time, were ignorant of all good Arts, becauſe they laboriouſly and chiefly followed the way of the Nominals, and the Doctrines of the Moderns, as you call it. At the end of that Piece we find that Marſilius ab Ingben died on St Bernard's Day, in 1396.

(c) Lib. vii, fol. 633. apud Jacobum Thomaſium, Orat. xii, pag. 274.

Wiſe Buridan, at that time Profeſſor of Philoſophy at Paris, had laboured, with ſucceſs, to prevent his Scholars from accepting the invitations of that Siren. That fact was publickly known, at leaſt in Foreign Countries, ſince in Saxony, where Buridan, when he was baniſhed his Country, on Account of his Opinions, probably made a little ſtop on his way from France to Vienna in Auſtria, a Maſter of Arts, in the Univerſity of Leipſic, wrote a little Book in 1471, with the Title of Commentariolus Hiſtoricus de Adoleſcentulis Pariſienſibus per Buridanum nationis Picardum ab illicitis cujuſdam Reginæ Francicæ amoribus retractis. —— A ſmall hiſtorical Commentary of the Youths of Paris, drawn off from the unlawful Love of a certain Queen of France, by Buridan a Picard. Mr Krauſe, who, pag. 186, in his German Literary Journal, printed in 8vo at Leipſic, in 1715, ſpeaks of that Piece, as a Manuſcript, in the Library of the Monaſtery of Seitenſtadt, in upper Auſtria, ought by the way to get it printed.

As to the Sophiſm, called Buridan's Aſs, That may very well be nothing elſe, but the Pons Aſinorum of the Logicians, mentioned by Rabelais, Book the ſecond, Chap. XXVIII, where, being in doubt whether he ought to deſcribe the Battel between Pantagruel and the Giants, or omit the recital of it, he invokes Thalia and Calliope, and beſeeches them to draw him out of this difficulty. In the third Chapter of the ſame Book, Garagantua, being now old, is repreſented in the like embarraſment, not knowing whether he ſhould cry for the loſs of his Wife Badebec, who died in Child-bed, or laugh for joy of his new born Son; the good Man, ſays Rabelais, had Sophiſtical Arguments on one ſide and the other, which choaked him, but he could not ſolve them, and ſo he remained entangled like a Mouſe in a Trap, or a Kite in a ſnare.

Some will have it, that Buridan's Aſs is properly the Condition of an Aſs, ſituated between two Meaſures of Oats, in ſuch manner, that nothing ſhall determine him to fall upon one rather than the other; but perhaps they have not obſerved the equivocation of Aſne with the adverb an, ſynonimous with the famous utrum of the Philoſophers, repreſented, after the Symbol of the Logician, Marc Anthony de Paſſeribus, a Genoeſe ‡, by Merlin Cocaius in theſe Verſes of his twenty fifth Macaronea:

‡ Elogia Tomaſini, Part. I, pag. 104.

* The Logicians which the Author had juſt being ſpeaking of.

Inter eos * ſtabat vir quidam corpore duplex,
Qui ſuſtentatur binis tantummodo gambis.
Dicitur hic UTRUM, dubioſis ſenſibus implens,
Hæreticoſque facit, negat hanc, probat hunc, tenet illam,
Et ſibimet duris ſemper dat verbera pugnis.

Among them ſtood a double bodied Man,
Who was ſupported only by two Legs,
Call'd UTRUM, who with doubtful Senſes fills:
Makes Heretics, proves this, and that denies,
Holds this, and on himſelf lays cruel Blows.

Pons Aſinorum ſignifies alſo ſometimes a Sea of theſe An's or Utrum's, out of which one cannot extricate one's ſelf; or ſometimes a ſtore of theſe An's or Utrum's, with Solutions, or ways to get over them, trembling like an Aſs upon a Bridge, where the Boards are not well joined, but let the Water be ſeen underneath them (::), and it is to this laſt ſignification of the Word, that Nicolas Clenard alludes in theſe Words of one of his Letters, dated from Ebora the twenty fifth of April 1534. ‘ Sum ‘ totus in Dialectica (the Topics, qui docent invenire ‘ argumenta:) faxit Deus, ut hic feliciter inveniamus medium, non in ponte aſinorum ſed in theſauris Luſitanicis (ſunt enim loci Dialectici, tanquam theſauri, in quibus latent argumenta) quo poſſimus iſthic apud vos tandem bonos facere Syllogiſmos. —— I am altogether taken up with ‘ Logic (the Topics, which teach how to find Arguments); GOD grant that here I may happily find ‘ a Medium, not on the Aſſes Bridge, but in the ‘ Treaſures of Portugal (for the Logical common ‘ Places are like Treaſures, in which Arguments ‘ are hid) that I may hereafter make good Syllogiſms ‘ among you.’ REM. CRIT.]

(f) Pliny, lib. viii, chap. 43.

[B] —— This Story is like that of a Queen, whoſe Palace was not in Being in the time of Francis the Firſt.] Read this Epigram of Johannes Secundus a Dutch Poet, who died in the Year 1536.

In Arcem reginæ Albæ, Pariſiis.

Cernite, flaventeis ubi volvit Sequana lymphas,
Semirutam, fertur quam coluiſſe priùs
Effera funeſtæ regina libidinis; arcem,
Nunc ultore mali ut tempore ſola jacet!
Et, quaſſata undis, ventis habitatur & imbri,
Multa ubi ferales nocte querantur aves:
Cypris ubi mitis, flammas exoſa cruentas,
Chaonias ſedem ponere nolit aves:
Quâ ſtrix, quâ Furiæ volitent, quâ plurima fatum
Exululet raucis queſtibus umbra ſuum.
Sic domus æternùm numeroſæ conſcia cædis
Impia laſciva facta luit Dominæ.
Labuntur, lentis & condemnata ruinis
Implorant hominum pendula ſaxa manus.
Implorant fruſtra: ſtant hæc rata lege ſeverâ,
Inſtauratricem ne ferat ullus opem,
Aut ſubeat gladios, pretium pietatis iniquæ:
Et quis adhuc auſit facta nefanda ſequi?
Eo, etiam ſaxis mortem cenſura minatur;
Longaque poſt cineres ſtant monimenta mali (12).

(12) Jo. Secundus Epigrammate libro, pag. 140. Edit. Lugd. Bat. 1619.

See, where the Stone bit troubled Waters rolls,
A ruin'd Caſtle, once, as Fame reports,
Seat of a cruel Queen, of Luſt enormous,
But now by vengeful time laid deſolate!
Beat by the Waves, Receptacle of Rains,
And Winds, and baleful dire night-ſhreeching Birds,
Where gentle Venus, ſuch unnat'ral Flame
Deteſting, ſuffers not a Dove to dwell;
Where Elves and Furies haunt, and many a Ghoſt
In Cries and Murmurs hoarſe laments his Fate.
The Houſe, of numerous Murders conſcious,
Thus falls for it's laſcivious Lady's Crime;
The falling Stones, condemn'd to lingring ruin,
Totter aloft, and call for human Aid,
But call in vain: The Law is fix'd as Fate,
That whoſe'er ſhall lend reſtoring Hand,
Shall ſuffer Death, the juſt and due reward
Of Piety iniquous: who then will dare,
Henceforth, the Fact nefandous to attempt?
See Juſtice threatens e'en the Stones with Death,
And Monuments of Crimes out live their Actors long.

[C] Buridan's Aſs is a kind of Proverb. —— I cannot tell whether I have gueſſed right what it is.] I thought a long time, that it was only an Example, that Buridan had given, of the Dependency wherein Beaſts live, as to the Objects of the Senſes. They who hold Free-will, properly ſo called, admit a Power in Man of determining himſelf, either to the right or to the left, at the ſame time when the Motives are exactly equal from the two oppoſite Objects; for they pretend that our Soul can ſay, without having any other Reaſon than to make uſe of it's Liberty, I chuſe this rather than that, tho' I ſee nothing more worthy of my Choice in this than in that. But they do not give that Power to Beaſts: they ſuppoſe then, that they could not determine themſelves, if two Objects were preſent, which drew them with equal Force, one one Way, and been a kind of Proverb, or Example, which subsisted a very long time in the Schools. I cannot tell whether I guess right what it was [C]; for I could never yet meet with any one who could explain it to me, or with any Book particular enough on that matter. Gabriel Naudé, who was acquainted with so many Books and Authors, did not well know the Time that our John Buridan lived in [D]. There was an Author in the XVIIth Century, whose Name was John Baptist de Buridan, who wrote some Commentaries on the Customs of the Vermandois of Ribemont, St Quintin, Noion, Couci, and Reims. It is mentioned in the Journal des Sçavans, of the eighth of February, 1666.

It

and the other another: That, for Example, an hungry Ass would starve between two Bushels of Oats, which acted equally on his Faculties; for, having no Reason to prefer the one before the other, he would remain unmoveable, like a piece of Iron between two Loadstones of the same Force. The same thing would happen if he were equally prest with Hunger and Thirst, and had a Bushel of Oats, and a pail of Water before him, which acted with equal Force on his Organs. He would not know where to begin; and if he eat before he drank, his Hunger must be greater than his Thirst, or the Action of the Water weaker than that of the Oats, which is against the Supposition. Buridan made use of this Example to shew, that, if an external Motive does not determine Beasts, their Soul has not the Power to chuse between two equal Objects. There was Reason enough to laugh and break Jests upon the Supposition of such an Ass, and a Field for subtilizing the Cavils of Logic according to the Mode of those Times. It is no wonder then that Buridan's Ass became famous in the Schools. I find that the Sieur Naudé places this Ass among the Fictions of the Human Mind (13); and I shall occasionally say, that the Schoolmen plagued themselves in such a manner to assign a Cause for every effect; that they demanded a Reason why one individual of Heat, for example, is, sooner produced than another. Heat is, according to them, a kind of Quality that comprehends, under it's Genus, a vast number of possible Individuals. The Fire produces one of these Individuals every time it heats the Water: But why one rather than the other? Turn yourself which way you please, you will find no manner of Reason for this any where but in the pure Will of God; there we must trangress the Law of the Schools, non est Philosophi recurrere ad Deum, and teach, That as the second Cause determines the first, as to the Species, the first Cause determines the second as to the Individual. If you go higher; if you ask why God made choice of one Individual of Heat rather than another? You are answered, That his Supreme Independency gives him the Right of chusing, without being determined by the Preeminence of the Object.

(13) See his Words at the end of this Paragraph.

This is not without it's Difficulty: there is more Depth in it than People imagine. Here follows the Passage of Naudé, hinted at before. 'The hasty Opinion of these illuminated Brethren the Rosicrucians ... is entirely vain, false, and impossible, having no other existence than that of the Abbey of Theleme in Rabelais, the Lesine among the Italians, the Voices of Rucellai, the Universals of Ockham, the Ass of Buridan, the Angels of the Saducees, the Utopia of More, second Intentions, Vacuum, Infinity, Equinity, Golden Mountain, Chimera, and Ens rationis of the Philosophers (14).' This agrees with my Supposition: For an Ass, extremely hungry, and drawn equally by two Measures of Oats, and kept immoveable by that equal Attraction, seems to be a Case physically impossible.

(14) Naudé, Instruction for les Freres de la Rose-Croix, pag. 19. See also Dialogue De Mascurat. pag. 25.

Another Thought came lately into my Head; which is, That Buridan's Ass might be a Sophism, which that Philosopher proposed as a kind of Dilemma, that, whatever answer were given him, he might draw some puzzling Conclusions from it. He supposed either an Ass much famished between two Measures of Oats of an equal Force, or an Ass equally prest with Thirst and Hunger between a Measure of Oats and a Pail of Water, which acted equally on his Organs. Having made this Supposition, he asked, What will this Ass do (15)? If any body answered, He must remain immoveable; then, concluded he, He must die of Hunger between two Measures of Oats, he must die of Thirst and Hunger within reach of Meat and Drink. This seemed absurd, and he must have the Laughers on his side, against whoever should make him that Answer. If he were answered, That the Ass has more Sense than to die of Hunger and Thirst in such a Situation; then, concludes he, He must turn on the one side rather than on the other, though nothing moves him more strongly towards that Place than towards this: then he is endowed with a Free-will; or, which is all one, it may happen, that, of two Weights poized in equilibrio, one may move and raise the other. These two Consequences are absurd: there remained then only one Answer, That the Ass must ever find himself more strongly moved by one of the Objects than by the other: but this was overthrowing the Supposition; and thus Buridan gained his Cause, in what manner soever his Question was answered. This Sophism puts me in mind of the Crocodile of the Stoics (16), of the Electra of Eubulides (17), and of such like captious Questions of the ancient Logicians, to which they gave the Name of the Thing which they took for an Example. Spinoza does not speak of Buridan's Ass, but of his She-Ass (18); and he confesses plainly, that if a Man should be in that She-Ass's Condition, he would die of Hunger and Thirst (19). The Ass Burdin is a Proverb in Burgundy, whereof Paradin has given a false Etymology (20); for it is plain, that Burdin is only a Corruption of Buridan. By the way, Spinoza's Concession is very ill grounded; for there are at least two ways whereby a Man may disingage himself from the Snare of the Equilibrium. One is That which I have already mentioned, viz. That to flatter himself with the pleasing Imagination that he is Master at Home, and that he does not depend on outward Objects, he might resolve thus: I will prefer this before that, because I will have it so; and in this Case, that which determines results not from the Object; the Motive is only taken from the Ideas that Men have of their own Perfections, or of their natural Faculties. The other Way is that of the Lot or Chance. A Man is to decide the Precedency between two Ladies; he finds nothing in them that determines him: but if he were of necessity obliged to prefer one to the other, he would not be at a stand but make them draw Lots. He would do the like in regard of two Courtezans with whom he had a mind to divert himself, but without shewing the least shadow of Preference. Chance would decide which whom he should begin; the Equilibrium would not keep him in a State of Inaction, as Spinoza pretends; a Remedy would be found.

(15) I do not affirm this; I only suppose it. I say the same as to the foregoing Explication.

[D] Gabriel Naudé ... did not well know the Time of our Buridan.] He believed that Nicolas Oresme (21), Preceptor of Charles V, King of France, preceded Buridan; for, after having observed that That Preceptor of Charles V published Aristotle's Politics and Morals in French, he adds, that Buridan published some Questions on Aristotle's Politics a little after. 'Paulo post etiam Johannes 'quidam Buridanus celeberrimi nominis Sophista 'suas in libros politicorum quæstiones evulgavit, 'sed nugaces ac ineptas, ut ejusmodi Scholastico- 'rum ferme omnia (22). ... A little after, one 'John Buridan, a Sophist of very great Note, pub- 'lished his Questions on the Books of Politics, but silly 'and trifling, as every thing of such like Scholastic 'Persons commonly is.' We must know that this Work of Nicolas Oresme was written between the Years 1370, and 1377 (23). Now according to Gaguin, Buridan's Works on Logic and Ethics belong

(16) See Lucian in Hermotimo, & in Auctione vitarum, apud Gassendum in Logica, cap. vi, pag. 51.

(17) Laërtius, lib. ii, apud Gassendum, ibid. cap. iii. pag. 40.

(18) Spinoza, Ethices parte II, pag. 89.

(19) Id. ibid. pag. 91.

(20) Annales de Bourgogne, lib. ii, pag. 174.

(21) He makes him Archbishop of Bayeux: he should have said Bp of Lisieux; and at most Bayeux to but a Bishopric.

(22) Naudæus, Bibliogr. politica, pag. 26.

(23) See Mr de Launoi, Histor. Colleg. Navar. pag. 457.

It is to be obſerved, that John Buridan was placed, by Illyricus, in the Catalogue of the Witneſſes of Truth [E].

long to the Year 1348 (24). Without doubt he comprehends the Writings on Politics under thoſe of Ethics.

(24) See above, Citat. (6).

[E] Buridan was placed —— in the Catalogue of the Witneſſes of Truth.] He is there ſaid to have been an orthodox Author in Point of Free-Will. ‘ Andreas de Caſtro & Joannes Buridanus diſputant ‘ de libero arbitrio contra alios ſententiarios, & ve- ‘ ram tuentur ſententiam. Vide Andr. in 1 ſent. ‘ diſt. 45. & Buridanum in 3 Ethic (25). —— An- ‘ drew de Caſtro and John Buridan diſpute on Free- ‘ Will, againſt others of different Opinions, and de- ‘ fend the true Opinion.’ A Dutch Miniſter has paraphraſed thoſe Words thus. ‘ Joannes Buridanus ‘ Rector Scholæ Pariſienſis ejuſque nomine Romam ‘ Legatus, profeſſione quoque Philoſophus, ſcriptis ‘ clarus, ſtylo quidem Barbarus, verum ſententiâ or- ‘ thodoxus, adeoque ut inter Theologos referendus, ‘ pro ſtudiorum communione, ita & inter teſtes ve- ‘ ritatis. Nullo enim modo placuit ipſi quod Romæ ‘ ex Pelagii ſententia de Peccatoria coram Deo juſti- ‘ ficatione tum temporis audiverat, & paſſim recep- ‘ tum erat. Atque adeo renaſcenti de gratuita per ‘ fidem in Chriſto, juxta Scripturæ doctrinam, ju- ‘ ſtificatione, renaſcenti inquam ſententiæ adſtipula- ‘ batur Buridanus noſter —— ſententiam ſuam ortho- ‘ doxam —— in 3 Ethicorum Ariſtotelis propo- ‘ ſuit (26). —— John Buridan, Rector of the Uni- ‘ verſity of Paris, and deputed by the ſame to Rome, ‘ by Profeſſion a Philoſopher, famous for his Writ- ‘ ings, ſomewhat barbarous in his Stile, but ortho- ‘ dox in his Opinions; and as he deſerves a place among ‘ the Divines, ſo is he to be numbered among the ‘ witneſſes of Truth. For he was by no means pleaſed ‘ with the Pelagian Doctrines, then taught at Rome, ‘ and received every where, concerning the Juſtifica- ‘ tion of Sinners. So that our Buridan was a De- ‘ fender of the newly revived Opinion, concerning ‘ free Juſtification, by Faith in Chriſt, agreeable to ‘ the Doctrine of Scripture —— he lays down his ‘ orthodox Opinion in his Commentary on the third ‘ Book of Ariſtotle’s Ethics.’

(25) Flacius Illyricus in Catal. Teſt. Veritatis, lib. xviii, pag. 1809. Edit. Genev. 1608, in fol.

(26) Jacobus Baſilius in Sulpitio Belgico, five Hiſtoria Religionis inſtauratæ, corruptæ, & reformatæ in Belgio & a Belgis, pag. 146.

BURNETTUS, or BRUNETTUS (LATINUS), was a Florentine. He wrote a Book entituled, A Treaſure of the Origin and Nature of all Things. He compoſed it firſt in French, and then he tranſlated it into Italian (a). His Anſwer to thoſe who aſked him why he had writ his Book in French, and not in Italian, which was his Mother Tongue, ſhews that our Tongue has been a long time in Vogue in foreign Countries [A]. He compoſed ſeveral other Books, and died at Florence, in the Year 1295 (b). See the Article DANTE.

(a) Mabillon, Muſæ Ital. Tom. I, pag. 169.

(b) Michael Poccianius de Scriptor. Florent. pag. 34.

[A] His Anſwer —— ſhews that our Tongue has been a long time in vogue amongſt Foreigners.] He gave two Reaſons for his Conduct; I. That he lived in France, when he writ that Treatiſe; II. That the French Tongue was more pleaſant and more common than others: Perciò che la parlatura Franciſcha è più dilettevole & più commune che tutti li altri linguaggi (t). This we find in the firſt Chapter of his Book, which was publiſhed only in Italian.

(t) Mabill. Muſ. Italic. Tom. I, pag. 169.

BURRUS (AFRANIUS), was a Man of great Merit, and worthy of a better Age than that of Nero. Agrippina, that Prince's Mother, deſigning to engage Burrus in her Intereſt, who had got a great Reputation in the Armies, perſuaded the Emperor Claudius, her Huſband, to remove the two Commanders of the Pretorian Cohorts (a), and to beſtow that Poſt upon Burrus alone (b). He was made afterwards Governor of young Nero, and had Seneca for his Aſſiſtant. The good Underſtanding between thoſe two Governors (c) ſhews they were Men of great Probity, and that they aimed chiefly at the public Good in their Inſtruction of that young Prince, who would have proved an accompliſhed Emperor under ſuch Maſters, had not his natural Wickedneſs prevailed, and made all their Care uſeleſs. Nero, being reſolved to get rid of his Mother, was about to take from Burrus his Employ of Colonel of the Guards (d), remembering that he got it by Agrippina's Favour, and fearing that ſuch a Benefit would ingage him more in his Mother's Intereſt than in his; but whether it be that Seneca diverted the Thing, or for ſome other Reaſon, Burrus kept his Place, and approved of Agrippina's Death, provided ſhe was convicted of what was charged upon her. He repreſented to Nero, that the leaſt thing he could do for his Mother, was, to permit her to anſwer for herſelf (e). That Expedient diverted the Storm for the Time. Burrus himſelf was accuſed ſome time after, and juſtified himſelf (f). At laſt Nero reſolved to put off no longer the Death of Agrippina, and Burrus, being not able to prevent it, refuſed however to give his Order about it to any of the Pretorian Soldiers (g). He was more than once obliged, to his great Grief, to ſeem to approve Nero's infamous Actions, for which he could find no Remedy (h). He died in the Sixty ſecond Year of the Iſt Century, three Years after Agrippina, not without ſome Suſpicion of having been poiſoned (i).

(a) That is, of the Regiment of Guards.

(b) Tacit. Annal. lib. xii, cap. xiii. ad Ann. 804.

(c) Id. lib. xiii, cap. ii.

(d) Id. ibid. cap. xx, ad Ann. 808.

(e) Ibid.

(f) Id. cap. xxiii.

(g) Id. lib. xiv, cap. vii, ad Ann. 812.

(h) Ibid. cap. xv.

(i) Ibid. cap. ii, ad Ann. 815.

BUSBEQUIUS (AUGERIUS GISLENIUS Lord of), an illuſtrious Man, on account of his Embaſſies, was born at Comines (a), in the Year 1522, of a Mother of a mean Extraction, but of a Father who was of a good Family, and Lord of Buſbec, upon the River Lis, and who did not marry below himſelf, to beget this Child. The Reader may eaſily perceive, without a Commentary on theſe laſt Words, that Augerius Buſbequius was a Baſtard. He confirmed the common Opinion, which the World entertains of the Wit of thoſe, who, like himſelf, are unlawfully begotten. He made very early a wonderful Progreſs, which moved his Father, who had him brought up in the Houſe, to ſpare neither Pains nor Coſt for his Inſtruction, and to get him legitimated by a Reſcript of the Emperor Charles V. He ſent him to the moſt celebrated Univerſities; to Louvain, Paris, Venice,

(a) A Village of Flanders, upon the River Lis. La Croix du Maine, Biblioth. Franc. pag. 475, makes him a Native of Bruges.

Venice, Bologna, and Padua (b). He improved very much under the learned Masters he heard in those Places. He was for some time at London with the Embassador of Ferdinand, King of the Romans (c) [A], from whence, being returned into Flanders, he received there a Letter from that Prince, who informed him, that he designed to send him Embassador to Constantinople. Busbequius quickly repaired to Vienna, from whence he soon set out on that Embassy [B]. Not finding (b) Ex Val. Andr. Bibl. Belg. pag. 93.

(c) Called Peter Lasso.

[A] He was some time at London with the Embassador of Ferdinand, King of the Romans.] The anonymous Author, who published, in 1693, the History of the Archduke Albert, says (1), That the Emperor Ferdinand II (2) placed our Busbequius in the Family of his Embassador in England, and made him Preceptor to his own Sons. I believe neither of these Facts is true. I find by Busbequius's first Account that he was not known to Ferdinand till after he had been at London in the House of the Embassador of that Prince. 'Non te fugit cum essem ex 'Anglia domum reversus à Regis Philippi & Reginæ Mariæ nuptiis, ubi fueram inter comites Don 'Petri Lassi, quem honoris caussa eò Romanorum 'Rex Ferdinandus dominus meus clementissimus legaverat, quemadmodum idem Ferdinandus me per 'literas ad hoc iter evocarit (3). —— You know, when I was returned from England, after the Marriage of King Philip and Queen Mary, where I had been in the Retinue of Don Peter Lasso, whom my most gracious Lord Ferdinand, King of the Romans, had honorarily sent thither, how I was called by Letter of the same Ferdinand to this Journey.' He tells us a little after, how he was introduced by John Vander Aa, Secretary to Ferdinand, and how graciously he was received by that Prince. 'Ut Viennam veni, per J. Vander Aa ad Ferdinandum, cui is erat à secretis, introductus cum 'ea benevolentiæ significatione excipior, qua is rex 'uti solet erga eos quorum de fide & probitate opinionem aliquam concepit (4). —— When I came to Vienna, I was introduced to the King by John Vander Aa, who was his Secretary, and received with such Expressions of Kindness, as he uses to those, of whose Fidelity and Probity he has conceived an Opinion.' All this looks like a first Acquaintance, especially considering that the Writers of Busbequius's Life observe, that he was sent for to Vienna by the good Offices of that Vander Aa his Countryman (5). But though this were not a Proof of a first Acquaintance, what I say could not be reasonably denied; since Busbequius says nothing whereby it appears that Ferdinand contributed to his Journey into England. Would it not have been a great Honour for Busbequius to have been placed by Ferdinand himself in the House of his Embassador, who was sent to London at the Time of the Prince of Spain's Marriage? Why should such an honourable Circumstance have been suppressed? To which I may add the Silence of all the Authors I have consulted, and the express Observation of Valerius Andreas, that it was the Embassador himself who called Busbequius to London. We may therefore reckon this for one of the Mistakes of that anonymous Author. Here is another: It is certain from Busbequius's Account, that, from the Time he was introduced to the Court of Ferdinand, to the Year 1562, he was wholly employed in his Embassies to Constantinople; and therefore if he had been Preceptor to Ferdinand's Children, it must have been after the Year 1562. But the Sons of that Prince were not then of an Age that required it. It was the Sons of Maximilian, King of the Romans, that wanted a Governour and a Preceptor, and Busbequius was intrusted with their Education (6). I do not question but the anonymous Author was misled by Moreri. See the following Remark.

(1) Pag. 9.

(2) He should have said Ferdinand I.

(3) Busbeq. Ep. I.

(4) Ibid.

(5) Melch. Adam. in vit. Jurisc. pag. 316. Bullart, Academ. des Scienc. Tom. I, pag. 80, who calls him Peter Vanderan.

(6) The Life of Busbequius, prefixed to his Works; Melchior Adam, pag. 366. Bullart, pag. 80. Swertius Athen. Belg. Teissier Elog. de Mons. de Thou, Tom. II, pag. 190, speak only of Maximilian's Sons.

[B] That Prince —— appointed him Embassador to Constantinople —— he soon set out for that Embassy.] He received Ferdinand's Letter at Lisle the third of November, and he was to be at Buda in the beginning of December (7). You may judge whether he had much Time to make himself ready: The Departure of an Embassador was never so much hastened; and yet, if we believe Moreri, the Thing happened thus: The Emperor Ferdinand I sent for him to Vienna, where some time after he chose him to be Preceptor to his Children, and afterwards sent him Embassador to the Porte. Thus Time and Matters of Fact are confounded by those who do not consult original Pieces. If Moreri had consulted them, he might have seen that Ferdinand was only King of the Romans, when he sent for Busbequius to Vienna, and that the first Employment he gave him was the Embassy to the Porte. The Historian, whom I have confuted in the foregoing Remark, had without doubt consulted Moreri; there he found that Augerius made two Journies into Turkey, after the Emperor Ferdinand I had made him Preceptor to his Sons (8). I am less surprized at these Faults, than at those which I am going to observe. The Words of Busbequius, which I have quoted, shew that he did not leave England, where he had been in the House of King Ferdinand's Embassador, till after the Marriage of Philip and Queen Mary, that is, after the Twenty fifth of July 1554; and that he made his first Voyage to Constantinople after his Return from England. Valerius Andreas does therefore confound the Times, when he says, that Busbequius, having been some Months in the House of the Embassador at London, whither he went at Twenty three Years of Age, returned into his own Country, where he staid till he was called to the Court of Ferdinand (9); which supposes that his Journey into England, and his Journey to Vienna, did soon follow one another: It is not therefore true, that he went into England at Twenty three Years of Age, as he affirms. Valerius Andreas cannot be acquitted of a gross Mistake; for, on one Hand, he says Busbequius was seventy Years old in 1592, and, on the other, that, when he was Twenty three Years of Age, he was some Months at London, in the House of Ferdinand's Embassador; he must therefore have been there in 1545: but he himself says that he went to Constantinople after he had been with the same Embassador, and after the Marriage of Philip and Mary Queen of England, which was the Twenty fifth of July 1554; he was therefore older than Valerius Andreas makes him to be, when he went to London. That Author has committed another Fault: He says, that Busbequius did not go to the Embassador till after his Father's Death. 'Patre e vivis 'sublato juvenis ætatis anno tertio ac vicesimo in 'Angliam à Ferdinandi Imp. Oratore evocatur, 'cujus contubernio per menses aliquot familiariter 'usus in patriam revertitur (10). —— After his Father's Death, he, being but young, was taken to England by the Embassador of the Emperor Ferdinand, in whose House he lived some Months, and then returned into his own Country.' But Busbequius declares, that, having received Ferdinand's Letter after his Return from London, he put off his Journey to Vienna no longer than was necessary to take leave of his Father and of his Friends. 'Quas (literas) cum insulis 3. Novembris accepissem tantum 'moræ interposui dum ad Busbequium deflecterem, 'patrique & amicis valedicerem (11).' Besides, is it not a Piece of Inaccuracy to give Ferdinand the Title of Emperor in 1545? There is a Difficulty in these Words of Busbequius: 'Non te fugit cum essem ex Anglia domum reversus à Regis Philippi '& Reginæ Mariæ nuptiis, ubi fueram inter comites Don Petri Lassi —— quemadmodum Ferdinandus me per literas ad hoc iter evocarit. Quas 'cum Insulis 3. Novembris accepissem.' They signify that he did not return into Flanders, till after the Marriage of Mary Queen of England; from whence it follows, that the Letter he received at Lisle, November 3d, was not received before November 3. 1554, at the soonest: And yet his Account of the first Journey he made to Constantinople, after he received that Letter, is dated from Vienna, Sept. 1. 1554; and the Account of his second Journey is dated from Constantinople the fourteenth of July 1555. To remove that Difficulty, we need only mend those two false Dates, by putting 1555 in the first, and 1556 in the second: For, since Busbequius declares, that his

(7) See his first Letter at the beginning.

(8) Histor. de l'Arch. Albert, pag. 9.

(9) Val. Andreas Bibl. Belg. pag. 93.

(10) Id. ibid.

(11) Busbeq. Epist. 1, init.

ing Soliman at Conſtantinople, he was obliged to go to him at Amaſia [C]. He was ſent to the Porte to reſide there, in the Quality of Embaſſador in Ordinary; nevertheleſs, he made but a ſhort ſtay. He only obtained from Soliman a Truce of ſix Months [D], and it was thought expedient he ſhould quickly return to Ferdinand, to bring him the Letter of the Turkiſh Emperor. He did it, and was preſently ſent back again with other Orders to that proud Monarch, who would not hearken to Reaſon on the Affairs of Tranſilvania. The ſecond Embaſſy was much longer, and more ſucceſsful than the firſt; for it laſted ſeven Years, and ended in a good Treaty (d). Let us not forget, that, though he neglected nothing of what concerned the Affairs of the Embaſſy, yet he did not ceaſe to labour for the Republic of Letters, as well with regard to the critical Part, as to Natural Philoſophy.

(d) Ex Epiſtolis Buſbequii de Legatione Turcica.

Embaſſies laſted eight Years (12), and that he returned from the laſt, a little before the Coronation of Maximilian, King of the Romans, which happened the thirtieth of November 1562. It is manifeſt that the Month of November, in which he prepared himſelf for his firſt Voyage, is that of the Year 1554, and that the Month of November, in which he began the ſecond, is that of the Year 1555. When he mentions his Arrival at Francfort, a little before Maximilian's Coronation, he ſays, it was then ſeven Years wanting one Day, ſince he ſet out from Vienna on his ſecond Journey (13). Seeing therefore his ſecond Letter is the Account of his ſecond Journey to Conſtantinople, it is plain it muſt be dated, not the fourteenth of July 1555, but the fourteenth of July 1556. Here is another Miſtake of Moreri; he ſays, that Busbequius procured, in 1560, the Liberty of Alvarez de Sande, Sanchez de Leve, and Berenguel de Requeſens, taken by the Baſſa Piali in the Iſle of Gerbés, and that he returned with the firſt about the End of the ſame Year to Vienna. There is but a Miſreckoning of two Years. Melchior Adam has miſled Moreri.

(12) Bonis avibus ſub finem menſis Auguſti ortatum iter ingreſſus ſum, mecum referens annorum octo fructum octennales Inducias. — About the end of Auguſt I happily ſet forward on my deſired Journey, bringing with me a Truce of eight Years, for my eight Years time. Id. Epiſt. iv, pag. 360.

(13) Epiſt. iv, pag. 371.

[C] He was obliged to go to Soliman at Amaſia.] This plainly appears from his firſt Letter, which makes me believe that of a hundred Authors, who ſpeak of Busbequius, there are ſcarce ſix that conſult the Originals. It is certain, that Moreri did not give himſelf that Trouble. Soliman, ſays he, was then at Conſtantinople: Busbequius made a ſecond Journey to him at Amaſia in Aſia. Moreri is not the only Writer, who divides the two Embaſſies in that manner; I mean, who pretends, that Busbequius went the firſt time to Conſtantinople, and the ſecond time to Amaſia: Valerius Andreas has committed the ſame Miſtake: hæc prima illius in Aſiam legatio; he means the Embaſſy to Conſtantinople; altera Amaſiana fuit. Melchior Adam (14) and Swertius (15) expreſs themſelves in the ſame manner. The Expreſſion is more faulty ſtill in the Life of Busbequius prefixed to his Works: The Embaſſy into Aſia is there diſtinguiſhed from his Embaſſy to Amaſia. Legationibus claruit quarum prima Aſiana fuit — altera Amaſiana fuit (16). The beſt of all is, that ſome believe the Embaſſy to Amaſia was not deſigned for the Turkiſh Emperor, but for ſome other Eaſtern Prince. He likewiſe, they are the Words of a French Author (17), made himſelf known in the Courts of Aſia. His Embaſſies to Amaſia and Conſtantinople raiſed the Admiration of thoſe Eaſtern Nations. This Miſtake proceeds in all likelihood from his being cited as the Author of an Account of a Journey to Conſtantinople, and as the Author of an Account of a Journey to Amaſia. Indeed his firſt Letter contains thoſe two Accounts; but, beſides that thoſe two Journies belong to one and the ſame Embaſſy, which is the firſt, it would be a very improper Way of ſpeaking to denominate the ſecond by Amaſia, tho' he had gone the ſecond time to Amaſia without paſſing through Conſtantinople. The Denomination of an Embaſſy is not taken from the Town, where the Embaſſador has his Audience, but from the Court to which he is ſent. It would be a pleaſant Story, if an Embaſſador of the Emperor to the King of England, who, not finding that Prince at London, had gone to him into Ireland, in 1690, ſhould boaſt of two Embaſſies, the one into England, and the other into Ireland; but it might very well be ſaid, if he publiſhed a Relation, that it contains his Journey to London, and his Voyage to Dublin. I muſt mend another Fault. When Melchior Adam mentions Busbequius's Curioſity in Drugs and Plants, he ſays, he undertook a Journey to Amaſia to make a Collection of Plants, and ſuch like Rarities. He adds, that Amaſia is ſituate on the River Halys, which divides Galatia from Cappadocia. What I have already ſaid is ſufficient to ſhew, that his Journey to Amaſia was a matter of Neceſſity, and not of Curioſity. Beſides, that Town does not ſtand upon the Halys, but upon the Iris.

(14) Earum (legationum) inſignes imprimis fuere Conſtantinopolitana & Amaſiana. — — — The moſt remarkable of theſe (Embaſſies) were that of Conſtantinople, and that of Amaſia. Melch. Adam. in Vitâ Juriſc. pag. 326.

(15) In legationibus, quarum imprimis inſignes fuere Conſtantinopolitana & Amaſiana. Swertii Athen. Belg.

(16) Vitâ Buſbequii, init. Operum.

(17) Bullart, Academie des Sciences, Tom. I, pag. 80.

[D] He only obtained a Truce of ſix Months.] We have here an egregious Inſtance of what I ſaid before, that few Writers have conſulted the Originals with reſpect to Busbequius. The Author of his Life, prefixed to his Works, ſays, that he had ſuch Succeſs, that he ſoftened the fierce Humour of Soliman ſo, that he obtained from him a Truce for eight Years, Prout, as he goes on, latius è legationis Turcicæ Epiſtolis patet. - - - - - - As appears from his Letters on his Turkiſh Embaſſy. This is what he aſcribes to him with reſpect to his firſt Embaſſy; as to the ſecond, he is contented to call it Amaſiana. What Confuſion is this! The firſt produced only a Truce of ſix Months; 'Tantum de ſemeſtribus induciis dum deferri reſponſum reſerrique poſſet inter nos convenit (18). - - - - - We only agreed on a Truce for ſix Months, whilſt Anſwers could go and come. Feci Regem Romanorum de meo reditu ſemeſtribuſque induciis & ſumma rerum geſtarum certiorem (19). - - - - I informed the King of the Romans of my Return, and of the Truce for ſix Months, and the chief of my Negotiations.' The ſecond produced a Treaty, which the Emperor Ferdinand ratified, and contained a Truce for eight Years (20). Valerius Andreas commits yet more Faults than the Author of Busbequius's Life. He pretends, that the Grand Signor breathed nothing but Threats and War, becauſe of the Treaty of Exchange, which Ferdinand had concluded concerning Tranſilvania; and that there being a neceſſity of ſending an Embaſſador to pacify the Sultan, Malvezzi was pitched upon, who was firſt put in Priſon, and ſome time after releaſed, and returned without concluding any thing; but that Busbequius, who was appointed to ſucceed him, did not return into Germany until he had concluded a Truce of eight Years. 'Suffectus 'Busbequius qua erat animi modeſtia atque conſtantia 'mitigato Solimanni animo, & impetratis octennii in'duciis, in Germaniam revertitur. Hæc prima illius 'in Aſiam legatio, altera Amaſiana fuit (21). — Busbe'quius, who ſucceeded, having, by his Modeſty and Conſtancy of Mind, mitigated the Anger of Soliman, and obtained a Truce of eight Years, returned into Germany. This was his firſt Embaſſy into Aſia, the other was to Amaſia.' Let us not repeat the Confutation of this laſt Fault, but only ſay, that John Maria Malvezzi was ſent to the Porte before the Exchange of Tranſilvania was ſpoken of (22), and that he was impriſoned for having deceived the Grand Vizier, by aſſuring him that all the Reports, which ran of Ferdinand's Enterprizes upon the Principality of Tranſilvania, were falſe. 'Cum jam 'potito totius Tranſilvaniæ Ferdinando certa res 'eſſet neque diſſimulationi locus relinqueretur, ve'hementer Turcarum Imperator in Ruſtanum (he was the Grand Vizier) quod affirmationi Malve'zii tantum fidei habuiſſet, multo etiam magis 'in Malvezium Ruſtanus, cujus ſe fraude circum'venium clamabat, excanduerunt (23). — When Ferdinand, by ſeizing all Tranſilvania, had put the thing beyond doubt, and no more room was left for Diſſimulation, the Turkiſh Emperor was very much enraged with Ruſtan (the Grand Vizier) that he had given ſo much Credit to Malvezzi's Affirmations; and Ruſtan much more with Malvezzi, by whoſe Fraud he complained he was 'circumvented.'

(18) Buſbeq. Epiſt. I, pag. 105.

(19) Id. p. 129.

(20) Id. Epiſt. iv, pag. 372, 360.

(21) Val. Andreas, Biblioth. Belg. pag. 93.

(22) Buſbequii Epiſt. I, pag. 15.

(23) Ibid. pag. 16.

Philosophy. He collected Inscriptions [E], he bought up Manuscripts [F]; he sought for rare Plants, and informed himself of the Nature of Animals. There are Proofs of all this to be found, either in the Inscriptions of Gruter, or in the Imperial Library, or in the Books of Mathiol; and it is well known, that, in his second Journey to Constantinople, he took a Painter along with him, that he might be able to communicate to the Curious, at least Figures of the Plants and Animals, which are not well known in the western Parts of Europe (e). He dived perfectly into the State of the Ottoman Empire, and the true means of attacking it with Success, upon which he composed a very judicious Discourse (f). The Account which he composed of his two Journies into Turkey is also a good Work, and deserves the Approbation of those who are able to judge of such Writings [G]. He had a Mind to pass the Remainder of his Days in a private Life (g), but was obliged to re-imbark more than ever in the Affairs of the Court. He was intrusted with the Government of the young Princes, Sons of Maximilian II (b). And when the Princess Elizabeth, Daughter of that Emperor, was married to Charles IX, King of France (i), he had the Commission to conduct her to Paris. That Queen gave him the whole Administration of her House and Affairs; and when she quitted France, after the Death of her Husband, she left him there as her Embassador (k). He had also that Character from the Emperor Rodolphus, till 1592 (l): At which time, having obtained leave to take a Journey into Flanders, (e) Melchior Adam. vit. Jurisc. pag. 318.

(f) Intituled, De re militari contra Turcam instituenda consilium.

(g) Busbeq. Epist. iv. pag. 323, 324.

(b, See Rem. [A].

(i) In 1570.

(k) Thuan. lib. civ. pag. 485.

(l) Melch. Adam. pag. 326.

[E] He collected Inscriptions.] Moreri says, that he sent them to Scaliger, Lipsius, and Gruterus. I do not ask him why he varies from his Guide, Melchior Adam, who says, that Busbequius sent his Inscriptions to Clusius, who sent them to Gruterus, and that the latter inserted them in his great Collection, with the Corrections of Scaliger; I do not insist on this, since I find in Busbequius's Life, that he communicated several Inscriptions to Lipsius, by whose Means they were published in the Collections of Smetius, and Gruterus. This helps Mr Moreri, but not so far as to discharge him of all the Burden. It must not be forgot, that the Public is indebted to our Busbequius for the Monumentum Ancyranum, which would be one of the most curious and most instructive Inscriptions of Antiquity, if it were intire; for in it we should have a List of all the Actions of Augustus. Busbequius, passing through Ancyra, a City of Galatia, caused a Copy to be made of all that remained legible of that Inscription on the Marble of a ruined Palace (24), and sent it to the Jesuit Schottus (25). You may see in the Suetonius of Mr Gravius what it is; Lipsius and Cajaubon have had a Dispute about it.

(24) Epist. I, pag. 87.

(25) Melch. Adam. Vitæ Jurisc. pag. 316.

Note, That Mr Gronovius published this Monumentum Ancyranum, with Notes, at Leyden, in the Year 1695, from a more ample and correct Copy than that of Busbequius.

[F] He bought up Manuscripts.] The anonymous Panegyrist of the Archduke Albert says (26), that Busbequius enriched the Imperial Library with an infinite Number of rare and excellent Manuscripts. Why does he stray from his Guide? Why does he not limit himself to the Number of an hundred as others do? 'Quin & centum amplius antiqua 'cum Græca tum Latina in membranis calamo exa'rata volumina media in Græcia studiose collecta 'in Cæsaream Viennæ Austriæ Bibliothecam in'tulit (27). —— Besides, he presented to the Im'perial Library, at Vienna, a hundred Manuscripts 'on Vellum, both Greek and Latin, which he had 'collected with great care in Greece.' I do not deny that Busbequius bought more. 'Reporto, says 'he (28), magnam farraginem veterum numismatum, quorum præcipuis donabo Dominum meum. 'Adhæc librorum Græcorum manuscriptorum tota 'plaustra, totas naves; sunt, credo, libri haud multo 'infra 240, quos mari misi Venetias, ut inde Viennam 'deportentur. Converri omnes angulos ut quicquid 'restabat hujusmodi mercis, tanquam novissimo spi'cilegio, cogerem. —— I bring with me, says he, a great Collection of old Coins, the chief 'of which I will present to my Master. Besides 'Cart-loads, nay Ship-loads, of Manuscript Greek Books. I believe there are not much less than Two 'hundred and forty Books, which I have sent by 'Sea to Venice, thence to be brought to Vienna. 'I rummaged every Corner, to gather, as it were, 'the last Gleanings that remained of this kind of 'Ware.'

(26) Pag. 9.

(27) Melch. Adam. vit. Jurisc. pag. 316. See also Bullart, Acad. des Scienc. Tom. I, pag. 80.

(28) Busbequii, Epist. iv, sub fin.

[G] The Account of his Journies deserves the Approbation of those, who are able to judge of Writings of that kind.] Thuanus says this of it: 'Vir 'eruditione, rerum agendarum peritia, candore & 'probitate insignis, qui unam atque alteram legatio'nem ad Portam Othomanicam sub Ferdinando 'Cæsare magna sua cum laude gessit, & elegan'tissimis ac lecta jucundissimis epistolis explicavit, 'ex quibus quam plurima in hos Annales me tran'scripsisse ingenue profiteor (29). ------ A Man 'eminent for his Learning, Skill in transacting 'Affairs, Candour and Probity, who discharged two 'Embassies to the Ottoman Port, under the Em'peror Ferdinand, with great Honour, and gave an 'Account of them in very elegant and entertaining 'Letters, from whence I ingenuously own I have 'transcribed many things into these Annals.' Mr Teissier reduces the Letters of Augerius Busbequius to two (30). It may be he made use of an Edition, wherein Thuanus acknowledged but two: for it is true, that there were no more published at first. Lewis Carrion published these two at Antwerp, by Plantin, in the Year 1581, without knowing whether the Author would be pleased with it or not; he only hoped it would not displease him too highly. The Title of these two first was, Itinera Constantinopolitanum & Amasianum. Some time after appeared four, under the Title of Augerii Gislenii Busbequii legationis Turcicæ epistolæ quatuor. They have been printed several times: Scaliger has praised them highly, and Francis (31) Hofman cites them in his Treatise of the Office of an Embassador, as a Book worthy of that Character, and which contains ample Lessons for such as are employed in those high Functions (32). It is wrong to consider these four Letters as a different Work from that which bears the Title of Itinera Constantinopolitanum & Amasianum (33). They do not otherwise differ from it than as the whole differs from some of it's Parts. As to Busbequius's Letters to Rodolphus concerning the Embassy of France, they relate chiefly to the Expedition of the Duke of Alençon into the Netherlands, and were not published till 1632, curante Jo. Baptista Howaert J. C. & Patricio Bruxellensi. The Year following they were reprinted at Leyden with all the Works of Busbequius. By the way, Thuanus, in the Words I have quoted, places these two Embassies in the Reign of Ferdinand I. He is in the right; but Mr Teissier does not agree with him, since he will have it, that Busbequius's Embassies were posterior to the Office of Governor to the Emperor Maximilian's Children (34). Carrion was not very exact, when he said, that the Embassies of Turkey belong to the Reign of Ferdinand, and to that of Maximilian (35). They who would know the Encomiums, which have been given to our Busbequius, need only consult Sir Thomas Pope Blount, at the Five hundred fifty fourth Page, and Lewis Guicciardin, in the Place where he speaks of Comines, in the Description of the Netherlands.

(29) Thuan. lib. civ, pag. 484.

(30) Teissier Elog. taken from Thuan. Tom II, pag. 189.

(31) He ought to have said John.

(32) Bullart, Academ. des Sciences, Tom. I, pag. 80.

(33) This is what Melchior Adam, Swert, Valerius Andreas, Teissier, Moreri, Pope Blount do, as well as those who make the Number of his Epistolæ Turcicæ six, as Melch. Adam, and Konig.

(34) Teissier Additions aux Elog. Tom. II, p. 190.

(35) Cum Busbequius nomine Imp. Ferdinandi & Maximiliani apud Turcam Oratoris partes ageret. Epist. dedicat. ad Nicolaum Micaultium, which he believes to be the same to whom Busbequius wrote his Relations.

Flanders, to set his own private Affairs in order, he took the Way of Normandy. But notwithstanding he had furnished himself with the King's Passes (m), and with those of the League, he was robbed and abused by a Party of Leaguers [H], in the Village of Cailli, three Leagues from Rouen (n). These Robbers durst not detain him Prisoner, nor take away his Baggage, when they reflected on what he represented to them concerning the inviolable Privileges of his Character; but though they restored him his Liberty and his Trunks, yet it interrupted his Journey. He caused himself to be brought to the Lady of Maillot's House at St Germains, near Rouen, where he was taken with a Fever, which carried him off, after some Days, on the Twenty eighth of October, 1592. His Body was honourably interred in the Church at that Place, and his Heart carried to the Netherlands, to

(m) Thuan. lib. civ, pag. 316.

(n) Baillet's Academy of Science., Tom. I, pag. 81.

therlands. He says, that Busbequius spoke seven Languages perfectly well; viz. Latin, Italian, French, Spanish, German, Dutch, and Sclavonian. The Letters Patents of the Emperor Ferdinand on the Promotion to the Order of Knighthood, with which Maximilian, King of the Romans, honoured Busbequius, are as good as a Panegyric: they are dated the third of April, 1564 (36). See also Camerarius, in the fourteenth Chapter of the last Book of his historical Meditations.

(36) Swert. Athenæ Belgicæ.

The Author of the Miscellanies of History and Literature has given so fine a Judgment of one of Busbequius's Works, that I cannot forbear copying it. 'Busbequius's (37) Letters to the Emperor Rodolphus II, says he (38), contain more Matter and are much more useful than those of Bongars. They are a natural Representation of the Affairs of France, in the Reign of Henry III. He relates Matters with so much Plainness, that they seem to be transacted before our Eyes. We do not find any where so many historical Facts in so small a Discourse. The Grand Affairs, such as the Conspiracy of Antwerp, and the petty Intrigues of the Court, are equally well described there. The Attitudes (as one may say) in which he places Henry III, the Queen-Mother, the Duke of Alençon, the King of Navarre, Queen Margarita, the Duke of Guise, the Duke of Epernon, and the other Courtiers and Favourites of those times, shew them to us in such a manner as discovers their strong and their weak side, the good and the bad in them. In a word, Busbequius's Letters are a Model of writing well for Embassadors, who are to give their Masters an Account of what passes in the Courts where they reside.'

(37) He should have said Busbequius's or Busbequius's.

(38) Vigneul-Marville, Melanges d'Hist. & de Litter. pag. 52, 53. Edit. of Rouen, 1699.

[H] He was robbed and abused by a Party of Leaguers.] Before I give an Account of the Variations and Falsities concerning Busbequius's Death, I shall say, that Thuanus ought not to have forgot, that That good Man was Embassador from the Emperor to the Court of France. He did what he could to make his Readers believe, that Busbequius had no other Character there than that of Agent of the Widow of Charles IX (39). As for what he adds, that the Leaguers, who stopped and plundered him, joined to this the most cruel Treatment, which broke his Heart, while they waited for Letters from the Duke de Maienne, I find it no ways conformable to the Narrative of other Authors. Melchior Adam, Swertius, Valerius Andreas, the Life which is at the Head of his Works, Bullart, &c. agree that all his Baggage was returned to him, that he was left at full Liberty to go where he pleased, that the Governor of Rouen promised him to punish those Villains, and that he got himself carried to the House where he died, only because he had some Presages of the Sickness which seized him a little after. This we must stick by as the most probable Accounts for as to the Rumour which went about, and was asserted by some Authors, viz. that he was killed in a Wood, the Falsity of it is long since known. The good Philip Camerarius was not undeceived in it, when he published his historical Meditations; for here is a Passage of it (40) from the French Translation: 'It is every way a lamentable Case that so excellent a Man, who had done so much good to the Public, and had been twice Embassador at Constantinople from the Emperors (41), whence he came safe, after having happily overcome many Dangers, should at last, in a Journey to Diepe, to Henry IV (42), be robbed and murthered in a Forest by a Gang of Highwaymen; a Person worthy of a longer Life, and a milder Death!' Neither was Scaliger undeceived; he says that Busbequius was killed near Paris (43). I should not wonder that Lipsius, who was one of Busbequius's good Friends, should, in a heat, mention the pretended Murther in an Epitaph, on the Credit of common Fame: but it is somewhat strange, that at nine Years end he should consecrate that Error, and, being advertised of it, should not take care to correct that Epitaph. It is still to be seen in all the Editions of his Works, with that original Fault: Ecce sustulit viam per ipsam miles incertum an latro, sed sustulit (44). —— So he was taken off in his Journey, whether by Soldiers or Robbers, is not certain, but he was taken off.' You find it also uncorrected in divers Authors, who speak of Augerius Busbequius; Lipsius cannot be excused on the Score of the Affection Poets have for their Works, nor on the Examples of divers Poets, who, having composed Verses in honour of some Friend, whom they falsely thought to be dead, have, nevertheless, published them while that Friend was alive (45). The Author, of whom I speak, did the same in Prose; you may see it still in his Letters: 'In Busbequii morte & tali morte in animo meo dolui. Servatum hunc virum per tot discrimina apud exteros, apud barbaros, ut in limine fere patriæ laetronum manibus (ita audimus) periret (46). —— I was very much grieved at the Death of Busbequius, and the manner of it. That this Man, who escaped so many Dangers among Foreigners and Barbarians, should perish (as we hear) in the very Borders of his Country, by the Hands of Robbers.' He had been advertised of that Falsehood (47), and yet did not correct it. As for what remains, since his Letter is dated the eleventh of January CIↃIↃXCII, it should from thence be concluded, that Busbequius's Death has not been well placed on the Twenty eighth of October, 1592. I say, this Conclusion must be drawn from it, if it were not more reasonable to suspect the Omission of an I, there. For I see no kind of likelihood that Lipsius should date his Letter according to the Stile of those who do not begin the Year from January.

(39) See the following Remark, Citat. (50).

(40) Lib. v, cap. xiv, of Vol. III.

(41) He was only so from Ferdinand I.

(42) It is not true that he was going to Henry IV.

(43) See the Scaligerana.

(44) Lipsius Epist. lxxviii, ad Belgas Cent. II, It is dated Jan. 31, 1602.

(45) Cotin reproached Mr Menage with an Epicedium upon Cornaille, who was supposed to have been dead of an Inflammation of the Lungs.

(46) Lipsi. Epist. xcix, Cent. II, Miscell.

(47) De Busbequii morte, scio errorem: sed admonebitur & tamen famam epistolæ non historiam lvi Interim. —— I know the Mistake concerning Busbequius's Death, but it is to be observed, that I proposed to insert what was reported, not the real History, in my Letter. Id. Epist. lxxxi, Cent. iv, Miscell.

I cannot end this without giving an Example of the little Care Authors take to verify what they take at a Distance from the Fountain-head. Quenstedt (48) assures us, That Busbequius was not only an excellent Politician, grave and prudent, but also that he was a great Lover of polite Literature, and above all, that he was very curious in Natural Philosophy. For this, he cites a Letter of Justus Lipsius, where only these Words are to be found: Suavem famam reliquit doctrinæ suæ, prudentiæ, probitatis (49). —— He left a good Reputation on Account of his Learning, Prudence, and Probity. Quenstedt's Error was owing to his copying Melchior Adam, without giving himself any farther Trouble than barely copying; for if he had ever so little considered what Melchior Adam had grounded his Citation on, he would have thought himself obliged to keep within the same Bounds. I shall set down the Passage entire, that it may serve for a Warning to Transcribers. This is the Judgment that ought to be made of divers Things which I mention: It is not for the sake of the things themselves that I do it, but that they may serve for a Looking-Glass, in which Compilers may see what they ought to avoid. 'Fuit hic, this is the Passage of Melchior Adam, 'non solum politicus excellens gravis * ac 'prudens: sed manuetiorum etiam Musarum amantissimus: ac imprimis rerum naturalium cognoscendarum

(48) De Patrib. viror. illustr. pag. 109.

(49) The xcixth of the IId Century Selectarum: Or, as the other Editions have it, Miscellanearum.

* Justus Lipsius Cent. II, Epist. select. xcix, Ep.

to be placed in the Tomb of his Anceſtors (o). He was ſo well pleaſed with France, that he bought ſome Lands there, and ſeemed as if he deſigned to ſettle in that Country [I]. The Speeches which he had made to the Kings of France, in French, are much praiſed (p). The Lordſhip of Buſbec was erected into a Barony by the Archduke Albert, Governor, and afterwards Sovereign of the Spaniſh Netherlands (q). That Prince deſigned thereby to honour the Memory of his Governor, and expreſs his Acknowledgment to him.

(o) Melch. Adam. vit. Juriſc. pag. 316. Valer. Andreæ Bibl. Belg. pag. 93. Hiſtoire de l'Archiduc Albert, printed at Cologn, 1693, p. 9.

(p) La Croix du Maine Bibl. Françoiſe, pag. 475.

(q) Hiſtoir de l'Archid. Albert, pag. 9. & 372.

'ſcendarum cupidiſſimus. - - - - - He was not only 'an excellent Politician, grave and prudent; but 'alſo a great Lover of polite Literature, and extremely fond of Natural Philoſophy.' Lipſius is called in as a Witneſs only to the Elogy of prudent: the reſt is all of the other's own coining.

[I] He purchaſed ſome Lands in France, and ſeemed inclined to ſettle there.] Thuanus informs me of this: I ſhall give the whole Paſſage from him, becauſe it confirms what I have ſaid before (viz.) That it is not owing to Thuanus, that we are not abſolutely ignorant of the Character that Buſbequius had, in France, from his Imperial Majeſty. There is, beſides, ſomething in this Paſſage, which might ſurprize the Readers. 'Elizabetha Caroli 'uxor vidua - - - in Germaniam ad Maximilianum 'patrem ſe contulit, relicto in Gallia, qui res ſuas 'procuraret, Augerio Giſlenio Busbequio - - - - qui 'toto vitæ Elizabethæ tempore in Gallia manſit, '& poſt mortem ejus five loci commoditate, five 'ingeniorum amœnitate captus, comparatis apud 'nos prædiis larem fixit, donec his calamitatis ulti- 'mis temporibus eum novam patriam deſerere coge- 'retur, eum ægrè ſe itineri accingentem mors op- 'preſſit. (50) - - - - Elizabeth, Widow of Charles, 'went into Germany to her Father Maximilian, 'leaving Augerius Giſlenius Busbequius to take 'Care of her Affairs in France - - - - - who remain- 'ed in France as long as Elizabeth lived, and after 'her Death, invited either by the Convenience of the 'Place, or the Agreeableneſs of the Inhabitants, he 'purchaſed Lands, and ſettled among us, till the laſt 'calamitous Times, when, being obliged to leave his 'new Country, while he was unwillingly preparing 'for his Journey, he was taken off by Death.' One would naturally conclude from hence, I. That nothing detained the Sieur Busbequius in France, after the Death of the Widow of Charles IX, but the Pleaſantneſs of the Country. II. That there paſſed much Time between the Death of that Queen, and the Departure of her Reſident; for to buy Lands in a Country, and to fix one's Abode there, until the laſt of ſeven or eight Civil-Wars drives you from thence, are things which import more than ſeven or eight Months. Yet this is all the Time of that good Man's Abode there, after the Death of the Queen his Miſtreſs. I deſire no other Witneſs to this, than Thuanus himſelf. He tells us, That this Queen died about the latter End of January 1592, and that Busbequius died towards the End of October of the ſame Year (51). In this Place the Hiſtorian gives no other Reaſon for his Departure than the Death of Elizabeth. 'Cum 'vero ille (Busbequius) poſt principis bene de ſe 'meritæ obitum in Belgium, hoc eſt in patriam, 'cum tota familia remeaturus ad iter ſe accinxiſſet. '—— But when he (Busbequius) after the Death of 'the Princeſs, his Benefactreſs, had made preparation 'to return with all his Family, into the Netherlands, 'where he was born.' - - -

(50) Thuan. Hiſt. lib. 60. pag. 122.

(51) Id. lib. 104.

BUSIRIS. If we believe Diodorus Siculus, there have been divers Buſiris's in Egypt: For he relates that Oſiris, having reſolved upon a great Expedition, declared the Queen, his Wife, (a) Regent of Egypt, and left her two Lieutenants; the one for Counſel, the other to command the Forces; and that he gave the Government of Phœnicia, and the maritime Places, to BUSIRIS (b). In another Place (c) he ſays, that, after Fifty two Princes had ſucceſſively poſſeſſed the Throne of Menas, from whom they were deſcended, BUSIRIS became King of Egypt. Eight of his Deſcendants, continues he, ſucceeded him, the laſt of which was called BUSIRIS, and built the magnificent and powerful City, which the Greeks called Thebes: The ſame which the Egyptians called the City of the Sun (d). He declares elſewhere, that what was ſaid of the Barbarity of one Buſiris, was a Fable of the Greeks, but a Fable which had for it's Foundation a Cuſtom practiſed in Egypt. They ſacrificed all the red-haired People that they could find to the Ghoſt of King Oſiris (e); and as the Natives of the Country were hardly ever of that Complexion, there were few, except Strangers, who ſerved for Victims. Now, in the Egyptian Language, Buſiris ſignified the Sepulchre of Oſiris: This is the Original of the Story, which paſſed current among the Greeks, That BUSIRIS King of Egypt was ſo barbarous, as to order the Throats of all Strangers to be cut (f). They ſuppoſed that he himſelf was ſacrificed by Hercules [A], whom he would

(a) She was called Iſis.

(b) Diod. Sicul. lib. 1, cap. 17.

(c) Id. ibid. cap. xlv.

(d) Id. ibid.

(e) This was one of hatred to Typhon, whoſe Hair was of this colour, and had killed Oſiris. Diod. Sicul. lib. 1, cap. lxxxviii.

(f) Id. ibid.

[A] He himſelf was ſacrificed by Hercules.] This is what we find upon this Head in Apollodorus (1). After Hercules had killed Anteus, he went into Egypt, where Buſiris, the Son of Neptune, and of Lyſianaſſa, the Daughter of Epaphus, was King. This Buſiris ſacrificed Strangers to Jupiter; this he did in Obedience to an Oracle. The Harveſts had been very bad for nine Years ſucceſſively in Egypt. Upon this, there comes a Soothſayer from Cyprus, whoſe Name was Thraſius, who declared that this Misfortune would ceaſe, if they every Year ſacrificed a Stranger to Jupiter. Buſiris, giving Credit to this prophetic Declaration, began to execute it on the Soothſayer himſelf, and commanded that Thraſius ſhould be ſacrificed firſt; and from that Time treated Strangers in the ſame manner. Hercules was alſo deſigned to be made a Victim; they had ſeized him, and led him bound to the Altar; but he broke his Chains, and killed Buſiris, and Iphidamas and Chalbes. The firſt was the Son of Buſiris, the laſt was his Herald of Arms. Iſocrates refutes this Story thus. They, who ſay that Buſiris ſacrificed Strangers, ſay alſo that Hercules killed him. Now all Hiſtorians agree that Hercules lived four Generations after Perſeus and Danaë, and above two hundred Years after Buſiris (2). The latter was the Son of Neptune, and of Libya the Daughter of Epaphus, who was the firſt that reigned in the Country which bore her Name (3). Note, that an old Commentator on Virgil differs a little from Apollodorus as to Circumſtances: 'Buſi- 'ris, ſays he (4), Egypti rex omnibus annis Jovi 'hoſpites immolabat. Nam per octo annos ſterili- 'tate Ægypto laborante, Pygmalion Cyprius finem 'futurum non ait, niſi ſanguine hoſpitis litatum 'fuiſſet. Primus autem Thyeſtes alienigena immo- 'latus originem ſacrificio dedit. —— Buſiris, King 'of Egypt, ſacrificed Strangers every Year to Jupiter. For when Egypt laboured under a Famine of 'eight Years, Pygmalion of Cyprus ſaid, it would 'not end, unleſs they ſacrificed the Blood of a Stran- 'ger. And Thyeſtes, a Stranger, being firſt offered, 'laid

(1) Apollod. Biblioth. lib. ii, p. 129.

(2) Iſocrates in Buſiridis laudatione, pag. 333, Edit. Baſil, 1570, in Folio.

(3) Id. ibid. pag. 328.

(4) Philargyrius in Georg. Virgil. lib. iii, ver. 5.

would have had the Boldneſs to have ſerved like the reſt. There is a Paſſage in Virgil concerning Buſiris, which has exerciſed the Interpreters [B]. It ſeems to me,

'laid the Foundation of the Sacrifice.' Ovid reports the Fact juſt as Apollodorus does (5).

(5) Ovidius de arte amandi, l. i.

[B] A Paſſage in Virgil concerning Buſiris —— has exerciſed Interpreters.] Virgil places the Cruelties of that Tyrant among the Stories, which the Poets had ſung a thouſand and a thouſand Times over, and which he could not make choice of for the Subject of his Poeme, ſo very trite a Subject it was.

Cætera, quæ vacuas tenuiſſent carmina mentes,
Omnia jam vulgata. Quis aut Eurythea durum,
Aut inlaudati neſcit Buſiridis aras (6)?

(6) Virg. Georgic. lib. iii, v. 3.

All other Themes, that careleſs Minds invite,
Are worn with uſe, unworthy me to write.
Buſiris' Altars, and the dire Decrees
Of hard Euriſtheus, ev'ry Reader ſees:
DRYDEN.

GRAMMATICAL Remarks on the Word inlaudatus.

The Word inlaudati ſtrikes every Reader; it has been found altogether improper: Is it enough to ſay of ſo inhuman a Monſter that he was not praiſed, or that he deſerves no Praiſe? Ought he not to have made uſe of a Term, which ſhould inſpire his Readers with all the Horror that ſo much Cruelty deſerves? This Cenſure is not new, nor invented by thoſe, who are on Mr Perrault's Side; the Grammarians who lived a little after Virgil entered that Proceſs againſt him. 'Nonnulli Grammatici ætatis ſuperioris, in quibus eſt Cornutus Annæus, haud ſane indocti neque ignobiles, qui commentaria in Virgilium compoſuerunt - - - - illaudati parum idoneum eſſe verbum dicunt, neque id ſatis eſſe ad faciendum ſcelerati hominis deteſtationem, qui quod hoſpites omnium gentium immolare ſolitus fuit, non laude indignus, ſed deteſtatione exſecrationeque totius generis humani dignus eſſet (7). —— Some Grammarians of the laſt Age, among whom is Cornutus Annæus, neither unlearned nor obſcure, who have wrote Commentaries on Virgil - - - - ſay, that the Term illaudati is not proper, nor ſufficient to raiſe a due Deteſtation of that wicked Man, who, in that he uſed to ſacrifice Strangers of all Nations, was not only unworthy of Praiſe, but deſerved the Deteſtation and Curſe of all Mankind.' He did not want Apologiſts at that Time any more than now, and we ſhall ſee the two Reaſons that one of his Advocates in the ſecond Century alledged in his Defence. I. In the firſt place he maintains, that the Word inlaudatus or illaudatus, ſignifying a Perſon who never did any thing Praiſe-worthy, is very proper to give the Idea of a very wicked Man; for we rarely ſee any ſo profligate and wicked, as never to have ſpoke ſome Word, or done ſome Action, that deſerved to be approved. He adds, that, ſeeing the Term inculpatus ſignifies the utmoſt Limits of moral Good, that of illaudatus ought to ſignify the utmoſt extent of Wickedneſs; and he proves, by Paſſages out of Homer, that the moſt ſublime Praiſes are contained in Terms excluſive of Imperfection, and that therefore a Term, which excludes Praiſe, is the moſt proper in the World for Blame. He alledges the Term inamabilis, which Virgil is content to uſe to expreſs the moſt deteſtable Thing in the World. 'Nemo quiſquam tam afflictis eſt moribus, quin faciat aut dicat nonnunquam aliquid quod laudari queat. Unde hic antiquiſſimus verſus vicem proverbii celebratus eſt, Πολλάκι γὰρ καὶ μωρὸς ἀνὴρ μάλα καίριον εἶπεν. Sed enim qui omni in re atque omni tempore laude omni vacat, is illaudatus eſt, iſque omnium peſſimus deterrimuſque eſt; ſicuti omnis culpæ privatio inculpatum facit, inculpatus autem inſtar eſt abſolutæ virtutis, illaudatus igitur quoque finis eſt extremæ malitiæ. Itaque Homerus non virtutibus appellandis ſed vitiis detrahendis laudare ampliter ſolet - - - - Eadem ratione idem Virgilius inamabilem dixit ſtygiam paludem, nam ſicut illaudatum καλὸν laudis (7) Aulus Gellius, lib. ii, cap. 6.

(8) Id. ibid.

σέρνον, ita inamabilem καλὸν amoris σέρνον deteſtatus eſt (8). —— There is no Man of ſo abandoned Behaviour, but he ſometimes ſays, or does, ſomething or other which may be commended. Hence this ancient Verſe is grown into a Proverb. Πολλάκι γὰρ καὶ μωρὸς ἀνὴρ μάλα καίριον εἶπεν. A Fool oft ſpeaks to the purpoſe. Certainly, he who in every thing, and at all times, miſſes of Praiſe, is illaudatus, and is the worſt and baſeſt of Mankind: as the privation of all blame, makes a Man blameleſs, and blameleſs ſignifies abſolute Virtue; ſo praiſeleſs denotes the extremity of conſummate Wickedneſs. Therefore Homer, when he commends highly, does it not by naming Virtues, but denying Vices. —— In the ſame manner Virgil himſelf calls the Stygian Lake inamabilis; for as illaudatus imports the privation of all Praiſe, ſo inamabilis ſignifies Deteſtation or Deprivation of all Love.' The ſecond Manner of juſtifying Virgil is this. In old Latin, laudare ſignified to name; ſo that illaudatus is the ſame as illaudabilis; 'tis ſuppoſed, that the Poet meant that Buſiris did not deſerve ſo much as to have his Name mentioned. Now this is expreſſing the Cruelty of that Tyrant very ſtrongly; it is repreſenting it as the moſt execrable thing in the World. 'Altero modo illaudatus ita defenditur. Laudare ſignificat priſca lingua nominare appellareque. Sic in actionibus civilibus auctor laudari dicitur, quod eſt nominari. Illaudatus enim eſt quaſi illaudabilis, qui neque mentione aut memoria ulla dignus, neque unquam nominandus eſt. Sicuti quondam à communi concilio Aſiæ decretum eſt, uti nomen ejus, qui templum Dianæ Epheſiæ incenderat, ne quis ullo in tempore nominaret (9). —— The Term illaudatus is defended another way thus. 'Laudare in ancient Language ſignifies, to name or call; ſo in civil Actions the Plaintiff is ſaid laudari, that is, to be named; for illaudatus is as much as to ſay illaudabilis, which is not worthy of any mention or remembrance, nor ought ever to be named: as once it was decreed by a general Council of Aſia, that no Body ſhould ever name him, who burnt the Temple of Diana at Epheſus.' Macrobius has copied all this Paſſage of A. Gellius without citing any one. See the ſeventh Chapter of the fifth Book of his Saturnalia.

(9) Id. ibid.

It would be very difficult, at preſent, to judge which are moſt in the right, the Criticiſers of Virgil, or his Advocate A. Gellius; for to perceive the whole Strength of the Objection, and of the Anſwer, we ought to know what Idea ſuch and ſuch Words preſented to the Mind in Virgil's Time. Argument ſerves but little in this Matter, becauſe the Force of Words depend altogether on Uſe. Now to know the Uſe right, we muſt either live with thoſe who made Uſe of ſuch a Language, or conſult Authors, who have clearly and preciſely noted the Ideas, which anſwered to ſuch and ſuch Words. It is very certain, that, if one of our modern Poets ſhould make uſe of the Epithet not praiſed, or not worthy of Praiſe, in ſpeaking of Caligula, he would not only expoſe himſelf, without Reply, to the Cenſure that Gellius endeavoured to refute, but would even be turned into ridicule. Always ſuppoſing, that the Piece, wherein he ſhould ſpeak ſo was of a grave Style, and not of the burleſque or comic Kind. It would be in vain to offer Gellius's firſt Reaſon, and philoſophize on the excluſive Terms of Perfection or Imperfection. 'Sir, might any one anſwer him, we are uſed to apply the Idea of a very ſmall Evil to the Word not worthy of Praiſe; ſo that, when you tell us that Caligula is not worthy of Praiſe, it is ſo far from making us conceive a wicked Perſon and a Monſter, that you incline us to think that he was but moderately wicked.' So that it would be impoſſible to ſave Virgil's Honour, if, in Auguſtus's Time, illaudatus had been of no greater Force than our Engliſh Expreſſion unextolled, or unworthy of Praiſe. Gellius's ſecond Reaſon does not remove the Difficulty; for if a celebrated Author is permitted to make uſe of old Expreſſions, it is only on Condition that the Word has not altered it's Nature by the Acquiſition of a new Senſe. This Rule Virgil had violated, if his Expreſſion were to be judged me, that they do not take Iſocrates right, who ſay that he made a Panegyric on that infamous Tyrant Buſiris [C]. It is not certain that there ever was a King of that Name in Egypt [D]; but we muſt own, there was a City in Egypt of that Name [E]. Melanchthon thought it very probable that Buſiris was the ſame Pharaoh judged by the ſecond Anſwer of his Advocate. In Auguſtus's Time, the chief, governing, common Signification of the Words laudare, laudatus, inlaudatus, were not to name, named, not named, not worthy to be named, but to praiſe, praiſed, not praiſed, or if you will, not worthy of Praiſe. It would then have been very wrong to make uſe of the Word inlaudatus in a Signification derived from a Signification of laudare, which had ſcarce any more Place, but had yielded it to another Signification. Beſides that it is a Licence ſomewhat vitious to make uſe of a Word, in which no reaſonable Senſe is to be found, but by ſuppoſing, that a Participle was put in the Place of a Noun: and yet what Participle? A Participle which denies the Fact; a Noun that denies the Right; a Participle wherein the Event is found; a Noun in which we find what does not deſerve to happen. What ſhall we ſay then? I ſhould not for my part think it amiſs, to ſuppoſe, that That Place of Virgil is one of thoſe Verſes, wherein the Neceſſity of the ſhort and long Syllables engages Poets to make uſe of a Word leſs proper, or even prejudicial to the Senſe. The Quantity of Syllables requires many Sacrifices from Poets, in the dead Languages, as Rhime requires many in the Living.

I diſtinguiſhed before between the comic and the grave Style, becauſe I remembered ſome popular Ways of ſpeaking, not unlike the unpraiſed Caligula. 'The Robbers ſtripped this good old Man 'to his Shirt, in a Wood covered with Snow; 'this was not over pleaſant. Such a one received 'a Muſket Shot through the Body before Philipſ-burgh; this was not wholſome.' Theſe are popular Phraſes, or, as one may ſay, Jeſts: They are compoſed of Terms exclufive of ſome good Quality. A. Gellius admires Homer, who by ſuch like Words raiſed Commendation to a ſuperlative Degree. Theſe are doubtleſs Privileges of the Greek Tongue, on which Latin Authors ought not to have made the Reflexion, which Martial made in another Caſe (10), if the learned Caſaubon's juſtification of Livy be a good one. It has been thought a little ſtrange that this Roman only called Polybius no deſpicable Author (11). According to our Ideas, it is a very mean encomium; an Author cannot be more moderately praiſed; nevertheleſs Caſaubon ſhows, by I know not how many Examples, that That Expreſſion of Livy is of an extenſive Signification to the Honour and Praiſe of Polybius (12). I allow it; it is a ſtrong Proof of the Capriciouſneſs of Cuſtom in Languages.

(10) Dicunt Latinon tamen Poetam,
Sed Græci quibus eſt nihil negotiam,
Et quos ἄριστος decet ſonare.
Nobis non licet eſſe tam diſſertis.
Qui Muſas colimus ſeveriores.
Martial. Epig. xii, lib. ix.

(11) Haud quaquam ſpernendus author. Livius, lib. xxx, in fin.

(12) Caſauboni Præfat. in Polyb.

[C] They ſeem not to have entered into the Senſe of Iſocrates, who ſay, that he made a Panegyric on Buſiris.] Almoſt all thoſe who give the Liſt of Writers, who have let looſe their Pens in praiſing Evil; as for Example, Fever, Gout, Folly, Nero (13), place Iſocrates in the firſt Rank, as the Panegyrift of Buſiris. If they had read the Speech, which they have taken for a Panegyric on that Tyrant, with any kind of Attention, I am certain they would have made theſe two Reflexions: Firſt, That Iſocrates's chief Aim is to criticize an Orator (14), who had compoſed an Elogy on Buſiris, and the Accuſation of Socrates. He criticizes that Elogy on this Account, That the Author had owned the Evil that was ſaid of Buſiris, and had not made the moſt of the Good which might have been ſaid of him. Theſe are the groſſeſt Defects of a Panegyriſt. On this Head Iſocrates aſſumes the Air of a Maſter, and ſhews that Orator what might be ſaid to the Honour of Buſiris. The ſecond Reflexion is, that Iſocrates, in pointing out, to this bad Panegyriſt, the common Places which he ought to have choſen, and the manner how he ought to have treated them, to make an Elogy on Buſiris, ſets forth none but very good and very laudable Actions, which he pretends ought to have been attributed to him. He does not allow of the Cruelty that is attributed to that Prince towards Strangers, neither does he invent Reaſons to juſtify ſo barbarous a Conduct; on the contrary, he blames the Panegyriſt, who had owned that Cruelty in his Hero, and had alſo amplified it; and for his own Part, he ſhews him the way to refute it (15). Τοῦτον δ' ὡς ἦν καχῶσθαι τοῖς λόγοις, ὅτε ὑπὲρ μὲν Βυσίριδος ἀπολογήσασθαι φάσκων, οὐχ ὅπως τῆς ὑπαρχούσης αὐτῷ διαβολῆς ἀπήλλαξας, ἀλλὰ καὶ τηλικαύτην αὐτῷ τὸ μέγεθος παρωμολόγηκας, ἢ οὐκ ἔστ' ὅπως ἄν τις δεινότερον ἐξευρεῖν δύναιτο. Τῶν γὰρ ἄλλων τῶν ἐπιχειρησάντων ἐκεῖνον λοιδορεῖν, τοσοῦτο μόνον περὶ αὐτῷ ἐλασφημήκασιν, ὡς ἕθυε τῶν ξένων τοὺς ἀφικνουμένους· σὺ δὲ καὶ παρεσκεύασας αὐτὸν τοὺς ἀνθρώπους ἡτιάσθαι. 'Tantum 'abeſt ut eam in dicendo rationem tu ſecutus ſis, 'ut Buſiridis defenſionem profeſſus, non modò crimina, quæ illi objiciuntur, non refutaveris, ſed & 'tam inſignem ei notam immanitatis inuſſeris, ut 'nihil contumelioſius excogitari queat. Nam cum 'alii quibus illi maledicere viſum eſt, unam in eo 'mactationem hoſpitum execrentur: tu etiam de-'vorare homines ſolitum, ea criminatus (16). —— 'You have been ſo far from following this Method, 'that, when you undertake to defend Buſiris, you not 'only do not refute the Crimes which are charged on 'him, but have branded him with ſuch cruelty, that 'nothing more infamous can be imagined. For where-'as others, who have thought fit to ſpeak ill of him, 'deteſt in him the bare killing of Strangers: you have 'accuſed him of being accuſtomed to eat Men too.' So that it is evident he ought not to be placed among thoſe, who wrote Panegyrics on wicked Things; ſince, beſides that his Oration is rather a Criticiſm on the Elogy that was made on Buſiris, than an Elogy on Buſiris; he does not undertake the Defence of the Crimes which are imputed to that Tyrant; He ſuppoſes, that one might ſet forth divers fine Actions of that Prince, though he confeſſes he has no good Author to warrant them: but he ſays, that the Orator, whom he criticizes, cannot quarrel with him on that Head, ſince he advances much more incredible Things without any Proof. He does not deny but the Objection would be good in the Mouth of another. Is not this declaring, that he had very little Regard for the Honour of Buſiris, and that he meant nothing more than to cenſure an impertinent Panegyriſt? Ἐγὼ δὲ εἰ μὲν ἄλλός τίς μοι τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον ἐπῄνεσεν, ἠγούμην ἂν αὐτὸν πεπαιδευμένως ἐπιλιμᾶν· ἐπεὶ δ' ἡ περσήκει ταύτην ποιεῖσθαι τὴν ὑπόληψιν. Ego vero, ſi quis alius hoc mihi opponeret, erudite me ab eo reprehendi putarem. Sed tibi ſic argumentari neſas eſt (17). —— If any body elſe ſhould object this to me, I ſhould think he blamed me judicioufly. But you cannot be allowed to argue thus. Therefore to me it ſeems that Servius was not exact, when he ſaid that inlaudatus in Virgil ought to be taken for illaudabilis (18). His Reaſon is, that, ſince Iſocrates praiſed that Prince, it could not be ſaid that Buſiris was a Man who had never been praiſed. Servius would have done better if he had cited the Orator criticized by Iſocrates (19); for that Orator praiſed Buſiris, conſidered in the ſame Light in which Virgil conſiders him.

(13) Infames materias, ſive quis mavult dicere inopinabiles quas Græci ἀδόξους ὑποθέσεις appellant. . . . Infamous, or if you pleaſe, unthought of Subjects, which the Greeks call ἀδόξους ὑποθέσεις. Aul. Gellius, lib. xvii, cap. xii.

(14) He was called Polycrates, and taught Oratory in Cyprus.

(15) See above, Citation (a).

(16) Iſocrat. in Buſir. circa init.

(17) Iſocrat. in Buſir. p. 533.

(18) Servius in Georg. lib. iii, ver. 5.

(19) Quintilian, lib. ii, cap. xvii, does not cite Iſocrates, but this Orator.

[D] It is not certain that there ever was a Buſiris King of Egypt.] Strabo cites Eratoſthenes, who affirms, that there had been no King, nor Tyrant, whoſe Name was Buſiris; but that the Story, which was told of him, was founded on the Cruelty which the Inhabitants of the City and Province of Buſiris exerciſed on Strangers. Οὐδὲ βασιλέως μὲ Δία, οὐδὲ τυράννου γενομένου τινὸς τῷ Βυσιρίδος. Cum medius fidius nullus neque rex fuerit Buſiris nec tyrannus (20). —— When indeed there was no King nor Tyrant named Buſiris.

(20) Strab. lib. xvii, pag. 552.

[E] —— but there was a City of that Name.] Divers Authors mention it. It was built about the middle of Egypt, in the Delta: There was a very fine Temple of Iſis, and the Tomb of Oſiris, to be ſeen there. Some ſaid, that Iſis, having cauſed the Body of Oſiris (21) to be put into an Ox of Wood, had built that Tomb for him. This might have

(21) It muſt be read in Stephanus Byzantinus, Βάλλαι τὸν Ὄσιριν and not Βύσιριν. This is Bochart's Correction. See Berkelius in Stephan. de urbibus.

(g) Melanchth. in Chron. lib. ii.

Pharaoh, who caused the Children of the Israelites to be destroyed (g). Orosius places him Seven hundred and Seventy five Years before the Foundation of Rome [F].

have been the Etymology of that City's Name. Others pretend, that it was so called because Osiris gave the Government of it to Busiris (22). We have said in the Body of the Article (23), that, according to Diodorus Siculus, there was a Busiris, whom Osiris left Governour of Phœnicia, and the maritime Cities, at his setting out on a great Expedition. Isocrates relates, that Busiris, leaving Lybia where he was born, and where his Mother reigned, went into Egypt, and founded a Kingdom there (24). Without doubt, it was in the Country that bore his Name; for there was not only a City in Egypt called Busiris, but also a Government, or a Nomos, of that Name (25). That City was entirely razed in the Reign of Diocletian on account of Rebellion (26).

(22) Stephanus de urbibus Voce Βυσιρις: he does hardly any more than copy Herodotus, lib. ii, cap. 59.

(23) Citat. (b).

(24) In Busiridis laudatione, pag. 328.

(25) Strabo, lib. xvii. pag. 552.

(26) Eusebius in Chron.

[F] Orosius places him 775 Years before the Foundation of Rome.] Eusebius makes him live in Joshua's Time, about 700 Years before Romulus built Rome. These are the Words of Orosius. 'Busiridis in Ægypto cruentissimi tyranni crudelis hospitalitas & crudelior religio tunc fuit, qui innocentum hospitum sanguinem diis scelerum suorum participibus propinabat (27). —— The cruel Hospitality, and more cruel Religion of Busiris, a most bloody Tyrant in Egypt, was at that time, who offered the Blood of innocent Strangers to the Gods, Partakers of his Crimes.' St Augustin spoke almost in the same Strain (28).

(27) Oros. lib. I, cap. xii.

(28) August. de Civit. Dei, lib. xviii, cap. xii.

BUSLEIDEN (JEROM), in Latin Buslidius, illustrious by his Embassies, and by the Love he shewed for Learning, in founding the College of three Languages in the University of Louvain [A]. I shall add very little to what has been said of him in Moreri's Dictionary. I do not believe that he was the Maker of his own Fortune [B], as is affirmed in that Dictionary. He was much regretted by Erasmus (a). Some Verses, Speeches, and Epistles of his, were found at Bruges, a long time after his Death (b). I do not know that the Public has seen any thing of his, except a Letter that was printed with the Utopia of Sir Thomas More. It is a great Mistake to say that Cardinal Ximenes founded Colleges by his Example [C].

(a) See the Greek and Latin Verses which he made in his Praise Epist. vi, lib. iii.

(b) Val. Andreas Bibl. Belg. pag. 387.

[A] He founded a College of three Languages in the University of Louvain.] By his Will, made at Mechlin, the Twenty second of June 1517, a few Months before his Death, he left an Endowment for the Maintenance of three Professors, one in Latin, one in Greek, and one in Hebrew (1).

(1) Miræus, de Script. sec. xvi. pag. 10.

[B] I do not believe that he was the Maker of his own Fortune] He had a Brother named FRANCIS, who was Preceptor to Prince Philip, the Father of the Emperor Charles V. That Preceptor always preserved a great Power over the Mind of his Disciple, and was made Archbishop of Besançon. Having seconded the Sollicitations of the Embassadors of Ferdinand and Isabella, he overcame Philip's Reluctance for the Voyage to Spain (2). He was given him for his Counsellor (3), and died in the Year 1500. He was much lamented by that Prince, whose Affection he had gained by his Integrity and Prudence. This is what I borrowed from the Life of Cardinal Ximenes, composed by the Eloquent Mr Flechier, Bishop of Nismes. There is all the Probability in the World to believe, that the Archbishop of Besançon, with the Credit he had in the Netherlands, made his Brother Jerom's Fortune. They had a Brother, named GILES, who had a Place in the King of Spain's Treasury (4). He was Executor of Jerom's Will, as to what related to the College of the three Languages. Erasmus exhorts him in a Letter not to suffer himself to be diverted from so laudable an Undertaking (5). In another Letter (6) he recommends a converted Jew to him, as a very fit Person to teach the Hebrew Tongue in that new College. He was a Spanish Physician, whose name was Matthew Adrian; he was admitted to the Professorship, for which Erasmus judged him fit, and for which he caused him to come from Germany. That Professor read his first Lecture the first of December 1518 (7).

(2) Flechier, Vie du Card. Ximenes liv. i, pag. 172, Edit. Holl.

(3) Id. ibid. pag. 192.

(4) Thus I translate the Words Catholici Regis à rationibus, used by Erasmus, Epist. vi, Book iii.

(5) Erasmus, ibid.

(6) The xiith of Book iii.

(7) Miræus de Scriptor. seculi xvii, pag. 10, 29.

[C] It is a great Mistake to say, that by his Example Cardinal Ximenes founded Colleges.] There was not three Months between the Death of Busleiden, and that of the Cardinal, and he had compleated his University of Alcala, some Years before his Death. Albertus Miræus committed the Error of which I speak. 'Ea certe laus, says he, Busslidio nostro debetur quod primus in orbe Christiano collegium trilingue instituit: Cujus deinde exemplum secuti sunt alii; in his Franciscus I, Rex, Lutetiæ in Gallia, & Franciscus Ximenius —— Compluti in Hispania (8). —— This Honour is certainly due to our Busleiden, that he was the first that founded a College of three Languages in Christendom: whose example others afterwards followed; among the rest King Francis I, at Paris in France, and Francis Ximenes —— at Alcala in Spain.'

(8) Ibid. pag. 101

BUSTAMANTINUS (JOHN), Professor of Philosophy and Physic in the University of Alcala, the Place of his Birth, writ a Book that is admirable, if we judge of it by the Title [A]. It was printed at Alcala, in the Year 1595, in two Volumes in Quarto; and at Lyons, in the Year 1602, in two Volumes in Octavo.

[A] He wrote an admirable Book, if we judge of it by the Title.] This is it: 'Joannis Bustamantini Camærensis (1), apud Complutenses Philosophiæ & Medicinæ primariæ Moderatoris publici, de reptilibus vere animantibus S. Scripturæ libri sex. Opus eximiæ eruditionis & utilitatis, cum Theologis tam Scholasticis, quam concionatoribus sacris, scripturæque interpretibus, tum Medicis, Philosophis, & iis qui de bella literarum supellectile bene sentiunt (2). —— Six Books of Johannes Bustamentinus Camærensis, Chief President of Philosophy and Physic at Alcala, on the Reptiles which are real Animals in the Holy Scripture. A Work of extraordinary Learning and Use, both to Divines, as well Scholastics as public Preachers, and Interpreters of Scripture, and to Physicians, Philosophers, and all the Well-wishers to good Literature.' Mr Bochart quotes this Book, sometimes, in his Hierozoicon, which is on the same Subject.

(1) Nicolas Antonio Bibl. Hisp. Tom. I, p. 905, calls him Joannes de Bustamante de la Camera, and says he was a Native of Alcala.

(2) This, from Opus, is in the Title of the second Volume.

BUTAS, a Greek Poet, Author of the Work in elegiac Verſe, wherein he gave the Reaſons of the Pagan Ceremonies. Plutarch cites him in the Life of Romulus [A]. In my Opinion, they, who doubt whether Arnobius quotes him, are in the wrong [B].

[A] Plutarch cites him in the Life of Romulus (1).] It is in the Place where he ſpeaks of the Lupercalia. Βύτας δέ τις αἰτίας μυθώδεις ἐν ἐλεγείοις περὶ τῶν μαιχῶν ἀναγράφων, φησὶ. Cauſas fabuloſas Butas quidam in Elegiis rerum Romanarum prodit (2). — One Butas has given an Explanation of the religious Fables, in his Elegiac Verſes on the Roman Affairs. He was perhaps but a poor Author, yet he might be very uſeful if we had him at preſent: Our Critics would find Gold in that Dunghil, I mean the Explication of divers things, which are not well underſtood concerning the Religion of the Pagans.

(1) Pag. 31, C.

(2) Plut. in Romulo, pag. 31.

[B] They who doubt whether Arnobius quotes him are in the wrong.] After he has ſaid that Fauna, or the good Goddeſs, having drunk a full Barrel of Wine unknown to her Husband, was whipt with Rods of Myrtle, he adds, for which reaſon Myrtle is forbid when the Woman celebrate the Feaſt of the good Goddeſs, and he cites Butas: 'Nec myr-'teas fas ſit inferre verbenas, ſicut ſuis ſcribit in Cau-'ſalibus Butas (3). —— Nor is it lawful to adorn the 'Altar with Myrtle, as Butas writes in his Cauſa-'lis.' They, who were ignorant that there ever had been ſuch an Author in the World, corrected that word ſo often till at laſt they made Plutarch of it. Firſt they put Putas inſtead of Butas, and and then Plutar inſtead of Putas, and laſt of all, they ſaid that Plutar was the Abbreviation of Plutarch (4). That Conjecture ſeemed the happier to them, as it is certain, that Plutarch (5) had ſaid what Arnobius alleges. However, let us be aſſured that Arnobius cited Butas; for nothing hinders but that what is read in Plutarch, concerning the Interdiction of the Myrtle, may be found yet more clearly in the Work of this ſame Butas, who was quoted by Plutarch.

(3) Arnobius adverſus gentes, libr. v, pag. 168. Voſſius de Hiſt. Græc. pag. 337. cited in Sexto.

(4) Heraldus, in his Notes on this place of Arnobius, adopts all this.

(5) In the Queſtions on the Roman Affairs. He calls that Book αἰτίας ῥωμαϊκὰς, in Romulo & Camillo apud Voſſium de Hiſtor. Græc. pag. 337.

BUTEO (JOHN), a famous Mathematician of the XVIth Century, was born at Charpei, near Valencia, in Dauphiné (a). He was a Friar of the Order of St Anthony, and yet ſtudied the Mathematics with the utmoſt Application. He invented divers Inſtruments and Machines, and compoſed ſeveral Books [A]. He publiſhed one among the reſt, on the Dimenſions of Noah's Ark, wherein he ſhewed, that it might eaſily contain all the Animals that were ſhut up in it, and the neceſſary Proviſions for their Subſiſtance, during the Flood. He diſputed againſt his Maſter Oroncius Finæus, about the ſquaring of the Circle (b). The Civil-War, on the account of Religion, which laid the Kingdom waſte, eſpecially Dauphiné, in the firſt Year of the Reign of Charles IX, took him from his Books; for he was forced to quit his Reſidence, and go to Romans, where he died of Melancholy in 1564, aged Seventy five Years. Thuanus gives this Account (c); but another Hiſtorian, more credible in this Point than he, affirms, that Buteo died in the Year 1560, in the Abbey of St Anthony [B]; and ſo thoſe of the Proteſtant Religion are abſolved of the Crime of having cauſed the Death of that learned Perſon. Beſides the Mathematics, he underſtood Greek and the Law very well. He wrote ſome good Books of Civil-Law. See Mr Moreri at the Word BOTEON [C].

(a) Allard. Bibliotheque de Dauphiné, pag. 41.

(b) Thuanus, lib. xxxvi, pag. 727.

(c) Ibid.

[A] He compoſed ſeveral Books (1).] Here are the Titles of ſome of them: De libra & ſtatera. Cujus formæ & capacitatis fuerit arca Noë. De ſublicio ponte Cæſaris. Explanatio ad Quintiliani locum Geometricum. Emendatio figurationis organi à Columella deſcripti. De fluviatilis inſulis, ſecundum jus civile dividendis. De quadraturis circulorum tam antiquis quam novis. De fluentis aquæ menſura. Ad problema cubi duplicandi. Geometriæ cognitio Juriconſulto neceſſaria. Ad legem Juliani Si ita ſcriptum. Ad legem Africani Qui quadraginta. Ad locum Vitruvii de proportione lapidum corruptum reſtitutio. You will find ſome other Titles in Mr Teiſſier (2). The Sieur Allard ſays, that Buteo tranſlated the Menologe, and the Horloge of the Greeks (3).

(1) Thuanus, lib. xxxvi, pag. 727.

(2) Additions aux éloges tirez de Mr de Thou, Tom. I, p. 266.

(3) Biblioc. de Dauphiné, p. 42.

[B] Another Hiſtorian, more to be credited in this Point than Thuanus, affirms, that Buteo died —— in the Abbey of St Anthony.] This Hiſtorian is Mr Chorier (4). The Preference which I give him is founded on this, that his Work is confined to the Province of Dauphiné. Conſequently it is to be preſumed that he drew his Accounts from more exact Memoirs than Thuanus, in what relates to the illuſtrious Men of that Province; for Thuanus collected Memoirs, indifferently, concerning illuſtrious Men of all Countries, and he treated that Part as a ſmall Acceſſory. His principal Deſign was to give the Hiſtory of France, and even that of all Europe.

(4) Abrégé de L'Hiſtoire de Dauphiné, cited by Teiſſier, Elog. Tom. II, p. 403.

[C] See Mr Moreri, at the Word Boteon.] This is the French Name, which he makes to anſwer to the Latin Name Buteo, by which our Mathematician was known. He notes, that the Tranſlator of Thuanus's Hiſtory turns Buteo wrong into Bourel (a). The Editions of Holland have changed Bourel into Boutel. Indeed Boutel agrees better with Buteo than Bourel: ſo that it is probable that du Rier ſaid Boutel, and not Bourel. Yet I find Bourel in his Tranſlation (5), and Mr Teiſſier repeats the ſame Word in his Additions. Beſides, I find in the Bibliotheque of Dauphiné (6), compoſed by a Man of that Country (7), that Buteo is Borel or Boteon in French.

(5) Apud Teiſſier, Elog. Tom. I, pag. 264.

(6) Pag. 42.

(7) Guy Allard Conſeiller du Roi, Preſident en l'Election de Grenoble.

[(a) John Buteo is called Bourel, in the Index Thuani. REM. CRIT.]

BZOVIUS (a) (ABRAHAM), was one of the moſt famous Writers of the XVIIth Century, by the aſtoniſhing Fecundity of his Pen. Some maintain, that it is no Hyperbole to ſay, that he compoſed more Books than others have read. Two Pages would hardly contain the Titles only of his Writings (b). The chief of his Books is the Continuation of Baronius. He began at the Year 1198, where that Cardinal had ended, and compoſed twelve Volumes of Annals of the Church, which are not all printed as yet. They were not much valued at firſt [A]. He was (a) Thus they latinize his Polish Name Bzowius.

(b) Qui (tituli) ſi referendi ſint vix binæ eos paginæ caperent. Janus Nicius Erythræus Pinacoth I, pag. 198.

[A] He compoſed twelve Volumes of Annals —— which are not all printed as yet. They were not much valued at firſt.] There are nine printed: the firſt was printed at Cologne, in the Year 1616; the ſeven following were printed at the ſame place one after another; the eighth in the Year 1641; the ninth was printed at Rome in the Year 1672; the eighth begins with the Year 1534, and ends with the Death of Pius IV, in 1565; the ninth comprehends the Pontificate of Pius V. The Au-was a Pole by Birth, and a Dominican. When he went to Rome, he was received there with open Arms by the Pope, and lodged in the Vatican. He deserved that Reception; for he imitated Baronius wonderfully, in his manner of turning all things to favour the plenary Power, and raise the Glory of the Papal See. His inconsiderate and violent Zeal drove him into Proceedings, whereof he had reason to repent. He had very much abused the Emperor, Lewis of Bavaria, and razed him ignominiously out of the Catalogue of Emperors. The Duke of Bavaria was so incensed at this Audaciousness, that, not satisfied with causing an Apology to be wrote for that Emperor, he brought an Action in Form against the Annalist, and got him condemned to make a public Retractation [B]. Bzovius did not get off for this Disgrace; he was treated like a Dog in the Apology of Lewis of Bavaria, published by George Herwart [C], and which made great Breaches in the Reputation of the Dominican. It is pretended, that Simon Starovolscius repaired them the best he could [D]. Bzovius would have continued till his Death in the Vatican, if the Murder of one of his menial Servants had not struck him with a Terror, which obliged him to retire into the Convent of Minerva (c). The Murderer was capable of undertaking any thing, after the Life he had led [E]. Bzovius died in that thor whom I quote observes, that the ill Success of those, who undertook the same thing, gave this Man's Labours some Reputation, which but for that had been a bad Commodity for the Booksellers. These are his Words: 'Præsertim cum non parum multi ab excessu Baronii assiduo opere eandem incudem dies noctesque tutuderint, neque adhuc quidquam in hoc genere quod magnopere probares attulerint. Quamobrem Bzovii Annales quorum precia in æstimatione hominum diu jacuerunt, cum nondum quidquam quod sit vendibilius appareat, cœperunt caput attollere, seque altius efferre. Itaque merci quæ prope invendibilis videbatur jam pretium accessit (1). —— Especially as several, even since the Death of Baronius, have laboured Day and Night at the same Work, and have not yet produced any thing very commendable. Therefore Bzovius's Annals, which had long lain neglected, and in no Esteem, when nothing yet appeared, that was more saleable, began to rise. And so that, which was before looked upon almost as unsaleable, began to bear a Price.'

(c) It is of the Order of the Dominicans.

(1) Nicius Erythræus Pinacoth. I, pag. 198.

(2) Erythræus had just said, pag. 197, that Jerome Vecchiettus had spoken ill of Lewis of Bavaria. Scripserat etiam in eo (libro de Ludovico Imperatore nonnulla quæ Duces Bavariæ animum offenderant. Legi ego datam ad Hieronymum à Ludovico Cardinali Ludovisio, cum quo forsasse Dux ille quæstus fuerat, quique tum rerum potiebatur, epistolam, in qua ejus vicem dolet qui ea ætate quæ esset oci in primis cupidus tantam in se negotii molem attraxisset. - - - - For he had wrote some things in that Book concerning the Emperor Lewis, that offended the Duke of Bavaria. I have read a Letter to Jerom, from Cardinal Lewis Ludovisius, to whom probably the Duke had made Complaint, and who was then in Power, in which he pities his Case, that at such an Age, when Quiet is most desireable, he had involved himself in so troublesome an Affair.

[B] Lewis of Bavaria —— got him condemned to make a public Retractation.] The Words of Nicius Erythræus are these: 'Verum ille in Ludovico Imperatore ad eumdem scopulum navem offendit ad quem suam Vecchiettus afflixerat (2). Etenim censoria quadam authoritate, quam sibi ipse attribuerat, est conatus eumdem (tanquam nec jure nec legibus creatum) Imperatorum quasi Senatu movere; sed postulante Bavariæ Duce, ac tantam domui suæ injuriam factam querente, in judicium vocatus judicum sententiis est coactus abolere quod scripserat, ac Ludovicum in ea, unde dejecerat, sede reponere (3). —— But with respect to the Emperor Lewis, he split on the same Rock on which Vecchiettus had done. For with a kind of Censorial Authority, which he assumed to himself, he endeavoured to exclude him as it were from the Rank of Emperors (as created neither by Law nor Right); but at the Instances of the Duke of Bavaria, who complained of so great an Injury done to his House, he was brought to a Trial, and condemned to retract what he had written, and restore Lewis to the Place from whence he had degraded him.' Odoric Raynaldus did not grow wise by this Example; for in his Annals of the Church, 'he, as well as Bzovius, affects to call that Prince by no other Name than the Bavarian, and reckons the Thirty three Years of his Reign, an Interregnum in the Empire, as if there had been no Emperor in all that time (4).' Bzovius's Retractation was printed at Ingolstadt, in 8vo, in the Year 1628.

(3) Nicius Erythræus, pag 199.

(4) Maimbourg, Decad. de l'Emp. lib. vi, pag. 620.

[C] He was treated like a Dog in the Apology - - - - published by George Herwart.] It was entituled, Ludovicus IV Imperator defensus contra Bzovii calumnias in Annalibus suis, and printed at Munich, in 1618, in 4to. He pretends that Bzovius had not acted in his Annals like a Man of Honesty, or Wit, or Judgment, or Memory, or any other good Quality of a Writer. If he had discharged all his Anger on the Person of the Annalist, it may be he might have covered his Apology from the Thunders of the Inquisition, but he extended his Censure to other things, and therefore his Work incurred the Indignation of that Tribunal. 'Invectus est in eum, it is Nicius Erythreus speaks again, acriter vehementerque Georgius Hervartus qui Ludovici defensionem arripuerat, adeo ut quantum in ipso fuerit omnem ab eo ingenii, memoriæ, solertiæ, acuminis, diligentiæ, fidei & integritatis commendationem averterit: qui Hervarti liber Ludovici defensi titulo inscriptus superiorum decreto vetitus, statim depulsus est ab hominum manibus propterea quod ille cum Ludovici defensione conjunxerat multorum præterea dedecus.'

[D] Starovolscius repaired them the best he could.] That is to say, he gave Bzovius all the Praises due to an excellent Writer. But this was not answering the Proofs of his Adversary. However it be, let us hear what Nicius Erythræus says. 'Quod Hervartus Bzovio ingenii, judicii, memoriæ, eruditionis, eloquentiæque patrimonium est conatus eripere, id illi Simon Starvolsius (5) in scriptorum Polonicorum Hecatontade tanq am tutor fidelis ac fortis summa ope studuit conservare, ac præter alias laudes quibus eum exornat, virum vocat ad laudem, ad gloriam, ad immortalitatem nominis, ad sæculi sui miraculum, ad posteritatis utilitatem divinitus datum atque concessum. - - - - That Stock of Wit, Judgment, Memory, Learning, and Eloquence, which Herwart endeavoured to take from Bzovius, Simon Starovolsius, in his Century of Polish Writers, has, like a faithful and brave Guardian, endeavoured to preserve to him, and besides other Encomiums which he bestows on him, he calls him a Man granted and sent by Heaven, for Praise, Honour, and an immortal Name, for the Miracle of his Age, and the Benefit of Posterity.' A meer Rhetorical Declamation!

(5) It should have been Staroveſcius.

[E] He retired to the Convent of Minerva for fear of an Assassin, capable of undertaking any thing, after the Life he had led.] Take his Character in few Words. His first Profession was that of a Benedictine Monk: He forsook his Order, and turned Protestant. He followed Marc Anthony de Dominis into England; he returned again with him into Italy; he entered with him again into the Profession of the Catholic Religion, and was his Steward at Rome. He fell in Love with a Woman in the Neighbourhood, and enjoyed her a pretty while, without her Husband's perceiving it; but at last the good Man discovered the Matter; for, coming home unexpected, he found, in his Bed, the Marks still fresh of the Place that another had lain in: 'Captus amore vicinæ mulieris honesto viro nuptæ, multos menses continuos ejus usuram corporis cæperat priusquam id viro suboleret, sed cum palam facta res esset, quod ex improviso domum rediens in lecto recens impressa adulteri vestigia deprehendisset (6).' The Gallant foresaw that for the future it would be impossible for him to continue his Commerce; wherefore he resolved to make away with the Husband, and, having taken his Measures with the Wife, he kil ed him one Morning in the Streets. This happened during the Sede vacante, which followed upon the Death of Gregory XV. A thousand Disorders are committed in Rome, from the time of the Death of one Pope, to the Election of his

(6) Nic Erythr. Pinacoth. I, pag. 200.

(d) Taken from Janus Nicius Erythræus, Pinacoth I, pag. 198. & seq.

that Convent a few Years after he came into it (d). It was in the Year 1637. He had brought himself into much Trouble with the Franciscans [F]; not only for the Reason that Mr Moreri mentions (e), but also on other Accounts. The Jesuits are no better satisfied with his Annals than the Franciscans [G]. Besides what his Successor, and most of the Crimes that are committed in that time go unpunished. The Wife was present at the Murder, and unconcerned at it: No search was made after the Murderer. So that he had Leisure to marry his Mistress to the Valet de Chambre of Marc Anthony de Dominis, and to share the Enjoyment of her peaceably with the new Husband; for he was a Man who freely connived at the Adultery, as long as his Wife could get by it wherewith to keep House; the Charge of it was considerable, and the Adulterer, not having any longer wherewith to supply them, took to robbing and murdering. 'Cum 'domestici omnes sumptus in ipsum incumberent, 'nec esset unde faceret, ad rapinas cædesque con-'fugerat (7).' He understood that Bzovius's Coffers were well furnished with Money, which put him upon the Design of robbing him: knowing therefore one Day that this good Monk was not at home, he broke open his Chamber, after he had killed the Servant, and carried away all that he found to his Whore. This was soon spent; and as there came no fresh Supply, the Husband grew weary of his voluntary Cuckoldom, conceived an Aversion to his Partner, and informed against him. The Consequence was, that this wicked Murderer was hanged. I do not wonder that the Annalist, frighted at the Murder of his Servant, and sorry for the Loss of his Money, should have a Mind to seek a securer Retreat in the Convent of Minerva.

(e) That is, for his striking disadvantage of the fabulous Doctor Jo. annes de Iut.

(7) Ibid.

[F] He brought himself into much Trouble with the Franciscans.] Every one knows the Jealousy, that has reigned so long, and which is not yet extinguished, between the Order of St Francis, and that of St Dominic: There are continual Signs of it throughout the Annals of Bzovius, in his affecting to revile the Franciscans whenever Occasion offers. He had blackened the Memory of their great Hero, the subtile Scotus; they could not remain silent, but caused an Apology to be printed; to which one of Bzovius's Brother Friars replied (8). Besides that particular Apology for Scotus, the Franciscans published a general one at Lyons, in the Year 1627; the Name of the Author of that Piece was Dermicius Thadæus. His Book is intituled, Nitela Franciscanæ Religionis, & abstersio sordium quibus eam conspurcare tentavit Abr. Bzovius. We shall see that Wading, the Annalist, of the Order of St Francis, was a perpetual Antagonist of Bzovius, as to all Points relating to the Franciscans: We shall see it, I say, in these Words of Father Maimbourg: 'I know, says he (9), that Bzovius, the 'Dominican, an implacable Enemy of the Manes 'of that great Doctor, has wounded his Memory 'in a strange manner, calling him Arch Heretic, 'Corrupter of Philosophy and Divinity, and accusing him of having been the Author of all the Evil 'that Lewis of Bavaria did to the Church and 'the Pope; but I know also very well, that 'Wading, a very learned Franciscan, who refutes 'him very solidly, in all that he says without 'Foundation, against the Franciscans, whom he 'never spares on occasion, made Okam's Apology 'against him, in his Annals of the Friars Minors.'

(8) Nicolaus Jansenius, cujus animadversiones & scholia in apologiam nuper editam contra Bzovium de vita & morte Joh. Duns Scoti, extant in calce Tom. XV. Annal. Bzovii.

(9) Decadence de l'Empire, liv. vi, pag. 606. Edit. Holl.

(10) That is to say, of Okam.

[G] The Jesuits are little better satisfied with his Annals than the Franciscans.] An Apologist of the Jacobins observes, that some Persons are of Opinion, that a small marginal Note of Bzovius was the Cause of the Indignation of the Jesuits. In his third Volume he inserted the Prophecy of St Hildegarde, and noted in the Margin, that it might be applied to the present Times. It is said, that this was the Original of the Hatred that the Jesuits had for him, and of the Contempt they expressed of his Annals. 'Hostili animo in Bzovium 'feruntur ferè omnes Societatis scriptores: causam 'haud scivi; prætextam autem suggessit mihi ver 'eruditus; quod scilicet Bzovius in suis Annalibus 'tomo 15, ad annum 1415, parag. 39. inseruerit 'Prophetiam quandam Sanctæ Hildegardis; & ad 'marginem Bzovius apposuerit hæc verba, Prophe-

'tia quædam S. Hildegardis, quæ ad hæc tempora 'referri potest; quasi Bzovius eam Prophetiam So-'cietati addixerit. Hanc dicunt irarum & odii in 'Bzovium originem fuisse: cum tamen Bzovius So-'cietatis non meminerit, sed tantum Prophetiam 'ad hæc tempora retulerit (11). ---- Almost all 'the Writers of the Society fall foul on Bzo-'vius; I do not know the Reason; but a learned 'Man suggested to me their Pretence, that Bzovius, in 'the fifteenth Volume of his Annals, under the Year '1415. Parag. 39. inserted a certain Prophecy of St Hildegarde, and put in the Margin these Words: A 'certain Prophecy of St Hildegarde, which may be re-'ferred to the present time; as if Bzovius had applied 'it to the Society. This they say was the Original of 'their Rage and Hatred of Bzovius; notwithstanding 'that Bzovius never mentioned the Society, but only re-'ferred the Prophecy to the present time.' Lewis Carthier, one of them, calls that Continuation of Baronius, straminеum additamentum (12), an Addition of Straw. Another Jesuit affirms, that they are rather the Annals of the Dominicans, than the Annals of the Church; that Bzovius, a Man of little Judgment, is only a Foil to Baronius; that he only relates at large what concerns his own Order, except in Matters to their Disadvantage, which could not be refuted; that he turns off from those Places as dumb as a Fish, but shews an extraordinary Diligence, when Occasion offers to censure and ridicule the Franciscans; 'Perexigui judicii scriptor, nec tam auctor 'quam consarcinator; emisit multa volumina conti-'nuationis Ecclesiasticæ historiæ post Baronium, cui 'succedaneam in eo argumento operam navavit; ut 'objecta contrarii, magis eluceseret Baronii accura-'tio, juxta Philonis observationem in suis rer. 'divinar. hæres. Tomi Bzoviani sunt potius Annales 'Dominicanorum, quam Annales Ecclesiastici: Est 'enim totus in rebus domesticis efferendis, ac dila-'tandis; nisi cum aliquid ordini probrosum, quod 'convellere non posset, malis avibus in historiæ 'seriem incidit. Tunc enim supra pilcem tacitus 'abit. At cum agitur de mordendis & risui omni-'um exponendis Fratribus Minoribus, probat exqui-'sitè diligentiam. Arripit omnia, sive apertè falsa, 'ut quod de rabie Scoti morientis exaravit; sive è 'solis rumoribus inanibus hausta, ut cum F. Berth-'odum infamat ob inventas bombardas, & aliis sex-'centis locis consimilibus (13). —— A Writer of 'very little Judgment, and rather a botching Com-'piler than an Author; he published a great many Vo-'lumes of the Continuation of the History of the 'Church after Baronius, designed as a Supplement to 'his Work; that the Accuracy of Baronius might 'shine the more, by being compared with the con-'trary, according to the Observation of Philo, in 'his Book quis rer. divinar hæres. Bzovius's Vo-'lumes are rather Annals of the Dominicans, than 'Annals of the Church: For he is wholly taken up 'in setting forth and enlarging upon their private 'Affairs, except when any thing to the Dishonour of 'the Order, which he cannot confute, falls unluckily in the Course of his History. For then he goes off 'as mute as a Fish. But when he has an Opportuni-'ty of lashing and ridiculing the Friars Minors, he 'shews the utmost Diligence. He lays hold of every 'thing whether manifestly false, as what he has 'writ about Scotus's Madness a little before his 'Death, or taken from meer empty Reports; as 'when he reproaches F. Berthodus for the Invention 'of Guns, and Five hundred such like Places.' The same Writer affirms, that Bzovius had inserted the History of the Council of Trent, composed by Father Paul, into one of his Volumes, and that it was not his Fault that That Volume was not printed with that poisoned Piece; but after he had got that Volume examined, and obtained leave of the Master of the sacred Palace to print it, a Fancy took him to desire a new Examiner of Urban VIII. That Pope shewed a little Difficulty at first; but at last committed the new revising of it to the Vicar-General of the Cistercians, who had no sooner

(11) Vincentius Baronius, Apologet. lib. iv, sect. 3, art. 2, p. 268.

(12) Ludovicus Carthesius in expostulationibus apud Vincent. Baronium. Ibid.

(13) Theophr. Raynaudus de Immunit. Cyriacorum diatr. 7, pag. 332. Apocopanda.

what he compoſed on the Popes in general, he wrote particularly the Life of Silveſter II, and that of Paul V. A Judgment may be made of this Author's Diſcernment, by the Fables he has vented about the Genealogy of this Silveſter [H]. Since run over ſome Pages, but he was ſtruck with the Stench of the mortal Poiſon of Fra-Paolo. The Pope was informed of it, and named other Commiſſioners to examine that Book. Theſe condemned the Manuſcript with one Conſent, and paſted all the Leaves of it together: 'Subiit Abrahamum cupido, novæ recognitionis quærendæ, quam aliquis nominatim à ſummo Pontifice delectus præſtaret. Interpellavit ea de re Urbanum VIII. initio moroſum ad concedendam novam recognitionem. D. Hilarion Rancatus Vicarius Generalis Ciſmontanus Ciſtercienſium, denique ad id delectus eſt à Pontifice. Is vix paucis foliis evolutis, putorem operis, & pro ſuavi odore, autoris exſcripti fœtorem illico odoratus, de morte in illa Pontificem admonuit, à quo alii inſuper recognitores ſunt adhibiti, de tanta obeſitate ad veritatem pronunciaturi. De omnium ſententia, factum eſt codici Bzoviano, Pauli Suavis peſtifera ſcriptione ſaginato, ita ut Paulus Suavis ſub nomine Bzovii edendus eſſet, ſi codex Bzovii prodiiſſet; factum inquam eo eſt, quod à S. Ephremo olim eſſe præſtitum circa librum hæreticum, retulit Gregorius Nyſſenus. Mutuo namque per ſanctum ſumpto impio volumine, omnia folia interpoſito glutine ſimul ſunt compacta; ita ut deinceps explicari ac evolvi paginas, ut ad legendum neceſſe fuiſſet, impoſſibile

(14) Id. ibid. diatr. 5. p. 294. Apopompæi. fuerit (14). —— Bzovius took a Fancy to deſire a new Examination, by ſomebody nominated by the Pope for that ſpecial Purpoſe. He applied for a new Reviſal to Urban VIII, who at firſt made ſome Difficulty; but at laſt thoſe Don Hilarion Rancato, Vicar-General of the Ciſtercians in Italy, for that Work. He, when he had juſt turned over a few Leaves, inſtead of a ſweet Savour, ſmelt the ill Scent of the Work, and of the Author whom he had copied, and informed the Pope of the Poiſon lurking there. The Pope appointed other Examiners to give a true Report of ſuch a groſs Piece of Work. They with one Conſent ſerved Bzovius's Book, which was ſo ſtuffed with the peſtiferous Work of Father Paul, that Father Paul was to have been publiſhed under the Name of Bzovius, if Bzovius's Book had come out; they ſerved it (I ſay) as Gregory of Nyſſa tells us St Ephrem ſerved a heretical Book. For the Saint, borrowing the impious Piece, ſtuck all the Leaves together with Glue, in ſuch a manner that it was impoſſible for them ever after to be opened and read.'

Father Baronius anſwered, as well as he could, for his Brother the Annaliſt, to the Cenſures of Theophilus Raynaud; and in ſome Reſpects it may be ſaid that his Apology is not bad; but here are two Points wherein it ſeems to me defective. The firſt relates to the Prophecy of St Hildegarde: The ſecond is concerning the incorporating Father Paul's Hiſtory. The Apologiſt anſwers, I. That Bzovius, without making any Mention of the Jeſuits, ſaid only that the Prophecy of St Hildegarde might
(15) Vinc. Baronius Apologet. Sect. 1, Art. II, Paragr. II, pag. 24, 106. be applied to theſe Times (15). II. That he cannot believe, that That Annaliſt would inſert the Works of Father Paul into his Annals: And theſe are the Reaſons he gives for not believing it: Bzovius was not ignorant that Marc Antony de Dominis, the Apoſtate Archbiſhop, had publiſhed that Work, whoſe Infamy could not be unknown to him. It was a condemned Work; it is not probable therefore that Bzovius would inſert it in his Annals. That Hiſtory offends the Church of Rome and the Popes ſo often, that Bzovius could not be ſo blind as not to ſee the Poiſon which flows every where from it. 'Tot ac tanta ſunt in ea hiſtoria contra 'ſummos Pontifices, contra Romanam Eccleſiam,
(16) Id. ibid. 'ut non potuerit Bzovius ita cæcutire quin venenum 'quod undequaque erumpit non annotaret (16). He concludes with ſaying, that, at worſt, the Precaution of the Annaliſt ought to be praiſed. He deſired a new Reviſal of his Writing, that the Evil, which might have ſlipped into it thro' his Neglect, ſhould not remain without Remedy. All this is very weak; for, in the firſt place, it is no excuſe in the leaſt, that the marginal Note names no Body; for the Malice of Bzovius does not appear a Jot the leſs; he knew well enough that the Enemies of the Jeſuits applied the Prediction of St Hildegarde to them. So that he explained himſelf ſufficiently: and he could not have ſpecified the Jeſuits without expoſing himſelf to vexatious Troubles, and to formal Proceſſes before the Pope's Tribunals. II. I ſay in the ſecond Place, that Theophilus Raynauld having advanced an Accuſation, accompanied with Circumſtances of Fact, it is almoſt in vain to oppoſe it by probable Reaſons. A Man might be ſatisfied, and take up with them, againſt Accuſers, who alledged only Proofs of the ſame kind; but when they alledge Witneſſes, and ſpecify Circumſtances of Time, and the Qualities of the Perſons, it is neceſſary to have Recourſe to ſome Proofs of Fact, and thereby deſtroy the Evidence, which they alledge. The Accuſer had maintained, that Urban VIII had commiſſioned Don Hilarion Rancato to reviſe Bzovius's Book; he had, in ſome manner, marked the very Dwelling of that Commiſſary. It lay then on the Jacobins to prove that That Monk had never had that Employ, or had never made the Report in queſtion to the Pope. There were many Perſons then alive in Italy, who had known Don Hilarion Rancato, who had ſpoke with him, who could ſhew ſome of his Papers, &c. It is a ſtrong Preſumption in Favour of Father Theophilus, that the Defender of Bzovius alledges none of their Teſtimony; for this ſhews that the Jacobins durſt not make any Enquiry, or publiſh what their Informations had cleared up to them. A negative Depoſition might be of ſome Uſe; as for Example, That a Friend of Don Hilarion depoſes, That having heard him relate divers curious Facts concerning the Examination of Books, their Approbation, Prohibition, or Permiſſion to print them, and this in Converſations of Intimacy, wherein certain Particulars relating to Bzovius were mixed, he remembered very well that he had never heard him ſpeak of the pretended Inſertion of Father Paul; I ſay, if a Friend of this Don Hilarion ſhould depoſe this, it would be more concluſive againſt the Accuſer, than repeating over and over, it is not probable, it is not to be believed, &c. I own it is hard to believe, that Bzovius was ignorant, that the Hiſtory of the Council of Trent diſpleaſed the Court of Rome; but after all, it is not impoſſible; and they alledge Facts to us, which prove that he was ignorant of that Truth. A Writer, like him, had need to have many Things ſhewed to him, and had not time to read them all: if he had well examined all that he gave to the Printers, he could not have produced Folio's with ſo much Diſpatch. It is certain, that he has inſerted ſome Treatiſes in his Annals, which others had publiſhed before him. He did this with regard to the Amedeus Pacificus of Father Monod. 'Hunc Commentarium 'pene ad verbum deſcripſit, & ad calcem volumi-'nis ſui 17 Annalium Eccleſiaſticorum adjecit Abra-'hamus Bzovius, ut quæ de Felice parum rei con-'ſentanea ſcripſerat, caſtigaret (17). —— Abra-
(17) Sotuel Biblioth. Script. Societ. Jeſu, pag. 684. 'ham Bzovius has copied this Commentary almoſt 'verbatim, and annexed it to the End of the ſeventeenth Volume of his Eccleſiaſtical Annals, to cor-'rect what he had writ amiſs concerning Felix.'

[H] One may judge of his Diſcernment by the Fables he has vented about the Genealogy of Silveſter II.] I believe it will be acceptable to a great many of my Readers, if I ſhew them a Sample whereby they may judge of the whole Piece; for a World of People would rather have the Character of a Writer's Genius, than the whole Story of his Life. Bzovius had given himſelf the Trouble, and not without Reaſon, to refute a thouſand impertinent Fables, which have been ſet forth concerning the Birth of Gilbert Cæſius, Native of Guienne, Archbiſhop of Reims, afterwards of Ravenna, and laſtly Pope, under the Name of Silveſter II. But he ought not to have given, in the room of theſe Fables, a romantic Genealogy, and vouched the Truth of it. He will have it, that this Pope Silveſter was deſcended from a King of Argos, whoſe Name was Temenus, and that there are ſome of that Te-

Since the first Edition of this Dictionary, I have found the following Facts in an Elogy of Bzovius. His Grandmother, by the Father's side, was of the Family Szczepanowski, which had produced St Stanislaus, Bishop of Cracow. Neither Thomas Ostola, that Lady's Son, nor his Wife Magdalen Vificia, lived to educate their Son, our Bzovius; for he was but eighteen Months old when his Mother died, and he lost his Father soon after. He was educated by his Grandmother on the Mother's Side, in the City of Prosovitz, and he made so good use of the Instructions of one of his Uncles (f), that, at ten Years of Age, he could write Latin, and compose Music, and make Verses (g). One of his Aunts sent for him afterwards to Secemin, where some Frenchmen, good Philosophers and good Philologists, whom Stanislaus Szafranietz had drawn thither, taught the Youth of Poland. They were indeed Heretics; but Bzovius, though he was but fifteen Years of Age, preserved himself from their Poison, and brought also some of his Comrades into the right way again. After this he went to continue his Studies at Cracow, and made great Progress. He took the Habit of a Dominican in the same City, in the Convent of the Trinity, and, being sent into Italy, read some Lectures of Philosophy at Milan, and of Divinity at Bologna. After he returned into his own Country, he preached in Posnania, and in Cracow, with the Applause of all his Hearers; he taught Philosophy and Divinity; he was Principal of a College of his own Order: He settled a Fraternity of the Rosary; he consecrated a Chapel to the Image of St Mary the Great, which he had brought from Rome to Cracow; he furnished the Library of the Convent of the Dominicans with a great Number of Books; he pacified Poland; he inspired the necessary Moderation into the Malecontents; he built the Church of St Hyacinthus in Warsaw, which was the first that was built to that Saint in Poland; he founded a Convent of Dominicans in the same City, under the Name of St Hyacinthus; he procured all manner of Conveniencies for that new Monastery, and got that Saint inserted in the Missal and Breviary (b); he recovered the Monasteries of Silesia, which had been twenty Years separated from the Province of Poland; he took care to have the Relics of St Ceslaus Odrovasius laid up in a secure Place; he was commissioned by his Superiors to digest the Constitutions of the Dominicans into better Form; and he published a great Number of Sermons, and other Writings (i). One of his Works prepared his Way to the Continuation of Baronius: it was the Abridgment of the Ecclesiastical History, which he had extracted chiefly out of the Annals of that Cardinal. He shewed the Manuscripts of it to some Persons, who not only exhorted him to publish it, but also to undertake his Continuation of that History to his own Time: He was then at Rome with Virginio Ursini, Duke of Bracciano, who had made him his Library-Keeper (k). The Deference, which he had for the Exhortations which I have mentioned, brought the great Work of the Continuation of Baronius afterwards to light. The Letter, which the King of Poland wrote to the Pope in the Year 1633, does our Dominican a great deal of Honour [I].

(f) Ab Laurentio avunculo didicit. Starovol. de Scriptor. Polonic. See Citat. (i).

(g) Musicæ modulos componere, versus patrios & Latinos pangere. Id. ibid.

(b) Ejusdem Divi Hyacinthi memoriam & cultum in fastos Ecclesiæ (Breviarium & Missale vocant) reponi apud Urbanum VIII Pont. Max. procuravit. Id. ibid.

(i) Taken from Simon Starovolscius, in Scriptorum Poloniæ illustrium centuria, before the 8th Volume of the Annals of Bzovius, printed at Cologn, in 1641, which I observe, because in my Edition of this Treatise of Starovolscius, which is of Frankfort, in 1625, there is scarce any thing relating to the Life of this Jacobin.

(k) Taken from the Preface to the first Tome of the Annals of Bzovius.

(18) See the Journal des Sçavans, for the 8th of August, 1678, pag. 332, where they give the Extract of this Work of Bzovius, without advertising that this is not the first edition. It had been printed at Rome in 4to in 1629, and afterwards at the end of the 8th Vol. of the Annals in 1641.

